DOJ cites for support to Schlesinger v. Ballard, 419 U.S. at 510 n.13, falsely asserting that case held “deference to Congress is even more appropriate when pending legislation may remedy a challenged classification.” (DOJ Br. at 17, D.E. No. 80-1).

At the time of Schlesinger v. Ballard, Congress—not a commission—was considering making the promotion requirements equal for both sexes, but that did not impact the Supreme Court’s decision. The Supreme Court reached the merits by holding that the statutes did not violate the male officer’s due process rights because men and women service members were not similarly situated.

Here, they are similarly situated, and there is no pending legislation from the Commission before Congress.

The Commission is not a coordinate branch of the Government—it does not make law, it does not execute the law. This Court’s authority is not dependent on the existence or activities of a commission that will do who knows what?

3. Political branch decisions

DOJ lawyers advocate deference to the military decisions of the political branches (DOJ Reply at 1, D.E. No. 82)

So what is the Congressional decision? That a commission will do a study—that's it!

Doing a study is not law, it is not an Executive Order and it is not even policy.

Congress and the President may adopt or reject the Commission's suggestions but there has been no decision one way or the other on that.

4. Interference with future Government decisions

DOJ asserts that because Plaintiff is fighting for her rights, she will interfere with future decisions by the most powerful Government in history: In addition, any relief that could potentially require the Government to spend millions of dollars changing the Selective Service System in response to a court order would impose a considerable hardship at this time, particularly because Congress may wish to change the system in a different manner following the Commission's review (DOJ Reply at 7, D.E. No. 82)).

So what is the causal chain to future effects from a decision here? DOJ does not say.

Plaintiff is 21 years-old studying to be a veterinarian. She is simply asking this Court to tell the Government to stop violating her rights—to tell the Government, as Your Honor has so far found to stop injuring her, and to stop doing it now. (Opinion at 5 n.5, 9, 13, D.E. No. 72).

Besides, if this Court decides for Plaintiff, the DOJ will move to stay enforcement pending appeal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 62(c) and, if necessary, under Fed. R. App. P. 8(a)(1)(A). We will not oppose a stay pending appeal.

And no, we are not agreeing to a stay prior to judgment.

If this Court issues a stay now—thereby imprisoning this case in this Court, assuming an appeal of that stay is unsuccessful, those who believe the current trend in equal rights only apply to benefits and well-paying influential jobs but not responsibilities will be shown correct. Such enforcement of political beliefs regardless of the law will not last long. For the S.D. Tex. case is going to end up in the Supreme Court.

Also, if the Third Circuit or the Supreme Court does not like a decision for Plaintiff, they'll overrule it. If not, Congress can always pass a law to overrule a decision for Plaintiff. Congress has done that before.

5. Deference for the composition of the military

DOJ lawyers even go so far as to demand deference due to those [Govt] branches on questions of the composition of the fighting force (DOJ Reply at 1, D.E. No. 82)

Plaintiff is not challenging the composition of the armed forces. Registration and conscription are fundamentally different military processes.

This Court stated that “Plaintiff’s injury stems from her exclusion from draft registration, not conscription.” (Opinion at 5 n.5, D.E. No. 72).

Defendants even admit that “When SSS registers a person, it does not determine the role that person will serve once inducted. This determination is made by [the Department of Defense] after induction.” And that’s “composition.” Defendant Selective Service System’s Objections and Responses to Plaintiffs’ First Set of Interrogatories at No. 9 p. 6 Response, filed in Nat’l Coal. for Men v. Selective Serv. Sys., Civil Action 16-3362, S.D. Tex., August 30, 2018, D.E. No. 76.

Besides, “composition” of the military is NOT immune from court review. The Third Circuit and other courts have held that Article I, Section 8 and Article II, Section 2 of the Constitution

“do not provide or intimate that, when statutes or regulations regarding the composition of the military trench upon other constitutional guarantees, the courts are powerless to act. Neither section, expressly or by implication, prevents a federal court from entertaining an appropriate constitutional claim brought against the military. The military has not been exempted from constitutional provisions that protect the rights of individuals, even though the rights of those in the armed forces may differ from those of civilians. Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733 (1974). It is the role of the courts, not the military, to define these rights.” Dillard, 652 F.2d 316, 320 (3d Cir. 1981).

In United States ex rel. Innes v. Hiatt, 141 F.2d 664, 666 (3d Cir. 1944), the Third Circuit held that “An individual does not cease to be a person within the protection of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution because he had joined the nation’s armed forces . . . .”

“[C]onstitutional questions that arise out of military decisions regarding the composition of the armed forces are not committed to the other coordinate branches of government.” Doe I v. Trump, 275 F. Supp. 3d 167 (no pagination) (D.D.C. 2017) (quoting Emory v. Sec’y of Navy, 819 F.2d 291, 294 (D.C. Cir. 1987) (The Doe I court issued a preliminary injunction preventing the enforcement of President Trump’s transgender ban on “accession and retention” in the military.)).

DOJ's cited cases do not prohibit this Court from deciding the merits.

“To be sure, there are extreme circumstances when courts have declined to address the merits of a case, citing non-justiciability.” (SWAN Court Order Granting DOJ's Motion to Dismiss on Standing at 18, 12-CV-6005, 5/1/2018, D.E. No. 118).

But none of the cases relied on by the DOJ to keep this Court from deciding the merits apply.

Gilligan v. Morgan, 413 U.S. 1 (1973) (DOJ Br. at 16, 22, D.E. No. 80-1; Reply at 13), and Orloff v. Willoughby, 345 U.S. 83 (1953):

“Neither of these cases holds that constitutional questions affecting military decisions or the composition of the armed forces are necessarily and exclusively committed to the other coordinate branches of the government.” Dillard, 652 F.2d at 320.

Gilligan was “a broad call on judicial power to assume continuing regulatory control over the activities of the Ohio National Guard.” Gilligan at 5. The Third Circuit in Dillard, 652 F.2d at 321, found that in Gilligan

“[t]he Supreme Court held only that a federal court could not exercise continuing regulatory jurisdiction over the National Guard. The plaintiffs in Gilligan were not merely seeking to have the Court hold that certain practices or regulations were unconstitutional. Rather they sought to vest virtual control of the Ohio National Guard in a federal court. This transfer of control, Gilligan held, could not be done.”

The SWAN Court stated that

“The result in Gilligan was hardly surprising because the breadth of plaintiffs' request for relief would require a court to interfere with the basic, day-to-day functioning of the Ohio National Guard and on a continuing basis.” (SWAN SWAN Court Order Granting DOJ's Motion to Dismiss at 10, D.E. No. 118). However, where “[t]he relief sought . . . would not require the Court to exercise continuing comprehensive regulatory supervision over a wide range of military decisions,” reviewability exists. Id. at 15.

The Third Circuit Dillard court held that “Orloff stands for the proposition that a constitutional challenge brought against the military, which does not require a court to run the military, is justiciable.” Dillard at 322.

“Orloff teaches no more than that the exercise of military discretion involving duty assignments will not be reviewed by a court if there has been no statutory or constitutional violation.” Id.

Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 26 (2008) (DOJ. Br. at 16, D.E. No. 80-1; Reply at 5, 10, D.E. No. 82):

A preliminary injunction case where the Supreme Court did not find non-reviewability but decided the merits that possible harm to marine mammals from sonar was outweighed by the Navy being able to detect enemy submarines.

The Winter Court noted that “[o]f course, military interests do not always trump other considerations, and we have not held that they do.”

Goldman v. Weinberger, 475 U.S. 503, 507 (1986) (DOJ. Br. at 16, D.E. No. 80-1; Reply at 10):

Where the Supreme Court did decide the merits but found a military regulation preventing the wearing of the headgear required by a soldier’s religious beliefs did not violate the First Amendment.

Deference Conclusion

Plaintiff is not asking this Court to exercise continuing comprehensive regulatory supervision over a wide range of military decisions concerning draft registration, such as, classification status, enforcement. Plaintiff’s request is very simple—treat young women and young men equally when it comes to draft registration.

It is up to this Court or the S.D. Tex. Court to allow or not allow, as Army Ranger Lisa A. Jaster wrote, that her kids have “the same opportunities to shape the world they live in, regardless of gender, which includes registering for the draft and serving their country.” Women Deserve The Same Opportunities As Men, Including Registering For The Draft, Task & Purpose, December 9, 2016.

Ripeness

The ripeness doctrine “determines when a proper party may bring an action.” Presbytery of New Jersey of Orthodox Presbyterian Church v. Florio, 40 F.3d 1454, 1462 (1994) (citing see Armstrong World Indus., Inc. v. Adams, 961 F.2d 405, 411 & nn. 12-13 (3d Cir.1992)).

It is “peculiarly a question of timing.” Thomas v. Union Carbide Agr. Prod. Co., 473 U.S. 568, 580 (1985) (quoting Blanchette v. Connecticut Gen. Ins. Corps., 419 U.S. 102, 140 (1974)).

Timing that “centers on whether [an] injury has occurred yet.” Presbytery of New Jersey of Orthodox Presbyterian Church at 1462 (quoting Erwin Chemerinsky, Federal Jurisdiction 99 (1989)).

Since “ripeness centers on whether [the] injury has occurred yet,” and Plaintiff’s injury has occurred as this Court found in its Opinion at 5 n.5, 9, 13 (03/29/2018, D.E. No. 72) this case is clearly ripe. (Kyle-Labelle Aff. D.E. No. 81-6; Fifth Reg. Attempt 10/2/2018).

Ripeness decisions generally may be found more readily when a court believes that it faces a pure question of law that can be decided without further fact development. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 3531.12.

There are no further facts to develop. SSS barred Plaintiff from registering for the draft.

That there are no further facts to develop is enforced by DOJ making a facial rather than factual opposition to Plaintiff’s standing as this Court concluded. (Opinion at 3-4, 15-cv-05193, 03/29/18, D.E. No. 72).

The only questions here are legal ones: Did the SSS’s barring Plaintiff from registering violate her Due Process rights.

Ripeness when Standing

Ripeness focuses more on the question of whether the injury has yet become mature. Ripeness can be seen as providing a time requirement to the standing injury. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 3531.1.

“In most cases, that a plaintiff has Article III standing is enough to render [her] claim constitutionally ripe.” In re Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether Prods. Liab. Litig., 725 F.3d 65, 110 (2d Cir. 2013) (the 2d Cir determination that plaintiff had standing was enough to find constitutional ripeness).

Ripeness overlaps with standing in the “shared requirement that [plaintiff’s] injury be [actual] or imminent.” Ross v. Bank of America, N.A., 524 F.3d 217, 226 (2d Cir. 2008) (quoted citations omitted).

In Ross the 2d Cir had already found that there existed an “actual and imminent” injury to constitute Article III standing injury in fact. Ross at 226. The Court held that “For the same reasons, we find that these alleged injuries are not merely speculative or hypothetical, and that judicial review of the [plaintiff’s] claims at this time is appropriate.” That is, they are ripe.

DOJ agrees with this concept of ripeness by asserting that governmental “effects [be] felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.” (DOJ Br. at 12, D.E. No. 80-1, quoting Nat’l Park Hosp. Ass’n v. Dep’t of Interior, 538 U.S. 803, 807-808 (2003)).

This Court has already found that barring Plaintiff from registering resulted in a concrete and particularized injury. (Opinion at at 5 n.5, 9, 13, D.E. No. 72).

In its Reply, the DOJ wrongly relies on Taylor v. Resolution Tr. Corp., 56 F.3d 1497, 1508 (D.C. Cir.), opinion amended on reh’g, 66 F.3d 1226 (D.C. Cir. 1995), for its argument that ripeness and standing do not overlap. (DOJ Reply at 6, D.E. No. 82).

The D.C. Cir did not deal with ripeness but rather a preliminary injunction. In fact, the Court opinion never even mentioned ripeness.

The Court held that plaintiff “has adequately pled facts supporting its standing to bring suit on First Amendment grounds.” Then in the next paragraph states, “But to establish the grounds for a preliminary injunction [plaintiff] must show more: it must demonstrate a substantial probability of success on the merits and an irreparable injury that the proposed injunction would avert.” 56 F.3d at 1508. Ripeness was not an issue.

DOJ also relies on Caribbean Marine Servs. Co. v. Baldrige, 844 F.2d 668, 675 (9th Cir. 1988) (DOJ Reply at 6, D.E. No. 82). Caribbean also dealt with a preliminary injunction and held that “Because the threat of civil liability is too attenuated and conjectural to constitute a basis for [plaintiffs’] standing . . . it follows that this injury is too speculative to constitute an irreparable harm justifying injunctive relief.”

DOJ is clearly trying to obfuscate by mixing preliminary injunction with ripeness.

Pre-enforcement v. Post-enforcement ripeness for administrative agency decisions

Pre-enforcement test

DOJ relies on the test for ripeness set out in Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148–49 (1967), overruled on other grounds, Califano v. Sanders, 430 U.S. 99 (1977), and Nat’l Park Hospitality. Ass’n v. Dep’t of Interior, 538 U.S. 803, 807–08 (2003). (DOJ Br. at 22, D.E. No. 80-1; DOJ Reply at 2, D.E. No. 82).

That test does NOT apply to this case because it is the test for administrative agency pre-enforcement actions.

Pre-enforcement actions are where the harm asserted by the plaintiff has not yet occurred.

The Supreme Court in Nat'l Park Hosp. Ass'n v. Dep't of Interior, 538 U.S. 803, 807-08 (2003), held that “Ripeness is a justiciability doctrine designed . . . to protect the [administrative] agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.” (citing Abbott Labs. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148 (1967)).

The pre-enforcement test “is best seen in a twofold aspect, requiring us to evaluate both the [1] fitness of the issues for judicial decision and [2] the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration.” Abbott, 387 U.S. at 149.

In Abbott, pharmacies brought a pre-enforcement action challenging Food & Drug Administration regulations concerning advertisements and labels. Before the regulations were enforced, thirty-seven drug manufacturers and their trade association sought review. Fed. Prac. & Proc. Juris. § 3532.6 (3d ed.). The Supreme Court in this pre-enforcement action found that the two-part test rendered the case ripe.

The Supreme Court stated, “The first question we consider is whether Congress by the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act intended to forbid pre-enforcement review of this sort of regulation promulgated by the Commissioner.” Abbott, 387 U.S. at 139-40. The Supreme Court concluded pre-enforcement review was allowed, Abbott, 387 U.S. at 148, and then cited the reason for the two-part test for determining whether a regulation opposed before enforcement was ripe.

“The injunctive and declaratory judgment remedies are discretionary, and courts traditionally have been reluctant to apply them to administrative determinations unless these arise in the context of a controversy ‘ripe’ for judicial resolution. . . . [I]t is fair to say that [ripeness] basic rationale is to prevent the courts, through avoidance of premature adjudication, from entangling themselves in abstract disagreements over administrative policies, and also to protect the agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.” Abbott, 387 U.S. at 148 (emphasis added).

In Nat'l Park Hosp. Ass'n v. Dep't of Interior, 538 U.S. 803, 807-08 (2003), the plaintiff brought a pre-enforcement challenge to a National Park Service regulation concerning concession contracts and was “not litigating any concrete dispute.” 538 U.S. at 807. The Court applied the two-part test, 538 U.S. at 808, and found the case NOT ripe.

There the Supreme Court again held that “Ripeness is a justiciability doctrine designed . . . to protect the agencies from judicial interference until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.” (Emphasis added). 538 U.S. at 807-08

Post-enforcement test

The counterpart of pre-enforcement is post-enforcement—when an agency has made a final decision and executed on it causing an actual injury. That is, when “an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.” Nat’l Park Hosp. Ass’n v. Dep’t of Interior, 538 U.S. at 807-08; Abbott, 387 U.S. at 148.

The Third Circuit has held in Lauderbaugh v. Hopewell Twp., 319 F.3d 568, 575 (3d Cir. 2003), that “the ripeness doctrine prevents judicial interference ‘until an administrative decision has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.’” (citing Abbott Labs., Inc. v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 149 (1967)).

And that Ripeness exists when a “decision maker has arrived at a definitive position on the issue that inflicts an actual, concrete injury.” Lauderbaugh v. Hopewell Twp., 319 F.3d 568, 575 (3d Cir. 2003)(quoting Williamson Planning Comm’n v. Hamilton Bank, 473 U.S. 172, 192 (1985)).

The concrete injury to Plaintiff is (1) the denial of equal treatment—she cannot register for the draft because of her sex, and (2) violation of her substantive due process rights—she is treated as a second class citizen.

The SSS has decided five times so far to bar her from registering. It has, therefore, injured her five times.

In pre-enforcement actions, “courts are left to hypothesize about how the law might be applied.” Here, “Plaintiff[’s] claims arise from an enforcement action[s] that ha[ve] already occurred.” Oklevueha Native Am. Church of Hawaii, Inc. v. Holder, 676 F.3d 829, 838 (9th Cir. 2012).

Therefore, the Abbott and Nat’l Park Hosp. Ass’n pre-enforcement test of fitness and hardship are NOT applicable here because the SSS “has arrived at a definitive position on the issue that inflicts an actual, concrete injury.” Lauderbaugh v. Hopewell Twp., 319 F.3d at 575; see Nat’l Park Hosp. Ass’n v. Dep’t of Interior, 538 U.S. at 807-08; Abbott, 387 U.S. at 148.

The Third Circuit’s modification of the Supreme Court’s two-part pre-enforcement test also concerns “circumstances where enforcement actions are ongoing, but where administrative finality is not yet achieved . . . .” Peachlum v. City of York, Pennsylvania, 333 F.3d 429, 436 (3d Cir. 2003). Therefore that modification also does not apply here.

This Court has already found that Plaintiff was injured and that injury was concrete. (Opinion at 5 n.5, 9, 13, D.E. No. 72).

“[D]iscrimination itself is the legally cognizable injury.” Hassan, 804 F.3d at 293 (citing see, e.g., Curtis v. Loether, 415 U.S. 189, 195 n.10 (1974)).

[This finality rule, it is not designed to enforce the exhaustion of administrative remedies. See Williamson Planning Comm’n v. Hamilton Bank, 473 U.S. 172, 192 (1985) (“the question whether administrative remedies must be exhausted is conceptually distinct ... from the question whether an administrative action must be final before it is judicially reviewable.”)].

The Third Circuit has stated, “Ripeness . . . prevents the courts from ‘entangling themselves in abstract disagreements.’ Thomas v. Union Carbide Agric. Prods Co., 473 U.S. 568, 580 (1985) (citations omitted).” Binker v. Com. of Pa., 977 F.2d 738, 753 (3d Cir. 1992).

Whatever the Commission might suggest and Congress and Pres. Trump might do is clearly theoretical—another word for abstract.

But Plaintiff is not alleging facts that she will be injured at some time in the future if the multiple reports by multiple Government agencies advise to change the MSSA, or they do not; if the Commission agrees with those reports, or it does not; if Congress accepts the Commission’s suggestions, or it does not, and if President Trump agrees with Congress, or he does not. Plaintiff alleges a present—not a future injury by the SSS.

Now the MSSA and the SSS’s role may change so as to no longer discriminate against Plaintiff and all those other young women before they turn 26—but then again, it may not. “Prediction is very difficult, especially if it is about the future.”—Niels Bohr.

So unlike in the pre-enforcement actions on which DOJ relies, the SSS has already injured Plaintiff in a concrete way because of a discriminatory statute.

Under Third Circuit’s declaratory judgment or pre-enforcement test

In the declaratory judgment or pre-enforcement ripeness review, the Third Cir. refined the Abbott fitness and hardship “test because of the difficulty in defining ripeness in actions initiated before an ‘accomplished’ injury is established.” Armstrong World Indus., Inc. by Wolfson v. Adams, 961 F.2d 405, 411 (3d Cir. 1992) (citing Step-Saver Data Sys., Inc. v. Wyse Technology, 912 F.2d 643, 647 (3d Cir.1990)).

“[T]he Step-Saver analysis is tailored to address pre-enforcement actions.” Peachlum v. City of York, Pennsylvania, 333 F.3d 429, 435 (3d Cir. 2003) (emphasis original) (cites Presbytery, 40 F.3d 1454, 1463).

The Third Cir focuses on (1) the adversity of the interests of the parties or conflict between the parties, (2) the conclusiveness of a judicial judgment or a court’s ability to resolve the conflict, and (3) the practical utility of a decision or a useful purpose will be served to clarify legal relationships so that Plaintiffs “can turn on the light and take a step” forward. Step-Saver Data Systems, Inc. v. Wyse Technology, 912 F.2d 643, 647-50 (3d Cir. 1990).

(1) Adversity or conflict

Adversity requires opposing legal interests. Lewis v. Alexander, 685 F.3d 325, 341 (3d Cir. 2012). Here, the interests of the parties are in opposition because the SSS refuses to allow Plaintiff to register for the draft because of her sex.

Although “a Plaintiff need not suffer a completed harm to establish adversity of interest between the parties,” but “to protect against a feared future event, the Plaintiff must demonstrate that the probability of that future event occurring is real and substantial, of sufficient immediacy and reality to warrant the issuance of a declaratory judgment.” Pittsburgh Mack Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Int’l Union of Operating Engineers, Local Union No. 66, 580 F.3d 185, 190 (3d Cir. 2009) (quoting Armstrong World Indus., 961 F.2d at 412)).

Plaintiff tried to register but was barred by being treated differently from males.

Discrimination itself, by perpetuating ‘archaic and stereotypic notions’ or by stigmatizing members of the disfavored group as ‘innately inferior’ and therefore as less worthy participants in the political community . . . can cause serious noneconomic injuries to those persons who are personally denied equal treatment. . . . Heckler v. Mathews, 465 U.S. 728, 739-740 (1984)(citations omitted) (Brennan, J.).

(2) Conclusivity or the Court’s ability to resolve the conflict.

Conclusivity depends on the ability of a court decision to “define and clarify the legal rights or relations of the parties.” Lewis, 685 F.3d at 341 (quoting Step-Saver Data Systems, Inc., 912 F.2d at 648).

A decision here would determine whether Plaintiff’s Equal Protection and Substantive Due Process rights are violated by Defendants refusing to register her.

(3) Practical utility or a decision will serve a useful purpose.

Practical utility means “whether the parties’ plans of actions are likely to be affected by a judgment.” NE Hub Partners, L.P. v. CNG Transmission Corp., 239 F.3d 333, 344 (3d Cir. 2001)(quoting Step-Saver Data Systems, Inc., 912 F.2d at 649 n.9).

Clearly a decision for Plaintiff will allow her to register and require the SSS to accept her registration, or eliminate registration along with its discrimination based on sex, or make it voluntary—also allowing her to register.

A decision for the SSS will convince her and millions of other young women that they are still second-class citizens and should act accordingly.

Utility also considers the hardship to the parties of withholding a decision. See Freehold Cogeneration Associates, L.P. v. Board of Regulatory Commissioners, 44 F.3d 1178, 1189 (3d Cir.1995).

The hardship visited on Plaintiff of no decision is that a federal court once again maintains the discrimination and second-class status of her and other young women solely because of their sex. That despite all the high-sounding talk of equality when the courts really mean that women are inferior.

The Supreme Court in Roberts v. U.S. Jaycees, 468 U.S. 609, 625 (1984), observed that it “has frequently noted that discrimination based on archaic and overbroad assumptions about the relative needs and capacities of the sexes forces individuals to labor under stereotypical notions that often bear no relationship to their actual abilities.”

Under the Supreme Court Nat’l Park Hospitality pre-enforcement test

The Nat’l Park Hosp. test incorporates consideration of two elements, “(1) the fitness of the issues for judicial decision and (2) the hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration.” Nat’l Park Hospitality Ass’n, 538 U.S. at 808.

(1) Fitness of issue for a court decision

This Court already held that standing exists, and in doing so concluded that DOJ was not making a factual challenge to standing. (Opinion at 3-4, 2:15-cv-05193, 03/29/18, D.E. No. 72). Such indicates that there are no facts to challenge. Plaintiff tried to register for the draft but was prevented by Defendants—that’s it, there’s no argument there.

DOJ relies on Doe v. Bush, 323 F.3d 133, 139 (1st Cir. 2003), to assert that fitness “involves an assessment of whether it is appropriate for the court to undertake the task.” (DOJ Reply 4, D.E. No. 82)

Doe was an action for a preliminary injunction to prevent the President of the United States and the Secretary of Defense from initiating a war against Iraq in 2003.

The 1st Cir stated that “[t]he baseline question [for fitness] is whether allowing more time for development of events would ‘significantly advance our ability to deal with the legal issues presented [or] aid us in their resolution.’ Duke Power Co. v. Carolina Env’tl. Study Group, 438 U.S. 59, 82 (1978).” Doe v. Bush, 323 F.3d 133, 138–39 (1st Cir. 2003).

In that case the Court found the issue of a preliminary injunction not fit for decision because “[m]any important questions remain unanswered about whether there will be a war, and, if so, under what conditions.” Doe v. Bush, 323 F.3d at 139.

Here, Plaintiff is not, as the DOJ disingenuously asserts, challenging the existence of the Commission and what it may or may not do; nor is she challenging what Congress and President Trump may or may not do with the Commission's suggestions. (DOJ Br. at 1, D.E. No. 80-1; DOJ Reply at 2-3, D.E. No. 82).

If she were, this Court could not make a decision unless it had a reliable crystal ball.

She is challenging the present MSSA discrimination against her. The Supreme Court in Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 226 (1962), stated that "An equal protection challenge is the type of legal issue traditionally resolved by the courts in accordance with judicial standards that "are well developed and familiar."

(2) Hardship to the parties of withholding court consideration

Once again the author of the DOJ Reply engages in deception. He asserts that the "Hardship" requirement is satisfied in the SSS's favor because Supreme Court Justice Brennan, when temporarily sitting as a Third Circuit Judge concluded that the balance of equities tipped heavily in favor of the Government and stayed the injunction put in place by the lower court. Rostker v. Goldberg, 448 U.S. 1306, 1309-10. (DOJ Reply 6, D.E. No. 82)

The DOJ lawyer's deception is that Justice Brennan was not making a decision on ripeness. He was applying, as he wrote, "The principles that control a Circuit Justice's consideration of in-chambers stay applications . . . ." Rostker v. Goldberg, 448 U.S. at 1308. Brennan was deciding whether a decision already made by a court should be stayed pending appeal—not whether the decision was ripe or not.

No hardship to the SSS.

No decision means the status quo, which is no hardship for the SSS, but Plaintiff is still treated differently as though she is a second class citizen.

If the Court denies DOJ's fourth motion to dismiss, we are willing to go along with a stay of enforcement pending appeal. So there's no hardship to Defendants there. At least not until the Supreme Court makes a decision—maybe.

If DOJ's motion to dismiss is granted, there still is no hardship to Defendants, since they would have won—for now, anyway. But Plaintiff and millions of other young women will still be discriminated against and seen as second class citizens who's rights can be violated by the SSS—at least until the Supreme Court makes a decision.

Even after the Supreme Court decides in these young women's favor—and everybody here knows it will. The impact of passed discrimination on them will still be felt.

“[A] victim of discrimination suffers a dehumanizing injury as real as, and often of far more severe and lasting harm than, a blow to the jaw.” Hassan v. City of New York, 804 F.3d 277, 290 (3d Cir. 2015) (quoting Mardell v. Harleysville Life Ins. Co., 65 F.3d 1072, 1074 (3d Cir.1995) (per curiam)).

I will bet that at some point or points in time Your Honor felt the dehumanizing blow of discrimination.

I’ve been discriminated against a few times and have not forgotten. (Ch 5 News reporter story). I’ve also been slugged on the jaw numerous times—but that’s all water under the bridge.

DOJ’s alleged hardships are purely speculative and futuristic.

any relief that could potentially require the Government to spend millions of dollars changing the Selective Service System in response to a court order would impose a considerable hardship at this time, (DOJ Reply at 7, D.E. No. 82).

A stay pending appeal will avoid the DOJ’s concerns that the three-trillion dollar Government will be put out by spending $37 million to accommodate the registration of women.

Let’s not forget that Plaintiff, in the alternative, also requests elimination of draft registration. Such would actually save the Government money.

Also, Congress can simply pass a law overruling a decision for Plaintiff. Of course, it will have to be constitutional.

Congress may wish to change the system in a different manner following the Commission’s review (DOJ Reply at 7, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ does not say how this Court’s ruling that Plaintiff’s Equal Protection and Substantive Due Process rights are being violated will cause—future tense—the Commission to change its suggestions or Congress to change its prospective law—if any.

Neither the Commission nor Congress nor Pres. Trump are parties to this suit.

Any decision for Plaintiff will most likely be stayed pending appeal.

Of course, a decision for Plaintiff that is upheld by the Third Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court as constitutional will make it difficult for certain archaic members of Congress to continue discriminating against women. But that is the price of bigotry.

Hardship to Plaintiff—Commission will NOT resolve “ultimate” issue.

The author of the DOJ Reply asserts that Plaintiff will not suffer any hardship from the Court withholding a decision because the Commission’s review encompasses . . . the principle (sic) matter at issue in this lawsuit. (DOJ Reply at 3, D.E. 82)

That is another of his patented deceptions. According to the Magistrate’s Order at 4, 07/28/17, D.E. 67, and I quote:

WHEREAS, although the review of the Commission may ultimately impact, or even moot this matter, the current legislative scheme and status provides no certainty as to the resolution of the ultimate issue in this case.

That ultimate issue is whether the MSSA and SSS are presently discriminating against Plaintiff.

Young women’s’ rights NOT of less value than young men’s.

The DOJ Reply author also brushes aside any hardship to Plaintiff and millions of young women if this Court finds the case not ripe because they are women and not men.

In Rostker, the plaintiffs were men who faced civil and criminal penalties if they did not register for the Selective Service. Rostker v. Goldberg, 448 U.S. 1306 (1980). In contrast here, Plaintiff is a woman who is not required to register for the draft, nor is she prevented from pursuing military service (including in a combat role) or penalized for not registering. (DOJ Reply 6, D.E. No. 82).

This DOJ lawyer clearly sees women as having less value than men.

Pursuing a military career is NOT an issue.

DOJ states that Thus, for purposes of balancing the equities, while Plaintiff desires that the constitutional question be resolved quickly, any delay in its resolution in deference to the political process does not impose any restriction on Plaintiff, including from pursuing a military career. (DOJ Reply 6, D.E. No. 82).

Your Honor already rejected that argument in the Standing Motion Opinion:

“Plaintiff explains, her injury “is not that she is kept out of combat positions, not that she may be harmed by future inductions, not that she is prevented from enlisting, and not that possible career opportunities in the military will be hindered but rather that she is prevented—solely because of her sex—from registering for the draft. (Pl. Opp. Br. at 21) (emphasis in original).” (Opinion at 8, D.E. No. 72).

Bill of Attainder against Plaintiff.

The DOJ Reply author writes that the balance of equities favors allowing the political branches to complete their review prior to a judicial ruling on the merits of Plaintiff's claims. See Defs.' Mot. 12–18. (DOJ Reply at 3, D.E. No. 82).

This is nothing more than a request for the imposition of a Bill of Attainder (specifically Bill of Pains and Penalties) in the form of a statute of limitations that stops Plaintiff's action when she reaches the age of 26.

The Second Circuit in In re Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether Prods. Liab. Litig., 725 F.3d at 111, warned that a statute of limitations dismissal “would effectively foreclose the possibility of relief—a hardship and inequity of the highest order.”

Prudential Ripeness

The test for prudential ripeness in this case is the same as the test for ripeness in a pre-enforcement administrative agency situation.

DOJ even admits such in its Reply at 2 (D.E. No. 82) where it cites Nat'l Park Hosp. Ass'n v. Dep't of Interior, 538 U.S. 803, 808 (2003), for “prudential reasons for refusing to exercise jurisdiction.”

This case, however, is NOT a pre-enforcement action—it is a post-enforcement action because Plaintiff has been injured by an agency decision that was enforced.

Even so, assuming we get to the Supreme Court, our position is that prudential ripeness has been called into question and that Court should eliminate it.

The Supreme Court has twice questioned the very existence of prudential limits on justiciability.

In Lexmark Int'l v. Static Control Components, 572 U.S. 118, 125-126 (2014), the plaintiff argued that the Supreme Court should decline to adjudicate defendant's claim on grounds that were prudential rather than constitutional. The Court declined stating “That request is in some tension with our recent reaffirmation of the principle that ‘a federal court's ‘obligation’ to hear and decide’ cases within its jurisdiction ‘is ‘virtually unflagging.’” Sprint Communications, Inc. v. Jacobs, 134 S.Ct. 584, 591 (2013) (quoting Colorado River Water Conservation Dist. v. United States, 424 U.S. 800, 817 (1976)).

Moore's Fed. Prac. at 101.70(3), p. 101-305, states “reliance on the existence of a prudential ripeness element is risky.”

In Susan Anthony List v. Driehaus, 189 L.Ed.2d 246, 261 (2014), defendants asserted, as DOJ does here, that the “prudential ripeness” factors of fitness and hardship made the case nonjusticiable.

But the Supreme Court concluded that plaintiffs had alleged a sufficient Article III standing injury—just as Your Honor has done here. The Supreme Court found ripeness because it had found a standing injury in what was a pre-enforcement action against a state statute.

Of course, this case is NOT a pre-enforcement action so prudential concerns of fitness and hardship do not apply. If it is one, then Susan Anthony applies.

DOJ's wrong prudential ripeness arguments

DOJ argues it is just as possible that the process will address the issues fully and provide the basis for a new policy that then would be available for any further judicial review. (DOJ Reply at 5, D.E. No. 82)

So according to the DOJ lawyers, if a law is on the books that violates a person's rights, her case is not prudentially ripe because there exists the possibility that a new policy—not even a law—but a new policy will result such that she can then sue under the new policy.

Basically, a young women's rights are being violated now by a law. There are bureaucratic proceedings going on that may change policy and that change of policy may allow for suit.

Sounds overly speculative to me. I wonder if the DOJ lawyers would like their rights to depend on such futuristic mumbo-jumbo.

Defendants contend that Plaintiff's claims are not prudentially ripe because proceeding with the litigation at this time would deprive the political branches of the opportunity to apply their judgment and expertise to a matter that is committed to their authority by the text of the Constitution itself. See Defs.' Mot. 12–18. p.5

This case does not challenge what the Commission, Congress or some President might do. It challenges the violation of Plaintiff's constitutional rights.

The courts cannot share their Article III power with the other branches of government. U.S. v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 704 (1974). “To prevent the legislature from using the federal courts to accomplish unconstitutional ends, Congress's Article III power must be subject to the due process guarantees of the Fifth Amendment.”

DOJ's cases after Lexmark confirm the questionable nature of prudential ripeness.

Fourth Corner Credit Union v. Fed. Reserve Bank of Kansas City, 861 F.3d 1052, 1059 n.1 (10th Cir. 2017) (DOJ Reply at 5 n.2, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ includes a quote from Fourth Corner, a pre-enforcement action, but intentionally fails to state or even indicate that Fourth Corner relied on another 10th Cir case for the quote “continued to apply.” DOJ did not even include a “citation omitted.”

DOJ used the quote in its statement that “the Tenth Circuit has ‘continued to apply’ the prudential ripeness doctrine.” (DOJ Reply at 5 n.2).

Here’s the reason DOJ failed to cite to the original case:

The deleted 10th Cir case is United States v. Supreme Court of New Mexico, 839 F.3d 888, 903-04 (10th Cir. 2016), cert. denied, 138 S. Ct. 130 (2017), which was also a pre-enforcement action in which the 10th Cir found that New Mexico’s “Rule 16–308(E) is preempted with respect to federal prosecutors practicing before grand juries, but is not preempted outside of the grand-jury context.”

The full sentence from New Mexico is Notwithstanding the Court's sensitivity and criticism to the [federal preemption doctrine] doctrine, see also Sprietsma v. Mercury Marine, 537 U. S. Reports 51 (2002), the Court has continued to apply it to invalidate state laws that stand as obstacles to the purpose of a particular federal statutory scheme, see Richard H. Fallon, Jr. et al., Hart and Wechsler's The Federal Courts and The Federal System 648 (6th ed. 2009) (citing Daniel J. Meltzer, The Supreme Court's Judicial Passivity, 2002 Sup. Ct. Rev. 343 (2002)).

Apparently the Fourth Corner confused “prudential ripeness” with the federal preemption doctrine.” A confusion the DOJ intentionally tried to exploit via its deception of not citing New Mexico. Is that allowed?

Further that Court found that “The requirements of standing and constitutional ripeness overlap; if an injury ‘is sufficiently ‘imminent’ to establish standing, the constitutional requirements of the ripeness doctrine will necessarily be satisfied.’ (quoting ACLU v. Johnson, 194 F.3d 1149 , 1155 (10th Cir. 1999) ); see also Susan B. Anthony List v. Driehaus , 134 S.Ct. 2334 , 2341 n.5 (2014).” New Mexico, 839 F.3d at 903-904.

More deception from DOJ on Fourth Corner:

The three judges on the panel all wrote different decisions based on different arguments. The common denominator for two of the judges was remand for dismissal without prejudice. There was no majority decision on ripeness.

DOJ makes no mention of that—I wonder why.

DOJ relies on dicta from one of the judges.

Judge Matheson found lack of ripeness because the action had changed into a pre-enforcement one. “[T]his case has become divorced from the factual backdrop that gave rise to the original dispute. As the Reserve Bank points out, the new Credit Union is a “fundamentally different[ ] entity” than the one the Reserve Bank turned down.” Matheson, Circuit Judge at 1058.

“The Credit Union’s amended complaint reveals this case is no longer based on sufficiently developed facts. In particular, the amended complaint does not and cannot tell us whether the Reserve Bank would grant a master account on the condition that the Credit Union will not serve marijuana businesses unless doing so is legal. It cannot do so because, as the Credit Union explained to the district court, it has never approached the Reserve Bank about obtaining a master account on the terms now alleged.” Matheson, Circuit Judge at 1059.

Judge Bacharach, however, found this pre-enforcement case ripe but in doing so raised the question of the continuing validity of prudential ripeness under Lexmark and also cited to Reddy v. Foster, 845 F.3d 493, 501 n.6 (1st Cir. 2017), that stated in Susan B. Anthony the Supreme Court “cast a measure of doubt upon ripeness’s prudential dimensions”.

Inst. of Cetacean Research v. Sea Shepherd Conservation Soc’y, 2014 WL 3579639, at *10 (W.D. Wash. July 21, 2014) (DOJ Reply at 5 n.2, D.E. No. 82).

In this pre-enforcement action, the DOJ Reply author quotes the court “absent more definitive guidance from the Supreme Court,” the district court would apply prudential ripeness. (DOJ Reply at 5 n.2, D.E. No. 82).

(1) This quote from the W.D. Wash decision is out of context.

(2) The W.D. Wash found ripeness even though there was a future contingency necessary to occur because the Court concluded the contingency would most likely happen, so it was imminent. “The only contingency to plaintiff’s continued injury by defendants’ interference is reception of a research permit for lethal whaling.” 2014 WL 3579639, at *9.

This Court is not bound by the DOJ deceptions or decisions that involve pre-enforcement actions.

[DOJ's Ninth Cir. prudential ripeness argument failed.]

Defendants made similar prudential ripeness arguments before the Ninth Circuit in Nat'l Coal. for Men v. Selective Serv. Sys. (9th Cir. 13-56690, Br. at 8, 08/27/2014, D.E. 22-1) (about the number of positions opened to women).

[DOJ argued that “Judicial intervention at this stage would be premature and inconsistent with the long tradition of deference to the bodies entrusted with crafting the military and security policy of the United States on issues within their sphere of expertise.”]

[But the Circuit Court ruled against the DOJ in an unpublished opinion. 640 F. App'x 664 (9th Cir. 2016). The Court held that “Even if some uncertainty remains . . . that does not render the . . . claims unripe. The ripeness inquiry asks whether there is a legitimate controversy that is ‘fit for adjudication.’ Texas v. United States, 523 U.S. 296, 300 (1998)). [Plaintiffs point] to numerous specific changes in statutes, policies, and practices that have happened since the Supreme Court’s decision in Rostker v. Goldberg, 453 U.S. 57 (1981). The Selective Service argues that women’s roles have not changed sufficiently to revisit Rostker. But whether there has been sufficient change to revisit Rostker is a question about the merits of the . . . claims, not about ripeness.”]

Level of Review for Ripeness on Constitutional Question

DOJ manipulates to its advantage a quote from Artway v. Att’y Gen. of State of N.J., 81 F.3d 1235, 1249 (3d Cir. 1996), that “[c]ourts are particularly vigilant to ensure that cases are ripe when constitutional questions are at issue.” Artway v. Att’y Gen. of State of N.J., 81 F.3d 1235, 1249 (3d Cir. 1996). (DOJ Reply at 2, D.E. No. 82).

This is an intentionally dissembling quote because the DOJ author left out the cases that Artway at 1249 relied on for that quote, and that the “particularly vigilant” quote means sufficient factual information.

Artway cited see Communist Party of the United States v. Subversive Activities Control Bd., 367 U.S. 1, 80-81 (1961):

“The record here does not show that any present members, affiliates, or contributors of the Party have withdrawn because of the threatened consequences to them of its registration under the Subversive Activities Control Act, or that any prospective members, affiliates, or contributors have been deterred from joining the Party or giving it their support. We cannot know how many, if any, members or prospective members of the Party are also employees or prospective employees of the Government or of defense facilities or labor unions, or how many, if any, contributors to the Party hold government or defense-facility employment. It is thus impossible to say now what effect the provisions of the Act affecting members of a registered organization will have on the Party. Cf. State of New Jersey v. Sargent, 269 U.S. 328 (1926). To pass upon the validity of those provisions would be to make abstract assertions of possible future injury, indefinite in nature and degree, the occasion for constitutional decision. If we did so, we would be straying beyond our judicial bounds.”

Artway in the next paragraph stated:

“Two Supreme Court cases illustrate the need for factual information particularly well.”

“In Socialist Labor Party v. Gilligan, 406 U. S. 583 (1972) , the Court dismissed as unripe a challenge on First Amendment grounds to a state law that required candidates to swear not to attempt to overthrow the government by violence or force. The Court concluded that "the record ... is extraordinarily skimpy in the sort of proved or admitted facts that would enable us to adjudicate this claim." Id. at 587.”

“In California Bankers Association v. Shultz, 416 U. S. (1974), the Court similarly declared unripe a First Amendment challenge to bank record-keeping and reporting requirements because of an insufficient factual record. Id. at 56. "This Court, in the absence of a concrete fact situation in which competing associational and governmental interests can be weighed, is simply not in a position to determine whether an effort to compel disclosure of such records would or would not be barred ...." Id.”

“Whether Artway will ever be subject to Megan's Law notification requirements remains a matter of speculation, and the record lacks the factual information necessary for this Court to decide Artway's notification claims consistent with its Article III obligations”

There is no factual speculation here. Plaintiff tried to register and SSS barred her.

Claims on which relief can be granted, Rule 12(b)(6)

The Third Cir “obliges district courts considering a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) to engage in a two-part analysis.” Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210–11 (3d Cir.2009) (quoting Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679 (2009)).

The analysis begins with “taking note of the elements a plaintiff must plead to state a claim . . . ,” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1947 (2009), then proceeds in two steps:

1. Identifying the specific allegations in a complaint that are not entitled to the presumption of truth. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1951. Those are statements that cut and copy the elements of a cause of action; that is, they are conclusory. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555. The allegations should be more than an unadorned: the-defendant-unlawfully-harmed-me accusations. Iqbal, 129 S.Ct. at 1949. Some legal conclusions, however, are permissible when the defendants are given notice of the date, time and place of the alleged illegal conduct.
2. Next, the analysis considers the remaining factual allegations in a complaint as true and determines if they plausibly—not probably but more than possibly—infer that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Twombly, 550 U.S. at 556. In doing so, the courts “draw[] all inferences in favor of the plaintiff,” see McTernan v. City of York, PA., 577 F.3d 521, 526 (3d Cir.2009), and a complaint cannot be dismissed based on a judge’s disbelief of the factual allegations even if it strikes a judge that actual proof is improbable, Victaulic Co. v. Tieman, 499 F.3d 227, 234 (3d Cir. 2007) (quoting Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555).

DOJ has failed in satisfying this two-step process for each of the causes of actions.

Plausibility

“A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009). Evaluating a motion to dismiss is a “context-specific task that requires the reviewing court to draw on its judicial experience and common sense.” Id. at 679.

DOJ does not deny that Plaintiff tried to register for the draft and was barred from registering by Defendants because the MSSA forbids women from registering.

Defendants’ alleged misconduct is (1) discriminating against young women in favor of young men when both groups are similarly situated, and (2) failing to treat young women as first-class, full-fledge citizens.

Equal Protection and the Substantive Due Process Irrebuttable Presumption doctrines are cognizable legal theories. See, e.g., Brower v. County of Inyo, 489 U.S. 593, 594-595, (1989).

DOJ confuses justiciability and the merits.

“[T]he question whether a plaintiff states a claim for relief ‘goes to the merits’ . . . not the justiciability of a dispute . . . and conflation of the two concepts can cause confusion.” Bond v. U.S., 564 U.S. 211, 219 (2011) (quoting Steel Co. v. Citizens for Better Environment, 523 U.S. 83, 92 (1998)).

The DOJ tries to do just that by including its deference or justiciability arguments in its Rule 12(b)(6) sections of its Brief—just check the DOJ Br. table of contents. (DOJ Br. at 21, 05/18/18, D.E. No. 80-1).

Also in its Reply, DOJ continues trying to conflate “claim for relief” with its justiciability argument of deference.

Plaintiff cites no authority for the proposition that the Court may disregard the significant deference due to the political branches’ choice to further a particular interest in this area, including to weigh the costs and burdens of military policies. (DOJ Reply at 9, D.E. No. 82).

Future policy concerning draft registration [needs to be resolved first]. (DOJ Reply at 10, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ’s burden

The Third Circuit in Dillard v. Brown, 652 F.2d 316, 323-24 (3d Cir. 1981), held that “[i]f the military justification outweighs the infringement of the plaintiff’s individual freedom, we may hold for the military on the merits, but we will not find the claim to be non-justiciable and therefore not cognizable by a court.”

“The defendant bears the burden of showing that no claim has been presented.” Hedges v. U.S., 404 F.3d 744, 750 (3d Cir.2005).

The DOJ by mixing justiciability with the merits and providing a justification that depends on fortune telling failed to carry its burden on its Rule 12(b)(6) motion.

The uncertainty of what will happen with the Commission and its suggestions does not outweigh what is happening now to the Plaintiff’s constitutional rights.

[Further, any justification for a continuing ban on women registering for the draft must be “genuine, not hypothesized or invented post hoc in response to litigation.” See United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515, 533 (1996). Both the case in this Court and the S.D. Texas Court started before Congress, well aware of these cases, created the Commission. Such indicates the Commission was invented in response to litigation.]

Equal Protection Claim

“Plaintiff alleges that the MSSA creates an unlawful sex-based difference that violates her and the putative class’s equal-protection and substantive-due-process rights under the Fifth Amendment because the MSSA (i) requires males and not females to register, and (ii) forbids females from registering. (See [SAC, D.E. No. 54] ¶¶ 2, 59, 67).” (Opinion at 2, D.E. No. 72).

Any statutory classifications that distinguish between men and women are “subject to scrutiny under the Equal Protection Clause,” Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 197 (1976) (quoting Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71, 75 (1971)).

Few cases have upheld the dismissal of a purposeful discrimination claim for failure to state a claim for relief. Pryor v. NCAA, 288 F.3d 548, 565 (3rd Cir. 2002), ques. on other grounds, S.H. ex rel. Durrell v. Lower Merion Sch. Dist., 729 F.3d 248, 264 (3d Cir. 2013).

Elements of Equal Protection

According to the Third Circuit, a woman’s right to equal protection is violated when

(1) she is treated “differently from others with whom,” (2) “she is similarly situated,” (3) that “unequal treatment is the result of intentional discrimination,” and (4) “the adequacy of the reasons for that discrimination” are determined under the intermediate standard of review. Hassan v. City of New York, 804 F.3d 277, 298 (3d Cir. 2015), as amended (Feb. 2, 2016) (internal quote SECSYS, LLC v. Vigil, 666 F.3d 678, 689 (10th Cir.2012)).

(1) The MSSA requires only males to register; therefore, Plaintiff, a woman, is treated differently because of her gender.

(2) The issue of “similarity”

Rostker held that “[T]he purpose of registration is to develop a pool of potential combat troops,” Rostker, 453 U.S. at 79.

Both men and women are now serving in combat positions. Therefore, some women who are of age to register are potential combat soldiers while some men of age to register are potential combat soldiers. Since it is impossible to identify solely by their sex which persons are potential combat soldiers, the two sexes are similarly situated with respect to draft registration—but treated differently.

See, e.g., Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 204 (1976) (sex not an “accurate proxy”); Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 686 (1973) (“[T]he sex characteristic frequently bears no relation to ability to perform or contribute to society.”).

Plaintiff is requesting this Court adhere to the reasoning in Rostker—to follow the reasoning in Rostker on the Equal Protection issue of similarity. Today “combat troops” means both women and men; therefore, both sexes belong in the “pool of potential combat troops.”

“[T]he constitutionality of a statute predicated upon the existence of a particular state of facts may be challenged by showing to the court that those facts have ceased to exist,” U.S. v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 153 (1938).

Even DOJ admits the facts on women in combat have changed:
Department of Defense Opens All Combat Billets to Women, DOJ Br. at 6, D.E. No. 80-1.

Similarity determined by combat positions opened to women not how many are in such positions.

The Rostker Court, 57 U.S. at 68, quoted from S. Rep. No. 96-826, pp. 157 (1980) that “the starting point for any discussion of the appropriateness of registering women for the draft is the question of the proper role of women in combat.”

The door to combat is now open and women are walking through it.

The issue for similarity is one of equal opportunity.

As former Defense Sec. Carter said, “equal opportunity may not always equate to equal participation.”

Former Sec. Defense Panetta said, “In life, as we all know, there are no guarantees of success. Not everyone is going to be able to be a combat soldier. But everyone is entitled to a chance.” Jan. 24, 2013, Press Conf.

DOJ admits that the issue of similarity is equal opportunity— not a quota that requires specific numbers from each group to be actually serving in a position.

In SWAN v. Sectary of Defense, 3:12-cv-06005, N.D. Cal., DOJ asserted that equal opportunities for women in combat does not depend on the actual number of women in combat roles. Case Management Statement at 17, ln 19-25, January 5, 2017, D.E. No. 89.

DOJ stated that such a quota argument “is premised on the fallacious assumption that for female Service members to have equal opportunities vis-à-vis combat positions there must be large numbers of female leaders in those positions so that there are a variety of positions from which junior enlisted females may choose.” Id.

Also, if quotas were required for similarity to exist, then women would not be police officers, fire officers or occupy other positions.

Since all combat roles in the military are now open to women who meet the gender-neutral standards for those positions, young men and women are now similarly situated with respect to draft registration.

(3) “To state an equal-protection claim,” Plaintiff must allege “‘intentional discrimination.’” Hassan, 804 F.3d at 294 (citing Washington v. Davis, 426 U.S. 229, 241 (1976)).

A claim of intentional discrimination does not require a motive of ill will to violate the Equal Protection Clause because intent and motive are not the same. Hassan at 297-298.

All that is needed is that the government “meant [intended] to single out a plaintiff because of the protected characteristic itself.” Id. (emphasis in the original) (citing see e.g., Snyder v. Louisiana, 552 U.S. 472, 485 (2008)).

Just because Defendants “might be able to conjure up some non-discriminatory motive to explain” their actions, such “is not a valid basis for dismissal.” Hassan, 804 F.3d at 297.

The only explanation Defendants have is that the MSSA requires discrimination.

According to the Supreme Court in Edwards v. Aguillard, 482 U.S. 578, 594-595 (1987), a statute’s intent is determined by (A) the plain meaning of the statute’s words, (B) its legislative history, and (C) historical context.

(A) Here the MSSA language explicitly classifies persons on the basis of sex. Such is direct evidence of intent, regardless of Congress’s 1948 or 1980 motives.

(B) As for legislative history, “Congress did not change the MSSA in 1980, but it did thoroughly reconsider the question of exempting women from its provisions, and its basis for doing so.

Rostker, 453 U.S. at 75 found that “[t]he 1980 legislative history is, . . . highly relevant in assessing the constitutional validity of the exemption.” Relying on the 1980 legislative history, the Rostker Court Found that “[t]he issue was considered at great length, and Congress clearly expressed its purpose and intent.” Rostker, 453 U.S. at 74.

The Rostker Court cites to that legislative history at 75 to 77, where the Senate Report found that “The principle that women should not intentionally and routinely engage in combat is fundamental, and enjoys wide support among our people. It is universally supported by military leaders who have testified before the Committee. . . . Current law and policy exclude women from being assigned to combat in our military forces, and the Committee reaffirms this policy.” S. Rep. No. 96–826, p. 157, U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1980, 2647.

The legislative history is clear—Congress intended to treat young women and men differently with regard to combat and therefore draft registration.

(C) As for American culture in 1980, “[t]he question of registering women for the draft received considerable national attention and was the subject of wide-ranging public debate . . . .” Rostker, 453 U.S. at 72 (1981). Equality lost that debate just as the Equal Rights Amendment was sliding into oblivion.

(4) Intermediate standard of review.

In Sessions v. Morales-Santana, 137 S.Ct. 1678, 1690 (2017), the Supreme Court laid out the standard of review:

The defender of legislation that differentiates on the basis of gender must show “at least that the [challenged] classification serves important governmental objectives and that the discriminatory means employed are substantially related to the achievement of those objectives.” Virginia, 518 U.S. at 533 (quoting Mississippi Univ. for Women v. Hogan, 458 U.S. 718, 724 (1982); alteration in original); see Tuan Anh Nguyen v. INS, 533 U.S. 53, 60 (2001). Moreover, the classification must substantially serve an important governmental interest today, for “in interpreting the [e]qual [p]rotection [guarantee], [we have] recognized that new insights and societal understandings can reveal unjustified inequality . . . that once passed unnoticed and unchallenged.” Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S.Ct. 2584, 2603 (2015).

The MSSA registration provision is clearly an important governmental objective. “The registration database itself mitigates risk to the Nation; its very existence would reduce the time required for full defense mobilization. . . . [in] a conflict of global proportions or mammoth national emergency.” (Report on the Purpose and Utility of a Registration System for Military Selective Service at 10, DOJ Br. Ex. 2, D.E. No. 80-3).

As for substantially serving, the Pentagon has stated that “It would appear imprudent to exclude approximately 50 percent of the population—the woman half—from availability for the draft in the case of a national emergency.” (Report on the Purpose and Utility of a Registration System for Military Selective Service at 17, DOJ Br. Ex. 2, D.E. No. 80-3).

So by the Government’s own admission, barring young women from registering does not substantially serve the important purpose of registration.

Rostker, 453 U.S. at 79, held that the purpose of draft registration is to create a pool of potential combat soldiers. Women are now combat soldiers, so barring all women from the registration pool of potential combat soldiers would not only not serve registration’s objective, but jeopardize its very purpose.

DOJ's mistaken arguments on Equal Protection

1. DOJ asserts that Rostker demands this Court actually write in its opinion that because the definition of “combat troops” today includes women that means men and women are still not similarly situated for draft registration.

According to the DOJ, when application of the law on Equal Protection as to the element of similarity reaches one conclusion under one fact situation—it must reach the same conclusion under all other fact situations no matter how different.

That is false according to the Supreme Court, “[T]he constitutionality of a statute predicated upon the existence of a particular state of facts may be challenged by showing to the court that those facts have ceased to exist,” U.S. v. Carolene Products Co., 304 U.S. 144, 153 (1938).

If Rostker is analyzed under IRAC: issue, rule, application, and conclusion, then its conclusion is the result of applying its rule on similarity to the fact situation that then existed. Applying that same rule to today’s fact situation when all the combat restrictions on women have been removed results in a different conclusion—the MSSA violates Plaintiffs’ equal protection rights because the absence of combat restrictions mean men and women are now similarly situated. Cf. Rostker at 78.

2. DOJ relies on Rostker to argue that Plaintiff fails to state an equal protection claim. (Def. Mov. Br. at 19-20, D.E. No. 80-1).

The Supreme Court did not dismiss Rostker for failure to state a claim, but decided the merits on Equal Protection similarity.

3. DOJ uses a quote from Judge Stahl’s concurring opinion in Elgin v. U.S. Dep’t of Treasury, 641 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 2011), that this Court cannot decide the merits: “[I]t would not be for this court to determine what, if any, impact these developments had on the continued vitality of Rostker, a task left solely to the Supreme Court.” (DOJ Reply at 9, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ’s use of that quote infers a justiciability issue but Stahl’s decision was based on the issue of similarity.

Judge Stahl found men and women were not similarly situated because “women are still precluded from ground combat positions.” Id. at 23. In 2011, the DGCDAR was still in effect and excluded women from units below the brigade level with a primary mission to engage in direct combat on the ground—today, it is history.

[If this Court believes that Judge Stahl’s concurring opinion means only the U.S. Supreme Court can make a decision on the issues here, then grant DOJ’s motions, so Plaintiff can start working her way up the ladder to the Supreme Court for a decision.]

4. The Court's decision in Rostker involved the same law and the same constitutional provision as Plaintiff's current challenge, and this Court should not depart from Rostker's binding precedent. (DOJ Reply at 1, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ is right Plaintiff here challenges the same law under the same constitutional provision as challenged in Rostker and in the S.D. Texas, Nat'l Coal. for Men v. Selective Serv. Sys. 4:16-cv-03362 (S.D. Tex. 2016). But the facts differ, and Plaintiff is asking this Court to apply the rule in Rostker on similarity to the new facts—the new definition for combat troops.

5. the Rostker Court's holding that the MSSA does not violate the Fifth Amendment remains binding on this Court and controls the outcome of this case. To decide Plaintiff's claim would thus require the Court to confront overruling Rostker, an action inconsistent with the well-established principle that lower courts must follow Supreme Court precedent, even when the underpinnings of a decision have been called into question. See Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Express Inc., 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989); Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 237 (1997). (DOJ Reply at 8, 9, D.E. No. 82).

The DOJ is arguing that when application of the law on Equal Protection reaches one conclusion under one fact situation—it must reach the same conclusion under all other fact situations no matter how different. Today “combat troops” mean men and women.

6. Plaintiff's argument is premised on her expectation that the Supreme Court today would reason differently than it did in 1981—that it would conclude that because women may now serve in all combat roles, the MSSA cannot be justified on that basis. Plaintiff thus asks this Court to speculate that the Supreme Court would find cause to depart from its reasoning in Rostker. (DOJ Reply at 9, D.E. No. 82).

False, Plaintiff relies on the Rostker Court reasoning that “the purpose of registration is to develop a pool of potential combat troops,” Rostker, 453 U.S. at 79. Potential “combat troops” means women and men today; therefore, they a similarly situated.

7. Rostker cannot be set aside as binding precedent by this Court based on Plaintiff's prediction as to how the Supreme Court would view other policy changes since that decision. (DOJ Reply at 10, D.E. No. 82).

Plaintiff is not predicting what the Commission may or may not do. It can do whatever it wants. She is simply stating that her rights have been violated by the SSS and MSSA over the last three years.

8. this Court should not depart from Rostker's binding precedent. . . given the present circumstances, where Congress has put in place a process for considering the impact of changed factual conditions regarding the ability of women to serve in combat roles on the Selective Service System. (DOJ Reply at 1, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ does not specify how the mechanics of women entering into combat roles will be impacted by a decision for the Plaintiff in this case.

Plaintiff is not asking this Court to supervise Congress or the military—she just wants her rights respected and enforced.

Congress and the military will remain able to make whatever decisions they chose—providing they are constitutional.

[However, if Your Honor agrees with the DOJ that Rostker demands the equal protection claim be dismissed, then grant DOJ's motion so that when we make it to the Supreme Court, which is where we always intended on going, we'll ask the Court to overrule Rostker—assuming, of course, the DOJ is right.]

Rostker* NOT based on administrative convenience

DOJ wrongly asserts that the holding in Rostker was justified . . . by the significant administrative burdens that would likely stem from registering and drafting women. (DOJ Reply at 9, D.E. No. 82).

(1) Rostker never decided whether “administrative convenience” was a sufficiently important issue for justifying discrimination based on sex. To do so would have required overruling prior Supreme Court decisions. Among them, Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677, 690-91 (1973) and Reed v. Reed, 404 U.S. 71, 76 (1971).

“In both Frontiero and Reed the reason asserted to justify the challenged gender-based classifications was administrative convenience and that alone,” which failed. Schlesinger v. Ballard, 419 U.S. 498, 510 (1975).

“Decisions following Reed . . . have rejected administrative ease and convenience as sufficiently important objectives to justify gender-based classifications.” Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 198 (1976).

As the dissenters Justice Marshall and Justice Brennan in Rostker accurately said, “This Court has repeatedly stated that the administrative convenience of employing a gender classification is not an adequate constitutional justification under the Craig v. Boren test.” Rostker, 453 U.S. at 95.

(2) Before determining whether a justification for discrimination exists, a court determines if the two groups are similarly situated. See Rostker, 453 U.S. at 78. Rostker concluded young men and women for the purpose of draft registration were not similarly situated. Id. At 78. Therefore, the Court never reached the issue of an important purpose substantially served—assuming administrative convenience is an important purpose, which it is not.

(3) Defendants in Nat'l Coal. for Men, 4:16-cv-03362 (S.D. Tex. 2016), the very same defendants as here, submitted an exhibit that contradicts that the Rostker decision was also based on administrative convenience. (Def. Mov. Ex. 1, Detailed Legal Analysis at 1, 2, 8/5/2016, D.E. No. 34-2).

Under 10 U.S.C. § 652(a)(3)(B), the Pentagon submitted the Detailed Legal Analysis to Congress on December 3, 2015. [The last 10 U.S.C. § 652(a)(3)(B) was filed December 3, 2015. According to DOJ in SWAN, the Congressional notification period expired January 2, 2016.]

On page one, the Pentagon noted that the Rostker decision was based on men and women not being similarly situated—not because of administrative burdens in registering women for the draft. On page two, the Analysis stated that “The Court in Rostker did not explicitly consider whether other rationales underlying the statute would be sufficient to limit the application of the MSSA to men.”

[The DOJ Reply says “the Supreme Court did not consider whether other rationales were “sufficient” to sustain the MSSA.” (Reply at 10-11). Yet at page 12, the DOJ Reply states “As Rostker recognized, the MSSA is justified, at a minimum, based on the administrative burdens of registering and drafting women. See 453 U.S. at 81.” So which is it? It’s neither.]

(4) Defendant SSS states on its website, “The Selective Service System, if given the mission and modest additional resources, is capable of registering and drafting women with its existing infrastructure.” (Kyle-LaBell, Pl. Opp. June 4, 2018, Ex. D, D.E. No. 81-5, bottom of page). The SSS’s plan for women registration estimates that it would need “$37 million over the first five years of execution.” (DOJ Report on the Purpose and Utility of a Registration System for Military Selective Service, Ex. 2 at 20, D.E. No. 80-3).

Neither is an administrative burden for the Government as Defendants have admitted: “SSS is presently unaware of any specific logistical problems that would arise if women were required to register for the Selective Service.” (Defendant Selective Service System’s Objections and Responses to Plaintiffs’ First Set of Interrogatories at No. 11 p. 7 Response, filed in Nat’l Coal. for Men, 4:16-cv-03362, S.D. Tex. 2016, D.E. No. 76).

DOJ also argues out of the other side of its mouth that The Supreme Court did not address whether, for example, the administrative burdens of registering and drafting women would alone be a sufficient basis on which to uphold the MSSA. The district court in Nat’l Coal. for Men also did not consider whether the MSSA could be upheld on the basis of the administrative burdens posed by registering and drafting women. (DOJ Reply at 11, D.E. No. 82).

That is correct; therefore, the DOJ attorneys must be arguing that administrative burdens alone are sufficient to defeat an equal protection challenge to a statute. Not according to the Supreme Court.

“Decisions following Reed . . . have rejected administrative ease and convenience as sufficiently important objectives to justify gender-based classifications.” Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. at 198.

DOJ argues that the administrative concerns described in Rostker encompassed more than pure financial costs, including “[o]ther administrative problems such as housing and different treatment with regard to dependency, hardship and physical standards.” 453 U.S. at 81 (quoting S. Rep. No. 96-826, 159, U.S. Code Cong. & Admin. News 1980, 2649)). (DOJ Reply at 10, D.E. No. 82).

These administrative concerns only involve induction not draft registration where there are no administrative problems such as housing and different treatment with regard to dependency, hardship and physical standards.

Those who register with the SSS are a different group than those inducted into the military. (DOJ Standing Motion Br. at 4-6, D.E. No. 69-1). “Defendants appear to acknowledge that those who register with the SSS compose a different group than those already in the military. (See Def. Mov. Br. at 4-6)” (Opinion at 8, D.E. No. 72).

S.D. Texas found an Equal Protection Claim for Relief

For what it is worth, the S.D. Texas court found an Equal Protection claim was stated against the very same defendants as here on the exact same issue as here—sex-discrimination by the registration requirement of the MSSA. Nat’l Coal. for Men v. Selective Serv. Sys., 2018 WL 1694906 (S.D. Tex., April 6, 2018).

This Court is obviously not bound by a decision in the S.D. of Texas, but a sister’s district decision on the Equal Protection issue allows this Court to refer to the decision and consider principles applied in that decision. Alperin v. Vatican Bank, 410 F.3d 532, 546 n.8 (9th Cir. 2005).

It is clearly more valuable than the assertions of the DOJ lawyers.

In the Texas case, the DOJ argued that the male plaintiffs failed to state a claim because: (1) entry of the relief sought would impermissibly intrude on Congress’s authority over military affairs; and (2) the Rostker result requires the same result that the case be dismissed.

The Texas Court ruled against both arguments.

(1) On deference, the Texas Court stated

“Rostker thoroughly explained the reason to provide deference to Congress when dealing with military affairs. See 453 U.S. at 64–67. But “[n]one of this is to say that Congress is free to disregard the Constitution when it acts in the area of military affairs. In that area, as any other, Congress remains subject to the limitations of the Due Process Clause.” Id.

at 67. Because Rostker explicitly requires Congress to comply with the Constitution in the area of military affairs, and because Plaintiffs allege Defendants did not, Plaintiffs state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Rostker, 453 U.S. at 67.” Nat’l Coal. for Men v. Selective Serv. Sys., 2018 WL 1694906 *4 (S.D. Tex., April 6, 2018).

(2) On reaching the same result as in Rostker

“[T]he factual circumstances of this case are different [from Rostker]. . . . Now, women can serve in combat roles. Because the alleged factual circumstances of this case differ from the dispositive facts in Rostker, the court cannot conclude, at this stage,” that the same outcome is required. Nat’l Coal. for Men v. Selective Serv. Sys., 2018 WL 1694906 *4(S.D. Tex., April 6, 2018).

The S.D. Texas court is now considering dueling motions for Summary Judgment and a SSS motion for a stay. Whatever the results in the S.D. Texas court, that case will be appealed to the Fifth Circuit where the Dist Ct reasoning will be accepted, modified or rejected, and then on to the U.S. Supreme Court if it permits.

Substantive Due Process Claim

This case deals with a legislative—not an ultra vires executive act.

To state a substantive due process claim in a case challenging a legislative act, the “complaint would have to allege facts that would support a finding of arbitrary or irrational legislative action . . .,” Pace Res. v. Shrewsbury, 808 F.2d 1023, 1035 (3rd Cir. 1987), unless a fundamental right is burdened, then strict scrutiny is applied, Alexander v. Whitman, 114 F.3d 1392, 1403 (3rd Cir.1997).

The Third Circuit has warned, “It is crucial to keep in mind the distinction between legislative acts and non-legislative or executive acts. As we have previously explained, ‘executive acts . . . typically apply to one person or to a limited number of persons, while legislative acts, generally laws and broad executive regulations, apply to large segments of society.’” Nicholas v. Pa. State, 227 F.3d 133, 139 n.1 (3rd Cir. 2000), cert. den., 449 U.S. 955 (internal quote citation omitted).

DOJ mistakenly relies on a definition of “arbitrary” to mean “only the most egregious official conduct” that “shocks the conscience.” (DOJ Br. at 19, 27, D.E. 80-1). Such is the standard of culpability when executive government officials abuse their power, United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. v. Township of Warrington, PA, 316 F.3d 392, 399 (3rd Cir. 2003); that is, they act ultra vires. Here the SSS is not acting ultra vires—it is doing what the MSSA requires.

The SSS even admits that it is acting in accordance with a legislative act—the MSSA. (DOJ Reply at 4, 12, D.E. No. 82). Therefore, the applicable standard is for legislative acts, which requires determining whether a legitimate governmental interest is rationally served or whether a compelling governmental interest is strictly served because a fundamental right is infringed. Nicholas v. Pa. State, 227 F.3d at 139; Malmed v. Thornburgh, 621 F.2d 565, 575 (3rd Cir. 1980), cert. den., 449 U.S. 955.

The MSSA fails the Irrebuttable Presumption test for Substantive Due Process under both rational and strict scrutiny; therefore, the SAC states a substantive due process claim on which relief can be granted.

Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine

For the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine to apply, the first thing needed is a constitutional right that a government is alleged to be infringing under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment or the 14th Amendment.

The alleged infringement is that a statute denies a benefit or places a burden on persons because they possess a particular characteristic. The denial of the benefit or assignment of the burden must then necessarily follow from that characteristic; otherwise, substantive due process is violated. Malmed v. Thornburgh, 621 F.2d 565, 573-574 (3rd Cir. 1980), cert. denied, 449 U.S. 955.

The doctrine comes from a series of Supreme Court decisions. Bell v. Burson, 402 U.S. 535 (1971); Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645 (1972); Vlandis v. Kline, 412 U.S. 441 (1973); U.S. Department of Agriculture v. Murry, 413 U.S. 508 (1973); Cleveland Board of Education v. LaFleur, 414 U.S. 632 (1974); and Turner v. Dept. of Employment Security, 423 U.S. 44 (1975).

Each of these cases involved a statute containing rules that denied a benefit or placed a burden on all individuals possessing a certain characteristic. The characteristic is the basic fact from which a presumed fact is inferred, such as women are not capable of combat.

These decisions held that if it “is not necessarily or universally true” that the basic fact infers the presumed fact, then the statute’s irrebuttable presumption infringes substantive due process. Vlandis v. Kline, 412 U.S. at 452

The doctrine is but another way of stating that a presumed fact must be based on reason. Malmed v. Thornburgh, 621 F.2d 565, 574 (3rd Cir. 1980), cert. den., 449 U.S. 955.

If a plaintiff demonstrates that the presumed fact is not “rationally related” to a particular characteristic; that is, the basic fact, the inference will not pass constitutional muster. The decisions also show that in cases involving fundamental rights, strict scrutiny is the standard of review. The basic fact must strictly serve the presumed fact, which is a compelling state interest as in Stanley and LaFleur—marriage and family rights.

Applying Irrebuttable doctrine from Third Circuit cases to the MSSA.

In Gurmankin v. Constanzo, 556 F.2d 184 (3d Cir. 1977), the policy of the Philadelphia public school system excluded blind teachers from registering for an examination of their ability to teach sighted students. The Third Circuit held:

“The refusals by the [School] District to permit [Ms. Gurmankin] to take the examination violated due process by subjecting [her] to an irrebuttable presumption that her blindness made her incompetent to teach sighted students. . . . She was, by virtue of the irrebuttable presumption of incompetency, deprived of the opportunity” to register for the examination.” Id. 556 F.2d at 187-188.

The court used rational analysis to determine that barring her because of her blindness was arbitrary and thereby violated substantive due process. Id. 556 F.2d at 188.

The MSSA’s male-only registration likewise creates an irrebuttable presumption that because a person is a woman, she cannot register for the draft (as Gurmankin could not register for the teaching test), and, in the case of a national emergency, a woman will not be tested physically and psychologically for whether she is a potential combat soldier (as Gurmankin was barred from being tested as to whether she could teach sighted students).

The characteristic of being a woman is the basic fact (just as blindness was in Gurmankin) from which the presumed fact of being unable to function as a combat soldier (just as unable to teach sighted students in Gurmankin) is inferred; therefore, there is no need to test whether a woman is potentially capable of combat (just as there was no need to test blind teachers for their ability to teach sighted students in Gurmankin). The MSSA presumption is not necessarily nor universally true as required by the Supreme Court cases and this Circuit's Malmed, 621 F.2d 565, 573.

In Malmed v. Thornburgh, 621 F.2d 565 (3rd Cir. 1980), cert. den., 449 U.S. 955, five judges of the Court of Common Pleas of First Judicial District of Pennsylvania brought an action challenging Pennsylvania Constitution section requiring retirement of state judges at age 70. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals held that section did not violate equal protection or the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Malmed stated that "As with any aspect of substantive due process, a court using the irrebuttable presumption doctrine must apply the rational basis test, or in appropriate cases, strict scrutiny." Malmed v. Thornburgh, 621 F.2d 565, 575 (3rd Cir. 1980).

Under the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine, since both men and women are currently in combat, there is no rational basis and clearly no compelling reason for preventing them from registering on the grounds that they cannot engage in combat due to their sex.

Continuing validity of Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine

The irrebuttable presumption "doctrine has not been disavowed by a majority" of the Supreme Court." Rich, Modern Constitutional Law, § 22:14, p. 45.

According to Toll v. Moreno, 458 U.S. 1, 6 n.7 (1982), Weinberger v. Salfi, 422 U.S. 749 (1975), did not overrule the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine because Toll at 6 relied on Vlandis.

In Salfi, Justice Rehnquist distinguished LaFleur and other Irrebuttable Presumption cases on the basis of the interests that were being protected in those cases. [Rights to conceive and to raise children enjoy constitutionally protected status under Due Process, in sharp contrast to a non-contractual claim to receive funds from the public treasury, as asserted in Salfi.] Unlike the claims involved in Stanley and LaFleur, a non-contractual claim to receive funds from the public treasury enjoys no constitutionally protected status. [Where the interest asserted is only claims for disability payments, Congress could rationally conclude that the expense and difficulty of individual determinations justified a broad preventive rule.] Rehnquist did not overrule or reject the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine. The Doctrine simply did not apply because there was no constitutionally protected interest at stake.

The Third Cir in Malmed v. Thornburgh, 621 F.2d 565, 573 (3rd Cir. 1980), stated about the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine that

(1) "This conceptual framework requires careful analysis for proper application," and

(2) “we do not read the [Supreme Court] irrebuttable presumption decisions as deviating substantially from the traditional tests for violations of the due process clause.” Id. at 576.

The Court would not have stated such had the doctrine been overruled.

E.D. Pa. Judge John Ditter concluded:

“It is inconceivable to me that such a doctrine could be somehow negated or overruled by default simply because the Supreme Court has not availed itself of several alleged opportunities to discuss it. From the language and analysis used in the majority opinions, it is clear to me that Massachusetts Board of Retirement v. Murgia, 427 U.S. 307 (1976), and Vance v. Bradley, 440 U.S. 93 (1979) were decided strictly in an equal protection context. They should not, therefore, be read as impliedly overruling a doctrine developed within the scope of due process.” Malmed v. Thornburgh, 478 F.Supp. 998, 1012 (E.D. Pa. 1979), rev’d on other grounds, 621 F.2d 565 (1980) (Third Circuit applied the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine as did the district court but reached the opposite result due to defendants incompetence at defending).

The Supreme Court has applied the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine in cases subsequent to Turner v. Dept. of Employment Security, 423 U.S. 44 (1975), but found it was not satisfied—the Court did not overrule the doctrine’s validity. See, e.g., Michael H. v. Gerald D., 491 U.S. 110, 127 (1989) (natural father had no constitutional right to a parental-child relationship with the illegitimate child he fathered); U.S. v. Locke, 471 U.S. 84, 107 (1985) (no violation of constitutional right because not a taking); Usery v. Turner Elkhorn Mining Co., 428 U.S. 1, 22-23 (1976) (found Stanley and Vlandis inapplicable to that fact situation); Weinberger v. Salfi, 422 U.S. 749, 771-772 (1975) (“Unlike the claims involved in Stanley and LaFleur, a non-contractual claim to receive funds from the public treasury enjoys no constitutionally protected status . . .”).

In 2011, the Third Circuit in B & G Const. Co., Inc. v. Dir., Off. Workers’ Comp. Prog., 662 F.3d 233, 254 (3rd Cir. 2011) considered the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine but found it inapplicable because that case concerned procedural due process not substantive due process.

The DOJ lawyers continue playing their sleigh-of-hand game this time by deleting from their quote the sentence to which their quote refers.

DOJ quotes from B & G,

“A plurality of the Supreme Court has rejected the theory that a legislature’s use of an irrebuttable presumption automatically violates the Due Process Clause.” (Citing B & G Const. Co., Inc. v. Dir., Office of Workers’ Comp. Prog., 662 F.3d 233, 254 (3d Cir. 2011), DOJ Reply at 12, D.E. No. 82).

The sentence they intentionally left out that precedes their quote makes clear the quote refers to “procedural due process”—not “substantive due process”

“Even assuming we agreed, which, as we explain below we do not do, with B & G’s characterization of section 1556 as creating an irrebuttable presumption, we would disagree with the argument that such a presumption would violate B & G’s procedural due process rights.”

B & G also cites to Michael H. v. Gerald D., 491 U.S. 110, 127 (1989), as a procedural due process case. B & G Const. Co. v. Dir., Office of Workers' Comp. Programs, 662 F.3d at 254.

No court in the Third Circuit has overturned the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine because as DOJ asserts, It is well established that the lower courts are bound to follow Supreme Court precedent, even when the underpinnings of a decision have been called into question. See Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson, 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989). (DOJ Reply at 8-9, D.E. No. 82).

Cases in other Circuits cite Supreme Court Irrebuttable Presumption Cases.

The following cases have cited for authority to the core Supreme Court irrebuttable presumption cases without noting they were no longer viable:

Franceschi v. Yee, 887 F.3d 927, 935 (9th Cir. 2018), cites see Bell v. Burson, 402 U.S. 535, 539 (1971) for the Due Process Clause applies to the deprivation of a driver’s license by the State. (Taxpayer challenged suspension of driver’s license for failure to pay state taxes, suspension constitutional).

Smith v. City of Wyoming, 821 F.3d 697, 707 (6th Cir. 2016), as amended (May 18, 2016), states “the police conduct in this case did not interfere with Smith's family relationships in violation of the Constitution. The officers' actions were a far cry from those found to have violated” substantive due process in Stanley v. Illinois, 405 U.S. 645 (1972). (Mother brought § 1983 action and state-law claims against city and police officers, relating to officers' responses to reports of possible abuse or neglect of mother's minor children in her home, including four warrantless entries to mother's home.)

Dragovich v. U.S. Dep’t of the Treasury, 848 F. Supp. 2d 1091, 1104–05 (N.D. Cal. 2012), considered Cleveland Board of Education v. La Fleur, 414 U.S. 632, 639 (1974), but ultimately relied on other cases because the law challenged in La Fleur was a more significant intrusion, in that the pregnant teachers there could not work during the mandatory leave period. It did not mention that the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine had been rejected. (Challenge to Cal insurance plan barring same-sex couples. Plaintiffs alleged equal protection and substantive due process claims)

Fundamental right to be treated as a first-class, full-fledge citizen, strict scrutiny.

Where the constitutional right in issue is a fundamental one, such as personal choice in matters of marriage and family life as in Stanley, 405 U.S. 645, and LaFleur, 414 U.S. 632, then the analysis for determining whether the statute violates substantive due process is strict scrutiny. Malmed, 621 F.2d at 575.

Plaintiff asserts that her right to be treated as “first-class, full-fledged citizen” is a fundamental right, and requests this Court use strict scrutiny in deciding whether the MSSA violates Substantive Due Process under the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine.

The Supreme Court in U.S. v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515, 532 (1996) ruled that federal or state government acts cannot deny “to women, simply because they are women, full citizenship stature” to aspire, achieve, participate in and contribute to society based on their individual talents and capacities.

“[F]ull citizenship stature” or as we denote it in our papers as “first-class, full-fledge citizenship” clearly includes registering with the SSS.

Bella Abzug once said, “Until women [have] equal rights and responsibilities with respect to military service, they [will] be ‘denied the status of full citizenship, and the respect that goes with that status.’” Jill Elaine Hasday, Fighting Women: The Military, Sex, and Extrajudicial Constitutional, 93 Minn. L.Rev. 96, 111 (2008) (internal quote from Bella Abzug).

Blythe Leszkay, First Lt., U.S. Army Reserves, in Feminism on the Front Lines, 27 Hastings Women’s L. J. 259, 297 (2016), wrote “Only when we are allowed to fulfill our equal obligations will we have the chance to claim our equal rights.”

[Other quotes only if needed:

Air Force Maj. Mary Jennings Hegar said, “The question isn’t whether we want our daughters to be drafted, but what kind of world we want them to inhabit: one where they’re infantilized as passive objects of chivalry or one where they’re empowered to achieve their potential as genuinely equal citizens?” Rachel Natelson, Selective Service Is an Obligation of Citizenship, Including Women, U.S. News & World Report, February 12, 2013.

Congresswoman Jackie Speier, in her unsuccessful effort to have the Republican controlled House of Representatives Armed Services Committee include women in SSS registration, said, “We’re trying to establish greater equality in every respect in this country and with that equality comes rights and responsibilities.” Anshu Siripurapu, Will your daughters have to register for the draft? No, Republicans say, July 7, 2017, Miami Herald.

Judy Goldsmith, Congressional testimony of National Organization for Women (1980): “[O]mission from the registration and draft ultimately robs women of the right to first-class citizenship and paves the way to underpaying women all the days of their lives. Moreover, because men exclude women here, they justify excluding women from the decision-making of our nation.”

The ACLU has stated that “Until both the responsibilities and the rights of citizenship are shared on a gender-neutral basis, women will continue to be considered less than first class, full-fledged citizens.” [www.aclu.org/feature/ combat-exclusion-policy-women](http://www.aclu.org/feature/ combat-exclusion-policy-women).

President Theodore Roosevelt once said, “The first requisite of a good citizen in this Republic of ours is that [s]he shall be able and willing to pull [her] weight that [s]he shall not be a mere passenger.” Speech before New York State Chamber of Commerce, November 11, 1902.

Registration “remind[s] our youth that public service is a valuable part of American citizenship.” Former Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel, May 2013, Report on the Purpose and Utility of a Registration System for Military Selective Service at 12.

Bella Abzug once observed that “[i]n the Congress of the United States and in the political life of this Nation, political choices and debate often reflect a belief that men who have fought for their country have a special right to wield political power and make political decisions.” Jill Elaine Hasday, Fighting Women: The Military, Sex, and Extrajudicial Constitutional, 93 Minn. L.Rev. 96, 111 (2008).

The right to be treated as “first-class, full-fledged citizens” is like the fundamental right of voting—a privilege of national citizenship that owes its existence to the Federal Government.

Women can vote and one of the policies behind allowing persons to vote in a democracy is that it gives them a stake in the government they may have to defend with their lives. Both are conditions of first-class, full-fledged citizenship and respect.

Determining a fundamental right

The Supreme Court has stated that “Although the Court has not assumed to define ‘liberty’ with any great precision, that term is not confined to mere freedom from bodily restraint. Liberty under law extends to the full range of conduct which the individual is free to pursue, and it cannot be restricted except for a proper governmental objective.” Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497, 499–500 (1954), supplemented sub nom. Brown v. Bd. of Educ. of Topeka, Kan., 349 U.S. 294 (1955)

“[H]istory and tradition are the starting point, but not in all cases the ending point of the substantive due process inquiry.” County of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 857 (1998) (Kennedy, J. and O’Connor, J., concurring).

The Privilege and Immunities Clause of Art. IV, § 2 of the U.S. Constitution “protects those fundamental rights which ‘belong to the citizens of all free governments.’” William J. Rich, Modern Constitutional Law § 19.1 at 713-714 (citing Corfield v. Coryell, 6 F. Cas. 546, 551-552 (1823)); see also Baldwin v. Fish & Game Comm’n of Montana, 436 U.S. 371, 377 (1978) (fundamental rights are “protected as a privilege and an immunity under the Constitution’s Art. IV, § 2.”).

[Corfield “delineated the scope of rights under the Privileges and Immunities Clause . . . not the equal protection component of the Due Process Clause.” Apache Bend Apartments, Ltd. v. U.S. Through I.R.S., 964 F.2d 1556, 1563 n.9 (5th Cir. 1992), on reh’g, 987 F.2d 1174 (5th Cir. 1993).]

The protection provided by Article IV, § 2 is “[o]nly with respect to those ‘privileges’ and ‘immunities’ bearing on the vitality of the Nation as a single entity . . . .” Supreme Court of New Hampshire v. Piper, 470 U.S. 274, 279 (1985) (quoting Baldwin, 436 U.S. at 383).

The Supreme Court in the Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U.S. 36, 79-80 (1872), superseded on other grounds, U.S. v. Ruiz, 961 F. Supp. 1524, 1530 (C.D. Utah 1997), held that privileges and immunities “are dependent upon citizenship of the United States,” and include the rights “to engage in administering [the Federal government’s] functions . . . for all the great purposes for which the Federal government was established . . . .”

One such function of the Federal Government bearing on the nation’s “vitality” is military defense by raising and supporting Armies, see Nat’l Fed’n of Indep. Bus. v. Sebelius, 567 U.S. 519, 534 (2012), which includes the citizenship privilege of registering for the national defense to stand ready and willing to fight in case of a national emergency.

Registration is the first step ‘in a united and continuous process designed to raise an army speedily and efficiently . . . .’” Rostker, 453 U.S. at 75 (quoting Falbo v. U.S., 320 U.S. 549, 553 (1944)). The MSSA prevents women from registering for the national defense; therefore, it denies them a privilege of citizenship by not treating them as first-class, full-fledged citizens.

Plaintiff requests that this Court not follow the reasoning in Minor v. Happersett, 88 U.S. 162 (1874), which held that women did not have the right to vote as a privilege and immunity of citizenship. Id. at 178. According to the Minor Court, women had always been citizens, but citizenship for them meant being denied the vote. The Court, therefore, excluded women from first-class, full-fledged citizenship because they had always been excluded with respect to the vote.

Today, the right to vote is a fundamental right of full-fledge citizenship. Modern Constitutional Law, § 14.2, p. 548 (3d ed. 2011). So the determination of “fundamental liberty interests should not be confined by rules that existed at a time when women were treated as chattel.” Id. 2:11, p. 63.

But when it comes to draft-registration, the MSSA harkens back to the 1800s. Under all the legalese, the DOJ lawyers are really arguing that women have always been excluded from draft registration; therefore, they should still be excluded because their citizenship is something less than men, and that this Court cannot change that.

Not unlike the 1857 Dred Scot v. Sanford, 60 U.S. 1857, decision where blacks were ruled as something less than full-fledge citizens. I believe it was four-fifths a citizen.

DOJ's misplaced arguments about the Privileges and Immunities Clause.

DOJ Reply at 13 (D.E. No. 82) claims the Privileges and Immunities Clause only applies to states dealing with citizens of other states but that is wrong.

The Privileges and Immunities Clause purpose was “to help fuse into one Nation a collection of independent, sovereign States,” Toomer v. Witsell, 334 U.S. 385, 395 (1948),— “to constitute the citizens of the United States as one people,” Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 180 (1868), overruled on other grounds, U.S. v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass’n, 64 S. Ct. 1162 (1944).

DOJ wrongly states that Hicklin v. Orbeck, 437 U.S. 518, 526 (1978), held that the Privilege & Immunities Clause was only designed to prevent a state from discriminating against citizens from other states. (DOJ Reply at 13, D.E. No. 82).

The Hicklin Court applied the Privilege & Immunities Clause to a dispute over an Alaskan statute favoring residents over non-residents for employment and found that statute did not substantially serve its purported end. Hicklin, 437 U.S. 518, 527-528.

The Hicklin Court cited to the “mutually reinforcing relationship between the Privilege & Immunities Clause and the Commerce Clause . . . that stems from their . . . shared vision of federalism . . .” as support for its decision. Hicklin, 437 U.S. at 532.

The Commerce Clause gives Congress the power to regulate the nation’s foreign trade and trade among the states. It does not address trade solely within a state.

Federalism means power shared by the national and state governments—it is not limited to state power.

Alexander Hamilton wrote in Federalist No. 80 that the Privilege & Immunities Clause of the proposed Constitution was “the basis of the union.”

Additionally, section one of the 14th Amendment, which applies only to the states includes the phrase “No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the U.S.”

If the Privilege & Immunities Clause only applied to the states as DOJ asserts, then there would have been no need for this phrase in § 1 of the 14th Amendment.

DOJ also relies on a footnote taken out of context in Chase Manhattan Bank v. South Acres Development Co., 434 U.S. 236 (1978). (DOJ Reply at 13, D.E. No. 82) (“we have never held that the Privileges and Immunities Clauses of Art. IV, § 2, cl. 1, and the Fourteenth Amendment restrict congressional – as opposed to state – action.”).

The issue in Chase was the interpretation of 48 U.S.C. § 1421b(u) over whether Congress had granted Guam’s district court diversity jurisdiction. The Supreme held that the statute did not grant such jurisdiction.

The Court’s remarks about the Privileges and Immunities Clause was to note that the Clause did not limit Congressional power to withhold diversity jurisdiction.

The case did not concern the fundamental rights of citizens.

Strict Scrutiny Test

Since a fundamental right is infringed, the strict scrutiny test requires determining whether a compelling governmental interest is strictly served by requiring only males to register because they are the only ones who are potential combat troops. See Nicholas v. Pa. State, 227 F.3d at 139; Malmed, 621 F.2d 565, 575 (3rd Cir. 1980), cert. den., 449 U.S. 955.

There are women in combat today and those women were previously potential combat troops but were kept out of the pool of potential combat troops by prohibiting them from registering. They were barred not because they did not qualify for combat, but solely because they were women.

Additionally, not all women who would qualify for combat positions ended up joining the military; yet they were potential combat troops but also barred from the registration pool because of their sex.

Clearly a more effective method of creating a registration pool of potential combat troops would be to allow young women to register for the draft—including Plaintiff.

By failing to treat women as first-class, full-fledged citizens when it comes to registration, it does not serve the Government’s interest in draft registration.

Unable to stick to the SAC allegation, the DOJ lawyers attempt to re-write it to their own advantage by wrongly saying, “the relevant question, properly posed, is whether Plaintiff possesses a fundamental right for her name to be listed on the Selective Service registry.” (DOJ Reply at 12, D.E. No. 82).

Our papers repeatedly state that the Strict Scrutiny question is whether the right to be treated as a “first-class, full-fledged citizen” is a fundamental right. (See SAC at 3, D.E. 54-1; Opposition to Standing Motion at 34, D.E. 70; Opposition Current Motion Dismiss at 34, D.E. 81).

Can’t these guys read?

Rational relationship test

Even if this Court decides that the test for the inference from the characteristic of woman to the presumed fact of incapable of being a potential combat soldier is one of a rational relationship, the inference that women are not potential combat soldiers fails because they are serving as combat soldiers today and all combat positions are now open to them.

So the claim that their gender alone prevents them from becoming potential combat troops is arbitrary and irrational for a legislative act and violates the substantive due process rights of the putative class of young women.

Equal Protection and Substantive Due Process permitted in the same case.

DOJ clearly wants this Court to ignore the substantive due process cause of action as analyzed under the Irrebuttable Presumption Doctrine because it would hand DOJ a clear defeat.

Such, however, is contrary to modern-day pleading—“If a party makes alternative statements, the pleading is sufficient if any one of them is sufficient.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(d)(2).

The Supreme Court has held that “the concepts of equal protection and due process, both stemming from our American ideal of fairness, are not mutually exclusive. The ‘equal protection of the laws’ is a more explicit safeguard of prohibited unfairness than ‘due process of law,’ and, therefore, we do not imply that the two are always interchangeable phrases. But, as this Court has recognized, discrimination may be so unjustifiable as to be violative of due process.” Bolling v. Sharpe, 347 U.S. 497, 499 (1954), supplemented sub nom. Brown v. Bd. of Educ. of Topeka, Kan., 349 U.S. 294 (1955).

There is no bar for considering equal protection and substantive due process causes of action in the same case.

The Supreme Court in Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003), used substantive due process to invalidate a sodomy statute challenged under equal protection for discriminating against gays. Id. at 563. The Court explained that when a law infringing liberty “remains unexamined for its substantive validity, its stigma might remain even if it were not enforceable as drawn for equal protection reasons.” Id. at 575. Justice O’Connor, who concurred in the result, used an equal protection analysis rather than substantive due process, thereby showing that the use of one analysis does not prevent the use of the other. Id. at 579.

Malmed v. Thornburgh, 621 F.2d 565, 575 (3rd Cir. 1980), cert. den., 449 U.S. 955, made its decision on both equal protection and due process clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Third Circuit district court case, Kelly v. Ford Motor Co., 1996 WL 639832 *3-7 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 29, 1996), actually considered both equal protection and substantive due process but found neither applied.

DOJ’s wrong arguments that an Equal Protection claim prevents Substantive Due Process claim.

While there is a bar to a Due Process Clause action when the government uses excessive physical force and its use violates the Fourth Amendment—such is not the case here.

Still DOJ deceptively tries to bootstrap this rule into one that states: Whenever one Constitutional amendment provides explicit protection another amendment providing protection cannot be pleaded. (DOJ Br. at 24, D.E. No 80-1; DOJ Reply at 12 n.4, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ relies on Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386 (1989), but it only held “all claims that law enforcement officers have used excessive force—deadly or not—in the course of an arrest, investigatory stop, or other ‘seizure’ of a free citizen should be analyzed under the Fourth Amendment and its ‘reasonableness’ standard, rather than under a ‘substantive due process’ approach.” Graham, 490 U.S. at 395 (emphasis in original).”

The D.N.J. has agreed that such was the only holding in Graham. See Fagan v. City of Vineland, 804 F.Supp. 591, 597 (1992), rev'd in part, 22 F.3d 1283 (3d Cir. 1994), and aff'd in part, 22 F.3d 1296 (3d Cir. 1994).

The DOJ lawyer’s most artful deception comes with their gerrymandering quotes from Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395 (1989).

In the DOJ Brief at 24 (D.E. No. 80-1), they mis-quote Graham. The DOJ lawyer’s mis-quote is

“[W]hen a particular Amendment “provides an explicit textual source of constitutional protection against” a particular sort of governmental behavior, “that Amendment, not the more generalized notion of substantive due process must be the guide for analyzing these claims.”) (Internal citations omitted).”

What the Graham Court actually stated, 490 U.S. at 395, was “Because the Fourth Amendment provides an explicit textual source of constitutional protection against this sort of physically intrusive governmental conduct, that Amendment, not the more generalized notion of ‘substantive due process,’ must be the guide for analyzing these claims. N.10”

The DOJ author of the Brief deceptively left out “Because the Fourth Amendment” and “this sort of physically intrusive governmental conduct,” and the footnote 10. Isn’t that perjury?

N. 10 A “seizure” triggering the Fourth Amendment’s protections occurs only when government actors have, “by means of physical force or show of authority, . . . in some way restrained the liberty of a citizen,” Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 19, n. 16 (1968); see Brower v. County of Inyo, 489 U.S. 593, 596 (1989).

[Our cases have not resolved the question whether the Fourth Amendment continues to provide individuals with protection against the deliberate use of excessive physical force beyond the point at which arrest ends and pretrial detention begins, and we do not attempt to answer that question today. It is clear, however, that the Due Process Clause protects a pretrial detainee from the use of excessive force that amounts to punishment. See Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 535 -539 (1979).]

[Graham at 395 n.10 even gave an example of where two amendments apply—the Due Process Clause and the Eighth Amendment:

[After conviction, the Eighth Amendment “serves as the primary source of substantive protection . . . in cases . . . where the deliberate use of force is challenged as excessive and unjustified.” Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S., at 327. Any protection that “substantive due process” affords convicted prisoners against excessive force is, we have held, at best redundant of that provided by the Eighth Amendment. Ibid.

[The Supreme Court in Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 327 (1986) stated:

“It would indeed be surprising if, in the context of forceful prison security measures, “conduct that shocks the conscience” or “afford[s] brutality the cloak of law,” and so violates the Fourteenth Amendment, Rochin v. California, 342 U.S. 165, 172, 173, 72 S.Ct. 205, 210, 96 L.Ed. 183 (1952), were not also punishment “inconsistent with contemporary standards of decency” and “repugnant to the conscience of mankind,” in violation of the Eighth.”]

Likely, emboldened by the deception in his Brief, the author of the DOJ Reply at 12 n.4, falsely attributes the following quote to Collins v. Harker Heights, 503 U.S. 115, 125 (1992):

“[w]here a particular Amendment provides an explicit textual source of constitutional protection against a particular sort of government behavior, that Amendment, not the more generalized notion of substantive due process, must be the guide for analyzing these claims.” Cty. of Sacramento v. Lewis, 523 U.S. 833, 842 (1998) (quoting Collins v. Harker Heights, 503 U.S. 115, 125 (1992) and Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 273 (1994) and citing Graham, 490 at 395).

That quote actually is an amalgam of quotes from Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 273 (1994), which in turn cited for such from—guess what case—Graham, 490 U.S. at 395.

Collins v. Harper Heights, 503 U.S. 115 (1992), dealt with 42 U.S.C. 1983 liability of a municipality.

The Fourth Amendment was not involved, Graham was not cited, there was no physically intrusive city conduct (503 U.S. at 125), and the Court held that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not impose on municipalities certain minimum levels of safety and security for its employees.

Plaintiff here does not alleged “physically intrusive conduct” nor is she an employee of a city alleged to have injured her.

Other courts also disagree with DOJ's interpretation of Graham by making clear the limited nature of Graham's application to only excessive governmental force used in making seizures.

In Cty. of Los Angeles, Calif. v. Mendez, 137 S. Ct. 1539, 1546 (2017), the Supreme Court held that Graham "sets forth a settled and exclusive framework for analyzing whether the force used in making a seizure complies with the Fourth Amendment."

"If there is no excessive force claim under Graham, there is no excessive force claim at all." Cty. of Los Angeles, at 1547.

In Carroll v. Borough of State Coll., 854 F. Supp. 1184, 1192 (M.D. Pa. 1994), aff'd, 47 F.3d 1160 (3d Cir. 1995):

n.8 "Because we have found that there was no "seizure" and, hence, no claim under the Fourth Amendment, the Supreme Court's requirement, stated in Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 388 (1989), that all claims invoking the Fourth Amendment be analyzed under that amendment only and not under a general substantive due process approach does not apply. Since we found that plaintiff has no claim under the Fourth Amendment, we are not precluded by Graham, from considering whether he has a due process claim under the Fourteenth Amendment. See: Fagan, supra, 804 F.Supp. at 597."

DOJ cites to cases in its Br. at 25 (D.E. No. 80-1) and referenced by the DOJ Reply at 12 n.4 (D.E. No. 82)). Those cases do not support DOJ's position that a Substantive Due Process analysis is barred here.

In Eby-Brown Co. v. Wis. Dep't of Agric., 295 F.3d 749, 755-756 (7th Cir. 2002), both Substantive Due Process and Equal Protection analyses were used to find the Wisconsin's Unfair Sales Act did not violate the Constitution.

In Tenenbaum v. Williams, 193 F.3d 581, 600 (2d Cir. 1999), the court held that plaintiff was subject to a seizure and search so her claims were analyzed under the Fourth Amendment.

Yassini v. City of Sunnyvale, 103 F.3d 143 (9th Cir. 1996), is an unpublished opinion. Regardless, the Court found that requiring Yassini's restaurant to close at midnight under a noise ordinance did not "trammel fundamental personal rights" and was "rationally related to the legitimate state interest of preventing excessive noise." Such is a Substantive Due Process analysis. Memorandum at 2, N.D. Cal. 94-20576, 2/11/1997, D.E. No. 113.

Your Honor, I would like to know why the DOJ author failed to indicate this case was unpublished and failed to give its docket number. Was this another trick?

In Gehl Grp. v. Koby, 63 F.3d 1528, 1539 (10th Cir. 1995), overruled on other grounds by Currier v. Doran, 242 F.3d 905, 916 (10th Cir.2001), the Court found that the actions of executive officials of the government did not shock the conscience as is required under Substantive Due Process when executive official's acts are questioned. It also found no protected liberty interest was violated without procedural due process.

In Hogan v. State of Conn. Judicial Branch, 220 F. Supp.2d 111 (D. Conn. 2002), the Court considered both Equal Protection and Substantive Due Process claims.

It found there was no Equal Protection violation because there was no disparate treatment. 220 F. Supp.2d at 122.

The Court also found no Substantive Due Process violation because plaintiff's termination by an executive official did not shock the conscience or violate civilized conduct. 220 F. Supp.2d at 123

Since the case before this Court does not involve governmental use of force, nor the Fourth Amendment, analysis under the Substantive Due Process Clause is appropriate.

Constitutional Claims in General

DOJ argues that for the Court to make a decision would violate precepts of constitutional avoidance by “ruling on [a] federal constitutional matter[] in advance of the necessity of deciding [it].” Armstrong, 961 F.2d at 413; see Valley Forge Christian Coll. v. Ams. United for Separation of Church and State, 454 U.S. 464, 474 (1982) (a court’s power to declare a statute unconstitutional should be “a tool of last resort”). (DOJ Reply at 3, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ fails to state what the Valley Forge case actually held, which was the requirement of a particularized injury for standing purposes.

The Supreme Court found no constitutional violation of the Establishment Clause because the plaintiffs had no connection to the conveyance of real property to a religiously affiliated nonprofit college.

“Respondents complain of a transfer of property located in Chester County, Pa. The named plaintiffs reside in Maryland and Virginia; their organizational headquarters are located in Washington, D.C. They learned of the transfer through a news release. Their claim that the Government has violated the Establishment Clause does not provide a special license to roam the country in search of governmental wrongdoing and to reveal their discoveries in federal court. The federal courts were simply not constituted as ombudsmen of the general welfare.” 454 U.S. 464, 486-87 (1982).

Here this Court has already found a particularized injury. (Opinion at 10-11, D.E. No. 72).

And Armstrong is a pre-enforcement action whereas this case involves post-enforcement action by an administrative agency.

Additionally, as the Third Circuit held in Robinson v. New Jersey, 806 F.2d 442, 446 (3rd. Cir. 1986) cert. denied 481 U.S. 1070 (1987), courts will not invalidate a statute on its face simply because it may be applied unconstitutionally, but only if it cannot be applied consistently with the Constitution. Here the MSSA cannot be applied consistent with the Constitution.

In Pub. Citizen v. U.S. Dep’t of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 467 (1989), the Supreme Court stated:

To be sure, “[w]e cannot press statutory construction ‘to the point of disingenuous evasion’ even to avoid a constitutional question.” United States v. Locke, 471 U.S. 84, 96 (1985) (quoting Moore Ice Cream Co. v. Rose, 289 U.S. 373, 379 (1933)).

Such is what the DOJ asks for here.

Relief Sought

“Plaintiff seeks a declaratory judgment that the MSSA’s draft registration is unconstitutional. (SAC ¶ 13). Plaintiff also seeks (i) to enjoin Defendants from registering only males; or (ii) to require that females register with the SSS; or (iii) to require that registration be voluntary for both sexes. (See SAC ¶ 14).” (Opinion at 2, D.E. No. 72).

DOJ complains that Plaintiff’s proposed remedies present further potential hardships to the Government, as well as likely hardships to non-parties require the involuntary registration of millions of other females not before this Court who may disagree with Plaintiff’s views on the issue. Pl.’s Sec. Am. Compl. ¶ 70, ECF No. 54. Were the Court to require women to register, that remedy in itself would impose a significant burden on a major portion of the country’s population. (DOJ Reply at 7-8, D.E. No. 82).

The Ku Klux Klan should have thought of that argument when it opposed the integration of schools based on Brown v. Board of Education. Students would have to be bused here and there, buses would have to be rented and drivers hired at the expense to local governments. All imposing “a significant burden on a major portion of the country’s population” that was not before the courts. Yet the courts required it.

Why? Because in situations, “when the ‘right invoked is that to equal treatment,’ the appropriate remedy is a mandate of equal treatment, a result that can be accomplished by” extending a statute to the excluded class, or a court can withdraw the statute’s operation from the favored class. Heckler v. Mathews, 465 U.S. 728, 740 (1984) (emphasis in original) (internal quote Iowa-Des Moines National Bank v. Bennett, 284 U.S. 239, 247 (1931) (Brandeis, J.)).

If found unconstitutional, then all those men who turn 18 will not have to bother registering.

the relief [Plaintiff] requests would intrude on the political branches’ constitutional powers to shape military policy. . . . would have profound implications on the military, (Reply at 13, D.E. No. 82).

DOJ does not spell out those alleged “profound implications.”

The Third Circuit in Jorden v. Nat’l Guard Bureau, 799 F.2d 99, 108 (3d Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 815 (1987), stated that “The Supreme Court has heard many cases involving claims for injunctive relief against the military without even suggesting that the claims were not reviewable in a civilian court.”

The Third Circuit Court of Appeals has held that federal courts have jurisdiction to consider “suits for injunctive relief against the military.” Jorden v. National Guard Bureau, 799 F.2d 99, 109 (3d Cir.1986), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 815 (1987).

“[T]he law in this circuit, established in Dillard v. Brown, 652 F.2d 316, 321 (3d Cir.1981), heavily disfavors finding injunctive claims against the military non-reviewable.” Jorden v. Nat’l Guard Bureau, 799 F.2d at 110.

The Supreme Court has cited injunctive actions as indicative of the type of relief service members may seek in the civilian courts. See, e.g., Chappell v. Wallace, 462 U.S. 296, 304-305 (1983); Brown v. Glines, 444 U.S. 348 (1980); Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733 (1974); Frontiero v. Richardson, 411 U.S. 677 (1973).

DOJ indicates that if this Court does issue an injunction, it will request a stay pending appeal, so the Court should not issue an injunction. (See DOJ Br. at 23, D.E. No. 80-1). This is the same as arguing that if they lose, they will make a motion, so the Court should rule in their favor to avoid the motion. Just because judicial procedure allows Defendants to do something, does not mean this Court cannot issue the relief requested.

Besides, if they do request a stay of enforcement after a decision for Plaintiff, we will not oppose it—pending appeal all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Such will protect the fearful Federal Government from a college co-ed and minimize the chance that the courts of these United States will abdicate their role in protecting the rights of citizens.

DOJ can move this Court under Fed. R. Civ. P. 62(c) (application to stay injunction must first be brought in district court).

In a case involving a judgment or injunction the district court is in the best position to balance the equities and determine whether to stay or suspend the judgment because of its familiarity with the case. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Louisiana Public Service Commission, 260 U.S. 212, 219 (1922).

If denied, the DOJ can use Fed. R. App. P. 8(a)(1)(A) to request a stay from the Court of Appeals.

Providing the relief sought would further the Executive and Congress's objectives of gender-neutrally for the military as a whole.

Although the SSS is an independent civilian agency within the Executive Branch of the U.S. Government and not part of the Department of Defense, Rostker held and DOJ agrees that “[r]egistration is not an end in itself in the civilian world but rather the first step in the induction process into the military one . . . .” Rostker, at 68; (SSS Br. at 23 n.7, D.E. No. 33-1).

Since registration is an integral part of the military and national defense, it would be strange indeed that every branch of the military must integrate women except for the SSS's registration pool of potential combat troops. To permit the SSS to continue discriminating against women because it is a civilian agency is a paradox that should not be permitted to exist.

Lies, Prevarications and Dissemblances by DOJ lawyers

The DOJ Reply provides multiple false, prevaricating or dissembling statements that given whoever wrote it, must have made such statements intentionally to mislead this Court. Apparently the author believes that by falsifying the facts, claims and law, he can win the day in court. For example:

1. DOJ states [The Commission's] review encompasses [includes] . . . the principle matter at issue in this lawsuit. That implies that the Commission will resolve the ultimate issue here. (DOJ Reply 3, D.E. No. 82).

That is a dissemblance. According to the Magistrate's Order of 07/28/17 (D.E. 67):

WHEREAS, although the review of the Commission may ultimately impact, or even moot this matter, the current legislative scheme and status provides no certainty as to the resolution of the ultimate issue in this case.

The issue here is whether the MSSA and SSS is has discriminated against Plaintiff—not what a commission may do in the future. There are no allegations against the Commission and it has not been joined as a party.

2. The DOJ falsely states Plaintiff argues that the MSSA is ripe for review because the Commission may not accomplish anything. See Pl.'s Opp. at 26. (DOJ Reply at 5-6, D.E.No. 82).

The DOJ Reply author cites our Opposition Brief at 26, which to any fifth grader states that what the Commission “may or may not do is unknown.”

But that is not the Ripeness issue. The Ripeness issue is that the SSS acting under the MSSA mandate has five times made “an administrative decision [that] has been formalized and its effects felt in a concrete way by the challenging parties.” Nat'l Park Hospitality Ass'n v. U.S. Dep't of Interior, 538 U.S. 803, 807–08 (2003) (quoting Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 148–149 (1967)).

Plaintiff's most recent affidavit documents the SSS decisions on four occasions, D.E. No. 81-6, and since then she tried to register for a fifth time with the same result on 10/2/18.

3. The DOJ falsely states Plaintiff . . . asks this Court to speculate that the Supreme Court would find cause to depart from its reasoning in Rostker. (DOJ Reply at 9, D.E. No. 82).

How many times do we have to say that we are not asking this Court to depart from the reasoning in Rostker, but to apply it on the Equal Protection issue of similarity to the fact that “combat troops” now include women.

Rostker ruled that “Men and women, because of the combat restrictions on women, are simply not similarly situated for purposes of a draft or registration for a draft.” Rostker, 453 U.S. at 78.

Plaintiff is not asking this Court to overrule Rostker but to apply its holding on similarity to the facts of this case.” (Opposition at 8, 29 (D.E. 81).

Plaintiff has repeatedly—repeatedly emphasized that she is not asking this Court to overrule or disregard Rostker v. Goldberg, 453 U.S. 57, but rather to apply it to modern times. (Motion to Continue Br. at 18, D.E. 58; Opposition to Standing Motion at 6, D.E. 70).

The DOJ lawyers keep repeating the same falsehood but with different words that communicate the same falsity. How many more times are they going to be allowed to waste this Court’s time with the same ad nauseam argument?

In effect, the DOJ Reply author ludicrously argues that when the application of the law on Equal Protection similarity reaches one conclusion under one fact situation—it must reach the same conclusion under all other fact situations no matter how different.

4. DOJ states that Rostker cannot be set aside as binding precedent by this Court based on Plaintiff’s prediction as to how the Supreme Court would view other policy changes since that decision. (Reply at 10, D.E. No. 82)

Basically the same blatant falsehood using different verbiage that once decision X is made on fact situation Y, then in any other fact situation, the same decision X must be reached. The Reply author repeats over and over the same arguments in order to fill space and waste everyone’s time.

Plaintiff is not predicting what the Supreme Court’s holding will be on this case. She is simply trying to get to the Supreme Court for a decision despite the DOJ lawyers seemingly eternal delays.

DOJ Strategy of Delay

The DOJ Reply doesn't raise anything new, it just wastes our time with arguments already made in the Brief. The Reply actually cites to the Brief in this motion eight (8) times.

The DOJ is focused on a future that is impossible to predict while Plaintiff is focused on what is happening now. Naturally, the DOJ continues to delay these proceedings in the hope that the future they want actually occurs while this case is still in the District Court. So far, the DOJ has been successful.

Over the past three years, it has been Wait, and Wait, and Wait some more.

Plaintiff is simply asking this Court to decide whether she has been discriminated against by the Defendants in violation of her equal protection and substantive due process rights under the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Let's face it Your Honor, if you were her age and tried to register—the most powerful government in the history of the world would discriminate against you, and the DOJ would be arguing that's okay.

Plato once said:

“There is therefore no pursuit connected with [government] which belongs to woman because she is a woman, or to a man because he is a man, but various natures are scattered in the same way among both kinds of persons . . . . Shall we then assign them all to men, and none to a woman? How can we? . . . . One may be athletic or warlike, while another is not warlike and has no love of athletics . . . . So one woman may have a guardian nature, the other not. Was it not a nature with these qualities which we selected among men for our male guardians too? . . . Such women must then be chosen along with such men to live with them and share their guardianship, since they are qualified and akin to them by nature.”

That was 2,000 years ago. Plato, The Republic 117-18 (360 B.C.E.)(G.M.A. Grube trans. Hackett Publishing 1974).

DOJ is simply arguing that if women have waited this long—let them wait some more, or in Orwellian fashion—NOW really means later.

This is the fourth time the DOJ has argued before this Court a lack of Ripeness. (DOJ Brief at 17, D.E. 19-1; DOJ Brief at 18, D.E. 33-1; DOJ Opp Mtn Continue at 8, D.E. 61; DOJ Brief at 12, D.E. 80-1).

DOJ lawyers have opposed this case four (4) times on Standing grounds (DOJ Brief at 12, D.E. 19-1; DOJ Brief at 11, D.E. 33-1; DOJ Opp Mtn Continue at 10, D.E. 61; DOJ Brief Standing Mtn at 11, D.E. 69).

This is the third time the DOJ has argued before this Court a Failure to State a Claim. (DOJ Brief at 23, D.E. 19-1; DOJ Brief at 24, D.E. 33-1; DOJ Brief at 18, D.E. 80-1)).

How many do-overs does DOJ get?

Plaintiff had just graduated from high school when she brought this case. Now she is half-way through her senior year in college.

Over the past three years, DOJ has repeatedly argued that this Court must stand idly by and wait

First, for when Sec. Defense Carter made his decision on whether to open the remaining combat positions to women, which he made on Dec. 3, 2015;

Second, for Congress not to object within 30 days under 10 U.S.C. § 652, it did not;

Third, for when Carter approved the final plans from the military service branches and the U.S. Special Operations Command to begin integrating woman combat soldiers, which he did on 3/10/16.

Fourth, for a dysfunctional Congress to decide in 2016 whether to continue the last vestige of de jure discrimination against women in the Federal Government—which it never did decide. Congress simply engaged in a passive-aggressive denial of women’s rights, then punted to a commission for more delay.

Had the House Republicans ignored the issue by not even calling for the time-delaying commission study, they believed they would have been preempted by the judicial branch—a fact that a House Armed Services aide acknowledged. “The courts could act at any moment and send this in a direction that Congress doesn’t like.” (Austin Wright, Women’s draft bid gains in Senate, stalls in House, Politico, May 17, 2016);

Fifth, for possible Commission suggestions to be made by November 5, 2019, but then surprise, the date was pushed back to March 2020;

Sixth, for Congress to pass a bill correcting the unconstitutionality of the MSSA by including the term “women.” Of course, Congress may do nothing and just let the Commission’s suggestions die the way it did the Kerner and 9/11 Commission recommendations.

Since 2003, at least eight bills have been introduced in Congress to amend the MSSA’s male-only registration requirement. (SSS Br. at 27 n.9, Dkt. No. 33-1). Congress chose not to act. Therefore, a strong inference exists that Congress is now just continuing its prior procrastination or even obstruction of deciding that with regards to the military—women are equal to men.

Seventh, for Trump, or whoever is President, to sign or veto a bill; and Eighth, if vetoed, wait for Congress to override the veto, assuming that is even possible considering the split between Democrats and Republicans.

[DOJ's first motion, 10/2/2015, to dismiss argued that under 10 U.S.C. § 652(a)(3)(B), the Secretary of Defense provides Congress "with a detailed analysis of the effect of the change on the constitutionality of the MSSA's male-only registration requirement." (SSS Br. at 1, 9, 20, D.E. No. 19). Therefore, "the political branches are engaging in [an] ongoing dialogue by evaluating the impact on the draft [registration] of the changes being made with respect to combat positions" and the Court should not "short-circuit" this "process" by deciding this case. (SSS Br. at 18, 22, D.E. No. 19).]

[There the DOJ was arguing that this Court must wait—not only until all or mostly all combat positions are open to women but also until Congress actually gets around to amending the MSSA to include the word "women." Defendants were really asserting, as they do now, that the judicial review established by Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137 (1803), is limited to acts after Congress amends an act or refuses to amend an act, regardless of the harm the act is presently causing.]

[DOJ's second motion, 11/23/2015, to dismiss tried for more delay by falsely asserting that in 2013 Secretary Panetta gave the military until January 1, 2016, "to develop implementation plans for the integration of women." (SSS Br. at 3, D.E. No. 33-1). Panetta actually gave the military until May 15, 2013, to develop its implementation plans (which it did with Congress's approval) and directed that the "[i]ntegration of women into newly opened positions and units will occur as expeditiously as possible . . . but must be completed no later than January 1, 2016." (SSS Br. Ex. A at 1, Panetta's 1/24/2013 Memo, D.E. No. 33-2, emphasis added).

[DOJ's second motion also argued that Congress cannot make a decision on women's registration until America's plethora of wars reach a point where the draft, which means conscription into the military, is reinstated. (SSS Br. at 20-23, D.E. No. 33-1). Congress eliminated the draft over 40 years ago. Since then, America has been involved in 17 armed conflicts, including its longest, and Congress did not reinstate the draft. So by this argument, it is impossible to say when Congress will bring back the draft—if ever, which means the constitutional rights of young women depend on a government activity occurring or not occurring at some indefinite time in the future—not very reassuring for members of a democracy. This is just another argument for delay.]

[DOJ's Opposition to Plaintiff's motion to continue specifically requested a stay. (SSS Resp. at 13-15, D.E. No. 61). It was not granted. (See Opinion at 5, D.E. No. 67).]

[DOJ's third motion to dismiss (restricted to standing) again argued that because a commission was in the process of formulating suggestions for the SSS that Plaintiff was interfering with the political branches. (SSS Br. at 20, D.E. No. 69-1).]

[DOJ's fourth motion to dismiss again requests a stay—now called “abeyance.” (SSS Br. at 2, 3, 12, 18, 27, D.E. No. 80-1).]

DOJ argues that any delay . . . does not impose any restriction on Plaintiff, including from pursuing a military career. (DOJ Reply 6, D.E. No. 82)

False. The MSSA prevents her from registering for the draft and functioning as a first-class, full-fledged citizen. More importantly, “equal treatment under law is a judicially cognizable interest . . . even if it brings no tangible benefit to the party asserting it.” Davis v. Guam, 785 F.3d 1311, 1315 (9th Cir. 2015).

Also as this Court already found, “Plaintiff explains, her injury is not that she is kept out of combat positions, not that she may be harmed by future inductions, not that she is prevented from enlisting, and not that possible career opportunities in the military will be hindered but rather that she is prevented—solely because of her sex—from registering for the draft.

(Pl. Opp. Br. at 21) (emphasis in original).” (Opinion at 8. D.E. 72).

This case only deals with registering with the SSS or “draft registration,”—not pursuing a military career. Why is it that the DOJ lawyers cannot seem to comprehend that?

Two district courts and one Court of Appeals refused to put up with the DOJ delaying tactics or issue a stay on a challenge to the MSSA’s discrimination.

Nat’l Coal. for Men v. Selective Serv. Sys. case (13-2391, C.D. Cal; 16-cv-03362, S.D. Tex.)

U.S. Dist. Courts in Cal and Texas and the 9th Cir Ct of Appeals did not delay rendering justice even though the same defendants there as here argued for such. That case also challenges the male-only registration provision of the MSSA on equal protection grounds for discrimination based on sex.

Before the Texas Court, DOJ moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim for relief under 12(b)(6). DOJ made the same argument it does here that the court is bound by deference to the political branches because the “MSSA in light of present military conditions has been and continues to be the subject of explicit consideration by the political branches. Most notably . . . Congress has established a commission to review, within a specific time period and with statutorily mandated input from the Executive branches, the needs of and for the SSS—including expanding registration to women.” (SSS Br. at 18, 4:16-cv-03362, S.D. Tex. 10/06/17, D.E. No. 63).

The Texas Court denied DOJ’s motion. It did not stay or delay the case because of the ongoing work of the Commission. The Court held, “Because Rostker explicitly requires Congress to comply with the Constitution in the area of military affairs, and because Plaintiffs allege Defendants did not, Plaintiffs state a claim upon which relief can be granted. See Rostker, 453 U.S. at 67.” (Opinion at 7, 4:16-cv-03362, S.D. Tex. 04/06/18, D.E. No. 66).

From C.D. Cal. to the 9th Cir Court of Appeals back to the C.D. Cal. then on to the S.D. Texas, the DOJ has argued without success first for delay because all combat position were not open to women, then for delay because Congress was engaged in a charade of granting equal rights to young women, then for delay because a Commission was researching suggestions for the SSS. Each and every court rejected those delaying arguments.

Now the NCFM case is in the summary judgment stage after the Court set a tight schedule for submission of those papers, refusing to put up with anymore of the DOJ’s delaying tactics.

DOJ had tried to push back the final summary paper filing two months to Dec. 14, 2018 but the Court refused. (SSS Mtn Extension Time, 4:16-cv-03362, S.D. Tex. 08/28/18, D.E. No. 74).

Those facts make a joke of the DOJ’s position that it is not angling for delay.

Possibility of closing combat positions to women.

Another reason for the DOJ dragging its heels in this case is that the Trump Administration may simply reverse the Obama Administration’s policy that opened all combat positions to women.

Stay

If DOJ isn’t trying to delay this case, why does it keep requesting a stay prior to judgment—now calling it an “abeyance.” (DOJ Br. at 2, 3, 12, 18, 27, D.E. No. 80-1; Reply at 2, 8, 14, No. 82).

This Court has already denied a stay requested by the DOJ. (See Magistrate Order at 5, D.E. No. 67, 7/28/17).

One reason why DOJ lawyers want a stay prior to judgment is they hope Plaintiff will turn 26 before this case reaches the U.S. Supreme Court. At which time it becomes moot.

When this case started, Plaintiff was just out of high school, now she is 21 and we are still in the first inning in this District Court. So considering what has yet to be done, there’s a decent chance she will turn 26 before we reach the Supreme Court.

Plaintiff would rather have this Court dismiss her complaint so that she can get on with her appeal before this case, as the DOJ hopes, becomes moot when she turns 26, or some other unforeseen circumstance arises to derail the justice she seeks.

DOJ also ridiculously argues for a stay prior to judgment because any decision by this Court for Plaintiff would wreak havoc on the most affluent and powerful government in the history of the world.

The Government on the other hand faces immediate and potentially significant hardships. The entry of judicial relief for Plaintiff at this stage would interfere with, if not negate, the Government's ability to address a fundamental revamping of the Selective Service System to better account for changes in society and warfare as mandated by Congress. See Pub. L. No. 114-328 § 551(b). In addition, any relief that could potentially require the Government to spend millions of dollars changing the Selective Service System in response to a court order would impose a considerable hardship at this time, particularly because Congress may wish to change the system in a different manner following the Commission's review. (DOJ Reply at 7, D.E. No. 82).

Plaintiff is a college senior studying to be a veterinarian. She does not want to destroy the U.S. Government. So if this Court rules in her favor, she is willing to agree to a stay pending appeal all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court under Fed. R. Civ. P. 62(c) or Fed. R. App. P. 8(a)(1)(A).

Joint Status Report December 21, 2016 (D.E. No. 57):

April 27, 2016, the House Armed Services Committee approved the 2017 National Defense Authorization Act (“NDAA”) which included a provision to require woman citizens of the United States and woman persons residing in the United States who attain the age of 18 years on or after January 1, 2018, to register with the Selective Service System (“SSS”).

May 16, 2016, the House Rules Committee deleted from the House Armed Services Committee’s 2017 NDAA the provision requiring females to register with the SSS.

May 18, 2016, the House passed its version of the NDAA (H.R. 4909) which included a provision for the Secretary of Defense to study the efficacy of the SSS. (Exhibit A).

May 18, 2016, the Senate Armed Services Committee sent to the full Senate its 2017 NDAA (S. 2943) which included a provision to require females to register with the SSS.

June 14, 2016, the Senate passed the 2017 NDAA with a provision requiring females to register. (Exhibit B). The Senate and House bills were then sent to a Senate-House Conference Committee.

November 29, 2016, the Senate and House Conference agreed on a 2017 NDAA, S. 2943, that eliminated the Senate’s provision for females to register with the SSS and, instead, adopted the House’s provision requiring a study of the efficacy of the SSS and the Senate’s provisions creating a Commission to review the military selective service process (§§ 551-557 (Exhibit C)).

The Commission is to be established under the Executive Branch and shall be considered an independent establishment of the Federal Government as defined by 5 U.S.C. §104 and a temporary organization under 5 U.S.C. § 3161. S. 2943 § 553. Members of the Commission will be appointed by the President and leaders of Congress. S. 2943 § 553(b).

The 2017 NDAA requires the Secretary of Defense to submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives and to the Commission, a report “on the current and future need for a centralized registration system under the Military Selective Service Act (50 U.S.C. 3801 et seq.) . . . [and on] expanding registration to include women” by not later than July 1, 2017. S. 2943 § 552(a)(1) & (b)(1)(C). The 2017 NDAA requires that not later than three months after the Commission establishment date, the President shall establish and transmit to the Commission and Congress, principles for the reform of the military selective service process. S. 2943 § 555(c)(1).

Among those principles is a requirement for the Commission to address: Whether, in light of the current and predicted global security environment and the changing nature of warfare, there continues to be a continuous or potential need for a military selective service process designed to produce large numbers of combat members of the Armed Forces, and if so, whether such a system should include mandatory registration by all citizens and residents, regardless of sex. S. 2943 § 555(c)(2)(A).

The 2017 NDAA requires that not later than seven months after the Commission establishment date, the Secretary of Defense, Attorney General, the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Secretary of Labor, and such other Government officials, and such experts, as the President shall designate, shall jointly transmit to the Commission and Congress recommendations for the reform of the military selective service process and military, national, and public service in connection with that process. S. 2943 § 555(d).

The Commission has 30 months from its establishment date to conduct a review of the SSS and report its recommendations to Congress and the President. S. 2943 § 555(e)(1). On December 1, 2016, USA Today reported that a spokesman for the White House National Security Council stated that the Obama administration supported females registering for the draft. See <http://www.usatoday.com/story/news/politics/2016/12/01/obama-supportsregistering-women-military-draft/90449708/> last checked on December 21, 2016.

December 2, 2016, the House adopted the Conference Report.

December 8, 2016, the Senate adopted the Conference Report.

December 14, 2016, the 2017 NDAA was presented to President Obama.

Joint Status Report Aug. 15, 2017, (D.E. No. 68):

On December 23, 2016, the 2017 National Defense Authorization Act (“2017 NDAA”), Pub. L. No. 114-328 was signed into law. Sections 551-557 of the 2017 NDAA established the National Commission on Military, National, and Public Service (“Commission”) to review the military selective service process, including the current and future need for a centralized registration system and expanding registration to include women. The law required certain actions be taken by the President, various departments of the Executive Branch, and certain members of Congress.

The President, leaders of Congress and the Chairmen and ranking minority members of the Senate and House of Representatives Armed Services Committees have appointed the required 11 members of the Commission.

On April 3, 2017, the President established and transmitted to the Commission and Congress, principles for the reform of the military selective service process, as required by Pub. L. No. 114-328 § 555(c)(1).

On July 13, 2017, the Secretary of Defense submitted to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives and to the Commission, a report “on the current and future need for a centralized registration system under the Military Selective Service Act . . . [and on] expanding registration to include women,” as required by Pub. L. No. 114-328 § 552(a)(1) & (b)(1)(C).

Pub. L. No. 114-328 § 552(c) requires that not later than December 1, 2017, the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives and to the Commission a review of the procedures used by the Department of Defense in evaluating selective service requirements.

Pub. L. No. 114-328 § 555(d) requires that by December 5, 2017, the Secretary of Defense, Attorney General, the Secretary of Homeland Security, the Secretary of Labor, and such other Government officials, and such experts, as the President shall designate, shall jointly transmit to the Commission and Congress recommendations for the reform of the military selective service process and military, national, and public service in connection with that process.

The Commission has 30 months from its establishment date of May 5, 2017, or until November 5, 2019, to conduct a review of the Selective Service System and report its recommendations to Congress and the President. Pub. L. No. 114-328 § 555(e)(1).

[Multi-District Litigation]

28 USC 1407(a) requires (1) common facts and (2) convenience of the parties.

[Consolidation]

The NCFM case was raised by the DOJ in its first motion to dismiss (D.E. 19) at 29 and its second motion to dismiss (D.E. 33) at 31, 10/2/2015.

Cases should [not] be consolidated

To transfer actions to a different district court under 28 USC 1404(a) requires that

Venue must be proper based on an examination of facts and circumstances existing at the time of the lawsuit—not at the time of the transfer. Moore’s Federal Practice § 42.11(b).

Under 28 USC 1391(e)(1), residency for SSS was Arlington, Va.; the events giving rise to the Cal case took place in Cal via NCFM members and Texas for the individual males; the events in this case took place in NJ; plaintiffs in the Cal case reside in Cal and Tx; Ms. Kyle-LaBell resides in NJ. So venue for both cases was not proper in either district court when the cases were commenced.

Also, when the Cal case was brought, Ms. Kyle-LaBell was 15 years old, which may have caused some problems for the Cal CD.

Additionally, consolidation requires the party requesting such show common questions of fact or law.

The factual questions in the two cases are different.

The question in the Texas case is whether the equal protection rights of young men are violated by requiring them to register for the draft. Here the issue is whether by barring the class of young women from registering for the draft, their equal protection rights are violated.

Further, I do not believe that Ms. Kyle-LaBell, the putative class representative, will consent to the inconvenience of personal jurisdiction of the Tex SD and dealing with the attorney for that case who

- (1) in his complaint against the SSS actually brought a 14th Amendment cause of action. We all learned in our first year in law school that the 14th Amendment applies only to state and municipal governments—not federal agencies. This brings into question the attorney’s legal ability by committing such an obvious Constitutional error;
- (2) sends a letter to a federal judge based on a “ cursory reading” (p. 1 ¶ 2) of the papers in this case that resulted in the false assumption that the Cal case had not been brought to Your Honor’s attention; and

(3) is a member of an apparently misogynist organization.]

Events on women in combat

The combat restrictions on women in 1981 included:

1. 10 U.S.C. § 8549 prevented women from being assigned to duty in aircraft engaged in combat (repealed 1991);
2. 10 U.S.C. § 6015 prevented women in the Navy from being assigned to duty on vessels engaged in combat missions (repealed 1993);
3. The Army kept women out of combat and away from the theater of fighting as a matter of established policy, Goldberg v. Rostker, 509 F. Supp. 586, 598 (E.D. Pa. 1980)(citing Requiring Reinstitution of Registration for Certain Persons Under the Military Selective Service Act, and for Other Purposes, Report No. 96-226 to accompany S.109 at 8-9 (9th Cong. 1st Sess.));
4. Congress recognized and endorsed the exclusion of women in combat and combat support roles, id.;
5. 42 percent of all positions filled by enlisted personnel in the Army were in specialties, skills or units not available to women, id.;
6. The military had administrative problems concerning housing for women, id.;
7. The performance of sexually mixed units was still in the experimental stage, id.;
8. The societal belief was that the assignment of women to combat would weaken the national resolve once images of the atrocities of war visited on women became public, id.;
9. Mobilizing women through the draft would cause strains on training facilities and administrative services, id.; and
10. The nature of the battlefield was more limited, more confined and relatively well defined, Report to Congress on the Review of Laws, Policies and Regulations Restricting the Service of Woman Members in the U.S. Armed Forces at 3, February 2012.

1993, Sec. Defense Aspin imposed a new rule (1994 Direct Ground Combat Definition and Assignment Rule) where all service members were eligible to be assigned to all positions for which they were qualified, except that women would be excluded from assignment to units below the brigade level whose primary mission was to engage in direct combat on the ground.

May 1994, President Clinton asked the Secretary of Defense for a report on women and draft registration. The Secretary's report recognized the vastly increased role being played by women in each of the Armed Services, and concluded that "[b]ecause of this change in the makeup of the Armed Forces, much of the congressional debate which, in the [Supreme] court's [1981] opinion, provided adequate congressional scrutiny of the issue . . . would be inappropriate today."
Backgrounder: Women and the Draft in America, www.sss.gov.

February 2012, the Department of Defense "announced a series of modifications to [the 1994 Direct Ground Combat Definition and Assignment Rule] which opened up more than 14,000 new positions to women, including positions that were collocated with ground combat units and certain positions in ground combat units below the brigade level whose primary missions were to engage in direct combat on the ground,” former Secretary of Defense Panetta Press Conference, January 24, 2013.

1/24/2013, Pentagon’s announcement officially rescinded the remainder of the 1994 Direct Ground Combat Definition and Assignment Rule.

Sec. Defense Panetta directed that the “[i]ntegration of women into newly opened positions and units will occur as expeditiously as possible . . . but must be completed no later than January 1, 2016.” (SSS Br. Ex. A at 1, Panetta Memo, D.E. No. 33-2, emphasis added). Sec. Defense Carter fulfilled that order on December 3, 2015.

Marine Corps Commandant Gen. Robert Neller and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Mark Milley agreed that the current policy, which requires only males register for the Selective Service System, should be changed after restrictions that barred women from trying out for combat jobs were lifted last year. 2/4/2016, It’s Time To Register For The Military Draft, Ladies, Amber Smith—combat veteran Iraq, Afghanistan, The Federalist.

You don’t get to pick and chose when equality applies to you. Not quotas, not double standards, not separate physical standards or lowered selection criteria. The responsibility of the military draft lies equally with both men and women. Equal opportunities mean equal responsibilities, and when it comes to defending this nation, no one is exempt merely based on his or her sex.

2/5/2016, There’s a rift opening on how the U.S. should handle women and military drafts, Dan Lamothe.

One proposal to alter the law has been proposed this week. Rep. Duncan D. Hunter (R.-Calif.), a Marine Corps veteran, and Rep. Ryan Zinke (R.-Mont.), a former Navy SEAL, introduced the Draft America’s Daughters Act of 2016. They signaled that they were likely to vote against their own bill. Hunter’s chief of staff, Joe Kasper made clear the political purpose: “Every member of Congress should have to go on the record on whether or not he or she supports sending America’s ‘daughters and sisters’ into harm’s way.”

Four U.S. House members introduced legislation to abolish the Selective Service, saying that the all-volunteer force is working—it went nowhere.

Two members of Congress introduced legislation requiring women to register but said they actually opposed their own bill—deep sixth in House Rules Comm.

The Pentagon had made no recommendation on women registering with the SSS, but the department said it will consult with the Justice Department when needed.

The military services are already beginning to recruit women for combat jobs, including as Navy SEALs, and could see them serving in previously male-only Army and Marine Corps infantry units by this fall.

All of the services say they have made required changes to base bathrooms and other facilities to accommodate women.

The top Army and Marine Corps generals told senators last month that it will take up to three years to fully integrate women into all combat jobs.

The military services have put together plans outlining exactly how they will incorporate women into the male-only units.

The first Army officers will start training in June, and could graduate in October. The first woman enlisted soldiers will begin moving into ground combat units in May 2017.

The bulk of the male-only units are in the Army and Marine Corps. Only a few of the Navy and Air Force units excluded women.

Defense Secretary Ashton Carter approved Thursday final plans from military service branches and the U.S. Special Operations Command to begin integrating woman combat soldiers “right away.” All of the services submitted their plan to integrate women into combat roles by Jan. 1.

03/11/2016, Sec. Carter’s Statement.

“Sec. Carter approved all the services and special operation forces plans on integrating women into all military positions.

Integration does not guarantee women will be promoted at any specific number or at any set rate, as adherence to a merit-based system must continue to be paramount.

We have to remember that it takes decades to grow a general or flag officer, so it will take time to see these results. It won’t all happen overnight.”

The House Armed Services Committee approved an annual defense policy bill that includes a provision that would require women to register with the Selective Service System.

5/13/2016, Coming soon: A military draft for women? Richard Lardner, AP.

The Senate Armed Services Comm. stated that any justification for barring women from draft registration was erased last year, when the Pentagon announced that all military jobs would be open to women. It's annual defense policy bill includes a provision to require women to register for the draft.

The White House has declined to say whether President Barack Obama would sign into law legislation that expands the draft to include women.

5/17/2016, Women's draft bid gains in Senate, stalls in House, Austin Wright

Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell supports requiring women to register for the military draft — a surprise announcement that breaks with House GOP leaders who've made clear they want to avoid an election-year vote on the politically sensitive issue.

House leaders blocked Hunter's draft registration amendment to a defense spending provision, which they called a "reckless policy."

This means the ultimate decision could come in House-Senate conference negotiations later this year to craft a final version of the National Defense Authorization Act, an annual measure that sets defense policy.

If lawmakers delay action on the issue, they could end up being preempted by the judicial branch — a fact that a House Armed Services aide acknowledged. "The courts could act at any moment and send this in a direction that Congress doesn't like."

The Selective Service's annual budget of $23 million would have to be increased by $8.6 million in the first year, but those costs would drop as the number of women registering each year leveled off. An additional 39 employees would be needed to process the increase in draft registrations, he added.

5/20/2016, The Unseemly Death of an Amendment to Draft Women, Nicholas Clairmont, The Atlantic.

Hunter, a vocal opponent of women serving in combat, offered the amendment as a dare, confident that progressives on gender equality in the service were all talk. That, in theory, should have sent it and the larger bill on for a vote on the House floor. Meanwhile the same measure made it through the committee's counterpart in the Senate, chaired by John McCain, where it found surprisingly strong support, including from Majority Leader Mitch McConnell.

Hunter and Thornberry had agreed that Hunter would propose the amendment to make a point and then offer to withdraw it before a vote—a sort of parliamentary ritual designed to let him register his opinion. But Hunter didn't withdraw, and it sent Thornberry scrambling for legislatively murkier options for killing the measure before it could hit House floor, where it was predicted to pass.

The Rules Comm. chairman, wanting to protect “young women from being mandated to submit their personal information to the federal government to sign up for the selective service,” used the authority of his office to exploit a quirk of parliamentary procedure. So even though Thornberry's amendment to delete Hunter's draft provision was voted down by the Rules Committee, Sessions wrote its language into the original language of the bill, which makes it “considered as adopted” by the Committee.

The Senate's version of the defense-funding bill still contains the draft expansion. Somehow, both houses of Congress have to agree on an identical bill. And once they do, then there's a good chance President Obama will veto it over a separate funding fight anyway: The House bill appropriates the funds marked for foreign wars to keep bases that the Pentagon wants to shutter open, and the White House has already threatened to send it back unsigned.

6/11/2016, Women and the draft: Sign of equality, or potential consequence of it? By Katie Leslie, Dallas Morning News

Congress has been at odds over the issue for months after Sen. John McCain, the Arizona Republican and chairman of the Senate Armed Services committee, added language to the annual defense spending bill that would require women ages 18 to 26 to register for the Selective Service.

The new requirement would affect as many as 11 to 15 million women, according to a nonpartisan Congressional Research Service report in April. Women who turn 18 on or after Jan. 1, 2018, would be required to sign up.

Cruz backed an unsuccessful move by fellow conservative Sen. Mike Lee, R-Utah, to strip the requirement from the National Defense Authorization Act while it was still in committee.

House Rules Chrmn Sessions said in May, “We don’t need every little girl giving their information to the federal government at a time when the federal government does not actively use the information ... because we don’t have a draft.”

If it is approved with the Selective Service measure intact, Senate and House leaders will convene to reach a compromise.

The U.S. Senate voted overwhelmingly on Tuesday to pass a $602 billion defense authorization bill [National Defense Authorization Act 85-13], despite President Barack Obama’s threat to veto the annual policy measure over issues including a ban on closing the Guantanamo military prison.

The bill included the Armed Services Comm. provision to draft women and now must be reconciled with one the House of Representatives passed last month before it can be sent to Obama.

The House bill also faces a veto threat.

6/14/2016, Senate Votes to Require Women to Register for the Draft, Jennifer Steinhauer, NYTs.

The Senate approved an expansive military policy bill that would for the first time require young women to register for the draft.

Under the Senate bill passed on Tuesday, women turning 18 on or after Jan. 1, 2018, would be forced to register for Selective Service, as men must do now.

The debate will now pit the Senate against the House, where the policy change has support but was not included in that chamber’s version of the bill. The two bills will now be reconciled in a conference committee between the House and the Senate, where a contentious debate is expected.

6/14/2016, Senate Approves Defense Policy Bill, Baiting Veto, Joe Gould, Defense News

President Obama has threatened to veto the House and Senate versions of the bills — the House bill over its unorthodox treatment of overseas contingency operations (OCO) funds, and the Senate bill over its acquisition reform provisions and limits it would place on the closure of the Guantanamo military detainment facility in Cuba.

The House and Senate bills face significant differences for lawmakers to debate in conference, chiefly their approaches to defense acquisitions reform, where the Senate takes a more aggressive tack, and defense funding.

With few days on Congress' election-year calendar, lawmakers will have to act quickly to send the final version of the bill to Obama's desk before the end of the fiscal year on Sept. 30.

Obama has threatened to veto seven annual authorization bills, and did so last year.

Tuesday's final vote on the Senate bill was enough to override a veto threat from the White House, which has blasted the measure for attempting to "micromanage" the administration's conduct of national security policy through reductions in the White House National Security Council staff, organizational changes to the Pentagon and limits on the closure of the U.S. military prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

July 7, 2016, the House amended a different spending bill to prevent the SSS from using any money to open registration to women.

November 29, 2016, the Senate and House Conference agreed on a 2017 NDAA that eliminated the Senate's provision for young women to register with the SSS and adopted the House's provision to require the Secretary of Defense to submit a study by July 1, 2017, on whether the SSS was still realistic and cost-effective.

The Pentagon says the country should stick with mandatory registration for a military draft, and it advocates a requirement for women to sign up for the first time in the nation's history. "It appears that, for the most part, expanding registration for the draft to include women would enhance further the benefits presently associated with the Selective Service System," the Pentagon report states.

The report says registration should stay because of a number of benefits.

For one, it sends a strong message to world adversaries that, if necessary, the U.S. can conduct a mass mobilization.

“Eliminating military selective service could be interpreted by adversaries of the United States as a potential weakness, thus emboldening existing or potential enemies,” the Pentagon says.

The report quotes Ronald Reagan, who referred to registration as an “insurance policy.”

Jihada Genesis

Friday, February 2, 2001, Candlemas Eve, I was having dinner with my stockbroker, who was also a friend. At present, I no longer have a stockbroker because I have no stock thanks to my crooked stockbroker who, of course, is now an enemy.

But back then, I valued her advice and was trying to decide whether to try to get the Ho, my alien criminal wife, deported or just forget about her—chalk it all up to another revolting experience involving a girl.

Previously, a friend of mine and graduate of Harvard Law School, had convinced me not to perjure myself on an affidavit to the Immigration and Naturalization Service that the Ho and I were still happily married. That would have resulted in Immigration granting her a green card and she could then become a citizen in three years. As my friend said, “If you do, she and her immigration lawyer will always have something over you.”

So at dinner, I was trying to decide whether to push Immigration to deport her—which I thought at the time was likely, but now know was stupidity thanks to the Feminazis perversion of the law—or just forget it. At the time I was auditing math and physics courses at Columbia University in an effort to work my way to a PhD. I decided to forget it and concentrate on my studies.

After going home that night, there came a loud tapping, a rapping at my apartment door. It was two overly stuffed female cops who served me with a Temporary Order of Protection. The Order, issued by the Queens Family Court without my being present or even notified of the proceeding, said that if I contacted the Ho or came within a certain distance of her, intentionally or accidentally, I would go to jail—no ifs, ands, or buts.

The Ho's immigration lawyer had told her to obtain the Order so as to pressure me into signing the false affidavit for Immigration. The Ho told the Feminazi sycophant judge that I had threatened her with a gun and a knife—both false, and that I had bruised her arm—true. The bruise resulted in my using a martial arts move to disarm her when she came at me with a steak knife. Temporary orders of protection based on female lies—are females capable of anything but—are a favorite Feminazi tactic to invoke state violence against an innocent male. Being locked up without due process is clearly violent to one's liberty and may possibly result in worse.

During the remainder of the evening while I pondered dark and weary, I resolved to have my vengeance. Not just against the Ho and her immigration lawyer but more importantly the Feminazis who made such an abuse of government power possible. I would fight them until my last dollar, my last breath, and if there is anything after death, for eternity.

I. Introduction and Summary

1. The Russian International Crime Organization (the “Enterprise”) generates profits worldwide from numerous criminal activities that include without limitation drug trafficking, money laundering, tax evasion, immigration fraud, prostitution, pornography, white slavery, bribery, mail and wire fraud, murder, extortion, coercion and terror.

2. The current focus of the Enterprise (the “Scheme”) is to infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets, especially the United States (“U.S.”), for the personal enrichment of the members of the Enterprise (the “Members”).
3. The Enterprise has damaged the plaintiff’s law and consulting business as well as drugged, defrauded, coerced and threatened the plaintiff with severe bodily harm.
4. The plaintiff’s business activities, physical well-being and life are currently at risk.
5. The plaintiff asks this court for immediate injunctive relief to protect him from physical harm and protect his efforts to reestablish his business free of interference from the Enterprise.

II. Subject Matter Jurisdiction

6. This Honorable Court has subject matter jurisdiction because this action centers on a federal question under the civil enforcement provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (“RICO”), 18 U.S.C. 1961-68.
7. With respect to the foreign defendants, this Honorable Court has subject matter jurisdiction because their conduct abroad caused foreseeable and substantial effects within the U.S.

III. Personal Jurisdiction

8. This Honorable Court has personal jurisdiction over each defendant as a result of a defendant having minimum contacts with New York, a defendant operating through an agent or a defendant’s conspiratorial contacts with other defendants in New York.

IV. Venue

9. Venue is proper in this Honorable Court for each defendant because of a defendant operating through an agent in this forum, a defendant’s conspiratorial contacts with other defendants, a substantial part of the events that give rise to the claims against a defendant occurred and are occurring in this forum or in order to serve the ends of justice.

V. The Enterprise

10. The Enterprise rose out of the ashes of the Soviet Union when the collapse of communism unleashed that empire’s restraints on organized crime, corrupt government officials, travel, trade, communication and emigration.

11. The Enterprise consists of domestic and foreign corporations, partnerships, individuals, government officials, law firms, organized crime gangs (including American, Russian and Chechen) and an Islamic terrorist and crime clan.
12. The Enterprise is an on going operation in which its members associate together for the purpose of engaging in illegal and legal activities in order to earn substantial profits.
13. A key aim of the Enterprise is to infiltrate and expand its activities in hard currency markets where profits are not threatened by inconvertibility of the local currency or drastic depreciations.
14. The relationships among the Enterprise's members are both formal, including agreements and chain of command authority, and informal in which the common objectives of the Enterprise, to infiltrate and grow in hard currency markets, controls decision-making.
15. This complaint concerns a portion of the Enterprise's activities in America, Russia, Cyprus and Mexico and some of its Members, the defendants, who are alleged to engage in money laundering, prostitution, pornography, white slavery, drug trafficking, bribery, tampering with witnesses and informants, obstructing justice, tax evasion, failure to report the transfer of funds overseas, mail and wire fraud, immigration violations, conspiracy to commit murder for hire and the use of the international facilities to assist in carrying out Enterprise activities.

VII. Enterprise's Operations Against the Plaintiff

A. Enterprise Targets the Plaintiff

128. On July 4, 1999, the plaintiff arrived in Moscow, Russia, on a six-month consultancy contract for the American security firm Kroll Associates.
129. Kroll Associates hired the plaintiff to manage and upgrade its Russian operations.
130. On a Friday night a few weeks after the plaintiff's arrival, the plaintiff unexpectedly came across a few partygoers on the grounds of the apartment building in which he was living.
131. Enterprise member Phodes Studio, which had its offices in the apartment building, sponsored the party.
132. At the time, the plaintiff did not know the nature of Phodes Studio's business or that it was an Enterprise member.
133. Member Leonid Perlin, President of Phodes Studio, invited the plaintiff into the main party area after determining that the plaintiff was an American.
134. Inside, Member Alina Shipilina introduced herself to the plaintiff at Member Perlin's behest.
135. Members Perlin and Alina Shipilina subsequently decided to target the plaintiff as part of the Enterprise's ongoing Scheme to infiltrate and expand its operations in the U.S.
136. Members Perlin and Alina Shipilina agreed to use the plaintiff as an unwitting means for Member Alina Shipilina to fraudulently enter America where she would participate in expanding the Enterprise's activities.
137. Member Alina Shipilina set out to win the devotion and cloud the mind of the plaintiff by secretly feeding him narcotics.

138. In addition, Member Alina Shipilina artfully elicited the plaintiff's compassion for her with false tales of hardship and struggle in trying to succeed as a legitimate model and dancer in post communist Russia.
139. In August 1999, Member Alina Shipilina returned to her hometown of Krasnodar, Russia to continue her long established prostitution business in that city about which the plaintiff was unaware of at the time.
140. While in Krasnodar, Member Alina Shipilina continued to cozenly ply the plaintiff through letters and telephone calls in furtherance of the Enterprise's Scheme.

B. Enterprise Expands Prostitution Operations in Mexico While Pursuing Scheme Against the Plaintiff

141. By the end of August 1999, the Enterprise had finalized arrangements to establish a branch in Mexico for prostitution and pornography.
142. Members Perlin and Alina Shipilina had made the logistical arrangements for the Enterprise's expansion.
143. Member Perlin communicated between Moscow and Mexico City via telephone and fax in arranging the logistics.
144. Member Alina Shipilina communicated with Member Perlin by telephone, fax and mail from Cyprus and Krasnodar, Russia in arranging her end of the logistics.
145. Members Perlin, Alina Shipilina and another Russian prostitute called Tanya provided bribes to Mexican embassy officials in Moscow to obtain visas for Mexico.
146. Mexican Member Maria of the Julia Heart Agency provided fake sponsors in Mexico to obtain working visas as translators for the two Russian prostitutes: Members Alina Shipilina and Tanya.
147. Member Alina Shipilina, before leaving for Mexico, implored the plaintiff to wait for her so as not to jeopardize the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff.
148. Member Alina Shipilina told the plaintiff she had to go to Mexico to work as a legitimate model and dancer in order to earn enough money to buy her and her divorced mother, Member Inessa Shipilina, an apartment in the central part of Krasnodar, Russia.
149. In Mexico Members Perlin, Alina Shipilina and Tanya established business relations with Mexican organized crime, brothel/strip clubs and a private clientele of wealthy businessmen and politicians.
150. In September 1999, Member Maria arranged for Members Alina Shipilina and Tanya to work at the brothel/strip club called the "The Men's Club".

151. The Men's Club, through Alina Shipilina and Tanya, provided the Enterprise access to public officials and businessmen from Mexico, North America and other parts of the globe.
152. In Mexico Member Alina Shipilina expanded the Enterprise's operations by establishing a weekend service in which call girls, including herself and Azul, traveled to famous resorts with businessmen and politicians.
153. During the fall of 1999 while in Mexico, Member Alina Shipilina continued to advance the Enterprise's Scheme with respect to the U.S. by furthering her and Member Perlin's artifice against the plaintiff.
154. Member Alina Shipilina professed to the plaintiff falsehoods about her loneliness and false endearments in telephone calls and faxes.
155. On November 26, 1999, Members Alina Shipilina and Tanya were arrested by Mexican authorities for working without a visa and for promoting prostitution and engaging in prostitution.
156. Members Alina Shipilina and Tanya were jailed until November 29, 1999 when Mexican Immigration officials escorted them onto a flight back to Russia.
157. On November 30, 1999, Member Alina Shipilina smuggled approximately $9,000 in the form of cash and traveler's checks into Russia from the Enterprise's Mexican operations.
158. Before Members Alina Shipilina and Tanya's deportation, the two regularly wired money from their part of the Enterprise's activities in Mexico to Member Perlin's off shore bank account.
159. In mid December 1999, in accordance with a previous arrangement made by Member Alina Shipilina, Member Ibarra smuggled into Russia the remaining $18,000 of the Enterprise's revenues earned by Member Alina Shipilina's operations in Mexico.
160. Member Ibarra smuggled the money by using ATM cards and traveler's checks.
161. Member Ibarra also smuggled in a shipment of narcotics for the Enterprise that he turned over to member Alina Shipilina.
162. Members Perlin, Alina Shipilina and Tanya established an underground airway for transiting Enterprise Russian prostitutes to Mexico.
163. Members Perlin, Alina Shipilina and Tanya developed an influential and wealthy international clientele useful in furthering other Enterprise activities.

C. Enterprise's Scheme Fraudulently Gains Member Alina Shipilina Entry into America

164. Members Alina Shipilina and Perlin pushed ahead full throttle with the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff by focusing on acquiring Member Alina Shipilina U.S. residency status and subsequently naturalization through a fraudulent marriage to the plaintiff.
165. During December 1999 while the plaintiff worked in Moscow and Member Alina Shipilina was back in Krasnodar, Member Alina Shipilina used telephone calls, cards, and a visit to Moscow to tell imaginary tales about the honest and hard life she had lived and to make romantic pretenses in order to wheedle the plaintiff into marriage.
166. In her December visit, Member Alina Shipilina arrived in Moscow a few days earlier than the date she told the plaintiff in order to pick up the money and the narcotics smuggled into the country by Member Ibarra.
167. After repaying Member Ibarra for his assistance with a weekend of prostitution services at the Rossiya Hotel, Member Alina Shipilina promptly put on her mask of pretenses for the plaintiff and went to his office where she claimed to have arrived in town earlier that morning.
168. During Member Alina Shipilina's visit to Moscow, she surreptitiously put narcotics in the plaintiff's food so that the plaintiff would assume the euphoric feeling produced by the narcotics was the result of being with her.
169. Member Alina Shipilina subsequently invited the plaintiff to visit her home in Krasnodar to celebrate the new millennium with her and her mother, Member Inessa Shipilina.
170. Member Inessa Shipilina advised Member Alina Shipilina on strategy and tactics for furthering the Enterprise Scheme to trick the plaintiff into taking Member Alina Shipilina to America to conduct Enterprise activities.
171. During the Millennium visit, Member Inessa Shipilina hid the truth about Member Alina Shipilina and assisted Member Alina Shipilina in surreptitiously putting narcotics in the plaintiff's food in order to create a false feeling of comradeship in the plaintiff.
172. In Moscow, Krasnodar and on a short visit to America, Member Alina Shipilina played the devoted, loving partner and repeatedly and secretly fed the plaintiff narcotics.
173. In February 2000, the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff took a major step closer to fruition when the plaintiff and Member Alina Shipilina set a marriage date for March, which would follow the end of the plaintiff's consultancy contract with Kroll Associates.

174. In March 2000 in Krasnodar, about five days before the wedding ceremony, the plaintiff began to sense that his future wife was not being fully candid with him and told Member Alina Shipilina he was considering canceling the wedding.
175. The next day Member Alina Shipilina began surreptitiously putting "salt and sugars" into the plaintiff's food, which she had obtained from a Krasnodar source.
176. The plaintiff suffered symptoms of narcotic poisoning.
177. The "salt and sugars" Member Alina Shipilina secretly put in the plaintiff's food were narcotics.
178. Member Alina Shipilina put narcotics in the plaintiff's food in order to muddle his thinking and weaken his will so that he would not call off the wedding on which the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff depended.
179. Member Alina Shipilina used the narcotics on the plaintiff to assure that she would be able to obtain U.S. residency status and subsequently naturalization as the plaintiff's wife, which would enable her to set up and conduct Enterprise activities in America.
180. Member Alina Shipilina often secretly slipped the plaintiff narcotics in an effort to befuddle the plaintiff's thinking and use their addictive characteristic to make the plaintiff feel addicted to her.
181. Member Alina Shipilina put the plaintiff in danger of grave harm and death by giving him narcotics without Member Alina Shipilina knowing whether they would cause allergic reactions or exceed the plaintiff's tolerance level.
182. On March 11, 2000, after days of secretly feeding the plaintiff "salts and sugars" the plaintiff married Member Alina Shipilina in Krasnodar.
183. In Member Alina Shipilina's own words:
- "And on Saturday, March 11, 2000, we registered our marriage. It was merry! I [Alina Shipilina] did not accept it very seriously; for me it was only business."
184. Weeks after the wedding the plaintiff could not even remember what his wife had worn at the ceremony because of the narcotics secretly fed him. (Only later in wedding photographs did the plaintiff see that his wife had worn black.)
185. After the marriage Member Alina Shipilina continued to secretly feed the plaintiff narcotics on various occasions to make sure he remained in the dark as to the Enterprise's Scheme.

186. The next step in the Enterprise's Scheme was for Member Alina Shipilina to obtain an immigrant visa to America based on her fraudulent marriage to the plaintiff.
187. Obtaining the visa took about two and a half months, from March to May 2000, required gathering documents, filing a number of forms with the U.S. Immigration and Department of State offices at the Embassy in Moscow and an interview conducted by U.S. Immigration at the Embassy.
188. During this period, the plaintiff put his law and consulting business on hold while waiting in Moscow for Member Alina Shipilina's visa.
189. Unknown to the plaintiff, the Enterprise had a contingency plan if its fraudulent scheme in obtaining Member Alina Shipilina a visa to the U.S. was not successful. In Member Alina Shipilina's own words:
- “What will happen if I [Alina Shipilina] will not receive a visa to America? I will go—with Leonid's [Leonid Perlin] help—to Greece or Venezuela.”
190. In order to obtain a visa, admission to the U.S. as a conditional permanent resident and eventually permanent residency and naturalization, Member Alina Shipilina lied on her visa petition filed with the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service (hereafter “the INS”) at the Embassy in Moscow.
191. On INS Biographic Information Form G-325A, Member Alina Shipilina intentionally omitted reporting as her occupations: promoting prostitution, prostitution, money laundering and narcotics trafficking.
192. In May 2000, also in order to obtain a visa, admission to the U.S. as a conditional permanent resident and eventually permanent residency and naturalization, Member Alina Shipilina falsely swore to the truth of the information on her immigrant visa application: U.S. Form 230, Parts I & II: Questionnaire For an Immigrant Visa and Registration Number, which was filed with the U.S. State Department office at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.
193. Member Alina Shipilina perjured herself in her answers to the following questions on Form 230:
- a. Part I, Question 11, she intentionally omitted her occupations in promoting prostitution, prostitution, money laundering and narcotics trafficking.
  - b. Part I, Question 21, she intentionally lied by stating her occupation in Cyprus was that of an “artist” when in actuality she engaged in prostitution, promoting prostitution, money laundering and narcotics trafficking.
  - c. Part II, Question 33 (b)
    - i. She intentionally lied by denying that she intended to enter the U.S. to engage in prostitution.

- ii. She intentionally lied by denying that she worked as a prostitute within the past 10 year.
    - iii. She intentionally lied by denying that she attempts to and procures prostitutes.
    - iv. She intentionally lied by denying that she attempted to and procured prostitutes within the past 10 years.
    - v. She intentionally lied by denying that she receives money from prostitution.
    - vi. She intentionally lied by denying that she engaged in drug trafficking.
  - d. Part II, Question 34, she intentionally failed to report that she was arrested and imprisoned in Mexico in November 1999.
194. In April 2000, the month before Member Alina Shipilina obtained her U.S. visa, the Enterprise expanded its procurement of prostitutes through an arrangement between Members Perlin and Alina Shipilina in which Member Alina Shipilina began recruiting prostitutes from Krasnodar for the Enterprise's operations in Mexico.
195. From May 19 to 23, 2000, Member Alina Shipilina traveled to Milan, Florence and Venice, Italy to engage in prostitution with Member Ibarra.
196. While in Italy, Member Alina Shipilina picked up from Member Ibarra a shipment of narcotics for enhancing sexual pleasure, which she tested on herself, and brought back to Russia for the Enterprise to distribute.
197. On May 31, 2000, Member Alina Shipilina received an immigrant visa to travel to the United States.
198. In June 2000, the plaintiff learned of adulterous affairs by Member Alina Shipilina but still did not know about her true profession or the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff in which Member Alina Shipilina would assist in expanding Enterprise activities in America.
199. The plaintiff returned to New York City without Member Alina Shipilina.
200. Member Alina Shipilina called the plaintiff's Moscow home number, former work number and New York number repeatedly in an effort to salvage the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff.
201. In at least two telephone calls between Krasnodar and New York, Member Alina Shipilina falsely promised to be faithful, "Roy please give me one last chance. I will correct mistake," pretended remorse, "I very big sorry," and, true to form, elicited sympathy, "Before you I had nothing."
202. In June and July 2000, Member Alina Shipilina also sent a letter and post card from Russia to the plaintiff in America with false words of love, understanding and harmony.

203. Member Alina Shipilina's misrepresentations were intended to lull the plaintiff so that the Enterprise's Scheme could move forward.
204. The plaintiff accepted Member Alina Shipilina's statements as true and forgave her for what he believed were only adulterous affairs and brought her to America.
205. On July 10, 2000, the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff succeeded in gaining Member Alina Shipilina entry into America.
206. On the same day that Member Alina Shipilina entered the U.S., she brought with her an amount of narcotics from Krasnodar.
207. Member Alina Shipilina entered America as a "conditional permanent resident", a status that lasted for two years after which she applied for "permanent residency" in 2002 with the assistance of Member Nicholas J. Mundy.
208. Member Alina Shipilina is currently on a one-year extension of her conditional permanent residency and has not yet received permanent residency status from the INS.
209. After Member Alina Shipilina receives permanent residency status, she may apply for citizenship in five years.
210. As of July 2000, the Enterprise's Scheme had so far been successful but was still not home free.
211. Member Alina Shipilina was now a conditional permanent resident but not as safe from deportation as a permanent resident or naturalized citizen.
212. The Enterprise Scheme's aim of Member Alina Shipilina working diligently to expand the Enterprise's activities in America would not be fully secure until she obtained permanent residency and citizenship.

D. Aim of Enterprise's Scheme Is Threatened

213. In July 2000, Member Alina Shipilina began working as a lap-dancer at Flash Dancers Topless Club in Manhattan over the plaintiff's objections.
214. On or about August 2000, the plaintiff became suspicious of Member Alina Shipilina's involvement in prostitution when she began secretly contacting Flash Dancer customers over the plaintiff's telephone.
215. The plaintiff confronted Member Alina Shipilina who denied engaging in prostitution.

216. Member Alina Shipilina continued slipping narcotics into the plaintiff's meals in order to divert him from learning more about her activities as part of the Enterprise.
217. In August 2000, the plaintiff launched an investigation that continues to the present day and ended up diverting him from his law and consulting business for two years.
218. In September 2000, Member Alina Shipilina visited Krasnodar and Cyprus from where she sent post cards to the plaintiff in New York expressing false sentiments in an effort to protect the Enterprise's Scheme by lulling the plaintiff.
219. Also while in Krasnodar and Cyprus and to protect the Enterprise's Scheme, Member Alina Shipilina used telephone conversations with the plaintiff in New York to lull him.
220. In October 2000, the plaintiff, as a result of his initial investigation, realized his wife's true occupation and reason for marrying him but was still under aware of the Enterprise's Scheme.
221. The plaintiff told Member Alina Shipilina that he wanted a separation and divorce.
222. Member Alina Shipilina enlisted the assistance of the New York and New Jersey law firm Kuba, Mundy & Associates, also a Member of the Enterprise, to prevent any separation or divorce from interfering with her becoming a permanent resident and eventually a naturalized citizen.
223. At the end of October 2000, the plaintiff and Member Alina Shipilina met with Member Peter Petrovich at Kuba, Mundy & Associates concerning the impact of a separation and divorce on Member Alina Shipilina's immigrant status.
224. Member Petrovich, after consulting with Member Mundy, advised Member Alina Shipilina and the plaintiff that the plaintiff would have to sign a fraudulent affidavit for the INS in order to avoid problems with Member Alina Shipilina becoming a permanent resident.
225. Member Petrovich also advised both to lie to the INS by stating the separation occurred in 2001 instead of 2000 in order to avoid the INS questioning the bona fides of a marriage that dissolved in the same year it was entered.
226. In November 2000, after consulting with an attorney, the plaintiff told Member Alina Shipilina he would not lie to the INS in order to assure her receiving permanent residency and eventually naturalization.
227. From July to November 2000, Member Alina Shipilina used the U.S. post and international telephone system to consult with Member Inessa Shipilina on ways to lull the plaintiff into assisting Member Alina Shipilina in acquiring permanent residency and eventually naturalization.

E. Enterprise's Illegal Activities to Protect its Scheme

228. In November Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina agreed to use illegal and legal means to force the plaintiff to lie to the INS in order to protect the Enterprise's Scheme and prevent the plaintiff from eventually exposing the Enterprise's activities through his investigation.
229. On December 13, 2000, Member Alina Shipilina intentionally filed a false report with the 114th Police Precinct in Queens, New York at the direction of Members Mundy and Petrovich.
230. In the report, Member Alina Shipilina falsely accused the plaintiff of extortion and making threats.
231. Member Alina Shipilina, however, refused to press charges at that time.
232. Members Mundy and Petrovich directed Member Alina Shipilina to hold off on pressing the false charges so that at the appropriate time the existence of the report combined with the threat to press charges could be used by the Enterprise to intimidate the plaintiff into lying to the INS.
233. On or about December 2000, Member Alina Shipilina told the plaintiff during a telephone conversation that she would reward him for helping her stay in the U.S.
234. In December 2000 or January 2001, Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina agreed to obtain a temporary order of protection—also based on falsehoods—against the plaintiff in order to pressure the plaintiff into lying to the INS.
235. On January 28, 2001, the plaintiff met with Member Alina Shipilina in order to separate their joint HMO policy.
236. Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina agreed before that January 28th meeting to have Member Alina Shipilina threaten the plaintiff with physical harm and even death from her Russian criminal associates in order to scare the plaintiff into lying to the INS.
237. At the January 28th meeting, Member Alina Shipilina threatened the plaintiff with physical harm and possibly death from her Russian criminal associates unless he agreed to lie to the INS for her.
238. The plaintiff refused to comply with Member Alina Shipilina's threats.

239. On January 31, 2001, one year to the day that the plaintiff proposed marriage to Member Alina Shipilina, Member Alina Shipilina obtained a temporary order of protection based on false testimony in an ex parte court proceeding.
240. Just six days after issuance of the temporary order of protection, Member Mundy sent the plaintiff a letter threatening commencement of “difficult” divorce proceedings unless the plaintiff met to resolve the issues.
241. When viewed in the context of the temporary order of protection obtained through perjured testimony and the previous threat of harm made by Member Alina Shipilina, the Mundy letter was meant to intimidate the plaintiff into lying before the INS.
242. On February 20, 2001, the plaintiff responded by serving an action for divorce/annulment.
243. In February or March 2001, Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina agreed to modify their tactics for accomplishing the Enterprise’s Scheme by focusing on intimidating the plaintiff to agree to a divorce settlement in order to avoid a trial that threatened to expose the Enterprise’s Scheme and its activities.
244. A trial would produce evidence of Member Alina Shipilina’s fraud on the INS, U.S. tax evasion, money laundering, violation of foreign transactions reporting, prostitution, promoting prostitution, narcotics trafficking and perjury that would threaten the Enterprise’s Scheme and risk exposure of Enterprise activities in which Member Alina Shipilina was involved.
245. In March 2001, Member Mundy attempted to intimidate the plaintiff out of going to trial by lying to the plaintiff’s divorce attorney that Mundy possessed medical records showing the plaintiff had beaten Member Alina Shipilina.
246. The plaintiff pressed on for a trail.
247. On March 14, 2001, the plaintiff had a complaint and summons, issued by a Queens, New York court, served on Member Alina Shipilina while giving lap-dances at Flash Dancers.
248. The complaint concerned previous threats of physical harm made by Member Alina Shipilina against the plaintiff.
249. Member Alina Shipilina, standing at six feet five inches in her heels, physically grabbed hold of the five foot eight inch tall process server and slammed her hand holding the complaint and summons into the process server’s chest.
250. Member Alina Shipilina, joined by Flash Dancers Gangster 1, both physically barred the process server from leaving the club.

251. Members Alina Shipilina and Flash Dancers Gangster 1 tried to intimidate the process server into taking back the papers.
252. The process server refused and he was finally allowed to leave.
253. In March 2001, the plaintiff notified the INS of Member Alina Shipilina 's intentional misrepresentations and omissions to the INS and the Department of State in order for her to obtain entry into America.
254. Sometime after March, Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina agreed to bribe an INS agent or agents in New York City to prevent deportation of Member Alina Shipilina.
255. Sometime after March, Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina bribed an INS agent or agents in New York City to prevent deportation of Member Alina Shipilina.
256. In April and June 2001, the plaintiff traveled to Member Alina Shipilina's home city, Krasnodar, Russia, in order to authenticate documents and discover information and potential witnesses in preparation for a divorce/annulment trial.
257. While searching for potential witnesses at the college where Member Alina Shipilina previously attended and taught, Member Vladimir Gavrilovich Minchenko, Vice Rector of the Krasnodar Academy of Physical Culture, and Academy Thugs 1 and 2 forced the plaintiff and his female translator under the threat of physical injury to Member Minchenko's office.
258. Member Minchenko roughly grabbed the translator's upper arm and pulled her up the stairs to his office while Academy Thugs 1 and 2 menacingly directed the plaintiff to follow with the two of them walking closely behind the plaintiff.
259. In Member Minchenko's office, the plaintiff and his translator were held against their will for nearly an hour of interrogation.
260. While in Member Minchenko's office, Member Minchenko tried to reach Member Inessa Shipilina by telephone.
261. During the interrogation, the plaintiff explained, among other matters, the evidentiary need to authenticate the handwriting of Member Alina Shipilina's diary for a divorce trial and requested a sample of her writing from the academy's files.
262. Member Minchenko initially agreed but subsequently did not produce the samples in order to prevent the authentication of the handwriting in Member Alina Shipilina's diary.
263. Member Minchenko informed Member Inessa Shipilina about the plaintiff's discovery efforts in Krasnodar.

264. Member Inessa Shipilina informed Member Alina Shipilina about the plaintiff's discovery efforts in Krasnodar.
265. Members Mundy, Petrovich, Alina Shipilina, and Inessa Shipilina agreed that Inessa Shipilina, who was outside the personal jurisdiction of the New York State Supreme Court, would, with the assistance of Enterprise gangsters in Krasnodar, conduct a campaign of threats and intimidation to prevent witnesses from providing testimony to any U.S. authorities, including the New York divorce court.
266. Member Inessa Shipilina's campaign instilled fear in witnesses by threatening to falsely accuse them of a crime and having corrupt police officials file criminal charges against them.
267. Member Inessa Shipilina instilled fear in witnesses by threatening them with physical injury from the Baraev Islamic Terror and Crime Clan or Russian Criminal Gang 5 or Chechen Criminal Gang 1.
268. Member Inessa Shipilina arranged for the Enterprise's Baraev Islamic Terror and Crime Clan or Russian Criminal Gang 5 or Chechen Criminal Gang 1 to threaten witnesses with physical injury.
269. Member Alexey Smolin assisted in preventing the discovery of evidence useful to the INS or a New York State court by orchestrating a cover up among various people knowledgeable about Member Alina Shipilina and Enterprise activities.
270. In an effort to stop the obstruction of the plaintiff's discovery by Enterprise members, the plaintiff hired a Krasnodar attorney to request assistance from the local prosecutor.
271. The Krasnodar prosecutor pursued a case of criminal defamation against Member Inessa Shipilina for slandering the plaintiff in carrying out the campaign to prevent witnesses from testifying.
272. The Krasnodar prosecutor indicted Member Inessa Shipilina on January 25, 2002, for criminal defamation, but long before then, the plaintiff's witnesses had been intimidated into silence.
273. In July 2001, the Enterprise made another attempt to intimidate the plaintiff into foregoing a trial in the divorce/annulment action when Member Mundy lied to the plaintiff's lawyer that Mundy had access to an audiotape of the plaintiff trying to extort money from Member Alina Shipilina.
274. The plaintiff continued his preparations for a trial.

275. On or about July 2001, Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina agreed to submit a false net worth statement for Member Alina Shipilina to the New York State Supreme Court in the divorce/annulment proceeding.
276. The net worth statement required by the court was falsified in order to hide most of Member Alina Shipilina's income from Enterprise activities on which she intentionally paid no taxes and smuggled out of the country.
277. The falsified net worth statement was submitted in the divorce/annulment proceedings on or about August 2001.
278. In October 2001, the plaintiff learned that his attorney at a preliminary conference on July 26, 2001 in the divorce/annulment proceeding had disregarded the plaintiff's instructions and agreed to settle the divorce/annulment action.
279. At a compliance conference on October 4, 2001, the divorce court judge told the parties that if the plaintiff wanted to try to set aside his prior attorney's agreement to settle, then the plaintiff would have to make a motion for a trial.
280. Following the October 4th conference, Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina agreed to have an organized crime member threaten the plaintiff in order to dissuade him from filing a motion for a trial.
281. Member Alina Shipilina and Member Barry, Flash Dancers' Night Manager, or Flash Dancers Manager 3 arranged for Member Madison to make a threatening telephone call to the plaintiff.
282. On October 19th in the evening, a man using the name John Madison called the plaintiff's mobile telephone and in a threatening tone of voice left a message that warned the plaintiff against pursuing the legal proceedings against Member Alina Shipilina.
283. Under the circumstances, the plaintiff interpreted the threat as referring to the motion for a trial and that if he went ahead with the motion, Member Madison would cause the plaintiff physical harm.
284. The threatening telephone call made the plaintiff fearful for his physical safety, so he decided against making a motion for a trial and settled the case in November 2001.
285. The Enterprise learned in late January or early February 2002 of the criminal indictment in Krasnodar of Member Inessa Shipilina for defaming the plaintiff.
286. The Enterprise learned in the first part of February or earlier that the INS office at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow had initiated an investigation into Member Alina Shipilina for possible deportation.

287. Enterprise Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina once again agreed to use a member of organized crime to intimidate the plaintiff into withdrawing his cooperation with the Krasnodar prosecutor and the INS at the Embassy in Moscow.
288. Member Alina Shipilina and Member Barry, Flash Dancers' Night Manager, or Flash Dancers Manager 4 arranged for Member John Pierre, to make a threatening telephone call to the plaintiff.
289. On February 6, 2002, in the evening, a man using the name John Pierre called the plaintiff's mobile and left a threatening message warning the plaintiff: "...cease and desist with your actions against Alina Shipilina," "I know everything about you," "...you disgust me," "...I'm very much available," "You better get your act together...", "... you at this point in time have crossed several boundaries that cause for a lot of red flags to wave in the air...", and, "That's it—leave her alone! Have a nice day."
290. Under the circumstances, the exceedingly menacing tone of voice and text of the call made clear to the plaintiff that if he did not cease and desist cooperating with the INS in Moscow and the Krasnodar prosecutor, then serious physical harm would befall him.
291. Member Madison and Member Pierre are the same person whose real name is unknown to the plaintiff.
292. Although shaken and fearful, the plaintiff continued to cooperate with the INS and the Krasnodar prosecutor.
293. On or about March 2002, Members Mundy, Petrovich, Alina Shipilina, Inessa Shipilina and the Enterprise's Baraev Islamic Terror and Crime Clan or Russian Criminal Gang 5 or Chechen Criminal Gang 1 agreed to have members of one of these organizations threaten witnesses into recanting their testimony against Member Inessa Shipilina in the Krasnodar criminal defamation case.
294. Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina used the international telephone and transportation systems to arrange for threatening witnesses into recanting their testimonies against Member Inessa Shipilina.
295. Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina used the international system for transferring money to move funds from America to Russia in order to pay for the threatening of witnesses.
296. The funds used to pay for the threatening of witnesses came from illegal Enterprise activities in the U.S.
297. Witnesses in the criminal case received threats from the Enterprise's Baraev Islamic Terror and Crime Clan or Russian Criminal Gang 5 or Chechen Criminal Gang 1, which caused many of the witnesses to recant their testimonies against Member Inessa Shipilina.

298. On or about March 2002, Enterprise Members Mundy, Petrovich, Alina Shipilina and Inessa Shipilina agreed to bribe Krasnodar officials to close the criminal case against Member Inessa Shipilina.
299. The money for the bribe came from illegal Enterprise activities in the U.S.
300. Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina used the international telephone and transportation systems to arrange for the payment of the bribe.
301. Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina used the international system for transferring money to move funds from America to Russia in order to pay the bribe.
302. Member Alina Shipilina or Inessa Shipilina or Krasnodar Briber 1 paid around $10,000 to Members Ostapenko, Kurilko and Borisova of the Department of Internal Affairs in Krasnodar to close the criminal case.
303. On or about March 2002, the criminal case against Member Inessa Shipilina was closed.
304. Members Ostapenko, Kurilko and Borisova's closing of the criminal case kept hidden from the public evidence of the Enterprise's Scheme and its operations.
305. Members Ostapenko, Kurilko and Borisova continue to prevent the prosecution of cases in Krasnodar that would expose the Enterprise's operations.
306. On or about March 2001, Members Mundy, Petrovich, and Alina Shipilina agreed to influence or reward Queens Detective Bob Henning for threatening the plaintiff with arrest in order to intimidate the plaintiff into ceasing his cooperation with the INS in Moscow and preventing him from trying to reopen the Krasnodar criminal case against Member Inessa Shipilina.
307. Members Mundy, Petrovich or Alina Shipilina provided Member Henning with bribes or rewards in the form of money or sexual services from Member Alina Shipilina for agreeing to contact the plaintiff to threaten him with arrest in order to stop the plaintiff from cooperating with the INS in Moscow or reopening the Member Inessa Shipilina case.
308. On March 27, 2002, in the Kafkaesque hours before 9 a.m., Member Henning telephoned the plaintiff at his unlisted home number, which was known by Member Alina Shipilina.
309. Member Henning told the plaintiff that because of a complaint recently made by Member Alina Shipilina about an alleged violation of a temporary order of protection, the plaintiff would have to surrender for arrest at a time worked out with the plaintiff's attorney.

310. The temporary order of protection referred to by Member Henning was the one that Member Alina Shipilina obtained by testifying falsely in an ex parte hearing in January 2001.
311. That temporary order of protection had been dismissed nine months earlier in July 2001.
312. Member Henning could not explain why the plaintiff was to be arrested nine months after the temporary order of protection had been dismissed.
313. The plaintiff's attorneys, at a cost of $3500, contacted Member Henning who could not specify the charge under which the plaintiff was to be arrested.
314. Member Henning decided not to arrest the plaintiff on the previously agreed to date and told the plaintiffs attorney that he referred the matter to the Queens District Attorney's Computer Crime Division.
315. Member Henning communicated with Member Alina Shipilina, Mundy or Petrovich concerning the intimidation tactic through means that included interstate or international telephone calls.
316. Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina also agreed in March to keep the intimidation pressure on the plaintiff by having Member Madison or Pierre, make another threatening telephone call to the plaintiff.
317. Member Alina Shipilina and Member Barry, Flash Dancers' Night Manager or Flash Dancers Manager 5 arranged for Member Madison or Pierre to make another threatening telephone call to the plaintiff.
318. On March 27, 2002, in the evening, a man calling himself John Pierre telephoned the plaintiff and threatened him not to testify before the INS or try to reopen the Krasnodar criminal case.
319. In late July or early August 2002 while in Krasnodar, Member Alina Shipilina contracted with the Enterprise's Aspyan Criminal Association in Krasnodar to use any means necessary, including murder, to keep the plaintiff from testifying before any INS proceeding that might occur concerning member Alina Shipilina.

VIII. Other Criminal Operations by the Enterprise that Impact the U.S.

A. Krasnodar, Russia Nexus

320. Enterprise Members Alexey Smolin, Khachatryan A. Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Albatross Club Gangster 1 agreed in March

2000 that once Member Alina Shipilina obtained U.S. residency they would begin building an operation for transporting prostitutes, pornography and narcotics to America.

321. Enterprise Members Smolin, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Albatross Club Gangster 1 agreed in March 2000 that Member Alina Shipilina would smuggle or arrange for smuggling profits out of America from the prostitution, pornography and narcotics operations.
322. Members Smolin, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Albatross Club Gangster 1 currently transport prostitutes, pornography and narcotics from Krasnodar to America.
323. Members Smolin, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Albatross Club Gangster 1 bribe U.S. government employees to acquire U.S. visas for Enterprise prostitutes.
324. Members Smolin, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Albatross Club Gangster 1 arrange for counterfeiting U.S. visas and alien registration cards for Russian prostitutes to enter and work in America.
325. Members Smolin, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Club Gangster 1 counsel and assist Russian prostitutes to make false statements on their visa petitions or applications.
326. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network, and American Organized Crime Gang 1 entered into an agreement in 2000 with Members Smolin, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Club Gangster 1 for the importation of prostitutes, pornography and narcotics into the U.S.; providing sponsors, petitioners and employers on visa applications for Russian prostitutes; and recruiting and hiring Russians unlawfully admitted to the U.S.
327. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang1 and other American lap-dancing clubs sign on as sponsors, petitioners and employers in order to obtain visas for Russian prostitutes.
328. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang 1 and other American lap-dancing clubs certify, swear or declare as true information concerning Russian prostitutes that is intentionally false or omits facts in order to obtain the visas.
329. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang1 and other American lap-dancing clubs employ the imported prostitutes to sell sexual services to club customers and Internet subscribers to www.flashdancersnyc.com and other Internet sites.

330. Enterprise photographer Dmitri Morosov supplies much of the Krasnodar pornography that Members Smolin, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Albatross Club Gangster 1 transport to America.
331. The Krasnodar pornography is sold and distributed on the Cybertech Internet site www.flashdancernyc.com and other Internet sites by Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang1 and other American lap-dancing clubs.
332. Member Alina Shipilina regularly smuggles into America narcotics that she obtains from the Enterprise's Baraev Islamic Terror and Crime Clan or Chechen Criminal Gang 2 or Russian Criminal Gang 4 in the Krasnodar region, which includes part of the Russian Caucasus.
333. In 2000, Members Barry, Flash Dancers' Night Manager, Flash Dancers Managers 1 and 2 and Alina Shipilina agreed to surreptitiously feed imported narcotics to the prostitution and lap-dancing customers at Flash Dancers in order to keep them returning.
334. Members Barry, Flash Dancers' Night Manager, Flash Dancers Managers 1 and 2 and Alina Shipilina secretly slip narcotics to the prostitution and lap-dancing customers at Flash Dancers.
335. Member Alina Shipilina personally smuggles or arranges for the smuggling out of America some of the profits from the Krasnodar supply of prostitutes, pornography and narcotics.
336. Member Alina Shipilina does not file the required reports for transporting over $10,000 out of the U.S.
337. Member Alina Shipilina makes telephone calls from New York to Krasnodar concerning the Enterprise's Krasnodar operations of supplying prostitutes, pornography and narcotics to America.
338. Member Alina Shipilina periodically travels to Krasnodar for meetings with Smolin, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa and Albatross Club Gangster 1 concerning the Enterprise's Krasnodar operations of supplying prostitutes, pornography and narcotics to America.
339. Member Alina Shipilina began her career with the Enterprise in the early 1990s when, after moving from Grozny, Chechnya, she enrolled her name on what Krasnodar models call the "dirty girls list" at the Vasilyeva Fashion House.

340. The “dirty girls list” offered up a selection of prostitutes to powerful politicians and wealthy organized crime figures.
341. Member Alina Shipilina in the mid 1990s expanded the Enterprise’s prostitution and pornography activities in Krasnodar.
342. Member Alina Shipilina procured additional prostitutes, among them Krasnodar Prostitutes 1 to 3, for the Enterprise and employed a marketer or pimp named Rey to increase business in Krasnodar.
343. The Enterprise’s Krasnodar Prostitutes 1 to 3 presently help Member Alina Shipilina recruit prostitutes for export to the U.S.
344. Member Rey continues to pimp many Krasnodar models for the Enterprise by selling their sexual services to local gangsters and influential government officials.
345. Member Rey provides models for transportation to America to work as prostitutes for the Enterprise.
346. Member Rey provides models to perform in pornography produced in Krasnodar by the Enterprise for the U.S. market.
347. Member Alina Shipilina still provides personalized prostitution services to some Members of the Enterprise’s Albatross Club when she returns to Krasnodar from New York City every two or three months.
348. The Enterprise’s Vasilyeva Fashion House still provides call girl services in Krasnodar through its “dirty girls list.”
349. The Enterprise’s Vasilyeva Fashion House obtains most of its revenue from recruiting Russian females to work as prostitutes in Russia and overseas.
350. In 2001 Members Anastasia Vasilyeva and her husband Dima expanded the Vasilyeva Fashion House’s prostitution supply services to America when they obtained U.S. residency status and set up shop in Greenfield, Wisconsin.
351. Members Anastasia Vasilyeva and her husband Dima provided the INS and Department of State with materially false information in order to obtain their visas and entry into the U.S.
352. Members Anastasia Vasilyeva and her husband Dima import Russian prostitutes into America, in part, by smuggling them across the Canadian border.
353. Members Anastasia Vasilyeva and her husband Dima intentionally provide the INS with false information or omit facts in order to obtain visas for some of their imported prostitutes.

354. Members Anastasia Vasilyeva and her husband Dima promote prostitution in Wisconsin and other states.

355. Members Anastasia Vasilyeva and her husband Dima travel within the U.S. and overseas in order to promote, manage and carry on the Vasilyeva Fashion House's prostitution business.

B. Moscow, Russia Nexus

356. Member Alina Shipilina expanded her Enterprise prostitution services outside of Krasnodar in the late 1990s by advertising on the Internet and commuting periodically to Moscow for prostitution, hands-on lap dancing and pornography arranged for by Member Phodes Studio.

357. Member Phodes Studio, at Member Alina Shipilina's direction, advertised her sexual services on the Phodes web site and elsewhere by using naked pictures of her taken by the company's president, Member Perlin.

358. Member Phodes Studio periodically held and continues to hold Friday night parties that are attended by American executives working in Moscow; Russian gangsters, politicians and businessmen; and Phodes Studio models and prostitutes.

359. Member Alina Shipilina attended many of these parties.

360. In the late 1990s, Member Alina Shipilina also traveled to Moscow in order to find an American man to take her to America where she could assist in expanding the Enterprise's activities.

361. Members Alina Shipilina and Perlin agreed to further the Enterprise's activities in America by finding Member Alina Shipilina an American to fraudulently marry.

362. Member Perlin personally introduced Alina Shipilina to Americans in Moscow and included her on the Phodes Studio "Introduction" web site at the time.

363. The Phodes Studio "Introduction" web site used and uses, currently at www.phodes.net, the Internet to duplicitously advertise Russian prostitutes as honest and decent women wanting to marry an American and raise a family in the U.S.

364. Member Perlin generally charges the unsuspecting American thousands of dollars to meet a number of his clandestine prostitutes from whom to choose a wife or a girl friend.

365. Member Phodes Studio has defrauded American men out of tens of thousands of dollars.

366. The “Introduction” web site is also a means by which the Enterprise maintains its fifth column in America for carrying out its criminal activities.
367. In the late 1990s, Member Perlin agreed with an American official at the United States Embassy in Moscow to pay the official bribes in return for U.S. work and travel visas for some of Member Perlin’s Russian prostitutes.
368. Member Perlin bribed the Embassy official with around $3,000 to $4,000 per visa.
369. Member Perlin instructed his prostitutes to make false statements or omit facts in order to obtain U.S. visas.
370. Member Perlin arranged with his business allies in the U.S. to provide or act as sponsors, petitioners and employers in which false or omitted information was intentionally used to obtain visas and entry into the U.S. for some of Member Perlin’s prostitutes

C. California, U.S.A. Nexus

371. Member Perlin entered an agreement with Enterprise Member California Pimp in which California Pimp would assist in obtaining visas for Phodes Studio prostitutes and import them to California to work as prostitutes, lap-dancers and pornography starlets.
372. Member California Pimp ran a brothel/lap-dancing club in southern California.
373. Member Perlin obtained visas for a number of his prostitutes through the assistance of Member California Pimp.
374. Member California Pimp intentionally made materially false statements or omitted information as the sponsor, petitioner or employer when obtaining visas for some of Member Perlin’s prostitutes.
375. These prostitutes traveled to California where they worked for Member California Pimp who controlled and harbored them while they engaged in prostitution, lap dancing and pornography.
376. Also centered in California Member Paulsen imports, distributes and sells pornography videos made with Russian prostitutes under contract to member Perlin and the Red Star model agency.
377. Members Perlin, Marc L. Paulsen and Alina Shipilina, in the fall of 1998, produced a masturbation video at Phodes Studio in Moscow in which member Alina Shipilina starred.
378. Member Paulsen imported the video to California.

379. Member Paulsen distributed the video in California and other states while Member Perlin sold it in Russia and over the Internet.
380. On one occasion, U.S. Customs interdicted Member Paulsen importing pornography videos into America when he returned from one of his trips to Moscow.

D. Cyprus Nexus

381. The Enterprise's Russian Criminal Gang 2 and 3 operated and continue to operate at least two brothel/strip clubs in Limassol, Cyprus: Zygos and Tramps.
382. Marios, Melios and Irina Athanasiou use the Enterprise's Athanasiou Agency and IRINIS as fronts for importing prostitutes and hands-on lap dancers from the Vasilyeva Fashion House and from other model agencies in Krasnodar.
383. The Enterprise's Athanasiou Agency and IRINIS also recruit prostitutes and hands-on lap dancers from other regions of Russia and the countries of Moldavia, Ukraine, Kazakhstan, Rumania, Bulgaria, Poland and the Philippines.
384. Member Marios Athanasiou periodically flies from Cyprus to Krasnodar to distribute the cash profits from the clubs to the Enterprise's Russian Criminal Gangs 2 and 3.
385. The Enterprise's Athanasiou Agency and IRINIS acquire visas for foreign prostitutes and hands-on lap dancers by bribing Cypriot immigration officials, in particular, Member A.Charalambous, a chief immigration officer.
386. Because prostitution is against the law in Cyprus, the visas falsely categorize the prostitutes as "artist(s)".
387. Member Alina Shipilina traveled to Cyprus in December 1998 to work as part of the Enterprise's network of Russian prostitutes earning hard currency overseas.
388. Members Anastasia Vasilyeva and her husband Dima of the Vasilyeva Fashion House made arrangements with Members Melios, Irina and Marios Athanasiou in Cyprus for Member Alina Shipilina and another Vasilyeva model to work as prostitutes and hands-on lap dancers at Zygos or Tramps.
389. Before beginning work, Member Alina Shipilina required a Cypriot doctor's certificate stating she was free of venereal disease and AIDS.
390. Zygos, where Member Alina Shipilina worked, offers a menu of sexual services for which an employee usually receives a third of the price for a sex act plus a daily salary. The menu includes "vaginal intercourse" 60 Cypriot pounds, "oral intercourse" 20 pounds and masturbation 10.

391. In addition to selling sex at Zygos, Member Alina Shipilina cut her own private deals with club customers for sex outside of the brothel.
392. Zygos' manager, Member Marios Athanasiou, complained at the time about Member Alina Shipilina cheating the club out of money through her private deals.
393. A prostitute at Zygos can net around $7,000 a month.
394. During Member Alina Shipilina's prostitution in Cyprus, she arranged for Enterprise members traveling back to Russia to smuggle her profits to Member Inessa Shipilina in Krasnodar.
395. Member Alina Shipilina returned to Krasnodar in June 1999 with thousands of dollars in cash and gifts that she failed to declare to Cypriot and Russian customs.
396. Member Alina Shipilina, who stands at over six feet tall and around a 145 pounds, hid the cash inside her body, the heels of her shoes and the lining in her suitcases.
397. During Member Alina Shipilina's sojourn in Cyprus, she maintained contact with Member Perlin of Phodes Studio in Moscow about business opportunities for her sexual services or Americans interested in marrying a Russian.
398. In July 1999, Member Perlin notified Member Alina Shipilina of additional business opportunities for her sexual services in Moscow.
399. Member Alina Shipilina traveled to Moscow where she appeared in another pornography video for Phodes Studio and performed at a couple of private business affairs as a prostitute.
400. Member Alina Shipilina also met the plaintiff on her July 1999 trip to Moscow.
401. In September 2000 members Marios, Melios and Irina Athanasiou, Alina Shipilina, Inessa Shipilina and Russian Criminal Gangs 2 and 3 agreed to export prostitutes from Zygos and Tramps to America.
402. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech and American Organized Crime Gang 1 entered into an agreement in the Fall of 2000 with Members Marios, Melios and Irina Athanasiou, Alina Shipilina, Inessa Shipilina and Russian Criminal Gangs 2 and 3 for the importation of prostitutes and pornography into the U.S.; providing sponsors, petitioners and employers on visa applications for Russian prostitutes; and recruiting and hiring Russians unlawfully admitted to the U.S.

403. Members Marios, Melios and Irina Athanasiou, Alina Shipilina, Inessa Shipilina and Russian Criminal Gangs 2 and 3 presently transport prostitutes from Zygos and Tramps to America.
404. A key juncture in the underground airway of prostitutes from Russia to Cyprus to the U.S. is Member Charalambous, a chief in Cypriot Immigration.
405. Member Charalambous permits the Enterprise to import Russian prostitutes into Cyprus, arranges for the prostitutes to receive Cypriot papers that hide their true occupation and uses his contacts with American immigration to subsequently expedite travel visas to America for the Enterprise's prostitutes.
406. Members Marios, Melios and Irina Athanasiou, and Russian Criminal Gangs 2 and 3 bribe U.S. employees to acquire visas for the prostitutes to travel to America.
407. Members Marios, Melios and Irina Athanasiou, and Russian Criminal Gangs 2 and 3 arrange for the counterfeiting of U.S. visas and alien registration cards so that their prostitutes can enter and work in America.
408. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang 1 and other American lap-dancing clubs act as sponsors, petitioners and employers for obtaining visas for the Cypriot prostitutes.
409. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang 1 and other American lap-dancing clubs certify, swear or declare as true information concerning Russian prostitutes that is false or omits facts in order to obtain the visas.
410. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang 1 and other American lap-dancing clubs hire the imported prostitutes to sell sexual services to club customers and Internet subscribers through www.flashdancersnyc.com and other Internet sites.
411. In the year 2001, Members Marios, Melios and Irina Athanasiou, Alina Shipilina, Inessa Shipilina and Russian Criminal Gangs 2 and 3 agreed to produce pornography for export to America by using prostitutes from Zygos and Tramps.
412. Members Marios, Melios and Irina Athanasiou, Alina Shipilina, Inessa Shipilina and Russian Criminal Gangs 2 and 3 export pornography to the U.S.
413. The pornography is sold and distribute on the Cybertech Internet site www.flashdancernyc.com and other sites by the Enterprise's American Organized Crime Gang 1.

- 414. Member Alina Shipilina smuggles and arranges for smuggling out of America some of the profits from the Cypriot supplied prostitutes and pornography.
- 415. Member Alina Shipilina does not file reports on transporting over $10,000 of this money out of the country at a time.
- 416. Member Alina Shipilina makes telephone calls from New York to members in Krasnodar and Cyprus concerning the Enterprise's importing of prostitutes and pornography from Cyprus.
- 417. Member Alina Shipilina periodically travels from New York to Krasnodar and Cyprus for meetings with other members of the Enterprise concerning importing prostitutes and pornography from Cyprus.

- 419. Members Maria and the Julia Heart Agency import prostitutes from Russia, Eastern Europe, South America and other parts of the world to engage in prostitution for the Enterprise in Mexico.
- 420. Members Maria and the Julia Heart Agency obtain working visas for the prostitutes under the guise of translators or other legitimate occupations.
- 421. Members Maria and the Julia Heart Agency bribe Mexican immigration officials to obtain working visas for alien prostitutes.
- 422. Members Maria and the Julia Heart Agency find positions for the prostitutes in the Enterprise's brothel/lap-dancing clubs in Mexico, such as "The Men's Club".
- 423. Members Maria and the Julia Heart Agency recruit and transport some of the Russian and Eastern European prostitutes across the Mexican border with the U.S. to work for the Enterprise as prostitutes, lap-dancers and pornography starlets in America.
- 424. Members Roberto & Rosa Elina Quilan manage an Enterprise brothel/lap-dancing club in Mexico City—The Men's Club.
- 425. Member Mexican Organized Crime Gang 1 controls The Men's Club.
- 426. Members Roberto & Rosa Elina Quinlan and Mexican Organized Crime Gang 1 recruit and transport some of the prostitutes that work for The Men's Club into America to work for the Enterprise as prostitutes, lap dancers and pornography starlets.

427. Member Max Gracia Appedole assists in the transportation of prostitutes from The Men's Club into America by bribing Mexican army officials to allow the transportation of the prostitutes across Mexico's northern border.
428. Member Azul recruits females from Europe to work as prostitutes for the Enterprise at The Men's Club and in the U.S.
429. In the fall of 1999, Member Alina Shipilina earned tens of thousands of dollars for the Enterprise and herself by providing sexual services in Mexico while working at The Men's Club.
430. Member Alina Shipilina's prostitution services included renting herself, Member Azul and others to wealthy businessmen for weekend trips to resorts such as Acapulco, Cancun and Puerto Vallarta.
431. Member Perlin exports pornography produced at Phodes Studio in Moscow to Mexico with the assistance of a Mexican partner called Salvador.
432. Member Salvador transports some of the Phodes pornography into the U.S. to be distributed and sold by the Enterprise.
433. Member Alfredo Ibarra Sotelo, a well-known client of The Men's Club, and his company Grupo Ibarra Aisa transport narcotics from Mexico into the U.S., Europe and Russia for the Enterprise and participate in the distribution of the narcotics in those countries.

F. United States Nexus

434. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry and American Organized Crime Gang 1 hire illegal Russian immigrants and Russian prostitutes to work as lap dancers and prostitutes.
435. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry and American Organized Crime Gang 1, in order to increase the club's business, promote prostitution among its lap dancers and customers.
436. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry and American Organized Crime Gang 1 do not report to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization that the club hires aliens for the purpose of prostitution and other immoral acts.
437. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky and American Organized Crime Gang 1's communications with the New York State Liquor Authority fraudulently concealed the prostitution activities conducted through Flash Dancers Topless Club.

438. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky and American Organized Crime Gang 1 misrepresented on their 1996 "license changes application" to the New York State Liquor Authority that the only type of business carried on at Flash Dancers Topless Club was dancing.
439. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky and American Organized Crime Gang 1 misrepresented on their 1996 "license changes application" to the New York State Liquor Authority that the only person holding an interest in the Flash Dancers Topless Club was Member Lepofsky.
440. Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry and American Organized Crime Gang 1 falsely represent to the U.S. and New York State tax authorities that the club's lap-dancers work as independent contractors when they are actually employees.
441. Flash Dancers' night shift has at least 75 lap-dancers working every night of the year with the average dancer netting $500 a night.
442. Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 and Barry and American Organized Crime Gang 1's false reporting that its lap-dancers are independent contractors results in nearly $13 million in cash revenue earned by the lap-dancers going unreported and untaxed each year.
443. As an example, Member Alina Shipilina grossed around $275,000 from July 2000 to July 2002, just from lap dancing.
444. Member Alina Shipilina failed to report most of her cash revenue for the tax year 2000 when she listed her gross income as only $18,861.
445. Member Alina Shipilina also failed to report most of her revenue for the year 2001 and 2002.

All Member Defendants

853. The above Members engaged in the cited criminal acts with the requisite mens rea.

XI. Plaintiff's Efforts to Obtain Assistance from Enforcement Agencies and State Courts

854. In February 2001, the plaintiff applied for a temporary order of protection in a Queens County court following the January threat of physical harm from Russian criminals that Member Alina Shipilina made to the plaintiff.
855. The Queens judge laughed at the plaintiff and denied the request.
856. In October 2001 after the first threatening telephone call by Member Madison or Pierre, the plaintiff went to his local police precinct in order to report the threat and file a complaint.
857. The two police officers on the desk at the 13th Precinct laughed at the plaintiff, said there was nothing they could do and refused to even listen to the plaintiff's audiotape of the threatening call.
858. In February 2002, plaintiff filed a complaint with the 13th Precinct about the second threatening telephone call from Member Madison or Pierre.
859. The police decided not to investigate and dismissed the complaint without even bothering to inform the plaintiff.
860. The plaintiff learned the complaint had been dismissed only after calling the precinct.
861. A detective told the plaintiff that the police didn't want to do the work necessary to tract down and investigate Member Madison or Pierre.
862. In February 2002, the plaintiff reported both the October 2001 and February 2002 threatening telephone calls to two agents at the Federal Bureau of Investigation ("F.B.I.") and provided the agents with tape recordings of each call.

863. At the end of February, one of the F.B.I. agents that the plaintiff had met with told the plaintiff that the F.B.I. had located Member Madison or Pierre, knew his real identity and the agents would have a talk with him.
864. The F.B.I. agent would not give the plaintiff Member Madison or Pierre's address or true identity.
865. The F.B.I. was able to locate Member Madison or Pierre and determine his true identity by tracing a voicemail telephone number.
866. In March 2002, the same F.B.I. agent, after contacting Member Alina Shipilina, told the plaintiff that the F.B.I. would not interview Member Madison or Pierre for fear that he might become angry and cause the plaintiff harm.
867. The F.B.I. agent also told the plaintiff that the F.B.I. "was not an investigative organization," so it could not help the plaintiff any further, and the agent warned the plaintiff not to open his apartment door to anyone he did not know and to watch out for himself in public.
868. The plaintiff obtained a temporary protection order against further threatening calls pending a trial in a New York County court.
869. The New York County court, however, refused to grant the plaintiff's motion for a subpoena to obtain the telephone records for the voicemail number of Member Madison or Pierre, so the plaintiff was still unable to discover the true identify of Member Madison or Pierre.
870. The New York County court denied the plaintiff a permanent protection order because the plaintiff could not determine the true identity of the Member Madison or Pierre and thereby show a connection with Member Alina Shipilina.
871. The plaintiff continues to fear for his business, personal safety and life.
872. The plaintiff has provided and continues to provide a description of the continuing acts by the Enterprise against the plaintiff to his attorney so that his attorney might take appropriate action in case the plaintiff is incapacitated, disappears or killed.
873. As a last resort, the plaintiff has brought this civil R.I.C.O. action in the hope that it will prevent the Enterprise from making good on its threats and provide the plaintiff just compensation for the harm caused by the Enterprise's Scheme as conducted by the member defendants.

XII. Effect of Interstate and Foreign Commerce

874. In its effect on interstate and foreign commerce, at the very least, the activities of the Enterprise:

- a. Span the globe and are expanding into states through out America;
- b. Move significant sums of money across interstate and foreign borders;
- c. Move prostitutes, hands-on lap-dancers, pornography and narcotics across interstate and foreign borders;
- d. Use interstate and foreign banking institutions;
- e. Involve customers that cross American state lines either physically or through the Internet to purchase sexual services and pornography;
- f. Increase the risk of sexually transmitted diseases among interstate and foreign customers;
- g. Increase health insurance premiums nationwide by increasing the incidents of diseases among some of the insured;
- h. Increase federal, state and local health expenses by increasing the incidents of diseases among some of the uninsured;
- i. Include operations overseas that have a foreseeable connection with U.S. interstate commerce, such as the recruitment of prostitutes, production of pornography, sales of narcotics, bribery and intimidation;
- j. Place law-abiding interstate and international entertainment companies at a competitive disadvantage through tax evasion and unfair business practices;
- k. Increase the tax burden on federal, state or local taxpayers, since members of the Enterprise consume government provided services without paying their fair share in taxes; and
- l. Increase the operating costs for many legitimate businesses that are cheated by various scams conducted by Enterprise members which in turn increase the price of goods and services throughout the economy.

Additionally,

- m. Members Flash Dancers, its owners and managers advertise and import goods across American state lines;
- n. Member Cybertech provides services across state lines and around the world via the Internet;
- o. Member Kuba, Mundy & Associates maintains New York and New Jersey offices;
- p. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang 1, Alina Shipilina, the Vasilyevas, Vasilyeva House of Fashion, California Pimp, Aspyan, Volchok, Raketa, Smolin, Albatross Club, Albatross Club Gangster 1, Aspyan Criminal Association, Rey, Inessa Shipilina, Krasnodar Prostitutes 1 to 3, Phodes Studio, Perlin, Vladimir, Russian Criminal Gangs 1, 2 and 3, Minchenko, the Athanasious, Maria, Julia Heart Agency, The Men's Club, the Quilans, Azul, Gracia and Mexican Organized Criminal Gang 1 transport or recruit prostitutes and hands-on lap dancers or facilitate recruiting or transporting of such across interstate or foreign borders;

- q. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Lepofsky, Flash Dancers Managers, Cybertech, American Organized Crime Gang 1, Alina Shipilina, Paulsen, Asypyan, Volchok, Raketa, Smolin, Albatross Club, Albatross Club Gangster 1, Asypyan Criminal Association, Morosov, Phodes Studio, Perlin, Athanasious and Salvador transport or facilitate the transportation of pornography across state or foreign borders; and
- r. Members Flash Dancers Topless Club; American Organized Crime Gang 1; Flash Dancers Managers Barry, 1 and 2; Alina Shipilina; Asypyan; Volchok; Raketa; Smolin; Albatross Club; Albatross Club Gangster 1; Asypyan Criminal Association; Baraev Islamic Terror and Crime Clan; Russian Criminal Gang 4; Chechen Criminal Gang 2; and Ibarra transport or facilitate the transportation of narcotics across state or foreign borders.

XIII. Pattern of Racketeering Activity

875. The Enterprise member defendants generate funds, acquire and maintain interests and conduct the affairs of the Enterprise through the numerous predicate acts cited in Section IX above.
876. Member defendants' predicate acts will repeat and multiply into the future in order to continue and increase the Enterprise's businesses and income streams.
877. Member defendants' predicate acts will repeat and multiple into the future in order to further the Enterprise's continuing Scheme to infiltrate and expand its activities into hard currency markets, especially the U.S.
878. Member defendants' predicate acts have occurred within temporal proximity of each other.
879. Member defendants use predicate acts in order to assure the effectiveness of concurrent or successive predicate and non-predicate criminal acts, since often a number of different crimes are necessary for contributing to the successful operation of the Enterprise and its Scheme.
880. For example, the flow of Enterprise human capital from the former Soviet Union often requires a combination of visa fraud, bribery, perjury, mail and wire fraud, and travel in aid of a racketeering enterprise in order to bring Russian managers, pimps and prostitutes to the U.S.
881. In addition, the drive to maximize profits and minimize expenses of the Enterprise results in repeated tax evasion that requires money laundering and exporting revenues out of the U.S. without reporting so as to disguise the ownership and source of the revenues.
882. Also, in order to protect valuable members threatened with exposure, the Enterprise members engage in criminal acts such as tampering with witnesses, unlawful imprisonment, reckless endangerment, coercion, intimidation, official misconduct and menacing.

883. The Enterprise's Scheme of continuing expansion into hard currency markets targets American men looking for Russian wives and companions in order to defraud the men into bringing an Enterprise manager or prostitute to America in circumvention of U.S. immigration laws.
884. Member defendants' predicate acts in expanding and conducting the Enterprise's U.S. operations enable the Enterprise to target thousands of additional consumers for sexual services with the result of dramatically increasing the health risks, such as exposure to AIDS, to those consumers and their partners.
885. Member defendants' predicate acts in expanding and conducting the Enterprise's operations bodes ill for many legitimate entertainment companies by unfairly competing for entertainment dollars that would otherwise flow to the investors and employees of legitimate businesses in the leisure industry.

X. Damages

900. The plaintiff has suffered damages to his business and financial interests by the use of funds from racketeering activities to finance the Enterprise's Scheme.
901. Funds from racketeering activities have been used to build a litigation war chest to fund fraudulent proceedings against the plaintiff and fraudulently defend against legitimate proceedings in order to whipsaw the plaintiff into submission and deplete his financial resources.
902. Funds from racketeering activities have been used to bribe public employees into subverting the proper administration of the law in America and Russia so as to thwart the plaintiff's efforts to rectify the Enterprise's harm done to his business reputation and goodwill.
903. Funds from racketeering activities have been used to purchase the intimidation of witnesses in order to thwart the plaintiff's efforts to rectify the Enterprise's harm done to his business reputation and goodwill.
904. The plaintiff has suffered damages to his business and financial interests from racketeering activities used to acquire or preserve influence over some of the Enterprise's activities.
905. The predicate acts committed in furtherance of the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff have caused damages to his business and financial assets as well as imperiled his safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear.
906. The plaintiff's business and financial assets have been damaged from overt criminal and tortious acts done in furtherance of conspiracies.
907. The plaintiff's business and financial damages from the Enterprise's Scheme are in excess of one million dollars ($1,000,000) and include:
- a. Loss of profits from the plaintiff's law and consulting business over a two-year period of $200,000 from cessation of normal work as a result of the initial success of the Enterprise's Scheme in defrauding the plaintiff into arranging for Member Alina Shipilina to enter the U.S. and, subsequently, the plaintiff's ongoing investigation of the Enterprise's Scheme in order to prevent and rectify injury to the plaintiff;
  - b. Business interruption expenses of $50,000, which includes the additional costs of bringing the plaintiff's business back up to the operating level it had achieved before the Enterprise directed its Scheme against the plaintiff;
  - c. Loss of business opportunities of $150,000;
  - d. Expenses in excess of $100,000 for the plaintiff's investigation and efforts to avoid and rectify injury from the Enterprise's Scheme, including without limitation the investigation of the tampering with and intimidation of witnesses and subornation of perjury and bribery.

- e. Damages in the amount of $500,000 to the plaintiff's reputation and good will as a result of the false allegations made against the plaintiff in carrying out the Enterprise's Scheme.
  - f. Such other damages to be proved at trial.
908. The plaintiff seeks treble the damages proved, plus costs and attorney fees, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 1964(c).
909. The plaintiff seeks attorney fees and costs as provided for in the New York Debtor and Creditor Law 276(a)
910. The plaintiff seeks joint and several liability among the defendants.
911. The plaintiff seeks relief pursuant to 18 U.S.C. 1964(a) in the form of orders prohibiting the defendants from hiding assets and prohibiting the defendants from continuing to violate R.I.C.O.
912. Pending trial, the plaintiff seeks an order that defendants restrain from destroying evidence in their possession or control.
913. Pending trial, the plaintiff seeks an order prohibiting the defendants from carrying out their threats or engaging in further intimidation, menacing, coercion or other illegal conduct against the plaintiff.
914. Plaintiff seeks such other relief as is just and proper.

XI. Demand for Jury Trial

915. Plaintiff demands a trial by jury.

To the Clerk of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York:

The plaintiff, Roy Den Hollander, requests from the Clerk certificates of default of defendants Anastasia A. Vasilyeva, Nicolay N. Vasilyev, listed in the complaint (Exhibit H) as Dima-Husband Anastasia Vasilyeva, (collectively "Vasilyevas") and Cybertech Internet Solutions, Inc., listed in the complaint as Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network ("Cybertech") for failure to plead or otherwise defend in a timely manner as provided by Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, Rule 55(a).

This request is based on the attached declaration of Roy Den Hollander, attorney and pro se plaintiff, which shows the following:

1. On June 14, 2003 defendant Anastasia Vasilyeva and on June 16, 2003 defendant Nicolay N. Vasilyev were served with the summons, complaint, notice of right to magistrate and consent form for magistrate pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(c), as evidenced by the proof of service on file with this court (a copy of which is attached to the Declaration as Exhibit A).
2. Defendants Vasilyevas have not served or filed an answer or motion or otherwise defended although they subsequently sent a letter in Russian, Exhibit B of the Declaration, to the Court and the plaintiff within twenty-days after service on them of the complaint, Exhibit H.
3. Defendant Cybertech was served with the summons, complaint, notice of right to magistrate and consent form for magistrate pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(c) on June 16, 2003, as evidenced by the proof of service on file with this court (a copy of which is attached to the Declaration as Exhibit C).
4. Defendant Cybertech has failed to file or serve an answer within twenty days of service of the complaint or defend in a timely manner.
5. Defendant Cybertech is not an infant, in the military, or an incompetent person.

CV-03-2717(MBM)

Dear Chief Judge Mukasey:

I am writing this letter to oppose Plaintiff's request for a certificate of default against Cybertech Internet Solutions, Inc., in the above-entitled action. (Enclosed please find copies of Plaintiff's letter to the Clerk of this Court, his accompanying application for certificates of default and Declaration in support of said application, and Exhibits C, D and E annexed thereto.) Plaintiff's letter to the Clerk is dated December 24, 2003, and his application to this Court during the holiday season is indicative of the underhanded (though clumsy) manner in which Plaintiff has attempted to gain a judgment over Cybertech without providing that company with a fair opportunity to respond to the allegations against it.

Plaintiff states that Cybertech was served with a summons and complaint for the above-entitled action on June 16, 2003. This is a false assertion, notwithstanding the fact that Plaintiff has shamelessly stated it at least three times. (See paragraph 3 of Plaintiff's Application for Certificates of Default, paragraph 7 of his Declaration and the Affidavit of Service annexed thereto as Exhibit C.) The Affidavit asserts that Cybertech was served at 50 West 33rd Street, even though Cybertech has no offices or employees located at that address. The Affidavit states that an individual named "Tara Kolin" was authorized to accept service on behalf of Cybertech, though no such person works for Cybertech or is even known to the principal officer of said corporation. At the time Plaintiff allegedly served the Court's July 23, 2003 Order (Plaintiff's Exhibit D) upon Cybertech (once again, at the aforementioned incorrect address - please see Plaintiff's Exhibit E), Cybertech did not even have actual notice of Plaintiff's Complaint and would not have such knowledge for several months thereafter. In fact, Plaintiff has never served his Complaint in the above-entitled action upon Cybertech. Since Plaintiff failed to comply with his obligations concerning said service, the deadline specified by the Court in paragraph 1 of its July 23rd Order for "Defendants who have been served" is inapplicable to Cybertech, and any later deadline subsequently set by the Court for serving responsive papers would be similarly inapplicable to Cybertech.

Furthermore, Plaintiff attempts to gloss over the fact that Cybertech was not properly named in the Complaint, as though this were somehow insignificant. Before Mr. Hollander brought his ill-conceived pro se action against Cybertech and other parties, he obviously had to know that Cybertech was not incorporated under the name "Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network." Plaintiff's failure to exercise due diligence with respect to the matter of properly designating Cybertech in his Complaint is unprofessional and inexcusable. I believe that Mr. Hollander designated Cybertech the way that he did because he wanted to create an unfair impression that there is a linkage, at least conceptually, between Cybertech and some of the other Defendants. In any event, Plaintiff's attempt to obtain a certificate of default against a Defendant which he has not even named correctly in his Complaint should be rejected.

Plaintiff's Complaint was unknown to Cybertech until a motion to dismiss said Complaint that was made by a number of the co-Defendants brought the matter to Cybertech's attention several months after it was allegedly served. I have already agreed to respond to the Complaint on behalf of Cybertech, and the reason why I have yet to submit a direct response to the Court is that I am not currently admitted to practice in the Southern District of New York. Since I am admitted to practice in the Eastern District of New York, I have been assured that there should be no major obstacles to my admission in the Southern District and I would expect to be admitted herein before the end of this month.

When I am able to formally respond to the Complaint against Cybertech following my admission, I expect that I will join in the motion made by several of the co-Defendants to dismiss the Complaint in the above-entitled action. Until that time, for all of the foregoing reasons, I respectfully request that this Court issue an order instructing the Clerk of the Court to reject Plaintiff's application for a certificate of default against Cybertech Internet Solutions, Inc., with respect to the above-entitled action. In the event that the Clerk of the Court has already granted Plaintiff's aforementioned application by the time this letter is received, I respectfully request that this Court issue an order vacating any such certificate of default.

I thank the Court for its attention and consideration regarding this matter.

Very truly yours,

David L. Feinberg

Hon. Michael B. Mukasey, Chief Judge
United States District Court for the Southern District of New York

Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (MBM)

Dear Chief Judge Mukasey:

This is in response to defendant Cybertech Internet Solution's letter to the Court dated January 8, 2004 concerning the plaintiff's application to the clerk for a certificate of default against Cybertech.

As this Court knows, an "application for a certificate of default" is not a motion for a default judgment; it is the first necessary step before filing a motion for default judgment, (S.D.N.Y., L.R. 55.2(b)). Counsel for Cybertech, David L. Feinberg, apparently is unaware of this when he accuses me of a "clumsy" attempt to obtain a default judgment during the holiday season. (Feinberg letter ¶ 1) In addition, there is no requirement that an application for a certificate of default be served on the defaulting party. Dow Chem. Pac. Ltd. v. Rascator Maritime, S.A., 782 F.2d 329, 336 (2d Cir. 1986). Apparently Mr. Feinberg does not know this either. But in the spirit of fairness and openness, the application for a certificate of default was nonetheless served on Mr. Feinberg.

In any event, since service of the application for a certificate of default on Cybertech has had the effect of prodding Mr. Feinberg to finally appear on behalf of his client, I request the Court either set a schedule for Mr. Feinberg to file an answer or make a motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12. Mr. Feinberg's reason for delaying his response to the complaint because he was not admitted to the Southern District appears disingenuous, since he could have applied to the Court to appear pro hac vice—it's only $25.

The remaining issues raised in Mr. Feinberg's letter would be more appropriately dealt with in a Rule 12 motion in which Mr. Feinberg provides affidavits and legal citations on which he is apparently relying. The issues include:

1. Whether Cybertech can overcome the presumption of service at its Manhattan address (also the location of the lap-dancing Paradise Club) as evidenced by the affidavit of service, Exhibit A;
2. Whether Cybertech had notice of the claims against it as a result of the April 20, 2003 first class mailing of the request for waiver of summons and the complaint to the address listed by the New York Secretary of State for Cybertech in Port Washington, See Exhibit B, affidavit and certificate of mailing; (When there was no response from Cybertech as to the request for waiver of process, papers were served on its Manhattan office in an effort to reduce the cost of service that will be billed to Cybertech under Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d));
3. Whether even a pro se plaintiff has the right to amend a complaint to include the registered name of an inactive New York State corporation: Cybertech Internet Solutions—a name Mr. Feinberg refused to provide the plaintiff, and which corporation created and operates, among other web sites, the Internet "Global Porn" and "Strip Club Escorts." See Exhibit C; and
4. Whether Mr. Feinberg's request to join the current motion to dismiss by certain defendants after the plaintiff has filed his response and perhaps even after the Court's decision will be allowed even though Mr. Feinberg was informed of that motion on December 2, 2003?

Rather than circumventing the established due process procedures for resolving such issues, which is apparently Mr. Feinberg's strategy, I once again request the Court to set a schedule for Cybertech to answer or file a Rule 12 motion so that the plaintiff has a meaningful opportunity to respond to Mr. Feinberg's objections concerning the complaint.

Thank you for your time.

Very truly yours,

Roy Den Hollander

Defendants.
-----X

: 03 Civ. 2717 (MBM)

: ORDER

MICHAEL B. MUKASEY, U.S.D.J.

Plaintiff has applied for entry of a default against the Vasilyeva defendants and defendant Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network. All defendants who have appeared have filed and joined in motions to dismiss the entire complaint for, among other reasons, failure to state an actionable claim. That motion is not yet sub judice. Accordingly, plaintiff's application for entry of a default against the Vasilyeva defendants and Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network is denied without prejudice to renewal, if appropriate, after the Court decides defendants' outstanding dismissal motions. Plaintiff is not to seek entries of default against any other defendant pending further order of the Court.

SO ORDERED:

Dated: New York, New York
January 12, 2004

Michael B. Mukasey,
U.S. District Judge

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

✓ Defendants, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy (collectively referred herein as "Mundy") and Peter Petrovich ("Petrovich"), by their attorneys, McManus, Collura & Richter, P.C., respectfully submit this Memorandum of Law together with the Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin, Esq. dated September 19, 2003 and the exhibits annexed thereto in support of the instant motion for an Order: (1) dismissing the first, second, third and fourth causes of action contained in plaintiff's complaint with prejudice as against Mundy and Petrovich alleging violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §1962(a)-(d), for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) and for failure to plead predicate acts with sufficient particularity pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); (2) dismissing the fifth, sixth and seventh causes of action contained in plaintiff's complaint with prejudice as against Mundy and Petrovich alleging pendant state law claims for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6); (3) dismissing plaintiff's complaint and each cause of action therein with prejudice as against Mundy and Petrovich on the grounds that the complaint does not contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2); (4) for an injunction prohibiting plaintiff from filing any further related claims against Mundy and Petrovich; and (5) for such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

✓ The plaintiff<sup>1</sup> has commenced the instant action against sixty-three separate domestic and foreign defendants, located in the United States, Russia, Cyprus and Mexico, and has asserted nine hundred and fifteen separate numbered allegations against them, in a ninety-one page complaint, spanning the globe. (Ex. A)<sup>2</sup>. At best, the plaintiff's complaint is a frivolous, meandering, disorganized, prolix narrative seeking to humiliate his former wife, Alina A. Shipilina ("Ms. Shipilina"), and seemingly anyone who has ever come in contact with her or assisted her in preventing him from harassing her. The plaintiff's complaint is nothing more than a delusional, imaginary tale of fantasy, that reads more like a Tom Clancy novel than a legal pleading.

✓ To the extent the plaintiff's complaint can be grasped to some degree, it appears that the complaint attempts to allege an enterprise of purported illegal activity among the named defendants, many of whom he is unable to name<sup>3</sup>, which violates the RICO statute. (Ex. A, ¶¶886-893<sup>4</sup>). However, the plaintiff's RICO claims make clear that the identifiable defendants seem to have absolutely no connection to each other whatsoever, let alone form the basis of a RICO conspiracy, except for the fact that they have all purportedly come into contact in some way with plaintiff's former wife, Ms. Shipilina. As will be demonstrated, infra, the plaintiff's complaint utterly fails to set forth or establish a legally cognizable claim for RICO violations, and, as such, these claims must be dismissed.

✓ In addition, the plaintiff alleges pendent state law claims against Mundy and Petrovich for intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of process, malicious prosecution and prima facie tort. (Ex. A, ¶¶894-899). However, the plaintiff's state law claims fail to state causes of action and are time barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Facts Underlying Plaintiff's Complaint

✓ Mundy is a small "general practice" law firm, with an emphasis on immigration law<sup>5</sup>. Mundy represented the plaintiff's former wife, Ms. Shipilina, as a defendant in the divorce/annulment proceedings commenced by the plaintiff on or about February 12, 2001 as well as the relentless course of harassment that followed by the plaintiff once the divorce proceedings were resolved. Mundy also continues to represent Ms. Shipilina in relation to immigration matters pending before the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

✓ In his divorce complaint, the plaintiff leveled allegations of prostitution, drug use and fraud against Ms. Shipilina and sought to annul their marriage on the basis of fraud. (Ex. B). The plaintiff claimed that Ms. Shipilina threatened to injure him if he did not "lie to the Immigration and Naturalization Service [(INS)] to get her a green card." (Ex. B). Interestingly, the divorce complaint did not allege that Mundy or Petrovich asked him to lie or threatened him if he did not lie, as he now conveniently claims in this action. (Ex. B).

✓ In contradiction to the plaintiff's divorce complaint, Ms. Shipilina's answer contained a counterclaim alleging that, among other things, plaintiff threatened to have her deported "if she did not do everything he told her to," including the payment of a large sum of money. (Ex. C). The counterclaim also recognized that the plaintiff created a public website in Ms. Shipilina's name<sup>6</sup> where, pending the divorce proceedings, he posted a copy of her personal diary and nude photographs without her knowledge or consent. (Ex. C).

*Mundy

Queens did find no violation of law

✓ In response to the creation of this inappropriate and offensive public website, Ms. Shipilina filed a report with the New York City Police Department. Upon information and belief, the criminal matters were being handled by Detective Hennings, who has been named as a defendant in this action. Tellingly, the police report demonstrates that the plaintiff's attempt to extort money from Ms. Shipilina predates his divorce complaint by six months. (Ex. D).

✓ The divorce action settled pursuant to Stipulation of Settlement dated November 2, 2001. (Ex. E). The Stipulation of Settlement along with the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Divorce Judgment were all drafted by plaintiff's retained attorney. (Ex. E). Plaintiff guess he does not know this voluntarily consented to the divorce settlement. (Ex. E). Nonetheless, in May of 2002, the plaintiff, wrong pro se, moved to vacate and set aside the Stipulation, which was denied by Hon. Justice Joan B. Lobis on August 1, 2002. (Ex. F)<sup>7</sup>.

Que. Trialer reduces in d system he should be condemned

✓ The plaintiff's abuse of the court system and use of litigation as a means to harass and intimidate are evident upon an even cursory review of the plaintiff's motion papers. (Ex. F). Without regard for ethics or even common decency, among the twenty-two exhibits attached to plaintiff's frivolous motion, which was denied, was a CD Rom labeled "Masturbation Video Promo Featuring Alina Shipilina." (Ex. G).

✓ Even a perfunctory reading of the plaintiff's own legal papers support the conclusion that the plaintiff improperly uses the legal system as a vehicle to harass and incense. Plaintiff's voluminous discovery demands, which were almost entirely stricken by the Court, are objectively offensive and repugnant. (Ex. I).

Is should legally be gone not just even if that is what she's calling pattern of conduct

<sup>7</sup> Notably, the plaintiff's complaint acknowledges that this Family Court proceeding in March, 2002 was not the first time that the plaintiff applied for an order of protection. In fact, the plaintiff's complaint details his pattern of filing complaints in connection with Ms. Shipilina, which all have been dismissed and found to be unsupported. Specifically, the plaintiff applied for a temporary order of protection in a Queens County Court in February of 2001 and the Judge "laughed at the plaintiff and denied his request." (Ex. A, ¶¶854, ¶855). The plaintiff filed another report of a threat against him with his local police precinct and the "two police officers...laughed at the plaintiff." (Ex. A, ¶¶856, ¶857). After filing another complaint with the police station, the plaintiff's complaint was again dismissed. (Ex. A, ¶¶858-861). The plaintiff then sought the assistance of the FBI in connection with purported threats. (Ex. A, ¶¶862-867). Subsequently, the plaintiff applied for another protection order in a New York County Court, which was denied (Ex. A, ¶¶868-870).

Templehoff

✓ The plaintiff also harassed those associated with Ms. Shipilina by filing a fabricated and baseless disciplinary complaint with the Departmental Disciplinary Committee, First Judicial Department, against Nicholas J. Mundy in December of 2001, and which he improperly made public by annexing it as an exhibit to his motion to set aside the divorce stipulation. (Ex. J). make other cases negative sealed

The ~~incredible and far-fetched~~ cite complaint as to allegations allegations contained in the plaintiff's disciplinary complaint are surpassed only by the outlandish allegations that he has now conjured up in the context of this action. (Ex. J). The disciplinary complaint was dismissed by the Departmental Disciplinary Committee on October 16, 2002. (Ex. K)<sup>10</sup>. Disciplinary committee sent back for review

✓ On March 25, 2003, the plaintiff commenced an action in the Supreme Court of the State of New York, County of New York, bearing Index No. 03/105646, against nine of the defendants named in the instant action, including Mundy and Petrovich alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress. (Ex. L). To meet SL

The summons with notice was never served upon either Mundy or Petrovich<sup>11</sup>. A complaint has also never been served in the State Court action. False, Mundy even contacted with JD's SL

B. Plaintiff's Allegations

✓ The plaintiff commenced the instant Federal action by serving his complaint, dated April 18, 2003, upon Mundy on or about June 10, 2003. (Ex. A). Significantly, Petrovich has never been served with a copy of the plaintiff's complaint. The plaintiff's allegations, against the back-drop delineated above, indisputably reveal that this action is yet another frivolous only applicants submitted within SD

<sup>10</sup> Faced with the plaintiff's assault of frivolous litigation, Nicholas J. Mundy reluctantly filed a disciplinary complaint against plaintiff on April 23, 2003. Given the confidential nature of such proceedings, a copy of the complaint has not been attached to the instant motion and will only be provided, in camera, to the Court upon the Court's request and upon approval from the Grievance Committee. Interestingly, the instant action followed two months after the filing of the grievance. Action dismissed. Can't make public act on the part of the plaintiff seeking reprisal against Ms. Shipilina and anyone who has ever come in contact with her, and clearly does not state a legally cognizable claim against Mundy and Petrovich. The instant action is the plaintiff's latest and most serious step in his quest to harass, intimidate and persecute Mundy and Petrovich for their role in defending Ms. Shipilina in her divorce/annulment proceedings.

I. The Purported Enterprise

✓ The plaintiff's complaint alleges the existence of a criminal RICO enterprise characterized as the "Russian International Crime Organization [which] generates profits worldwide from numerous criminal activities that include without limitation drug trafficking, money laundering, tax evasion, immigration fraud, prostitution, pornography, white slavery, bribery, mail and wire fraud, murder, extortion, coercion and terror." (Ex. A, ¶1).

✓ The enterprise allegedly "rose out of the ashes of the Soviet Union when the collapse of communism unleashed that empire's restraints on organized crime, corrupt government officials, travel, trade, communication and emigration." (Ex. A, ¶10). The enterprise purportedly consists of "domestic and foreign corporations, partnerships, individuals, government officials, law firms, [American, Russian and Chechen] organized crime gangs... and an Islamic terrorist and crime clan." (Ex. A, ¶ 11). Allegedly, "the relationships among the Enterprise's members are formal, including agreements and chain of command authority, and informal in which the common objectives of the Enterprise... controls decision-making." (Ex. A, ¶14). The current focus of the enterprise is alleged "to infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets, especially in the United States, for the personal enrichment of the members of the Enterprise..." (Ex. A, ¶12).

✓ Plaintiff somehow concludes that the purported [e]nterprise has damaged his law and consulting business as well as drugged, defrauded, coerced and threatened the plaintiff with severe bodily harm." (Ex. A, ¶3)<sup>12</sup>.

✓ A reading of the plaintiff's complaint makes evident that the entire foundation and configuration of the alleged enterprise centers around Ms. Shipilina and the people she purportedly encountered and places to which she purportedly traveled. The complaint first tracks Ms. Shipilina's encounter with the plaintiff in Russia, then details her subsequent purported trips, jobs and dealings in Mexico, the United States, Russia and Cyprus. (Ex. A). Based upon the tracking of Ms. Shipilina's purported dealings and travels, the plaintiff imagines an enterprise allegedly operating throughout the world and he names every entity and person Ms. Shipilina ever supposedly came in contact within those countries as members of the enterprise.

✓ Although the plaintiff alleges the existence of an enterprise, there is absolutely no connection offered by plaintiff among any of the defendants comprising this purported enterprise, or at least between Mundy, Petrovich and the other defendants, other than that they have had some form of contact with Ms. Shipilina. Notably, Mundy's and Petrovich's only association with any of the defendants named in this action arise out of Mundy's representation of Ms. Shipilina in the divorce/annulment proceedings commenced by the plaintiff, and present immigration matters involving Ms. Shipilina. In fact, Mundy only has a connection with three of the sixty-three named defendants, namely Ms. Shipilina, Petrovich and Detective Hennings. Petrovich only has a connection with Ms. Shipilina and Mundy.

<sup>12</sup> Although the plaintiff has failed to state how the alleged enterprise affected his "legal and consulting business," plaintiff seeks damages in excess of one million dollars for "business and financial damage," including loss of business, loss of profits, damage to reputation, business interruption, reimbursement for expenses incurred in "plaintiff's investigation," and treble damages. (Ex. A, ¶907, ¶908).

shall allegations not be added

✓ In identifying the members of the enterprise, Mundy and Petrovich are alleged to be three of nineteen domestic members, in addition to the countless foreign members. In particular, Mundy is alleged, in conclusory fashion, to (1) act as consiliari and manager of United States immigration issues in New York for the enterprise; (2) operate a green card and visa mill that fraudulently obtains United States visas, residency status and naturalization for aliens; (3) advise its clients to commit perjury before the [INS], Internal Revenue Service [IRS], Customs Service and the New York State Courts; (4) use coercion and intimidation against parties, witnesses and informants in proceedings; (5) participate in money laundering and the use of international facilities to aid a racketeering enterprise; and (6) mastermind and direct illegal activities to acquire United States visas, residency status and naturalization for the members of the enterprise. (Ex. A, ¶¶27-32).

✓ Petrovich is alleged to (1) assist Mundy in executing illegal activities necessary to import and keep in members of the enterprise in the United States and (2) act as an attorney in the United States, although not admitted, under the supervision of Mundy. (Ex. A, ¶¶33, ¶34).

A, ¶243, ¶245, ¶273); (4) intimidating witnesses from providing testimony to United States authorities/Courts in connection with the plaintiff's divorce proceedings (Ex. A, ¶¶265-288); (5) intimidating plaintiff to dissuade him from trying to set aside the agreed upon divorce settlement (Ex. A, ¶¶280-284); (6) participating in tampering and bribery to prevent the deportation of Ms. Shipilina (Ex. A, ¶¶254-255, ¶¶286-290, ¶306, ¶307); and (7) using illegal means of bribery, money laundering and intimidation of the plaintiff and witnesses to obstruct the criminal indictment against Iness Shipilina in Russia for defaming plaintiff (Ex. A, ¶¶286-290, ¶¶293-295, ¶298, ¶300, ¶301, ¶306, ¶307).

✓ Through the use of these outlandish, extremely broad and fantastic allegations, the plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich engaged in predicate criminal acts in furtherance of an alleged RICO conspiracy as follows: (1) white slave trade and importing aliens for immoral purposes (Ex. A, ¶485, ¶490, ¶502); (2) fraud and misuse of visas and the procurement of nationality unlawfully (Ex. A, ¶486, ¶491, ¶503); (3) obstruction of justice by witness and informant tampering (Ex. A, ¶487, ¶492, ¶494, ¶497, ¶504, ¶506, ¶509); (4) use of United States mail and interstate and international telephone systems to further mail and wire frauds (Ex. A., ¶493, ¶¶495-498, ¶505, ¶¶507-510); (5) bribery (Ex. A., ¶495, ¶499, ¶507, ¶511); and (6) money laundering (Ex. A, ¶496, ¶498, ¶508, ¶510).

proceedings and the criminal defamation case in Russia (Ex. A, ¶¶704, ¶¶711-714, ¶716, ¶¶728-730, ¶732); (4) aiding and abetting bribery (Ex. A, ¶717, ¶719, ¶733, ¶735); (5) aiding and abetting money laundering (Ex. A, ¶718, ¶734); and (6) aiding and abetting the harassment of plaintiff. (Ex. A, ¶720, ¶736).

✓Accordingly, the plaintiff has alleged seven causes of action against Mundy and Petrovich. The first, second, third and fourth causes of action allege violations of sections 18 U.S.C. 1962(a), (b), (c) and (d) all respectively. (Ex. A, ¶¶886-893). The fifth cause of action alleges intentional infliction of emotional distress (Ex. A, ¶894, ¶895). The sixth cause of action alleges abuse of process (Ex. A, ¶898, ¶899) and the seventh cause of action alleges malicious prosecution (Ex. A, ¶¶896-899). Plaintiff's sixth and seventh causes of action alternatively allege prima facie tort. (Ex. A, ¶¶896-899).

C. Plaintiff's Further Requests for Orders of Protection

✓Subsequent to the service of his complaint and numerous requests for protection orders prior to serving his complaint, the plaintiff again wrote to this Court on June 19, 2003 seeking yet another order of protection. (Ex. M). The plaintiff's correspondence confirms that he has been involved in a series of investigations and complaints to state and federal authorities in connection with Ms. Shipilina, which apparently have been dismissed or ignored. (Ex. M).

✓ On June 26, 2003, counsel for Mundy and Petrovich responded to the plaintiff's correspondence. (Ex. N). On July 7, 2003, the plaintiff forwarded another letter to this Court further requesting an order of protection and acknowledging that the New York City Police Department has now closed his case. (Ex. O).

POINT I

PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO SATISFY THE STANDARD OF REVIEW ON A MOTION TO DISMISS PURSUANT TO FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6) AS PLAINTIFF CAN PROVE NO SET OF FACTS WHICH WOULD ENTITLE HIM TO RELIEF

✓ This Court is empowered to dismiss plaintiff's complaint for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) where it appears beyond doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his complaint which would entitle him to relief against Mundy and Petrovich. King v. Simpson, 189 F.3d 284, 287 (2d Cir. 1999); Harris v. City of New York, 186 F.3d 243, 247 (2d Cir. 1999); Bernheim v. Litt, 79 F.3d 318, 321 (2d Cir. 1996). In reviewing a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), this Court is required to deem all factual allegations in the complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Koppel v. 4987 Corp., 167 F.3d 125, 127 (2d Cir. 1999); Jaghory v. New York State Dep't of Educ., 131 F.3d 326, 329 (2d Cir. 1997). However, the Court must only accept as true well pleaded factual allegations contained in the complaint, not bald conclusory statements. Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp.2d 392, 396-97 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). "A complaint which consists of conclusory allegations unsupported by factual assertions fails even the liberal standard of Rule 12(b)(6)." Lakonia Mgmt. Ltd. v. Meriwether, 106 F. Supp.2d 540, 543 (S.D.N.Y. 2000); De Jesus v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 87 F.3d 65, 70 (2d Cir. 1996). In addition, "legal conclusions, deductions, or opinions couched as factual allegations [in the complaint] are not given a presumption of truthfulness." L'Europeenne de Banque v. La Republica de Venezuela, 700 F. Supp 114, 122 (S.D.N.Y. 1988).

✓ Review of a motion to dismiss pursuant Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) must be limited to the complaint and documents attached or incorporated by reference thereto. International Broth. of Teamsters v. Carey, 163 F. Supp.2d 271, 279 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Kramer v. Time Warner Inc.

937 F.2d 767, 773 (2d Cir. 1991). In this context, the Second Circuit has held that a complaint is deemed to "include...documents that the plaintiff either possessed or knew about and upon which they relied in bringing the suit." Rothman v. Gregor, 220 F.3d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 2000).

✓ The defendants assert that the plaintiff had possession and full knowledge of each and every exhibit attached to the instant motion, that the exhibits go to the heart of the complaint and the veracity of the statements made by the plaintiff therein, and it is therefore appropriate for this Court to consider the same in deciding the instant motion. In light of the standards set forth in reviewing this motion to dismiss and the contents of this motion with annexed exhibits, it is respectfully submitted that the plaintiff has failed to make out a claim against Mundy and Petrovich as a matter of law.

POINT II

PLAINTIFF'S FIRST, SECOND, THIRD AND FOURTH CAUSES OF ACTION FOR RICO VIOLATIONS SHOULD BE DISMISSED AS A MATTER OF LAW

A. The Threshold Requirements to Sustain RICO Claims

✓ In considering RICO claims, Courts must attempt to achieve results "consistent with Congress's goal of protecting legitimate businesses from infiltration by organized crime." Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F.Supp.2d 340, 346 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (citing United States v. Porcelli, 865 F.2d 1352, 1362 (2d Cir. 1989)). However, "because the 'mere assertion of a RICO claim...has an almost inevitable stigmatizing effect on those named as defendants ... courts should strive to flush out frivolous RICO allegations at an early stage of the litigation'." Id. (quoting Figueroa Ruiz v. Alegria, 896 F.2d 645, 650 (1st Cir. 1990)).

18 U.S.C. §1962(a) specifically provides, in pertinent part, that:

It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt in which such person has participated as a principal within the meaning of Section 2, title 18, United States Code, to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such income, or the proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce...

18 U.S.C. §1962(b) specifically provides that:

It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.

18 U.S.C. §1962(c) specifically provides that:

It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprises's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

18 U.S.C. §1962(d) specifically provides that:

It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsection (a), (b) or (c) of this section.

✓ To prevail on a claim for damages under RICO, New York Federal Courts have consistently employed the standard set forth by the United States Supreme Court and specified that the plaintiff must first allege that the defendants violated the substantive RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. §1962, commonly known as "criminal RICO." In so doing, plaintiff must allege the existence of seven constituent elements: (1) that the defendants (2) through the commission of two or more acts (3) constituting a "pattern" (4) of "racketeering activity" (5) directly or indirectly invests in, or maintains an interest in, or participates in (6) an "enterprise" (7) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce. Burrell v. State Farm and Cas. Co., 226 F. Supp.2d 427, 443 (S.D.N.Y. 2002). See also Citadel Mgmt., Inc. v. Telesis Trust

✓Further, "the plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation" of section 1962. Sedima S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3285 (1985).

✓The plaintiff has clearly failed to sufficiently allege the elements of his RICO claims, namely (1) the existence of two or more predicate acts against Mundy and Petrovich, (2) a pattern, (3) that Mundy and Petrovich invests, maintains or participates in an enterprise, (4) or that an enterprise even exists. The plaintiff has further failed to demonstrate that he has standing to maintain this action. Lastly, the plaintiff's claim of conspiracy to commit RICO and aiding and abetting RICO violations similarly fail.

B. Plaintiff's Complaint Fails To Adequately Allege Predicate Acts and Is Dismissible Pursuant Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)

i. Plaintiff's RICO Claims Must Be Plead With Particularity under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)

✓When fraud is pleaded, the general rules for dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) are applied in light of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)'s particularity requirements. IUE AFL-CIO Pension Fund v. Hermann, 9 F.3d 1049, 1052, 1053 (2d Cir. 1993) (citing Ross v. Bolton, 904 F.2d 819, 823 (2d Cir. 1990)). Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) provides that "in all averments of fraud..., the circumstances constituting fraud...shall be stated with particularity...". Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) is designed to further three goals: (i) provide defendants with fair notice of claims to enable the preparation of a defense; (ii) protect defendants from harm to their reputation or good will by unfounded allegations of fraud; and (iii) reduce the number of strike suits. DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus., Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir. 1987).

✓ In light of these purposes, allegations of fraud that are pled as predicate acts in a RICO claim must satisfy Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). See Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F. 3d 1170, 1176 (2d Cir. 1993); Economic Opportunity Comm'n of Nassau County v. County of Nassau, Inc., 47 F. Supp.2d 353, 361 (E.D.N.Y. 1999). In fact, all of the concerns that dictate that fraud be pled with particularity exist with even greater urgency in civil RICO actions." Zaro Licensing, Inc. v. Cinmar, Inc., 779 F. Supp. 276, 281 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (quoting Plount v. America Home Assurance Co., 668 F. Supp. 204, 206 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). The Court should insist upon strict compliance with technical pleading requirements for a civil RICO claim because of the stigmatizing effect of those named as defendants. See Katzman v. Victoria's Secret Catalogue, 167 F.R.D. 649, 655 (S.D.N.Y. 1996), aff'd, 113 F.3d 1229 (2d Cir. 1997).

Thus, the Second Circuit has made clear that "[i]n the RICO context, Rule 9(b) calls for the complaint to specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiffs contend the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements." Moore v. PaineWebber, Inc., 189 F.3d 165, 173 (2d Cir. 1999) (citations omitted) (quoting McLaughlin v. Anderson, 962 F.2d 187, 191 (1992); Economic Opportunity Comm'n of Nassau County v. County of Nassau, Inc. 47 F. Supp.2d at 361-362. See also Spoto v. Herkimer County Trust, 2000 WL 533293 *6 (N.D.N.Y. April 27, 2000) (dismissing RICO mail fraud claim because plaintiff failed to delineate "the who, what, why, where and when" of the alleged misrepresentation); Official Publications, Inc. v. Kable News Co. Inc., 692 F. Supp. 239, 245 (S.D.N.Y. 1988), rev'd on other grounds, 884 F.2d 664 (2d Cir. 1989) (complaint alleging mail and wire fraud must set forth the contents of the items mailed, specify how each of these items were false and misleading, specify who made the allegedly fraudulent statements and the time and place such statements were made) Allegations that do not specify the time, place, speaker or content of the allegedly fraudulent statements do not satisfy the particularity requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Denny v. Barber, 576 F.2d 465, 469, (2d Cir. 1978). Where multiple defendants are involved, the complaint is required to describe specifically each defendant's alleged participation in the fraud. DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus. Inc., 822 F.2d at 1247.

ii. Plaintiff Has Failed to Demonstrate the Particularity That Is Required for Pleading RICO under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)

✓ In order to sustain a RICO claim, plaintiff must allege that each defendant committed at least two or more predicate acts, especially where there are multiple RICO defendants. Lakonia Mgmt., Ltd. v. Meriwether, 106 F. Supp.2d at 550. As detailed above, in the RICO context, Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) dictates that the predicate acts alleged in the complaint must be pled with particularity. The plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich violated the RICO statute by committing predicate criminal acts such as: (1) white slave trade and importing aliens for immoral purposes; (2) fraud and misuse of visas and procurement of nationality unlawfully; (3) obstruction of justice by witness and informant tampering; (4) mail and wire fraud; 5) bribery; and (6) money laundering. (Ex. A ¶¶485-513)<sup>14</sup>. However, as discussed more thoroughly below, plaintiff's claims of predicate acts committed by Mundy and Petrovich are clearly lacking in the required factual specificity under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) to support his RICO claims. Accordingly, it is respectfully submitted that the first, second, third and fourth causes of action of the plaintiff's complaint be dismissed.

aa. Plaintiff Has Failed to Sufficiently Plead White Slave Trade, Fraud and Misuse of Visas as Predicate Acts

✓ In respect to the plaintiff's allegations that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate criminal acts of white slave trade and importing aliens for immoral purposes as well as fraud and misuse of visas and procurement of nationality unlawfully, the plaintiff merely alleges in conclusory fashion that they perform such activities by running an alien registration and visa mill operation. This deduction certainly does not satisfy the particularity requirement pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Ex. A, ¶485, ¶486, ¶490, ¶491, ¶502, ¶503).

✓ Even scrutinizing the remaining portions of the plaintiff's complaint as to the alleged illegal conduct of Mundy and Petrovich, which could conceivably form a basis for an allegation that Mundy and Petrovich participated in white slave trade, importing of aliens and/or fraud as well as misuse of visas and procurement of nationality unlawfully, it is clear that there is absolutely no support, or particularity, for the plaintiff's conclusions that Mundy and Petrovich participated in such illegal activity. (Ex. A, ¶207, ¶¶222-225, ¶229, ¶230, ¶232, ¶234, ¶236, ¶240, ¶241, ¶254, ¶255).

✓ With the exception of his ex-wife, Ms. Shipilina, the plaintiff fails to name a single person for whom or with whom these purported illegal activities were performed. The plaintiff has provided absolutely no specifics whatsoever. No specific dates, times, names or places have been furnished. Plaintiff fails to identify a single document, statement or fact that purports to show such conduct on the part of Mundy and Petrovich. In essence, the plaintiff's complaint does not demonstrate by any stretch of the imagination that Mundy and Petrovich participated in white slave trade, importing of aliens and/or fraud, misuse of visas, or procurement of nationality unlawfully. Rather, the only thing that is clear upon a review of these paragraphs of the plaintiff's complaint is that Mundy and Petrovich assisted Ms. Shipilina with immigration matters and advocated on her behalf in connection with her divorce proceedings<sup>15</sup>. Accordingly, the plaintiff's unsubstantiated and absurd allegations of white slave trade, importing of aliens, misuse of visas and procurement of nationality unlawfully on the part of Mundy and Petrovich cannot provide a basis to support his RICO claims.

bb. Plaintiff Has Failed to Sufficiently Plead Obstruction of Justice as a Predicate Act

✓ The plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich tampered with witnesses and informants in connection with the Russian criminal defamation case, the plaintiff's divorce proceeding and the INS' investigation into the deportation of Ms. Shipilina. (Ex. A, ¶¶243, ¶245, ¶265, ¶273, ¶¶280-284, ¶¶286-290, ¶¶293-295, ¶306, ¶307, ¶315, ¶316, ¶487, ¶492, ¶494, ¶497, ¶504, ¶506, ¶509). The section relied upon by the plaintiff to advance the argument that such conduct constitutes the predicate act of obstruction of justice is 18 U.S.C. 1512, which relates to tampering with a witness, victim or informant. (Ex. A, ¶¶487, ¶492, ¶494, ¶497, ¶504, ¶506, ¶509).

107 (a) Whoever knowingly uses intimidation or physical force, or threatens another person or attempts to do so, or engages in misleading conduct towards another person, with intent to--

(1) influence the testimony of any person in an official proceeding; shall be fined not more than $250,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

✓ Although paragraphs 701-739 of the plaintiff's complaint allege that Mundy and Petrovich committed "other criminal acts," these general conclusory allegations, merely repetitive of the already asserted "predicate acts," do nothing to change the fact that the plaintiff has failed to sufficiently plead the requisite specificity necessary to sustain his assertion that the defendants committed white slave trade, importing of aliens as well as fraud/misuse of visas and procurement of nationality unlawfully in support of his RICO claims.

✓ The plaintiff's allegations that Mundy and Petrovich allegedly obstructed justice cannot withstand scrutiny. Section 1512 requires that the alleged tampering take place within the context of an "official proceeding," which is defined in 18 U.S.C. §1515(a) as follows:

- (A) a proceeding before a judge or court of the United States, a United States Magistrate, a bankruptcy judge or a Federal grand jury;
- (B) a proceeding before Congress;
- (C) a proceeding before a Federal government agency which is authorized by law.

✓ The tampering which purportedly occurred in connection with the foreign, Russian, criminal case did not occur within the definition of an "official proceeding," and, thus does not satisfy the requirements of 18 U.S.C. §1512. The tampering which purportedly occurred in connection the divorce action in New York State Court also does not satisfy the requirements of 18 U.S.C. §1512, because the federal obstruction of justice statute only applies to proceedings in a federal court of the United States. Kashelkar v. Rubin & Rothman, 97 F. Supp.2d 383, 392 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). See also O'Malley v. New York City Transit Auth., 896 F.2d 704, 707 (2d Cir. 1990) (congressional intent was to limit RICO's obstruction of justice to federal court proceedings in the United States); Park South Assocs. v. Fischbein, 626 F. Supp. 1108, 1113 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) (defendants' purported bribe did not violate 18 U.S.C. §1512 because the terms of that statute are defined in 18 U.S.C. §1515 and do not apply to state court proceedings)<sup>16</sup>. Thus, the plaintiff cannot state a claim for obstruction of justice within the meaning of the statute, and, therefore, cannot plead such predicate acts in support of his RICO claims.

<sup>16</sup> The only other allegation of obstruction on the part of Mundy and Petrovich relates to their purported interference with an investigation by the INS and the Krasnodar prosecutor for the possible deportation of Ms. Shiplina. Plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to use an enterprise member to intimidate plaintiff in withdrawing his cooperation with the INS. (Ex. A, ¶¶286-292). However, as detailed below, plaintiff's allegations are conclusory at best and not stated with the requisite specificity. Further, not only are no specifics of tampering offered, but the plaintiff acknowledges that he was not damaged as he admits that he was not obstructed from cooperating. The plaintiff's complaint states that he "continued to cooperate with the INS and Krasnodar prosecutor." (Ex. A, ¶292).

✓ Insofar as this Court finds that the plaintiff properly pled a claim for obstruction of justice within the meaning of 18 U.S.C. §1512, it is clear that the plaintiff's conclusion that Mundy and Petrovich committed the predicate act of obstruction of justice by engaging in witness and informant tampering does not satisfy the particularity requirement under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Ex. A, ¶¶487, ¶492, ¶494, ¶497, ¶504, ¶506 ¶509).

✓ Even analyzing these remaining portions of the plaintiff's complaint directed to Mundy and Petrovich, which could conceivably form a basis for an allegation that Mundy and Petrovich obstructed justice by participating in tampering, it is clear that there is absolutely no foundation, or particularity, for the plaintiff's conclusions that Mundy and Petrovich obstructed justice. (Ex. A, ¶243, ¶245, ¶¶265-268, ¶273, ¶¶280-284, ¶¶287-290, ¶¶293-295, ¶306, ¶307, ¶315, ¶316).

✓ Specifically, although paragraph 243 concludes, upon information and belief, that Mundy and Petrovich intimidated the plaintiff to agree to a divorce settlement in order to avoid a trial that would expose the purported enterprise, plaintiff fails to particularize how he was intimidated or specifically when or where he was intimidated, nor has the plaintiff offered any proof of such intimidation on the part of Mundy and Petrovich. (Ex. A, ¶243). The only thing that is clear upon a reading of this paragraph, in connection with the rest of the complaint, is that the plaintiff is providing excuses for a divorce settlement with which he is now unhappy, and one that his attorneys prepared, that he voluntarily entered into, and which the underlying Court refused vacate. (Ex. E). Further, the plaintiff's allegation of intimidation is based upon nothing more than information and belief.

plaintiff fails to offer any proof of such acts on the part of Mundy, specify where this purported intimidation occurred or how Mundy carried out such purported intimidation. Plaintiff further fails to identify any witnesses to this purported intimidation. Even assuming that Mundy told plaintiff that he possessed such records, plaintiff fails to particularize how this act amounts to obstruction of justice or tampering, especially where the records reflect plaintiff's behavior and were used in negotiating the litigation.

✓ Although paragraphs 265 through 268 conclude, upon information and belief, that Mundy and Petrovich agreed that Inessa Shipilina, with the help of enterprise gangsters, would threaten and intimidate "witnesses" from providing testimony to United States authorities and the divorce Court by falsely accusing them of crimes and threatening physical injury, plaintiff again fails to detail when such witnesses were intimidated, where they were intimidated and exactly which enterprise gangsters carried out such threats. In fact, plaintiff has offered no proof of any such intimidation. Plaintiff also fails to set forth any proof or details as to when, where or how Mundy and Petrovich "agreed" to carry out such acts. The plaintiff cannot even state which witnesses were purportedly threatened. (Ex. A, ¶¶265-268). Additionally, plaintiff's assertions are based only upon information and belief.

✓ Paragraph 280 through 284 alleges, upon information and belief, that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to have an "organized crime member" threaten plaintiff against filing a motion for trial to set aside the divorce settlement, and that the threat was in the form of a telephone message on the plaintiff's cell phone. (Ex. A, ¶¶280-284). However, the plaintiff has proffered no evidence of such a telephone message or the reporting of such a threat, nor has the plaintiff offered any proof that Mundy or Petrovich agreed to engage in this conduct, if it ever occurred. In fact, plaintiff acknowledges that Mundy's and Petrovich's purported agreement to engage in such conduct is based only upon information and belief, which hardly satisfies the particularity requirement of alleging such acts. Furthermore, the plaintiff was not damaged at all by this purported intimidation as he, indeed, did file a motion to set aside the divorce settlement. (Ex. F).

✓ Paragraph 286 through 290 alleges, upon information and belief, that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to use members of the enterprise to intimidate the plaintiff to cease cooperating with the Krasnodar prosecutor and INS. In this regard, plaintiff was allegedly threatened with a message on his cell phone. (Ex. A, ¶¶287-290). The plaintiff, however, has proffered no evidence of such a message, nor has the plaintiff offered any proof that Mundy or Petrovich agreed to engage in this conduct, if in fact it occurred. The plaintiff even acknowledges that Mundy's and Petrovich's purported agreement to engage in such conduct is based only upon information and belief, which hardly satisfies the particularity requirement.

✓ Further, there is no proof that the telephone message referenced in paragraph 289, even assuming that it was left, objectively constitutes tampering and was not merely an attempt to subvert the plaintiff's continued harassment. In fact, the plaintiff's acknowledges that the message stated that the plaintiff's "crossed several boundaries" and merely requested that he "cease and desist your actions against Alinia Shipilina" and "leave her alone." Further, even assuming that this message was left and affording the purported message a liberal analysis, there is no indication that this message constituted a threat or warned the plaintiff against cooperating with certain authorities. Lastly and most significantly, there can be no claim of obstruction in respect to these paragraphs as the plaintiff admits that he continued to cooperate with the INS and Krasnodar prosecutor despite the message. (Ex. A, ¶292).

✓ Paragraphs 293 through 295 conclude, upon information and belief, that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to have members of the enterprise threaten witnesses to recant testimony in the Russian defamation case and that Mundy and Petrovich used the mail and wire systems to accomplish such threats. (Ex. A, ¶¶293-295). However, plaintiff cannot even state who was allegedly threatened, where they were threatened or specifically how they were threatened, nor has the plaintiff offered any proof of such threats or that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to engage in such acts if any even occurred. The conclusion that some unknown witnesses were threatened at some unknown time by one of many potential unknown persons via the mail and wire systems surely is not sufficient. Additionally, plaintiff's assertion is based only upon information and belief.

✓ Paragraphs 306, 307 and 315 allege that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to bribe Detective Hennings to threaten the plaintiff with arrest in order to intimidate him into ceasing cooperation with the INS and prevent him from trying to reopen the Russian defamation case. (Ex. A ¶306, ¶307, ¶315). First, there is no proof of any bribes offered other than plaintiff's conclusion, based only upon information and belief, nor are there any details whatsoever of specifically when, where or how such bribes were purportedly carried out. Further, plaintiff fails to show how a warning of arrest by Detective Hennings, a police officer, in connection with plaintiff's violation of a protective order constitutes obstruction of justice. (Ex. A, ¶¶ 306-310). Moreover, there are no details provided to support the conclusion that Mundy or

Petrovich communicated with Detective Hennings other than general allegations that such communication occurred through the mail and wire systems. (Ex. A, ¶315)

✓ Lastly, paragraph 316 concludes that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to have enterprise members, Madison or Pierre, threaten the plaintiff by telephone. (Ex. A ¶316). This is the only information provided. Once again, there is no mention as to when this purported telephone call was made, where it was made or what was stated. Likewise, there are no details offered, that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to have this telephone call made. The plaintiff has also failed to identify a witness to this telephone call or the purported agreement. As such, there is no proof whatsoever of such a call or agreement, except for the plaintiff's conclusion based solely upon information and belief.

✓ Thus, it is clear that with the exception of Ms. Shipilina and her mother, the plaintiff fails to name a single person for whom these purported illegal activities were performed. The plaintiff has provided absolutely no specifics whatsoever. Only vague dates and conclusory suggestions of tampering have been provided. No specific times, names, places or particulars have been furnished as to who was tampered with or how they were tampered with. In fact, plaintiff cannot identify or particularize a single witness tampered with other than himself. His statements that he has been tampered with are not only self-serving but are against the weight of the evidence and conclusory. Plaintiff fails to identify a single document, statement or fact that purports to show such tampering on the part of Mundy and Petrovich<sup>17</sup>.

<sup>17</sup> Although paragraphs 701-739 of the plaintiff's complaint allege that Mundy and Petrovich committed "other criminal acts" relating to tampering, these general conclusory allegations, merely repetitive of the already asserted "predicate acts," do not alter the fact that the plaintiff has failed to sufficiently plead the requisite specificity necessary to sustain obstruction of justice claims in support of his RICO causes of action.

cc. Plaintiff Has Failed to Sufficiently Plead Mail and Wire Fraud as Predicate Acts

SOAFC 4/14/17 replied to plead fraud

✓ The plaintiff also alleges that Mundy and Petrovich participated in mail and wire fraud in support of his RICO claims. (Ex. A, ¶240, ¶241, ¶294, ¶295, ¶300, ¶301, ¶315, ¶316, ¶493, ¶¶495-498, ¶505, ¶¶507-510). A complaint alleging mail and wire fraud must show "(1) the existence of a scheme to defraud, (2) defendant's knowing or intentional participation in the scheme, and (3) the use of interstate mails or transmission facilities in furtherance of the scheme." S.Q.K.F.C., Inc. v. Bell Atlantic Tricon Leasing Corp., 84 F.3d 629, 633 (2d Cir. 1996); Compania Sud-Americana de Vapores v. IBI Schroder Bank & Trust Co., 785 F.Supp. 411, 424 (S.D.N.Y. 1992).

✓ The term "scheme to defraud" connotes some degree of planning by the defendants, making it essential that evidence show the defendants entertained an intent to defraud. Drexel Burnham Lambert v. Saxony Heights Realty Assoc., 777 F. Supp 228, 238 (S.D.N.Y. 1991). A showing of intentional fraud or reckless indifference to the truth is necessary to establish mail or wire fraud. Id.

✓ The plaintiff's pleading of the acts of mail and wire fraud must be dismissed as the complaint fails to provide any facts to support the allegations that there was a scheme to defraud the plaintiff by interstate mails or wires or that the defendants knowingly participated in a scheme. (Ex. A ¶240, ¶241, ¶294, ¶295, ¶300, ¶301, ¶315, ¶316, ¶493, ¶¶495-498, ¶505, ¶¶507-510). Plaintiff's mere conclusions that Mundy and Petrovich acted with the intent to defraud is not sufficient.

✓ Moreover, the crux of the plaintiff's allegations is that Mundy and Petrovich used only intrastate and international mail and wire systems, not interstate systems. (Ex. A ¶240, ¶241, ¶294, ¶295, ¶300, ¶301, ¶315, ¶316, ¶493, ¶¶495-498, ¶505, ¶¶507-510). To properly plead mail and wire fraud violations, the plaintiff must demonstrate interstate use, which the plaintiff has not established. See DiFiore v. DiLorenzo, 1997 WL 722697 *4 (E.D.N.Y. September 19, 1997) (the wire fraud statute by its terms does not cover purely intrastate telephone calls); Browning Avenue Realty Corp. v. Rosenheim, 774 F.Supp. 129, 137 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (to plead mail and wire fraud, plaintiff must allege use of interstate mails or interstate wires); S.Q.K.F.C., Inc. v. Bell Atlantic Tricon Leasing Corp., 84 F.3d at 633; Connors v. Lexington Insur. Co., 666 F.Supp 434, 450 (E.D.N.Y. 1987). Moreover, where the parties are New York residents, all telephone calls are presumed to be intrastate. DiFiore v. DiLorenzo, 1997 WL 722697 *4. See also McCoy v. Goldberg, 748 F. Supp. 146, 154 (S.D.N.Y. 1990).

✓ Here, paragraphs 240 and 241 involve solely an intrastate letter sent from Mundy to the plaintiff, both New York residents. (Ex. A ¶¶240, ¶241). Paragraphs 294, 295, 300 and 301 involve the purported use of international mail and wire systems, not interstate communication. (Ex. A, ¶¶294, ¶295, ¶300, ¶301).

✓ Although paragraph 315 alleges "interstate or international" telephone calls between Detective Hennings and either Ms. Shipilina, Mundy or Petrovich, there is no proof of any interstate communications. In fact, plaintiff cannot even allege for certain that interstate communication occurred as he states "interstate or international." In addition, plaintiff cannot state who exactly the communication was between and his conclusion of "interstate or international" communications is based only upon information and belief. Nonetheless, it is apparent that Detective Hennings (from the New York Police Department), Ms. Shipilina Mundy and Petrovich all reside in New York. (Ex. A, ¶¶27-34, ¶47, ¶874(o)). It is therefore presumed that such purported communications was intrastate, especially without specific allegations to the contrary. Plaintiff's conclusion that "interstate or international" communication occurred cannot overcome this presumption.

✓ Paragraph 316 alleges that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to have "Madison" or Pierre" make a threatening telephone call to plaintiff. (Ex. A, ¶316). There is no assertion that "Madison or Pierre" reside outside the state of New York. In fact, the plaintiff's complaint suggests that they reside in New York as they are referred to as being "domestic members" of the purported enterprise connected to other New York domestic members and a "member of American Organized Crime Gang 1" situated in New York. (Ex. A, ¶¶18-22, ¶26, ¶45, ¶46). Therefore, insofar as these purported telephone calls were made, and Mundy and Petrovich "agreed" for them to be made, it is presumed they were intrastate. In fact, the plaintiff has not even alleged that these purported telephone calls were interstate. As pleaded, the plaintiff has not shown that Mundy and Petrovich used interstate or international systems.

✓ Lastly, although plaintiff fails to plead interstate use of mail and wire systems as detailed above, plaintiff concludes in paragraphs 493, 495, 497, 505, 507 and 509 that Mundy and Petrovich used "interstate and/or international" systems and facilities. (Ex. A, ¶¶493, ¶495, ¶499, ¶505, ¶507 and ¶509). However, as demonstrated, plaintiff has utterly failed to properly plead the use of interstate systems. Merely mentioning that word "interstate" and concluding that Mundy and Petrovich engaged in interstate mail and wire communications is not sufficient. The remaining paragraphs of the plaintiff's complaint directed at Mundy and Petrovich, suggesting mail and wire fraud on their part, namely paragraphs 496, 498, 508 and 510, merely allege the use of international systems, not interstate communications. (Ex. A, ¶¶496, ¶498, ¶508 and ¶510). Alleged interstate or international systems are not interstate or international.

✓ Given that the plaintiff has failed to demonstrate a scheme to defraud or that Mundy and Petrovich knowingly participated in the scheme, and has further failed to show that they used interstate mail or wire communications in furtherance of the scheme, the plaintiff cannot state a claim for mail or wire fraud. Since the plaintiff has not sufficiently established a claim how can plaintiff state a claim?

for mail and wire fraud against Mundy and Petrovich, he cannot allege such fraud as predicate acts in support of his RICO claims.

✓ In addition, because the plaintiff alleges mail and wire fraud as predicate acts, the complaint must comport with the particularity requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). The complaint, in alleging predicate acts of mail and wire fraud, merely baldly asserts that they performed such fraud, which is clearly insufficient. (Ex. A., ¶¶493, ¶¶505).

✓ Even granting the rest of the plaintiff's complaint a liberal reading and applying the conclusion that Mundy and Petrovich engaged in mail and wire frauds to each of the factual incidents in the complaint where mail or wire communication is alleged to have taken place, it is clear that the plaintiff's allegations do not meet the heightened pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) for alleging mail or wire fraud. (Ex. A ¶¶240, ¶¶241, ¶¶294, ¶¶295, ¶¶300, ¶¶301, ¶¶315, ¶¶316).

✓ In respect to the plaintiff's allegations of mail fraud, no specific evidence, dates, times, or places have been provided. (Ex. A ¶¶240, ¶¶241, ¶¶294, ¶¶300). The plaintiff alleges in paragraph 240 and 241 that Mundy sent the plaintiff a letter on February 5, 2001 "threatening the commencement of 'difficult' divorce proceedings unless the plaintiff met to resolve the issues," which was meant to "intimidate the plaintiff into lying before the INS." (Ex. A, ¶¶240, ¶¶241). This letter merely represents communication between the parties in connection with litigation. (Ex. P). The plaintiff's allegations in paragraphs 240 and 241 measured against the attached letter itself is perhaps one of the most glaring examples of how the plaintiff has taken a letter prepared in the context of a divorce litigation and "twisted" it to suggest that it represents mail fraud or other forms of wrongdoing on the part of Mundy. (Ex. P). There is absolutely no identification of the specific statements which were purportedly false or misleading or the manner in which this letter was purportedly fraudulent.

✓ Paragraph 294 generally alleges that Mundy and Petrovich used the international transportation system to threaten witnesses into recanting their testimony. Paragraph 300 generally alleges that Mundy and Petrovich used the international transportation system to arrange for the payment of bribes. (Ex. A ¶¶294, ¶300). Insofar as the plaintiff suggests that these acts evidence mail fraud, the plaintiff has failed to provide any documentation/letters to support his claims. The plaintiff has also completely failed to provide dates, times, places or particulars of such mailings. In fact, the plaintiff has not only failed to identify the parties to whom these letters were allegedly mailed, the manner in which the documents were purportedly fraudulent or the specific statements which were false, but has failed to identify which part of the "transportation system" was even used. Ex. A need to provide dates, times, places, parties, manner, statements, fraudulent, specific, statements, which, were, false, but, has, failed, to, identify, which, part, of, the, "transportation, system," was, even, used.

✓ Likewise, the plaintiff's general allegations of wire fraud must similarly fail. (Ex. A ¶¶294, ¶295, ¶300, ¶301, ¶315, ¶316). Paragraphs 294 and 295 alleges that Mundy and Petrovich used the international telephone system to threaten witnesses and transfer money to threaten witnesses. (Ex. A ¶¶294, ¶295). Paragraphs 300 and 301 merely alleges that Mundy and Petrovich used the international telephone system to arrange for bribes. (Ex. A ¶¶300, ¶301). Paragraphs 315 and 316 generally allege that Mundy and Petrovich used the telephone system to intimidate the plaintiff. (Ex. A, ¶¶315, ¶316). Ex. A need to provide dates, times, places, parties, manner, statements, fraudulent, specific, statements, which, were, false, but, has, failed, to, identify, which, part, of, the, "transportation, system," was, even, used.

✓ Insofar as the plaintiff suggests that these acts evidence wire fraud, the plaintiff has failed to provide any evidence or specifics to support his claims. No dates, times, places or particulars of such wire fraud have been detailed. The plaintiff has not identified which witnesses were purportedly threatened, when or where they were threatened or specifically how they were threatened, nor has the plaintiff set forth any details as to how the wire system was used to threaten witnesses or transfer money. (Ex. A ¶¶294, ¶295). The plaintiff has similarly not identified when, where or how the telephone system was used to arrange Ex. A need to provide dates, times, places, parties, manner, statements, fraudulent, specific, statements, which, were, false, but, has, failed, to, identify, which, part, of, the, "transportation, system," was, even, used.

purported bribes or who was contacted to arrange such bribes. (Ex. A ¶300, ¶301). The plaintiff has also failed to provide specifics as to other purported threatening telephone calls made to him. (Ex. A, ¶315, ¶316). It is evident that the plaintiff cannot identify a single document or fact that purports to show such wire fraud on the part of Mundy and Petrovich, nor has plaintiff ever attempted to show statements which were purportedly false or the manner in which certain wire communications were fraudulent. Allegation that communication was fraudulent

Further, insofar as the plaintiff does allege some vague details as to purported mail and wire fraud on the part of Mundy and Petrovich, they are based only upon information and belief. Without being able to specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements, it is clear that the plaintiff's claims of mail and wire fraud must fail as a matter of law<sup>18</sup>. The plaintiff's claims of mail and wire fraud against Mundy and Petrovich are sadly deficient on all fronts.

dd. Plaintiff Has Failed to Sufficiently Plead Bribery as a Predicate Act

✓ The plaintiff's conclusions that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate act of bribery are also insufficient under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Ex. A., ¶495, ¶499, ¶507, ¶511).

✓ Even affording the rest of the plaintiff's complaint a liberal reading and applying the conclusion that Mundy and Petrovich bribed officials to each of the factual incidents in the complaint where bribery is mentioned, it is again clear that the plaintiff's allegations do not meet the heightened pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Ex. A, ¶254, ¶255, ¶¶298-302, ¶306, ¶307).

✓ Paragraphs 254 and 255 generally allege, upon information and belief, that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to bribe and then did bribe "an INS agent" in New York City to prevent the deportation of Ms. Shipilina. (Ex. A, ¶¶254, ¶255). The plaintiff has again provided absolutely no specifics whatsoever. There is no proof offered to support the conclusion that there was an agreement to bribe or even a bribe, nor has the plaintiff particularized where the bribe was purportedly made, which "INS agent" received the alleged bribe or how the bribe was conducted. It not even clear where the money for the purported bribe came from. In addition, plaintiff fails to identify a single document, statement or fact that purports to show such a bribe by Mundy and Petrovich. Without setting forth any specific times, names, places or particulars as to the purported bribes, these claims must fail. no specificity ✓ Paragraphs 298 through 302 allege that, upon information and belief, Mundy and Petrovich agreed to bribe "Krasnodar officials" to close a Russian criminal case, that the money came from the "illegal Enterprise," that Mundy and Petrovich arranged the bribes through the international mail and wire systems and that $10,000 was paid to close the Russian criminal case. (Ex. A ¶¶298-302). Plaintiff fails to offer any proof, however, of an agreement to bribe or the bribe itself to support his conclusions. Additionally, there is no mention of specifically when the bribe was purportedly made, where it was made, which "Krasnodar official" received the purported bribe or who exactly paid the purported bribe. Plaintiff has also failed to sufficiently allege how the bribes was carried out. The plaintiff's statement that the bribe was arranged through the international mail and wire system does not satisfy the particularity requirement. no specificity

✓ Paragraphs 306 and 307 allege that, upon information and belief, Mundy and Petrovich agreed to bribe and then did bribe Detective Hennings to intimidate the plaintiff into ceasing his cooperation with the INS and to prevent him from trying to reopen the Russian criminal no specificity case. (Ex. A ¶306, ¶307). The plaintiff's allegations again fail to provide the requisite specificity as there is no specific indication of when, where or how the bribes were purportedly made, nor has plaintiff identified any witnesses to these alleged acts. In fact, plaintiff fails to identify a single document or statement or fact that purports to show such bribery on the part of Mundy and Petrovich. In essence, plaintiff cannot offer any proof of an agreement to bribe or the bribe itself except for his conclusions that it occurred.

✓ Lastly, insofar as the plaintiff does allege some vague details as to Mundy's and Petrovich's purported participation in bribery, they are based only upon information and belief, and insufficient to support his RICO causes of action<sup>19</sup>.

ee. Plaintiff Has Failed to Sufficiently Plead Money Laundering as a Predicate Act

The plaintiff's conclusions that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate act of money laundering is also insufficient under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Ex. A, ¶496, ¶498, ¶508, ¶510). Paragraphs 496, 498, 508 and 510 allege that Mundy and Petrovich transferred "enterprise" funds overseas to bribe Russian officials and coerce witnesses in connection with the Russian criminal case. (Ex. A, ¶496, ¶498, ¶508, ¶510). The plaintiff's conclusions, however, not only fail to detail the purported bribes and coercion, but fail to set forth any specifics as to the transfers which allegedly violated the money laundering statute. The plaintiff has failed to provide the times, dates, places and particulars of the purported transfers as well as failed to identify the persons who allegedly sent and received such transfers. In addition, plaintiff fails to identify a single document, statement or fact that purports to confirm that such transfers ever occurred or that Mundy and Petrovich participated in such transfers.

<sup>19</sup> Although paragraphs 717, 719, 733 and 735 of the plaintiff's complaint generally allege that Mundy and Petrovich committed "other criminal acts" relating to bribery, these conclusory allegations are merely repetitive of the already asserted "predicate acts," and do nothing to alter the fact that plaintiff has failed to sufficiently plead the requisite specificity necessary to sustain an allegation of bribery in support of his RICO claims.

Indeed, the plaintiff has set forth nothing more than legal conclusions, deductions and opinions couched as factual allegations in support of his allegations of not only money laundering by Mundy and Petrovich, but white slave trade, misuse of visas, obstruction of justice, mail and wire fraud and bribery. The Court must not give such conclusory statements a presumption of truthfulness in determining this motion to dismiss. L'Europeenne de Banque v. La Republica de Venezuela, 700 F. Supp at 122. Thus, Mundy and Petrovich respectfully submit that since the plaintiff's complaint fails to adequately allege predicate acts in support of his RICO claims, the first, second, third and fourth causes of action must be dismissed as a matter of law.

✓ In addition to failing to properly plead predicate acts, the plaintiff similarly fails to adequately plead a pattern of racketeering activity. To sufficiently plead a pattern of racketeering activity, a plaintiff must allege "(1) at least two predicate acts of racketeering occurring within a ten-year period; (2) that the predicate acts are related to each other; and (3) that the predicate acts amount to or pose a threat of continuing criminal activity." Price v. Gast, 2000 WL 36981 *6 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 11, 2000); See also H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 2900 (1989); 18 U.S.C. §1961(5) (pattern of racketeering activity "requires at least two acts of racketeering activity, one of which occurred after the effective date of this chapter and the last of which occurred within ten years...after the commission of a prior act of racketeering activity").

✓ The statement that a pattern requires "at least two predicate acts" implies that while two acts are necessary, they may not be sufficient to establish a pattern. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. at 238-44, 109 S.Ct. at 2900-2903. In addressing what constitutes a pattern of racketeering activity, the Second Circuit noted that "[a]n interrelationship between acts, suggesting the existence of a pattern, may be established...[by] proof of their temporal proximity, or common goals, or similarity of methods, or repetitions." United States v. Indelicato, 865 F.2d 1370, 1382 (2d Cir. 1989) (en banc), cert denied, 493 U.S. 811, 110 S.Ct. 56 (1989). The United States Supreme Court noted that "[t]he term pattern requires the showing of a relationship between the predicates and of the threat of continuing activity...It is this factor of continuity plus relationship which combines to constitute a pattern." H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. at 238-39, 109 S.Ct. at 2900 (citations omitted).

To satisfy the "continued criminal activity" prong in alleging a pattern of racketeering activity under a RICO cause of action, the plaintiff must make a showing of either "closed-ended continuity" or "open-ended continuity." Id.

i. Closed-ended Continuity

✓ "Closed-ended continuity is demonstrated by predicate acts that 'amount to continued criminal activity' by a particular defendant." De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d 286, 321 (2d Cir. 2001). In order to measure whether closed-ended continuity exists, the Second Circuit has stated that several factors may be considered including the length of time over which the alleged predicate acts took place, the number and variety of acts, the number of participants, the number of victims, and the presence of separate schemes. GICC Capital Corp. v. Tech. Finance Group, Inc., 67 F.3d 463, 467 (2d Cir. 1995).

✓ The length of time over which predicate acts occurred is a substantial factor and appears to be dispositive if the period of time is not sufficiently long. The plaintiff must prove a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. at 242, 109 S.Ct. at 2902. Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy this requirement. Id. "Since the Supreme Court decided H.J. Inc., this Court [Second Circuit] has never held a period of less than two years to constitute a 'substantial period of time,' for the purposes of the closed-ended continuity test. De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 321. See also Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d 229, 242 (2d Cir. 1999) (predicate acts committed in less than a one year period insufficient length to demonstrate closed-ended continuity); Metromedia v. Fugazy, 983 F.2d 350 (2d Cir. 1992) (upholding RICO verdict, despite erroneous jury instruction that "a few weeks or months" might be a substantial period of time, because predicate acts occurred over two years); Jacobson v. Cooper, 882 F.2d 717, 720 (2d Cir. 1989) (finding closed-ended continuity when predicate acts occurred over a "matter of years" from 1980 to 1989).

✓ In determining the duration of a pattern of racketeering activity, Courts focus solely on the predicate acts of racketeering each defendant is alleged to have committed. De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 321. See also H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. at 242, 109 S.Ct. at 2902 (continuity test looks to period during which predicate acts were committed). Moreover, acts that do not constitute predicate racketeering activity are not included in the calculation for determining continuity. Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 243.

✓ As demonstrated above, the plaintiff's complaint completely fails to plead predicate acts with sufficiency. Nevertheless, to the extent this Court finds that the plaintiff has properly pled such predicate acts and demonstrated that they constitute "racketeering activity," the plaintiff has still failed to sufficiently establish the requisite showing of a "pattern" as there has been no demonstration of closed-ended continuity.

✓ The plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich first met with Ms. Shipilina at the "end of October, 2000." (Ex. A, ¶223). In fact, plaintiff did not commence divorce/annulment proceedings against Ms. Shipilina until February 2001, and, therefore, it was not until this time that Mundy and Petrovich appeared in the divorce action on behalf of Ms. Shipilina. (Ex. B). However, taking the plaintiff's allegations as true to the effect that Mundy and Petrovich first met with Ms. Shipilina in October, 2000, no required predicate act is even alleged to have been committed by Mundy or Petrovich prior to October, 2000, and could not have been committed prior to that time. A review of the complaint also reveals that there are no allegations that Mundy or Petrovich met with any other members of the purported enterprise prior to October, 2000 and participated with them in predicate acts. (Ex. A). Additionally, the last predicate act alleged to have been committed by Mundy or Petrovich was in March, 2002. (Ex. A, ¶¶293, ¶298, ¶¶315-318, ¶715). There are no allegations that Mundy and Petrovich committed any other predicate or criminal acts after March, 2002 or had any connection with other members of the enterprise after that date. (Ex. A).

✓ Thus, the period of time between the predicate acts purportedly committed by Mundy and Petrovich amounts to, at most, merely one year and five months. It is well settled that closed-ended continuity cannot exist over such an abbreviated period of time. See De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 321; Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 242.

ii. Open-ended Continuity

✓ Unlike closed-ended continuity, to satisfy open-ended continuity, "the plaintiff need not show that the predicates extended over a substantial period of time but must show that there was a threat of continuing criminal activity beyond the period during which the predicate acts were performed." Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 242. See also The Jordan (Bermuda) Inv. Co. v. Hunter Green Inv. Ltd., 154 F.Supp.2d 682, 694 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (open-ended continuity does not require substantial temporal showing, but requires plaintiff to show a threat of on-going criminal activity beyond the period in which the predicate acts were committed).

✓ In the Second Circuit, "cases assessing whether a threat of continuity exists have looked first to the nature of the predicate acts alleged or to the nature of the enterprise at whose behest the predicate acts were performed." De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 323 (quoting GICC Capital Corp. v. Technology Finance Group, Inc., 67 F.3d at 466 (internal quotations omitted)). "[W]here the enterprise primarily conducts a legitimate business, there must be some evidence from which it may be inferred that the predicate acts were the regular way of operating that business, or that the nature of the predicate acts themselves implies a threat of continued criminal activity." De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 323 (quoting Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 243).

✓ As demonstrated above, the plaintiff's complaint fails to properly plead predicate acts on the part of Mundy and Petrovich. Nevertheless, insofar as this Court concludes that the plaintiff has properly pled such predicate acts and demonstrated that they constitute "racketeering activity," the plaintiff has still failed to sufficiently establish the requisite showing of a "pattern" as there has been no demonstration of open-ended continuity.

✓ The predicate racketeering acts alleged to have been committed by Mundy and Petrovich occurred from October, 2000 through March, 2002, at best. (Ex. A). The complaint was filed on April 18, 2003 and served upon Mundy in June of 2003. The complaint has never been amended. There is absolutely nothing in the complaint which suggests that any predicate acts were even committed by Mundy and Petrovich after March, 2002 or up until the time the complaint was filed and served in April and June of 2003. This is especially interestingly if the plaintiff would now have this Court believe that the threat of criminal activity by Mundy and Petrovich is ongoing and continued after March, 2002. Even taking the plaintiff's allegations as true, they go no further than describing past criminal acts by Mundy and Petrovich with finite goals, which were completed. The plaintiff's allegations, taken at their face value, if proved, would establish, at most, that there was a "discrete and relatively short-lived scheme" to defraud the plaintiff, which is insufficient to establish a claim of open-continuity. Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 244.

✓ In an apparent ploy, albeit unsuccessful, to plead his RICO claims, the plaintiff has chosen to make broad and sweeping conclusions such as "on information and belief, member defendants' predicate acts will repeat and multiply into the future," instead of simply proving, or even alleging, continuing criminal activity beyond the period during which the predicate acts were performed by Mundy or Petrovich. (Ex. A, ¶¶876, ¶877). There is not one iota of evidence to support plaintiff's conclusion that such acts even occurred, let alone will repeat into the future. In fact, the complaint is totally devoid of any specific allegation or factual basis to support plaintiff's opinion and such legal conclusions and opinions couched as factual allegations are insufficient to demonstrate the threat of ongoing criminal activity.

✓ Hence, this Court must dismiss the plaintiff's RICO claims since the plaintiff has failed to allege sufficient predicate acts on the part of Mundy and Petrovich for this Court to find that they amount to or pose a threat of continuing criminal activity. Without a showing of open-ended or closed-ended continuity, the plaintiff has failed to establish a "pattern" of racketeering activity, and, thus plaintiff's RICO claims must fail as a matter of law.

D. Plaintiff Fails to Establish That Mundy or Petrovich Invests In, or Maintains an Interest In, or Participates in the Enterprise

✓ i. No Utilization or Investment of Income within 18 U.S.C. §1962(a)

To state a claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(a), plaintiff must allege that (1) the defendants used or invested racketeering income to acquire or maintain an interest in the alleged enterprise; and 2) the plaintiff suffered an injury as a result of the investment by the defendants. O & G Carriers, Inc. v. Smith, 799 F. Supp. 1528, 1542 (S.D.N.Y. 1992); Bingham v. Zolt, 683 F. Supp. 965, 971 (S.D.N.Y. 1988). Thus, "the essence of a violation of §1962(a) is not commission of predicate acts but investment of racketeering income." NRB Indus. Inc. v. R.A. Taylor & Assoc., Inc., 1998 WL 3638 *1 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (quoting Quaknine v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 83 (2d Cir. 1990)).

✓ The injury from the alleged RICO violation must be a "use" or "investment" injury distinguished from the injuries purportedly caused by the predicate acts themselves. See Update Traffic Systems, Inc. v. Gould, 857 F. Supp. 274, 282 (E.D.N.Y. 1994); NRB Indus. Inc. v. R.A. Taylor & Assoc., Inc., 1998 WL 3638 *1. "This investment-injury requirement is not satisfied merely because the defendant/enterprise has reinvested money from the racketeering acts back into its own operations, thus enabling the scheme to continue." Update Traffic Systems, Inc. v. Gould, 857 F. Supp. at 282-83.

Plaintiff's complaint fails to even allege that Mundy or Petrovich received racketeering income from the purported enterprise or used or invested income received from the purported racketeering activity to acquire an interest in the alleged enterprise. (Ex. A). Furthermore, plaintiff has not established that he sustained an injury as a result of the use or investment by Mundy or Petrovich. Rather, plaintiff's complaint is limited to alleged damages resulting from purported predicate acts. (Ex. A).

ii No Acquisition or Maintenance of Interest within 18 U.S.C. §1962(b)

To state a claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(b), plaintiff must allege that (1) the defendants acquired or maintained an interest in the alleged enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity; and (2) plaintiff suffered an injury as a result of the acquisition of the enterprise. O & G Carriers, Inc. v. Smith, 799 F. Supp. at 1543. See also Medgar Evers Houses Tenants Ass'n v. Medgar Evers Houses Associates, L.P., 25 F. Supp.2d 116, 124 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (18

U.S.C. 1962(b) prohibits a person engaging in racketeering activity from using that activity to acquire or maintain an interest in or control over an enterprise that affects interstate commerce).

Thus, plaintiff must allege that he sustained "a distinct injury caused by the defendants' acquisition or maintenance of an interest in or control of an enterprise. Id. In Medgar Evers, the alleged enterprise was the association of the defendants themselves and the Court found that the §1962(b) claim failed because the plaintiff did not allege that the defendants acquired or maintained an "interest" in their "association" through the pattern of racketeering and failed to allege a distinct injury stemming from the defendants' acquisition or maintenance of that interest. Id.

Again, the plaintiff has clearly failed to sufficiently plead that Mundy and Petrovich used racketeering activities to acquire or maintain an interest in or control over the purported enterprise. (Ex. A). Plaintiff's "throw-in" of the word "maintain" in concluding that Kuba, Mundy & Associates engaged in predicate acts to generate revenues "to maintain its interest in the Enterprise," that Mr. Mundy committed predicate acts to "maintain control of the firm's Enterprise" and that Petrovich committed predicate acts to "assist in maintaining control of the firm's interest in the in the Enterprise" is in sufficient. (Ex. A, ¶¶488, ¶500, ¶512). The plaintiff has similarly failed to adequately plead that he sustained a distinct injury as a result of Mundy's or Petrovich's acquisition or maintenance of an interest in or control of the purported enterprise.

iii. No Participation in the Enterprise within 18 U.S.C. §1962(c)

✓ To state a claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(c), plaintiff must allege "that he was injured by the defendants" "(1) conduct (2) of an enterprise (3) through a pattern (4) of racketeering activity." Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co., Inc. 187 F.3d at 242 (citing Azrielli

v. Cohen Law Offices, 21 F.3d 512, 520 (2d Cir. 1994)); Dietrich v. Bauer, 76 F. Supp.2d 312, 347 (S.D.N.Y. 1999).

✓ The defendants must also have "participated" in "the operation or management of the enterprise itself." Congregacion de law Mision Provincia de Venezuela, 978 F. Supp at 446. In other words, a party will not be liable under 18 U.S.C. §1962(c) unless it has some part in directing the [RICO] enterprise's affairs." Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 179, 113 S.Ct. 1163, 1170 (1993). See also Congregacion de law Mision Provincia de Venezuela, 978 F. Supp at 450 ("it must be alleged that a defendant exerts control over the enterprise or is involved in some degree in its direction). This "operation or management" requirement is a test that "is a very difficult test to satisfy." La Salle Nat'l Bank v. Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co., 951 F. Supp. 1071, 1090 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). The simple taking of directions and performance of tasks that are necessary or helpful to the enterprise, without more, is insufficient to bring a defendant within the scope of §1962(c). U.S. v. Diaz, 176 F.3d 52, 92 (2d Cir. 1999); See also Congregacion de law Mision Provincia de Venezuela, 978 F. Supp at 450 ("Mere involvement or association with a RICO enterprise is not enough to establish RICO liability- 'the test is not involvement but control.'")

✓ Indeed, Courts have dismissed cases where, like here, plaintiff has failed to show that defendants did anything more than purportedly "assist" in the alleged RICO enterprise, ruling that merely alleging "wrongful acts" which could have importance to the enterprise's scheme does not translate into "direction" of the enterprise. See Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F. Supp.2d at 347. In fact, where an attorney is deemed to have power to direct certain actions of individuals involved, and in some cases where that attorney allegedly participates in the fraud, that does not equate to the power to direct and operate the enterprise itself. See Morin v. Trupin, 835 F. Supp. 126 (S.D.N.Y. 1993). In Morin v. Trupin, the Court found that an attorney's facilitation of the operation of the enterprise does not create a sufficient ground of "operation and management" to constitute liability under section 1962(c). Id. at 134. The Court elaborated that even "if this Court found that these defendants had substantial persuasive power to induce management to take certain actions, this is still not equivalent to having the power to conduct or participate directly or indirectly in the conduct in the affairs of those corporations." Id. at 135-36 (citations omitted); Strong & Fischer, Ltd. v Maxima Leather, Inc. 1993 WL 277205 (S.D.N.Y. July 19, 1973).

✓ The plaintiff's complaint, even when read in a light most favorable to him, is devoid of any allegations that Mundy or Petrovich had any part in the "operation or management" of the purported enterprise. Virtually every paragraph of the plaintiff's complaint directed at Mundy or Petrovich merely alleges that they were involved in the purported enterprise or simply performed tasks necessary or helpful to the purported enterprise. In fact, there are only two paragraphs in the plaintiff's complaint directed at Mundy and Petrovich, which even suggest that Mundy and Petrovich directed the enterprise or exerted control over the enterprise. (Ex. A, ¶¶500, ¶¶512). However, the plaintiff's conclusions in these paragraphs that Mundy and Petrovich "maintain control of the firm's interest in the Enterprise and direct part of the affairs of the Enterprise" as well as "implement some of the decisions of the Enterprise" is clearly insufficient to satisfy the stringent standard of "operation and management." (Ex. A, ¶¶500, ¶¶512). If anything, the plaintiff's complaint is replete with allegations that Mundy and Petrovich were merely involved with the purported enterprise and assisted the enterprise, which is insufficient. See U. S. v. Diaz, 176 F.3d at 92; Congregacion de la Mision Provincia de Venezuela, 978 F. Supp at 450; Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F. Supp.2d at 347; Morin v. Trupin, 835 F. Supp. at 134-136.

E. Plaintiff's Complaint Fails to Adequately Allege The Existence of a RICO Enterprise

✓ In addition to failing to properly plead predicate acts and a pattern of racketeering activity, the plaintiff most glaringly fails to sufficiently plead the existence of an enterprise. A RICO plaintiff must plead each defendant's participation in the "operation or management" of an "enterprise" as those terms are defined for the purposes of the statute. Dietrich v. Bauer, 76 F. Supp.2d 312, 347 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). A RICO enterprise is statutorily defined as "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. §1691(4) (emphasis added).

✓ In interpreting this statute, the Supreme Court has defined a RICO enterprise as a "group of persons associated together for a common purpose or engaging in a common course of conduct...[It is] proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by any evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 101 S.Ct. 2524, 2528 (1981). See also Kashelkar v. Rubin & Rothman, 97 F. Supp.2d at 391; First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp. 820 F. Supp., 89 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (for an association of individuals to constitute an enterprise, the individuals must share a common purpose to engage in a particular fraudulent course of conduct and work together to achieve such purposes).

✓ "In determining whether the members of a purported association-in-fact functioned as a unit, '[c]ourts in the Second Circuit must look to the 'hierarchy, organization, and activities' of the association". Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 349 (quoting First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 820 F. Supp. at 98).

Consistent with these standards, "a RICO enterprise must exhibit structural continuity over its alleged lifespan." Kovian v. Fulton County Nat'l. Bank and Trust Co., No. 86- CV-154 1990 WL 36809, at 16 (N.D.N.Y. March 28, 1990). As the Eighth Circuit has explained, "continuity of structure exists where there is an organizational pattern or system of authority that provides a mechanism for directing the group's affairs on a continuing, rather than an ad hoc, basis." Handeen v. LeMaire, 112 F.3d 1339, 1351 (8th Cir. 1997) (quoting United States v. Kragness, 830 F.2d 842, 856 (8th Cir. 1987)).

Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 349.

✓ In addition, "[i]t is firmly established that, to state a claim under RICO, a Plaintiff must allege and prove the existence of an enterprise which is 'separate and distinct from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity.'" Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp.2d at 400 (quoting Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 44 F. Supp.2d 565, 580 (S.D.N.Y. 1999)). In other words, the enterprise cannot be the pattern of racketeering but must be "an entity separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583, 101 S.Ct. at 2529. The members of the purported enterprise "as a whole must have a common link other than the racketeering activity." McDonough v. National Home Ins. Co., 108 F.3d 174, 177 (8th Cir. 1997). Thus, if a plaintiff has not pled that the alleged enterprise would exist despite the alleged pattern of racketeering activity, then the claims are subject to dismissal as a matter of law. See Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp.2d at 400.

✓ Plaintiff's RICO claims in the instant matter fail as a matter of law, because he has not pled an enterprise within the meaning of the RICO statute. The enterprise allegedly consists of all defendants, which encompasses "domestic and foreign corporations, partnerships, individuals, government officials, law firms, [American, Russian and Chechen] organized crime gangs... and an Islamic terrorist and crime clan." (Ex. A, ¶11). The complaint, however, is completely devoid of any sensible, logical, or coherent explanation as to how all these defendants are joined together as a group to perpetrate the acts and frauds alleged in the complaint. Indeed, there can be no such explanation, because no "association" exists.

The complaint clearly fails to allege any specific facts revealing a continuous structure of the enterprise, interrelationship of alleged actions or coordinated roles played by the members of the purported enterprise. Similarly, there is no showing of a sensible chain of command<sup>21</sup> or functional integration. In fact, the only factor joining the sixty-three domestic and foreign defendants is Ms. Shipilina and the people she purportedly encountered, places she purportedly traveled, and institutions she purported worked at or visited. There is absolutely no other connection among Mundy and Petrovich and the other defendants comprising this purported enterprise, other than they had some form of alleged contact with Ms. Shipilina. Conclusory allegations that disparate parties were associated in fact by virtue of their involvement with Ms. Shipilina are insufficient to sustain a RICO claim, absent specific allegations as to how the members were associated together in an enterprise. First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 820 F. Supp. at 98.<sup>22</sup> In addition, common sense does not support the notion that a small law firm, Mundy, could act as the law firm holding together the purported enterprise and conducting legal work for over sixty-three defendants across the world.

Additionally, the plaintiff has not pled any details which would even remotely suggest that the purported enterprise would exist as a continuous structure, separate and distinct from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity. First Nationwide Bank, 820 F. Supp. at 98. The plaintiff has failed to proffer any evidence that the alleged enterprise would still exist if the <sup>21</sup>The plaintiff's general allegation that "relationships among the Enterprise's members are formal, including agreements and chain of command authority, and informal in which the common objectives of the Enterprise... controls decision-making" is clearly insufficient. (Ex. A, ¶14).

"predicate acts [were] removed from the equation". Id. In other words, it is clear that there is no common nexus between the members of the alleged enterprise, or at least between Mundy, Petrovich and the remaining members, other than their purported racketeering activities directed towards Ms. Shipilina. As there is a complete paucity of evidence that the alleged enterprise would exist, despite the alleged pattern of racketeering activity, the plaintiff has failed to establish the existence of an enterprise.

✓ Thus, the plaintiff's preposterous allegations of a RICO enterprise and ongoing organization between the defendants may be the most damning evidence of the frivolous nature of this complaint. The plaintiff's allegations of the existence of a RICO enterprise, stretches the bounds and limits of even the most delusional imagination. Since the plaintiff's complaint fails to establish the existence of an enterprise, plaintiff's RICO claims are subject to dismissal as a matter of law.

F. Plaintiff Lacks Standing to Assert a RICO Claim

✓ Plaintiff must satisfy the following three requirements to have standing to assert a RICO violation: (1) a violation of section 1962; (ii) injury to business or property; and (iii) causation of the injury by the violation. First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 767 (2d Cir. 1994) cert denied 513 U.S. 1079 (1995). See also Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23 (2d Cir. 1990); 18 U.S.C. §1964(c) ("Any person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962 of this chapter" has standing to sue for RICO violations).

Standing to sue is limited to those persons whose injuries were both factually and proximately caused by the alleged RICO violation. Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 112 S.Ct. 1311, 1316-1318 (1992). While the term proximate cause is utilized, the Second Circuit has made clear that liability under statutes such as RICO does not "depend on whether there is proximate causation as that term is used at common law," Abrahams v. Young & Rubicam Inc., 79 F.3d 234, 237 (2d Cir. 1996). Instead, the question is whether the plaintiff was "in the category the statute meant to protect," and whether "the harm that occurred . . . [was] the 'mischief' the statute sought to avoid." Id. Thus, to have standing, plaintiff must show that he was "the intended target" of the RICO violations, and that any alleged RICO injury must have been the "preconceived purpose" of the RICO activities. See In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig. v. Robinson, 39 F.3d 395, 400 (2d Cir. 1994).

✓ Further, a cause of action under RICO does not accrue until the amount of damages becomes clear and definite. Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhodes, 859 F.2d 1096, 1106 (2d Cir. 1988), cert denied, 490 U.S. 1007, 109 S.Ct. 1643 (1989).

Even assuming that the plaintiff is able to demonstrate the requisite elements of a RICO claim, the complaint must still be dismissed because the plaintiff lacks standing to maintain such an action. Plaintiff's complaint fails to set forth a single factual allegation that would lead any reasonable person to believe that the sixty-three named defendants, located throughout the world, are engaged in a RICO enterprise with the preconceived purpose of intentionally targeting him for financial ruin.

Furthermore, plaintiff's damages allegedly consist of damages to his business, financial interests, safety, liberty and reputation. (Ex. A, ¶¶900-914). The only damages actionable under RICO are to a persons' business or property. Plaintiff cannot demonstrate with any specificity in what manner he sustained injuries to his business or property. His conclusory allegations of loss profits from his law and consulting business, expenditure of funds to restore his business, loss of business opportunities and expenditure of funds to investigate the purported enterprise are not only unavailing but are not definite or ascertainable.

damages. ✓ Moreover, any purported harm to the plaintiff's business is solely a result of the plaintiff's own careless actions and dedication to an imaged RICO enterprise, which does not exist. image the plaintiff's business

G. Plaintiff Has Failed to Plead Conspiracy to Violate RICO within 18 U.S.C. §1962(d)

✓ A claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d) requires that the defendants conspire to commit a substantive RICO violation. To state a claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d), plaintiff must adequately allege that the defendants agreed to form and associate themselves with a RICO enterprise and agreed to commit two predicate acts in furtherance of a pattern of racketeering activity in connection with that enterprise. Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 244. ✓ However, a conspiracy claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d) will not survive if the complaint contains nothing more than conclusory allegations of a conspiracy. Case law is unequivocal that "[b]are allegations of 'conspiracy'...are insufficient to support of a civil RICO claim". Morin v. Trupin, 747 F. Supp. 1051, 1067 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (quoting Crunwald v. Bomfreund, 668 F. Supp. 128, 133 (E.D.N.Y. 1987)). "Indeed, even a 'mere [allegation of an] agreement to commit the predicate acts is not sufficient to support a charge of conspiracy under §1962(d)'." Morin v. Trupin, 747 F. Supp. at 1067 (quoting Seville Indus. Machinery Corp. v. Southmost Machinery Corp., 742 F.2d 786, 792 N. 8 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1211, 105 S.Ct. 1179 (1985)). Rather, plaintiff must show that the defendants understood the scope of the enterprise and knowingly agreed to further its affairs through the commission of various offenses. Morin v. Trupin, 747 F. Supp. at 1067. RICO claim

✓ The plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich conspired to commit predicate and other acts of white slave trade, importing aliens for immoral purposes, fraud and misuse of visas, the procurement of nationality unlawfully, obstruction of justice, mail and wire fraud, bribery and money laundering. (Ex. A, ¶¶489, ¶¶501, ¶¶513, ¶¶705, ¶¶706, ¶¶722, ¶¶723, ¶¶738, ¶¶739). lack of facts

Although the plaintiff's complaint is replete with the phrase that Mundy and Petrovich "agreed" to "perform" certain acts, as demonstrated above, there continues to be a paucity of facts to support these bald assertions of a conspiracy. (Ex. A, ¶¶234, ¶236, ¶243, ¶254, ¶265, ¶275, ¶280, ¶287, ¶293, ¶298, ¶306, ¶316). The plaintiff has failed to adequately plead when or where such purported agreements occurred, the nature of the agreements or what the terms of the agreements to conspire were. Thus, bare conclusory allegations of a conspiracy are insufficient to support plaintiff's RICO claims.

Additionally, there can be no RICO conspiracy without a substantive RICO violation. NRB Indus., Inc. v. R.A. Taylor & Assocs., Inc., 1998 WL 3638 *3 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 7, 1998). In other words, if the plaintiff fails to state a claim for violation of §1962(a), (b) or (c), their RICO conspiracy claim must also fail. Id. See also Discon v. NYNEX Corp., 93 F.3d at 1064, rev'd on other grounds, 525 U.S. 128 (1998) (if prior claims do not state a claim for substantive RICO violations, then a RICO conspiracy claim necessarily does not set forth conspiracy to commit such violations); Katzman v. Victoria's Secret Catalogue, 167 F.R.D. at 658 aff'd 113 F.3d at 1229 (failure to plead facts that would satisfy 1962(a), 1962(b) or 1962(c) necessarily dooms any claim that the plaintiff might assert arising under 1962(d)). Since the plaintiff has clearly failed to assert a substantive RICO violation against Mundy and Petrovich, plaintiff's conspiracy claims against Mundy and Petrovich under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d) must fail as a matter of law.

Lastly, the Supreme Court has held that a party will not be liable under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d) unless it has some part in directing the RICO enterprise's affairs. See Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. at 170, 113 S.Ct. at 1163. As set forth above, plaintiff has failed to plead direction of the purported enterprise on the part Mundy and Petrovich. Plaintiff's conspiracy claims must fail on this basis as well.

H. There Is No Valid Claim for Aiding and Abetting Rico Violations

Insofar as the plaintiff has suggested that Mundy and Petrovich aided and abetted RICO violations, there is no private right of action for aiding and abetting a RICO violation. (Ex. A, ¶¶711, ¶¶713-721, ¶728, ¶¶728-737). See Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp.2d at 392. "In a recent exhaustive opinion, Judge Mukasey held that there is no federal tort of aiding and abetting a RICO violation." LaSalle Bank v. Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co., 951 F. Supp at 1088-1089 (quoting Economic Development v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 924 F. Supp. 449, 475-478 (S.D.N.Y. 1996)). The Court in LaSalle Bank agreed with Judge Mukasey's analysis and recommended the dismissal of plaintiffs' claim of aiding and abetting a RICO violation on the ground that there is no such cause of action. Id.

In Hayden v. Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, 955 F.Supp 248 (S.D.N.Y. 1997), the Southern District Court again followed the reasoning of the Supreme Court in Central Bank of Denver, N.A. v. First Interstate Bank of Denver, N.A., 511 U.S. 164, 114 S.Ct. 1439 (1994) and declined to find a private right of action by stating "[n]owhere in the text of Section 1962 is there any indication that Congress intended to impose aiding and abetting liability for a violation of the RICO statute." Hayden v. Paul Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, 955 F. Supp at 256.

Accordingly, insofar as the plaintiff claims that Mundy and Petrovich violated 18 U.S.C. 1962(a), (b), (c) and (d) on the basis of their "aiding and abetting" status, these claims must be dismissed as a matter of law.

POINT III

PLAINTIFF'S PENDANT STATE LAW CLAIMS FAIL AS A MATTER OF LAW

A. This Court Lacks Jurisdiction Over Plaintiff's Pendant State Law Claims

✓ Assuming that this Court dismisses plaintiff's RICO claims, no federal question provides this Court with jurisdiction over the plaintiff's state law claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of power, prima facie tort and malicious prosecution. (Ex. A, ¶¶894-899). Further, this Court would not have jurisdiction over his state law claims by virtue of amount in controversy and diversity of citizenship since diversity of citizenship is not complete, because the plaintiff and numerous defendants are residents of the State of New York. Consequently, whether to retain jurisdiction over plaintiff's pendent state law could only be entertained pursuant to the sound discretion of the trial court. 28 U.S.C. §1367(a)(7); See also Perez v. Ortiz, 849 F.2d 793, 798 (2d Cir. 1988).

The Supreme Court said in United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 725, 86 S.Ct. 1130, 1138 (1986):

Pendant jurisdiction, in the sense of judicial power, exists whenever there is a claim arising under . . . the Laws of the United States. . . , U.S. Const., Art. III, [§]2, and the relationship between that claim and the state claim permits the conclusion that the entire action before the court comprises but one constitutional 'case'. The federal claim must have substance sufficient to confer subject matter jurisdiction on the court.

As discussed above, plaintiff has not sufficiently pled RICO violations. The exercise of federal jurisdiction must first be tested against the allegations in the complaint. To withstand a motion to dismiss, a federal claim must be stated with substance sufficient to confer subject matter jurisdiction. Id. at 725. The required specificity of pleadings must be examined by the standard that "complaints containing only 'conclusory,' 'vague,' or 'general allegations' of a conspiracy to deprive a person of his constitutional rights will be dismissed." Hughes v. Patrolmen's Benevolent Ass'n. of the City of New York, Inc., 850 F.2d 876, 880 (2d Cir. 1988). If, during the course of the proceedings, it becomes apparent that the federal claims are discernibly meritless, both the federal and pendant state law claims must be dismissed. Crane Co. v. American Standard, 603 F.2d 244, 254 (2d Cir. 1979).

✓ Although Courts often dismiss both Federal and pendant State law claims where the Federal claims are meritless, it is respectfully submitted that this Court exercise its discretion and address the instant state law claims in the interest of resolving this matter and in the interest of judicial and party economy. Given the plaintiff's abuse of the legal system and history of litigation, this Court should exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiff's pendent state claims. conclusion

B. Plaintiff's Pendant State Law Claims Do Not State a Cause of Action and Are Barred by the Statute of Limitations

✓ Insofar as this Court decides to extend jurisdiction over plaintiff's state law claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of power, prima facie tort and malicious prosecution, plaintiff's claims fail to state a cause of action and are entirely lacking in merit against Mundy and Petrovich. (Ex. A, ¶¶894-899). In addition, some of the plaintiff's state-law claims are barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

i. Plaintiff's Claim for Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Should be Dismissed

✓ The plaintiff's fifth cause of action alleges intentional infliction of emotional distress. (Ex. A, ¶¶894, ¶895). To state a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, the plaintiff must demonstrate (1) extreme and outrageous conduct (2) intent to cause, or disregard of a substantial probability of causing, severe emotional distress, (3) a casual connection between the conduct and injury, and (4) severe emotional distress. Howell v.

New York Post Company, Inc., 81 N.Y.2d 115, 121, 612 N.E.2d 699, 702, 596 N.Y.S.2d 350, 353 (1993). See also Bender v. City of New York, 78 F.3d 787, 790 (2d Cir. 1996). The requirements of this standard are very strict, and liability has been found only where the conduct has been "so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized community." Dillon v. City of New York, 261 A.D.2d 34, 41, 704 N.Y.S.2d 1, 7 (1st Dep't 1999) (quoting Murphy v. American Home Products Corp., 58 N.Y.2d 293, 303, 448 N.E.2d 86, 96, 461 N.Y.S.2d 232, 242 (1983)).

✓ Plaintiff seeks to hold Mundy and Petrovich liable for representing his ex-wife in divorce and immigration proceedings. In doing so, plaintiff fails to sufficiently plead every element of a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff fails to demonstrate any conduct that is "atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized community," on the part of Mundy and Petrovich, which would qualify as "extreme and outrageous conduct." Plaintiff also fails to demonstrate, let alone even allege, that Mundy and Petrovich intended to cause severe emotional distress, that there is a casual connection between the conduct of Mundy and Petrovich and plaintiff's purported injuries, and that he even sustained severe emotional distress. Plaintiff's claim of emotional distress is bare and conclusory, with uncorroborated injuries. Insofar as the plaintiff even suggests that he has sustained some form of severe distress or depression, although he has not alleged it in this action, it surely was not caused, intentionally or otherwise, by any conduct on the part of Mundy or Petrovich.

✓ Moreover, it is well established that a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress in New York has a one year statute of limitations. N.Y. Civ. Prac. L.&R. 215(3) (McKinney 2003). See also Stordeur v. Computer Assocs. Int'l., Inc., 995 F.Supp 94, 98

(E.D.N.Y. 1998); Brown v. Bronx Cross County Medical Group, 834 F. Supp 105, 110 (S.D.N.Y. 1993); Campbell v. Chabot, 189 A.D.2d 746, 747, 592 N.Y.S.2d 423 (2nd Dep't 1993); Gallagher v. Directors Guild of America, Inc., 144 A.D.2d 261, 262, 263, 533 N.Y.S.2d 863, 864 (1st Dep't. 1988). "The time within which an action must be commenced, except as otherwise expressly prescribed, shall be computed from the time the cause of action accrued to the time the claim is interposed." N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. §203(a) (McKinney 2003). The claim "accrues when the wrong is done, regardless of when it was discovered..." Stordeur v. Computer Associates Int'l., Inc., 995 F.Supp at 98. See also Britt v. The Legal Aid Society, Inc., 95 N.Y.2d 443, 741 N.E.2d 109, 718 N.Y.S.2d 264 (2000).

✓ Although the plaintiff does not specify which acts by Mundy or Petrovich comprise his claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, the last purported wrongful act even alleged to have been committed by Mundy or Petrovich which could have caused plaintiff's distress, occurred in March, 2002. (Ex. A, ¶293, ¶298, ¶¶315-318, ¶715). There is absolutely no claim by the plaintiff that Mundy or Petrovich acted unlawfully or participated in the purported enterprise after that date. (Ex. A). Therefore, the claim could not have accrued any later than March, 2002 and could have accrued as early as October of 2000 when Mundy and Petrovich first allegedly met Ms. Shipilina and first allegedly participated in the purported enterprise. (Ex. A, ¶223). The complaint was not filed until April 18, 2003, which is more than one year after Mundy or Petrovich's last alleged act or participation in the purported enterprise. (Ex. A). The plaintiff failure to commence his claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress within the applicable statute of limitations is yet another basis for dismissal as to his fifth cause of action.

ii. Plaintiff's Claim for Abuse of Process Should be Dismissed

✓ The plaintiff's sixth cause of action alleges abuse of process. (Ex. A, ¶¶896, ¶897).

Abuse of process is defined as "the misuse or perversion of regularly issued legal process for a purpose not justified by the nature of the process." Board of Education of Farmingdale Union Free School District v. Farmingdale Classroom Teachers Ass'n, Inc., 38 N.Y.2d 397, 400, 380 N.Y.S.2d 635, 639, 343 N.E.2d 278 (1975). To state a claim for abuse of process, the plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) that defendant initiated regularly issued process, either civil or criminal, compelling the performance of forbearance of some prescribed act; (2) that defendant intended to do harm without excuse or social or economic justification and plaintiff did sustain injury to or an interference with his person or property; and (3) that defendant used the process in a perverted manner and sought some collateral advantage or corresponding detriment lying outside the legitimate ends of the process. Id. at 403. See also Curiano v. Suozzi, 63 N.Y.2d 113, 116, 469 N.E.2d 1324, 1326, 480 N.Y.S.2d 466, 468 (1984).

✓ Where the defendants utilize legal procedure in a manner consonant with the purpose for which the procedure was designed, the cause of action for abuse of process will not stand. See Raved v. Raved, 105 A.D.2d 735, 481 N.Y.S.2d 170 (2d Dep't 1984).

The plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to establish how this process was diverted from its lawful purpose to withstand a motion to dismiss. Id. Further, a malicious motive alone does not give rise to a cause of action for abuse of process. Curiano v. Suozzi, 63 N.Y.2d at 116, 469 N.E.2d at 1326, 480 N.Y.S.2d at 466. See also Matthews v. New York City Dept. of Social Services, 217 A.D.2d 413, 415, 629 N.Y.S.2d 241, 243 (1st Dep't 1995).

A valid cause of action for abuse of process also requires that there be an unlawful interference with one's person or property under color of process. See Curiano v. Suozzi, 63 N.Y.2d at 116, 469 N.E.2d at 1326, 480 N.Y.S.2d at 466.

Plaintiff fails to sufficiently plead the elements of a claim for abuse of process. Most glaringly, the plaintiff fails to allege that "any regularly issued process" was ever issued by Mundy and Petrovich. (Ex. A) In addition, the plaintiff has not alleged that Mundy or Petrovich intended to do harm without justification and used the process in a manner to obtain a collateral objective or advantage. (Ex. A) Plaintiff also fails to allege "the gist of the action for abuse of process ..., the improper use of process after it is issued." Curiano v. Suozzi, 63 N.Y.2d at 116, 469 N.E.2d at 1326, 480 N.Y.S.2d at 466 (citations omitted) (quoting Williams v. Williams, 23 N.Y.2d 592, 596, 240 N.E.2d 333, 335, 298 N.Y.S.2d 473, 476 (1969)). Lastly, where, as here, the allegations concerning abuse of process fail to allege actual or special damages, the cause of action must be dismissed. Rosen v. Brandes, 105 Misc. 2d 506, 513, 432 N.Y.S.2d 597, 602 (Nassau County Ct. 1980); Kahn v. Freidlander, 90 A.D.2d 868, 456 N.Y.S.2d 482 (3d Dep't 1982). The plaintiff cannot sustain a cause of action for abuse of process as he fails to allege special damages at all, much less with the requisite particularity.

Furthermore, a one year statute of limitations period has been provided under New York law for "an action to recover damages for assault, battery, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution, libel slander, false words causing special damages, or a violation of the right to privacy under section fifty-one of the civil rights law." N.Y.Civ. Prac. L. & R. §215(3). Although abuse of process is not specifically included in this section, every appellate court which has considered this statute recognized that a claim for damages for an intentional tort such as abuse of process is subject to the one year statute of limitations period. See Bittner v. Cummings, 188 A.D.2d 504, 506, 591 N.Y.S.2d 429, 431 (2d Dep't

✓ As demonstrated above, the plaintiff's one year statute of limitations period has expired since the abuse of process claim could not have accrued any later than March, 2002 and this action was not commenced until April 18, 2003, which is more than one year later. Accordingly, plaintiff's sixth cause of action for abuse of process must be dismissed as a matter of law.

iii. Plaintiff's Claim for Malicious Prosecution Should be Dismissed

✓ Plaintiff's seventh cause of action alleges malicious prosecution. (Ex. A, ¶¶898, ¶899). The mere bringing of a civil suit, even if groundless and ill-motivated, does not result in special damage or injury sufficient to sustain an action for malicious prosecution. Homstein v. Wolf, 109 A.D.2d 129, 132, 491 N.Y.S.2d 183, 186 (2d Dep't 1985), aff'd 67 N.Y.2d 721, 499 N.Y.S.2d 938, 490 N.E.2d 857. The elements necessary to maintain a cause of action for malicious prosecution are (1) the defendant either initiated or continued a prior judicial proceeding against the plaintiff; (2) the prior proceeding terminated in plaintiff's favor; (3) there was no probable cause for the prior judicial proceeding; (4) the prior judicial proceeding was instituted with malice; and (5) the plaintiff suffered a special injury of interference with his person or property as a result of this proceeding). Id. See also Engel v. CBS, Inc., 93 N.Y.2d 195, 711 N.E.2d 626, 689 N.Y.S.2d 411(1999). Conclusory allegations of malice are insufficient to form the factual basis for such an allegation. See Homstein v. Wolf, 109 A.D.2d at 132, 491 N.Y.S.2d at 186.

✓ Additionally, an essential element of a claim for malicious prosecution is that the proceeding was terminated in favor of the accused, and this requirement is satisfied only when the case has been tried on the merits and the outcome was a finding of innocence.

The plaintiff's malicious prosecution claim is deficient in every respect. Notwithstanding plaintiff's nine hundred and fifteen paragraph complaint, there is no allegation of a judicial proceeding ever commenced or continued against him by Mundy and Petrovich, or that any such proceeding was ever terminated in his favor. (Ex. A). Malice on the part of Mundy or Petrovich has also not been sufficiently alleged, nor has special injuries. Plaintiff completely fails to allege the requisite elements to sustain his seventh cause of action for malicious prosecution.

Additionally, the plaintiff's claim for malicious prosecution is governed by a one year statute of limitations period. N.Y. Civ. Prac. L.&R. § 215(3). See also Preston v. New York, 223 F. Supp.2d 452, 468 (S.D.N.Y. 2002); Hansen v. Petrone, 124 A.D.2d at 782, 508 N.Y.S.2d at 500. The claim begins to run when the underlying action terminates in plaintiff's favor. See Dudick v. Guyas, 277 A.D.2d 686, 716 N.Y.S.2d 407 (3d Dep't. 2000). Although there is no allegation that Mundy or Petrovich initiated a judicial proceeding against the plaintiff, let alone that a proceeding terminated in the plaintiff's favor, the last possible date that a claim for malicious prosecution could have accrued against Mundy and Petrovich is March, 2002. This is the last date that Mundy and Petrovich are alleged to have participated in the alleged enterprise or its illegal activities. (Ex. A). This action was not commenced until more than one year later, therefore, plaintiff's seventh cause of action is time barred.

iv. Plaintiff's Claim for Prima Facie Tort Should be Dismissed

Plaintiff sixth and seventh causes of action alternatively allege a claim for prima facie tort. (Ex. A, ¶¶896-899). Prima facie tort is designed to provide a remedy for intentional and malicious actions that cause harm and for which no traditional tort provides a remedy. Curiano v. Suozzi, 63 N.Y.2d at 114, 469 N.E.2d at 1325, 480 N.Y.S.2d at 467. However, Courts have made clear that "prima facie tort (is not) a 'catch-all' alternative for every cause of action that cannot stand on its own legs." Church of Scientology of Ca. v. Siegelman, 94 F.R.D. 735, 738 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) (quoting Belsky v. Lowenthal, 62 A.D.2d 319, 323, 405 N.Y.S.2d 62, 65 (1st Dept. 1978)).

To state a claim for prima facie tort, plaintiff must demonstrate (1) intentional infliction of harm (2) resulting in special damages, (3) without excuse or justification and (4) by an act or series of acts that would otherwise be helpful. Burns Jackson Miller Summit & Spitzer v. Lindner, 59 N.Y.2d 314, 332, 464 N.Y.S.2d 712, 720, 451 N.E.2d 459 (1983).

The most significant element of this cause of action, a heightened malice component, is summarized below:

...there is no recovery in prima facie tort unless malevolence is the sole motive for defendant's otherwise lawful act or, in Justice Holmes' characteristically colorful language, unless defendant acts from "disinterested malevolence" (citations omitted) by which is meant "that the genesis which will make a lawful act unlawful must be a malicious one unmixed with any other and exclusively directed to injury and damage of another" (citation omitted).

Burns Jackson Miller Summit & Spitzer v. Lindner, 59 N.Y.2d at 333, 464 N.Y.S.2d at 721, 451 N.E.2d at 468.

Where a plaintiff fails to allege any facts to indicate that the sole motivation for a defendant's action was to injure and damage the plaintiff, a cause of action for prima facie tort must be dismissed. Bread Chalet, Inc. v. Royal Ins. Co., 224 A.D.2d 650, 651, 639

N.Y.S.2d 73, 74 (2d Dep't 1996). See also Goettler v. Peters, 225 A.D.2d 660, 664, 639 N.Y.S.2d 843, 846 (2d Dep't 1996).

Moreover, an "essential element of the cause of action [of prima facie tort] is an allegation of special damages." Howard v. Block, 90 A.D.2d 455, 454 N.Y.S.2d 718 (1st Dep't 1982). Special damages must be alleged "with sufficient particularity to identify actual losses and be related casually to the alleged tortious acts." Luciano v. Handcock, 78 A.D.2d 943, 433 N.Y.S.2d 257, 258 (3d Dep't 1980). See also Ginsberg v. Ginsberg, 84 A.D.2d 573, 443 N.Y.S.2d 439 (2d Dep't 1981) (counterclaim should be dismissed because it failed to state special damages); Lincoln First Bank v. Siegel, 60 A.D.2d 270, 400 N.Y.S.2d 627 (4th Dep't 1977) (complaint couched in broad and conclusory terms that did not allege how the plaintiff was damaged should be dismissed).

The plaintiff's claim for prima facie tort fails as a matter of law. First, plaintiff does not even allege that the sole motivation for the alleged wrongful acts was malice. Even if it can be inferred that Mundy or Petrovich in some way engaged in intentional or malicious acts, there is no allegation that they were motivated exclusively by malice. In fact, the plaintiff's complaint alleges that Mundy and Petrovich performed illegal acts for reasons other than to solely injure plaintiff, namely to assist Ms. Shipilina in becoming a resident, to protect the purported "enterprise," and to prevent the deportation of Ms. Shipilina. (Ex. A, ¶¶222-225, ¶228, ¶254, ¶255). Accordingly, the plaintiff's complaint acknowledges that there were other reasons for the defendants' alleged illegal acts.

Since the plaintiff's complaint does not allege sufficient facts from which this Court could reasonably infer that the defendants' alleged actions were motivated solely by a desire to harm the plaintiff, the plaintiff's prima facie tort claim is deficient. See Levy v. Coates, 286 A.D.2d 424, 729 N.Y.S.2d 903 (2d Dep't 2001) ("plaintiff failed to establish that the sole motivation for the institution of the criminal charge was disinterested malevolence"); Bread Chalet, Inc. v. Royal Ins. Co., 224 A.D.2d at 651, 639 N.Y.S.2d. at 74 ("plaintiff failed to allege that the carrier's sole motivation for denying coverage was to injure the plaintiff"). Quite simply, the plaintiff has not tendered any evidence from which a reasonable conclusion could be made that Mundy and Petrovich, the attorneys/translator for Ms. Shipilina in her divorce proceedings and immigration matters, had the sole desire to maliciously injure the plaintiff.

The plaintiff has also failed to sufficiently plead special damages with the requisite specificity to support his prima facie tort claim. Plaintiff does not identify actual losses related to the purported tortuous acts. Accordingly, the plaintiff's sixth and seventh causes of action, which alternatively allege prima facie tort must be dismissed as a matter of law.

POINT IV

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO CONTAIN A SHORT AND PLAIN STATEMENT OF THE CLAIMS SHOWING THAT THE PLEADER IS ENTITLED TO RELIEF AND THEREFORE SHOULD BE DISMISSED AS A MATTER OF LAW

✓ As an alternative to dismissal of the plaintiff's RICO and state law claims pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. §9(b) and Fed. R. Civ. P. §12(b)(6), it is respectfully requested that this Court dismiss the plaintiff's complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. §8(a)(2).

✓ Fed. R. Civ. P. §8(a)(2) requires that a complaint contain a "short and plain statement showing that the pleader is entitled to relief." The purpose of this rule is to give fair notice of the claim being alleged so that the defendants will have the opportunity to file a responsive answer, prepare an adequate defense, and determine whether the doctrine of res judicata applies. See Brown v. Califano, 75 F.R.D. 497, 498 (D.D.C. 1977); Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 78 S.Ct. 99, 102 (1957).

✓ Courts have not hesitated to dismiss actions under Fed. R. Civ. P. §8(a)(2) where a complaint sets forth "a meandering, disorganized, prolix narrative" that defy comprehension or was "so verbose, confused and redundant" that its true substance, if any, is well disguised." Brown v. Califano, 75 F.R.D. at 499. See also Prezzi v. Schelter, 469 F.2d 691, 692 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 935, 93 S.Ct. 911 (1973) Karlinsky v. New York Racing Ass'n Inc., 310 F. Supp. 937, 939 (S.D.N.Y. 1970). Such dismissals may be made on motion or sua sponte by the Court. Resource N.E. of Long Island, Inc. v. Babylon, 28 F.Supp.2d 786, 794 (E.D.N.Y. 1998).

✓ In Brown v. Califano, the plaintiff had filed "a virtual onslaught of litigation" against various public and private individuals and organizations alleging "widespread misconduct by defendants actionable variously under the Constitution, numerous federal statutes and nearly all theories of recovery known to the common law." Brown v. Califano, 75 F.R.D. at 498. The Court concluded that the complaint fell "far short of the admittedly liberal standard set in F.R.C.P. 8(a)," because the complaint was a confused and rambling narrative of charges and conclusions, contained an untidy assortment of claims neither plainly nor concisely stated, was not meaningfully distinguished from bold conclusions and personal comments and the dates and places of the complained transactions were not alleged with even modest particularity. Id. at 499. Although the Court noted that the usual remedy for noncompliance with Fed. R. Civ. P. §8(a) is dismissal with leave to amend, the Court dismissed the complaint with prejudice as the Court determined that the plaintiff is no stranger to the Courts and "to permit plaintiff to institute this lawsuit another time will needlessly waste time and effort." Id.

✓ It is respectfully submitted that plaintiff's, ninety-one page, nine hundred and fifteen paragraph, complaint is a paradigmatic example of a pleading, which fails to comport with

Fed. R. Civ. P. §8(a)(2). It is meandering prolix narrative which defies comprehension. Given that the plaintiff is an attorney, his poor pleading practice is even more egregious. It is further submitted that permitting the plaintiff to amend his pleading would be a needless waste of resources on the part of sixty-three defendants as well as a strain on judicial resources. Accordingly, it is respectfully requested that the instant complaint be dismissed with prejudice pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. § 8(a)(2).

POINT V

DEFENDANTS ARE ENTITLED TO INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

"It is well established in this circuit that a defendant may seek to enjoin a party who has [a] history of litigation entailing vexation, harassment and needless expense to [other parties] and [who poses] an unnecessary burden on the courts and their supporting personnel." Becker v. Dunkin Donuts of America, Inc., 665 F. Supp 211 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (citations omitted) (quoting In re Martin-Trigona v. Lavien, 737 F.2d 1254, 1262 (2d Cir. 1984). In such cases, the "traditional standards for injunctive relief, i.e. irreparable injury and inadequate remedy at law, do not apply to the issuance of an injunction against a vexatious litigant." Id.

In Lipin v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, P.A., 202 F. Supp.2d 126 (S.D.N.Y. 2002), the Court ordered injunctive relief by barring the commencement of further related litigation by the plaintiff and held that a district court has the authority to enjoin a plaintiff who engages in a pattern of vexatious litigation from continuing to do so. Id. at 142.

The Court further concluded that it will consider various factors in determining whether to restrict a litigant's future access to the Court including: (1) the litigant's history of litigation and whether it entailed vexatious, harassing or duplicative lawsuits; (2) the litigant's motive in pursuing the litigation, e.g. does the litigant have an objective good faith expectation of prevailing?; (3) whether the litigant is represented by counsel; (4) whether the litigant has caused needless expense to other parties or has posed an unnecessary burden on the court and their personnel; and (5) whether other sanctions would be adequate to protect the court and other parties. Id.

Given the history and abusive nature of plaintiff's actions to date, Mundy and Petrovich submit that nothing short of injunctive relief will subvert the plaintiff's continuing course of harassment. It is clear that the plaintiff's history of litigation entails vexatious, harassing and duplicative lawsuits. The plaintiff had commenced various prior Court actions in connection with his divorce proceeding as well as initiated various investigations and disciplinary complaints, many of which have been dismissed by the Courts and agencies. The plaintiff also instituted a duplicative state Court action. Plaintiff's abuse of the legal system is also evidenced by the exhibits submitted in support of this motion. Moreover, the plaintiff does not have a good faith basis for prevailing in the instant action. A reading of the complaint makes clear that plaintiff's motive is nothing more than a personal vendetta directed against his former wife and anyone who assisted, employed or encountered her. Lastly, the plaintiff is not represented by counsel and has caused needless expense to over sixty-three defendants across the world as well as to the Court by serving this ninety-one page, nearly one thousand paragraph, complaint. Consequently, defendants respectfully urge this Court to issue an injunction barring the plaintiff from filing any future related claims.

Only way to make her

POINT VI

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT PROPERLY SERVED PETROVICH AND THEREFORE THIS COURT HAS NO JURISDICTION OVER PETROVICH

✓ In the event this Court finds that the plaintiff has stated a cause of action against Mundy and Petrovich, the plaintiff's claims against Petrovich still cannot stand, because this Court does not have jurisdiction over him. The plaintiff's complaint has never been served upon Petrovich.

✓ The plaintiff does not contend that he served Petrovich personally pursuant to N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. §308(1) or at his "dwelling," "usual place of abode" or "last known residence" pursuant to N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. §308(2). Rather, it is undisputed that the plaintiff attempted to serve Petrovich at his "actual place of business" and with a follow-up mailing at his "actual place of business" pursuant to N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. §308(2). The plaintiff served the complaint upon Petrovich at the office of Kuba, Mundy & Associates located at 321 Broadway, New York, New York 10007. However, Petrovich does not maintain his place of business at the office of Kuba, Mundy & Associates located at 321 Broadway, New York, New York 10007, nor has Petrovich ever maintained his place of business at such an address. Petrovich is not an employee of Kuba, Mundy & Associates. Accordingly, the plaintiff's complaint has never been served upon Petrovich properly. Petrovich respectfully requests that this action be dismissed since this Court has no jurisdiction of the person of Petrovich.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that this Court issue an Order dismissing the plaintiff's complaint in its entirety with prejudice, granting an injunction prohibiting plaintiff from filing any further related claims, and for such other and further relief as this Court may deem just and proper.

familiar with the matters set forth herein; and submit this Declaration in sued. "FlashDancers" is the tradename under which defendant Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. conducts business at premises 1674 Broadway, New York, New York. It is also a federally registered service mark owned by defendant Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.

regard to the motion on behalf of defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich (collectively referred herein as "Mundy/Petrovich Defendants") dismissing this action pursuant to Rules 8(a)(2), 9(b) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("F.R.Civ.P.").

2. The FlashDancers Defendants hereby join in the motion of the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants, except with regard to matters pertaining solely and exclusively to the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants and not to all defendants generally.<sup>2</sup>

violation of New York Penal Law § 135.10, all of which are alleged under the rubric of "Other Criminal Acts"; and §§ 874m and p-r (activities of FlashDancers Defendants which affect interstate commerce).

4. Needless to say, the FlashDancers Defendants deny plaintiff's outrageous and scandalous allegations. For the information of the Court, defendant Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. d/b/a "FlashDancers" has been doing business at a single location since in or about 1986; is duly licensed and regulated by the New York State Liquor Authority and numerous New York City agencies with jurisdiction (e.g., Department of Consumer Affairs, Building Department, Police Department, Mayor's Midtown Task Force); and has never been even accused of any (much less all) of the incredible litany of felonies alleged by plaintiff.

5. Despite the dramatic nature of the allegations made, it is patently obvious that the Complaint fails to state a claim against the FlashDancers defendants, particularly when measured by the special pleading obligations imposed under F.R.Civ.P. 9(b) and the "Civil RICO" caselaw discussed in the memorandum of law submitted on behalf of the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants. General, conclusory allegations of wrongdoing, utterly devoid of factual specificity, do not suffice to satisfy the plaintiff's pleading obligations.<sup>4</sup>

6. Out of the 915 numbered paragraphs of the Complaint, the only allegations made of alleged culpable conduct involving any of the FlashDancers Defendants and the plaintiff are the allegations that certain "managers" of the "FlashDancers" night club, together with defendant A. Shipilina, arranged for allegedly "threatening" telephone calls to be made to plaintiff. (Complaint, ¶¶ 281, 288 and 317.) For all of the reasons set forth by the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants, these allegations are palpably insufficient, as a matter of law, to support a Civil RICO complaint against the FlashDancers Defendants.<sup>5</sup>

so

7. For the reasons set forth in the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants' motion, the Complaint fails to state a claim against the FlashDancers Defendants for intentional infliction of emotional distress. (Complaint, Fifth Cause of Action, ¶¶ 894-895). In any event, upon <sup>4</sup> Plaintiff is an attorney. Moreover, he was accompanied to the July 23, 2003 hearing by Jeffrey Drummond, Esq., the attorney who issued the State Court Summons on plaintiff's behalf which is referred to in the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants' motion papers. There is no reason not to insist that plaintiff comply with the rules of procedure and standards imposed by caselaw.

<sup>5</sup> By way of example, and not limitation, it is axiomatic that plaintiff would not have standing to assert claims under Civil RICO for alleged false statements to INS, tax fraud, or fraud on the NYS Liquor Authority, etc. - - alleged misconduct which is denied but which, even if proven, was not directed to plaintiff and caused him no harm.

dismissal of the First through Fourth Causes of Action alleged under Civil RICO (the basis of Federal Court jurisdiction), the Fifth Cause of Action should be dismissed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3).

8. The Sixth and Seventh Causes of Action (Complaint, ¶¶ 896-899) are not alleged against the FlashDancers Defendants.

WHEREFORE, declarant urges the Court to dismiss this action, with costs, for all of the reasons set forth in the motion to dismiss filed by the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants, together with the reasons set forth above.

Executed under the penalty of perjury at New York, New York on the 19th day of September, 2003.

DEFENDANT HENNING'S MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF HIS MOTION TO DISMISS

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Plaintiff Roy Den Hollander, proceeding pro se, brings this action against Detective Robert W. Henning and numerous other domestic and international defendants alleging violation of various provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"). In this action, plaintiff alleges that various defendants conspired to violate the RICO statute.

Defendant Henning now moves, pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, for an order dismissing plaintiff's complaint against defendant Henning because (1) plaintiff has failed to state a claim upon which relief may be granted against defendant Henning<sup>1</sup> and (2) plaintiff's state law claims cannot proceed as a matter of law because plaintiff has failed to meet the applicable statute of limitations and failed to comply with conditions precedent.

As such, defendant Henning respectfully submits that the Court must grant his Motion to Dismiss.

PLAINTIFF'S STATE LAW CLAIMS SHOULD BE DISMISSED AS TIME-BARRED AND FOR HIS FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH CONDITIONS PRECEDENT

A: Plaintiff's claims are barred by the statute of limitations:

The statute of limitations applicable to pendent state tort actions is determined by reference to the state's law regarding statute of limitations. Guaranty Trust Co. v. York, 326 U.S. 99 (1943). Under New York law, all personal injury claims brought against a city or any of its officers, agents or employees must be commenced within one year and ninety days after the occurrence of the event upon which the claim is based. Gen. Mun. Law §50-i; Norr v. Spiegler, 72 A.D.2d 20, 22-23, 423 N.Y.S.2d 177 (1st Dept. 1980), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 661, 438 N.Y.S.2d 1000 (1981); Singleton v. City of Newburgh, 1 F. Supp. 2d 306, 316-317 (S.D.N.Y. 1998).

Defendant Henning's only interaction with defendant Alina Shiplina was on June 27, 2001, when she came to the 114th Precinct to complain that her ex-husband had created an internet website on which he printed portions of her diary and posted nude pictures of her. Defendant Henning then investigated the complaint but no action was taken against plaintiff, Roy Den Hollander. Plaintiff's complaint was filed on April 18, 2003, well over 1 year and 90 days after any interaction between co-defendants Henning and Shiplina. Therefore, any conceivable state law claims against defendant Henning are time-barred.

B: Plaintiff failed to file a Notice of Claim:

Furthermore, all of plaintiff's state law claims must also be dismissed for plaintiff's failure to file a timely notice of claim. Under New York law, a notice of claim is a condition precedent to bringing a tort action against a municipality or any of its officers, agents or employees. N.Y. Gen. Mun. Law §§50-e and 50-i. Moreover, Gen. Mun. Law §50-e requires that a notice of claim be filed within ninety days of the accrual of the cause of action. These provisions have been strictly construed by both state and federal courts. Baez v. New York City

Health and Hosp. Corp., 80 N.Y.2d 571, 576; 592 N.Y.S.2d 640 (1992); Shakur v. McGrath, 517 F.2d 983, 985 (2d. Cir. 1975). A plaintiff's failure to timely file a notice of claim requires dismissal of pendent state tort claims against the City or its employees in a federal civil rights action. Robinson v. Matos, 97 CV 7144 (TPG), 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 5447 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 16, 1999) (citing Felder v. Casey, 487 U.S. 131, 151 (1988)). Specifically, failure to comply with these requirements requires a dismissal for failure to state a cause of action. Brown v. Metropolitan Transportation Authority, 717 F. Supp. 257, 259 (S.D.N.Y. 1989).

Since plaintiff did not filed a timely notice of claim in this case (see Pawar Declaration, ¶ 3), any conceivable state law claims must be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and all the documents submitted herein and by co-defendants, defendant Henning's Motion to Dismiss must be granted.

AFFIDAVIT OF ROBERT W.
HENNING IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO DISMISS

03 CV 2717 (MBM)

I, ROBERT W. HENNING declare, under penalty of perjury and pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1746, that the following statements are true to the best of my knowledge.

1. I am a detective with the New York City Police Department assigned to the 114th Precinct.
2. On June 27, 2001, Alina Shiplina came to the 114th precinct with an interpreter with respect to a Family Court Order of Protection.
3. I do not recall ever speaking to Alina Shiplina again.
4. Ms. Shiplina complained about a website that her ex-husband had created that allegedly contained a diary of hers and nude photos of her.
5. I contacted Roy Den Hollander and asked that he have his attorney contact me regarding the pending allegation by Ms. Shiplina.
6. I never again heard from Mr. Hollander or his attorney.
7. Due to problems in having the Russian website translated and the tragedy of September 11, 2001, I was not able to contact the District Attorney's office until April 2002.
8. On April 23, 2002 I contacted Robert Alexander, Assistant District Attorney in the Queens County, Computer Crimes Division regarding the website.
9. I was subsequently informed by the District Attorney's Office that the website did not violate the Order of Protection and that they would not prosecute the matter.

Dear Mr. Hollander:

Recall that this firm represents Mr. Paulsen. Before we prepare a motion to dismiss we want to discuss whether you would prefer not to be distracted by Mr. Paulsen's motion and rather focus on the other defendants. Mr. Paulsen is medically sick and will undergo surgery soon. Also, he is not a pornographer.

We sense the hurt that prompted you to file the lawsuit. But Mr. Paulsen does not belong in the case.

Please consider stipulating to the dismissal of Mr. Paulsen.

We must hear from you by August 13.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Stern:

I am terribly sorry to hear of Mr. Paulsen's illness and hope all goes well in the upcoming operation.

I respectfully decline your offer to stipulate Mr. Paulsen out of this lawsuit. What may be of assistance for you and your client is that at the pretrial conference Judge Mukasey indicated he would accept a joint motion to dismiss. I cannot speak for the defendants' attorneys, but it may be worthwhile contacting them to determine whether they intend to save time and cost by going in on a joint motion.

Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

This is a reply to summons 03 CV 2717

We, Anastasia A. Vasilyeva and Nicolay N. Vasilyev, received summons on 6.14.03 and we want to respond to the following matter:

Sorry for our English, we have been in the USA for only two years, our income is low, we have two children-3.5 and 7 months old, my husband doesn't have a job, and he is learning English and babysitting our children. We can't afford to hire an attorney and translator, please let us answer in Russian.

On 6.14.03, a messenger from a court delivered two documents for me and for my husband NICOLAY N. VASILYEV that were from Roy Den Hollander. Since we have been in the USA for two years, our knowledge of English doesn't allow us to read and understand the containment of the documents.

However, we understood that the person Roy Den Hollander illegally accuses us of breaking the US laws in the following categories:

1. Prostitution and spread of prostitution
2. Drugs and distribution of drugs
3. Connections with the organized crime world in Russia, Mexico, Cyprus, and USA;
4. Asserting that my husband and my family are criminal figures in the South Russia and Krasnodar.
5. While leaving in Russia we committed assorted crimes
6. Violation by US rules of entering and living in the USA
7. Committing fraud against Federal organization-Immigration and Naturalization and illegal obtaining of the permanent residents (green cards) to live in the USA.
8. Money laundering and various violations of law.

We certainly deny all the accusations and allegations against us.

All the assumptions and allegations don't have documental basis, and are built on rumors and information, as Roy Den Hollander admits, which he made up, driven by anger and offense.

In order for the honorable court to fairly determine our innocence on all the accusations from Roy Den Hollander, we have the evidence that could help You determine our innocence.

A year or half a year before leaving for the permanent living in the USA (we came to the USA On June 28, 2001) we lived on 7 Hakurate Street, apartment 11, Krasnodar, Russia. To our workplace, which is located in “Tatyana Vasilyeva’s Fashion House” 158 Krasnaya St., Krasnodar, Russia, came a man who did not speak Russian, who introduced himself as Roy Den Hollander and said that he was the husband of my former student Alina Shipilina, who was attending “The School of Fashion and Beauty” of “Tatyana Vasilyeva’s Fashion House” five years ago.

I knew English better than my husband, so I was the one who was talking to Roy Den Hollander. He immediately gave us a copy of a document, which he said was his wife’s personal diary. He said that his wife was a prostitute, and that she promised to end it when she married him. But she deceived him and once she came to the USA and got the status, she continued to be a prostitute. Then she divorced him, and he lost a lot of money. He told us to read the diary and said that he will be back to talk to us the next day. In the diary were private thoughts from Alina Shipilina. The next day Roy Den Hollander came back and started asking us what we knew bad about his wife and what information and proof we can provide for the court to get his money back. We were shocked by the questions. We said that we had no proof and that we know nothing bad about his wife. We gave him a copy of the application when his wife was a student of “School of Fashion and Beauty.” We showed and gave him several pictures of her from the beauty contest when she was participating and became “Vice Miss’ and “Miss FA”

At the time when his wife was attending “School of Fashion and Beauty” and was participating in a beauty contest, I wasn’t married (we got married on June 4, 1999) to Nicolay N. Vasilyev. My husband didn’t know Alina Shipilina and saw her twice in his life.

When Roy Den Hollander understood that we couldn’t help him with anything he got nervous. He asked if we could introduce him to people mentioned in his wife’s diary. He wanted to meet his wife’s ex-boyfriend. I said that I was going to call that person and ask if he wanted to speak to Roy Den Hollander. Ex-boyfriend of Alina Shipilina agreed to meet with Roy Den Hollander. Their meeting was scheduled on our premises. Roy Den Hollander and the ex-boyfriend decided to talk in undisclosed location. After that we never saw Roy Den Hollander.

On June 28, 2001 we came to the USA.

- My husband’s name is not Dima-it’s NICOLAY. Dima- is his name that was given to him at christening. Everyone knows about it –friends and employers. Only Roy Den Hollander doesn’t know about it. This proves about that he is using false facts, and also doesn’t have a serious attitude to the Court;
- We won green cards while being in Russia in 1999. The court can verify the date by requesting information from the Federal Center of Immigration And Naturalization.

- Documents for obtaining the right to live with a status of permanent resident (green cards) we collected and sent to the embassy in Moscow;
- We went through an interview with consuls in the US embassy in Moscow. The date the Court can verify by requesting information from the US embassy in Moscow.
- Along with other documents we have documents that prove lack of our criminal history and that we have no connections with the criminal organization.
- Before we were allowed to enter the US we were thoroughly checked by American special services;
- At that time I gave birth to my son on December 12, 1999.
- When we came to Milwaukee, we were living with our friends for a month. Their names are Arpik and Joseph Weitzer, clinical associate professor of University of Wisconsin Milwaukee/414 229-6887 their address: 2844 S 48 St. Milwaukee 532199 (414) 329-92-93
- Then we rented an apartment at: 2876 A South 46th Street Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53219, (414) 545-16-74, where we are living at a present time. The owner of the house Jamie Jamison tel. (414) 321-93-99, can prove that we live there permanently (it goes against Roy Den Hollander's accusations that we live in Greenfield).
- Anastasia A. Vasilyeva work from 2001 till now Custom Tailoring doing tailoring and alterations for men & women at address: 18900 W.Bluemound road; Brookfield, Wisconsin 53045/ 1-262-796-0434. I work 40 Hours a day. If necessary I could provide my checks for the whole period of my employment. As a witness I could offer my boss Cindy Zahnow. This disproves the accusation and allegation of Roy Den Hollander that we are rich and have our business;
- Nicolay N. Vasilyev. For the first six month he was working at Mc Donald's restaurants, Milwaukee, WI. He is not working now, as he is looking after our two sons and studies English for entering the university.
- On December 1, 2002 we had a second son. On the next day of my son's birth, he had to go through a serious surgery. He spent two months in a children hospital. He is handicapped. He is deaf on a right ear, he has a lot of health problems and before he is 5 or 6 he has to go through minimum of two surgeries .We spend all our time at the hospital. We attach a letter from the hospital and you could also contact the surgeon who is treating my son for the proof that we were always next to our child. The name of the doctor is Joel Shilyansky, MD assistant professor/ 9000 w. Wisconsin Av. Milwaukee, WI 53200 (414) 266-6561; this disproves the accusations of Roy Den Hollander that we are traveling around the world and across America and have plenty of free time.
- The Court can request the customs service in the USA and ask about how many times we left the country and Milwaukee. During last two years we didn't go anywhere. This disproves the accusations and allegation of Roy Den Hollander that we distribute prostitution and drugs;
- On December 25, 2002 our father came from Russia. Special agent services and FBI/Federal Bureau of Investigation inspected all of us. The name of the agent is Barry P. Babler, 330 e. Kilbourn Ave. Milwaukee, WI 53202 tel. (414) 276-46-84. The services and FBI had no issues.

- We can provide the documents, pictures, videos, articles from newspapers and magazines about our life in Russia at any request of the court.

Our facts overturn the above accusations and allegations of Roy Den Hollander and prove that they are false.

On the basis of the above mentioned facts we are asking:

1. To refuse the plaintiff's request
2. As we don't speak English and can't understand the meaning of the documents that we receive, and according to the US law we have equal rights as all other participants of Court proceeding, and we also have a right to receive true and understandable information on our native language, we are asking to keep all the information and trial proceeding in Russian, and in case of any contacts with court representatives or other officials, we kindly request translation of everything that is said or written into Russian.
3. As a family with low income we are asking for an attorney.
4. In case we need to spend our time for the judicial and other purposes and that will be the time my wife will have to skip work and when my husband will not be able to look after the children, we are asking to compensate for babysitting and for each working day at my job rate.
5. If it is required for us to be present in NY court, we are asking for the additional payment of air fare and housing;
6. All the financial expenses listed above should be presented to Roy Den Hollander.

Re: ROY DEN HOLLANDER v. FLASH DANCERS TOPLESS CLUB, et al.
03-CV-2717 (MBM)

Dear Chief Judge Mukasey:

I am the attorney representing Cybertech Internet Solutions, Inc. (sued herein, with no small degree of absurdity, as "Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network"), one of many defendants in the above-referenced action. I wish to thank this Court for graciously extending my time to submit a response to Plaintiff's Complaint as I awaited my admission to practice in the Southern District and dealt with other pressing matters.

Defendant Cybertech Internet Solutions, Inc. now joins the motion made by Defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich, through their attorneys, to dismiss the Complaint filed by Roy Den Hollander when he commenced the above-referenced action in this Court on April 18, 2003. Defendant Cybertech agrees with the argument, advanced in the aforementioned motion and supported by numerous other defendants herein, that Plaintiff's Complaint is legally insufficient in failing to meet established standards for maintaining an action under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), pursuant to the applicable Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as they have been interpreted by the courts in this and other Federal Circuits. Since Mr. Hollander has made no allegations against Defendant Cybertech that fall outside of RICO, there is therefore no reason for this Court to allow Plaintiff to continue maintaining his action against Cybertech, even if he is permitted to maintain his action under some other theory against any of the remaining Defendants.

With respect to the specific allegations made against Defendant Cybertech in the Complaint, Plaintiff purports to be under the assumption that individuals who may be employed by some of the other Defendants are also employees of Cybertech. As counsel for Defendant Cybertech, I would like to stress to this Court that Cybertech has no employment relationship with any of the other Defendants herein or with any individuals who work for any of these Defendants, nor does Cybertech have any knowledge of whether the individuals who work for the other Defendants are employees or independent contractors or what their immigration status may be. While Cybertech does not hire illegal immigrants and certainly does not condone this unlawful practice on the part of other employers, this corporation is unaware that any of the other Defendants engage in such a practice. Furthermore, Cybertech would never be a participant in any scheme or a party to any agreement involving the hiring of illegal immigrants or any other unlawful activity, notwithstanding the fanciful conspiracy theories suggested by Plaintiff in the Complaint.

Defendant Cybertech would also like to join other Defendants in requesting that Plaintiff be enjoined from filing any further claims related to this matter, together with whatever other and further relief this Court deems just and proper. Thank you for your attention and consideration.

Respectfully submitted,

This memorandum is submitted in support of the motion by Defendant Bank of Cyprus, Ltd. (the "Bank") to dismiss, with prejudice, Plaintiff's complaint (the "Complaint") pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("FRCP") for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted and to grant such other relief as the court should deem fitting and proper. This memorandum is supported by the accompanying affidavits of Yiannis Kypri, dated June 17, 2004, Athos Hadjimitsis, dated June 17, 2004, and Zaharo Sofianou, dated June 30, 2004.

I. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

On March 11, 2000, Plaintiff Roy Den Hollander, married Defendant Alina Shipilina. The match seems not to have been made in heaven and they were soon divorced. In the aftermath of this personal misfortune, Plaintiff has come to believe organized crime, comprised of more than sixty defendants, caused his loss. He believes that these disparate individuals and entities caused the marriage to make him a pawn in their activities.

Plaintiff's beliefs are unbelievable. He must look elsewhere for the cause of his misfortune, including to himself. Defendants did not marry Ms. Shipilina. Plaintiff did. Defendants did not divorce her. Plaintiff did. Certainly the Bank of Cyprus played no role in this sorry affair. Correspondingly, Plaintiff has not and can not state any cause of action against the Bank. Furthermore, he has not and can not show that the Bank caused his loss. His is a personal misfortune common to half the population and, like the others, he must seek a personal recovery. The Court should facilitate this recovery by dismissing the within Complaint with prejudice. It would, thereby, also bring a measure of justice to the Bank.

II. STATEMENT OF FACTS

On April 13, 2003, Plaintiff Roy Den Hollander filed the within Complaint. Approximately a year later, Plaintiff served it on the Bank.<sup>1</sup> Nearly one hundred pages long, the Complaint alleges a colorful narrative of international crime involving money laundering, white slavery, drug trafficking, murder, terror, pornography, and prostitution. From Moscow to New York to Limassol to Mexico City the Complaint alleges acts of criminality against over sixty individuals and corporate entities, all of which purportedly combined to cause the marriage of Plaintiff to Alina Shipilina and their subsequent divorce.

The Bank's only purported involvement in this unfortunate affair is limited to nonspecific acts of (1) laundering overseas revenues from "enterprise" activities; (2) providing members of the "enterprise" with financial accounts and transaction services, and (3) disguising the source, ownership, and location of "enterprise" proceeds. This activity is alleged to have been

*Exclude this from appointment and in accordance with conducted from Cyprus and from the representative office of the Bank in New York City. No factual detail is provided.<sup>2</sup>

The only specific accusation against the bank is that Plaintiff's ex-wife, Alina Shipilina, allegedly "deposits some of the money she smuggles overseas into her Global Equity Fund, account number 54660, at the Bank of Cyprus branch located at 282 Aigos Flyaeeos, Aiga Fyna 3083, Limassol." Regardless of whether the Bank would be at fault as to these purported acts by Ms. Shipilina, if they occurred; as it happens, they never occurred. The Bank does not have any account holder by the name of Alina Shipilina or any of the other names attributed to her by Plaintiff in the Complaint. See Affidavits of Yiannis Kypri, Athos Hadjimitsis, and Zaharo Sofianou. Nor does the Bank have any account bearing the number 54660. Id. Nor has the Bank ever done business in New York with the Plaintiff or any defendant. The allegations by Plaintiff are entirely groundless. Nonetheless, Plaintiff alleges four, separate violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO") by the Bank<sup>3</sup>. Not only are his allegations factually groundless, his pleading is structurally flawed, fatally so. The Complaint fails to state any claim against the Bank.

III. ARGUMENT

A. PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT SHOULD BE DISMISSED AS TO THE BANK OF CYPRUS

This dispute, if there is one, is between Plaintiff and his ex-wife. Organized Crime did not cause Plaintiff's misfortune. Certainly, the Bank played no role. Be that as it may, the Complaint still presents unsupported, stigmatizing, and conclusory allegations of racketeering activity as to which the Bank must seek vindication. To this end, the Bank asks that the Court dismiss Plaintiff's complaint with prejudice. Despite being tome-like in length, the Complaint fails to state any claim, whatever, against the Bank.

1. Standard for Granting a Motion to Dismiss

A court should grant a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) if, after construing the allegations liberally and in a light most favorable to the pleader, it appears beyond doubt that the pleader can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Harris v. City of New York, et al., 186 F.3d 243, 247 (2nd Cir. 1999) (citations omitted). In evaluating the underlying allegations, the court is not required to accept as true "unwarranted deductions." First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 771 (2d Cir. 1994) (citations omitted).

2. Standard for Pleading a RICO Count

In general, to state a civil RICO count pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1962, a plaintiff must allege: (1) conduct by a defendant (2) consisting of a pattern (3) of racketeering activity (4) to affect an enterprise (5) engaged in interstate or international commerce (6) that injures a plaintiff's business or property. Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex, Co., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3285, 87 L.Ed.2d 346 (U.S. 1985). None of Plaintiff's four causes of action against the Bank makes these allegations.<sup>4</sup>

a. Plaintiff's First Cause of Action "RICO: Use of Income from Racketeering Activities" Must Be Dismissed

Plaintiff's first cause of action against the Bank alleges violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(a). Complaint ¶¶ 886-887. Within the six basic elements just enumerated, to state a claim under Section 1962(a), "a plaintiff must allege injury 'by reason of defendants' investment of racketeering income in an enterprise." Ouaknine, et al. v. MacFarlane, et al., 897 F.2d 75 (2nd Cir. 1990) (internal citations omitted). Plaintiff makes no such allegation against the Bank. He offers, instead, the contradictory allegation that the Bank violated 18 U.S.C. 1962(a) because it transferred money from illegal enterprise activities (1) "to avoid U.S. reporting activities", (2) "to hide the origin and ownership of the money", (3) "to distribute the proceeds from unlawful Enterprise activities", and (4) "to generate revenues for its banking operations". Complaint ¶¶ 633 - 636. Instead of alleging the requisite conduct of the investment of racketeering income in an enterprise, Plaintiff claims that the income from the alleged activities was invested in the Bank – not in the enterprise. Plaintiff has it backwards and fails to plead the necessary conduct. Accordingly, the first cause of action must be dismissed.

b. Plaintiff's Second Cause of Action "RICO: Racketeering Activities to Maintain Interest or Control" Must Be Dismissed

Plaintiff's second cause of action against the Bank alleges violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(b). Complaint ¶¶ 888 - 889. As a threshold proposition, a claim under Section 1962(b) must allege that the defendant acquired or maintained an interest in, or control of, an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. Dubai Islamic Bank v. Citibank, N.A., 126 F. Supp 2d 659, 670 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). The Complaint is devoid of any such allegation. Nowhere among the nine hundred fifteen paragraphs comprising Plaintiff's Complaint is there any mention, whatever, of conduct in which the Bank acquired, maintained, or controlled any interest in any enterprise. Just as in the case of his first cause of action, the second cause of action must be dismissed for failure to plead the requisite conduct. Id.

c. Plaintiff's Third Cause of Action "RICO: Participation in the Conduct of the Enterprise Affairs" Must Be Dismissed

Plaintiff's third cause of action against the Bank alleges violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(c). Complaint ¶¶ 890 - 891. As the first order of business, to state a claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c) a plaintiff must allege that a defendant conducted or participated "in the conduct of . . . [an] enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity." U.S. v. Anthony Viola, et al., 33 F.3d 37, 40 (2d Cir. 1994) (quoting 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c)). Such conduct or participation, at a minimum, "must 'have some part in directing [the enterprise's] affairs'". Id. (quoting Reves v. Ernst & Young, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525, 536-537, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 1170 (1993)). Keeping cadence with his previous failures, Plaintiff has not alleged any such conduct, participation, or direction by the Bank. Accordingly, Plaintiff's third cause of action fails to state a claim and must be dismissed.

d. Plaintiff's Fourth Cause of Action "RICO: Conspiracy" Must Be Dismissed

Plaintiff's fourth cause of action against the bank alleges violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d). Complaint ¶¶ 892 - 893. At the outset, a claim under Section 1962(d), which involves conspiracy, must plead facts alleging that each defendant "knowingly agreed to participate in the conspiracy". Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F.Supp. 2d 340, 347 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (quoting Industrial Bank of Latvia v. Baltic Fin. Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist. LEXIS, *8, 93 Civ. 9032, 1994 WL 286162, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. June 24, 1994)). Plaintiff makes no such allegation against the Bank. He offers, instead, the vague, circular conclusions that the Bank provided an account for his ex-wife, transferred money, provided accounts and transaction services, and participated in conspiracies to violate Federal law. ¶¶ 827-830. Into what agreement did the Bank enter? With whom did the Bank agree? What was the conspiracy? These conclusory allegations are insufficient to allege conspiracy under 18 U.S.C. 1962(d). Schmidt, 16 F.Supp. at 354. Moreover, because Plaintiff has failed to plead any substantive RICO violation in Counts I through III of the Complaint, there can be no RICO conspiracy. Id. at 353. Accordingly, like the other causes, Plaintiff's fourth cause must be dismissed. To Judge decide

e. Plaintiff Has Failed to Plead Proximate Cause

Above all else, conduct by the Bank must proximately cause Plaintiff's injury. Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21 (2d Cir. 1990); Shaw v. Rolex Watch U.S.A., Inc., 745 F. Supp. 982, 985 (S.D.N.Y. 1990). In this case, Plaintiff has pleaded no proximate cause. In fact, Plaintiff has pleaded no cause at all. In addition, even if all that Plaintiff alleges is true and the Bank was (1) transferring overseas revenues from "enterprise" activities; (2) providing members of the "enterprise" with financial accounts and transaction services, (3) disguising the source, ownership, and location of "enterprise" proceeds, and (4) accepting deposits from his ex-wife, Plaintiff has failed to allege any facts tending to show that any of this alleged conduct injured him. Plaintiff has no grievance against the Bank and the Court should not entertain Plaintiff's imaginings. The Court, the Bank, and Plaintiff all have more productive uses for their resources.

f. The Complaint Must be Dismissed with Prejudice

Plaintiff's failure to plead any fact sufficient to support his claims requires dismissal of the Complaint with prejudice. Cortec Industries, Inc. v. Sum Holding L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 48 (2d Cir. 1991). This failure is predictable. There is no cause of action against the Bank. Accordingly this failure is not and can not be corrected by Plaintiff's assertion of conclusory allegations. Erwin Protter, Fast Food Franchise, Inc. v. Nathan's Famous Systems, Inc., 925 F.

Supp. 947, 954-955 (E.D.N.Y. 1996). Plaintiff should not be granted leave to amend his Complaint. His complaint should be dismissed with prejudice.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully requested that the motion of Defendant Bank of Cyprus, Ltd., to dismiss the Complaint, with prejudice, and to grant such other relief as the Court should deem fitting and proper, be granted in its entirety.

Athos Hadjimitsis, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am the Compliance Officer of Defendant, Bank of Cyprus, Ltd. (the "Bank"), and am authorized to submit this affidavit in support of the within motion by the Bank.

2. Of my own personal knowledge and from the books and records of the Bank, to which I have access, I am fully familiar with the facts hereinafter set forth.

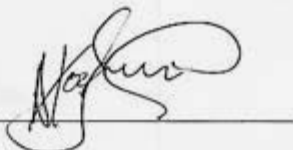

3. Among my duties, I regularly review accounts and account holders and maintain records of the same. In this capacity, on June 10, 2004, I searched all relevant Bank records for any account held by Alina Shipilina, Alina Chipilina, or Alina Angelina (the "Account Holder") during the period of January 1, 2000, through December 31, 2003. No such person maintained any account in any branch of the Bank during such time.

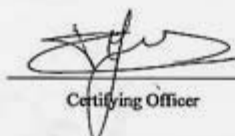

4. I also searched all relevant Bank records for any account existing during the period of January 1, 2000, through December 31, 2003 and bearing the number 54660, cited by Plaintiff as belonging to the Account Holder. No such account existed or exists in any branch of the Bank.

1. I am the Chief Representative of the Bank of Cyprus, Ltd. (the "Bank") and am in charge of the Representative Office of the Bank located at 80 Broad Street, New York, New York 10004 (the "Representative Office"). I have been Chief Representative since the Office opened in 1998 and am authorized to submit this affidavit in support of the within motion by the Bank.

2. Of my own personal knowledge and from the books and records of the Representative Office, to which I have access, I am fully familiar with the facts hereinafter set forth.

3. The Bank is headquartered in Nicosia, Cyprus and, by international standards, is quite small. The Representative Office is correspondingly small and typically has two or three employees, including me. It is the policy of the Bank to know its clients and this policy is carried out and enforced.

4. In my role as Chief Representative of the Bank in New York, I caused the reviews described in the affidavits of Yiannis Kypri and Athos Hadjimitsis to be conducted. I refer the Court to the aforesaid affidavits for the results of these reviews.

5. The Representative Office does not perform any financial transactions for any client of the Bank or for any other third parties. I have never met, do not know, and the Representative Office has never done business with Plaintiff, his ex-wife, or any defendant named in the within Complaint. In particular, because they are very few in number, the Representative Office rarely comes into contact with Russians who have business with the Bank. Hence, if Plaintiff's ex-wife or any other defendant of Russian extraction had had any contact or done any business with the Office I head, I am certain that I would have learned of and would remember it. No one by the name of Alina Shipilina, Alina Chipilina, Angelina Shipilina, or Angelina Chipalina has ever come in contact with me or my Office. Nor has any other defendant.

Under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America, I declare that the foregoing is true and correct.

Dated: New York, New York
June 30, 2004

Zaharo Sofianou

Subscribed and sworn to before me this thirtieth day of June, 2004.

1. Plaintiff's memorandum of law in opposition to the motion to dismiss by the Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy & Associates; Mundy; and Petrovich that was joined by movants, FlashDancers, Shipilina, Paulsen and Henning.

Preliminary Statement

The question before this Court is not whether the plaintiff has proven at this early stage of the proceeding that the Enterprise (the “Russian mafia”) and some of its members, including the Enterprise movants, violated the RICO statute and state law, but whether the Complaint alleges they did. Allegations are the assertions in a complaint that set out what the plaintiff expects to prove. Black’s Law Dictionary. Allegations are not the “proof”, “evidence”, “establishment of”, “demonstration”, “explanation”, “showing” or “corroboration” that the Enterprise movants claim the Complaint should have provided. The plaintiff must not be put to the test to prove his allegations at the pleading stage. NOW, Inc v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994).

This memorandum of law by the plaintiff contains five major sections in opposition to the five motions to dismiss brought by the domestic (residence within the US) Enterprise defendants who have appeared in this civil RICO action. These defendants are collectively referred to as “the Enterprise movants” and consist of the Kuba, Mundy & Associates law firm; Mundy; Petrovich; Flash Dancers Topless Club; Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.; Lepofsky-CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.; Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers; Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5; Shipilina; Paulsen; and Henning. All the Enterprise movants joined the memorandum of law submitted by Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Mundy and Petrovich. This section, Section 1, addresses that memorandum while the remaining four sections address any new issues raised by the motions, declarations, affidavits or memoranda separately submitted by the other Enterprise movants.

When this memorandum refers to fewer than all the Enterprise movants, the term “Enterprise movant” is followed by the person’s name. Other defendants in this action who are not presently moving to dismiss are collectively referred to as “other mafia defendants” or individually as “mafia defendant” followed by the person’s name. When the Complaint states Kuba, it is referring to the firm Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Cites to the Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich memorandum are in parentheses stating “Memorandum” followed by the page number and a hyphen that indicates the paragraph on that page. For example, (Memorandum p 28-1) refers to page 28, the first paragraph, and not necessarily the first full paragraph, but the first group of lines on that page. Cites to the Complaint are in parentheses stating “Complaint” followed by only the paragraph number. For example, (Complaint 267) refers to the numbered allegation 267, which deals with a Chechen crime clan.

The numbers and letters used for denoting sections in this memorandum are the same as those used in the Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich memorandum. This should make it easier for the Court to compare the two principal memoranda in this motion to dismiss.

The plaintiff uses the term “Russian mafia” to mean the Russian International Crime Organization or the “Enterprise” as stated in paragraph one of the Complaint. The “Russian mafia” includes those identified as Russian Mafiosi in the media and by law enforcement agencies; the targets of the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s (“FBI”) unit on Russian organized crime; various Russian, Chechen, American, Cypriot and Mexican gangsters along with those of other nationalities; assorted Chechen Islamic terrorists; and the more than thirty Russian gangs now operating in the US, most notably New York, Miami, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver, Robert I. Friedman, Red Mafiya: How the Russian Mob Has Invaded America, p. xix-xx, Little Brown & Company (2002). The defendants in this action comprise only a small number the members of the Russian mafia. (Complaint 15)

The purpose of this memorandum by the plaintiff is to point out the errors and omissions made by the Enterprise movants in their motion papers concerning the law and the Complaint. This memorandum's main purpose is not to argue facts as in a summary judgment motion, since discovery has not yet occurred. Part of the Enterprise movants' obvious strategy is to have this Court treat their motion to dismiss as one for summary judgment. It would give this Court, which belongs to a circuit renown for its disfavorable disposition to civil RICO cases, Batista, Civil Rico Prac. Manual, 2003 Cum. Supp., 3.31A, an expedient means for disposing of a complex case against a criminal entity that spans the globe. However, even under the summary judgment standard, the courts should be reluctant to grant a dismissal because where motive and intent play leading roles, the proof is largely in the hands of the alleged conspirators and hostile witnesses thicken the plot. Cox v. Administrator US Steel & Carneige, 17 F.3d 1386, 1400 (11th Cir. 1994). In the case of a motion to dismiss where discovery has not even begun, this is even more pertinent.

In addition, this memorandum seeks to debunk the many misleading arguments and implications contained in the Enterprise movants' memoranda of law and declarations. A pervasive and key feint of the Enterprise movants is repeatedly objecting to the Complaint for failing to "prove", "evidence", "establish", "demonstrate", "show", or "corroborate" various elements of RICO and the predicate acts as a reason for dismissing the Complaint. In the law, “prove” means to establish a fact as true by evidence; “evidence” means any species of proof; “establish” means prove; “demonstrate” means to prove indubitably; “show” means to make clear by evidence or to prove; and “corroborate” to add confirming facts or evidence. Black’s Law Dictionary. Complaints are not meant to provide these functions—they are the beginning of the fact-finding process not the end. The Enterprise movants apparently want to return to yesteryear when under federal practice, prior to the federal rules, the pretrial functions of notice-giving, issue formulation and fact revelation were performed primarily, and inadequately, by the pleadings. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500, 91 L.Ed. 451, 67 S.Ct. 385 (1947). Back then, inquiry into the issues and the facts before trial was narrowly confined and was often cumbersome in method. Id. at 501. The federal rules, however, restrict pleadings to the task of general notice giving and invest the deposition-discovery process with a vital role in the preparation for trial. Id. “It is a familiar rule of pleading ... that evidence by which an allegation is sought to be established need not be pleaded. ... Such matters [of evidence], however, are for proof and we doubt the propriety, much less the necessity of their allegation.” Cater Constr. Co. v. Nischwitz, 111 F.2d 971, 973 (7th Cir. 1940).

RICO complaints are not held to a higher standard when it comes to pleading. “Congress resolved to address the problem of organized crime by strengthening the legal tools in the evidence gathering process ....” Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 496, 146 L.Ed.2d 561, 120 S.Ct. 1608 (2000). That did not mean requiring evidence be provided in a complaint for each element of every alleged predicate act and RICO violation. In refusing to dismiss a RICO complaint this Court stated in Gitterman v. Vitoulis, 564 F.Supp. 46, 49 (SDNY 1982), “The purpose of a motion to dismiss is not to test the weight of the evidence which might be offered in support of it but to assess the legal feasibility of the complaint.” (Citing Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639 (2d Cir. 1980)). In addition, the “[d]ismissal of a complaint before discovery is a drastic step which should not be taken unless it appears to a certainty that the plaintiff is entitled to no relief under any set of facts which could be proved in support of the claim.” Gitterman at 49 (citing Wade v. Johnson Controls, Inc., 693 F.2d 16, 22 (2d Cir. 1982)). And recently, the Supreme Court, in reversing the Second Circuit, stated the federal “pleading standard relies on liberal discovery rules and summary judgment motions to define disputed facts and issues and to dispose of unmeritorious claims.” Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 512, 152 L.Ed.2d 1, 122 S.Ct. 992 (2002). “The provisions for discovery are so flexible and the provisions for pretrial procedure and summary judgment so effective, that attempted surprise in federal practice is aborted very easily, synthetic issues detected, and the gravamen of the dispute brought frankly into the open for the inspection of the court.” Id., at 512, 513 (quoting 5 C. Wright & A. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure, 1202, p. 76 (2ed. 1990)).

Alternatively, the Enterprise movants use the tactic of painting the Complaint as not meeting the fair notice requirements by objecting to a paragraph or paragraphs in the Complaint for not containing enough information. Of course, they fail to cite other paragraphs with additional information that make their objections groundless. Or the Enterprise movants object to the Complaint’s allegations as “general”, “insufficient”, “inadequate”, “bare”, or “conclusory”. In the law, a conclusion is an inference drawn from evidentiary facts, Black’s Law Dictionary; allegations are not conclusions; they come at the end of the process and not the beginning. In addition, all that the federal rules require in a pleading is that a party should set forth the averments in general terms. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1281, p 519. “The modern philosophy concerning pleadings is that they do little more than indicate generally the type of litigation that is involved. A generalized summary of the case that affords fair notice is all that is required.” SEC v. Timetrust, Inc., 28 F.Supp. 34, 41 (ND Cal. 1939).

In sum, part of the Enterprise movants’ strategy is to obtain dismissal based on their erroneous effort to have the Court apply a higher standard than that required for pleadings, and, on the other hand, to get a dismissal based on their inaccurate characterizations that the Complaint’s allegations fall below the actual standard required.

Another tactic used by the Enterprise movants is to trivialize the dangers of the Russian mafia by calling the Complaint “frivolous” and “a delusional, imaginary tale of fantasy.” (Memorandum p 2-1) The plaintiff has received four telephone threats—three of which were recorded, copies of two of those recordings are in the possession of Enterprise movant Mundy. (Complaint 282, 289, 318 and June 19, 2003 letter to the Court) The New York FBI warned the plaintiff not to open his door to anyone he doesn’t know and to watch out for himself when out in public. (Complaint 866, 867) But this Court need not rely solely on the Complaint’s allegations for determining whether it is “delusional;” it can take judicial notice in considering a motion to dismiss, Hirsch v. Arthur Anderson & Co., 72 F.3d 1085, 1088, 1092 (2d Cir. 1995), that the danger of the Russian mafia to US citizens, of which the plaintiff is one, is no “imaginary tale of fantasy.”

Before Congress in 1996, then FBI Director Louis Freeh said that when freedom was established in Russia, it helped spread the existing criminal network to expand abroad. Emergency Net News Service, Friday, May 3, 1996, Vol 2 – 124. He added, “Evidence that organized crime activity from these areas is expanding and will continue to expand to the United States is well-documented.” Id. At the same Congressional hearings, then CIA Director John Deutsch said, “Russia’s criminal groups reach across international borders, including our own ...

[and] have the potential to support terrorism, and contribute to the proliferation of materials, technology and weapons of mass destruction.” Id. While the last part of this quote concerns the Tom Clancy novel The Sum of All Fears, this Complaint does not deal with nuclear weapons of mass destruction, just the more mundane, run of the mill Russian criminal operations in America, such as money laundering, illegal money transactions, prostitution, narcotics trafficking, extortion and fraud that are often carried out in cooperation with La Cosa Nostra. The Center for Strategic and International Studies, Report on Russian Organized Crime, 1997, Task Force headed by William H. Webster.

The Russian mafia has been operating in the United States for years. Scott P. Boylan, Organized Crime and Corruption in Russia, Vol. 19, Fordham Int’l L.J., 1999, 2013 (1996). With the fall of the Soviet Union, the activities of Russian organized crime groups have spread to the United States and Europe. Id. “Not only does the Mafia kill and steal in Russia, it does so in the United States as well.” Id. at 2001. Mafia members are involved in "theft, extortion, money-laundering, gun-trafficking, drug running, prostitution, smuggling, loan sharking, contract killing and more." Id. “The U.S. Department of Justice has established task forces to deal with the Russian Mafia in New York, Los Angeles, and Miami.” Id. In 1994, the Russian mob had more than 300 members in the New York area alone, making it larger than the Bonanno, Colombo, or Lucchese crime families. Allan Friedman, The Organizatsiya: Brooklyn's Booming Russian Mob is Slicker, Smarter, and Much Meaner than La Cosa Nostra, N.Y. Mag., Nov. 7, 1994, at 50. Russia’s international professional criminals have caused the most economic damage in the US. Scott O’Neal, Russian Organized Crime, FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin, May 2000. “Blending financial sophistication with bone-crunching violence, the Russian mob has become the FBI’s most formidable criminal adversary, creating an international criminal colossus that had surpassed the Columbian cartels, the Japanese Yakuza, the Chinese triads and the Italian mafia in wealth and weaponry.” Robert I. Friedman, Red Mafiya: How the Russian Mob Has Invaded America, p. xix. Unlike the former Communist Party that was out to bury us, today’s Russian syndicate has set out to fleece us.

The Enterprise movants, without the aid of discovery, state the motivation for the Complaint was to “humiliate” Enterprise movant Shipilina and the other defendants in this RICO action. (Memorandum p 2-1) As Charlie Chan once said, “truth cannot be an insult,” and if it injures a person’s self-respect that is the fault of the person, not the reporter. Discovery is the more appropriate forum for exploring motivations rather than a motion to dismiss. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. at 512. The Enterprise movants are simply engaging in character assassination—plaintiff seeks to humiliate, harass and is delusional—in order to shut down the argument and marginalize the plaintiff so that they do not have to argue the merits. The merits at this stage are whether the Complaint alleges a claim under the law. Just because the defendants may feel humiliated due to the exposure of their acts, is not a reason to dismiss a complaint that contains serious criminal allegations against a gang of Russian, Chechen and American criminals.

The Enterprise movants also try to trivialize the Complaint by saying it “attempts to allege.” (Memorandum p 2-2) The Complaint does not “attempt”, it alleges—that is what complaints do. And this Complaint alleges an enterprise, the Russian mafia, bringing prostitutes to New York and other states in the US, passing drugs and huge sums of money back and forth between countries, creating and trafficking in pornography, and threatening physical violence to anyone who might get in its way. (Complaint 10-15) The Complaint makes clear that a central member and site of some of the Enterprise’s illegal actions is the establishment called “Flash Dancers Topless Club,” located on Broadway and 52d Street in New York City, and that the defendants often act in other countries where there is a link of some kind, such as a connection to brothels in Cyprus that some defendants control, or to specific participants in the Enterprise traveling in other places. (Complaint 322, 326, 329, 331, 334, 335, 338, 376, 402, 403, 410, 412, 413, 414, 417)

The Enterprise movants speculate that the only connection among the defendants—who make up a small portion of the Russian mafia—is that they came “into contact in some way with the plaintiff’s former wife,” Enterprise movant Shipilina. (Memorandum p 2-2) If coming into “contact” with movant Shipilina was the criteria for listing a person as a defendant, then it would be impossible to list them all for Shipilina has literally had thousands of customers who have “come into contact” with her. No, the Complaint lists only those persons that the plaintiff has been able to identify, or, at least, indicate by a pseudonym, that have caused the plaintiff harm and are connected by the common purpose of lucrative activities in hard currency markets which unites members of the Russian mafia. (Complaint 2, 16-127)

All the RICO defendants do have some connection with Enterprise movant Shipilina because she’s the thread that weaves through this section of the Russian mafia. The defendants are fellow travelers who committed predicate acts in order to get Enterprise movant Shipilina into the US, keep her there and expand the activities of the Russian mafia to its and their benefit. In the Watergate scandal, reporters Woodward and Bernstein followed the money; here the plaintiff followed the trail of Shipilina until he and a graduate of Harvard Law realized the extent of the underworld workings that had caused the plaintiff so much harm.

The Enterprise movants also advocate dismissal of the Complaint because “many of [the defendants] [the plaintiff] is unable to name.” (Memorandum p 2-2) Well, what do they expect?

The Russian mafia is a secretive organization whose crimes and threats aren't usually made with legal names given. Besides, a complaint "may name an unknown defendant by using a "John Doe" appellation or other description if the plaintiff has been unable to ascertain the real identity of the defendant. Moore's Fed. Prac., 10.02(2)(d)(i), 3rd Edition.

This Complaint not only seeks compensation and protection for the plaintiff, but in its own small way, hopes to take a step along the road mapped by the RICO statute: "the eradication of organized crime in the United States." Pub.L. 91-254, 84 Stat. 922 (1970). "Congress found that 'organized crime in the United States [had become] a highly sophisticated, diversified and widespread activity that annually drain[ed] billions of dollars from America's economy by unlawful conduct and illegal use of force, fraud and corruption.'" Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 496, 146 L.Ed.2d 561, 120 S.Ct. 1608 (2000)(quoting Pub.L. 91-254, 84 Stat. 922). "The result was to 'weaken the stability of the Nation's economy, harm innocent investors and competing organizations, interfere with free competition, ... threaten the domestic security, and undermine the general welfare of the nation and its citizens.'" Id. More succinctly, mobsters, including Russian ones, resort to violence when they don't get their way; they corrupt the system.

Statement of Facts

A. How did I get into this mess?

There are really only two ways a middle-aged, American, male lawyer could get involved with such a bunch—money or a woman. I took the road less traveled or, perhaps, more traveled.

An allegory should help. While sailing the waters of the former Soviet Union in my Sun Fish, doing my work for Kroll Associates, along comes this juggernaut of pimps, prostitutes, pornographers, pushers and assorted criminals of Russian, Chechen, American and other nationalities, including a few lunatics from the Chechen Special Islamic Regiment. The juggernaut, ever scanning for the easy prey of softhearted American businessmen, spots me, and sends out one of its prostitutes as bait: a tall, blue-eyed, bleached blonde. Using duplicity and drugs, my Sun Fish is torpedoed, heads to the bottom. I'm sunk—married to a Russian prostitute who is a member of Russian organized crime although I don't know it at the time. I bring my wife of a few months to America, and the juggernaut of the Russian mafia gets another one of its assets and mid-level managers into the premier hard currency market in the world. While this was happening to me, it was and continues to happen to others. When I finally came up for air and saw what was happening: I struggled, tried to get free, fought back to protect my rights as a human being by using the law and not stepping outside the law—but to no avail. So far, the Russian juggernaut of organized crime has been more powerful, more effective than the law because it uses lies, dissemblances, prevarication, smear tactics, threats, intimidation and bribery.

Today, the Russian mafia consists of assorted criminals from the former Soviet Union who have joined with underworld characters in Western markets over the past decade to create a global web of smuggling, protection, extortion, counterfeiting, tampering with witnesses, revenge, evasion of taxes and other illegal activities. (Complaint 10, 11, 15) Russian organized crime groups, working in cooperation with each other and foreign gangsters, infiltrate lucrative, hard currency markets, such as the US, by taking advantage of ineffective and un-enforced immigration laws, as well as bribable officials, to illegally gain entry for the organization's managers and human assets. (Complaint 13, 883) I am one of the victims of this new Red menace.

This case grew out of the discoveries I made, beginning in the year 2000, after working in Moscow as the acting manager for Kroll Associates. I found out that my spouse, whom I met and married in Russia in March 2000, was really a money launderer, tax evader, prostitute and procurer for a gang of Russian and Chechen organized crime figures. (Complaint 35, 36, 157-58, 339-42, 347) That she had secretly slipped narcotics into my meals and pretended to be something she wasn't in order to marry me so that she could enter the USA to expand the activities of the criminal organization to which she belongs—the Russian mafia. (Complaint 174-185)

The Russian mafia, as with all organizations, consists of and acts through people, and no one victim, or customer, comes into contact with all the decision makers and support personnel that go into making an enterprise successful. But they are there in the shadows supporting those on the front lines, giving aid and direction in order to reach the enterprise's goals. For me, the Russian mafia's retailer or, more appropriately, front, initially was Enterprise movant Shipilina, but soon other comrades in crime came out from standing in the shadows to help directly and indirectly with the Enterprise's Scheme as it applied to me. (Complaint 16-127) What others are lurking behind the known defendants continue to be revealed as the Krasnodar, Russia police conduct their investigation, and I mine.

Operating through some of its members, the Russian mafia tricked me into bringing one of its assets, Enterprise movant Shipilina, to the US (Complaint 2, 136); tried to get me to lie to the Immigration and Naturalization Service ("INS") (Complaint 224-25, 228,); secretly fed me drugs (Complaint 168, 171, 175-77, 180, 216,); tried to intimidate me (Complaint 245, 273, 306, 308-14); threatened me with physical violence (Complaint 236-37, 257-58, 280-83, 287-90, 316-18); suborned and committed perjury (Complaint 229-30, 232, 239, 275-77); engaged in mail and wire fraud (Complaint 200-04, 218, 219, 227, 294, 300, 315); bribed officials (Complaint 254-55, 298, 307); attempted to and did tamper with witnesses and informants (Complaint 265-68, 284, 290, 293, 297); laundered money (Complaint 295-96, 301-03) and conspired to commit murder for hire (Complaint 319). As a result, to this day, I continue to follow the advice given me in March 2002 by a special agent for the FBI—don't open your door to anyone you don't know and watch out when you are in public.

My continuing investigation in Russia has revealed the involvement of a Chechen terror and crime clan in threatening witnesses in Krasnodar (Complaint 293, 297) and the clan's known connection with one defendant who arranged the intimidation of witnesses (Complaint 76, 77, 265-268, 293, 297). The clan was run by Arbi Baraev, who beheaded four British telecommunication workers in 1998 in return for $20 million from Usama Bin Laden, and Movsar Baraev, who led the taking of 700 hostages at a Moscow theater in October 2002. Institute Study of Conflict, Ideology, and Policy, Perspective, Vol. XIII, No. 2 (Nov.-Dec. 2002). Both are now dead, but were very much alive in the spring of 2001, when witnesses began receiving threats. The Baraev Islamic mafia clan continues to wreak havoc in Russia and elsewhere. I, myself, have received four threats so far, one from a Russian speaking man as described in my June 19, 2003 letter to the court and copied to the Enterprise movants. (Complaint 280-84, 287-90, 316-18)

Besides the harm and fear caused me by the defendants, their continuing criminal activities also injure other US citizens, both individuals and companies. (Complaint 883-85) Through business alliances among American, Russian and Chechen criminals, the defendants further the Russian mafia's operations of white slavery, pornography and the crimes that maximize and protect its profits, such as immigration fraud, bribery, drugs, money laundering, tax evasion, coercion, intimidation, perjury, official misconduct and more. (Complaint 15) Russians run prostitutes, pornography and in some cases drugs out of Russia into the US (Complaint 322, 371, 375-76), or first to Cyprus and then the US (Complaint 381-83, 403), or by way of Mexico and then to America (Complaint 418-19, 423). The prostitutes and pornography are sold through an affiliation of lap-dancing clubs controlled by organized crime and marketed over the Internet. (Complaint 329, 331, 410, 413, 434-36) The drugs are secretly administered to customers as a way of assuring return business. (Complaint 333-35)

The Enterprise movants in the “Statement of Facts” of their joint Memorandum p 3-10 sidestep the Complaint’s allegations, which are supposed to be taken as true for the purpose of a motion to dismiss. The movants try to distract the Court from criminal allegations against the Russian mafia, of which they are a part, by using misstatements, omissions, errors and a smear here and there. The Enterprise movants front-load their memorandum with what they call ‘facts’ in order to disparage me. They use the ancient method of painting an opponent in a false light in order to keep the real issues in the dark and probably in the hope the Court will glance over the legal mistakes made in their “Argument” section. A unique RICO defense, but that is the Enterprise movants’ strategy: throw enough mud and maybe some will stick, make enough misrepresentations and maybe some will be believed.

In order to win the day, the Enterprise movants also try to depict this civil RICO action as a rehash of a closed domestic relations case in which I “[w]ithout regard for ethics or even common decency” (Memorandum p 4 n.7) set out on a “relentless course of harassment” against the movants that has culminated in the “outlandish”, “incredible” and “far-fetched” allegations in the Complaint. (Memorandum p 5-1) This RICO suit grew out of the earlier domestic relations’ investigation (Complaint 217) and the events triggered by that investigation, which revealed a criminal entity lurking in the background, connecting seemingly disparate individuals and organizations in Europe and the Americas that turned out to be part of the Russian mafia. The only reason for the earlier domestic relations' case was the very nature of the Russian mafia's Scheme, which included using prostitutes in Moscow to deceive American businessmen into marrying them so that the prostitutes could gain legal entry into the USA. (Complaint 2, 135-37, 883) I was one of the suckers. In total – and naïve – good faith, I married Enterprise movant Shipilina shortly before returning to the US from my Moscow consultancy with Kroll Associates. But because the trail of the harm done to me lies behind a fraudulent marriage rather than a fraudulent business transaction does not make it any less serious. When criminal instrumentalities exploit human emotions of the heart rather than the pocket book, the victim does not lose his rights under US law.

This is a case about the institutional behavior of the Russian mafia, which includes many criminal members posing as legitimate businesses and law-abiding individuals, such as the Enterprise movants and other defendants. (Complaint 16-127) This RICO action has been brought against the “archetypal, intimidating mobster”, Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 499, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3280 (1985), an enterprise of organized criminals, not respected and legitimate businesses and individuals.

When I returned to the U.S.A. in July 2000 (Complaint 205) with my bribe of four months, she immediately joined her cohorts in prostitution, working out of “Flash Dancers Topless Club” (Complaint 214), tried to engage me in criminal activity (Complaint 233), drugged my food to deter me from seeking an annulment or divorce (Complaint 216), and threatened me with death and injury from her Russian mafia associates if I did not lie to the INS for her (Complaint 236).

I learned my “wife” worked as a prostitute and was using me for immigration purposes after translating a portion of her diary, which she kept in plain sight. (Complaint 220) When the annulment/divorce action commenced, I began searching in Moscow and Krasnodar, Russia for information and witnesses relevant to that court proceeding. (Complaint 256-57) My investigation discovered, among other culpable conduct, that she, Enterprise movant Paulsen and defendant Perlin had created a pornographic video in which she engaged in very graphic acts for US dollars (Complaint 377), and that she and defendant Perlin advertised her sexual services via naked photographs of her (Complaint 357). In one case, there is direct evidence that she sold these naked photographs to a man for 10 Cypriot pounds after performing sexual acts on him when she worked in Cyprus at the brothel “Zygos” during the first half of 1999. (Complaint 390-91) The pornographic video was imported into America by Enterprise movant Paulsen (Complaint 378) and clips from the video were used by defendant Perlin to advertise the prostitution and pornography production services he sells as part of the Russian mafia.

Enterprise movants now hypocritically criticize me for using the already marketed naked photographs (Memorandum p 3-3) and the promotional pornographic video clips (Memorandum p 4 n.7) to unearth evidence of movant Shipilina’s fraud and her criminal activities for the divorce/annulment suit. The Russian language web site was created as a means to find new Russian witnesses, acquire additional information and communicate the truth to potential witnesses and informants after previously forthcoming witnesses and individuals with useful information were being threatened into silence. (Complaint 265-68) The web site contained only a small sampling of Enterprise movant Shipilina’s widely offered pornographic services and extensive criminal exploits listed in a section of her diary. (Complaint 35-36, 152, 155-57, 191-93, 322-25, 332, 334, 335, 339-41) After a period of time, the web site was closed when it no longer produced evidence.

In some twisted form of reasoning, the Enterprise movants claim that the use of the video clips as an exhibit in a motion to reform the divorce settlement—where the papers are not open to the public—makes me indecent and unethical. (Memorandum p 4 n. 7) Those video clips were made public long before they entered the court system in order for movant Shipilina and her Moscow pimp defendant Perlin to make money. Further, in an action for reformation of a divorce settlement that essentially requests damages for emotional distress, could anything demonstrate such pain more effectively than a man discovering that the woman he loved and cherished was, and continued to be, a porn star who had deceived him into marriage so that she could ply her wares for the Russian mafia in a hard currency market? I don't think so.

Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich paint themselves as innocents that merely represent another virtuous soul, Enterprise movant Shiplina. A more accurate picture of Kuba, Mundy & Petrovich is that of a “green card and visa mill” (Complaint 28) getting fat on the feeding frenzy of obstructionist immigration lawyers that fail to sort out the truly oppressed from the rank opportunists, fugitive criminals and terrorists. Even if all the Enterprise movants do engage in some legitimate operations, they are still alleged to be active members of a criminal enterprise—the Russian mafia.

The Enterprise movants in their Memorandum at p 3-2 state, “The plaintiff [in the divorce complaint] claimed that Ms. Shipilina threatened to injure him if he did not ‘lie to the Immigration and Naturalization Service.’” Although Enterprise movant Shipilina is six feet one inch tall and 145 pounds, a female threatening a man just does not make it, which, of course, is the impression the Enterprise movants clearly wanted to leave. But they were only able to leave that false impression by deleting a crucial part from the divorce complaint they cited to in their Exhibit B(9)(g). What the divorce complaint stated was that movant Shipilina “would direct her ‘Russian mafia friends to put [me] in the hospital or even kill me,’” if I did not lie to the INS. Now that’s a threat!

In addition, the Enterprise movants “interestingly” claim that because the divorce complaint, their Exhibit B, does not mention that Enterprise movants Mundy or Petrovich advised me to lie to the INS or threatened me, that such did not happen. (Complaint p 3-2) The divorce complaint did not mention such conduct because it was not grounds for my obtaining an annulment or divorce. I was divorcing movant Shipilina—not movants Petrovich or Mundy. Such allegations were more appropriate for the disciplinary complaints that the Enterprise movants also chastise me for filing. (Memorandum p 5-1) Furthermore, I relied on my divorce attorneys to decide what to include in the divorce complaint, which Enterprise movants Mundy and Petrovich well know.

Just a side note here, interestingly, the Enterprise movants do not refer to any paragraphs or page numbers in the exhibits they cite. That of course leads to wasting a busy court’s time by requiring it to search through the Enterprise movants exhibits in order to check the accuracy of their characterizations of parts of those documents. Perhaps, the movants wish the Court to accept their edited version of documents on faith.

In their Memorandum at p 4-1, the Enterprise movants’ cunningly confuse two different reports made against me to the police. The result is the implication that both were investigated when, in fact, only one was, and that one was closed because no violation occurred. They also try to bolster the credibility of the report that was not investigated by saying it came before a divorce was imminent. Let's clear up the Enterprise movants' dissemblance in this paragraph of their memorandum.

The Enterprise movants' refer to the police report about the evidence-gathering, Russian language web site, which contained Shipilina's diary and the naked photographs she marketed, as "criminal matters being handled by Detective Henning." (Memorandum p 4-1) This is the report that Enterprise movant Henning says he contacted the Queens District Attorney about (Henning Affidavit Para. 8) and over which he threatened me with arrest (Complaint 309) In the very next sentence of the Memorandum, the Enterprise movants falsely ascribe "criminal matters being handled by Detective Henning" to a report against me for alleged extortion. This is a different report, and one in which charges were never pressed and never investigated. (Complaint 229-32) But the Court cannot tell this unless it uses a magnifying glass on Enterprise movants' Exhibit D, which combines into one exhibit two different reports—clever. So, the only complaint against me that the police investigated was the one concerning the Russian language web site, and that the Queens District Attorney's Office concluded was unfounded (Henning Affidavit 9), but the Court will not find the DA's conclusion anywhere in the Enterprise movants' Memorandum.

As for the "extortion" police report on which charges were not pressed and the police did not investigate, the Enterprise movants' misleading state, "Tellingly, the police report demonstrates [which means "prove indubitably"] that the plaintiff's attempt to extort money from Ms. Shipilina predates his divorce complaint by six months." (Memorandum p 4-1) The wording of this sentence implies that the report, on which no charges were pressed, is true in its claim of extortion because my lawyers served the annulment/divorced complaint six months after the report was filed.

The time line of events is important here. (Complaint at 223 to 232) In late October 2000, Enterprise movant Shipilina and I met with Enterprise movant Petrovich at Kuba, Mundy & Associates to arrange for a separation, to be followed by a divorce. At this meeting I was advised by Enterprise movant Petrovich, after he consulted with Enterprise movant Mundy, to lie in an affidavit to the INS in order to assure that Enterprise movant Shipilina would obtain a permanent green card. (Complaint 223-24) Afterwards, I consulted with an attorney friend, Jeffrey N. Drummond, and in no uncertain terms, he confirmed that my decision not to lie was the only acceptable course of action. I notified Enterprise movant Shipilina that I would not lie for her to the INS, after that, on December 13, 2000, she filed the perjured police report alleging my extortion attempt. (Complaint 226, 229, 230)

The filing of the perjured report claiming extortion came after a divorce was imminent, and after I refused to cooperate with Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina's shenanigans to defraud the INS. Rather than demonstrating moral turpitude in me, the filing of the false report more reasonably infers an effort to create a false record by which Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina could pressure me into lying before the INS or use to their advantage in a divorce proceeding that appeared imminent at that time. (Complaint 232) Otherwise, why file a report on which charges are not pressed unless to hold that ammunition in reserve.

The Enterprise movants claim in their Memorandum at p 4-2 & n. 7 that I "abuse[d] the court system ... as a means to harass and intimidate ..." because in May 2002, I filed a motion to reform the divorce stipulation to which they say I had "voluntarily consented." As I said in my Complaint at 279-284, I entered the divorce settlement as a result of receiving a threatening telephone call in October 2001 from an anonymous, thuggish-sounding stranger who warned me against pursuing the divorce proceedings. The caller said he was telephoning on behalf of my “soon to be ex-wife, Angelina.”—the stage name she used in Cypriot and Mexican brothels and at Flash Dancers. I felt extremely threatened and decided not to take any chances with my physical safety. Enterprise movant Mundy has a tape recording of this call. Still the Enterprise movants contend that I voluntarily consented to a settlement and then later, out of an alleged effort to “harass and intimidate,” brought a motion to reform for duress, coercion and fraud. The Enterprise movants just don’t get it: conduct isn’t duress unless it works, and when it works the victim is not going to tell the world unless, as what happened with me, circumstances changed, which I stated in my motion to vacate. At the very least, there’s a fact dispute here that can be resolved through discovery.

By the end of March 2002, I had received two more threatening telephone calls, one in February and one in March, from a man sounding like the same person in the first menacing call. (Complaint 289-91, 318) In these two calls, the man referred to himself as John Pierre, and once again said he was calling on behalf of Angelina—the prostitution and lap-dancing name used by movant Shipilina. The purpose of these terrorizing calls were clearly to prevent me from providing information to the INS concerning Enterprise movant Shipilina’s fraud on the INS and the US State Department in obtaining an immigrant visa. (Complaint 191-93)

After the February 6, 2002 call, I filed a complaint with the 13th Police Precinct and the FBI. (Complaint 858-62) The FBI did start a preliminary investigation and apparently tracked down the man making the threats, but the FBI agents refused to tell me his name. (Complaint 863-64) One of the agents, however, did tell me that the FBI decided not to interview the man for fear he might cause me harm. (Complaint 865-66)

After the March 27, 2002 threatening call, I filed for an order of protection in the New York County Family Court—there was no place left to go. (Complaint 868) Unfortunately, the judge refused to grant me a discovery subpoena for telephone records and other information that would have led to identifying the man making the threats and enable me, through the discovery process, to link that man with movant Shipilina.

The Enterprise movants call my efforts to find protection from the police, FBI and the Family Court as “objectively offensive and repugnant” and an attempt to “harass and incense.” (Memorandum at p 4 n. 8) Further, the Enterprise movants in footnote 8 asks this Court to send a chilling message to any US citizen who foolishly chooses to fight for his rights—if you lose, and res judicata does not apply, the courts will still use that to throw out any cause of action that reveals itself later on. The right to pursue justice through the legal system will be a right in name only.

The movants also claim that because bureaucrats chose to laugh at me before even hearing my evidence, such callousness shows I am improperly using the legal system. (Memorandum p 4 n. 8 & 9) On the other hand, perhaps these bureaucrats are of the same quality that granted two of the 911 hijackers their visas, just months after killing thousands. Thus far, I have received four threatening telephone calls, two of which are on audiotape; copies of both are in the possession of movant Mundy. The fourth, this time in Russian, threatened me not to travel to Krasnodar, Russia to continue my investigation into this case. I reported that call to the 13th Precinct and the FBI. Both said there was nothing they could do without the telephone number from where the call came, but the FBI did start an investigation into some to the allegations in this Complaint. So who’s being harassed; who’s being intimidated by a large underworld entity—not the Enterprise movants. Still the issue of my motivation is more appropriately explored in discovery rather than a motion to dismiss.

The Enterprise movants also do not cite any ethical canons or disciplinary rules I allegedly violated in my pursuit of justice. They merely engage in name-calling in a transparent attempt to bias the Court because I had the audacity to exercise my civil rights. If I have abused the judicial system as they allege, they can bring abuse of process or malicious prosecution actions. But in pari delicto, even if true, which it is not, is no reason for dismissal of a RICO action. Neither the Rico statute nor the legislative history suggests that a Rico plaintiff has to be an innocent victim.

The Enterprise movants continue their distraction from the real issue before this Court—whether the Complaint alleges a claim under RICO—by saying I “improperly made public” the disciplinary complaint I filed against Enterprise movant Mundy when I annexed it to my motion to reform the divorce stipulation. Since that motion was in a domestic relations case, and domestic relations cases are not opened to the public, it was not made public by me. These RICO proceedings, however, are open to the public, so the first party to improperly make public the disciplinary complaint against Enterprise movant Mundy was Enterprise movant Mundy in Exhibit J. So why am I being blamed for that—to falsely smear me, of course.

The Enterprise movants then switch gears from castigating me to playing the victim. They pretend that Enterprise movant Mundy “reluctantly” filed a disciplinary grievance against me in the face of my “assault of frivolous litigation.” (Memorandum p 5 n. 10) This change in tack, however, did not leave behind the movants’ pattern of omissions and misstatements.

The Enterprise movants failed to say that the disciplinary committee quickly closed its investigation into Enterprise movant Mundy’s grievance against me after I filed my reply. My reply made clear that the disciplinary grievance was simply an attempt to deter my use of the legal system by making the bizarre claim that my filing of a RICO complaint was evidence of my unfitness to practice law. The disciplinary grievance was a unique way of trying to thwart the purpose of Congress in enacting the civil RICO statute: “Those who have been wronged by organized crime should at least be given access to a legal remedy.” Congressional hearings quoted in Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 487, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3280 (1985).

The basis for the conclusion that the disciplinary grievance was an attempt to scare me off of the RICO case is that Enterprise movant Mundy had received the RICO complaint before he filed the disciplinary grievance. Exhibit A, Certificate of Mailing and Affidavit of Mailing. In fact his grievance makes reference to the RICO action that had already been filed with the Court. Enterprise movant Mundy had received the RICO complaint as part of my request for a waiver of summons under Rule 4(d). At the time he received the waiver request and RICO complaint, neither Mundy nor the other defendants had yet been served with the summons. The strategy in filing the disciplinary complaint was obviously to intimidate me against going through with this RICO action, which I could have done by simply not serving the RICO summons. The disciplinary grievance was just another effort by the Russian mafia to misuse the state’s legal apparatus to deny me of my civil rights and the right to earn a living because I dared to oppose that organization.

The Enterprise movants create another false impression that the emotional distress action brought against them in the New York Supreme Court is another separate cause of action meant to harass. (Memorandum p 5-2) That action is identical to the Fifth Cause of Action in this RICO suit—intentional infliction of emotional distress. The New York State action was brought on March 25, 2003 as a precautionary measure to toll the statute of limitations on the intentional infliction of emotional distress by members of the Russian mafia. And no, I am not admitting that the statute had run by the time the RICO complaint was filed on April 18, 2003. The Enterprise movants claim the emotional distress summons with notice was never served on them. (Memorandum p 5-2, n 11) That is false. Exhibit B contains copies of the affidavits of service. In fact, Enterprise movant Mundy even contacted my lawyer at the time, Jeffrey Drummond, concerning the emotional distress suit.

To sum up, I was tricked, drugged and pushed into this sinkhole of a situation when I ran a foul of a large criminal organization operating out of Russia. I was taken for a ride by a mobster moll right out of a 1940s detective movie, except standing behind this moll are Russian and Chechen organized crime figures, associates of the Chechen Special Islamic Regiment and other members of the Russian mafia.

B. Enterprise Movants Spin the Complaint

The Enterprise movants continue their maligning of me by claiming this RICO action is the latest in my “quest to harass, intimidate and persecute” the Enterprise movants. (Memorandum p 6-1) It seems a little ludicrous that I, a sole practitioner lawyer, eking out a living, could “harass, intimidate and persecute” an entire law firm that advertises on the Internet in Russian on the very same page as an agency marketing Russian girls for marriage and linked to pornography, www.russianday.com, Exhibit C, and has offices in New Jersey, New York City and Rockland County. Or that I could persecute a lucrative strip club advertised as “Live from the heart of NYC” in Times Square, www.flashdancernyc.com; a New York City Police Detective, a medical doctor and a wealthy Russian prostitute along with numerous others, including gangsters and Islamic lunatics.

If I have caused such trials and tribulations to the Russian mafia, then why haven't the Enterprise movants filed harassment actions and complained about intimidation? Because there's no basis. Where are their allegations of my arranging threatening telephone calls and threats of arrest or surreptitiously feeding them drugs? There are none. Only the objection that I sought to redress the harm done to me and protect my physical safety from what I now know is the Russian mafia. The Enterprise movants ask this Court to not only grant dismissal because they don't like me exercising my rights as an American, but also request this Court to act as a medieval inquisitor that would permanently crush my constitutional rights with "an injunction barring [me] from filing any future related claims." (Memorandum p 65-2) I assume that would even entail a class action RICO suit against the Russian mafia for which I am currently trying to form a class of American men who have suffered similar harm by using the web site been-scammed.com.

i. Does it or doesn't it exist—the Enterprise, a.k.a, the Russian mafia

The Enterprise movants do a good job of cherry-picking the Complaint's allegations concerning the Enterprise, by leaving out a couple of key ones:

1. The Enterprise is an on going operation in which its members associate together for the purpose of engaging in illegal and legal activities in order to earn substantial profits.
2. A key aim of the Enterprise is to infiltrate and expand its activities in hard currency markets where profits are not threatened by inconvertibility of the local currency or drastic depreciations.

They also question whether the Russian mafia did any harm to my business and property by referring to only one allegation in the Complaint at paragraph 3 (Memorandum p 7-1) and ignoring others at 188, 900-907. The Enterprise movants also object in footnote 12 of their Memorandum that I “failed to state [it should be “allege”] how” the Russian mafia injured my business and property. Even had the Complaint failed to specify the manner in which I was injured, which it does not, in the RICO context, “[a]t the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant’s conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim.” NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994) (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, 112 S.Ct. 2130 (1992)).

But the Enterprise movants key criticism over the Complaint’s Enterprise allegations is that the Russian mafia and its operations throughout the world are figments of my imagination. (Memorandum p 7-2) That remains to be seen, which is the task of discovery. But the Complaint clearly does allege the existence of a global Russian organized crime group of which the Enterprise movants and other defendants are alleged members. (Complaint 1, 2, 10-14, 16-127) Further, the Court can take judicial notice of the Russian mafia from articles such as the following one by Scott P. Boylan, Organized Crime and Corruption in Russia, Vol. 19, Fordham Int’l L.J., 1999, 2013 (1996): “Presently, the U.S. and Russian Governments are cooperating in efforts to combat criminals operating in the United States and Russia. [100] The FBI has assigned agents to the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, while U.S. Department of Justice prosecutors currently reside in Moscow.” If the Complaint’s allegations about the Enterprise are imaginary, why doesn’t the FBI save taxpayer dollars by closing down its Moscow office and its Russian organized crime unit here in New York, which is currently looking into some of the allegations in the Complaint?

The Enterprise movants also try to discredit the existence of the Russian mafia by claiming “the configuration of the alleged [E]nterprise centers around Ms. Shipilina and the people she purportedly encountered and places to which she purportedly traveled.”

My dark passage began with the discovery of telephone calls that Shipilina made from my apartment in order to marketed her sexual services to Flash Dancers’ customers. (Complaint 214) The truth led through a labyrinth of sleaze, crime and corruption that my attorney friend, Jeffrey Drummond, helped me realize was part of the Russian mafia. I am just one of the pieces of wood that the Russian mafia used to fuel its Mordor engine of greed. As I said, “This complaint concerns a portion of the Enterprise’s activities in America, Russia, Cyprus and Mexico and some of its Members, the defendants, who are alleged to engage in money laundering, prostitution, pornography, white slavery, drug trafficking, bribery, tampering with witnesses and informants, obstructing justice, tax evasion, failure to report the transfer of funds overseas, mail and wire fraud, immigration violations, conspiracy to commit murder for hire and the use of the international facilities to assist in carrying out Enterprise activities.” (Complaint 15) The Complaint does not address all the activities or all the members of the Russian mafia. A person injured by organized crime, such as the Italian mafia, will only be talking about a limited number of crimes and persons. A person who is loan-sharked by the Italian mob will not likely come into contact with those who issue fake construction bonds. No individual will ever be the victim of all of a gang's illegal acts.

The Enterprise movants object, "there is absolutely no connection offered by plaintiff among any of the defendants comprising the purported enterprise." (Memorandum p 7-3) The Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich claim their only connection with the defendants in this case is with Enterprise movant Shipilina. (Id.) I don't know that and neither does this Court because there has been no discovery. Once again, the Complaint need only allege, which it does throughout. Prostitutes and pornography flow out of southern Russia into New York for sale and use in lap dancing clubs like Flash Dancers or over the internet (Complaint 19, 22, 23, 24, 25, 73, 322, 329, 330, 331, 343, 363, 366, 413, 434, 435), immigration laws are violated to get the prostitutes into America and keep them here (Complaint 27, 29, 32, 87, 95, 113, 191-93, 323-25, 327-28, 353, 405-09), drugs are brought in from southern Russia to keep lap-dancing customers happy (Complaint 23, 48, 97, 100, 206, 332, 334, 460), prostitutes and pornography also flow from southern Russia to Cyprus and on to the US (Complaint 96, 106, 112, 403, 410, 412), prostitutes and pornography move from Moscow to southern California (Complaint 37, 38, 51, 80, 368, 370, 374, 376, 377) or first to Mexico and then into the US (Complaint 114, 117, 119, 122, 126, 423, 426, 427, 428, 431-32), the prostitute underground railway extends into Wisconsin from southern Russia (Complaint 42, 69, 350, 352), the operations are protect with bribery (Complaint 47, 65, 66, 67, 84, 88, 298, 302, 307) and intimidation (Complaint 30, 46, 49, 50, 77, 98, 99, 265-68, 280-83, 287-90, 293, 297, 308, 316-18), profits are laundered (Complaint 31, 101-04, 295, 301, 335, 414, 447, 453, 454-58) and the system corrupted (Complaint 874). It is all interrelated—supply, production, protection, profit maximization, reinvestment and growth—with each defendant playing his or her part in the success of a large organization.

A little common sense is needed to show the absurdity of the Enterprise movants objection that the defendants are not connected. When I worked as an associate at Cravath, Swaine and Moore or as a political producer at Channel 7 Eyewitness News, I never came into contact with every member in those large organizations, but it was clear that we all shared the organization's goals and worked for that end. On anyone case or story, I was at times the only connection among different members of the organization, all of whom were working to make the organization succeed and providing varying degrees of assistance on that particular case or story. That's how large organizations work. They muster together resources, which include people, to support the pursuit of numerous activities to achieve the organization's goals. At any one time, Cravath, Swaine and Moore is working on dozens of cases, Eyewitness News on dozens of stories and the Russian mafia on dozens of targets. Looking at only one case, one story or one target will reveal only some of the organization's members and some of them will not even know each other, but they all share the common goal and accept the means for achieving it. Otherwise, they will be fired, or, as with the Russian mafia, worst. And no, I am not claiming Cravath or Eyewitness News as being RICO enterprises.

Alternatively, in Hansel'n Gretel Brand, Inc. v. Savitsky, 1997 WL 543088, *2 (SDNY Sept. 3, 1997) the defendants argued, as the Enterprise movants do here, that a complaint must allege a common link other than the racketeering activity (Memorandum p 7-3) or, stated differently, they played roles in the enterprise distinct from the racketeering activity. According to Hansel, that is not the law of the Second Circuit.

Finally, for this section, if what the Complaint alleges at paragraphs 1, 10-15 is not an enterprise, than neither is the Italian mafia, the very impetus for the RICO statute.

(ii) Missing and misstated allegations by Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich

Although Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich's object that the criminal allegations against them are "conclusory" (Memorandum p 8-2), a fair reading of the "ninety-one page, complaint" with its "nine hundred and fifteen separate numbered allegations" (Memorandum p 8 n. 13) shows it provides them fair notice of the claims against them.

Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich also call the Complaint's allegations "outlandish, extremely broad and fantastic ...." (Memorandum p 9-2) Well, of course they are. They describe the conduct of members of the Russian mafia, which, to quote an American executive in Moscow, are "frigging unbelievable." The Complaint merely depicts the Enterprise movants deeds, and, if those had not been outlandish, then there would be no Complaint.

Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich seek to have the Court view the allegations against them in isolation. (Memorandum pp 8-10) That would mean missing the forest for the trees. The purpose of RICO is to reach organized crime groups. If defendants are permitted to narrow the focus to individual defendants in a vacuum, then there is no RICO statute. The cause of action is against the Russian mafia of which the defendants are part. Large organizations work through individual humans who make decisions within their sphere of responsibility and carry out tasks to get them accomplished. It is a one for all, all for one situation. And that is how the law treats RICO participants: joint and severally liable. Fleischhauer v. Feltner, 879 F.2d 1290, 1301 (6th Cir. 1989). The US Senate report on RICO stated: "What is needed here ... are new approaches that will deal not only with individuals, but also with the economic base through which those individuals constitute such a serious threat to the economic well-being of the Nation.” S.Rep. No. 91-617, p 79 (1969).

Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich, and by inference the other movants, also object that their non-predicate criminal acts alleged in the Complaint (Complaint 684-853) are “merely repetitive of the alleged predicate acts.” (Memorandum p 9-3) Not fully true, or all of those other criminal acts would also be predicate acts, but they are not. While some of the Enterprise movants and other defendants’ crimes do violate both the RICO predicate acts and, at the same time, New York criminal law, many of their acts include state or federal crimes that do not fall within the list of predicate acts in 18 USC 1961. Among the non-predicate federal crimes are employing unauthorized aliens, 8 USC 1324a; tax evasion, 26 USC 7201, 7203, 7206-07; use of fraudulent documents, 8 USC 1324c; bribing Russian officials in violation of the foreign corrupt practices act, 15 USC 78dd-2, 3; perjury, 18 USC 1621, and false statements, 18 USC 1001; conspiracies to violate federal law, 18 USC 371; and obstructing federal government proceedings, 18 USC 1505. As for New York State law, the violations include prostitution, Penal 230; reckless endangerment, Penal 120.20 & 120.25; coercion, Penal 135.60 & 135.65; official misconduct, Penal 195; intimidation, Penal 215.15; and conspiracy to violate state law, Penal 105.

In their summary of the allegations, Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich leave out many of the averments, which makes it difficult to follow the Complaint if only the sections they refer to are read. (Memorandum p 8-2 to 10-2) Perhaps this is an instance of self-fulfilling criticism, since they already claim the Complaint is “chaotic”. (Memorandum p 8 n. 13) Among crucial allegations left out:

1. Complaint 237, when at a meeting with me “... Member Alina Shipilina threatened the plaintiff with physical harm and possibly death from her Russian criminal associates unless he agreed to lie to the INS for her.” Here Enterprise movant Shipilina was carrying out the agreed course of action by Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and her. (Complaint 236)
2. Complaint 239 in which Enterprise movant Shipilina, at the behest of Mundy and Petrovich (Complaint 234), obtained a temporary order of protection against me based on perjured testimony.
3. Complaint 244, which explains Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina’s reasons for intimidating me into a settlement: “A trial would produce evidence of Member Alina Shipilina’s fraud on the INS, U.S. tax evasion, money laundering, violation of foreign transactions reporting, prostitution, promoting prostitution, narcotics trafficking and perjury that would threaten the Enterprise’s Scheme and risk exposure of Enterprise activities in which Member Alina Shipilina was involved.”
4. Complaint 316-318 in which Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina arranged for Member John Madison, a.k.a. Pierre, to threaten me into not testifying before any INS proceeding concerning Shipilina.
5. Complaint 705, 706, 722, 723, 738, 739 in which Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich conspired to violate federal law, commit predicate acts and break various New York criminal laws.

Besides deleting complete allegations that they apparently don't like, Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich misstate others or omit key parts. For example:

1. They say the Complaint alleges Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich
“[O]perate a green card and visa mill that fraudulently obtains U.S. visas, residency status and naturalization for aliens.” (Memorandum p 8-1) However, their statement alters the meaning of the allegation by omitting the word “Russians”—the main beneficiaries of the illegal conduct. (Complaint 28)
2. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich say the Complaint alleges Petrovich
“[A]cts as an attorney in the US, although not admitted, under the supervision of Mundy.” (Memorandum p 8-2) Here they left out that Petrovich was an attorney in Russia, which helps infer he is also acting as one here.
3. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich say the Complaint alleges they were, “intimidating witnesses from providing testimony to US authorities/Courts in connection with the plaintiff's divorce proceeding....” (Memorandum p 9-1, (4)) The Complaint alleges intimidating witnesses “from providing testimony to any US authorities” and not just about the divorce proceeding, but any US investigation, such as by the INS.
(Complaint 265)
4. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich say the Complaint alleges they were “intimidating the plaintiff to dissuade him from trying to set aside the agreed upon divorce settlement.” (Memorandum p 9-1, (6)) The referenced “agreed upon divorce settlement” was one made by my lawyer without my knowledge or approval. (Complaint 278, 279)

5. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich say the Complaint alleges they were “using ... bribery ... intimidation” against me and others “to obstruct the criminal indictment...” of one of the defendants. (Memorandum p 9-1, (7)) They omit key parts of the allegations that among the intimidators were Chechen Islamic Mafiosi, that one reason for the intimidation was to prevent me from cooperating with the INS, that the money used to pay for the intimidation and bribes in violation of the Foreign Corrupt Practices law came from illegal Russian mafia activities, that around $10,000 was paid to corrupt Russian officials, that the international telephone and transportation system was used to make the intimidation and bribery arrangements and to wire the money, that witnesses were in fact threaten, and that the criminal case against a Russian mafia member was closed in order to keep secret some of the Russian mafia’s activities. (Complaint 286-306)
6. In their memorandum at p 9-1, (7), they also fail to mention that among the people allegedly bribed was a New York City detective who threatened me with arrest in order to keep me from cooperating with the INS or the Krasnodar district attorney prosecuting the criminal case. (Complaint 306, 307)
7. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich mistakenly imply the Complaint alleges the predicate act of obstruction of justice. (Memorandum p 9-2) The Complaint alleges the predicate act of tampering with witnesses and informants, which is 18 USC 1512. (Complaint 487, 492, 494, 504, 506) It’s more than a semantic difference that Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich exploit to make misleading legal arguments in their memorandum under section II. (B)(ii)(bb), which will be addressed below.

8. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich refer to the Complaint's allegations 495, 497, 507 and 509 as dealing with bribing Russian officials and coercing the plaintiff's witnesses, but fail to mention that what makes such conduct predicate acts is that international facilities were used to arrange such conduct in aid of a racketeering organization—the Russian mafia, which violates 18 USC 1952. (Memorandum p 9-2)
9. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich, in their memorandum at p 9-3, summarize the Complaint's allegations against Mundy and Petrovich for obstructing INS proceedings, but fail to cite to the criminal acts they aided and abetted in carrying out that obstruction—coercion and intimidation. (Complaint 721, 737)
10. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich omitted in their memorandum at p 9-3 that the Complaint alleges their activities of tampering with witnesses involved threats of physical injury, intimidation and coercion, not only in the divorce proceeding and criminal case in Krasnodar, but in the INS investigation against Enterprise movant Shipilina. (Complaint 713, 715, 716, 729, 731, 732)
11. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich, in their memorandum at p 10-1, fail to mention the significance of the allegations of bribing a Russian official—it violates the foreign corrupt practices act. (Complaint 717, 733) They also omit that the other bribery allegations are for bribing or, in the alternative, rewarding a New York City detective, Enterprise movant Henning. (Complaint 719, 735)
12. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich, in their memorandum at p 10-1, omit that the laundered money came from illegal Russian mafia activities and was used to threaten witnesses and bribe Russian officials. (Complaint 718, 734)

This statement of facts has pointed out the Enterprise movants omissions, errors and misstatements as well as their effort to castigate me, the victim of RICO violations, as unworthy of the right to seek legal redress for harms whose causes didn't become evident until hindsight and the aid of a Harvard educated lawyer began connecting the dots. Those dots revealed a picture of the Enterprise movants and other Russian mafia members' criminal activities. As of the writing of this memorandum in opposition, the full extent of the Russian mafia's activities that have injured me is still not known. But my continuing investigation and discovery will complete the picture.

In order to depict the segment of the Russian mafia's activity involving the defendants, my complaint is one third longer than Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich's Memorandum. The Enterprise movants, however, have seized on my complaint's length, not just to imply that the length itself is wrong, but to omit, misrepresent and twist allegations out of their common sense meaning in the probable hope that the time pressured court will miss what the Complaint actually alleges.

C. Help

The Enterprise movants criticize me for making "numerous requests" for protection orders. (Memorandum p 10-3) I've been threaten with death by a member of the Russian mafia (Complaint 237), received four threatening telephone calls (Complaint 282, 289, 318 and June 19, 2003 letter), been threaten with arrest on a bogus charge (Complaint 309; Henning Affidavit Para. 9, 10) and told by the FBI, the premier law enforcement agency in the world, to watch out for myself in public (Complaint 867). During all this, I thought the judiciary would help me, and made three requests for protection orders—but to no avail. So, if anything, I’m a dope, but that is not grounds for dismissing a RICO complaint—I don’t think.

The Enterprise movants again provide misleading information to the Court when they say investigations by state and federal authorities “apparently have been dismissed or ignored.” (Memorandum p 10-3) The Enterprise movants are clearly in a better position to know than me, since they are the ones being investigated. But as far as my knowledge goes, the INS investigation is ongoing (Complaint 286), the FBI and Krasnodar police are currently looking into some of the allegations in the Complaint, and the New York City Board of Elections completed its investigation into Enterprise movant Shipilina falsely swearing to US citizenship when she registered to vote (Complaint 459) and referred those findings to the US Attorney for the Eastern District and the Queens District Attorney.

Argument

Point 1: The RICO complaint meets the standard of review pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6).

“Dismissal of a civil RICO complaint for failure to state a claim is appropriate only when ‘it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with [plaintiff’s] allegations.’” Commercial Cleaning Servs. LLC v. Colin Serv. Sys. Inc., 271 F.3d 374, 379 (2d Cir. 2001) (quoting H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 US 229, 249-50, 106 L.Ed.2d 195, 109 S.Ct. 2893 (1989). “A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim ‘unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.’” Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078, * 15, 16 (SDNY July 16, 2003, J. Mukasey) (citing Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L. Ed. 2d 80, 78 S.Ct. 99 (1957); Goldman v. Belden, 754 F.2d 1059, 1065 (2d Cir. 1985)).

“On a motion to dismiss, a court must read the complaint generously, and draw all inferences in favor of the pleader.” See California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S.Ct. 609 (1972).” “The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure erect a powerful presumption against rejecting pleadings for failure to state a claim,” Robbins v. Wilkie, 300 F.3d 1208, 1210 (10th Cir. 2002). The court accepts the plaintiff’s description of what happened to him along with any conclusions that can be reasonably drawn. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1357, p 319.

The issue on a motion to dismiss is not whether the plaintiff will ultimately prevail, but whether he is entitled to offer evidence to support his claims. See Villager Pond, Inc. v. Town of Darien, 56 F.3d 375, 378 (2d Cir. 1995). It is not the Court’s function at this stage of the proceedings to weigh the evidence that might be presented at trial; instead, the Court should merely determine whether the complaint itself is legally sufficient. Id. The Enterprise movants’ Memorandum, however, seeks to have the Court consider the Complaint as though it were the transcript of a trial or the product of discovery.

The Enterprise movants ask for dismissal because “bald conclusory statements... deductions, or opinions couched as factual allegations,” are not given the presumption of truth (Memorandum p 11-1, p 12-2), but they fail to specify which allegations they are referring. If the Enterprise movants had really found allegations of conclusions and opinions, they should have moved for a more definite statement. The Supreme Court stated in Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. at 514, “If a pleading fails to specify the allegations in a manner that provides sufficient notice, a defendant can move for a more definite statement under Rule 12(e).

The liberal notice pleading of Rule 8(a) is the starting point of a simplified pleading system, which was adopted to focus litigation on the merits of the claim. See Conley, 355 U.S. at 48. The complaint need not state with precision all elements that give rise to a legal basis for recovery as long as fair notice of the nature of the action is provided. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1216, p 154. The ninety-one-page RICO complaint in this action easily gives the Enterprise movants fair notice of the basis of the claims against them. In addition, the RICO statute, even at the pleading stage, is to be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purpose, see Sedima, 473 U.S. at 498, which includes the infliction of financial injury on racketeers, see US v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 593, 69 L.Ed.2d 246, 101 S.Ct. 2524 (1981), including the Russian mafia.

In deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, courts are dealing only with the complaints' allegations, Knevelbaard Diaries v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 991 (9th Cir. 2000), not the defendants' allegations in their memorandum of law for a dismissal. The court restricts its inquiry to "facts stated on the face of the complaint, in documents appended to the complaint or incorporated in the complaint by reference, and to matters of which judicial notice may be taken." Allen v. WestPoint-Pepperell, Inc., 945 F.2d 40, 44 (2d Cir. 1991); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c). The Enterprise movants request the Court to consider a number of documents attached to their memorandum of law of which the plaintiff has knowledge. (Memorandum p 12-2)

When a court reviews statements extraneous to the complaint, the problem that usually arises is the plaintiff did not have notice that those statements would be considered in a motion to dismiss. Cortec Indus., Inc. v. Sum Hldng. LP, 949 F.2d 42, 48 (1991). In order to correct this notice deficiency, motions to dismiss are converted into summary judgment motions. Id. But "[w]here the plaintiff has actual notice of all the information in the movants' papers ... the necessity of translating a Rule 12(b)(6) motion into one under Rule 56 is largely dissipated." Id.

So, the Enterprise movants use of documents, to which the plaintiff had notice, argues against their effort to turn this motion into one for summary judgment.

If this Court dismisses the Complaint or part of it under Rule 12(b)(6), then the plaintiff requests leave to amend.

Point 2: Getting it, keeping it, running it and conspiring to do all three in violation of RICO.

A. The elements of RICO.

The RICO statute is a complex and, at times, seemingly confusing law that has given the courts many problems. The plaintiff has used his perspective as an MBA graduate to understand the statute, which may be of assistance to the Court, or, the Court can skip ahead to the middle of page 43.

Any criminal enterprise, such as the Russian mafia, can be thought of as similar to a business conglomerate with all its attendant business relationships. The conglomerate consists of affiliates and subsidiaries each with their own managers. The conglomerate may be tightly controlled or more akin to a confederation where all member companies are pretty much autonomous. Business conglomerates often have their own in-house counsel or captive law firm where the lawyers not only participate in management decision-making but also provide directions for carrying out decisions and aspects of the operations. The same holds true of accountants; public relations firms; advertising agencies; and management, personnel and physical plant consultants. Even suppliers, wholesalers and retailers may swing enough influence to play a role in directing operations because of the integrated effort needed to bring a product or service to the market place just in time to meet consumer demand.

The really successful conglomerates have a strategic vision or goal that can be expressed in a sentence. It's goals, such as Merck's: "Preserving and improving human life; medicine is for the patient." Or Disney: "Bringing happiness to millions." Or General Electric under Jack Welch: "Become number one or two in every market we serve." Or the Russian mafia: "Infiltrate and expand operations into hard currency markets, especially the USA." (Complaint 2) These goals are what give direction to decision making by managers, employees and associates in large, modernly managed organizations. Such goals eliminate the need for a hierarchically structured command and control. A mid-level manager does not need a higher up, who in turn needs another higher up, and so on, to clear a course of action. According to Professor E. Kirby Warren at Columbia University's School of Business, managers will make those day-to-day decisions that serve the organization's stated goal.

Once an organization's goal is in place, the participants need to agree on strategies for achieving that goal. With RICO conglomerates the strategies are summarized by the three main RICO violations 18 USC 1962(a)(b) &(c): get it, keep it and run it. For the Russian mafia that means:

1. Invest money from legitimate and racketeering activities to gain control of other businesses—whether legitimate, criminal or mixed—in order to grow the Enterprise.
2. Use racketeering activities to maintain or take over businesses—whether legitimate, criminal or mixed—in order to consolidate and expand operations.
3. Effectively operate the Enterprise by conducting the racketeering activities that are its core business and using other racketeering activities to protect the core business and maximize profits.

The conspiracy section 1962(d) comes into play when participants or associates of a RICO agree on any of the above strategies. The Complaint alleges the Enterprise movants agreed on all three. (Complaint 472, 478, 484, 501, 513, 543, 547, 559)

In order to achieve its strategies a conglomerate needs tactics—the nuts-and-bolts acts needed to get, keep and run. For RICO conglomerates the tactics are of two types: a pattern of racketeering activity that is defined as individual predicate acts which are related and continuous, and agreements; that is, conspiracies, to commit predicate acts, which should not be confused with an agreement to pursue a particular strategy, which is a conspiracy to violate RICO.

As with most modern-day conglomerates, a RICO enterprise need reach across interstate or foreign borders.

And finally, the statute requires a RICO conglomerate to have harmed the plaintiff.

The purpose of RICO is not as narrow as the Enterprise movants claim when they say its aim is to protect legitimate business from infiltration by organized crime. (Memorandum p 12-3) The statutory history “not only refers ... to the importance of undermining organized crime’s influence on legitimate businesses but also refers to the need to protect the public from those [who] would run ‘organization[s] in a manner detrimental to the public interest.’” Cedric Kushner Promotion, Ltd., v. King, 533 U.S. 158, 165, 150 L. Ed. 2d 198, 121 S.Ct. 2087 (2001) (citing Senate Rep. No. 91-617 at 82.) RICO protects the public from those who use a legitimate or illegitimate enterprise as a vehicle through which unlawful activity is committed. NOW, Inc. v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 259. And “[t]he statute’s remedial purposes are nowhere more evident than in the provision of a private action for those injured by racketeering activity.” Sedmia, 473 U.S. at 498. “The object of civil RICO is ... not merely to compensate victims but to turn them into prosecutors, private attorney generals, dedicated to eliminating racketeering activity.” Rotella v. Wood, 528 U.S. 549, 557, 145 L.Ed.2d 1047, 120 S.Ct. 1075 (2000). The Complaint alleges the Russian mafia is an illegitimate enterprise (Complaint 1, 10, 12) in which the Enterprise movants and the other defendants participate in committing predicate acts (Complaint 466-681) that have harmed not only the plaintiff but other members of the public as well (Complaint 874, 884, 885, 900-907).

The Enterprise movants also try to raise the standard for pleading RICO allegations by referring to the First Circuit’s proposition that courts should give RICO allegations stricter scrutiny because of “an almost inevitable stigmatizing effect on ... defendants.” Figueru Ruiz v. Alegria, 896 F.2d 645, 650 (1st Cir. 1990). This, however, contradicts the Supreme Court, “[a]s for stigma, a civil RICO proceeding leaves no greater stain than do a number of other proceedings.” Sedima at 492.

The most favorite methods, however, used by the Enterprise movants to influence the Court into applying a higher standard of pleading to the plaintiff than is required by law consists of statements such as the Complaint “failed to demonstrate standing.” (Memorandum 14-3) Demonstrate means to prove indubitably, but that is not the role of pleadings, Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500-01. Other times, they make conclusory use of various adjectives before the word allege, such as “sufficiently.” (Memorandum p 14-3) The complaint need only allege so that the defendant has fair notice; the proof comes later in the process. Cater Constr. Co. v. Nischwitz, 111 F.2d at 973.

The Complaint alleges all the RICO elements against the Enterprise movants that the Second Circuit requires: (a) defendants (Complaint 16-23, 27-39, 47) (b) through the commission of two or more predicate acts (Complaint 466-547, 556-59) (c) constituting a pattern (Complaint 875-85) (d) of racketeering activities, those are predicate acts (Complaint 466-547, 556-59) (e) directly or indirectly invests in (Complaint 471, 474, 488, 500, 512, 542, 546), or maintains an interest in (Complaint 471, 474, 477, 480, 483, 500, 512, 542), or participates in (Complaint 471, 474, 477, 480, 500, 512, 542, 546, 558) (f) an enterprise (Complaint 1, 10-15) (g) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce (Complaint 874).

B. Predicate acts, other than those of fraud, need not be pled with Rule 9(b) particularity.

As the Complaint alleges, the Russian mafia's aim is to infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary legal operations into markets such as the USA. (Complaint 2) In order to achieve this aim, its strategies include (1) taking money from organized crime activities to get and run more illegal and legal operations; (2) using certain criminal activities to keep what it's already got; and (3) running its illegal and legal operations by using criminal practices. To achieve each of these strategies requires the use of tactics; that is, the commission of various specific criminal acts called predicate acts. See 18 USC 1961(1). When these predicate acts are fraudulent in nature, such as wire fraud, then Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) applies, and only then.

The Enterprise movants in sections B, B(i) and B(ii) of their Memorandum misstate the law on pleading with particularity in an effort to have Rule 9(b) apply to all the predicate acts alleged rather than only those involving fraud. For example, the title to B(i) states: "Plaintiff's RICO Claims Must Be Plead (sic) With Particularity under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)." (Memorandum p 14) And B(ii) states: "Plaintiff Has Failed to Demonstrate the Particularity That Is Required for Pleading RICO under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)." (Memorandum p 16) Within B(ii) they say, "... Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) dictates that the predicate acts alleged in the complaint must be pled with particularity," and, "[A]s discussed more thoroughly below, plaintiff's claims of predicate acts

(Memorandum p 16-3) These statements of the law are wrong, as are the arguments in those two sections that assume Rule 9(b) applies to all predicate acts.

The Enterprise movants even lump together in Section B(ii) non-fraudulent predicate acts with fraudulent predicate acts in an apparent attempt to have Rule 9(b) particularity apply to the non-fraudulent acts such as white slavery (Memorandum p 17), importing aliens for immoral purposes (Memorandum p 17), tampering with a witness—deceptively labeled by them obstruction of justice (Memorandum p 18), bribery (Memorandum p 30) and money laundering (Memorandum p 32). The “[d]efendants confuse the requirement to plead with particularity RICO acts predicated upon fraud ... with Rule 8’s more general notice pleading ....” Robbins v. Wilkie, 300 F.3d 1208, 1211 (10th Cir. 2002).

The Supreme Court’s decision in Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 122 L.Ed.2d 517, 113 S.Ct. 1160 (1993), has resulted in the federal courts holding to the proposition that, with the exception of actions falling within Rule 9, no special pleading requirements exist. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: 2d Civ 1221 p 59. The Supreme Court has declined to extend beyond fraud or mistake the Rule 9(b) requirement of greater particularity in allegations. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 513. Since the federal rules do not include among the enumerated actions to which 9(b) applies the predicate acts alleged in the Complaint that do not involve fraud, those non-fraudulent acts, need not satisfy Rule 9(b). Cf. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. at 513. Only predicate acts involving fraud, such as wire and mail fraud, require Rule 9(b) particularity, not predicate acts like bribery. Abels v. Farmers Commodities Corp., 259 F.3d 910, 919 (8th Cir. 2001).

The Enterprise movants make another error that periodically rears its head throughout their Memorandum. They claim “Rule 9(b) pleadings cannot be based upon information and belief.” (Memorandum p 16-2) That is not completely accurate. Rule 9(b) allegations can be pled on information and belief when the matters are peculiarly within the opposing parties’ knowledge. Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 54 n.1 (2d Cir. 1986). While pleadings of fraud generally cannot be based solely on information and belief, this rule is not rigidly enforced where much of the factual information needed to fill out the plaintiff’s complaint lies within the opposing parties’ knowledge. DeVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus., Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1248 (2d Cir. 1987). In such a situation, the plaintiff must still allege the facts on which his belief is founded, which the Complaint does.

i. The Complaint’s allegations of predicate acts involving fraud satisfy Rule 9(b).

The Enterprise movants’ Memorandum at p 14-4 list the goals behind requiring fraudulent predicate acts to be pled with particularity. However, “Rule 9(b) should not be applied in such a way as to exalt these goals above all else.” Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 38 (SDNY July 16, 2003, J. Mukasey). “[A] plaintiff need not plead dates, times and places with absolute precision, so long as the complaint ‘gives fair notice and reasonable notice to defendants of the claim and the grounds upon which it is based.’” Int’l Motor Sports Group v. Gordon, 1999 WL 619633, at *3 (SDNY, Aug. 16, 1999, J. Mukasey)(quoting Spear, Leeds & Kellogg v. Public Service Co., 700 F. Supp. 791, 793 (SDNY 1988). “The Second Circuit and courts in this district frequently have found that exclusive possession of the relevant information by the defendant is a ground for reading Rule 9(b)’s requirements permissively.” Berk, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39. Since the details of fraudulent predicate acts by the Russian mafia are not available in 10K and 10Q Securities and Exchange filings or other public records, Rule 9(b) particularity should be applied permissively to the Complaint's allegations concerning such acts should.

As for those predicate acts of fraud where specific information of conduct is within the plaintiff's knowledge, the Complaint alleges the gist of what the defendants said, the time frame, how the statements were made, how the statements were misleading, and how the Enterprise movants benefited. The plaintiff, however, is not required to recite the precise statement which a specific person in the Enterprise made on a particular date. Vista Co. v. Columbia Pictures Industries, Inc., 725 F.Supp. 1286, 1302 (SDNY 1989). (Complaint 190-93, 201-03, 218-19, 233, 240, 245, 273, 282, 289, 308-09, 318)

Even as to fraudulent predicate acts, the Enterprise movants continue their tactic to apply still a higher pleading standard than the law demands. They argue the goals "that dictate that fraud be pled with particularity exist with even greater urgency in civil RICO actions" because of the "stigmatizing effect" of being named a RICO defendant. (Memorandum p 15-1) Once again, the Supreme Court does not see it that way, "[a]s for stigma, a civil RICO proceeding leaves no greater stain than do a number of other proceedings." Sedima at 492.

The movants also err when they claim that "[w]here multiple defendants are involved, the complaint is required to describe specifically each defendant's alleged participation in the fraud." (Memorandum p 16-1) The actual rule is that defendants can be grouped together as long as there is enough information about the alleged wrongdoings to provide defendants with fair notice. Vista v. Columbia Pictures Indus., 725 F.Supp. 1286, 1301-02. "Rule 9(b) does not require omniscience; rather ... enough specificity to put the defendants on notice ...." Arnold v. Arnold Corp., 920 F.2d 1269, 1279-80 (6th Cir. 1990).

If the Court determines that the Complaint's allegations of fraudulent predicate acts do not meet Rule 9(b), the plaintiff requests leave to amend the Complaint, and where the information is peculiarly in the possession of the Enterprise movants, the plaintiff requests limited discovery in order to obtain that information before amending the Complaint.

(ii) Predicate act allegations in the Complaint that do not require particularity, and a couple that do.

In addition to the Enterprise movants' false claim that Rule 9(b) applies to non-fraudulent predicate acts, they also mistakenly claim in section B(ii) of their Memorandum that the non-predicate crimes alleged against them are "merely repetitive" of the predicate acts.

(Memorandum p 16, n. 14) If the crimes were repetitive, they would all be predicate acts, but they are not. Among the non-predicate federal crimes are employing unauthorized aliens, 8 USC 1324a; tax evasion, 26 USC 7201, 7203, 7206-07; use of fraudulent documents, 8 USC 1324c; bribing Russian officials in violation of the foreign corrupt practices act, 15 USC 78dd-2, 3; perjury, 18 USC 1621, and false statements, 18 USC 1001; conspiracies to violate federal law, 18 USC 371; and obstructing federal government proceedings, 18 USC 1505. As for New York State law, the non-predicate act violations include prostitution, Penal 230; reckless endangerment, Penal 120.20 & 120.25; coercion, Penal 135.60 & 135.65; official misconduct, Penal 195; intimidation, Penal 215.15; and conspiracy to violate state law, Penal 105.

(aa) White slavery and fraud and misuse of visas.

For some strange reason the Enterprise movants mix two non-fraudulent predicate crimes, white slavery and importing aliens for immoral purposes, with two fraudulent predicate crimes, fraud and misuse of visas and procurement of nationality unlawfully. Perhaps they want the Rule 9(b) particularity standard applied to the non-fraudulent crimes.

First, let's dispatch with the Enterprise movants usual litany that the Complaint does not provide evidence or as they say, "a single document, statement or fact" or "support," in order to prove or as they say, "to show," "for the plaintiff's conclusions" and fails to "demonstrate" any of the above predicate crimes. (Memorandum p 17-4) Complaints do not prove or provide evidence. Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639-40 (2d Cir. 1980).

Second, putting aside the Enterprise movants' monotonous name-calling, the Complaint's allegations of white slavery and importing aliens for immoral purposes need only comply with Rule 8's more general notice pleading, Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500-01, 91 L.Ed. 451, 67 S.Ct. 385 (1947), since they are not fraudulent predicate acts. These allegations concerning the Enterprise movants are in the Complaint at 19, 22, 23, 27, 33, 38, 320, 322, 329, 403, 410, 434, 466, 485, 490, 502, 521.

As for fraud concerning visas and procurement of nationality, nearly all of that information is in the possession of the Enterprise movants, and, since the Second Circuit reads Rule 9(b)'s requirements permissively in such situations, Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39, and the plaintiff is not omniscient, Arnold v. Arnold Corp., 920 F.2d 1269, 1279-80 (6th Cir. 1990), the Complaint provides enough information to give the Enterprise movants fair notice. (Complaint 28, 29, 32, 33, 223, 225, 324, 325, 327, 328, 408, 409, 467, 468, 491, 493, 503, 505, 514, 522, 524)

The Enterprise movants refer to 18 USC 1512 as "the predicate act of obstruction of justice," (Memorandum 18-2), but the title to that section is "Tampering with a witness, victim or an informant.” The term “obstruction of justice” includes the many different crimes listed in the eighteen sections of Chapter 73 of Title 18, which is why the chapter is called “Obstruction of Justice.” Not all of the crimes listed in the chapter are predicate acts. Perhaps the Enterprise movants’ juxtaposition of terminology is because the two cases they depend on in their Memorandum at p 19-2, Kashelkar v. Rubin & Rothman, 97 F.Supp.2d 383 (SDNY 2000), and O’Malley v. NYC Transit Auth., 896 F.2d 704 (2d Cir. 1990), use the term “obstruction of justice” in their decisions, but those decisions do not concern 18 USC 1512, tampering with a witness, victim or an informant.

Tampering is alleged against Enterprise movants FlashDancers (Complaint 281-83, 288-90, 317-18, 479, 482); Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich (Complaint 224, 225, 228, 229, 232, 234, 236, 237, 239-41, 243-45, 265-68, 273, 280-83, 286-90, 297-98, 302-04, 306-12, 316-18, 487, 492, 494, 504, 506); Shipilina (Complaint 228, 229, 232, 234, 236, 237, 239-41, 243-45, 265-68, 280-83, 286-90, 293, 297-98, 302-04, 306-12, 316-18, 530, 531); and Henning (Complaint 307-12). The Complaint also alleges violation of another section in Chapter 73, 18 USC 1510, in which movant Shipilina attempted to reward the plaintiff for not communicating with criminal investigators. (Complaint at 233, 529)

In an apparent effort to rewrite 18 USC 1512 to their liking, the Enterprise movants delete the key paragraph, (b)(3), mislabel another paragraph and selectively edit the statute to their benefit. (Memorandum p 18-3)

Here is how the pertinent part of 18 USC 1512 actually reads:

(b) Whoever knowingly uses intimidation, threatens, or corruptly persuades another person, or attempts to do so, or engages in misleading conduct toward another person, with intent to--

(3) hinder, delay, or prevent the communication to a law enforcement officer or judge of the United States of information relating to the commission or possible commission of a Federal offense ....

Besides editing in “physical force” and editing out “corruptly persuades,” the Enterprise movants completely deleted section 1512(b)(3) (Memorandum p 18-3) By doing so, they were able to argue that 18 USC 1512 can only be violated if there is an ongoing “official proceeding” of the federal government. (Memorandum p 19-1) Since the Russian criminal case and the New York divorce case were not federal, the movants conclude there was no official proceeding, so no violation. (Memorandum p 19-2) Section 1512(b)(3), however, does not require an ongoing official federal proceeding because it does not even include the words “official proceeding” as do sections 1512(b)(1) & (2). It specifically concerns communications to a federal law enforcement officer, which usually occur before any proceedings begin.

If the Court concludes that 1512(b)(3) does require an ongoing federal proceeding, the plaintiff argues that when Enterprise movant Shipilina entered the US in July 2000 on a conditional permanent residency an official proceeding began that will not end until she is granted permanent residency or removed from the country. The Enterprise movants even state at Memorandum p 3-1 that “Mundy ... continues to represent Ms. Shipilina in relation to immigration matters pending before the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.” So an official proceeding has been going on since July 2000.

As the Complaint alleges, there were threats made against the plaintiff and witnesses in Russia concerning the divorce case and the Russian criminal case, also officials in Russia were corruptly persuaded, with bribes, to close the criminal case against one of the defendants. (Complaint 236, 237, 239-41, 243-45, 265-68, 273, 280-83, 286-90, 293, 297-98, 302-04, 306-12, 316-18, 479, 482, 487, 492, 494, 504, 506, 530, 531) The reason for those threats and bribes was to hinder, delay or prevent information reaching federal law enforcement officials about the Enterprise movants' violations of federal law in furtherance of the Russian mafia's Scheme. (Complaint 224, 225, 228, 232, 234, 236, 237, 241, 243, 244, 265, 281, 287, 288, 290, 304, 306, 307, 317, 318) Whether that information was to come directly from the plaintiff or by way of testimony in a state court and Russian criminal case, it was on its way to federal law enforcement officers until the Enterprise movants' threats and bribes effectively prevented any court testimony and attempted to stop the plaintiff from giving information. The Enterprise movants argue at Memorandum p 19, n. 16; p 23-1 that with respect to the plaintiff, they did not violate 1512(b)(3) because the plaintiff "continued to cooperate with the INS." A violation of the statute specifically includes the attempt to threaten, intimidate or corruptly persuade. 18 USC 1512(b). The effort does not have to succeed to be a violation or to cause harm. In fact, the threats against the plaintiff led to court action, including this RICO case.

1. They mistakenly apply Rule 9(b) particularity requirements to the pleading of the non-fraudulent predicate act of 18 USC 1512, tampering with a witness, victim or informant. Rule 9(b) does not apply to non-fraudulent predicate acts. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 513.

2. Eleven times in this section they object that the tampering allegations do not provide "proof," (Memorandum p 20-3,4, p 21-1,2,3, p 22-1,2,3, p 23-2,3, p 24-2). Pleadings are not required to provide proof. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500-01.

3. The Enterprise movants make statements as though they were facts, and then use those statements to conclude that there were no violations of 18 USC 1512. That is not the purpose of a memorandum of law for a motion to dismiss. Discovery is the device for ascertaining the facts relative to the issues, Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 501, and it is the tier of fact who makes inferences from the admissible evidence. For example the movants repeatedly say, “[t]he plaintiff cannot state which witnesses were purportedly threatened.” (Memorandum p 21-2, p 23-2, p 24-3) They do not know that. The witnesses’ names will come out in discovery, unless the Court wants the names now. Or, when the Enterprise movants conclude that medical records and an audiotape actually exist and show the plaintiff assaulted movant Shipilina and tried to extort money. Based on their assumption of the existence of these items, they conclude that movant Mundy’s threats to use the records and audiotape in court were not tampering. (Memorandum p 21-1,3) Whether the records and audiotape exist, which the Complaint alleges at 245, 247 they do not, and whether they are authentic is a discovery issue. Or, when they conclude that getting a US citizen to give up the procedural right of making a motion for a trial by using threats does not constitute damage. (Memorandum p 22-1) Or, when the Enterprise movants conclude at Memorandum p 22-3 to p 23-1 that a call in the night from a man using a false name, who menacingly says the following is not a threat: “...cease and desist with your actions against Alina Shipilina,” “I know everything about you,” “...you disgust me,” “...I’m very much available,” “You better get your act together...,” “... you at this point in time have crossed several boundaries that cause for a lot of red flags to wave in the air...,” “That’s it—leave her alone! Have a nice day.” (Complaint 289, 290) Or, when they conclude that movant Henning’s threat to arrest the plaintiff for “violation of a protective order,” which was not a violation, (Henning Affidavit ¶ 9), was not tampering.

4. The Enterprise movants wrongly claim that allegations of tampering with a witness or informant cannot be made on information and belief. (Memorandum p 20-3, p 21-2, p 22-1, p 22-2, p 23-2, p 24-2) Violation of 18 USC 1512 is a non-fraudulent predicate act, so it can be pled on information and belief, Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: 2d Civ. 1224, p 205.

If the Court, however, considers tampering fraudulent, the predicate act can still be pled on information and belief and the standard of particularity lessen, since the crucial information is peculiarly in the Enterprise movants possession. Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 54 n.1 (2d Cir. 1986); Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39. The plaintiff was not a party to Enterprise movants FlashDancers, Kuba, Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and Henning's agreements and arrangements for threatening, intimidating or corruptly persuading witnesses, the plaintiff or officials in order to prevent exposure of the Russian mafia's Scheme and its activities. Yet among the movants' objections in their Memorandum at p 21-2 is that the Complaint does not name "exactly which enterprise gangsters carried out [the] threats." Give me a break. Mobsters do not leave calling cards.

The Enterprise movants' Memorandum fails to address other alleged violations of 18 USC 1512, such as Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina's use of misleading conduct in the form of suborning perjury and perjury before the INS, the police and a New York court to cover up culpable information concerning an asset of the Russian mafia, Shipilina, so that she might obtain permanent residency. (Complaint 224, 225, 228, 229, 232, 234, 239) The Memorandum also leaves out Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina's arrangement to threaten the plaintiff with death at the hands of Russian gangsters. (Complaint 236, 237) In addition, the Memorandum at p 24-2 claims the Complaint did not allege when the third threatening telephone call was made to the plaintiff, but the Complaint states at paragraph 318: "On March 27, 2002, in the evening, a man calling himself John Pierre telephoned the plaintiff and threatened him not to testify before the INS or try to reopen the Krasnodar criminal case."

Further, the Enterprise movants wrongly state in their Memorandum at p 24-3 that other than movant Shipilina and defendant member Inessa Shipilina. "... the plaintiff fails to name a single person for whom these purported illegal activities [tampering under 18 USC 1512] were performed," The Complaint alleges at 243, 244, 304 that the purpose of the threats, intimidations, corrupt persuasions and misleading conduct were to prevent the exposure of the Russian mafia's Scheme and its activities. Since the Enterprise movants and other defendants are, as alleged, members of the Russian mafia, the tampering activities were performed for them.

The Enterprise movants once again use the tactic of claiming the alleged non-predicate acts in the Complaint are "repetitive of the already asserted 'predicate acts.'" (Memorandum at p 18, n 15, and p 24, n 17) And once again that is not the full truth. While some of the Enterprise movants and other defendants' crimes do violate both the RICO predicate acts and, at the same time, New York criminal law, many of their acts include state or federal crimes that do not fall within the list of predicate acts in 18 USC 1961.

The Complaint's allegations of the Enterprise movants' tampering in violation of 18 USC 1512 by using threats, intimidation, corrupt persuasion and misleading conduct provide enough information to give the movants fair and reasonable notice.

cc. Mail and Wire Fraud

The Enterprise movants' Memorandum mistakenly states the pleading requirements for mail and wire fraud by claiming "it essential that evidence show," (Memorandum p 25-2), a "showing ... is necessary," (Memorandum p 25-2), the Complaint "fails to provide any facts," (Memorandum p 25-3), the Complaint must "demonstrate," (Memorandum p 25-3), the Complaint “has not established,” (Memorandum p 26-1), “there is no proof,” (Memorandum p 26-3), “has failed to demonstrate,” (Memorandum p 27-3), “failed to show,” (Memorandum p 27-3), “failed to provide any documentation,” (Memorandum p 29-1), “failed to provide any evidence,” (Memorandum p 29-3). Although the predicate acts of wire fraud, which includes today’s ubiquitous use of the Internet, and mail fraud require pleading with particularity under Rule 9(b), the special nature of fraud does not necessitate anything other than notice of the claim. It does not require proof. It simply necessitates a higher degree of notice, enabling the Enterprise movants to respond specifically, at an early stage. Abels v. Farmers Commodities Corp., 259 F.3d 910, 920 (8th Cir. 2001). “While Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) proscribes the pleading of fraud by hindsight, we also cannot expect the plaintiffs to plead fraud with complete insight before discovery is complete.” Maldonado v. Dominguez, 137 F.3d 1, 9 (1st Cir. 1998).

The Enterprise movants harp on the plaintiff’s failure to “demonstrate” this or “show” that, which means prove this or prove that. Black’s Law Dictionary. For example at Memorandum p 27-3, it’s failure to demonstrate the Scheme exists or that the Enterprise movants were part of the Scheme and failure to show they engaged in mail and wire fraud to keep the Scheme going and protect it. The Complaint doesn’t have to demonstrate, show or prove only allege the mail and wire fraud elements. (Complaint 2, 227, 228, 232, 234, 236, 240, 243, 245, 254, 265, 273, 275, 280-82, 287-89, 293-95, 298, 300-01, 306, 308, 315-318, 473, 493, 505, 515, 516, 557) In Gitterman v. Vitoulis, 564 F.Supp. 46, 49 (SDNY 1982), the Court denied the defendants’ motion to dismiss a RICO action by holding it was not beyond the possibility that the plaintiffs could prove the “use of the mails in furtherance of defendants’ schemes to defraud the plaintiffs, in violation of 18 USC 1341; [and] interstate telephone calls in furtherance of defendants’ scheme to defraud the plaintiffs, in violation of 18 USC 1343.” The plaintiffs in that case did not have to “demonstrate”, “show” or “prove” as the Enterprise movants claim the plaintiff has to here. Furthermore, a RICO complaint need not be specific as to each allegation of mail or wire fraud when the nature of the RICO Scheme is sufficiently pled so as to give notice to each defendant where, as here, the challenge to the allegations precedes discovery. Ifill v. West, No. 96 Civ. 6308, 1999 WL 690144, at *4 (SDNY Aug. 24, 1999).

The elements of the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud are similar but not identical: Mail fraud requires (1) existence of a scheme to defraud; (2) defendants participate in the scheme with intent to defraud; (3) defendants use the US Postal Service to further the scheme. US v. Zagari, 111 F.3d 307, 327 (2d Cir. 1997). Wire fraud replaces element (3) with communications that cross state lines to further the scheme. Id.

The Enterprise movants exploit the similarity between mail and wire fraud to foist the false assumption that when a letter is sent or delivered by the US Postal Service, it must cross state lines. “To properly plead mail ... fraud violations, the plaintiff must demonstrate interstate use ....” (Memorandum p 25-4) Not true, whether a letter sent through the US Postal Service travels across town or around the world is irrelevant for mail fraud. 18 USC 1341. Federal jurisdiction over the US Postal Service is sufficient to assert jurisdiction over intrastate postal service mailings under the mail fraud statute. US v. Elliott, 89 F.3d 1360, 1364 (8th Cir. 1996). The Complaint alleges at 240, 241 that Enterprise movant Mundy sent a letter through the US Postal Service threatening a “difficult” divorce proceeding in order to intimidate the plaintiff into lying to the INS in furtherance of the Russian mafia’s Scheme. Even though the letter was sent intrastate (Memorandum p 26-2), the mail fraud statute still applies.

The “scheme to defraud” under mail and wire fraud has been interpreted broadly by the courts to include any trickery, deceit, half-truth, concealment of material facts or affirmative misrepresentations. Rakoff and Goldstein, RICO, Civil and Criminal, 2.02(1)(c). A scheme to defraud is measured by a standard of “moral uprightness, of fundamental honesty, fair play and right dealing in the general and business life of members of society.” Gregory v. US, 252 F.2d 104, 109 (5th Cir.1958). The Complaint alleges a scheme by the Russian mafia to infiltrate and expand its operations in the US by, in part, tricking American men into bringing mafia managers and prostitutes to America as companions and wives. (Complaint 2, 135-38, 164, 883) The Supreme Court recently added a materiality factor to the scheme that is satisfied when the maker of the representation or omission has reason to know the recipient is likely to regard the matter as important in determining his choice of action. Neder v. US, 527 U.S. 1, 22-23, 144 L.Ed.2d 35, 119 S.Ct. 1827 (1999). The Complaint alleges that the Russian mafia Scheme, which ensnared the plaintiff, falsely depicts its managers and prostitutes as honest, hard-working women who want to raise a family because if the truth were told the mafia knows American men would run the other way. (Complaint 165, 167, 170-72, 174-80, 361-66) _

As for the element of intent or knowing participation in or aiding and abetting the Scheme, Rule 9(b) specifically states: “Malice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally.” The Supreme Court also held that “[m]alice, intent, knowledge, and other condition of mind of a person may be averred generally.” Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 513 n. 3. The Complaint at 682, 683 generally alleges intent and knowledge.

The Second Circuit requires some minimal basis for conclusory allegations of scienter that give rise to a strong inference of fraudulent intent. Powers v. British Vita PLC, 57 F.3d 176, 184 (2d Cir. 1995). A complaint may give rise to a sufficient inference of fraudulent intent by alleging a motive for committing fraud and an opportunity to do so. Id. citing Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 820 F.2d 46, 50 (2d Cir. 1987). As alleged in the Complaint, the Enterprise movants' motive for engaging in mail and wire fraud is to protect and further the Enterprise's Scheme, which for them is the Golden Fleece (Complaint 2, 12), and their opportunities are inferred by the allegations of what they did: communications by mail and wire to carry out bribery, threats, intimidation, perjury and lulling in furtherance of the Scheme. They saw their opportunities and they took them. (Complaint 31, 201-205, 218, 219, 227, 228, 234, 236, 243, 245, 254, 265, 273, 275, 280-82, 287-89, 293, 294, 295, 298, 300, 301, 306-08, 315-18, 493, 495, 497, 505, 507, 509, 532, 534, 540, 541, 557, and 742) Furthermore, intent to defraud can be inferred by a pattern of conduct, US v. Reid, 533 F.2d 1255, 1264 (D.C. Cir. 1976), or the nature of the scheme itself, Beck v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 820 F.2d 46, 49-51 (2d Cir. 1987). The Complaint's allegations cited to directly above illustrate the Enterprise movants' modus operandi of making communications to arrange and execute various crimes to assure the Scheme's ongoing success. A key characteristic of the nature of the Scheme is defrauding and lulling its targets. (Complaint 883) As such, the Enterprise movants' objection that the Complaint's allegations of intent are "not sufficient" (Memorandum p25-3) fails.

The third element "in furtherance of the scheme" means communications by mail or wire need only be "incident to an essential part of the scheme," and even innocent mailings, Schmuck v. US, 489 U.S. 705, 711, 715, 103 L.Ed.2d 734, 109 S.Ct. 2091 (1989), or acts to lull the victim into a false sense of security, United States v. Maze, 414 U.S. 395, 403, 38 L.Ed.2d 603, 94 S.Ct. 645 (1974) may suffice. Nearly any communication—by any person in the racketeering association, whether to the victim, or to any other member of the association, or third party and whatever its content—can be in furtherance of the scheme. Rakoff and Goldstein, RICO, Civil and Criminal, 2.02(1)(c). The defendant does not have to actually participate in the communication as long as he reasonably foresaw it. Maze, 414 U.S. 395, 399, 38 L.Ed.2d 603, 94 S.Ct. 645 (1974); US v. Blackmon, 839 F.3d 900, 907 (2d Cir. 1988). Further, the communication does not have to be false in any way or inaccurate so long as it is made in furtherance or pursuant to the scheme. US v. Reid, 533 F.2d 1255, 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1976). The Enterprise movants alleged communications by mail and wire to arrange and carry out bribery, threats, intimidation, perjury and lulling were in furtherance of the Scheme. (Complaint 31, 201-205, 218, 219, 227, 228, 234, 236, 243, 245, 254, 265, 273, 275, 280-82, 287-89, 293, 294, 295, 298, 300, 301, 306-08, 315-18, 493, 495, 497, 505, 507, 509, 532, 534, 540, 541, 557, and 742)

In the Second Circuit, there is a fourth element. Mail and wire fraud require reliance by the plaintiff or a third party, Sterling Interiors Group, Inc. v. Haworth, 94 Civ. 9216, 1996 US Dist Lexis 13908, *10, so the plaintiff has to allege he detrimentally relied on the mail or wire communications, Metromedia Co. v. Fugazy, 983 F.2d 350, 368 (2d Cir. 1992), cert. denied, 508 U.S. 952, 124 L.Ed.2d 662, 113 S.Ct. 2445 (1993). The Enterprise movants failed to include this fourth element, but the Court most likely will. The Complaint’s story (as in news story—not the “imaginary tale of fantasy” used by the Enterprise movants) paints a bleak picture of how the Russian mafia suckered him. He relied on numerous deceptions meant to further and protect the Russian mafia’s Scheme and lull him into believing what was not the truth. (Complaint 200-05, 218-19) As such the Second Circuit’s reliance requirement is alleged.

The plaintiff, however, argues that this reliance requirement is inappropriate for mail and wire fraud in the RICO context. Although common law civil fraud requires reliance, liability under the civil RICO statute is based on criminal fraud, which under the federal statute does not require reliance by anyone: it only requires that the defendant tried to deceive, whether he succeeded or not. Neder v. United States, 527 U.S. 1, 24. Since the federal criminal fraud statutes, such as mail and wire fraud, do not require reliance, “a literal reading of RICO—the presumptive choice of interpretation—[shows] nothing more than the criminal violation and resulting harm is required.” Systems Management, Inc. v. Loisel, 303 F.3d 100, 104 (1st Cir. 2002). “Reliance is doubtless the most obvious way in which fraud can cause harm, but it is not the only way....” Id. So to the extent, if it does, require reliance, the Court is applying a law in conflict with another circuit and the Supreme Court.

Contrary to the Enterprise movants’ statement at Memorandum p 25-4, the Complaint never alleged intrastate wire communications in furtherance of the Scheme as a violation of the wire fraud statute. In addition, the Enterprise movants also wrongly assumed that international wire communications are not covered by the wire fraud act. (Memorandum p 25-4, p 26-2) The act reaches communication via telephone, radio, television, microwave and the Internet, whether interstate or international, if the international communication touches the US, Wentz v US, 244 F.2d 172, 175 (9th Cir. 1957); US v. Goldberg, 830 F.2d 459, 468, n.1 (3d Cir. 1987)(dissenting opinion J. Sloviter). The Complaint alleges wire communications between Enterprise movants in the US and member defendants overseas, so those international uses of the wire system obviously touched the US, perhaps foreign would have been a better word to use in the Complaint. (Complaint 31, 227, 294, 295, 300, 301, 315, 493, 495, 497, 505, 507, 509, 532, 534, 540, 541, 557, and 742)

The Enterprise movants cite to McCoy v. Goldberg, 748 F.Supp. 146, 154 (SDNY 1990) for the presumption that wire communications between residents of New York are intrastate. That case is distinguishable from this action. In McCoy, the complaint failed to allege interstate communications, which is the jurisdictional prerequisite for wire fraud. McCoy at 154. The Complaint in this action specificity alleges interstate wire communications by movants, Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and Henning. (Complaint 315, 488, 493, 495, 497, 505, 507, 509, 532, 557) Still, the Enterprise movants claim that this presumption of intrastate wire communication applies to communications among movants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and Henning because “it is apparent [they] all reside in New York.” (Memorandum p 26-3) Apparent is not a fact, and there will not be any admissible facts until discovery. The Complaint, however, does allege that Kuba, Mundy & Associates has an office in New Jersey and that movant Shipilina frequently travels. (Complaint 222, 338, 417, 449) In addition, Mundy, Petrovich and Henning were all served at work, but where they reside or were when they communicated by wire is within their knowledge, so the Complaint need not allege all the specifics the movants demand. Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39.

The Enterprise movants even try to apply their intrastate presumption to the threatening telephone calls (Complaint 282, 289, 318) made by Member Madison, a.k.a. Pierre, by claiming the calls are presumptively intrastate because this unknown defendant is listed in the Complaint as a “domestic” member of the Enterprise. (Memorandum p 27-1) It is obvious from the Complaint’s structure that “domestic” refers to the US, not New York. First, domestic defendants include persons from Wisconsin and California while the residences of others are unknown. Second the non-domestic defendants are divided up by country: Russia, Cyprus and Mexico. Besides, Member Madison’s real name and location are unknown to the plaintiff, but if the Enterprise movants would like to provide such, then whether the threatening calls were intrastate or interstate might be quickly resolved. But once again, that is really discovery, not pleading.

The Enterprise movants further object that the Complaint does not allege these threatening calls were interstate. (Memorandum p 27-1) The plaintiff thanks the Enterprise movants for pointing out this oversight and, if leave to amend is granted, the plaintiff will include allegations that the calls were interstate or foreign.

On another alleged telephone call or calls where Mundy, Petrovich or Shipilina communicated with Enterprise movant Henning to arrange for threatening the plaintiff with a bogus arrest (Complaint 315), the movants argue that because the Complaint pleads in the alternative that the communication was by interstate or international means, it is somehow deficient. (Memorandum p 26-3) The federal rules, however, permit pleading in the alternative: “A party may set forth two or more statements of a claim ... alternately or hypothetically, either in one count ... or in separate counts ....” Rule 8(e)(2). Movants also wrongly claim that the allegation fails because it is made on information and belief. Even fraudulent predicate acts can be pled on information and belief when the information, as here, is within the possession of the defendants. DeVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus., Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1248 (2d Cir. 1987).

Another error made by the Enterprise movants is their assertion that each communication by mail or wire must contain a false or misleading statement. With respect to the letter sent to the plaintiff by Enterprise movant Mundy (Complaint 240, 241) and the arrangements made by movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina to threaten Russian witnesses and bribe Russian officials (Complaint 294, 300), the Enterprise movants argue “[t]here is absolutely no identification of the specific statements which were purportedly false or misleading or the manner in which this letter was purportedly fraudulent.” (Memorandum p 28-4, and similar statement at p 29-1 concerning threats and bribes.) The Court in Spira v. Nick, 876 F.Supp. 553, 559 (SDNY 1995) disagrees: “The mailings [and telephone communications] that are elements of the offense need not themselves contain false or misleading statements.” In fact, a defendant “may have committed mail [wire] fraud even if [the defendant] never used the mails [wire]. [Because] the offense consists of the foreseeable use of the mails [wire] by anyone in furtherance of a scheme.” Id. A plaintiff may, but need not, allege that a defendant made misrepresentations of fact. Murr Plumbing, Inc. v. Scherer Brothers Financial, 48 F.3d 1066, 1069 n. 6 (8th Cir. 1995).

Since misrepresentations of fact are not necessary to the offense, it follows that no misrepresentations need be transmitted by mail or wire: even routine business communications in these media or one sent for legitimate business purposes may suffice so long as it assists in carrying out the scheme. Atlas Pile Driving Co. v. DiCon Financial Co., 886 F.2d 986, 992 (8th Cir. 1989). So even accepting the Enterprise movants spin that the Mundy letter threatening “difficult” divorce proceedings “merely represents communication between parties in connection with litigation” (Memorandum p 28-4), it still furthered the Scheme in violation of the mail fraud statute. As for Enterprise movants’ Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina’s use of international facilities that touch the US to arrange for threats and bribery, those also do not require misrepresentations to violate the mail and wire fraud statutes. Further, to the extent that the Enterprise movants other criminal conduct as alleged in the Complaint at 684-773, 778-783 used the mail, or interstate or foreign wire communications to advance or protect the Russian mafia’s Scheme, then those communications constitute mail or wire fraud.

The Enterprise movants persist in their false proposition that Rule 9(b) applies to predicate acts when they say, “because the plaintiff alleges mail and wire fraud as predicate acts...” the allegations must be made with particularity. (Memorandum p 28-2) Rule 9(b) applies to mail and wire fraud pleadings, but not because mail and wire fraud are predicate acts, but because they are fraudulent. Rule 9(b) does not apply to predicate acts that are not in themselves fraudulent. Spira v. Nick, 876 F.Supp. 553, 559-60.

The Enterprise movants miss a number of important considerations in applying the particularity requirement to mail and wire fraud. The flexibility provided by Rule 11(b)(3) allows pleadings based on evidence reasonably anticipated after further investigation or discovery, which relaxes the particularity requirements of Rule 9(b) where the RICO plaintiff lacks access to all facts necessary to detail a claim. Rotella v. Wood, 528 U.S. 549, 560, 145 L.Ed.2d 1047, 120 S.Ct. 1075 (2000). The movants object that the Complaint provides no specific dates, times, places or particulars. (Memorandum p 28-4, p 29-1, p 29-3) But as Chief Judge Mukasey's opinion in Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 38, 39, holds: a plaintiff need not plead dates, times and places with absolute precision, so long as the complaint gives fair notice and reasonable notice to defendants of the claim and the grounds upon which it is based.

In addition, Rule 9(b) should be applied with flexibility, and the plaintiff does not have to plead issues that defendants may have concealed. Rolo v. City Investing Co. Liquidating Trust, 155 F.3d 644, 658 (3d Cir. 1998). Most of the Complaint's allegations of mail and wire fraud involve conduct within the knowledge of the Enterprise movants and other member defendants, except for Paulsen. Criminal plans are not publicized, especially to the victim. They are hatched in secret so as to conceal those involved. Communications by electronic means concerning agreements and arrangements made in furtherance of the Scheme (Complaint 228, 234, 236, 243, 245, 254, 265, 273, 275, 293, 294, 298, 300, 306, 307, 308, 315) will cut across state or foreign borders in this age of email, the international reach of the Russian mafia (Complaint 1), movant Shipilina's frequent travels to Russia and Cyprus (Complaint 449), and the interstate nature of Enterprise movant Kuba, Mundy & Associates (Complaint 222) while mailings using the US

Post need not cross any borders. “As to the above uses of the mails and wires, the plaintiff [is] surely correct that a court cannot reasonably expect highly specific allegations before allowing .... [a] discovery period. The facts that would have to be alleged are known to the defendants, but the plaintiff [has] not yet had a chance to find them out. (This is especially true of telephone calls, which may leave little or no paper trail.) Where a plaintiff is not a party to a communication, particularity in pleading may become impractical.” Abels v. Farmers Commodities Corp., 259 F.3d 910, 921 (8th Cir. 2001).

As for the threatening telephone calls received by the plaintiff, his caller identification service did not reveal where the calls came from (Complaint 282, 289, 318). In addition, the plaintiff cannot realistically know without discovery how the Enterprise movants reached their agreements or made their arrangements to threaten the plaintiff with physical harm (Complaint 280, 281, 287, 288, 316, 317) in order to keep him from exposing the Russian mafia’s Scheme.

The Complaint provides details on other communications to which the plaintiff was a party. International telephone calls that touched the US and mail delivered by the US Postal Service were used by Enterprise movant Shipilina to further the Russian mafia’s Scheme and lull the plaintiff so as to protect that Scheme. (Complaint 201-205, 218-19, 227) If the Enterprise movants would like the plaintiff’s contemporaneous notes as to the telephone calls and copies of the mail, he will provide them on request, but there is no requirement that these documents be attached to the Complaint, since their production really involves discovery.

In their Memorandum at p 27-2, the Enterprise movants confuse violations of the mail and wire fraud acts, which fall within Rule 9(b) pleading standards, with violations of 18 USC 1952: Interstate and foreign travel or transportation in aid of a racketeering enterprise (Complaint 495, 497, 507, 509, 519, 532, 534, 540, 541), and 18 USC 1956: money laundering (Complaint 496, 498, 508, 510, 533, 535, 536, 538, 539). The predicate acts of interstate and foreign travel or transportation in aid of a racketeering enterprise and money laundering do not require Rule 9(b) particularity pleading, since they are non-fraudulent. On those occasions when Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina used or caused to be used the mail or wire in order to further the Scheme by travel or transportation in aid of the Russian mafia or laundering money, they then also violated the mail and wire fraud statutes. So the actual mail or wire communication part of the conduct, not the travel or transportation in aid or money laundering, needs to be pled with particularity. The communication conduct, however, is within their knowledge, so Rule 9(b) is read permissively. Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39. The Court, of course, could also grant limited discovery on the communication conduct involved in aiding the Russian mafia and laundering money.

In their Memorandum at p 29-2 the Enterprise movants misstate the Complaint's allegations to fit their argument, reminiscent of the newspaper reporting motto, "Don't let the facts get in the way of a good story," only here, it's don't let the allegations get in the way of a dissembling argument. The Enterprise movants say the Complaint at 294 "alleges that Mundy and Petrovich [and Shipilina] used the international telephone system to threaten witnesses [in Russia]...." (Memorandum p 29-2) Not accurate. The Complaint at 294 alleges they "arrange[d]" for the threatening of witnesses in Krasnodar, Russia—not that they did the threatening. A big difference, since making the arrangements required using the international telephone system from America to overseas while the threats themselves did not. The threats were most likely made internally within Russia.

The Memorandum at p 29-3 objects that the Complaint did not identify the witnesses threatened or the nature of the threats. The plaintiff knows which witnesses in Krasnodar were threatened and the manner of the threats, but since those communications were made in Krasnodar, they do not fall under the wire fraud statute. It is the communications used by movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina in arranging the threats that are alleged to violate the wire fraud statute—not the telephone calls and in person threats made by Russian goons on witnesses in Krasnodar. (Complaint 293, 297)

The Enterprise movants repeat their misstatement of the law on using “information and belief” to plead fraud under Rule 9(b) when they claim the plaintiff’s allegations are deficient because some are based “only upon information and belief.” (Memorandum p 30-2) Pleading mail and wire fraud on information and belief is permissible where the facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendants. Gitterman v. Vitoulis, 564 F.Supp. 46, 50 (SDNY 1982). The mere fact that the plaintiff, in a complaint alleging fraud, had pleaded certain matters on information and belief was an insufficient basis for dismissal. Kamerman v. Steinberg, 113 F.R.D. 511, 513 (SDNY 1986).

In their claim that the Complaint is “sadly deficient on all fronts” (Memorandum p 30-2) the Enterprise movants ignore that Rule 8(f) provides “all pleadings shall be so construed as to do substantial justice.” It is inappropriate to focus exclusively, as the Enterprise movants do, on the fact that Rule 9(b) requires particularity in pleading fraud. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1298, p 621. If the Complaint has not alleged mail and wire fraud with the desired degree of particularity, that defect should not be fatal in light of Rule 8(f). Levenson v. B. & M. Furniture Co., 120 F.2d 1009, 1009(2d Cir. 1941). “Fraud is a matter of such indefinite character that, ordinarily, a charge of it should not be stricken from a pleading unless it is clear that, under no circumstances, could proof, conforming to the strict requirements provided for fraud charges, be introduced under the pleadings, which would probably convince the trier of fact that fraud had in fact been perpetrated.” Massey-Ferguson, Inc. v. Bent Equip. Co., 283 F.2d 12, 15 (5th Cir. 1960). As the Supreme Court said in Glus v. Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, 359 U.S. 231, 235, 3 L.Ed.2d 770, 79 S.Ct. 760 (1959), “It may well be that petitioner’s complaint as now drawn is too vague, but that is no ground for dismissing his action.... His allegations are sufficient for the present. Whether petitioner can in fact make out a case ... must await trial.”

If the Court, however, decides to dismiss the mail and wire fraud claims because Rule 9(b) is not satisfied, then the plaintiff requests leave to amend the Complaint, since “[a]n insufficient allegation of fraud ... is subject to the liberal amendment provisions of Rule 15, Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1300, p 661, and leave to amend should be freely granted when dismissal is based on Rule 9(b), Koehler v. Bank of Bermuda, 209 F.3d 130, 138 (2d Cir. 2000).

(dd) Bribery

The Enterprise movants wrongly claim that pleading the non-fraudulent predicate act of bribery, 18 USC 201, (Complaint 254, 255, 323, 499, 511, 517, 523) requires Rule 9(b) particularity. (Memorandum p 30-3) Only predicate acts involving fraud, such as wire and mail fraud, require Rule 9(b) particularity, not predicate acts like bribery. Abels v. Farmers Commodities Corp., 259 F.3d 910, 919 (8th Cir. 2001). If the Court decides to apply Rule 9(b) to bribery, the specifics are within the knowledge of movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina; therefore, Rule 9(b) should be read permissively. Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39.

The “bribery” section of the Enterprise movants’ Memorandum also confuses the predicate act of bribery under 18 USC 201 with the predicate act of interstate and foreign travel or transportation in aid of racketeering enterprises, 18 USC 1952. Bribery requires paying off a US government official or employee. Russian public officials are not US employees, so bribing them does not violate 18 USC 201. However, using international facilities that touch the US in order to bribe Russian officials to prevent the exposure of Russian mafia activities of prostitution and narcotics trafficking constitutes aiding a racketeering enterprise, 18 USC 1952. (Complaint 298-302)

Aiding a racketeering enterprise is a non-fraudulent predicate act, so only the general notice pleading requirements of Rule 8 applies. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 48. But in case the Court decides to apply Rule 9(b) to aiding a racketeering enterprise, the specifics of which international facilities were used, when and where the bribe was paid and who paid it are within the knowledge of movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina; therefore, Rule 9(b) should be read permissively. Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39. And contrary to the Enterprise movants claims of a paucity of details, the Complaint does allege the Russian officials who received the bribes, the time frame and the approximate amount. (Complaint 302, 303)

The alleged conduct of Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina in bribing movant Henning did not violate the federal bribery statute because Henning is not a federal employee. Their conduct did, however, violate the predict act of tampering with a witness, victim or informant, 18 USC 1512(b), by corruptly persuading movant Henning to threaten the plaintiff with arrest on a phony charge. (Complaint 306-07, 492, 504, 530) At the time of Henning's threat on March 27, 2001, there was an ongoing INS investigation although it had not reached the level of a case, which is referred to an INS judge. The predicate act of tampering is a non-fraudulent crime, so only the general notice pleading requirements of Rule 8 applies. See Conley, 355 U.S. at 48. But if the Court decides to apply Rule 9(b) to tampering by corruptly persuading, the specifics as to when, where, how the bribes were paid or who witnessed such are peculiarly within the knowledge of movants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and Henning; therefore, Rule 9(b) should be read permissively. Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39.

There is nothing wrong with pleading on information and belief the predicate acts of bribery, aiding a racketeering enterprise or tampering. See Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: 2d Civ. 1224, p 205. And if the Court does consider these predicate acts fraudulent, they can still be pled on information and belief because they are peculiarly within the opposing parties' knowledge. Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 54 n.1 (2d Cir. 1986).

Beyond trying to have Rule 9(b) apply to non-fraudulent predicate acts, the Enterprise movants once again object to the Complaint because “[t]here is no proof” or “fails to identify a single document, statement or fact” (Memorandum p 31-1), “fails to offer any proof” (Memorandum p 31-2), “fails to identify a single document, statement or fact ... to show” or “cannot offer any proof” (Memorandum p 32-1). The plaintiff must not be put to the test to prove his allegations at the pleading stage. NOW, Inc v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994).

Lastly, Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and Henning object that their non-predicate criminal acts relating to bribery (Complaint 717, 719, 733, 735, 759, 761, 779) are “merely repetitive” of the alleged predicate acts (Memorandum p 32, n 19). Once again, that is not fully true. The underlying conduct of bribing Police Detective Henning violates New York Penal Code 200 or 200.20 (Complaint 719, 735, 761, 779), but it is not a predicate act. The bribing of Russian officials (Complaint 298-302), on the other hand, constitutes the predicate act of aiding a racketeering enterprise, 18 USC 1952, (Complaint 495, 507, 532) and also violates the foreign corrupt practices act, 15 USC 78dd-2, which is a non-predicate act (Complaint 717, 733, 759).

(ee) Money laundering

The Complaint at 293, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 301, 302 alleges Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina's joint involvement in the transfer of funds from illegal Russian mafia activities to Russia in order to bribe Russian officials and pay gangsters to threaten witnesses. The Complaint at 321, 335, 446-50 makes additional allegations of movant Shipilina laundering money.

The Enterprise movants Memorandum at p 33-3 mistakenly includes the allegation of aiding a racketeering enterprise by arranging for the threatening of witnesses (Complaint 294) and aiding a racketeering enterprise by arranging for bribing Russian officials (Complaint 300) as money laundering on the part of movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina. These two allegations are violations of 18 USC 1952, aiding a racketeering enterprise. In addition, the Enterprise movants wrongly attribute the bribery allegations of New York City INS agents (Complaint 254, 253) as involving money laundering. They do not.

The Enterprise movants, once again, err in applying Rule 9(b) particularity to the predicate act of money laundering, 18 USC 1956. (Memorandum p 32-3) The Supreme Court has declined to extend beyond fraud or mistake the Rule 9(b) requirement of greater particularity in allegations. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 513. Money laundering is a non-fraudulent predicate act; therefore, the general notice pleading requirements of Rule 8 apply. See Conley, 355 U.S. at 48.

If the Court does decide to apply Rule 9(b) to money laundering, the details of the conduct are largely within the knowledge of movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina, so Rule 9(b) should be read permissively. Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39. And, contrary to the Enterprise movants claims of a paucity of details, the Complaint does allege the funds from Russian mafia activities were sent from America to Russia, on or about March 2002 and in the amount of over $10,000. (Complaint 293, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 301, 302)

The Enterprise movants also object that the allegations of money laundering are made on information and belief. Money laundering is a non-fraudulent predicate act, so it can be pled on information and belief. See Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: 2d Civ. 1224, p 205. If the Court does consider money laundering fraudulent, it can still be pled on information and belief because the conduct is peculiarly within the opposing parties' knowledge. Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 54 n.1 (2d Cir. 1986).

Beyond trying to have Rule 9(b) apply to the non-fraudulent predicate act of money laundering, the Enterprise movants once again object to the Complaint because it “fails to identify a single document, statement or fact” (Memorandum p 32-3), “fails to demonstrate” (Memorandum p 33-1), fails to offer “proof” (Memorandum p 33-3). The function of pleadings is not to provide proof and evidence. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500-01.

(ff) Other predicate acts

The Enterprise movants ignored other non-fraudulent predicate acts alleged against them. FlashDancers: failure to report to the INS alien prostitutes employed by them, 18 USC 2424 (Complaint 469); importing, selling and distributing pornography, 18 USC 1462 & 1465 (Complaint 470); acquiring and dispensing narcotics, 21 USC 841, 952 (Complaint 476).

Mundy and Petrovich: aiding a racketeering enterprise, 18 USC 1952 (Complaint 497, 507).

Shipilina: murder-for-hire, 18 USC 1958 (Complaint 518); aiding a racketeering enterprise, 18 USC 1952 (Complaint 519, 532, 534, 540, 541); importing, selling and distributing pornography, 18 USC 1462 & 1465 (Complaint 525); importing and dispensing narcotics, 21 USC 841, 952 (Complaint 526-28); obstruction of a criminal investigation, 18 USC 1510 (Complaint 529); failure to file monetary transfer reports, 31 USC 5316 (Complaint 537).

Paulsen: importing, selling and distributing pornography, 18 USC 1462 & 1465 (Complaint 544-45)

None of the above predicate acts are required to be pled with particularity under Rule 9(b). The Supreme Court has declined to extend beyond fraud or mistake the Rule 9(b) requirement of greater particularity in allegations. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 513.

There is one allegation involving fraud by FlashDancers that has not been addressed. FlashDancers concealed from the New York State Liquor Authority the prostitution activities conducted at the club and misrepresented on its 1996 license application that the only type of business conducted at the club was dancing and only Enterprise movant Lepofsky held an interest in the club. (Complaint 437-39) These allegations meet the particularity requirement of Rule 9(b).

The Enterprise movants' strategy in Section B of their Memorandum to falsely paint all the allegations of predicate acts as requiring Rule 9(b) particularity is obvious and mistaken. Only fraudulent predicate acts require particularity in pleading. Subtler, however, is the reason for this mistaken application of Rule 9(b). The movants apparently hope to exploit Rule 9(b)'s subjective standard that is often used by some courts, which disfavor civil Rico suits, to dismiss them.

To the extent, if any, that the Complaint does not meet the pleading standard of particularity, the plaintiff requests leave to amend the Complaint.

C. Pattern

The Supreme Court requires the plaintiff allege a pattern—not prove, nor be required to meet some higher standard that the Enterprise movants try to assert with various adverbs preceding the word “allege” or “plead.” See Sedima, 473 U.S. 479, 496; Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500-01.

The Enterprise movants continue their mistaken tactic of demanding proof from a complaint—this time, proof of a pattern. Their litany of words, all criticizing the lack of proof or evidence, include the Complaint fails to “establish” (Memorandum p 34-3, p 36-3), “failed to sufficiently establish” (Memorandum p 38-3), fails to “make a showing” (Memorandum p 35-2), “[w]ithout a showing” (Memorandum p 39-3) “must prove” (Memorandum p 35-4), “instead of simply proving” (Memorandum p 39-2), “there has been no demonstration” (Memorandum p 36-3), must “demonstrate” (Memorandum p 38-3, p 39-2), “not one iota of evidence” (Memorandum p 39-2). However, “[i]t is a familiar rule of pleading ... that evidence by which an allegation is sought to be established need not be pleaded. ... Such matters [of evidence] ... are for proof and we doubt the propriety, much less the necessity of their allegation.” Cater Constr. Co. v. Nischwitz, 111 F.2d 971, 973 (7th Cir. 1940).

They also demand something akin to Rule 9(b) particularity: “plead [with] sufficiency” (Memorandum p 36-3), cannot be “devoid of any specific allegation” (Memorandum p 39-2).

All that the federal rules require in pleading non-fraudulent conduct is that a party should set forth the averments in general terms. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1281, p 519. Furthermore, pleading a RICO pattern does not fall within Rule 9(b) particularity requirements. Abels v. Farmers Commodities Corp., 259 F.3d 910, 919 (8th Cir. 2001).

The Enterprise movants even claim the Complaint makes “broad and sweeping conclusions such as on information and belief ....” (Memorandum p 39-2) while in the same paragraph they make the broad and sweeping conclusion that “the complaint is totally devoid of any specific allegation” and the allegations are only the plaintiff’s opinion and legal conclusions. Rule 11 permits a pleader, after reasonable inquiry, to set forth allegations that are likely to have evidentiary support after a reasonable opportunity for further investigation or discovery.

Moore’s Fed. Prac. ¶8.04[4]. The liberal notice pleading of Rule 8(a) is the starting point of a simplified pleading system, which was adopted to focus litigation on the merits of the claim. See Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 48. Further, “conclusions” aren’t allegations; they are reached by inference from evidentiary facts. There are no evidentiary facts in this case yet, because there has been no discovery. Once again, the Enterprise movants seem to be arguing that the plaintiff should have conducted discovery before serving the Complaint—not exactly federal civil procedure, or that the Court should apply a summary judgment standard to a motion to dismiss.

The requirements for a pattern under RICO starts with 18 USC 3575(e): “Criminal conduct forms a pattern if it embraces criminal acts that have the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims or methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events.” Sedima, 473 U.S. 479, 496, n. 14. This has come to be the relatedness requirement for a RICO pattern, and can be thought of as similar means to reach similar ends and similar violators preying on similar victims. In addition to relatedness, a pattern of racketeering activity must also have continuity, which can be closed or open. It is relatedness plus continuity that combines to produce a pattern of racketeering activity. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 US 229, 239, 106 L.Ed.2d 195, 109 S.Ct. 2893 (1989). The Enterprise movants object to the Complaint for not “showing” either close-ended or open-ended continuity. (Memorandum p 35-2) Once again, a complaint is not required to “show”; that is “to prove.” It must allege a pattern, which the Complaint does at 875-885.

The Enterprise movants do not object to the Complaint on relatedness grounds, but the Court may. The Complaint alleges criminal activity by the Russian mafia of which the Enterprise movants are members who personally engage in various illegal acts under the Russian mafia banner. (Complaint 1, 15, 16-23, 27-39, 47, 466-547, 556-559) The Enterprise movants are alleged not to be separate and distinct from the Russian mafia but part of it: diligently working to achieve its ends and reap its benefits, as would any member of a large organization. The Enterprise movants, as with the other defendant members of the Russian mafia—similar participants—are alleged to work together for its success by using predicate acts—similar methods—in order to assure the effectiveness of concurrent or successive predicate and nonpredicate criminal acts. (Complaint 879) Often a number of different crimes are necessary for contributing to the successful operation of the Russian mafia and its Scheme—similar results. (Complaint 879)

For example, the flow of Enterprise human capital from the former Soviet Union often requires a combination of visa fraud, bribery, perjury, mail and wire fraud, and travel in aid of a racketeering enterprise in order to bring Russian managers, pimps and prostitutes to the U.S. (Complaint 880) In addition, the drive to maximize profits and minimize expenses of the Russian mafia results in repeated tax evasion that requires money laundering and exporting revenues out of the U.S. without reporting so as to disguise the ownership and source of the revenues. (Complaint 881) Also, in order to protect valuable members threatened with exposure, the Enterprise members engage in criminal acts such as tampering with witnesses, unlawful imprisonment, reckless endangerment, coercion, intimidation, official misconduct and menacing. (Complaint 882)

The Russian mafia's Scheme of continued expansion into hard currency markets targets similar victims—American men looking for Russian wives and companions, and is carried out for similar purposes—to defraud the men into bringing a mob manager or prostitute to America in circumvention of U.S. immigration laws. (Complaint 883) The Russian mafia's predicate acts—similar methods—used in expanding and conducting its U.S. operations enable it to target thousands of additional consumers—similar victims—for sexual services with the similar result of dramatically increasing the health risks, such as exposure to AIDS, to those consumers and their partners (Complaint 885) while making huge profits. The Russian mafia's predicate acts in expanding and conducting its operations also bode ill for many legitimate entertainment companies—similar victims—by unfairly competing for entertainment dollars that would otherwise flow to the investors and employees of legitimate businesses in the leisure industry—similar results.

While none of the Enterprise movants individually engage in all the predicate acts alleged, that is not what relatedness requires. The importance is some “organizing principle that renders [the predicate acts] ‘ordered’ or ‘arranged’”. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 US 229, 237. In this case, the organizing principles are the Russian mafia’s Scheme and its members’ greed.

Continuity exists when ongoing unlawful activities have a scope and persistence that pose a special threat to social well-being. GE Investment Private Placement Partners II v. Parker MLP, 247 F.3d 543, 549 (4th Cir. 2001). The Complaint’s allegations concerning “relatedness” also aver a threat to the social fabric of this society.

(i) Closed continuity

The Enterprise movants wrongly state: “In determining the duration of a pattern of racketeering activity, Courts focus solely on the predicate acts of racketeering each defendant is alleged to have committed.” (Memorandum p 36-2) They cite De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d 286, 321 (2d Cir. 2001) for support, but that is not what De Falco held. The De Falco Court did not look at the acts of each individual defendant in isolation, but at all the defendants together in determining duration. The De Falco Court said, “[t]he duration of a pattern of racketeering is measured by the RICO predicate acts the defendants [plural]commit.” De Falco at 321. The Enterprise movants quote out of context from De Falco, “Closed-ended continuity is demonstrated by predicate acts that ‘amount to continued criminal activity’ by a particular defendant.” De Falco at 321. The reference “particular defendant” meant all the defendants taken together, not in isolation. The Supreme Court said in H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 US 229, 242, the “continuity test looks to the period during which predicate acts were committed,” and “continuity may be established by showing that the predicate acts or offenses are part of an ongoing entity’s regular way of doing business.” The focus for determining duration under the continuity requirement is on the acts all the defendants committed on behalf of the criminal entity, not on each defendant’s conduct viewed in isolation from other members of the enterprise. The whole purpose of enacting RICO was to reach criminal organizations. Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 496.

Closed continuity requires that the alleged predicate acts occur over a substantial period of time, which for the Second Circuit appears to be two or more years. De Falco at 321. In order to come up with a time span of less than two years, the Enterprise movants argue that in determining closed continuity the Court should look only at the alleged predicate acts by each movant and defendant in isolation. The implication of this analysis would make a joke of RICO. Here’s why. If defendant X is alleged to have done two bad deeds within one year of each other, and defendant Y, a fellow gang member of X’s, is alleged to have done two bad things over the period of one week but a year and a half after the last alleged bad deed of X, then there is no closed continuity even though X and Y belong to the same gang and are pursuing the same end. The reason, as the Enterprise movants argue, is that X’s acts were not over two years and Y’s act were only over a week, so neither did bad deeds spanning two years. Nice piece of sophistry, but it would eliminate the entire purpose of RICO, which is to take down continuing criminal organizations. Of course, if X and Y’s bad acts are taken together as the gang’s conduct, they occurred over 2.5 years, which is long enough for the Second Circuit and what the Supreme Court requires as “a series of related predicates” over a substantial period of time. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 US 229, 242.

The Enterprise movants focus only on their individual predicate acts without addressing, as the Complaint makes clear, that their alleged acts, along with those of other defendants, are part of “a series of related predicates.” (Complaint 878-885) The series of predicate acts aimed at the plaintiff began in 1999 when Enterprise movant Shipilina and Member Perlin are alleged to have targeted the plaintiff as part of the Russian mafia’s Scheme to infiltrate and expand its operations in the US. (Complaint 135, 136) The most recent predicate act of which the plaintiff is aware is the threatening telephone call in June 2003 that warned him to stay out of Krasnodar. The acts against the plaintiff are all part, although a tiny part, of keeping the Russian mafia’s Scheme on track, which began soon after the fall of the Soviet Union. (Complaint 10, 13)

(ii) Open continuity

Open continuity means there exists a threat of continuing racketeering activity, such as when the nature of an enterprise’s activities project into the future. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 US 229, 242. The threat of continued racketeering activity may be established by showing—or in the case of a pleading by alleging—that the predicate acts or offenses are part of the ongoing entity’s regular way of doing business. H.J. Inc. at 242.

The Complaint at 876-885 alleges the Enterprise, the Russian mafia, continues to do predicate acts again and again which it has done in the past to others. The Russian mafia uses a complex, intertwined web of predicate acts to maintain and continue expanding its activities in an insatiable drive for new targets and more money. (Complaint 879, 884) And as alleged in the Complaint at 2, 13, the Russian mafia’s Scheme is aimed at infiltrating and expanding illegal and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets, especially the US, for the personal enrichment of the members of the Enterprise. The Russian mafia's conduct and goal are not a "discrete and relatively short lived scheme" that will end any time soon, as the Enterprise movants claim. (Memorandum p 39-1) It is a scheme that has harmed others and will continue to do so because it richly rewards members of the Russian mob and there are still plenty of potential American targets.

Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich mistake themselves as the Enterprise in this action—they are not. The Enterprise, or Russian mafia, is defined as consisting of domestic and foreign corporations, partnerships, individuals, government officials, law firms, organized crime gangs (including American, Russian and Chechen) and an Islamic terrorist and crime clan. (Complaint 11) Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich are alleged members of the Enterprise, the Russian mafia. "[T]he threat of continuity is sufficiently established where the predicates can be attributed to defendant[s] operating as part of a long-term association that exists for criminal purposes." H.J. Inc. at 242-43. "Such associations include, but extend well beyond, those traditionally grouped under the phrase 'organized crime.'" Id. at 243. The Russian mafia is just such an organization, and the Enterprise movants along with other defendants are alleged as members engaged in predicate acts to further its Scheme. (Complaint 876, 877)

The Enterprise movants have engaged in predicate acts against the plaintiff for nearly four years. Just five weeks after the Enterprise movants were mailed on April 20, 2003 by first class US post the Complaint and waiver of summons request, the plaintiff received another threatening telephone call—this time from a thuggish-sounding man speaking in Russian. (June 19, 2003 letter to the Court) The threat was clear, if the plaintiff returned to Krasnodar, Russia to continue gathering evidence against the Russian mafia defendants in this federal action, then, it was going to be bad for him. This was not only a dramatic increase in the level of threat—since it is well known in Russia that a gang leaves enforcement to their foreign associates unless it is ineffectual, then the Russians ruthlessly intervene—but also makes clear that the Enterprise movants and other defendants are not through with the plaintiff yet. Nor is the Russian mafia through with America yet or about to withdraw any time soon. Even the Enterprise movants’ Memorandum at p 3-1 admits Mundy’s continuing efforts to obtain one of the Russian mafia’s assets, Shipilina, permanent residency and citizenship despite her violation of immigration laws (Complaint 191-93) and committing a felony by claiming US citizenship in registering to vote (Complaint 459, 744).

The Enterprise movants argue that because the Complaint “has never been amended” and describes only “past criminal acts” that there is no threat of future criminal acts by the Russian mafia. (Memorandum p 38-4 to p 39-1) By this Orwellian reasoning, a plaintiff would not only have to continually amend his complaint, but conduct an ongoing investigation at his own expense that would expose subsequent predicate acts while a case was pending and before it reached discovery. Under such a requirement, defendants would have been forewarned by a complaint and might be smart enough to lay low until the heat blew over, which would make it virtually impossible for a plaintiff to ever amend his complaint with additional predicate acts. Moreover, whenever a plaintiff did amend his complaint, it would be to describe predicate acts that had already taken place and, unlike in quantum mechanics, the past is not the future, so there could never be a threat of future RICO violations because all the predicate acts in every amended complaint occurred in the past. Discovery, along with the RICO statute, would disappear into a black hole.

The Complaint should not be dismissed for failing to plead closed or open continuity. The Supreme Court in H.J. Inc. reversed a district court's grant of dismissal because the plaintiff may be able to prove, consistent with the complaint's allegations, that the multiple predicate acts alleged constitute a pattern of racketeering activity that satisfies closed continuity. H.J. Inc. at 250. In the same case, the Supreme Court also held that a threat of continuing predicate acts might be established at trial by showing that the acts were the enterprise's regular way of doing business, or a regular way of conducting or participating in the conduct of the alleged and ongoing RICO enterprise. H.J. Inc. at 250. The Supreme Court's decision in H.J. Inc. applies her as well.

D. Under civil RICO, a "racketeering injury" need not be alleged for a violation of 18 USC 1962(c), but what about violations of 18 USC 1962(a) & (b)?

To begin, the Enterprise movants once again try to create a stricter standard for pleading than required under the law. In the title to their section D (Memorandum p 39) and the text in D(i) (Memorandum p 40-3) they assert the Complaint must "establish"; that is prove, the elements of 18 USC 1962(a). That is incorrect; the Complaint need only allege. See Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 512. As for the pleading standard for the elements of a 1962(b) violation, the Enterprise movants in section D(ii) say the Complaint's allegations are "insufficient". (Memorandum p 41-3) They don't mention the standard they are using to measure "insufficiency". Perhaps it is their ubiquitous version of Rule 9(b), but that rule only applies to predicate acts of fraud, not 1962(a) & (b). Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 513.

The main issue in this section, however, is whether a complaint must allege a “racketeering injury.” The Second Circuit has narrowly interpreted the Supreme Court decision in Sedima by requiring that a private citizen using civil RICO, 18 USC 1964(c), must allege damages from some nebulous “racketeering injury” in order to survive dismissal of his complaint for failing to aver 18 USC 1962(a) & (b) injuries.

RICO 1962(a) says money from a pattern of racketeering activities cannot be used to get a stake in, set up or operate an enterprise, and 1962(b) that racketeering activities themselves cannot be used to get or keep a stake in an enterprise. The Enterprise movants refer to the elusive “racketeering injury” requirement as a “use” or “investment injury” for 1962(a) (Memorandum p 40-2) and “acquisition” or “maintenance” injury for 1962(b) (Memorandum p 41-2). The Supreme Court in Sedima criticized as “unhelpfully tautological” the Second Circuit’s attempt to define the “racketeering injury” requirement. Sedima, 473 U.S. 479, 494. “The evident difficulty in discerning just what the racketeering injury requirement consists of would make it rather hard to apply in practice or explain to a jury.” Sedima at 494 n. 12. The Supreme Court in H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 US 229, 236, reiterated, “In Sedima ... this Court rejected a restrictive interpretation of 1964(c) that would have made it a condition for maintaining a civil RICO action ... that plaintiff show a special racketeering injury.” And again in Holmes v. Sec. Investor Prot. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 270, n.15, 117 L.Ed.2d 532, 112 S.Ct. 1311 (1992), the concept of an “antitrust injury” has no analogue in the RICO setting as requiring a “racketeering injury.”

The plaintiff in Sedima brought a civil RICO action under 18 USC 1964(c), alleging violations of the substantive RICO section 18 USC 1962(c), which prohibits using racketeering activities to run an enterprise. The Supreme Court stated:

“Section 1964(c) authorizes a private suit by ‘[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of 1962.’ Section 1962 in turn makes it unlawful for ‘any person’—not just mobsters—to use money derived from a pattern of racketeering activity to invest in an enterprise, to acquire control of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, or to conduct an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. 1962(a)-(c). If the defendant engages in a pattern of racketeering activity in a manner forbidden by these provisions [referring to 1962(a)-(c)], and the racketeering activities injure the plaintiff in his business or property, the plaintiff has a claim under 1964(c). There is no room in the statutory language for an additional, amorphous ‘racketeering injury’ requirement.” Sedima at 495.

A straightforward reading of the Supreme Court’s opinion shows it did not restrict its arguments to 1962(c) alone. There is no room for an amorphous “racketeering injury” requirement in sections 1962(a) & (b) as well. “Given that ‘racketeering activity’ consists no more and no less than the commission of a predicate act ....”, Sedima at 495, it follows there is no other conduct that can be described as a “racketeering injury.” Therefore, any damages will flow from the commission of those predicate acts. Sedima at 497. “RICO is to ‘be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes.’ Pub.L. 91-452, 904(a), 84 Stat. 947. The statute’s ‘remedial purposes’ are nowhere more evident than in the provision of a private action for those injured by racketeering activity. Far from effectuating these purposes, [a] narrow reading ... would in effect eliminate 1964(c) from the statute,” Sedima at 498, in actions alleging violations of 1962(a) & (b). “In borrowing its ‘racketeering injury’ requirement from antitrust standing principles, the [Second Circuit] created exactly the problems Congress sought to avoid,” Sedima at 498-99: the creating of obstacles for a private litigant, especially when the litigant goes up against the archetypal, intimidating mob.

The cases from the Second Circuit courts that the Enterprise movants rely on for requiring an injury separate and distinct from that caused by the predicate acts in 1962(a) & (b) are inconsistent with the Supreme Court and some other Circuits. The Enterprise movants’ cases say the injury from a 1962(a) violation must come from the investment of money in an enterprise, Update Traffic Systems, Inc v. Gould, 857 F.Supp. 274, 282 (EDNY 1994); NRB Indus., Inc. v. RA Taylor & Assoc., 1998 WL 3638 *1, and a 1962(b) violation, must come from the acquisition or maintenance of a stake in an enterprise, Medgar Evers Houses Tenants v. Medgar Evers Houses Assoc., 25 F.Supp.2d 116, 124 (SDNY 1998). The Second Circuit considers these injuries as “racketeering injuries”, for which the Supreme Court finds there is no such requirement.

The Supreme Court in Sedima essentially ruled against the Second Circuit’s efforts to create another way for dismissing civil RICO cases: “While we understand the court’s concern over the consequences of an unbridled reading of the statute, we reject both of its holdings.” Sedima at 481. Other circuits have also rejected the unspecified “racketeering injury” element: Potomac Electric Power Co. v. Electric Motor Supply, Inc., 262 F.3d 260, 264 n. 2 (4th Cir. 2001)(under 18 USC 1962(a), damages need not flow from the use or investment of racketeering income, only from the predicate acts); Busby v. Crown Supply, Inc., 896 F.2d 833, 837-38 (4th Cir. 1990) (In an action for violation of 1962(a), the plaintiff need only allege injury from the predicate acts); Haroco v. American National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384, 395-

399 (7th Cir. 1984) (“[W]e reject the Second Circuit’s imposition of a racketeering injury requirement. Civil RICO plaintiffs need not allege injury beyond that caused by the predicate acts.”), aff’d, 473 U.S. 606, 87 L.Ed.2d 437, 105 S.Ct. 3291.

D(i) Violations of 1962(a) and injury from the use or investment of racketeering income.

If the Court requires allegations of “racketeering injuries” for 18 USC 1962(a), the plaintiff argues the following:

RICO 1962(a) prohibits taking the money from a pattern of racketeering activities and using or investing it to acquire a stake in an enterprise, or set up an enterprise, or operate an enterprise. Quaknine v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 82 (2d Cir. 1990).

The Enterprise movants misstate the Complaint and unjustifiably narrow the law’s requirements when they say, “[the] complaint fails to even allege that Mundy and Petrovich received racketeering income from the purported enterprise [Russian mafia] or used or invested [that] income ... to acquire an interest in the alleged enterprise [Russian mafia].” .

(Memorandum p 40-3) First, the Complaint alleges that Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich engaged in predicate acts as members of the Russian mafia to acquire money to run the interstate law firm of Kuba, Mundy & Associates. (Complaint 488, 500, 512) Second, RICO 1962(a) is violated not only when racketeering money is used to acquire an interest in an organization but also when it is used in the operation of that organization, whether the criminal enterprise or another organization, such as the Kuba, Mundy & Associates law firm. Batista, Civil RICO, 2003 Cumulative Supplement, 4.41, p 133. Kuba, Mundy & Associates is not the Russian mafia alleged in the Complaint at 1, 2. It is, however, an organization—a law firm, that belongs to the Russian mafia and is alleged to use money from predicate acts to run its operations for the mob. (Complaint 488)

As for Enterprise movants, FlashDancers they are alleged to use racketeering income to run the Flash Dancers Club, the Cybertech Network and other Russian mafia activities and to establish additional mob activities. (Complaint 471, 474) Enterprise movant Shipilina, doing business as Angelina, uses racketeering income to establish and operate Russian mafia activities, such as prostitution, drug trafficking and money laundering. (Complaint 542, 519, 520, 521, 526-28, 536-39) Movant Paulsen, doing business as Wayne Williams, uses racketeering income to set up and run Russian mafia pornography activities in Southern California. (Complaint 546) Movant Henning is not alleged with violating 1962(a).

The money the above movants are alleged to reap from predicate acts has been used to injure the plaintiff. In Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078, *35, Chief Judge Mukasey quoted from Quaknine v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 83 (2d Cir. 1990), “[b]ecause the conduct constituting a violation of 1962(a) is investment of racketeering income, a plaintiff must allege injury from the defendant’s investment of the racketeering income to recover under 1962(a).” Chief Judge Mukasey dismissed the 1962(a) cause of action because “the plaintiffs allege no such investment injury.” Berk at *35. Unlike Berk, the Complaint in this case does allege investment injury.

The Complaint at 901 alleges the above movants used proceeds from racketeering activities to build a litigation war chest in order to fund fraudulent legal proceedings against the plaintiff and fraudulently defend against legitimate proceedings in order to whipsaw the plaintiff into submission. (Complaint 901) The District Court in Crowe v. Smith, 848 F.Supp. 1258, 1265 (WD La 1994) found that allegations of defendants using assets from racketeering activities to fund a litigation war chest that was used for fraudulent legal proceedings constituted injury from the use or investment of racketeering income.

In addition, the Complaint alleges at 902, 903 that racketeering funds were not used for the Enterprise's general operations, as in Vista Co. v. Columbia Pictures Indus., Inc., 725 F.Supp. 1286, 1299 (SDNY 1989), but for specific predicate acts directed against the plaintiff that caused him injury. For example, racketeering income used to bribe public employees into subverting the proper administration of the law in America and Russia and to purchase the intimidation of witnesses prevented the plaintiff from rectifying the harm done to his business by the Russian mafia. (Complaint 902, 903)

D(ii) Violations of 1962(b) and injury from acquiring or maintaining an interest or control.

If the Court requires allegations of "racketeering injuries" for 18 USC 1962(b), the plaintiff argues the following:

RICO 1962(b) "prohibits a person from acquiring or maintaining any interest in or control of any enterprise [organization] through a pattern of racketeering activities." Rakoff and Goldstein, RICO Civil and Criminal, 1.06[2]. "Interest" in 1962(b) includes "all property and interests, as broadly described, which are related to the violations" H.R.Rep. No. 1549, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. 57, reprinted in U.S. Code Cong. & Ad.News 4007 (1970).

The Enterprise movants condemn the Complaint's use of the word "maintain" in its allegations. (Memorandum p 41-3) Using words from a statute is one of the most effective ways to provide defendants notice of what they are alleged to have done wrong, which is the purpose of a complaint. "Maintain" is not a difficult word to understand; it means to carry on. The Complaint at 488, 500, 512 alleges that Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich engaged in a pattern of racketeering activity to carry on Kuba, Mundy & Associates as part of the Russian mafia. FlashDancers is alleged to use predicate acts to keep control over part of the Russian mafia's activities and acquire additional activities. (Complaint 471, 474, 477, 480) Movant Shipilina is alleged to conduct various predicate acts to carry on and control her interests in the Russian mafia, such as prostitution, money laundering, drug trafficking and intimidation. (Complaint 542, 518, 519, 520, 521, 526-28, 530, 531, 534, 536-39) Movants Paulsen and Henning are not alleged with violating 1962(b).

The racketeering activities engaged in by the above movants to acquire or maintain an interest in or control part of the Russian mafia injured the plaintiff. In Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078, at *37, Chief Judge Mukasey dismissed the plaintiffs' 1962(b) action for failing to allege acquisition or maintenance injuries that must be distinct from the predicate acts. Unlike Berk, the Complaint in this case does allege acquisition of interests in and maintaining control of segments of the Russian mafia's functions. The Complaint at 904 & 905 states the above movants used racketeering activities to acquire or preserve influence over some Russian mafia activities that were used to cause the plaintiff harm. In addition, the racketeering activities carried out by them that injured the plaintiff can be considered a continuing effort to acquire further control of or interests in segments of the Russian mafia. The acts of a successful manager not only further his company's goals but also win for him added influence and stakes in the organization.

D(iii) Enterprise movants' violations of 1962(c) and their participation in the Russian mafia.

As elsewhere in the Enterprise movants' Memorandum, section D(iii) objects to the Complaint's allegations for failing to "show" (Memorandum p 42-3) or "satisfy the stringent standard” (Memorandum p 43-2) for pleading a RICO violation. Once again, a complaint need not show; that is prove, nor are heightened standards of pleading required to allege the Enterprise movants “conduct or participation, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of [an] enterprise’s affairs.” See Robbins v. Wilkie, 300 F.3d 1208, 1211 (10th Cir. 2002). No special pleading requirements exist except for fraud or mistake in Rule 9(b). Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 122 L.Ed.2d 517, 113 S.Ct. 1160 (1993). The plaintiff need only allege each element of a 1962(c) violation. See Sedima, 473 U.S. 479, 496.

The Enterprise movants twist the requirement for a violation of 1962(c) by claiming the plaintiff must have been “injured by the defendants ... conduct ....” (Memorandum p 41-4) The implication is that the discrete, individual acts of the Enterprise movants when viewed in isolation, with nothing more, must allegedly cause harm to the plaintiff. The attempt to focus on individual defendants without any relation to others undercuts RICO’s purpose to eradicate organized crime. Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 496, 146 L.Ed.2d 561, 120 S.Ct. 1608 (2000) (emphasis added).

A 1962(c) violation requires conduct of an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity, Sedima at 496, and that racketeering activity, or predicate acts, cause the plaintiff injury, Sedima at 497. The key for alleging the Enterprise movants liable is that they participate in, direct, conduct, manage or knowingly implement the Enterprise’s affairs through a pattern of racketeering activities that cause the plaintiff harm. “[F]or the essence of the violation is the commission of those acts in connection with the conduct of an enterprise.” Sedima at 497 (emphasis added).

In order to participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of an enterprise's affairs, a defendant must play some part in directing those affairs. Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 119 S.Ct. 1225, 122 L.Ed.2d 525, 113 S.Ct. 1163 (1992). That does not mean that only primary responsibility for the enterprise's affairs is required. "[T]he phrase 'directly or indirectly' makes clear that RICO liability is not limited to those with a formal position in the enterprise, but some part in directing the enterprise's affairs is required." Reves at 179. What is needed is that a person participates in the operation or management of the enterprise. Reves at 185. But an enterprise is "operated" not just by upper management but also by lower rung participants who are under the direction of upper management or by others associated with the enterprise who exert control; that is, authority. Reves at 184. "[E]ven if a defendant is not acting in a managerial role ... he can still be liable for directing the enterprise's affairs if he 'exercised broad discretion' in carrying out the instructions of his principal." US v. Diaz, 176 F.3d 52, 92 (2d Cir. 1999), citing Napoli v. US, 45 F.3d 680, 683 (2d Cir. 1995). In addition, a defendant may also take part in the conduct of an enterprise by knowingly implementing decisions as well as making them. US v. Oreto, 37 F.3d 739, 750 (1st Cir. 1994).

The Enterprise movants falsely claim the Complaint is devoid of allegations that they play some part in directing the affairs of a segment of the Russian mafia, and that it only alleges they were "merely involved" (what ever that means) or "simply performed tasks necessary or helpful" to the Russian mob. (Memorandum p 43-2) What the Complaint alleges is the Enterprise movants, along with the other defendants, run, operate or direct parts of the Russian mafia—not the entire worldwide criminal enterprise (Complaint 15).

For example, Enterprise movants FlashDancers and member American Organized Crime Gang 1, to which they belong, operates a criminal conglomerate of prostitution, pornography, intimidation, immigration fraud, drug trafficking and money laundering through its topless clubs and the Internet site www.flashdancersnyc.com. (Complaint 16-23, 471, 474, 477, 480, 483) Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich manage a segment of the Russian mafia's immigration of human assets, such as prostitutes, into New York; direct the fraudulent acquisition of visas; suborn perjury before the INS, IRS and the courts; decide on the use of coercion and intimidation; and make decisions concerning money laundering and the use of international facilities to carry out their responsibilities in bringing in some of the Russian mafia's assets—not all. (Complaint 27-24, 485, 488, 490, 492, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 512, more than the “only two paragraphs” that the Memorandum p 43-2 claims as alleging Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich's role in the mafia.) Enterprise movant Shipilina is a middle level manager for the Russian mafia handling under her discretion a relatively small part of its prostitution, pornography, money laundering, drug smuggling and relationship building with Russian, Chechen and American organized crime groups. (Complaint 36, 542) Enterprise movant Paulsen, operating under the pseudonym, Wayne Williams, manages the production and importing of a portion of the Russian mafia's pornography for Southern California. (Complaint 37-39, 546) Enterprise movant Henning knowingly implements decisions by higher ups in the Russian mafia to use his police powers for tampering with government informants. (Complaint 47, 558)

Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich cite to Morin v. Trupin, 835 F.Supp. 126, 134-36 (SDNY 1993) and Strong & Fisher v. Maxima, 1993 WL 277205, at *1, for support of the argument that their involvement with the Russian mafia does not amount to participation in its management or operation. (Memorandum p 42-3 to p 43-1) Morin, in citing to Strong, says, “even though the complaint alleged that defendants had substantial power to induce the alleged enterprise to take actions, it did not allege sufficient power to conduct or participate in conducting the alleged enterprise ....” Morin at 135 (emphasis added). Unlike in those two cases, the Complaint in this action not only alleges sufficient power but also the actual activities by the Kuba, Mundy & Associates law firm along with Mundy and Petrovich in conducting or participating in conducting part of the Russian mafia’s affairs. (Complaint 27-33, 488, 490, 492, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 512) As the Complaint alleges, Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich’s actions are not limited to providing legal advice and legal services to the Russian mafia, but constitute a direct and independent role in its affairs that satisfies the operation or management requirement. Turkish v. Kasenetz, 964 F.Supp. 689, 694-95 (EDNY 1997).

“An attorney’s license is not an invitation to engage in racketeering, and a lawyer no less than anyone else is bound by generally applicable legislative enactments. Neither Reves nor RICO itself exempts professionals ... from the law’s proscriptions, and the fact that a defendant has the good fortune to possess the title ‘attorney at law’ is, standing alone, completely irrelevant to the analysis dictated by the Supreme Court [in Reves].” Handeem v. Lemaire, 112 F.3d 1339, 1349 (8th Cir. 1997). In the situation where a firm, its employee and an attorney are alleged, as here, for misusing the judicial system, allegations that support a 1962(c) violation may aver: (1) joining in a collaborative undertaken with other Russian mafia members to illegally provide immigration papers for mafia prostitutes and managers (Complaint 485, 486, 490, 491, 502, 503), to silence witnesses and informants (Complaint 265-68, 280, 282, 287, 289, 293-97, 316, 318), to bribe government officials (Complaint 254, 255, 298-303, 306-08); (2) navigating Russian mafia members through court and administrative proceedings by suborning perjury before the INS (Complaint 224, 225, 236, 237), by suborning perjury before law enforcement officers (Complaint 229, 230), by directing and preparing court filings with erroneous information (Complaint 234, 239, 275-77), by coercing opponents of the mafia with non-existent or falsified evidence in court proceedings (Complaint 245, 273); and (3) taking the lead with their legal acuity in making important decisions concerning the operation of part of the Russian mafia, such as obtaining visas and naturalization for mafia assets (Complaint 485, 486, 490, 491, 502, 503) or money laundering (Complaint 294). See Handeem v. Lemaire, 112 F.3d 1339, 1349-50.

The compensable injury under 1962(c) is the harm suffered from the predicate acts; that is, any recoverable damages will flow from the commission of those predicate acts. Sedima, 473 U.S. at 497.

E. The Enterprise, a.k.a. Russian mafia, exists.

The Enterprise movants once again confuse their motion to dismiss with a summary judgment motion or a trial by objecting that the Complaint's allegations do not prove the existence of the Russian mafia. For instance, they objections include "there is no showing" (Memorandum p 46-2), "failed to proffer any evidence" (Memorandum p 46-3), has "a complete paucity of evidence" (Memorandum p 47-1) and "failed to establish the existence of an enterprise" (Memorandum p 47-1). Even the quote they use from the Supreme Court saying an enterprise is "proved by evidence" comes from a Supreme Court case concerned with a conviction after trial—not a motion to dismiss a RICO complaint. US v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 69 L.Ed.2d 246, 101 S.Ct. 2524 (1981). "The pleading of additional evidence is not only unnecessary, but in contravention of proper pleading procedure." Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 640 (2d Cir. 1980).

The movants also try to heighten the pleading standard for alleging the existence of the Russian mafia beyond the requirement that “[a] party should set forth the averments in his pleadings in general terms ... that are sufficient to provide the necessary notice to the adversary.” Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1281, p 519. They object the Complaint fails to “allege specific facts” (Memorandum p 46-2), “has not pled any details” (Memorandum p 46-3), “is clearly insufficient” (Memorandum p 46, n. 21). Their objections are unfounded, since an enterprise can be pled generally. Azurite Corp. Ltd. v. Amster & Co., 730 F.Supp. 571, 577 (SDNY 1991).

In addition, the Enterprise movants wrongly draw inferences from statements they make in their Memorandum as though those statements were part of an evidentiary record, but no such record exists because discovery has not yet occur. They boot strap these inferences into conclusions that the Russian mafia does not exist, or the Enterprise movants are not part of it, or they do not swing any weight within it. (Memorandum p 46-2, p 46 n. 22, p 47-1)

Further, the Enterprise movants resort to name-calling to convince the Court that the Russian mafia does not exist: “preposterous allegations”, “frivolous nature” or “stretching the bounds and limits of the most delusional imagination.” (Memorandum p 47-2) Of course, vituperative words can often be successful when used against unpopular causes.

The enterprise in this action is the Russian mafia or as the Complaint at 1 states, “[t]he Russian International Crime Organization [which] generates profits worldwide from numerous criminal activities that include without limitation drug trafficking, money laundering, tax evasion, immigration fraud, prostitution, pornography, white slavery, bribery, mail and wire fraud, murder, extortion, coercion and terror.” The Enterprise movants and the other defendants in this action are not the entire Enterprise but members of it; that is, they are members of the Russian mafia. (Complaint 11, 15, 16-127) They work together for the mafia's goals and their own enrichment. (Complaint 12, 13) Taken together, they are a segment of the Russian mafia, a relatively few pieces in a jigsaw puzzle that is the Russian mafia in the 21st century.

“[A]n enterprise includes any union or group of individuals associated in fact.” NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 260, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994)(quoting United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 580, 69 L.Ed.2d 246, 101 S.Ct. 2524(1981)). An enterprise is a group of persons associated together for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct. United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583.

The Complaint alleges the Russian mafia is an ongoing organization in which its members associate together for the purpose of engaging in illegal and legal activities in order to earn substantial profits. (Complaint 12) That a key aim of the Enterprise is to infiltrate and expand its activities in hard currency markets where profits are not threatened by inconvertibility of the local currency or drastic depreciations. (Complaint 13) And the relationships among the Russian mafia's members are both formal, including agreements and chain of command authority, and informal in which the common objectives of the mafia, to infiltrate and grow in hard currency markets, controls decision-making. (Complaint 14) The last part of that allegation of common objectives controlling decision-making is nothing more than modern day management principles for running non-hierarchically structured organizations.

In Commercial Cleaning Servs. LLC v. Colin Serv. Sys., Inc., 271 F.3d 374, 379 (2d Cir.2001), the Second Circuit, taking as true the plaintiff's allegations, did not dismiss for failure to plead an enterprise composed of entities associated-in-fact that included the defendant company, which hired illegal aliens to provided cleaning services; employment services; labor contractors; newspapers in which the defendant advertised; and immigrant networks that assisted fellow illegal immigrants in getting work, housing and illegal work permits. The enterprise alleged in this action is a more cohesive organization. Given the notoriety of the Russian mafia, the Court could actually take judicial notice of its existence. Whether the defendants are members of it is another matter, which must await discovery, for the Complaint only does what it is suppose to: allege they are members. (Complaint 16-127)

The Enterprise movants' argument that an enterprise must have a "structural continuity" or "distinctness" extending beyond the performance of the pattern of racketeering acts (Memorandum p 44-3, 45-2) or a "hierarchy" (Memorandum p 44-3) has been expressly disavowed by the Second Circuit. Moss v. Morgan Stanley, Inc., 719 F.2d 5, 22 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Bargaric, 706 F.2d 42, 55 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Mazzei, 700 F.2d 85, 88 (2d Cir. 1983). The Enterprise movants base their position on a couple of decisions by district courts in the Second Circuit that hold a plaintiff does not adequately plead a RICO enterprise if he fails to plead racketeering acts distinct from the enterprise and fails to plead an enterprise with a centralized hierarchy. (Memorandum p 45-2) The cases, Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F.Supp.2d 392, 400 (SDNY 2000), and Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 44 F.Supp.2d 565, 580 (SDNY 1999), derive these requirements exclusively from Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F.Supp.2d 340, 349-50 (SDNY 1998), which in turn based its holding on cases from the Eight Circuit. The Second Circuit disagreed with Schmidt on precisely the points for which the Enterprise movants cite Goldfine and Black Radio. See Pavlov v. Bank of New York Co., Inc., 25 Fed.App. 70, 2002 WL 63576 (2d Cir. Jan. 14, 2002)(unpublished decision). In reversing the district court's dismissal of a RICO claim in Pavlov, the Second Circuit reiterated its position, "[o]ur Circuit has rejected the Eighth Circuit's restrictive approach to the enterprise element .... The enterprise need not necessarily have a continuity extending beyond the performance of the pattern of racketeering acts alleged, or a structural hierarchy, so long as it is in fact an enterprise defined in the statute. We have repeatedly found a sufficient enterprise where the complaint alleges a group without centralized hierarchy formed for the sole purpose of carrying out a pattern of racketeering acts.” Id. at *71.

The Second Circuit long before Pavlov dismissed the reasoning of the Eight Circuit on which Schmidt, Goldfine and Black Radio are based. Hansel’n Gretel Brand, Inc. v. Savitsky, 1997 WL 543088, *2 (SDNY Sept. 3, 1997). In Hansel the defendants argued, as the Enterprise movants do here, that a complaint must allege a common link among them other than the racketeering activity (Memorandum p 45-2) or, alternatively stated, that the defendants played roles in the enterprise distinct from the racketeering activity. The Enterprise movants err when they claim support for this argument comes from Turkette at 583, which states the enterprise is separate and apart from the pattern of racketeering activity. The Second Circuit in United States v. Mazzei, 700 F.2d 85, 88 (2d Cir. 1983), considered the impact of Turkette, and rejected the movants notion. Hansel at *2 (quoting Mazzei at 89). Further, in Colony Holbrook, Inc. v. Strata, G.C., Inc., 928 F.Supp. 1224, 1235-36 (EDNY 1996), the court rejected the view that an enterprise encompasses only an association with an ascertainable structure having an existence apart from the commission of the predicate acts.

Operating under their misunderstanding of the law, the Enterprise movants object the Complaint does not provide a flow chart of the command and control as well as the interrelationship of all the members of the Russian mafia, or at least the defendants. (Memorandum p 46-1, 2) Even discovery will not finalize a flow chart for the Russian mafia, but will show connections among the defendants, who the Enterprise movants inaccurately contend make up the entire alleged Enterprise, Russian mafia. (Memorandum p 45-3) The Complaint specifically states the defendants comprise only “a portion of the Enterprise’s activities in America, Russia, Cyprus and Mexico.”

The Enterprise movants claim that a small law firm, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, could not hold together part of the Russian mafia and conduct legal work for all the defendants in this action across the world. (Memorandum p 46-2) The problem with this objection is the Complaint does not allege that. The Complaint alleges, “Kuba, Mundy & Associates act as consiliari and manager of US immigration issues in New York for the Enterprise.” (Complaint 27, emphasis added) New York is not the world, although some may think so. Further, the Complaint alleges that the law firm “operates a green card and visa mill that fraudulently obtains visas...for Russians” (Complaint 28), and “uses coercion and intimidation against” against some parties (Complaint 30). While such operations do further the Russian mafia’s aims in New York; they don’t hold that worldwide organization together, or even the US Chapter. Kuba, Mundy & Associates just runs a department, although an important one, of the Russian mafia’s operations.

They also object “[t]here is absolutely no other connection....” among them and the other defendants other than the encounters, travels and work of Enterprise movant Shipilina. The Court does not know that. The evidence of the full extent of the connections is within the Enterprise movants knowledge and will come out in discovery.

There is, however, a thread that leads through the Complaint’s allegations, just as the thread of money led reporters Woodward and Bernstein through the maze of Watergate. In this case the thread is a person: movant Shipilina. One of the few ways of exposing underworld organizations from the outside is by tracking one of its members, noting that member’s interactions with other members and the events that subsequently ensue. As the Complaint alleges, the plaintiff followed that thread to pimps, prostitutes, pornographers, pushers, brothels, well known gangsters, Islamic Mafiosi, corrupt public officials, a green card mill, money launderers, crooked lawyers, lap-dancing clubs, killers, goons, bribers, intimidators and perjurers. As Humphrey Bogart said in the Maltese Falcon, “All those on one side. Maybe some of them are unimportant, I won’t argue about that. But look at the number of them.”

The “number of them” paints a picture of part of the Russian mafia. When the control of the Communist Party fell apart, some enterprising Russian men and women started recruiting willing young females to sell sexual services overseas for hard currency. (Complaint 10, 13, 41, 42, 61, 69, 80, 85) In order to get those nubile bodies to the lucrative markets required circumventing immigration laws. (Complaint 27-29, 32, 33) How? By sneaking in assets across borders, bribing immigration officials, tricking stupid Americans into marriage, engagements or relationships. (Complaint 423, 426, 427, 254, 255, 323, 367, 368, 361, 363, 365, 883) Once the flow of willing bodies ramped up, managers were needed in the hard currency markets to keep track of the cash flow in order to mitigate the tendency of these young ladies to maximize their income and minimize the commissions they paid. Managers were also needed to find new outlets, increase the flow of assets from Russia, branch off into related areas—such as drugs, protect the growing operations with threats and intimidation, build relationships with other organized crime groups and bring in lawyers, law enforcement officials, accountants, Internet companies and every other type of professional needed to successfully manage and run a business. (Complaint 11, 15)

Even if Schmidt, Goldfine and Black Radio were still the law in the Second Circuit, the plaintiff argues the Complaint has pled that the Russian mafia, and along with it the defendants’ segment of it, “would exist despite the alleged pattern of racketeering activity,” (Memorandum p 45-2). The pattern of racketeering activity, as opposed to an enterprise, is a series of criminal acts defined by 18 USC 1961(1). Turkette at 583. The latter is pled by allegations of “the requisite number of acts of racketeering committed by the participants in the enterprise,” Turkette at 583. The Complaint alleges a pattern of predicate acts by the Enterprise movants and other defendants to assist and carry out Russian mafia activities. (Complaint 466-683) The Russian mafia also engages in other criminal acts and racketeering activities in other parts of the world not alleged in the Complaint. (Complaint 1) In addition, some of the Russian mafia’s activities, although sorted, are legitimate. For example, employing young females to take off all their clothes and jiggle their bodies close to the faces of strangers paying $20 a “dance” is not a predicate act. However, the income from such lap-dancing does help support the mob’s infrastructure. So even deleting all the alleged predicate acts in the Complaint still leaves a distinct association of fellow travelers seeking fortune and, for some, glory by way of the Russian mafia.

F. Standing.

The Enterprise movants continue their effort to heighten civil RICO pleading requirements—this time for standing. At Memorandum p 48-1, they assert the Complaint “must show”, which means to prove, Black’s Law Dictionary. But the purpose of a complaint under the federal rules is to give notice, not prove. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500-01, 91 L.Ed. 451, 67 S.Ct. 385 (1947).

In their Memorandum at p 48-4, the movants claim the plaintiff “cannot demonstrate with any specificity in what manner” injuries were sustained to his business or property. Demonstrate means “to prove indubitably”, Black’s Law Dictionary, complaints do not prove. In addition, the Enterprise movants’ reference to a “specificity” requirement for “demonstrating injury” fails to mention where this standard comes from. Perhaps it is their ubiquitous version of Rule 9(b), but both the Supreme Court and the federal rules foreclose the adoption of that position. See Michael Goldsmith, Judicial Immunity for White Collar Crime: The Ironic Demise of Civil RICO, 30 Harv. J. on Legis. 1, 18-22 (1993) (criticizing several attempts at RICO reform through judicial revisionism including improper heightened pleading requirements). The Enterprise movants objection to a lack of “specificity” in injury is more appropriate for a summary judgment motion after discovery has been conducted. But, even at that stage, if the plaintiff cannot prove the exact amount of harm, a nominal amount of damage is adequate to support liability. Potomac Elec. Power v. Electric Motor & Supply, 262 F.3d 260, 266 (4th Cir. 2001).

More importantly, the Complaint at 900-907 provides the movants enough specifics for fair notice of the harm done to the plaintiff. But even had the Complaint failed to specify the manner of injury and only made what the Memorandum at p 48-4 objects to as “conclusory allegations [of injury that]... are not definite or ascertainable ...,” the Supreme Court has held that “[a]t the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant’s conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim.” NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256 (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, 112 S.Ct. 2130 (1992)).

Civil RICO provides standing to sue to “[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of [18 USC 1962].” 18 USC 1964(c). In order to bring suit, a plaintiff must allege: (1) defendants’ violation of 1962, (2) injury to the plaintiff’s business and property and (3) causation of injury by defendants violation. Commercial Cleaning Servs., 271 F.3d 374, 379 (2d Cir. 2001). The “by reason of” clause in 18 USC 1964(c) limits standing to plaintiffs who allege the RICO violation was both the factual and proximate causes of the averred injuries. Commercial Cleaning Servs., 271 F.3d 374, 379 (citing Holmes v. Sec. Investor Prot. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 117 L.Ed.2d 532, 112 S.Ct. 1311 (1992)).

The Enterprise movants mistakenly claim the Second Circuit “has made clear that liability ... does not ‘depend on whether there is proximate causation as that term is used at common law.’” (Memorandum p 48-1, citing Abrahams v. Young & Rubican Inc., 79 F.3d 234, 237 (2d Cir. 1996). The current law in the Second Circuit on RICO proximate causation is not so clear. The Circuit has moved away from the Enterprise movants’ assertion that proximate causation is determined by a zone of interest test in which the plaintiff must be “in the category the statute meant to protect.” (Memorandum p 48-1) Rather common law principles for determining proximate cause seem favored. “Central to the notion of proximate cause is the idea that a person is not liable to all those who may have been injured by his conduct, but only to those with respect to whom his acts were ‘a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation,’ and whose injury was ‘reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence.’” Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d 113, 123 (2d Cir. 2003)(citing First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 769 (2d Cir, 1994) (quoting Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23-24). In Lerner, the Second Circuit found that racketeering activities, or predicate acts, were not a substantial factor in the chain of causation, nor were the losses reasonably foreseeable, Lerner at 123, which sounds a lot like common law proximate causation. The Lerner court, however, took a circuitous route to get here and, to a degree, left its options open for defining proximate causation.

In Lerner, the Second Circuit backtracked and maneuvered away from the “zone of interest” test. Id. at 120. “We have previously implied that there might be an additional standing component—that the plaintiff must fall within the zone of interests RICO seeks to protect. Id. (citing see Laborers Local 17 v. Philip Morris, Inc. 191 F.3d 229, 239 (2d Cir. 1999). “[T]he zone of interests test ... is an inquiry into whether ... the plaintiff is within the class of persons sought to be benefited by the provision at issue.” Id. (quoting Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 287, 117 L.Ed.2d 532, 112 S.Ct. 1311 (1992)(Scalia, J., concurring).” The Second Circuit concluded “it wiser to resolve [such] cases on grounds of proximate causality.” Lerner at 120. The Lerner court further stated that in Abrahams v. Young & Rubican Inc., 79 F.3d 234, 237, relied upon by the Enterprise movants, it “resolved the [standing] issue on the grounds of proximate causation,” Lerner at 121, and explained that in Abrahams the Court should have used the term “proximate causality” instead of zone of interests, but that both are pretty much the same, Lerner at 121 n. 6. “[T]he reasonably foreseeable victim of a RICO enterprise will often be ... the type of victim the RICO statute seeks to protect.” Lerner at 122.

The Second Circuit in Lerner finally held the better approach to resolving causation was that adopted by the Supreme Court in Holmes, Lerner at 121-122, which indicates the Second Circuit is moving away from the “zone of interest test” relied on by the Enterprise movants. The plaintiff, therefore, suggests following the holding of Holmes and other circuits that the proximate cause required for RICO standing is a common law concept. See e.g. Systems Management, Inc. v. Loisel, 303 F.3d 100, 104 (1st Cir. 2002); Perry v. American Tobacco Co., 324 F.3d 845, 848 (6th Cir. 2003).

In Holmes, the Supreme Court reasoned that standing under civil RICO concerns only the injury to a person, not the legal right of that person to sue for violations of predicate acts. Holmes, 503 U.S. 258, 280. In reaching its decision, the Court analogized to the Sherman Act which federal courts have held as requiring common law proximate causation to determine standing. Lerner at 120-121. The reason for applying common law proximate causation under the Sherman Act applies just as readily to civil RICO suits under 1964(c). Holmes at 267-69. Holmes, therefore, opts for common law causation principles under RICO, Perry v. American Tobacco Co., 324 F.3d 845, 848 (6th Cir. 2003), in which the traditional rule requiring that the defendant's acts substantially caused an injury that was foreseeable includes the traditional requirement that the injury was "direct", in that the defendant did not injure some intermediary who in turn harmed the plaintiff. Laborer's Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Philip Morris, Inc., 191 F.3d 229, 235-36 (2d 1999); see Holmes at 268.

As the Complaint alleges, there was no one standing between the plaintiff and the defendants, so the harm was direct. (Complaint 900-907) In addition, the predicate acts and RICO violations committed in furtherance of the Russian mafia's Scheme factually harmed the plaintiff's business and financial interests, and the injuries from those predicate acts and RICO violations were foreseeable. Id.

In their advocating a "zone of interest" test for proximate cause, the Enterprise movants claim a plaintiff must be "the intended target." (Memorandum p 48-1) On the target issue, the Second Circuit has repeatedly emphasized that the targets, competitors and intended victims of a racketeering enterprise are those that are the reasonably foreseeable victims of a RICO violation. Lerner at 124. The targets do not have to be specifically named by the criminal entity when it concocts its scheme; they only need to fall within the group of reasonably foreseeable victims.

The Enterprise movants falsely claim that the Complaint asserts all the defendants in this action, banded together, looked up the plaintiff's name while he was working in Moscow and decided to target him for exploitation (Memorandum p 48-3). The Russian mafia and its Scheme of targeting American businessmen as unwitting accomplices in bringing the mafia's assets and managers to the new world existed well before the plaintiff landed in Moscow on July 4, 1999. (Complaint 10, 360-63, 883) The plaintiff had the unfortunate luck of stepping into the cross hairs of the Russian mafia's Scheme when he accepted an invitation to a party in his apartment building. (Complaint 128-38) If the plaintiff had been loan sharked by the Italian mafia, the Enterprise movants would not make the ludicrous claim that to satisfy standing the Italian mafia had to create a loan sharking enterprise solely targeting the plaintiff. Here it is not the Italian but the Russian mafia, a large criminal entity that the plaintiff will prove exists if given the opportunity for discovery. "No precedent suggests that a racketeering enterprise may have only one "target," or that only a primary target has standing ... there is a broad class of plaintiffs under RICO." Baisch v. Galina, 346 F.3d 366, 375 (2nd Cir. 2003).

Some courts do not even require that the plaintiff be the target or intended victim of predicate acts so long as the plaintiff's business or property was directly injured as a proximate result of the violation. Rakoff and Goldstein, RICO Civil and Criminal, 4.02[7]. The Complaint alleges such injuries at 900-907.

If this Court does decide to follow the "zone of interest test," or at least add it to the common law proximate cause requirement, the plaintiff argues that at this stage of the proceedings there is a set of facts that can be proved that will satisfy the "zone of interest test," so dismissal on those grounds would be inappropriate. See Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 513-14, 152 L.Ed.2d 1, 122 S.Ct. 992 (2002). Furthermore, disputed claims of causation and injury cannot be decided on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. See Knevelbaard Diaries v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 989 (9th Cir. 2000).

Further, in NOW v. Scheidler, the plaintiffs alleged that a RICO conspiracy had injured them in their business or property, and the Supreme Court concluded that nothing more was needed to confer standing at the pleading stage. NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256 (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, 112 S.Ct. 2130 (1992)). This action alleges damages to “business and financial interests.” (Complaint 900-907) The Enterprise movants apparently try to narrow the damages recoverable under RICO to exclude harm to financial interests. (Memorandum p 48-4) Whether an interest is property depends on state law. Oscar v. University Student Coop Ass’n, 939 F.2d 808, 810-11 (9th Cir. 1991). Under New York law, property includes anything that may be subject to ownership and includes obligations, rights and other intangibles. New York Jur2d, Prop 1. Financial interests clearly fall within the definition of property, so this Complaint alleges damage to the plaintiff’s business and property interests, which is enough to confer standing.

Nevertheless, the Enterprise movants object to the damages alleged in the Complaint even though such types of harm have been held recoverable under RICO. When a commercial business loses money, it has suffered injury to both business and property. Rakoff and Goldstein, RICO Civil and Criminal, 4.03[2]. The Complaint at 907(a) alleges loss of profits from the plaintiff’s law and consulting business as a result of halting normal work and investigating and seeking to rectify harm from the Scheme. Philatelic Foundation v. Kaplan, No. 85 Civ.8571, slip op. (SDNY May 9, 1986), dismissed in part 647 F.Supp. 1344. Lost profits are considered an injury to business. Terminate Control Corp. v. Horowitz, 28 F.3d 1335, 1343 (2d Cir. 1994). Business interruptions and expenses resulting from the Russian mafia’s Scheme, alleged in the Complaint at 907(b), are recoverable and sufficient to stand a motion to dismiss. R.A.G. S. Couture, Inc. v. Hyatt, 774 F.2d 1350, 1353 (1985). The values of business opportunities lost due to RICO predicate acts, alleged in the Complaint at 907(c), are compensable. Terminate Control Corp. v. Horowitz, 28 F.3d 1335, 1343. Expenses from the investigation of the tampering with and intimidation of witnesses and subordination of perjury and bribery in order to avoid and rectify injury, alleged at Complaint 907(d), are recoverable. Malley-Duff & Associates v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 792 F.2d 341, 355 (3d Cir. 1986). Harm to business reputation and goodwill, alleged at Complaint 907(e), constitutes a RICO injury. Lewis v. LHU, 696 F.Supp. 723, 727 (DDC 1988).

The Enterprise movants also mistakenly use a case to argue this RICO action has not accrued because the alleged damages have not become “clear and definite.” (Memorandum p 48-2) The facts in the case they cite, Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhodes, 859 F.2d 1096, 1106 (2d Cir. 1988), cert denied, 490 U.S. 1007 (1989), are diametrically different from this action. Bankers Trust deals with a RICO claim by a creditor against its debtor. Since the damages claimed under RICO by the creditor were also subject to a bankruptcy proceeding, the Second Circuit decided the damages would not become definite until the bankruptcy action made clear how much of those damages the creditor would recover in bankruptcy. Once that happened, the amount not recovered through the bankruptcy action could be recovered under RICO. That is, the damages claimed under RICO would become “clear and definite.”

Two more recent cases not cited by the Enterprise movants, but which use the exact words quoted in their Memorandum at p 48-2: “a cause of action under RICO does not accrue until the amount of damages becomes clear and definite,” more clearly show that the reason for those RICO actions not accruing was that the creditors might still recover on their loans through other pending actions. Strangely the words quoted by the Enterprise movants in their Memorandum do not appear anywhere in the case they do cite, Bankers Trust.

The two cases in which those exact words do appear: First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 768 (2d Cir. 1994) and Motorola Credit Corp. v. Uzan, 322 F.3d 130, 135 (2d Cir. 2003) hold that “[t]he ‘clear and definite’ amount of damages suffered by a secured creditor who is fraudulently induced to make a loan and seeks to recover the value of the loan itself, ‘cannot be established until it is finally determined whether the collateral is insufficient to make the plaintiff whole, and if so, by how much.’” Motorola at 135 (quoting First Nationwide at 768). So until the creditor recovered on the collateral, the amount remaining to recover under RICO was uncertain “because the RICO damages are netted against recovery obtained from collateral and other sources....” Id. The plaintiff in this action is not a creditor; therefore, the reasoning of those cases does not apply and damages have accrued.

The Enterprise movants then try to absolve themselves of any harm they may have legally caused the plaintiff by stating such harm was the result of the plaintiff’s “own careless actions.” (Memorandum p 49-1) Perhaps not having employed a “taster” to test meals prepared by his wife for drugs or following his heart into a trap the Buddhists refer to as “idiot compassion” made the plaintiff contributory negligent. But contributory negligence applies to negligence actions—not criminal conduct by the Russian mafia. The Enterprise movants may, however, be taking a page from George Orwell’s depiction of the former Soviet Union where the victim is the violator and the violator the victim.

G. Conspiracy.

Again the Enterprise movants try to wrongly heighten the standard for pleading RICO, this time for averring conspiracy under 18 USC 1962(d). They mistakenly claim that the Complaint “must show” (Memorandum at p 49-2), which means to prove, and object to a “paucity of facts” (Memorandum p 50-1). But the plaintiff must not be put to the test to prove his allegations at the pleading stage. NOW, Inc v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256.

The movants also object the Complaint fails “to adequately plead when or where such purported agreements occurred, the nature of the agreements or what the terms of the agreements to conspire were,” (Memorandum p 50-1). This sounds very much like their ubiquitous “particularity” requirement adopted from Rule 9(b). However, the Supreme Court has declined to extend beyond fraud or mistake the Rule 9(b) requirement of greater particularity in allegations. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 513. The heighten standard of particularity the movants demand by requiring the pleading of “when”, “where” and the “terms of the agreements to conspire” does not apply. But even if it did, such information is peculiarly within the possession of the Enterprise movants, so their new standard for pleading RICO conspiracy should be permissively applied. Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39.

A plaintiff is not required to be omniscience, but provide enough information to put the defendants on notice. Arnold v. Arnold Corp., 920 F.2d 1269, 1279-80 (6th Cir. 1990). The Complaint’s conspiracy allegations not only provide enough information to put the movants on notice but also a fair amount of information as to “when”, “where” and the “terms” of the agreements. For example: the conspiracy to trick the plaintiff by using lies and drugs so that he would bring an asset of the Russian mafia to America began in July 1999 (Complaint 135, 136), the conspiracy to force the plaintiff to lie to the INS in order to protect the Russian mafia's Scheme began around November 2000 (Complaint 228), the agreement to obtain an order of protection based on perjury in order to pressure the plaintiff into lying to the INS occurred in December 2000 or January 2001 (Complaint 234), the agreement to have the plaintiff threatened with death at the hands of Russian gangsters occurred around January 2001 (Complaint 236), the conspiracy to prevent the plaintiff from going to trial in order to avoid exposure of some of the Russian mafia's activities began around February or March 2001 (Complaint 243), the agreement to bribe an INS official occurred in the Spring of 2001 (Complaint 254), the conspiracy to use Russian or Islamic Mafiosi to silence witnesses began around April 2001 (Complaint 265), the agreement to hide movant Shipilina's true net worth from the New York Supreme Court occurred probably in the Summer of 2001 (Complaint 275), the conspiracy to use hoodlums to threaten the plaintiff so as to avoid a public trial that would expose part of the Russian mafia and to keep him from providing information to law enforcement agencies started in October 2001 with the first of four threats made over twenty months (Complaint 280, 287, 316), the conspiracy to use Russian gangsters or Islamic Mafiosi to force witnesses in a criminal case in Russia to change their testimony or refuse to testify began around March 2002 (Complaint 293), the agreement to bribe a New York City detective occurred around March 2001 (Complaint 306), the murder-for-hire agreement occurred in July or August 2002 (Complaint 319), and agreements to import prostitutes, pornography, drugs or launder money occurred in March 2000 (Complaint 321), Fall of 2000 (Complaint 326) and September 2000 (Complaint 401).

In addition, the Enterprise movants object that the allegations of conspiracy are "conclusory" (Memorandum p 49-2) and "bare conclusory" (Memorandum p 50-1). Conclusory means expressing a factual inference without stating the underlying facts. Black's Law Dictionary. Well, most of the underlying facts for the Enterprise movants' conspiracies are within their possession and won't come out until discovery.

They use Morin v. Trupin, 747 F.Supp. 1051, 1067 (SDNY 1990), for holding that conclusory and bare allegations of conspiracy are insufficient to plead RICO conspiracy. (Memorandum p 49-2) That is what Morin holds, but it does so because in that case the “[p]laintiffs’ entire allegation of a RICO conspiracy consist[ed] of the following: ‘The defendants conspired with each other to violate 18 USC Sec. 1962(a), (b) and (c).’” Morin at 1067 (emphasis added). Now there’s a bare allegation. The Enterprise movants, however, do not even mention that lone, short allegation in their Memorandum as the reason the Morin court dismissed the conspiracy claims. Nor do the movants compare that allegation with the numerous allegations of conspiracy in the Complaint in this action.

A RICO conspiracy violation occurs when any person conspires to violate 18 USC 1962(a), (b) or (c). 18 USC 1962(d).

The Enterprise movants’ implication that a necessary element of a RICO conspiracy is the conspirators “agreed to form” a RICO enterprise makes no sense if a RICO enterprise already exists, such as the Russian mafia. (Memorandum p 49-2) In such a case, and where the conspirators are members of the enterprise, a complaint only needs to allege the existence of an agreement to violate 1962(a), (b) or (c). See Cofacredit v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co., 187 F.3d 229, 244 (2d Cir. 1999). The Complaint alleges such agreements by the Enterprise movants at 472, 475, 478, 481, 484, 489, 501, 513, 543, 547, 559, and these conspirators are alleged to be members of the Russian mafia (Complaint 16-23, 27-39, 44-50).

The plaintiff must also allege that the conspirators intended to further the criminal endeavor, which can be met by merely adopting the goal of advancing or facilitating the violation of RICO 1962(a)(b) or (c). See Salinas v. U.S., 522 U.S. 52, 65, 139 L.Ed.2d 352, 118 S.Ct. 469 (1997). The Complaint does so at 472, 475, 478, 481, 484, 489, 501, 513, 543, 547, 559. A conspirator need not agree to undertake all of the acts necessary to commit an offense. Salinas at 65. He can be a conspirator by agreeing to facilitate only some of the acts leading to the offense. Salinas at 65. The Supreme Court's standard appears less stringent than the one advocated by the Enterprise movants that conspirators "understood the scope of the enterprise and knowingly agreed to further its affairs through the commission of various offenses." (Memorandum p 49-2)

In their Memorandum at p 50-2, the movants claim, "there can be no RICO conspiracy without a substantive RICO violation," and, they, the Enterprise movants, did not violate any of the provisions of 18 USC 1962. Co-conspirators who might not themselves have violated one of the substantive provisions of 1962 can still be sued providing others were alleged to have done so. Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 507, 146 L.Ed.2d 561, 120 S.Ct. 1608 (2000). In addition, conspiracy is not an independent cause of action but a mechanism for subjecting co-conspirators to liability for the tortious acts of one of their members, and a tortious act is a 1962(a), (b), or (c) violation or may even be the commission of one predicate act. Beck at 506 n. 10. The Complaint alleges numerous violations of 18 USC 1962 and predicate acts committed by the Enterprise movants in furtherance of the Russian mafia's Scheme. (Complaint 466-547, 556-559)

The Enterprise movants claim that a defendant cannot be liable for conspiracy "unless it has some part in directing the RICO enterprise's affairs." (Memorandum p 50-3) The Enterprise

movants do not provide the page cite from Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 122 L.Ed.2d 525, 113 S.Ct. 1163 (1992), that they use to support their statement. They just provide the title page for the case. Since Reves concerned a violation of 1962(c), the plaintiff assumes the movants limit this alleged rule only to conspiracies to violate 1962(c). But even with that limitation, the alleged rule is wrong. A defendant can be liable for conspiring to violate a law, even if he is not among the class of persons who could commit the crime directly. US v. Viola, 35 F.3d 37, 43 (2d Cir. 1994). And a defendant can conspire to violate 1962(c) even though he is not an operator or manager; that is, does not have “some part in directing the RICO enterprise’s affairs,” so long as he knowingly agreed to facilitate the activities of those who run the enterprise. Brouwer v. Raffensperger, Hughes Co., 199 F.3d 961, 966-97 (7th Cir. 2000). The Complaint alleges the Enterprise movants play a part in directing some of the activities of the Russian mafia, but if the Court chooses to overlook those allegations, the Complaint at the very least alleges the movants agreed to perform services of a kind that facilitated the activities of other operators and managers. (Complaint 466-70, 472, 473, 475, 476, 478, 479, 481, 482, 484, 485-87, 489, 490-99, 501, 502-11, 513, 514-41, 543, 544, 545, 547, 556, 557, 559)

As for conspiring to violate 1962(a) & (b), the Supreme Court in Reves made clear that both insiders and outsiders could violate those two sections, Reves, 507 U.S. 184-85; therefore, a conspirator under 1962(a) & (b) need not have any say in the running of the enterprise.

Injury under 1962(d) requires harm from an overt act that is a predicate act or otherwise wrongful under RICO. Beck, 529 U.S. at 505. The Complaint alleges agreements among the Enterprise movants to violate 1962(a)(b) or (c), overt acts that are wrongful under RICO and injuries to the plaintiff. (Complaint 472, 475, 478, 481, 484, 489, 501, 513, 543, 547, 559, 900-907) In Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078, *42, Chief Judge Mukasey found that the plaintiffs' action for 1962(d) conspiracy would not be dismissed because the complaint had alleged the defendants formed an agreement and acted in concert to commit predicate acts. So the Complaint, as it pertains to RICO conspiracies, should not be dismissed.

H. Aid and abet.

The Complaint does not allege that the Enterprise movants aided and abetted the violation of 18 USC 1962, the substantive RICO statute. It alleges the movants are liable as principals for the violation of predicate acts under 18 USC 1961(1) when they willfully commit the offense, aid, abet, counsel, command, induce, or procure or cause its commission. 18 USC 2. So when they engaged in such conduct, they were committing racketeering activities. (Complaint 466-70, 473, 476, 479, 482, 485-87, 490-99, 502-511, 514-541, 544, 545, 556, 557) Liability for racketeering activities is the basis on which the other RICO elements build to reach a violation of substantive RICO, 18 USC 1962. Therefore, a defendant who aids and abets a predicate act is considered a principal for that act and can in the end be liable for violating 18 USC 1962, providing the other elements of RICO are satisfied, such as pattern, injury, enterprise and standing.

Point III: State claims.

A. Supplemental jurisdiction.

The Enterprise movants continue their efforts to have this Court apply a higher standard than required to the plaintiff's RICO pleading in order to gain a dismissal. Previously they attempted to apply Rule 9(b) to predicate acts that were not fraudulent, carried on as though Rule 9(b) applied to pleading violations of 18 USC 1962 and demanded the Complaint provide evidence that proved its allegations. In their Memorandum at p 52-3 and p 53-1, they try to wrongly heighten the standard for pleading subject matter jurisdiction. The movants cite to United Mine Workers v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 725, 16 L.Ed.2d 218, 86 S.Ct. 1130 (1966), for holding that “[t]o withstand a motion to dismiss, a federal claim must be stated with substance sufficient to confer subject matter jurisdiction.” (Memorandum p 52-3, emphasis added) What the Supreme Court said was “[t]he federal claim must have substance...,” Id. at 725, which meant there was a federal question on which to base subject matter jurisdiction. The Supreme Court did not say that allegations of subject matter jurisdiction had to be “stated with substance,” which implies a heightened pleading standard for jurisdiction.

The movants also refer to a “specificity” pleading requirement (Memorandum p 52-3) that they take from a case alleging a governmental conspiracy to deprive a person of his constitutional rights, Hughes v. PBA of NYC, 850 F.2d 876, 880 (2d Cir. 1988), which found support from another case, Oster v. Aronwald, 567 F.2d 551, 553 (2d Cir. 1977), also averring a governmental conspiracy. Pleading a governmental conspiracy to violate constitutional rights is not pleading subject matter jurisdiction.

The pleading standard for subject matter jurisdiction is whether a complaint asserts a claim under the US Constitution or federal statute as ascertained by looking at the whole complaint. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1206, p 89-90. Or, as Rule 8(a)(1) requires: a short and plain statement of the grounds on which the court’s jurisdiction depends. In this action, the Complaint at 6, 7 provides such statements. If the Court finds that subject matter jurisdiction has not been properly pled, the plaintiff requests leave to re-plead it.

Other than the Enterprise movants attempt to raise the bar for pleading jurisdiction, it is unclear exactly what they are asking for in this section. The movants titled the section: “This Court Lacks Jurisdiction Over Plaintiff's Pendant State Law Claims" and state that if the RICO claims are dismissed, then the "pendent state law claims must be dismissed," (Memorandum, p 53-1). However, in the following paragraph (Memorandum, p 53-2), they argue that the Court should keep jurisdiction and "address the instant state law claims ...." So which is it—dismiss everything or keep the state claims.

If the Court dismisses the RICO claims, then whether to keep the state law claims is within its discretion as guided by the factors in 28 USC 1367(c). Those factors are considered in light of judicial economy, convenience, fairness and comity. United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726. If the Court declines jurisdiction over the state law claims, it should dismiss them without prejudice so that they may be brought in state court. Gold v. Local 7 United Food & Commercial Workers Union, 159 F.3d 1307, 1311 (10th Cir. 1998).

B. Pendent state law claims.

The Enterprise movants are back to their old tricks of claiming the Complaint must prove rather than allege and plead at a stricter standard than Rule 8's general notice requirement. Under Rule 8, a complaint need not state with precision all elements that give rise to a legal basis for recovery as long as fair notice of the nature of the action is provided. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1216, p 154.

The Enterprise movants assert the Complaint "must demonstrate," which means to prove indubitably, Black's Law Dictionary, various elements of the state claims of intentional infliction of emotional distress (Memorandum p 53-4, p 54-2) and abuse of process (Memorandum p 56-1). They also object the abuse of process allegations do not "establish" (Memorandum p 56-3), which also means prove by evidence, Black's Law Dictionary. However "[i]t is a familiar rule of pleading ... that evidence by which an allegation is sought to be established need not be pleaded. ... Such matters [of evidence], however, are for proof and we doubt the propriety, much less the necessity of their allegation.” Cater Constr. Co. v. Nischwitz, 111 F.2d 971, 973 (7th Cir. 1940).

In their argument for a higher standard than called for in Rule 8, the movants make conclusory statements that the emotional distress claim “is bare and conclusory, with uncorroborated injuries.” (Memorandum p 54-2) Corroborate means to add weight by additional evidence, Black’s Law Dictionary, but the plaintiff must not be put to the test to prove his allegations at the pleading stage. NOW, Inc v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256. The Enterprise movants do not even cite to the allegations they claim are “bare and conclusory.” Perhaps they hope a busy court will not take the time to look them up, and accept their conclusions as accurate. Well, here are the cites to the emotional distress allegations that harmed the plaintiff, so the Court can decide for itself: Complaint at 137, 168, 171, 172, 175-81, 185, 216, 228-30, 234, 236-37, 239-41, 243, 245, 257-59, 273, 280-84, 287-92, 306-09, 316-18.

The Enterprise movants claim, without more, that the Complaint fails “to sufficiently plead the elements” for abuse of process. (Memorandum p 57-2) They do not even cite the allegations to which they refer, so here are the abuse of process allegations that harmed the plaintiff: Complaint 228, 234, 239-41, 306-13. Nor do they cite the malicious prosecution allegations that they claim are “conclusory” (Memorandum p 58 –3), so here are the Complaint’s malicious prosecution allegations for the Court 228, 234, 239, 306-10.

(i) Intentional infliction of emotional distress on the plaintiff.

In order to allege the intentional infliction of emotional distress, a complaint need aver that the defendants by extreme and outrageous conduct intentionally or recklessly caused severe emotional distress to the plaintiff. Lish v. Harper's Magazine Foundation, 807 F.Supp. 1090, 1109 (SDNY 1992).

The Complaint alleges that the Russian mafia, through its members Flash Dancers Topless Club; Jay-Jay Cabaret; Flash Dancers Managers Barry, 3, 4 or 5; Madison a.k.a. Pierre; Kuba; Mundy; Petrovich; Shipilina; and Henning, engaged in acts to intentionally or recklessly cause the plaintiff emotional distress. The act or acts attributable to each depended on whether the immediate aim was to use the plaintiff for bringing a valuable asset of the Russian mafia, Shipilina, to America, to intimidate him into going along with the mafia's illegal efforts or to threaten him into silence concerning the mob's activities.

Among the acts were secretly slipping the plaintiff drugs to assure he would bring movant Shipilina to America and remain in the dark as to the Russian mafia's Scheme (Complaint 137, 168, 171, 172, 175-81, 185, 216); filing false reports about the plaintiff with the New York City police to intimidate him into lying to the INS and keeping quiet about the Russian mafia's activities (Complaint 228-30, 234, 239-41); threatening the plaintiff with death at the hands of Russian mobsters if he did not play along (Complaint 236-37); threatening the plaintiff through four telephone calls with what can only be described as physical harm if he does not stop his search for justice (Complaint 280-84, 287-92, 316-18); and using corrupt police power to threaten the plaintiff with jail to chill him from exercising his constitutional rights (Complaint 306-09).

Whether the above alleged acts are extreme and outrageous is susceptible to determination as a matter of law, and, obviously peculiar to the particular situation given the limitless human capacity for cruelty. Howell v. New York Post Co., Inc., 81 N.Y.2d 115, 122, 612 N.E.2d 699, 702, 596 N.Y.S.2d 350, 353 (1993). Guidance can be found in the Restatement (Second) of Torts that describes the required conduct as going “beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious and utterly intolerable in a civilized community.” Murphy v. American Home Products Corp. 58 N.Y.2d 293, 303, 448 N.E.2d 86, 96, 461 N.Y.S.2d 232, 242 (1983). A viable claim also exists when severe pain and anguish are inflicted through a deliberate campaign of intimidation as opposed to just one instance of alleged aggravating conduct. Nader v. General Motors Corp., 25 N.Y.2d 560, 569, 255 N.E.2d 765, 770, 307 N.Y.S.2d 647, 654 (1970).

Secretly feeding a person drugs, threatening injury and death and corruptly using the police and legal system may, when considered separately, be tolerable under the community standards of present day Russia or even modern day New York City. But when these acts are part of an ongoing campaign to keep in America a Russian mafia asset, who entered the country illegally, and to protect the Russian mafia from exposure, then even by New York City standards the alleged conduct went beyond the bounds of decency.

Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich claim the plaintiff alleges them liable because they represented movant Shipilina in divorce and immigration proceedings. (Memorandum p 54-2) The accuracy or inaccuracy of that statement depends on how they define “represent.” If represent means arranging for threats, corruptly using the police and judiciary and coercion against the plaintiff, then their statement is accurate. (Complaint 228-30, 232, 234, 236-41, 243, 245, 273, 280-84, 287-92, 306-09, 316-18) If it means representation according to ethical standards, then it is not accurate.

The plaintiff has the right to be free from the mental disturbance intentionally or recklessly caused by the above cited acts. Mitran v. Williamson, 21 Misc.2d 106, 197 N.Y.S.2d 689, 692 (Sup.Ct., Kings County, 1960). And the Complaint at 284, 292, 905 alleges the harm caused the plaintiff by the Russian mafia's infliction of emotional distress. If that is not enough at this stage, then the plaintiff requests leave to amend the Complaint.

Where the acts of inflicting emotional distress are continuing, the plaintiff may bring suit within one year of the conduct terminating. Drury v. Tucker, 210 A.D.2d 891, 621 N.Y.S.2d 822, 823 (4th Dep't 1994). And when at least some of the defendants' actionable conduct takes place within one year of suit, recovery can be had for the entire course of conduct. Neufeld v. Neufeld, 910 F.Supp. 977, 982-83 (SDNY 1996). The acts alleged in the Complaint began in 1999 and continued up until at least June 2003 when the plaintiff received a fourth telephone threat. This occurred after the Complaint was filed, but was made known to the Court and the Enterprise movants in a June 19, 2003 letter from the plaintiff. This call not only added to the emotional distress to which the Russian mafia had subjected the plaintiff, but infers an Enterprise conspiracy to deter, intimidate and threaten the plaintiff from freely pursuing this case in a federal court. Such an act violates 42 USC 1985(2) by constituting a conspiracy to interfere with the plaintiff's civil rights. That allegation is not now part of the Complaint, but the plaintiff intends to include it in amending the Complaint as a matter of right or by leave of the Court if the Enterprise movants' motions to dismiss are granted in whole or in part.

Also, there has been no indication that the efforts to silence the plaintiff have ended. There may just be a lull. But even assuming they have ended, and disregarding the June 2003 threatening call, the wrongs earliest possible termination was not until the plaintiff became aware of the unwillingness of movant Henning to go forward with the arrest of the plaintiff. This occurred on April 23, 2002 when the plaintiff's attorney told him the matter had been referred to the Queens District Attorney for a decision on whether to arrest the plaintiff. The RICO Complaint was filed on April 18, 2003, which is within the one-year limit measured from April 23, 2002.

In addition, even after April 23, 2002, there was continuing uncertainty caused by the threat of the future outrageous act of arresting the plaintiff for exercising his rights that was as effective in causing emotional distress as acts continuously committed. In fact, the plaintiff's uncertainty continued until October 11, 2003 when he finally learned that he was not going to be arrested after reading movant Henning's affidavit in this action, which said the district attorney had concluded there was no reason for an arrest. (Henning Affidavit ¶ 9) So, the statute of limitations did not start running until October 11, 2003.

Moreover, the one-year statute of limitations for emotional distress was tolled when the plaintiff served Enterprise movants Flash Dancers Topless Club; Jay-Jay Cabaret; Flash Dancers Managers Barry, 3, 4 or 5; Kuba; Mundy; Petrovich; Shipilina; and Henning with a summons and notice under New York CPLR 305(b) on March 27, 2003. Exhibit B. Service of a summons and notice within one year from when an action for emotional distress accrues tolls the statute of limitations. See CPLR 305, Practice Commentary C305:3. Summons and Notice, p 422. The Enterprise movants say the emotional distress claim "could not have accrued any later than March 2002 ...." (Memorandum p 55-2) They actually mean March 27, 2002, which is the date that movant Henning threatened the plaintiff with arrest and member defendant Madison, a.k.a. Pierre, threatened the plaintiff not to testify before the INS or try to reopen the Krasnodar criminal case. (Complaint 308, 318) Since service of the summons and notice was made on March 27, 2003, within the one-year period, and the Enterprise movants failed to respond by serving a demand for a complaint, id. CPLR 305 Practice Commentary, the filing of the RICO Complaint on April 18, 2003 was timely because the emotional distress statute of limitations had been tolled.

(ii) Abuse of process.

Abuse of process is the misuse or perversion of regularly issued court process for an improper collateral purpose not justified by the nature of the action. Board of Education of Farmingdale v. Farmingdale Classroom Teachers Assoc., 38 N.Y.2d 397, 400, 343 N.E.2d 278, 280, 380 N.Y.S.2d 635, 639, (1975).

To state a claim under abuse of process, the plaintiff does not have to allege, as Enterprise movants Mundy and Petrovich contend (Memorandum p 57-2), that defendants issued process. Defendants need only initiate a legal process against the plaintiff. See Williams v. Williams, 23 N.Y.2d 592, 596, 246 N.E.2d 333, 335, 298 N.Y.S.2d 473, 476 (1969). Legal process is a direction or demand, issued from or filed in court that interferes with the plaintiff's person or property. Id. Obtaining a temporary restraining order can constitute use of legal process capable of being abused. Cf. Andersen v. Pegalis, 150 A.D.2d 315, 540 N.Y.S.2d 843, 845 (2d Dep't 1989).

The Complaint alleges Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina caused the Queens Family Court to issue a temporary order of protection against the plaintiff that was obtained based on perjured testimony and for the illegitimate purpose of forcing the plaintiff to lie to the INS and protect some of the Russian mafia's activities. (Complaint 228, 234, 239-41)

After issuance of the temporary order of protection, Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina improperly used it by initiating the criminal process, executed by movant

Henning, which threatened the plaintiff with arrest for allegedly violating the restraining order. (Complaint 306-13) Enterprise movant Henning even calls the matter a “case” that he referred to the Queens District Attorney, which was subsequently closed because the plaintiff did not violate the protection order. (Henning Affidavit ¶s 9, 10)

The purposes of movants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and Henning’s acts were to intimidate the plaintiff into lying to the INS, keeping quiet about the Russian mafia’s activities, ceasing his cooperation with the INS in Moscow and preventing him from trying to reopen the Krasnodar criminal case that would expose a number of the Russian mafia’s activities (Complaint 228, 306), all clearly improper, and all without justification.

Both the temporary order of protection and the threatened arrest from the alleged violation cost the plaintiff legal fees, interfered with the plaintiff’s person by restraining his freedom of movement, forced him to make the difficult preparations for an impending arrest, resulted in loss of business and damaged his reputation. (Complaint 3, 313, 905, 907) These damage allegations satisfy the requirement to plead actual or special damages, Board of Education of Farmingdale v. Farmingdale Classroom Teachers Assoc., 38 N.Y.2d 397, 405, 343 N.E.2d 278, 284, 380 N.Y.S.2d 635, 644, (1975), and show that the Enterprise movants once again misstated the Complaint by claiming it “fails to allege special damages at all....” (Memorandum p 57-2)

Since the bogus case against the plaintiff for allegedly violating the temporary order of protection was not closed until June 19, 2002 (Henning Affidavit ¶ 10), the abuse of process wrong did not terminated until then. The RICO complaint was filed on April 18, 2003, well within the one-year statute of limitations. Further, under the general application of the continuing tort theory under New York law where actionable conduct that takes place within one year of suit will toll the statute for the entire course of conduct, Neufeld v. Neufeld, 910 F.Supp. 977, 982-83, the issuance of the order of protection by the Queens Family Court, which began the abuse of process conduct, is tolled to fall within the one year limitations period.

(iii) Malicious prosecution

“A malicious prosecution is one that is begun in malice, without probable cause to believe it can succeed, and which finally ends in failure.” Burt v. Smith, 181 N.Y. 1, 5, 73 N.E. 495, 496 (1905). The purpose of the cause of action is to protect the personal interest of freedom from unjustifiable litigation. Broughton v. State of NY, 37 N.Y.2d 451, 457 (1975).

Malicious prosecution requires a judicial proceeding, which means that judicial action of some sort will occur. See Rosario v. Amalgamated Ladies Garment Union, 605 F.2d 1228, 1249-50 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 919, 64 L.Ed.2d 273, 100 S.Ct. 1853. An injunction satisfies the prior judicial proceeding element. Diamond v. Strassberg, 751 F. Supp. 1152, 1153 (SDNY 1990). As the Complaint alleges, Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina initiated a proceeding in the Queens Family Court. (Complaint 228, 234, 239) As a result, the plaintiff was enjoined and required to appear in court or be arrested. Movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina, with the crucial assistance of movant Henning, then used that injunction, the order of protection, to cause the New York City Police and Queens District Attorney to officially act against the plaintiff by opening a case and notifying him of arrest. (Complaint 306-10, Henning Affidavit 8-10)

Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and Henning correctly note that another element of malicious prosecution is the termination of the judicial proceeding in favor the plaintiff. (Memorandum p 58-4) But they are wrong in defining “termination ... in favor of the plaintiff” as meaning only that the proceeding “has been tried on the merits and the outcome was a finding of innocence.” (Memorandum p 58-4) Termination in favor of the plaintiff includes the accuser abandoning the proceeding, Russo v. State of NY, 672 F.2d 1014, 1019 (2d Cir. 1982), failure to prosecute, Reit v. Meyer, 160 App.Div. 752, 146 N.Y.S. 75, 79 (1st Dep’t 1914), and circumstances that were not inconsistent with the plaintiff’s innocence, Smith-Hunter v. Harvey, 95 N.Y.2d 191, 196, 734 N.E.2d 750, 755, 712 N.Y.S.2d 438 (2000). Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina abandoned and failed to prosecute the temporary order of protection when they did not appear at a court hearing, which caused dismissal of the petition. (Complaint 311) And the police department’s efforts to arrest the plaintiff for violating the order of protection prior to its dismissal were terminated in favor of the plaintiff when the Queens District Attorney concluded there was no violation of the order. (Henning Affidavit ¶ 9)

Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina’s conduct in obtaining the temporary order of protection based on perjured testimony by Shipilina and suborned by Mundy and Petrovich infers a lack of probable cause. (Complaint 234, 239) In addition, movants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina’s bribing or rewarding Henning for instituting proceedings to arrest the plaintiff also infers lack of probable cause. (Complaint 306, 307)

In order to allege malice, a complaint must aver the defendants commenced prior actions for a wrong or improper motive, for something other than the ends of justice. Nardelli v. Stamberg, 44 N.Y.2d 500, 502-03, 377 N.E.2d 975, 976, 406 N.Y.S.2d 443, 445 (1978). Allegations of ill will, spite or hatred are not needed. Id. The Complaint alleges that the motives behind the temporary order of protection and subsequent cases opened by the police and district attorney were to force the plaintiff to lie to the INS in order to protect the Russian mafia’s Scheme to gain Shipilina residency and citizenship, prevent the plaintiff from exposing some of the mafia's activities, stop his cooperation with the INS in Moscow and avoid the reopening of the Krasnodar criminal case. (Complaint 228, 234, 306, 307) In addition, malice can be inferred from the lack of probable cause, Loeb v. Teitelbaum, 77 A.D.2d 92, 432 N.Y.S.2d 487, 495 (2d Dep't 1980), which the Complaint alleges as stated in the preceding paragraph.

Enterprise movants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and Henning claim malicious prosecution requires allegation of "special injuries," but do not specify what they mean by that phrase, nor refer to any cases. The injuries for which malicious prosecution compensates includes harm to reputation and character, inconvenience and anxiety, Rosario v. Amalgamated Ladies Garment Union, 605 F.2d 1228, 1249-50 (2d Cir. 1979), cert. denied, 446 U.S. 919, 64 L.Ed.2d 273, 100 S.Ct. 1853, injury to feelings, counsel fees and expenses, Loeb v. Teitelbaum, 77 A.D.2d 92, 432 N.Y.S.2d 487, 496 (2d Dep't 1980), and economic losses, Miller v. City of NY, 90 A.D.2d 483, 454 N.Y.S.2d 551 (2d Dep't 1982). The Complaint alleges damages for counsel fees, anxiety, economic losses and harm to the plaintiff's reputation. (Complaint 313, 908, 909, 913, 907) Punitive damages are also recoverable. Nardelli v. Stamberg, 44 N.Y.2d 500, 503, 377 N.E.2d 975, 976, 406 N.Y.S.2d 443, 445 (1978).

The statute of limitations is one year from the termination of the judicial proceeding. CPLR 215(3). The proceeding that began with the issuance of a temporary order of protection followed by an investigation into the alleged violation of that order did not finally end until the Queens District Attorney determined there had been no violation and movant Henning "marked the case closed" on June 19, 2002. (Henning Affidavit ¶s 9, 10) This RICO complaint was filed on April 18, 2003, well within the one-year period.

To correct a misstatement by Enterprise movants Mundy and Petrovich, the Complaint does not allege March 2002 as the last month for them being members of the Russian mafia.

(Memorandum p 59-3) Movants Mundy and Petrovich are alleged to be continuing members of the mafia. (Complaint 32, 33) Besides, the Memorandum admits that Mundy continues his efforts to obtain residency for a mafia asset, movant Shipilina, who illegally entered the country and continues to violate US law. (Memorandum p 3-1)

(iv) Prima facie tort.

The plaintiff withdraws the prima facie tort cause of action.

Point IV: Short and plain statement

The Enterprise movants claim they cannot make heads or tails out of the Complaint because it is too long-winded and confusing. (Memorandum p 63-1) Yet they were able to file a 66 page, detailed memorandum in support of their motion to dismiss. That Memorandum shows they have done a pretty good job of understanding the allegations against them, which means the Complaint did its job of apprising them of the nature of the litigation and claims against them. Cater Constr. Co. v. Nischwitz, 111 F.2d at 973.

The movants reliance on Brown v. Califano, 75 F.R.D. 497 (D.D.C. 1977), is misplaced because, unlike in Brown v. Califano, the RICO Complaint in this action was not filed after seven nearly identical complaints had been brought over a period of seven years with each one having been dismissed by the district court and the dismissals affirmed by the Court of Appeals. See Brown v. District Unemployment Compensation Board, 411 F.Supp. 1001, 1002 (D.D.C. 1975)(this was the prior case in the series of nearly identical cases brought by the plaintiff Brown).

The plaintiff in this RICO action brought a prior divorce/annulment suit on advice of counsel and in response to movant Shipilina's obtaining an order of protection against the plaintiff and movant Mundy's threat of "difficult" divorce proceedings. (Complaint 239-42) In the divorce/annulment action the plaintiff made a motion to set the settlement aside based on duress and coercion. The plaintiff also petitioned the New York Family courts twice for an order of protection. The first in response to threats arranged by Mundy and Petrovich and made by Shipilina to the plaintiff that he faced death or physically injured at the hands of Russian mobsters if he did not lie to the INS in order to assure her obtaining residency and citizenship. (Complaint 236, 237, 247, 854) The judge handling the first petition essentially told the plaintiff to get lost on the order of protection, but issued a summons based on the petition that was merged into the divorce/annulment action. (Complaint 855, 247, 248) The second petition was in response to two telephone calls from Madison a.k.a. Pierre threatening harm to the plaintiff if he did not stop cooperating with the INS in Moscow and the prosecutor in Krasnodar. (Complaint 289, 318, 868) The New York state emotional distress action was filed for the procedural purpose of tolling the statute of limitations. That adds up to around three and a half lawsuits that are markedly different from the present RICO action.

Further, the allegations in this RICO suit are not comparable to those in Brown v. Califano. Here, members of the Russian mafia are alleged to have violated 18 USC 1962, inflicted emotional distress and engaged in abuse of process and malicious prosecution. The Complaint in Brown v. Califano included "nearly all theories of recovery known to the common law ... educational repressions ... tortures ... political surveillances ... wrongful death ... attempted homicide by euthanasia ... reverse discrimination ... and so on, and so forth." Brown v. Califano, 75 F.R.D. 497, 498. Now that sounds like a helter-skelter stream of consciousness,

The probable reason the accusations in this action seem overwhelming to the movants is because they have violated so many predicate acts, and it is these predicate acts that are the building blocks of RICO violations.

Moreover, the Complaint in this RICO action, unlike in Brown v. Califano, provides enough information as to places and dates to assist in serving the Complaint's function of apprising the defendants of the claims against them. For example, see the Complaint at 128, 130, 139, 141, 147, 150, 153, 155, 159, 165, 168, 169, 173, 174, 182, 187, 192, 197, 202, 205, 213, 214, 217, 218, 220, 223, 226, 227, 229, 233, 234, 235, 239, 240, 243, 245, 247, 256, 273, 275, 277, 278, 280, 282, 285, 286, 289, 293, 298, 306, 308, 318.

The court in Brown v. Califano also refused to allow the plaintiff leave to amend the complaint because "the plaintiff has shown that he is no stranger to the courts...." Id. at 499. The Enterprise movants argue that since the plaintiff in this RICO action is an attorney, he is "no stranger to the courts," and that fact, along with the length of the RICO Complaint, means it should be dismissed with prejudice. (Memorandum p 63-3, p 64-1) The reason the court in Brown v. Califano stated the plaintiff was "no stranger to the courts" was because that plaintiff had filed seven nearly identical suits in that same court. Brown v. District Unemployment Compensation Board, 411 F.Supp. 1001, 1002 (D.D.C. 1975). The repeat filing of similar actions in the same court finally led the Brown v. Califano court to forgo the ordinary remedy for noncompliance with Rule 8(a), which is dismissal with leave to amend. That is not even near the situation in this RICO action. The RICO complaint is not similar to the prior divorce/annulment or protective order actions, and it is the only action the plaintiff has brought against all the defendant members of the Russian mafia in any court. Therefore, if the Court finds the RICO complaint in noncompliance with Rule 8, the ordinary remedies of striking any portions that are redundant or immaterial, or dismissing the Complaint with leave to amend should apply.

Salahuddin v. Cuomo, 861 F.2d 40, 42 (2d Cir. 1988). Either remedy would serve the basic policy of the federal rules of having disputes settled on their merits rather than on procedural formalities. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ 2d 1281, p 524-25.

The application of Rules 8(a)(2) and 8(e)(1), which requires simple, concise and direct allegations, is to be made in light of the nature of the action. The degree of simplicity and conciseness depends on the subject matter, the type of claims presented and the number of the parties involved. Dublin Distribs. Inc. v. Edward & John Burke, Ltd., 109 F.Supp. 125, 126 n.1 (SDNY 1952). The more complex the litigation becomes, the greater the amount of detail that will appear in the pleadings. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ 2d 1281, p 521. A complaint charging RICO violations by a mafia will obviously recite numerous acts and circumstances. It will not be a short statement of a claim as the word “short” is used in pleading on a contract or in negligence. Rivioli Operating Corp. v. Loew’s Inc., 7 F.R.D. 219, 223 (WDNY 1947). The Complaint with its 915 paragraphs and 91 pages was necessary to plead the complex and intertwined workings of a segment of the Russian mafia, which is the type of organization RICO was meant to be used against.

Point V: The Enterprise movants are not entitled to have the plaintiff enjoined from access to the courts for harm done by the Russian mafia.

The three cases on which the Enterprise movants rely in their argument for an injunction against the plaintiff bear no factual resemblance to the circumstances surrounding this RICO action. In Lipin v. Nat’l Union Fire Ins. of Pittsburg, the plaintiff began with a case in state court, Lipin I, and during the appeal of its dismissal, moved on to the district court with three more successive suits asserting the same claims: Lipin II, Lipin III, and Lipin IV. Lipin v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. of Pittsburg, 202 F.Supp.2d 126, 130-31 (SDNY 2002). In Becker v. Dunkin' Donuts, the plaintiff brought 15 age discrimination suits in the Eastern District of New York and 17 in the Southern District. Becker v. Dunkin' Donuts, 665 F.Supp. 211, 216 (SDNY 1987). The plaintiff, Becker, was found to have made a business of filing job applications by the score and using a company's rejections to bring strike suits for age discrimination in which Becker extorted money from companies to settle the actions. Becker at 216. The third case, In Re Martin-Trigona, involved a law school graduate who had been denied admission to the Illinois bar on character grounds. In Re Martin-Trigona, 737 F.2d 1254, 1256 (2d Cir. 1984). The plaintiff Martin-Trigona had brought "literally hundreds of lawsuits, motions and miscellaneous pleadings, all but a small fraction of which lack any merit whatsoever." In Re Martin-Trigona at 1256.

In this RICO action, there has been only one complaint pending before the Court alleging criminal violations by a segment of the Russian mafia. There have been no other RICO or similar suits filed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's divorce/annulment suit involved different legal issues and was brought on advice of counsel in response to a temporary order of protection against the plaintiff and the threat by movant Mundy to institute "difficult" divorce proceedings. (Complaint 239-42). The two requests for protection orders in the state courts occurred before the plaintiff, with the assistance of an attorney friend, Jeffrey N. Drummond, discovered he had actually been the victim of RICO violations by the Russian mafia. The first request for an order of protection was also brought on advice of counsel and in response to threats of death and injury. (Complaint 236, 237, 854) The second request for a protection order was brought in response to two telephone threats. (Complaint 289, 318, 868) Only the state emotional distress case is redundant of the pendant emotional distress claim in this RICO action. And, as mentioned above, that state emotional distress action was filed to toll the statute of limitations.

In their Memorandum at p 65-2, the Enterprise movants say the plaintiff “is not represented by counsel and has caused needless expense to over sixty-three defendants across the world ....” Two of the three cases cited by the Enterprise movants involved pro se plaintiffs, so the movants’ not-so-subtle argument is that because the plaintiff is pro se, he is wasting everyone’s time just like the other pro se plaintiffs in Lipin and Becker. But on the other hand, at Memorandum p 64-1, the Enterprise movants object that “[g]iven ... the plaintiff is an attorney, his poor pleading practice is even more egregious,” which castigates the plaintiff for being an attorney. The plaintiff is willing to abide by either the lawyer or the pro se classification, but not by one and then the other whenever it serves the Enterprise movants’ ends. The plaintiff requests the Enterprise movants make up their collective mind.

The statement that the plaintiff has “caused needless expense to over sixty-three defendants across the world ...,” (Memorandum p 65-2) can only mean that the Enterprise movants are in touch with all the other member defendants; otherwise, how would they know about the other defendants’ expenses. And know this they do, since their lead lawyer signed the Memorandum, and by signing, the attorney certified that to the best of his knowledge or after reasonable inquiry, evidence will show that over sixty-three defendants have suffered expenses from the plaintiff bringing this action. See In re Frontier Ins. Sec. Litig., 172 F.R.D. 31, 44 (EDNY 1997). Included in those over sixty-three defendants, are those that the movants criticized the plaintiff for listing as unidentified defendants. (Memorandum p 2-2) Apparently these defendants are unidentified only to the plaintiff but not the Enterprise movants, or how else could the movants know of those defendants' expenses. In effect, the Enterprise movants affirmation of defendants' expenses is an admission that the worldwide defendants are at least in communication with the Enterprise movants. Discovery will be able to flesh out this admission that contradicts the Enterprise movants claims of disparate and unconnected defendants.

Finally, by enjoining the plaintiff from acting as a private attorney general under RICO, which is one of the statute's goals, Rotella v. Wood, 528 U.S. 549, 557, 145 L.Ed.2d 1047, 120 S.Ct. 1075 (2000), would not only deprive him of a judicial remedy against Russian mafia members but deprive other American men as well. The Enterprise movants' injunction would bar the plaintiff, a lawyer, from moving ahead with a class action RICO against the Russian mafia. At present, the plaintiff is using the web site been-scammed.com to locate 40 American men who have been harmed by the Russian mafia's effort to infiltrate and expand its operations in the US. These men will be the basis for a class action RICO suit against the Russian mob in which the plaintiff will be the lead attorney.

Filing proof of service is prima facie evidence that service was proper, and shifts to the defendant the burden of proving that service was defective. See Nolan v. City of Yonkers, 168 F.R.D. 140, 144 (SDNY 1995). The affidavit of service on Enterprise movant Petrovich was filed with the Court's clerk and is attached as Exhibit D. Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich claim that Petrovich is an independent contractor who does work for Kuba, Mundy & Associates (Memorandum p 3 n 5) but has never "maintained his place of business" at that law firm's address (Memorandum p 66-2). Petrovich's attorney has provided no proof that Petrovich was only an independent contractor—1099's would suffice, nor that Petrovich never maintained a place of business at the Kuba law firm. In fact, the attached affidavit of Alan Flacks, Exhibit E, states that when Mr. Flacks called the law firm on November 17, 2003 and ask for Petrovich, a female with the first name of Stephanie, told Mr. Flacks that Petrovich was no longer working at the office but from his home. Obviously, Petrovich had worked in the Kuba offices at some point in time.

Under New York CPLR 308(2), process can be served by delivering the papers to a person of suitable age at the defendant's "actual place of business" and followed with a mailing of the papers by first class US post to that address. Under New York State CPLR 308(6) a defendant's "actual place of business" is any location that the defendant publicly holds out as his place of business. Such a location includes the place where the defendant receives business correspondence although it need not be the same place where the defendant conducts business activities. See 1994 Report of the Adv.Comm. on Civ.Prac., reprinted in 2 McKinney's N.Y. Session Laws, 1994, at 3027, 3032.

The process server delivered and mailed the Complaint and summons to Petrovich at the Kuba, Mundy & Associates law firm at 321 Broadway, New York, NY. Exhibit D. On December 5, 2003, Mr. Flacks telephoned the Kuba, Mundy & Associates law firm and was told first by a gentlemen named Yi Feng and then by a female with the first name Stephanie that business correspondence for Petrovich should be sent to the law firm at 321 Broadway, New York, NY. Exhibit E, Flack's Affidavit ¶s 5-8. In addition, the envelope containing the papers that was mailed to Petrovich by the process server was not returned as undeliverable. Further, an envelope mailed to Petrovich at the law firm by first class US post on April 20, 2003, which contained the request for a waiver of summons and the Complaint, Exhibit A, was also not returned as undeliverable. Seems clear that Petrovich is receiving business correspondence at the Kuba, Mundy & Associates law firm; therefore, he has been served.

The plaintiff did not learn of the challenge to the service of Petrovich until receipt of the Enterprise movants' motion on Tuesday, Sept 23, 2003. As a precautionary measure, for the next two and a half months, the plaintiff and his process server, Gotham Process Service, have tried to physically locate movant Petrovich at his listed home address, 233 East 60th Street, New York, NY, but without success. Apparently, movant Petrovich is ducking service. Petrovich's home address was obtained from Verizon's reverse listing of the current telephone number provided for Petrovich by the Kuba, Mundy law firm and the current Manhattan White Pages. Since efforts to personally serve Petrovich have been thwarted, substitute service under CPLR 308(4) was made on Petrovich at his 60th street address.

The RICO statute at 18 USC 1965(b) states that the Court may summon a party when the "ends of justice require." As alleged in the Complaint, Petrovich is a perpetrator and co-conspirator along with other Enterprise movants in numerous predicate acts and RICO violations who should not be allowed to escape the ends of justice by ducking the plaintiff's efforts to serve him process. Therefore, if the Court concludes that Petrovich has not been served, the plaintiff requests the Court to provide a method that it deems sufficient for serving Petrovich.

2. Plaintiff's opposition to the motion to dismiss declaration by Enterprise movants Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lepofsky-CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers, and Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5.

Enterprise movants Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lepofsky-CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers, and Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5, are collectively referred to as "FlashDancers."

In addition to the plaintiff's memorandum in Section 1 above, this Section 2 addresses matters peculiar to the FlashDancers' Declaration. The Declaration cites to some but not all of the allegations concerning FlashDancers' criminal conduct. (FlashDancers Declaration ¶ 3) These allegations, which follow, include call-girl operations (Complaint 24, 25, 214), dispensing narcotics (Complaint 48), intimidation (Complaint 49, 250, 251), and threatening the plaintiff (Complaint 281, 282, 283, 284, 288-91, 318):

24. Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network ("Cybertech") operates a call girl and pornographic web sight that can be accessed through various addresses, including www.flashdancersnyc.com.

25. On information and belief, Cybertech is the Internet outlet used to sell sexual services for a number of topless lap-dancing clubs in New York.

48. On information and belief, Flash Dancers Managers 1 and 2 organize and assist in secretly slipping narcotics to unsuspecting customers at that club.

49. On information and belief, Flash Dancers Managers 3 to 5 supervise John Madison or Pierre's intimidation, tampering with government informants and use of physical force.

214. On or about August 2000, the plaintiff became suspicious of Member Alina Shipilina's involvement in prostitution when she began secretly contacting Flash Dancer customers over the plaintiff's telephone.

247. On March 14, 2001, the plaintiff had a complaint and summons, issued by a Queens, New York court, served on Member Alina Shipilina while giving lap-dances at Flash Dancers.

250. Member Alina Shipilina, joined by Flash Dancers Gangster 1, both physically barred the process server from leaving the club.

251. Members Alina Shipilina and Flash Dancers Gangster 1 tried to intimidate the process server into taking back the papers.

252. The process server refused and he was finally allowed to leave.

281. On information and belief, Member Alina Shipilina and Member Barry, Flash Dancers' Night Manager, or Flash Dancers Manager 3 arranged for Member Madison to make a threatening telephone call to the plaintiff.

282. On October 19th in the evening, a man using the name John Madison called the plaintiff's mobile telephone and in a threatening tone of voice left a message that warned the plaintiff against pursuing the legal proceedings against Member Alina Shipilina.

283. Under the circumstances, the plaintiff interpreted the threat as referring to the motion for a trial and that if he went ahead with the motion, Member Madison would cause the plaintiff physical harm.

284. The threatening telephone call made the plaintiff fearful for his physical safety, so he decided against making a motion for a trial and settled the case in November 2001.

288. On information and belief, Member Alina Shipilina and Member Barry, Flash Dancers' Night Manager, or Flash Dancers Manager 4 arranged for Member John Pierre, to make a threatening telephone call to the plaintiff.

289. On February 6, 2002, in the evening, a man using the name John Pierre called the plaintiff's mobile and left a threatening message warning the plaintiff: "...cease and desist with your actions against Alina Shipilina," "I know everything about you," "...you disgust me," "...I'm very much available," "You better get your act together...", "... you at this point in time have crossed several boundaries that cause for a lot of red flags to wave in the air...", and, "That's it —leave her alone! Have a nice day."

290. Under the circumstances, the exceedingly menacing tone of voice and text of the call made clear to the plaintiff that if he did not cease and desist cooperating with the INS in Moscow and the Krasnodar prosecutor, then serious physical harm would befall him.

291. On information and belief, Member Madison and Member Pierre are the same person whose real name is unknown to the plaintiff.

318. On March 27, 2002, in the evening, a man calling himself John Pierre telephoned the plaintiff and threatened him not to testify before the INS or try to reopen the Krasnodar criminal case.

Enterprise movants FlashDancers also fail to accurately summarize a number of the allegations concerning them. The Complaint at 471, 472, 474, 475, 477, 478 480, 481 contains the allegations of violations of RICO 1962(a)(b)(c) & (d) that FlashDancers avoids mentioning. In addition, they describe in their Declaration at ¶ 3 that the following allegations only identify domestic members of the Enterprise when the allegations do much more by tying FlashDancers to American Organized Crime Gang 1 and aver additional FlashDancers' crimes:

18. On information and belief, Jay-Jay Cabaret is a front for American Organized Crime Gang 1, the real owner and operator of the three topless clubs.

19. On information and belief, American Organized Crime Gang 1 operates a criminal conglomerate of prostitution, pornography, intimidation, immigration fraud, drug trafficking and money laundering through its topless clubs and the Internet site www.flashdancersnyc.com.

21. On information and belief, Lepofsky [CEO of Jay-Jay Cabaret] carries out the orders of American Organized Crime Gang 1 and acts as its front in order to obtain liquor licenses from the New York State Liquor Authority.

22. On information and belief, Flash Dancers is used by American Organized Crime Gang 1 for funding its criminal operations, laundering money, recruiting prostitutes, promoting prostitution, recruiting pornography starlets, dispensing narcotics and immigration fraud.

23. Barry is the night manager of Flash Dancers from Monday to Friday and, on information and belief, hires illegal aliens, promotes prostitution, arranges the use of physical force for intimidation, recruits lap-dancers for pornography distributed on www.flashdancersnyc.com and oversees money laundering, immigration fraud and the distribution and surreptitious administering of narcotics to customers.

FlashDancers also mistakenly say in ¶ 3 of their Declaration that allegations 402, 408-410 of the Complaint deal only with immigration fraud when they also allege white slavery and the importation of pornography.

FlashDancers object in their Declaration at ¶ 4 that the Complaint's allegations are "outrageous and scandalous," but those allegations only seek to describe FlashDancers' activities. They also object that their liability, if any, is limited to threatening telephone calls made to the plaintiff. (FlashDancers Declaration ¶ 6) RICO liability, however, is joint and several. Fleischhauer v. Feltner, 879 F.2d 1290, 1301 (6th Cir. 1989). If RICO plaintiffs were required to allege and subsequently prove the quantifiable amount of harm flowing from each member of a mafia organization, then the civil RICO statute would be superfluous.

3. Plaintiff's opposition to Enterprise movant Shipilina's motion to dismiss.

Enterprise movant Shipilina's motion papers contain nothing in addition to Enterprise movants Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich's memorandum of law. All she does is ride the general arguments put forth by them without specifically addressing any of the allegations citing the criminal statutes she violated either under RICO (Complaint 514-543) or other federal and state laws (Complaint 740-770). Nor does Enterprise movant Shipilina refer to any of the underlying factual allegations, probably as concessions to the proper standard that in a motion to dismiss the allegations are deemed true.

4. Plaintiff's opposition to Enterprise movant Paulsen's motion to dismiss.

In addition to the plaintiff's memorandum in Section 1 above, this Section 4 addresses matters peculiar to Enterprise movant Paulsen's motion papers.

Movant Paulsen's papers falsely state he "has never had any dealings with the other defendants." (Paulsen Motion to Dismiss Introductory paragraph) In a fifteen-minute telephone conversation with the plaintiff that began at 8:38pm on June 23, 2001, Enterprise movant

Paulsen admitted that in October 1998, member defendant Perlin introduced him to movant Shipilina as a person interested in marrying a foreigner. Paulsen further stated that he paid Shipilina for sex and to star in the pornography video he shot at Phodes Studio in Moscow (Complaint 377), that he imported the video into America (Complaint 378), that he switched to using Red Star models instead of Member Perlin's girls for such videos (Complaint 376), and that US Customs "gave him a hard time" about bringing in his videos (Complaint 380). Paulsen also omitted in his papers that he operates his business under the pseudonym of Wayne Williams. (Complaint 39)

Enterprise movant Paulsen does not specifically address any of the allegations citing the criminal statutes, including RICO, violated by him (Complaint 544-547). Nor does Enterprise movant Paulsen refer to any of the underlying factual allegations about him (Complaint 37, 38, 376-80), probably as a concession to the proper standard that in a motion to dismiss the allegations are deemed true.

5. Plaintiff's opposition to Enterprise movant Detective Henning's affidavit and memorandum of law.

In addition to the plaintiff's memorandum in Section 1 above, this Section 5 addresses matters peculiar to Enterprise movant Henning's affidavit and memorandum of law.

Enterprise movant Henning's affidavit is an interesting piece of misstatement and error. Henning says that the only time he talked with Enterprise movant Shipilina was on June 27, 2001 when she filed a complaint concerning the web site used to gather evidence in Russia for the plaintiff's divorce/annulment proceedings. (Henning Affidavit ¶s 2, 3) This is contradicted by Detective Henning's statement in a telephone call nine months later on March 27, 2002 when he told the plaintiff that he was going to be arrested because of a “recent” complaint made by Enterprise movant Shipilina. (Complaint 308, 309) “Recent” is not nine months earlier.

Henning goes on in his affidavit to say, “I contacted Roy Den Hollander and asked that he have his attorney contact me regarding the pending allegation by Ms. Shipilina.” (Henning Affidavit ¶ 5) Like a modern day reporter, Henning adeptly creates a false impression that hides the full truth. When Henning contacted the plaintiff, he told the plaintiff in no uncertain terms that the plaintiff was going to be arrested and to have his attorney contact Henning in order to arrange for the plaintiff’s surrender. That is a lot different than Henning’s euphemistic description.

Henning also says in ¶ 6 of his affidavit that after the telephone call to the plaintiff, he “never again heard from Mr. Hollander or his attorney.” That is false. The plaintiff’s initial attorney contacted Henning in late March to arrange for the surrender a month later. Then at a cost of $3500, the plaintiff hired the firm of Schuman, Abramson, Morak and Wolk. (Complaint 313) They contacted Enterprise movant Henning on April 22, 2002, a few days before the scheduled date for the arrest.

When Schuman, Abramson, Morak and Wolk contacted Henning, he did not even know what crime the plaintiff was going to be charged with when he surrendered in a few days. (Complaint 313) After the plaintiff’s attorneys enlightened Enterprise movant Henning on the law, Henning said he would refer the matter to the Queens District Attorney’s Computer Crimes Division, which he did on April 23, 2002. (Complaint 314, Henning Affidavit ¶ 8) This infers that Henning is disingenuous when he claims that he was unable to contact the Queens District Attorney’s office between June 27, 2001 and April 23, 2002 because of 9/11 and translation problems (Henning Affidavit ¶ 7). More likely, the call from the plaintiff’s lawyers on April 22 caused movant Henning to punt the case into the District Attorney's office. But to nail down the truth on this suspicious conduct requires discovery.

Enterprise movant Henning's affidavit further states the web site did not violate the previously dismissed order of protection, so he closed the case on June 19, 2002. (Henning Affidavit ¶s 9, 10) Did he call the plaintiff's attorneys with that information—no. Did he call the plaintiff in the early morning hours to tell him that—no. Why not? Probably because the threat of arrest would no longer be the club, the Russian mafia thought it was in order to keep the plaintiff quiet. But once again, that's an area for discovery. As an aside, the first time I heard that the case had been closed was when I read Henning's affidavit on October 11, 2003.

Enterprise movant Henning's memorandum of law argues two new points with respect to the pendant state claims against him: intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of process and malicious prosecution.

First, movant Henning argues that injury claims brought against New York City—assuming Detective Henning's alleged criminal conduct falls within his duties as an employee of New York City—have a statute of limitations of one year and 90 days after the occurrence of the event. New York's General Municipal law 50-I states the limitations period runs from “the happening of the event upon which the claim is based....” Movant Henning puts the date of the event of wrong doing at June 27, 2001 because that was, according to Henning, the detective's only interaction with Enterprise movant Shipilina, (Henning Affidavit ¶s 2, 3). The problem with this is that the plaintiff, not defendant Shipilina, is suing for tortious injury. Detective Henning's interaction with the plaintiff—not with defendant Shipilina—is what matters. As stated in the Complaint, Detective Henning called the plaintiff in the early morning hours of March 27, 2002 to inform him of his pending arrest (Complaint 308, 309). Detective Henning's affidavit states at ¶ 5 that he contacted the plaintiff, but does not state when. Interestingly, Henning recalls when he interacted with fellow Enterprise movant Shipilina, but not when he told the plaintiff he would have to surrender for arrest. Why is that? Maybe because the statute of limitations for New York City would not apply. If the wrong occurred when Detective Henning contacted the plaintiff on March 27, 2002, the filing of the Complaint on April 18, 2003 was well within the one year and 90 day deadline.

Movant Henning's second argument is that the pendant state actions against him should be dismissed because of failure to make a timely notice of claim, under N.Y. Gen. Mun. Law 50-e, that the plaintiff was going to sue Henning's employer, New York City. The plaintiff is not suing the City of New York, he is suing detective Henning. Henning is an employee of the City, but his alleged illegal actions of receiving bribes or rewards that led to the intentional torts are not within the scope of his employment, so the City is not the real party in interest—Henning is. See Longin v. Kelly, 875 F.Supp. 196, 201-03 (SDNY 1995).

Enterprise movant Henning does not specifically address the Complaint's allegations against him for the predicate acts of tampering with a witness and wire fraud and the substantive RICO violations (Complaint 556-559). Nor does movant Henning specifically address the allegations of official misconduct, accepting a bribe or reward, aggravated harassment, coercion, intimidation, obstructing an INS proceeding and various conspiracies (Complaint 778-783).

Conclusion

The plaintiff requests the Enterprise movants' motion to dismiss and their request for an injunction be denied so that the plaintiff who is among "[t]hose who have been wronged by organized crime should at least be given access to a legal remedy." Sedima, 473 U.S. at 487.

Alan Flacks, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. On November 17, 2003, I telephoned the law offices of Kuba, Mundy & Associates at the number 212 732 5050, listed on the firm's letterhead for its office at 321 Broadway, New York, NY 10007.
2. I spoke with a paralegal whose first name was Svetlana, which she said translates as Stephanie into English.
3. Svetlana told me that Peter Petrovich was no longer working at the office because he now did his work out of his home.
4. Svetlana told me I could contact Petrovich at 212 829 1105.
5. On December 5, 2003, at 11:40am, I once again telephoned Kuba, Mundy & Associates at 212 732 5050 the number listed for their office at 321 Broadway, New York, NY.
6. I first spoke with a man named Yi Feng.

7. I told Mr. Feng that I had some documents for Peter Petrovich, and asked where to send them to which Mr. Feng responded they should be sent to the law firm at 321 Broadway, New York, NY.
8. I next talked to a female paralegal named Stephanie, who confirmed that business correspondence for Peter Petrovich should be sent to Kuba, Mundy & Associates at 321 Broadway, New York, NY.

Addendum to Plaintiff's Memorandum of Law In Opposition to Certain Defendants' Motions to Dismiss for the purpose of Addressing Additional Issues Belatedly Raised by Defendant Cybertech Internet Solutions

6. (Number continuation from main memorandum) Plaintiff's addendum memorandum in opposition to Enterprise movant Cybertech Internet Solutions' letter to the Court in which Cybertech joined the Kuba, Mundy & Associates motion to dismiss but also raised additional issues specific to Cybertech.

Preliminary Statement

On March 29, 2004, defendant Cybertech Internet Solutions ("Cybertech"), through its attorney David L. Feinberg, finally responded to the complaint by requesting dismissal of this RICO action in a letter to the Court. The letter came more than eight months after Cybertech was served on June 16, 2003, Exhibit A, and three months after being prodded into action by the plaintiff's application for default in December 2003.

Cybertech was initially listed in the complaint as "Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network," which Mr. Feinberg gratuitously commented in his letter was an "absurdity," apparently meaning the name Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network did not accurately identify his client. Feinberg Letter, March 29, 2004, ¶ 1, Exhibit B. But Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network is the name under which Cybertech operates web sites for selling prostitutes and providing pornography. For example, Enterprise movant Cybertech runs the FlashDancers web site at www.flashdancers.com. At the bottom of FlashDancers introduction window it states, "Web design and hosting by Cybertech Internet Solutions.” Exhibit C, p. 2. Entering the FlashDancers site as a member reveals the options offered by Enterprise movant Cybertech. Exhibit D. Included in the sorted services is “Cybertech Internet Strip Club Escorts” through which prostitutes can be hired for what are euphemistically called “consultations.” Exhibit E. Enterprise movant Cybertech even recruits prostitutes through the Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network. Exhibit F. For customers to choose a girl, Enterprise movant Cybertech uses its VIP Escort web site that provides pictures of the ladies—some with their faces blurred out, Exhibit G, and prices “very comparable to other agencies in this industry ... designed to attract clients of a higher caliber....” Exhibit H.

By Mr. Feinberg’s letter to the Court, Enterprise movant Cybertech joined the motion to dismiss submitted on September 19, 2003 by Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich. Mr. Feinberg’s letter came three months after the plaintiff had already served his answering memorandum of law on December 19, 2003. Mr. Feinberg’s delayed response and his raising of additional issues “[w]ith respect to specific allegations made against” Cybertech made this addendum memorandum necessary. Feinberg Letter Exhibit B, ¶ 3.

Argument

In addition to Section 1 of the plaintiff’s memorandum of law filed December 19, 2003, this argument addresses matters peculiar to Mr. Feinberg’s March 29, 2004 letter to this Court, Exhibit B.

Mr. Feinberg makes an inaccurate statement in paragraph two of his letter where he says the complaint “has made no allegations against Defendant Cybertech that fall outside of RICO....” RICO violations require the commission of predicate acts that are specified in 18 USC 1961. The complaint cites the predicate acts allegedly engaged in by all the defendants in ¶s 466 to 683. But the complaint also alleges other criminal acts that are not predicate acts in ¶s 684 to 853 and, therefore, in Mr. Feinberg’s words, “fall outside of RICO.” The complaint in ¶s 684-690 makes allegations of non-predicate criminal acts by Enterprise movant Cybertech that include promoting prostitution, see Exhibits E, F, G, and H, making material misstatements to obtain visas for alien prostitutes, employing prostitutes not lawfully admitted to work in the U.S., violating Federal and State tax laws and conspiring to violate Federal and State laws. Perhaps Mr. Feinberg confused allegations of non-predicate acts with pendent state law causes of action in the complaint at ¶s 894-899. There are no pendant state law claims against Enterprise movant Cybertech at the present.

The predicate acts alleged against Enterprise movant Cybertech include:

- White slavery in violation of 18 U.S.C. 2421 and importing aliens for immoral purposes in violation of 8 U.S.C. 1328. (Complaint 466)

Fraud and the misuse of visas in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1546 by intentionally making material misrepresentations in order to maintain their supply of Russian prostitutes. (Complaint 467)

- Aiding and abetting fraud and the misuse of visas in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1546 by assisting Russian females to intentionally make material misrepresentations. (Complaint 468)
- Failure to report to the INS alien prostitutes working through the Internet violates 18 U.S.C. 2424. (Complaint 469)
- Importation by mail or otherwise for sale and distribution of pornography violates 18 U.S.C. 1461, 1462 & 1465. (Complaint 470)

In the third paragraph of Mr. Feinberg's letter he wrongly says, "I would like to stress to this Court that Cybertech has no employment relationship with any of the other Defendants...." If that were true, then why is Cybertech listed as the host of FlashDancers web site. Exhibit C. Sounds like an "employment relationship" to me. Even so, such a rebuttal of Mr. Feinberg's statement of purported fact really belongs at trial or following discovery in a summary judgment motion—not in a motion to dismiss. It is not the Court's function at this stage of the proceedings to weight the evidence that might be presented at trial; instead, the Court should merely determine whether the complaint is legally sufficient. Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639 (2d Cir. 1980). And legally sufficient means, "[a] complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim 'unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.'" Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078, *15, 16 (SDNY July 16, 2003, J. Mukasey)(citing Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46, 2 L.Ed.2d 80, 78 S.Ct. 99 (1957)).

Mr. Feinberg goes on in paragraph three making other purportedly factual statements that he asks the Court to take as evidence just because he is making the assertions. That is a unique basis for deciding a motion to dismiss: if the defendant's attorney says in a letter that his client did not do the acts alleged, then the complaint should be dismissed. Such a rule would have the benefit of quickly clearing a court's docket, but the impact on justice would be pretty dismal.

Although he does not say such, Mr. Feinberg may also be requesting summary judgment based on his assertions in paragraph three. This would call for the application of a standard that when a defendant's attorney says his client did not do what is alleged, that is enough to show there are no genuine issues of material facts and the defendant should prevail on the law. Exhibits C, D, E, F, G and H alone create the basis for a reasonable inference that Enterprise movant Cybertech peddles pornography and prostitutes and is associated with Enterprise movant FlashDancers in providing such. I doubt the word of an attorney would be good enough to rebut that evidence in the minds of jurors. But even if it would, discovery still has not occurred, and it is that procedure along with subsequent summary judgment motions that define disputed facts and issues and dispose of unmeritorious claims, Sweirkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 512, 152 L.Ed.2d 1, 122 S.Ct. 992 (2002).

For the above reasons and those contained in the plaintiff's December 19, 2003 memorandum of law, the plaintiff requests that the Court deny Cybertech's request for dismissal.

I. Preliminary Statement

A. Litigation of Personal Destruction

Throughout its memorandum, the Bank of Cyprus arrogantly and insultingly interjects ad hominem remarks that have no bearing on the issues of a motion to dismiss by foisting advice and criticism it has no right to make. For example, “He [the plaintiff] must look else where for the cause of his misfortune, including to himself.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-1); “The match seems not to have been made in heaven...” (id. p 1-2); the calculated use of the word “believe” in place of “allege” (id. p 1-2); and “Plaintiff’s beliefs are unbelievable,” (id. p 2-1). Such subjective and snide remarks are meant to taint the plaintiff. It’s a subtle form of litigation by personal destruction, but just as malicious in its attempt to mock a party and distract the Court. The plaintiff, therefore, requests the Court admonish the Bank of Cyprus and other Enterprise movants who engage in the same, shared strategy.

B. Nomenclature

This memorandum of law (Plaintiff Opposition Bank) answers the Bank of Cyprus’ memorandum in support of its separate motion to dismiss (Defendant Bank Memo.). Other defendants, who have appeared in this case, except for Anastasia and Nicolay Vasilyeva, have joined in a joint memorandum in support of dismissal (Defendants Joint Memo.) and a joint reply memorandum (Defendants Joint Reply). Those defendants are Flash Dancers Topless Club; Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.; Lepofsky-CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.; Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers; Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 (collectively “FlashDancers”); Cybertech Internet Solutions; Kuba, Mundy & Associates; Mundy; Petrovich; Shipilina; Paulsen; and Henning. The defendants FlashDancers, Cybertech, Shipilina, Paulsen and Henning have also submitted short papers concerning issues specific to them in their motions to dismiss and replies; Cybertech did not submit a separate reply. The plaintiff submitted an opposition memorandum (Plaintiff Opposition Memo.)

to defendants' joint memorandum and the short papers submitted by FlashDancers, Cybertech, Shipilina, Paulsen and Henning. The plaintiff has also served a motion to strike extraneous material from defendants' motions to dismiss papers (Plaintiff Strike Motion) and defendants have submitted an opposition memorandum.

In this memorandum, the term "Enterprise movants" or "movants" refers to all the defendants that are moving for a motion to dismiss. When this memorandum refers to fewer than all the Enterprise movants, the term "Enterprise movant" is followed by the person or persons' names, such as Enterprise movant Bank of Cyprus, or the memorandum only states the movants name, such as Bank of Cyprus or Bank. Other defendants in this action who are not presently moving to dismiss are collectively referred to as "other mafia defendants" or individually as "mafia defendant" followed by the person or persons' names.

Cites to the Bank of Cyprus' memorandum of law are in parentheses stating "Defendant Bank Memo." followed by the page number and a hyphen that indicates the paragraph on that page whether a full paragraph or not. For example, (Defendant Bank Memo. p 4-1) refers to page 4, the first group of lines on that page. Cites to the Complaint are in parentheses stating "Complaint" followed by the paragraph number. For example, (Complaint ¶ 633) refers to the numbered allegation 633, which deals with the Bank of Cyprus laundering money.

The numbers and letters used for denoting sections in this memorandum follow those used in the Bank of Cyprus memorandum to make it easier for comparison.

The plaintiff uses the term "Russian mafia" to mean the Russian International Crime Organization or the "Enterprise" as stated in paragraph one of the Complaint. The "Russian mafia" includes those identified as Russian Mafiosi in the media and by law enforcement agencies; the targets of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's unit on Russian organized crime; various Russian, Chechen, American, Cypriot and Mexican gangsters along with those of other nationalities; assorted

Chechen Islamic terrorists; and the more than thirty Russian gangs now operating in the US, most notably New York, Miami, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver, Robert I. Friedman, Red Mafiya: How the Russian Mob Has Invaded America, p. xix-xx, Little Brown & Company (2002).

The defendants in this action comprise part of the Russian mafia. (Complaint 15)

C. “We don’t drink your Kool-Aid here.”

The Bank of Cyprus has joined with other Enterprise movants in a strategy that is as clear as it is improper for a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss. Under the guise of motions to dismiss, they present in their memoranda of law and exhibits allegations of fact that belong in answers, or allege findings of facts that belong in summary judgment motions. In doing so, the Bank and other Enterprise movants hope to obtain a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal by having the Court consider extraneous material as part of the Complaint even though the plaintiff did not rely on such. Such a ploy circumvents the plaintiff’s opportunity to refute the movants’ assertions and claims that motions for a judgment on the pleadings or summary judgment provide. Very tricky, this Star Chamber type of procedure that eviscerates the plaintiff’s due process rights to reply to counterclaims, or move to reply to answers and amend the complaint, or to a reasonable opportunity to make his record before the Court.

The Bank of Cyprus and other movants use a two-pronged assault to achieve their aim of circumventing the plaintiff’s rights. On one flank, they try to impeach the credibility of the plaintiff with character assassination. Throw enough mud and maybe some will stick, which, as in the Spanish Inquisition, includes claims the plaintiff is guilty of alleged misdeeds because he has not proven his innocence through his Complaint or memorandum of law. That’s a bizarre function for the papers in a motion to dismiss, not to mention a judicial proceeding in a non-feudal country.

On the other flank, movants try to impeach the Complaints’ allegations and the plaintiff’s memorandum of law by using numerous misrepresentations, mischaracterizations, prevarications, half-truths, edited quotes, dissembling and transposing quotes concerning one issue to a different issue.<sup>1</sup>

For instance, the Enterprise movants claim—over and over—that with the following statement: “... Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich claim their only connection with the defendants in this case is with Enterprise movant Shipilina. I don’t know that and neither does this Court because there has been no discovery,” (Plaintiff Opposition Memo. p 29-2) I withdrew the Complaint’s allegations against those defendants as being members of the Enterprise. I did not. The movants say these sentences are admissions that no connection exists between Kuba, Mundy, Petrovich and the Enterprise—they are not. Enterprise movants will twist my words, as they do frequently, and exploit any unskillfully composed turn of a phrase. They make overly much of an inartfully drafted paragraph in their apparent adherence to the adage that by making a misrepresentation often enough, it may be believed. But by those quoted sentences; I was not withdrawing my allegations against Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich as members of the Enterprise (Complaint 27-34), which is evident by a later paragraph (Plaintiff Opposition Memo. p 102-2) the movants ignore, “The evidence of the full extent of the connections is within the Enterprise movants knowledge and will come out in discovery.” My Complaint’s RICO allegations stand. It’s not the defendants’ version of the facts that are assumed true in a motion to dismiss but those alleged in the Complaint.

The Bank of Cyprus and other movants are simply trying to detour the Court away from Rule 12(b)(6)’s question of law into a landscape of conflicting fact allegations where only alleged members of the Russian mafia are to be believed even though their statements lack evidentiary foundation or are untested by cross examination. For example, the Bank flatly claims an ultimate fact: “Plaintiff’s beliefs are unbelievable.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-1) With such pronouncements of so-called facts, the Enterprise movants hope to slip by under the cloak of a motion to dismiss to their goal of obtaining a ruling that would really be either (1) a judgment on the pleadings without the plaintiff having the opportunity to respond to movants’ answers simply because there are no formal answers, although there are before the Court the allegations that the movants would have included in their answers only those are now found in movants’ memoranda of law. Or (2) a summary judgment in which the Court views movants’ memoranda’s assertions as findings of fact that the plaintiff had no opportunity to rebut because the movants brought motions to dismiss. The Bank and other movants appear to have adopted the old Russian folk saying, “the law is like a wagon axle, it goes in any direction you want to pull it.” That might have been true under the Communists and Tsars but not under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. “Whether a complaint states a cause of action on which relief could be granted is a question of law....” Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682, 90 L.Ed. 939, 66 S.Ct. 773, 776 (1946).

The plaintiff requests the Court not accept or consider any extraneous material in deciding the motions to dismiss. Extraneous material is information that the plaintiff did not rely on in bringing suit. As the Second Circuit stated, “[W]e reiterate here that a plaintiff’s reliance on the terms and effect of a document in drafting the complaint is a necessary prerequisite to the court’s consideration of the document on a dismissal motion; mere notice or possession is not enough.” Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc., 282 F.3d 147, 153 (2d Cir. 2002). If the Court, however, decides to go the route of conversion, then the plaintiff requests notice and a reasonable opportunity to show that genuine issues of material facts do exist. Davis v. Bryan, 810 F.2d 42, 45 (2d Cir. 1987) (citations omitted). In such event, the plaintiff preserves his right to appeal any possible conversion decision at the appropriate time.

D. RICO—Not Domestic Relations

The allegations against the Bank of Cyprus are for violating RICO through its conduct of engaging in financial transactions involving money from illegal Enterprise activities in order to hide the origin and ownership of the funds and avoid U.S. reporting requirements in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1956(a)(1)(B)(i) & (ii); transferring funds from illegal Enterprise activities in order to hide the origin and ownership of the money and avoid U.S. reporting requirements in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1956(a)(2)(B)(i) & (ii); and using international facilities to distribute the proceeds from unlawful Enterprise activities in aid of a racketeering enterprise under 18 U.S.C. 1952. (Complaint ¶¶ 633-37)

The Complaint does not allege the Bank culpable for errant matchmaking as the Bank's memorandum infers with "Defendants did not marry Ms. Shipilina. Plaintiff did. Defendants did not divorce her. Plaintiff did." (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-1) True, it would have been better them than me, but that's not what the Bank is accused of doing. The Complaint alleges the Bank furthers the Russian mafia's Scheme of infiltrating and expanding the mob's activities in America by laundering the illegal funds made by mafia prostitutes, pimps, pornographers and pushers. (See Complaint ¶¶ 2, 13, 15) The Bank's marriage to the underworld of the former Soviet Union clearly produces heavenly benefits in the form of lucrative profits. A divorce between these powerful entities seems unlikely unless the purpose of RICO is fulfilled in eradicating organized crime, which is a "highly sophisticated, diversified, and widespread activity that annually drains billions of dollars from America's economy by unlawful conduct ... ," Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 496, 146 L.Ed.2d 561, 120 S.Ct. 1608, 1611(2000)(citing Organized Crime and Control Act of 1970, Pub.L. 91-452, 84 Stat. 922). Such a parting of the ways would be fortunate, not just for the plaintiff, but others victimized by the Russian mob. (Complaint ¶ 874(b, d, j, k))

The Bank of Cyprus complains that a RICO suit with over sixty defendants residing on three continents in this age of a global economy and the crime that preys on it requires dismissal because it is not plausible. (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-2) If anything, the suit responds to the business acumen of modern day organized crime and how far and deep it reaches. The Enterprise in this case consists of domestic and foreign corporations, partnerships, individuals, government officials, law firms, organized crime gangs (including American, Russian and Chechen) and an Islamic terrorist and crime clan, (Complaint ¶ 11), working together as one big extended family to maximize and protect profits. The defendants in this RICO action comprise relatively few in the overall web of the Russian mafia.

In seeking a dismissal, the Bank even belittles the harm allegedly done to the plaintiff by the Russian mob, calling it a “personal misfortune common to half of the population....” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-1) I would not put the number anywhere that high, but the statement does indicate the Bank possesses information concerning other victims of the Russian mafia. Regardless of the Bank’s effort at denigration, the Complaint alleges harm to the plaintiff’s business and financial interests, (Complaint ¶¶ 900-907), which does “pertain to a particular individual,” the definition for “personal” in the American Heritage Dictionary, Second College Edition, p 925, definition 1. The Bank, however, might be using “personal” in the sense of “personal injury,” Black’s Law Dictionary, 8th Ed., p 1179. The complaint does not request recovery for personal injuries. Still, the Bank seems compelled to provide legal advice to the plaintiff on just that issue when it states, “he must seek a personal recovery.” The Bank then goes on to provide legal advice to the Court by stating it “should facilitate this recovery by dismissing the within Complaint with prejudice.” I am unaware of such a legal standard that calls for the dismissal of a RICO suit because it will in some mysterious fashion aid in the recovery for personal injury, especially when the Complaint clearly states the harm to the plaintiff from the Russian mafia’s Scheme was to his business and financial interests. Perhaps the Bank's real intent was to personally belittle the plaintiff for seeking from the Court redress of the harm caused by the Enterprise.

The Bank's tactics copycat other Enterprise movants in their continuing and pervasive ploy to create a heightened standard for the plaintiff's allegations when the Bank states the plaintiff "has not and can not (sic) show that the Bank caused his loss," (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-1, emphasis added). "Show" means to make clear by evidence or to prove, Black's Law Dictionary, 8th Ed. p 1413, but the purpose of a motion to dismiss is not to assay the weight of the evidence that might be offered, Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639-40 (2d Cir. 1980).

By allowing the case to proceed, the Court can prevent more than a measure of injustice to the plaintiff.

II. Statement of Facts

The Bank of Cyprus has picked up on the objection, often repeated by other Enterprise movants, that the plaintiff has filed papers that are too long.<sup>2</sup> (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-2) The Complaint is only so long as necessary to provide fair notice of the claims against the movants. The more complex the litigation becomes, the greater the amount of information that will appear in the pleadings. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ 2d 1281, p 521.

Complaining about length is just one of the movants many ploys. The Bank's characterization of the Complaint as alleging the defendants "combined to cause the marriage of Plaintiff to Alina Shipilina and their subsequent divorce" (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-2) is reminiscent of and just as misleading as the other movants asserting the Complaint alleges they all banded together in order to specifically target the plaintiff for exploitation (Defendants Joint Memo. p 48-3). "Where a racketeering enterprise intends no specific harms to any particular individual, but causes harm by the creation of substantial risk of harm, the victim injured by that enterprise's harm may have standing....” Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d 366, 376 (2d Cir. 2003). Each defendant has its place in furthering the Russian mafia's Scheme to infiltrate its assets into hard currency markets, keep them there and make lots of money doing so. (Complaint ¶¶ 2, 13, 14) Some use narcotics and prostitutes to create fraudulent marriages; some engage in immigration fraud, white slavery, importing pornography, bribery; some traffic in drugs; some use coercion, intimidation, murder-for-hire, perjury and official misconduct to protect the Enterprise; and others maximize profits with tax evasion and, as alleged, launder money with the Bank of Cyprus while some engage in various combinations of those criminal acts. (Complaint ¶¶ 19, 21-38, 40-42, 46-52, 54-57, 59-62, 64-69, 71, 73-78, 80-89, 91-104, 106-110, 112-115, 117-120, 122-127) But all the defendants further the Enterprise's Scheme.

The Bank dismisses such criminal conduct as merely “colorful.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-2) Perhaps the Bank does not consider the Russian mafia or organized criminals in general as a threat to civilized societies, but Congress does. The impact of organized crime is to “weaken the stability of the Nation's economic system...threaten the domestic security, and undermine the general welfare of the Nation and its citizen.” Beck, 529 U.S. at 496 (quoting the Organized Crime Control Act of 1970, Pub.L. 91-452, 84 Stat. 922, 923).

Another Bank ploy is the use of misrepresentations, such as claiming the service of the Complaint was defective. (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2 n 1) The Bank was served in accordance with the Hague Convention on Service of Judicial and Extra Judicial Documents and as directed by the Cypriot Consul General. Exhibit A The Bank gives no specifics for its claim of defective service. All it offers the Court is a haughty statement that “the Bank seeks decision on the merits to vindicate its professional and commercial reputation ... not a dismissal on mere procedural grounds.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2, n 1, p 3-3) Since “merits” means “the substantive consideration to be taken into account in deciding a case, as opposed to ... procedure,” Black’s Law Dictionary, 8th Ed. p 1010, and a Rule 12(b)(6) motion is procedural: “Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ... cover the procedural aspects of civil litigation in the United States district courts...,” Fed. R. Civ. P. 18 U.S.C. 1 to 11, Explanation, p v., then the Bank must agree with the plaintiff that its motion to dismiss should be denied; otherwise, there will be no decision on the merits and no vindication for the Bank.

Keeping cadence with other Enterprise movants, the Bank objects the Complaint is “nonspecific.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-3, p 3-2) The Complaint alleges the Bank is intricately involved with Russian mafia activities by knowingly transferring some of the mob’s revenues from illegal activities in order to facilitate tax evasion, conducting financial transactions with mob money in order to disguise the source and ownership of the funds and aid in avoidance of U.S. reporting requirements, using Bank transactions to promote illegal activities and employing the international telephone and wiring system to distribute Russian mafia revenues into other overseas accounts. (Complaint 101-103, 456-458, 633-637, 682, 683 and 827-830). Sounds pretty specific, and a lot more harmful than the “unfortunate affair” such activities make up, which is how the Bank of Cyprus patronizingly considers them. (Defendant Bank Memo. p 2-3)

Furthermore, allegations should be set forth in the pleadings in general terms. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: 2d Civ 1281 p 519. Allegations are restricted to the task of general notice giving while the deposition-discovery process serves the “vital role in the preparation for trial.... for ascertaining information as to the existence or whereabouts of facts, relative to [the] issues.” Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 501, 91 L.Ed. 451, 67 S.Ct. 385, 388 (1947). A claimant is not required to set out in detail the facts on which he bases his claims.” Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47, 2 L.Ed.2d 80, 78 S.Ct. 99, 103 (1957). In Conley, the Supreme Court rejected the defendants’ argument that dismissal was proper because “the complaint failed to set forth specific facts to support its general allegations....” Conley at 47. Besides, lack of specific detail should be handled by a motion for a more definite statement. Swierkiewiz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 514, 152 L.Ed.2d 1, 122 S.Ct. 992, 998 (2002); Porter v. Karavas, 157 F.2d 984, 986 (10th Cir. 1946).

Still, the Bank insists on detail and allegedly provides some of its own. It’s affidavits claim it does not engage in any “financial transactions” at its 80 Broad Street office. (Defendant Bank Memo. p 3 n 2) But makes no mention that at least one public hotel in the Wall Street area advertises its proximity to the Bank’s Broad Street office as a plus for its hotels guests, Exhibit B, which raises the question of just what type of business is none there. Moreover, the Bank is again invoking the Enterprise movants’ strategy to use a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to effectively obtain a judgment on the pleadings or a summary judgment by submitting extraneous material, which is also disingenuous. The Sofianou affidavit at ¶ 3 creates the false impression the Bank is a minor international player even though it provides global Internet and telephone banking services that include financial transactions, such as money transfers, and, through a wholly owned subsidiary, CISCO, operates a brokerage and manages investment funds. Exhibit C Such an electronic global reach must make it difficult for the Bank to “know its clients” as Sofianou declares at ¶ 3. The affidavits of Kypri and Hadjimitis at ¶ 3 claim a search of “all relevant Bank [of Cyprus, Ltd.] records.” The Bank of Cyprus, Ltd is just part of the Bank of Cyprus Group, which also includes Bank of Cyprus Mutual Funds Ltd, CISCO and other legal entities. Exhibit D Did the search also include those since movant Shipilina has a Global Equity Fund account. (Complaint ¶ 450) The Bank’s affidavits also omit it is the leading financial institution in the banking and tax haven of Cyprus, has procedures for keeping secret the real owners of an enterprise, maintains a branch in the offshore center of the Channel Islands, runs an office of “intense activity” in Moscow, and has over 2300 correspondent relationships mostly with international banking institutions. Exhibit E

Cyprus’ “banking and corporate secrecy, little or no taxes, and simplified incorporation procedures have made it easy for ... terrorist groups, and organized crime groups to ... launder funds.” U.S. International Crime Threat Assessment. But all this is extraneous material for a Rule 12(b)(6) motion and more appropriately addressed in discovery, Hickman, 329 U.S. 495, 501.

In addition to mixing up pleading with discovery, the Bank confuses an allegation against movant Shipilina as one against the Bank. (Complaint ¶ 450) The Bank’s chivalrous act of spending time, money and effort to aid movant Shipilina with two affidavits must be greatly appreciated by her, but raises the question as to why the Bank would try to help a person it considers is just one of many “disparate” defendants. (Defendant Bank Memo. p 1-2) Actually, it looks more like a family member helping out one to whom it is joined at the pocketbook. The Bank’s affidavits that refute the allegations against movant Shipilina in the Complaint at ¶¶ 450, 451, 452, 540 and 767 raise more questions than they answer, which can only be resolved in discovery.

After magnanimously assisting a fellow “disparate” movant, the Bank states, “Nor has the Bank ever done business in New York with the plaintiff or any defendant.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 3-2) The plaintiff never alleged he did any business with the Bank. But the real purpose behind the Bank’s statement is to improperly interject this so-called fact into a motion to dismiss. A motion to dismiss raises only an issue of law, Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: 2d Civ 1357 p 303, not of facts. Other Enterprise movants do the same thing as though they were in the principal’s office or state court trying to argue the factual righteousness of their cause whenever they open their mouths rather than following the proper procedure. There’s a time and place for everything. Trying to three card monte so-called facts before the Court on a motion to dismiss is procedurally incorrect. The facts will be determined through discovery. Hickman at 501.

I am not sure what Counsel for the Bank means by saying the Complaint is “structurally flawed, fatally so.” Sounds more relevant to a building construction action.

III. Argument

A. The Complaint States a RICO Cause of Action Against the Bank of Cyprus

The Bank of Cyprus asserts knowledge that only the Russian mafia and movant Shipilina could possess: “The dispute, if there is one, is between Plaintiff and his ex-wife. Organized Crime did not cause Plaintiff’s misfortune.” How is it that the Bank knows the Russian mafia did not cause the plaintiff’s alleged harm? Is the Bank omnipresent or perhaps, more tellingly, on intimate terms with the Russian mafia.

The Bank further objects to allegations in the Complaint as “stigmatizing,” “unsupported” and “conclusory.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 3-3) The Bank, just as other Enterprise movants so often do, fails to state the specific allegations to which it refers. Perhaps the movants want the Court to do their work for them. Anyway, “[a]s for stigma, a civil RICO proceeding leaves no greater stain than do a number of other proceedings.” Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 492, 87 L.Ed.2d 346, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3283 (1985). And as for “unsupported,” the operative definition for the word “support” is “to furnish corroborating evidence,” American Heritage Dictionary, Second College Edition, p 1222. “It is a familiar rule of pleading ... that evidence by which an allegation is sought to be established need not be pleaded.... Such matters [of evidence], however, are for proof and we doubt the propriety, much less the necessity of their allegation.” Cater Constr. Co. v. Nischwitz, 111 F.2d 971, 973 (7th Cir. 1940).

Under the “conclusory” opprobrium, the Bank falls into step with the other movants by objecting that the Complaint’s allegations provide “[n]o factual detail,” are “factually groundless” and therefore “conclusory.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 3-1, 2, 3; p 7-3) But “[w]hether these charges [in the complaint] be called ‘allegations of fact’ or ‘mere conclusions of the pleader,’ we hold that they must be taken into account in deciding whether the [plaintiff] is entitled to have its case tried.” U.S. v. Employing Plasterer’s Ass’n, 347 U.S. 186, 188, 98 L.Ed. 618, 74 S.Ct. 452, 454 (1954). For “the ancient distinction between “facts” and “conclusions” is no longer significant.” Oil, Chem. & Atomic Workers Int’l Union v. Delta Ref. Co., 277 F.2d 694, 697 (6th Cir. 1960)(citing U.S. v. Employing Plasterer’s Ass’n, 347 U.S. 186, 188). The plaintiff need only give the defendants notice of the claims. See Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intel. & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 122 L.Ed.2d 517, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 1163 (1993). “A complaint that complies with the federal rules of civil procedure cannot be dismissed on the ground that it is conclusory or fails to allege facts. The federal rules require (with irrelevant exceptions) only that the complaint state a claim not that it plead the facts if true would establish ... that the claim was valid.” Higgs v. Carver, 286 F.3d 437, 439 (7th Cir. 2002)(Posner, J.)(citation omitted). And “what may be insufficient in New York courts need not necessarily be insufficient” in Federal court. Mueller v. Rayon Consultants, 170 F.Supp 555, 558 (S.D.N.Y. 1959). The pleader need only “disclose adequate information as the basis of his claim for relief as distinguished from a bare averment that he wants relief and is entitled to it.” Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ 2d 1216, p 165 (citing October 1955 Report of the Judicial Conference of the United States).

The U.S. Supreme Court disagrees with the Bank and other movants efforts to do away with the modern Federal standard of notice pleading:

“The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require a claimant to set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim. To the contrary, all the Rules require is a short and plain statement of the claim that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff’s claim is and the grounds upon which it rests. Such simplified ‘notice pleading’ is made possible by the liberal opportunity for discovery and the other pretrial procedures established by the Rules to disclose more precisely the basis of both claim and defense and to define more narrowly the disputed facts and issues.

The Federal Rules reject the approach that pleading is a game of skill in which one misstep by counsel may be decisive to the outcome and accept the principle that the purpose of pleading is to facilitate a proper decision on the merits.” Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47-48, 2 L.Ed.2d 80, 78 S.Ct. 99, 102-03 (1957).

The archaic pleading practice relied on by the Bank and other movants once existed under the codes and common law in which pleadings served four functions (1) provided notice of the claim; (2) stated the facts that each party believed existed; (3) narrowed the issues; and (4) supplied a means for speedy disposition of sham claims. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ 2d 1202, p 68. As a result, many cases were disposed of on a pleading defect unrelated to the merits. Id. at p 69. In olden days, the complaint was required to state only facts, not conclusions, a distinction of degree only that placed the pleader at a disadvantage:

“A pleader who complied with the spirit and command of the code pleading system was obliged to walk defenseless while a hidden enemy sniped at him; he committed himself unreservedly to a course of action and a factual statement from which he could not deviate because of [the] rules ....” Id. at p 71 (citation omitted).

The Bank of Cyprus and other movants are effectively saying to the Court, “Let’s do the time warp again.” and dismiss the Complaint for not stating facts as required under the old codes, number (2) above, even though by today’s standards, the pleadings function to give notice of the plaintiff’s position. Conley at pp 47-48. A notice the Bank and other movants’ will be hard press to deny after including many answer type allegations in their memoranda. They clearly are aware of the claims against them. They may not be pleased, but that’s no excuse to resort to yesteryear to short circuit modern federal procedure.

The Bank and other movants, however, may be using “conclusory” to mean legal conclusion, another prohibitive act under the old codes. The absurdity of objecting to a complaint for making legal conclusions was stated by Professor James, “If one sought to describe a situation having legal significance entirely in words which were devoid of all legal evaluation, the result would be a series of prolix circumlocutions which would serve neither elegance of style nor ease of understanding.” The Objective and Function of the Complaint: Common Law—Codes—Federal Rules, 1961, 14 Vand.L.Rev. 899, 912-918.

The Bank of Cyprus’ legal argument also sarcastically labels the Complaint as “tome-like in length.” At 91 pages, it may be a large book for the Bank, but that is not a reason to dismiss the case. Federal Rule 8(a)(2) requires a short and plain statement for each claim, not a short complaint. Multiparty litigation with multi-claims will inevitably result in long and complicated complaints. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ 2d 1217, p 169.

1. Standard for a Motion to Dismiss

The Bank affirmatively states only part of the standard for deciding a motion to dismiss (Defendant Bank Memo. p 4-2) while conveniently leaving off the part that courts take a complaint’s allegations as true, California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515, 30 L.Ed.2d 642, 92 S.Ct. 609, 614 (1972); Bernheim v. Litt, 79 F.3d 318, 321 (2d Cir. 1996)(citation omitted). The Second Circuit case relied on by the Bank states, “the well pleaded material allegations of the complaint are taken as admitted; but ... unwarranted deductions of fact are not admitted.” First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 771 (2d Cir. 1994). The Bank artfully included the “unwarranted deductions” part of that quote but not the “allegations ... taken as admitted” part. It also failed to distinguish First Nationwide Bank from the present case against it.

The Second Circuit applied the “unwarranted deductions” principle with “greater force” because the issue was whether the defendants fraudulently overstated the value of rental properties as loan collateral. Id. Fraud requires more stringent pleading requirements under Rule 9(b), but there are no predicate act allegations of fraud against the Bank. A further distinction is that First Nationwide found the complaint’s method used for estimating the amount of overstated value involved so many variables and estimates that no reasonable inference other than an “unwarranted deduction” from the allegations could be drawn to come up with a certain amount of damages. Id. at 770-72. The predicate act allegations against the Bank of Cyprus are not so complex—simply money laundering and using international facilities to aid a racketeering enterprise. (Complaint ¶¶ 633-635)

“The issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims. Indeed it may appear on the face of the pleadings that a recovery is very remote and unlikely but that is not the test.” Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 40 L.Ed.2d 90, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 1686 (1974).

2. Standard for Pleading RICO

First the Bank of Cyprus misstates what the Supreme Court in Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 87 L.Ed.2d 346, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3285 (1985), requires for alleging a civil RICO violation, then claims the Complaint does not comply to the Bank’s misstatement.

The Complaint alleges all the RICO elements against the Bank that the Second Circuit requires: (1) defendant (Complaint ¶¶ 101-103) (2) through the commission of two or more predicate acts (Complaint ¶¶ 633-635) (3) constituting a pattern (Complaint ¶¶ 875-85) (4) of racketeering activities [those are predicate acts] (Complaint ¶¶ 633-635) (5) directly or indirectly invests in, or maintains an interest in, or participates in (Complaint ¶ 636) (6) an enterprise (Complaint 1, 10-15) [allegations as to the existence of a RICO enterprise must meet only the notice pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 8. In Re Sumitomo Copper Litigation, 995 F.Supp. 451, 454 (S.D.N.Y. 1998)(J. Pollack)] (7) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce (Complaint 874) and, in addition, the plaintiff was injured in his business or property by reason of violations of 18 U.S.C. 1962 (Complaint ¶¶ 900-907).

The Bank continues misstating the law and misrepresenting the Complaint when it claims, “Plaintff also fails to plead adequately certain predicate acts alleged in the Complaint as a basis for his RICO claims. These acts include violations of 18 U.S.C. 371 (conspiracy), 26 U.S.C. 7201 (tax evasion), Sections 1801 and 1804 of the New York State Income, Earnings and Corporate Taxes Law (failure to file tax returns and filing of false returns, respectively), and Sections 105 and 470 of the New York Penal Code (conspiracy and money laundering, respectively).” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 4, n 4) The Complaint does not claim any of the acts cited in that footnote are predicate acts. The Complaint contains one section listing predicate acts that starts at ¶ 466 and is titled Defendants Predicate Acts and a separate section beginning at ¶ 684 called Other Criminal Acts by Defendants. The titles are in bold print and the word “other” means of a different character or quality. I just can’t see how the Bank missed that unless it is trying to sneak something passed, but I cannot figure out what it is.

a. Use of Income from Racketeering Activities, 1962(a)

The plaintiff incorporates his argument from Plaintiff Opposition Memo. pp 85-88 that a violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(a) or (b) does not require a “racketeering injury”; that is, injury flowing from the investment of income produced by a pattern of racketeering, Busby v. Crown Supply, Inc., 896 F.2d 833, 837-38 (4th Cir. 1990); Goold Electronics Corp. v. Galaxy Electronics, Inc., 1993 WL 427727 (N.D.Ill.), or from racketeering activity used to keep a stake in an enterprise, see Haroco v. American National Bank & Trust Co. of Chicago, 747 F.2d 384, 395-399 (7th Cir. 1984).

If the Court concludes that RICO 1962(a) requires a racketeering injury, the Complaint, contrary to the Bank's false statement that it "makes no such allegation" (Defendant Bank Memo. p 5-1), alleges injury from the investment of racketeering income. The Bank engages in predicate acts constituting a pattern of racketeering activity that makes money (Complaint ¶¶ 633-636, 875, 881); the income from that racketeering activity goes into the Bank's operations, including the facilities for laundering money, that affect interstate commerce (Complaint ¶¶ 636, 874); and the plaintiff suffered damages as a result (Complaint 900-908).

The Bank wrongly objects that the money from racketeering activities must be invested in the criminal enterprise. RICO 1962(a) is violated when racketeering money is used in the operation of an organization whether the criminal enterprise or another organization. Batista, Civil RICO, 2003 Cumulative Supplement, 4.41, p 133; see 18 U.S.C. 1961(4). The Bank is an organization that is alleged to use money from predicate acts to run its operations (Complaint ¶ 636), so RICO 1962(a) is violated.

b. Racketeering to Maintain an Interest in the Money Laundering Business, 1962(b)

The Bank of Cyprus' cite to Dubai Islamic Bank v. Citibank, N.A., 126 F.Supp.2d 659, 670 (S.D.N.Y. 2000), which found persuasive the argument that a plaintiff must allege the defendant "acquired or maintained control over the alleged RICO enterprise...", shows the Bank continues its misguided claim that the only enterprise to which 1962(a) & (b) apply is the RICO enterprise. Congress did not confine the reach of RICO "to only narrow aspects of organized crime." U.S. v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 590, 69 L.Ed.2d 246, 101 S.Ct. 2524, 2532 (1981). The use of racketeering activity to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise, whether the RICO enterprise or another business, violates 1962(b).

Contrary to the Bank's assertions in its memorandum at p 5-2, the Complaint alleges the Bank operates a money laundering business for the Russian mafia (Complaint ¶¶ 15, 101-103, 456-58), that the Bank engages in the predicate acts necessary to launder and hide Russian mafia money (Complaint at ¶¶ 633-635) in order to maintain its money laundering business in which it has a property interest (Complaint at ¶ 636), and the plaintiff suffered damages as a result (Complaint 900-908). An “interest” in 1962(b) includes “all property and interests, as broadly described, which are related to the violations” H.R.Rep. No. 1549, 91st Cong., 2d Sess. 57, reprinted in U.S. Code Cong. & Ad.News 4007 (1970).

c. Participating in the Conduct of the Russian Mafia’s Affairs, 1962(c)

In order to participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of an enterprise’s affairs, a defendant must play some part in directing those affairs. Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 179, 122 L.Ed.2d 525, 113 S.Ct. 1163, 1170 (1992). The Bank artfully omitted “directly or indirectly” from its statement of the law. (Defendant Bank Memo. p 6-1) “[T]he phrase ‘directly or indirectly’ makes clear that RICO liability is not limited to those with a formal position in the enterprise....” Reves at 179, or that only primary responsibility for the enterprise’s affairs is required. What is needed is that a person participates in the operation or management of the enterprise. Reves at 185. But an enterprise is “operated” not just by upper management but also by lower rung participants who are under the direction of upper management or by others associated with the enterprise who exert control; that is, authority. Reves at 184. “One is liable under RICO if he ... has ‘discretionary authority in carrying out the instructions of the principals.’” Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d at 376 (2d Cir. 2003)(citing US v. Diaz, 176 F.3d 52, 93 (2d Cir. 1999)). In addition, a defendant may also take part in the conduct of an enterprise by knowingly implementing decisions as well as making them. US v. Oretto, 37 F.3d 739, 750 (1st Cir. 1994).

In order to launder money for the Russian mafia, the Bank exerts control over that aspect of the mob’s activities by making and knowingly implementing decisions in which it exercises broad discretion in carrying out the laundering and hiding of illegal funds. (Complaint ¶¶ 15, 101-03, 456-58, 633-636, 874(b), (d), (j), (k), 881)

d. Conspiracy, 1962(d)

The Bank pulls an interesting slide-of-hand when it states that a RICO conspiracy claim “must plead facts alleging that each defendant ‘knowingly agreed to participate in the conspiracy.’” The Bank’s memorandum at p 6-2 cites Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F.Supp.2d 340, 347[correct page is 354] (S.D.N.Y. 1998) as authority for this proposition but wrongly claims the Schmidt Court relied on Industrial Bank of Latvia v. Baltic Fin. Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist. Lexis, *8, 93 Civ. 9032, 1994 WL 286162 at *3 (S.D.N.Y.). The Schmidt Court relied on Colony at Holbrook, Inc. v. Strata G.C., Inc., 928 F.Supp. 1224 (E.D.N.Y. 1996), and Colony relied on the Second Circuit’s Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 25 (2d Cir. 1990). “[T]he Second Circuit established that the core requirement of a RICO conspiracy claim is an agreement to commit the predicate act.... [T]he Second Circuit held that a complaint must, at a minimum, specifically plead such an agreement... ‘to commit at least two predicate acts.’” Colony at 1238. So in the Second Circuit, a complaint must allege the defendants concurred, consented, settled upon, assented or agreed to the committing of two predicate acts. It is the agreement to commit predicate acts in furtherance of the common purpose of the RICO enterprise that infers a RICO conspiracy. See Colony at 1238. And furthering a RICO’s purpose can be met by merely adopting the goal of advancing or facilitating violations of RICO 1962(a-c). See Salinas v. U.S., 522 U.S. 52, 65, 139 L.Ed.2d 352, 118 S.Ct. 469, 477 (1997). By agreeing to launder and hide money from Russian mafia activities, the Bank, at the very least, advanced and facilitated the Enterprise’s criminal endeavors that include violations of 18 U.S.C. 1962(a-c).

The Complaint meets the conspiracy pleading requirements by alleging the Bank “agreed to commit the predicate acts in ¶¶ 633-35....” (Complaint ¶ 637) with the requisite mens rea (Complaint ¶ 682) and such acts furthered the Enterprise's purpose (Complaint ¶¶ 12, 13, 15, 456, 635).

The Bank also objects the Complaint's conspiracy allegations are "conclusory" and therefore "insufficient." (Defendant Bank Memo. p 6-2) So what is insufficient? Statements claiming only that the defendants engaged in "conspiratorial acts," conspiratorial manner," "conspiratorial method" and "conspiratorial pattern." Colony at 1238 (citation omitted). What is sufficient? A complaint that states the defendants knowingly entered into an agreement, arrangement, concord or compact to commit predicate acts. Dietrich v. Bauer, 76 F.Supp. 2d 312, 349 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). The Complaint does just that for all the Enterprise movants. (Complaint ¶¶ 682-83) The problem with all the movants' memoranda is that they cite legal propositions declaring what allegations can't be, but omit the specifics that give the rules understanding. The movants spit out words, such as "conclusory," "bare," "insufficient" and the like without defining what the courts mean by these terms because if the movants did, then these objections would vanish like the morning haze.

Another vanishing objection by the Bank is that the Complaint did not answer its deposition questions: "Into what agreement did the Bank enter? With whom did the Bank agree? What was the conspiracy?" (Defendant Bank Memo. p 6-2) The federal rules, however, restrict pleadings to the task of general notice giving and invest the deposition-discovery process with the vital role of preparing for trial. Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47-48; Hickman, 329 U.S. 495, 501. The Complaint's conspiracy allegations provide enough information to put the Bank on notice. Moreover, the nature of conspiracies often makes it impossible to provide details in a complaint, Breuer v. Rockwell, 40 F.3d 1119, 1128 (10th Cir. 1994)

The Bank follows along with the other Enterprise movants by presumptuously stating there can be no RICO conspiracy, "because Plaintiff has failed to plead any substantive [1962 (a-c)]

RICO violation....” I thought that determination was for the Court rather than the defendants. Apparently, in the movants’ “Simon says” view of the law, whenever a defendant simply claims a plaintiff’s allegations fail to plead a substantive RICO violation, the conspiracy cause of action must be dismissed. But even adopting the movants “Simon says” ploy, co-conspirators who might not themselves have violated one of the substantive provisions of 1962 can still be sued providing others in the Enterprise were alleged to have done so. Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 506-07, 120 S.Ct. 1608, 1617 (2000). Conspiracy is a mechanism for subjecting co-conspirators to liability for the tortious acts of one of their members, and a tortious act is a 1962(a), (b), or (c) violation or may even be the commission of one predicate act. Beck at 506 n. 10. The Complaint alleges numerous violations of 18 USC 1962 and predicate acts committed by the movants in furtherance of the Enterprise’s Scheme. (Complaint 466-547, 556-559)

e. Standing in the Shadows with Gangsters

The Bank of Cyprus once again wrongly imagines what the Complaint and the law state—this time about proximate cause or, more accurately, standing. The Bank claims, “Plaintiff has pleaded no proximate cause. In fact, Plaintiff has pleaded no cause at all.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 7-2) The Complaint at ¶¶ 900-907 alleges the direct injuries to the plaintiff’s business and property were caused by a pattern of racketeering activity violating 18 U.S.C. 1962 or by predicate acts, and at ¶ 683 states “[e]ach predicate act was committed on behalf of every Member of the Enterprise, since each act was committed with the knowledge of, or was reasonably foreseeable to, each of the Members.” The U.S. Supreme Court held that on a motion to dismiss general factual allegations of injury resulting from defendant’s conduct embrace those specific facts necessary to support the claim. NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798, 803 (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2137 (1992)). The Bank also tries to heighten the pleading requirements for standing to one that tends to “show” injury. (Defendant Bank Memo. p 7-2) “Show” means to prove, Black’s Law Dictionary, 8th Ed., p 1413, but the purpose of the complaint under the federal rules is to give notice, not prove. See Hickman, 329 U.S. 495, 501.

In addition, liability for injuries from RICO violations is joint and several among the members of the criminal enterprise. Fleischhauer v. Feltner, 879 F.2d 1290, 1301 (6th Cir. 1989). “Although there is little direct law on this point, there are numerous RICO criminal forfeiture cases which indicate that the nature of the RICO offense mandates joint and several liability.” Id. (citing see also Beneficial Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Madariaga, 851 F.2d 271, 272 (9th Cir. 1988)(civil RICO liability assessed joint and severally). Fleischhauer was not a forfeiture nor a contribution case. A determination of joint and several liability is distinct from a determination of contribution. Texas Industries, Inc. v. Radcliff Materials, 451 U.S. 630, 646, 68 L.Ed.2d 500, 101 S.Ct. 2061, 2069 (1981). Further, the allegation of conspiracy to violate 18 U.S.C. 1962(d) includes the allegation of defendants being joint and severally liable, since they are co-conspirators. Oki Semiconductor Co. v. Wells Fargo Bank, 298 F.2d 768, 775 (9th Cir. 2002)(Citations omitted); See Pinkerton v. U.S., 328 U.S. 640, 646, 90 L.Ed. 1489, 66 S.Ct. 1180, 1183 (1946). Moreover, there is no reason why persons who actively and knowingly work for an organization that engages in criminal activity should not be liable for the criminal acts of other members. Scales v. U.S., 367 U.S. 203, 226-27, 6 L.Ed.2d 782, 81 S.Ct. 1469, 1485 (1960). The Complaint alleges the Bank is a member of the Russian mafia and furthers the mob’s illegal activities with money laundering as a co-conspirator in violating RICO (Complaint ¶¶ 101-03, 456-58, 633-37), so it is joint and severally liable.

The Bank of Cyprus also requests a dismissal because it has “more productive uses for [its] resources.” (Defendant Bank Memo. p 7-2) Perhaps it is referring to the lucrative business it conducts with the Russian mafia. The plaintiff, however, can think of no more productive use of government resources than, as the U.S. Supreme Court stated, “bring[ing] to bear the pressure of private attorneys general on a serious national problem for which public prosecutorial resources are deemed inadequate....” Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Associates, 483 U.S. 143, 151; 97 L.Ed.2d 121; 107 S.Ct. 2759, 2764 (1987).

f. Case or no case

The Bank of Cyprus, patterning other Enterprise movants, again repeats the liturgy that the allegations against them are not “sufficient.” Sufficient means that which is necessary for a given purpose. Black’s Law Dictionary, 8th Ed., p 1474. So what’s the purpose of allegations in a complaint? “[T]o provide the necessary notice to [the] adversary. The evidentiary material supporting these general statements normally should not be set out in the pleadings but rather should be left to be brought to light during the discovery process.” Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 2d 1281, p 519. The Bank’s memorandum and the detailed papers of the other movants belie that they do not have “fair notice of what the plaintiff’s claim is and the grounds upon which it rests,” Conley, 355 U.S. 41, 47-48.

Finally, the Bank omnipotently concludes that any amendment of the Complaint would have to consist of “conclusory allegations.” They don’t know that.

IV. Conclusion

The plaintiff requests that the Bank of Cyprus’ motion to dismiss be denied, but if granted, then leave be allowed to the plaintiff to amend the Complaint.

Congressional Statement Federal Bureau of Investigation

December 13, 2000

Statement for the Record of Steven C. McCraw, Deputy Assistant Director Investigative Services Division Federal Bureau of Investigation

on Organized Crime, Drug Trafficking, and Terrorist Acts

Before the House Judiciary Committee, Subcommittee on Crime
Washington, D.C.

Mr. Chairman, members of the subcommittee, thank you for the opportunity to speak with you on this important issue. The threat posed by the convergence of organized crime, drug trafficking and terrorism is significant. Worldwide economic, political, social and technological changes over the last decade have resulted in a more dispersed, complex, asymmetric threat to our nation. Criminals and terrorists have significantly benefitted from these rapid changes which have permanently shrunk the world, made it more open and created new methods for interacting and communicating.

Organized crime, drug trafficking, and terrorist acts are no longer insular, distinct activities that can be contained and eradicated through traditional enforcement. Instead, they are integrated activities which through their very commission have a reverberating impact on our national interests.

To meet these new challenges, we can not focus on singular criminal activities. Rather, the law enforcement and intelligence communities must understand and develop strategies to address all aspects of criminal and terrorist enterprises. Thus, my testimony today will illustrate the diversity of crime within criminal enterprises and the interrelationships between gangs, drug trafficking organizations, organized crime and terrorist groups. We must understand all aspects of the threat to address the threat.

Drug trafficking organizations engage in other criminal activities to support their operations. Similarly, organized crime groups, street gangs and some terrorist organizations are involved in drug related activities. For example, drug trafficking organizations are engaged in the corruption of U.S. law enforcement officials, kidnappings, tortures and murder to further their drug trafficking operations. Mexican drug trafficking organizations use street gangs to murder rivals and to distribute drugs throughout the United States. Russian organized crime groups, which distribute drugs in the United States, are also involved with the American La Cosa Nostra in sophisticated financial fraud, money laundering and other white collar crime schemes. And, Colombian drug trafficking organizations interact with terrorist organizations.

El Paso, Texas, which is contiguous with Juarez, Mexico, has long been a gateway for drugs controlled by the Carrillo Fuentes Drug Trafficking Organization (CFO) and illustrates how violence is an integral part of drug trafficking. During the past few years, there have been approximately 300 drug related disappearances in Juarez, Mexico, including 27 U.S. citizens. In El Paso, there have been 120 drug related homicides and 73 drug related disappearances.

In "Operation Plaza Sweep", a joint FBI and Republic of Mexico investigation, 17 murders and 24 kidnappings were documented and eventually led to the discovery of three burial sites used by the CFO in Mexico. The positive identification of seven victims buried at these sites resulted in a superceding indictment adding murder charges to a 46 count indictment against Vicente Carrillo Fuentes.

When major drug trafficking organizations lose a load of drugs they kidnap, torture and often execute those involved. If the individual responsible for the loss flees, a close family member is kidnapped and threatened until the individual turns himself into the organization.

Drug traffickers also employ violence to escape detection and arrest. For example, on June 3, 1998, U.S. Border Patrol Agent Alexander Kirpnick confronted three drug smugglers along the Arizona/Mexico border and was shot to death. The shooter fled to Mexico and was eventually captured in Mexico and convicted in the United States for the first degree murder of a federal officer.

Drug trafficking organizations systematically engage in corruption to support their drug operations. This is particularly problematic along the southwest border of the United States. U.S. law enforcement officials along the southwest border have been convicted of participating actively in drug-related crimes, including waving drug-laden vehicles through Ports of Entry in exchange for money, coordinating the movement of drugs across the border, using their official positions to transport drugs past checkpoints without being suspected, and disclosing drug intelligence information. In an 18 month period, an FBI-led public corruption task force in Southern Arizona conducted a series of drug corruption investigations which resulted in the conviction of 10 federal officers, two deputy sheriffs, three local police officers and one local judge.

The "Operation Ghostload" investigation illustrates the impact of drug related corruption in the United States. In January 1999, four Immigration Naturalization Service Inspectors who were assigned to the Nogales, Arizona, Port of Entry, and seven drug traffickers, were arrested. These inspectors were responsible for passing over 20 tons of cocaine into the United States for which they received over $800,000 in bribes. Clearly, international organized crime groups constitute a significant threat because of the scope and magnitude of their criminal activity. Furthermore, despite tremendous successes against the LCN, vigilance is required to minimize their impact on our financial markets. All organized crime groups are using the increased ease of international travel and the latest advances in telecommunications and technology to move large segments of their criminal enterprises into the United States market. For example, Oleg Kirillov, the leader of a Russian organized crime group based in Russia, established an operation in Miami, Florida, to launch a cocaine smuggling route between Peru and Russia. An investigation by FBI Miami determined that the network of this group stretched from various locations in the United States to Russia, Europe and South America. In addition to drug trafficking, group members were also actively engaged in a variety of criminal offenses, including stock manipulation, credit card fraud and motor vehicle thefts. Kirillov and several of his associates were indicted and later convicted for their involvement in these criminal activities.

Similarly, the inter-relation of drug traffickers and violent street gangs poses a challenge to law enforcement. Street gangs continue to expand their illicit activities and build strategic ties to domestic and international criminal organizations. While gangs are involved in a broad range of criminal activity, drug trafficking remains the principal source of their revenue. These criminal organizations are firmly entrenched in regions near major trans-shipment points, freight terminals or bulk warehouses. They are also responsible for moving stolen cargo and high technology commodities into other countries. These high tech shipments are then available for exploitation by major criminal organizations.

The impact of the violence these groups have in the U.S. is significant. For example, here in the Nation's Capital, neighborhood drug-based gangs have been responsible for substantial levels of violent criminal acts. Just last month, a District of Columbia Federal Grand Jury returned a 158 count indictment with 31 charges of murder and multiple violations of drug trafficking and weapons offenses against local gang members. These indictments stemmed from an FBI-led Safe Streets Task Force investigation targeting the entire criminal enterprise.

In January 1997, an FBI-led violent crime task force was initiated in Gary, Indiana, to target pervasive gang-related violence and gang controlled, street level drug trafficking. A series of criminal enterprise investigations freed the community from gang related terror, reducing the assaults with firearms by 62 percent and homicides by 24 percent.

The threat of terrorism to America continues worldwide. The increasingly prominent U.S. role in international peacekeeping, diplomacy and business has increased America's visibility and vulnerability and encouraged the increased levels of activities by terrorist groups. While there is no evidence of narco-terrorism within the United States, intelligence has revealed that some terrorist organizations, such as Columbia's FARC, and to a lesser extent the National Liberation Army (ELN), support their activities through funds acquired as the result of their protection of drug traffickers or the distribution of drugs in Columbia. These terrorists also target U.S. interests in their country. For example, in January 1993, three U.S. missionaries were kidnapped from a village in Panama by members of the FARC and remain missing. In February of last year, three U.S. citizens who were working in Colombia were kidnapped by suspected members of the FARC. These Americans were later executed in Venezuela.

Regardless of the source of funding, the threat of terrorism is very real here and abroad. As an example, the World Trade Center bombing in February 1993, killed six Americans, injured over 1,000 and caused property damages amounting to over half a billion dollars. Most recently, the U.S.S. Cole was attacked while in the Port of Aden, Yemen. This act of terrorism took the lives of 17 young American servicemen and women and resulted in the injury of 39 others.

I can assure you that the FBI is prepared for the substantial challenges posed by these evolving threats to our national security. As this subcommittee is aware, the FBI is a member of both the law enforcement and intelligence communities, hence we are uniquely positioned to work closely with our law enforcement and community partners to identify and neutralize the threats to our nation.

The character of these threats, increasingly an integrated conglomerate of activities inimical to our national interests, have resulted in the FBI's pro-active posture which is designed to deter and prevent rather than react to criminal and terrorist activities. This proactive approach requires that the FBI have an intelligence capability far different from what has supported us in the past. In fact, to apply the FBI's enterprise theory of investigation to these increasingly compound threats requires an intelligence capability that can disaggregate these patterns of complex, intertwined behaviors and, at all times, provide an accurate understanding of the present and future threat.

The foundation of the FBI's strategy to address these activities is a preeminent intelligence capability. In November 1999, as part of our Strategic Plan, the FBI realigned its intelligence resources and placed a new emphasis on developing a strategic analytical capability. As you are aware, at that time, we placed all personnel dedicated to criminal, terrorist, and foreign intelligence analysis into a new Division and charged them with developing a comprehensive understanding of the threats faced by our Nation. Through this realignment we are working toward exploiting all information, regardless of where it is collected, developing national crime and intelligence threat assessments in order to react effectively to current problems, and establishing the intelligence base from which we can project future threats.

Again, thank you for the opportunity to testify before the subcommittee today. I would be happy to respond to any questions you have at this time.

CIA AND FBI DIRECTORS DESCRIBE RUSSIAN ORGANIZED CRIME...

By Steve Macko

On Tuesday, the directors of the United States Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) met with House International Relations Committee on Capital Hill. CIA Director John Deutch said that organized crime represents a growing threat to democracy in Russia and has spread to 50 countries around the world, including the United States.

Director Deutch said, "Organized crime and corruption pose an increasing threat to political and economic reform in Russia. Russia's criminal groups reach across international borders, including our own. Russian criminal groups have the potential to support terrorism and contribute to the proliferation of materials, technology and weapons of mass destruction."

This is the first time that Director Deutch has testified before a Congressional Committee on the subject of Russian organized crime. Deutch tried to be optimistic on the issue by saying, "The facts do not support the important judgement that this criminal issue in Russia has gotten to such an extent that they are going to be unable to proceed with their ... slow but hopeful moves towards a more democratic society."

Even though he said that Russian organized crime groups have the potential to contribute to the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, Deutch stressed, "We have no data indicating that a nuclear weapon or a significant quantity of fissile material has ever been stolen from Russia. We also have no information that Russian criminal organizations are cooperating with terrorist groups or rogue states."

The reason that criminal groups have flourished is because the groups got their start in widespread government corruption even before the Soviet era ended. Deutch said, "The rapid collapse of the Soviet system and central planning offered opportunities for this underlying corruption to bloom, for criminals to reap much higher profits and for crime to become much more visible to the average citizen."

Overall, both directors, Deutch and Freeh of the FBI, gave what could be considered a gloomy assessment of the crime problem in Russia. FBI Director Louis Freeh said that when freedom was established in Russia, it helped spread the existing criminal network to expand abroad. Freeh said, "Evidence that organized crime activity from these areas is expanding and will continue to expand to the United States is well-documented."

The FBI director said that he was not going to make the same mistake that legendary FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover made by ignoring the Mafia for 50 years. Freeh said, "We are not about to make the same mistake with Eurasian crime."

Freeh told the Congressional Committee that Russian crime groups are operating in New York City. The FBI is investigating several cases that involve everything from murder to a massive fraud scheme aimed at trying to steal $2 billion in fuel tax revenues.

The main point where it seemed to Deutch and Freeh differed was on their assessments of the anti-crime efforts by the Russians. Deutch said about the Russian law enforcement authorities, "Law enforcement agencies continue to be understaffed, under-funded and plagued by corruption."

FBI Director Freeh said that in its dealings with the Russians, the FBI has found that its Russian counterpart, the NVD, has proven to be a reliable partner in investigating cases and in making arrests.

Currently, the FBI has two Special Agents stationed in Moscow. They are handling about 300 cases and have requested a third agent to be assigned there.

Also speaking before the Committee on Tuesday was California Attorney General Dan Lungren, who spoke about the growth of Russian organized crime in his state and was the focus of an ENN report on 19 March 1996.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Defendants, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy (collectively referred herein as "Mundy") and Peter Petrovich ("Petrovich"), by their attorneys, McManus, Collura & Richter, P.C., respectfully submit this Reply Memorandum of Law in further support of the instant motion for an Order: (1) dismissing the first, second, third and fourth causes of action contained in plaintiff's complaint with prejudice as against Mundy and Petrovich alleging violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §1962(a)-(d), for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) and for failure to plead predicate acts with sufficient particularity pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b); (2) dismissing the fifth, sixth and seventh causes of action contained in plaintiff's complaint with prejudice as against Mundy and Petrovich alleging pendant state law claims for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6); (3) dismissing plaintiff's complaint and each cause of action therein with prejudice as against Mundy and Petrovich on the grounds that the complaint does not contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2); (4) for an injunction prohibiting plaintiff from filing any further related claims against Mundy and Petrovich; and (5) for such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper<sup>1</sup>.

Plaintiff has again seized the opportunity to burden the parties and the Court by submitting a mountain of paper representing his opposition, nearly two hundred pages in length, reiterating the same general, speculation and insufficient and flawed allegations contained in his nine hundred and fifteen paragraph complaint. This is nothing more than an attempt to use this forum to re-live the consequences of his marriage to and divorce from Ms. Shipilina while at the same time attempting to punish Ms. Shipilina and anyone who has ever come into contact with her or assisted her in preventing him from harassing her. While the plaintiff's opposition has certainly been successful in continuing to try to humiliate such persons as well as educate the reader as to the details and dangers of organized crime in general (Hollander 6-2, 6-3, 7-1, 10-1, 11-1<sup>2</sup>) and the recitations of famous historians, novelists and actors (Hollander 6-3, 8-1, 42-1 102-3, 112-1) in an obvious effort to obfuscate the actual issues pertaining to this matter, he has been unsuccessful in opposing the defendants' motion to dismiss and demonstrating that he has sufficiently pled RICO and pendent state law claims against Mundy and Petrovich<sup>3</sup>. not noted

The plaintiff's opposition is almost accurate for one proposition: the question before this Court is only whether the complaint alleges that the moving defendants violated the RICO statute and state laws (Hollander 1-1). However, as much as the plaintiff would like this Court to believe that is all he has to do to move forward on such claims is simply allege them, plaintiff conveniently fails to acknowledge that he must sufficiently set forth well pleaded

3. While plaintiff's opposition is correct in suggesting that his motive for commencing this action is not dispositive in determining the legal arguments contained in this application and plaintiff's motives for commencing the instant lawsuit should be better addressed in discovery, there is enough documentary evidence before this Court, comprised of the plaintiff's own words in his complaint, opposition and exhibits, which should be considered by this Court in conjunction with the legal arguments contained herein.

factual allegations contained in the complaint, not bald conclusory statements, and that legal conclusions, deductions, opinions couched as factual allegations as well as unwarranted deductions of fact are not given a presumption of truthfulness. cases for examples offer The fact remains that the plaintiff's complaint, in the context of his RICO claims, must properly allege the existence of seven constituent elements to withstand this motion to dismiss: (1) that the defendants (2) through the commission of two or more acts (3) constituting a "pattern" (4) of "racketeering activity" (5) directly or indirectly invests in, or maintains an interest in, or participates in (6) an "enterprise" (7) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce. Burrell v. State Farm and Cas. Co., 226 F. Supp.2d 427, 443 (S.D.N.Y. 2002); Citadel Mgmt., Inc. v. Telesis Trust Inc., 123 F. Supp.2d 133, 154 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). Further, "the plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation" of section 1962. Sedima S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3285 (1985). If one element is lacking, a Court will refuse to allow a party to add a RICO claim. LaSalle Nat'l Bank v. Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co., 951 F. Supp. 1071, 1091 & n. 16 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). This Court mandates the sufficient pleading of these elements because it is "mindful of the potential abuse of the RICO statute." Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 WL 21664679 (S.D.N.Y. 2003). In addition, the plaintiff must sufficiently allege certain elements, which are discussed below, to move forward on his state law claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of process and malicious prosecution. Plaintiff's opposition has made clear that his claim for prima facie tort has been withdrawn.

While the plaintiff's opposition certainly makes clear that he fully understands what the elements of RICO and his state law claims are, the Court needs to look no further than such papers to realize that plaintiff has still not sufficiently pled these elements as they pertain to Mundy and Petrovich. Instead, the plaintiff has spent countless pages in his opposition attempting to obscure such deficiencies and diverting the Court's attention away from such failures by citing inaccuracies, referencing inadmissible evidence, harping on mundane details completely irrelevant to proving his claims, providing bare generalizations about organized crime and RICO, and exhibiting knowledge as to matters, which although interesting, are not pertinent to the relevant issues in this matter.

Specifically, plaintiff's opposition continually defines terms used by the defendant in their initial papers (and the Courts as cited by the defendants) and criticizes the use of such words (Hollander 1-1, 3-2, 5-1, 8-2, 26-3, 44-2, 50-1, 53-3, 56-3, 57-1, 72-1, 76-2, 76-3, 77-1, 97-2, 104-1,2, 112-2, 120-1,2,3); provides a history lesson as to Federal pleading practice (Hollander 3-2, 39-3, 77-1); inaccurately attempts to portray defendants' tactics (Hollander 5-1, 6-1 6-2, 8-1, 14-1, 23-2, 24-2, 39-1, 77-1, 98-2, 118-1, 130-3); refers to the reported dangers and intricacies surrounding organized crime and the Russian mafia in general (Hollander 6-2, 6-3, 7-1, 9-3, 10-1); attempts to analogize this matter to Watergate (Hollander 9-2, 102-3); attempts to entice the reader by providing an allegory (Hollander 10-3); cites his own education and that of his assistant in an obvious effort to lend some sort credibility to his allegations (Hollander 9-2, 37-1, 41-2); details his prior professional experience in an apparent attempt to impress this Court (Hollander 10-3, 30-1); applies his perspective as an MBA graduate to educate the Court as to the RICO statute, while inferring that the Court may have some difficulty understanding this "complex" statute and the "seemingly confusing law that have given courts many problems"; (Hollander pp. 41-43<sup>4</sup>); references inadmissible hearsay (Hollander 20-3, 21-1); blames purported bureaucrats for denying his applications facts not here subject about it

To further side-step his deficiencies in establishing his claims against Mundy and Petrovich, plaintiff's opposition attempts to appeal to emotion for an unfortunate domestic outcome and uses buzz words such as "prostitution," "narcotics," "bribery," "money laundering," "extortion," "threats," "murder for hire," and "fraud" to somehow create the impression that Mundy and Petrovich are involved with the Russian mafia. Plaintiffs' entire case against Mundy and Petrovich, however, is based upon improper assumptions, conjecture, suspicion and innuendo designed to lull this Court into believing that the Russian mafia presently exists and that Mundy and Petrovich are somehow performing legal services for the New York segment of such a group. Nonetheless, there continues with be a paucity of facts to support this far-fetched bald assertion<sup>5</sup>. At the end of the day, all the plaintiff can sufficiently allege is that Mundy and Petrovich merely represented Ms. Shpilina in her divorce (and achieved a settlement with which plaintiff is now unhappy) as well as isolated immigration matters.

<sup>5</sup>An interesting side-note is that the plaintiff spends a litany of paragraphs in his opposition citing news stories about the FBI, CIA and other governmental agencies' involvement in dealing with and fighting off the Russian mafia as defined by plaintiff. In fact, plaintiff indicates that "The U.S. Department of Justice has established task forces to deal with the Russian Mafia in New York, Los Angeles, and Miami." (Hollander 7-1); "Blending financial sophistication with bone-crunching violence, the Russian mob has become the FBI's most formidable criminal adversary..." (Hollander 7-1). However, despite all of these task forces, investigations, inquiries etc. by the FBI, CIA and other U.S. governmental agencies, presumably the agencies with the most resources to deal with such a group if they exist, notably, neither Mundy nor Petrovich have ever been suggested to be a part of the Russian mafia, nor have these persons ever been investigated as being affiliated with the Russian mafia by our governmental agencies. In fact, plaintiff's opposition does not even suggest that Mundy or Petrovich have ever been investigated or alleged to have been part of the Russian mafia by our government. Plaintiff's opposition is as important for what it states as for what it does not state. It is ironic that plaintiff, on the one hand, has credited our government for its awareness of the Russian mafia and cited their efforts to deal with such persons in an effort to detail the dangers of such a group, while, on the other hand, failed to explain why such investigations have not included or targeted Mundy and Petrovich, if they are as involved as the plaintiff now imagines. The reason is simple. The extent of Mundy's and Petrovich's involvement in organized crime, and the Russian mafia in particular, only exists in the plaintiff's delusions.

enterprise exists based upon the plaintiff's fictitious assessment that Ms. Shipilina, the purported "thread that weaves through" sixty-three separate domestic and foreign defendants, located in the United States, Russia, Cyprus and Mexico, did not say that and that she holds them together, where he can allege no other connection between the defendants, is simply insufficient to sustain the instant RICO claim. In addition to failing to adequately plead an enterprise and that Mundy and Petrovich are members, plaintiff has also failed to sufficiently allege other elements of his RICO claim. Without being able to sufficiently plead a RICO claim against Mundy and Petrovich, plaintiff's state law claims, which are also barred by the statute of not so limitations, premised only upon the notion that a RICO claim is viable, must also be dismissed.

Re: SIC Memo

Thus, without the plaintiff's conclusory statements, assumptions, conjecture, gigantic leaps of logic, editorialized characterization of the facts surrounding his marriage and divorce, misleading phrases and attempted diversions to overcome his lack of proper pleading, the complaint continues to remain insufficient to overcome the instant motion to dismiss as this matter pertains to Mundy and Petrovich.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

If anything it makes clear I may issues of fact

Although a statement of the facts relevant to this claim has already been set forth by the defendants' in their initial Memorandum of Law, the defendants have been compelled to elaborate on such facts and address misstatements set forth by plaintiff's opposition. Note Each and every fact contained in this section has either been acknowledged by plaintiff or SIC motion confirmed by documentary evidence. ie The facts sets forth are provided in chronological order for clarity.

A. Facts Underlying Plaintiff's Complaint as Admitted by Plaintiff or Shown by Documentary Evidence not authenticated

I. Plaintiff Meets Ms. Shipilina; Marries Her; and Investigates Her

The plaintiff is a middle-aged American lawyer who arrived in Russia in July of 1999 and then lived and worked in Russia throughout 1999 and 2000. (Ex. A ¶128,<sup>6</sup> Hollander 10-3, 12-1). While living in Russia, the plaintiff met "a tall, blue-eyed, bleached blonde" woman, Ms. Shipilina, sometime in the late summer of 1999. (Ex. A ¶130, Hollander 10-3, 12-1).

Despite plaintiff's general allegations that he was lured and "duped" by Ms. Shipilina after meeting her (Hollander 10-3), which, untruth documentary evidence reveals otherwise. Numerous letters and cards from plaintiff to Ms. Shipilina reveal that he pursued her and planned trips to visit her throughout Russia after meeting her. Ms. Shipilina is referred to as "Angel" throughout plaintiff's letters and cards, and the various adjectives preceding her pseudonym such as "special," "far," "insatiable," "lovely," "dark" and "fallen" refer to his mood toward her at that particular point of time. (Ex. Q<sup>7</sup>). The plaintiff proposed to Ms. Shipilina on January 31, 2000. (Ex. A ¶239). Other cards from plaintiff to Ms. Shipilina show that plaintiff took an active role in, and pursued Ms. Shipilina. (Ex. R). In February 2000, plaintiff and Ms. Shipilina set March of 2000 as a date for their wedding. (Ex. A ¶173).

False May
In or around March, 2000, plaintiff alleges that he first became aware that his soon to be wife was not being honest with him, and that Ms. Shipilina secretly slipped narcotics into his meals and pretended to be something she was not, in order to marry him so that she could <sup>6</sup>The phrase "Ex. __, ¶__" followed by letters A-P in the first blank and a number in the second blank respectively refers to the exhibit and paragraph number contained in that exhibit appended to the Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin, Esq., dated September 19, 2003, which was submitted in support of the initial motion papers in support of this application.

enter the United State (Ex. A ¶174, Hollander 12-1). Plaintiff maintains, however, that he was unaware of the nature of his soon to be wife's profession before he married her. This is belied by plaintiff's own words and cards to Ms. Shipilina where he indicates in February 2000 that he was searching for jobs for her in a gentlemen's club. (Ex. S). In addition, his diary of thoughts from August 30, 1999 through September 10, 1999, which was sent to Ms. Shipilina, indicates that the plaintiff was not only aware of Ms. Shipilina's profession but advocated it and advised her to pursue it. On August 31, plaintiff wrote, "Probably it is not easy to be a night club dancer, to like your occupation and feel a lot of criticism around related to that, one must have much more strength than fault-finders have...World is full of people gave up their dreams and hopes because some did not support it." (Ex. Q). Further, plaintiff makes such statements that he was allegedly drugged by Ms. Shipilina during this time with "salts and sugars" which he alleges were actually narcotics, notwithstanding the fact that Ms. Shipilina and he were living in separate cities prior to their wedding. (Ex. T). Week of late 7/99

Despite allegedly being drugged, plaintiff prepared a marriage contract in anticipation of his marriage to Ms. Shipilina. (Ex. U). Ultimately, the plaintiff and Ms. Shipilina were married in March 2000 in Russia (Ex. A ¶182 Hollander 10-3, 12-1). Dec 99 visits, trip to Kras, Jan trip US, are wedding 3/00
Falsely prepared by atty in Moscow & reviewed by notary in Kras

In June 2000, the plaintiff and Ms. Shipilina broke-up for a period of time after he learned of her alleged adultery. The plaintiff returned to New York from Russia without her.

(Ex. A ¶¶198-199). Despite plaintiff's contentions that Ms. Shipilina repeatedly contacted plaintiff at that time in an effort to "salvage the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff" and to "lull the plaintiff" (Ex. A ¶¶200-203), it appears that plaintiff made contact with Ms. Shipilina in the hope that she would return to him. (Ex. V). Nonetheless, they thereafter reunited (Ex.

A ¶204), but, according to plaintiff, he still did not know her true profession. (Ex. A ¶198). This is again belied by the documentation. An agreement (incorporating an earlier June 18, 2000

no mention of prostitution in doc

The plaintiff thereafter brought his wife to America in July 2000. (Ex. A ¶205, Hollander Ex W dated 3/1/00 so ship already in U.S.)

10-3, 15-2). Contemporaneous with bringing his "wife of a few months to America" (Ex. A ¶205, Hollander 11-1, 15-2), plaintiff prepared a "Personal and Business Management Agreement" which not only allowed him to exercise control over her career and salary but again appears to indicate that he was fully familiar with the nature of her profession at that time, or, at the very least, that she was involved in "stripping." Although the word was ultimately crossed out, the plaintiff included this word in many paragraphs of the Agreement that he drafted. (Ex. X ¶1, ¶6(a)(e)). Forgery

no reference to prostitution
How can a word be included that is crossed out

Plaintiff alleges that Ms. Shipilina then began working as a lap-dancer, joined her cohorts in prostitution and continued to drug his food to deter him from seeking an annulment or divorce throughout July and August of 2000. (Ex. A ¶¶213-216, Hollander 15-2). Plaintiff suggests that it was then that he became aware of the nature of his wife's profession, and that he was being used for immigration purposes. (Ex. A ¶¶213-220, Hollander 15-2, 16-1). did not know about prostitution

Omitted: tried to engage her in criminal activity, threatened w/ death & injury different events spanned July to Dec 1999
wrong date 9/00

For the next year, the plaintiff thereafter conducted an extensive investigation into his wife's affairs in both the United States and abroad. His fascination took him as far as Krasnodar, Russia to investigate his wife. (Ex. A ¶217, ¶¶256-260). Like this complaint, the investigation was conducted for no other reason than to explore his wife's whereabouts and purported infidelities, in an effort to punish her or satisfy his own presumptions. (Ex Y).<sup>8</sup> The Investigate for divorce

Palce, to another extraordinary leads for ct proceedings

<sup>8</sup>Exhibit Y best evidences plaintiff's fascination with his wife's infidelities. This document shows that the plaintiff engaged in the examination of the outgoing mobile numbers of his wife who he refers to as "Dark Angel," that he then called such numbers and inquired into who certain persons were, while at the same time, asking appalling questions as noted on the bottom of the document (Ex. Y). wrong word, revelation plaintiff continues to improperly use this Court as a means to continue his investigation and efforts.

The plaintiff subsequently commenced a defamation action in Russia against Ms. Shipilina's mother, Inessa Shipilina, which was later closed. (Ex. A ¶¶285, ¶298, ¶303, Ex. Z).

Dubin even failed to read own Ex. Z which clearly says "criminal case"
Consistent with his inappropriate behavior in the United States, the papers/affidavits submitted in connection with this litigation by Ms. Shipilina's mother, suggests that the plaintiff engaged in similar unsuitable behavior abroad directed at both Ms. Shipilina and her mother. (Ex. Z).<sup>9</sup>

Said by Dubin in detail
In late October 2000, plaintiff alleges to have met with Mundy, Petrovich and Ms. Shipilina to arrange for a separation. (Ex. A, ¶¶222-223, Hollander 20-1). Significantly, Mundy's representation of Ms. Shipilina in this divorce proceeding is the very first time that Mundy and Petrovich are alleged to have had any interaction with Ms. Shipilina, or any other defendants in this action. (Ex. A). Further, plaintiff's opposition acknowledges that Mundy and Petrovich were merely representing Ms. Shipilina in her separation and ultimate divorce, his later conclusory and unsupported allegations of various criminal activity notwithstanding. (Ex. A ¶223, Hollander 20-1)

He does not acknowledge that criminal activity began at meeting in suborning perjury
Interestingly, in December 2000, Ms. Shipilina filed a report against her husband indicating that he attempted to "extort" money from her otherwise he would have her deported back to Russia. (Ex. D). Although the plaintiff's opposition is correct that this matter was not investigated, the reason noted on the report is that Ms. Shipilina "does not want to press charges at this time." (Ex. D). The investigation was not closed, as plaintiff suggests in his opposition, because "no violation occurred." (Hollander 18-3). Plaintiff's opposition can only refers to the alleged violation of protection order not extortion <sup>9</sup>Plaintiff's complaint indicates that the matter was closed in March, 2001 (Ex. A ¶ 303). This appears to be a typographical error since the surrounding allegations appear to indicate that it was closed in March, 2002.

Indicates report perjured was ship calling IT to wish Happy New Year on Dec 31, 99
 explain the reporting of this incident by making self-serving accusations that it was a "perjured report" and retaliation for his refusal to lie to the INS and assist Ms. Shipilina in obtaining her green card. This justification is offered against a set of facts which demonstrates that plaintiff made no effort to document this purported attempt to coerce plaintiff into lying to the INS.<sup>10</sup>

Sometime in December 2000, plaintiff and Ms. Shipilina formally separated. (Ex. A ¶221). Around that time, it became necessary for Ms. Shipilina to seek an order of protection against her husband due to his conduct. (Ex. A ¶234, ¶239). Order not sought to end of Tan

ii The Attempted Annulment; Divorce; And Litigation that Followed

The plaintiff, in response to the order of protection, subsequently commenced an annulment proceeding against Ms. Shipilina in or around February, 2001. (Ex. A ¶242). The complaint alleged prostitution, drug use and fraud against Ms. Shipilina and sought to annul their marriage on the basis of fraud. (Ex. B). The attempted annulment was unsuccessful and plaintiff, instead, pursued divorce. Letter from Mundy threatening "difficult divorce proceedings"
There was no annulment trial, the case never went to trial, IT pursued both annul & divorce

Mundy defended Ms. Shipilina in the divorce/annulment proceedings as well as the relentless course of harassment that followed by the plaintiff once the divorce proceedings were resolved. (Ex. A ¶222-223).<sup>11</sup> Ms. Shipilina's answer contained a counterclaim which provided a drastically different version of events surrounding their marriage and plaintiff's behavior. The counterclaim alleged that the plaintiff improperly created a public website in Ms.

<sup>10</sup>Plaintiff concludes that this report must have been made for improper purposes such as to create a false record to pressure plaintiff into lying or to use as an advantage in the divorce proceeding otherwise "why file a report on which charges are not pressed..." (Hollander 20-2). Judging by the plaintiff's tactics in this litigation and past litigation, his efforts to twist facts, his allegations and his attempt to abuse the legal system, it made logical sense for Ms. Shipilina to make a record of events that unfolded. The better question is why didn't the plaintiff create some sort of record if such wrongdoing had occurred. Nonetheless, the filing of this report bears no impact on the merits of this application.

Shipilina's name on which he posted a copy of her personal diary and nude photographs without her knowledge or consent. (Ex. C, ¶5, Hollander 16-2).

In response to the creation of the offensive public website, Ms. Shipilina filed another report on June 27, 2001 with the New York City Police Department. (Ex. D). Plaintiff admits that this website was created, and cannot deny that he was then investigated for such impropriety. (Hollander 16-2).

The divorce action settled pursuant to Stipulation of Settlement dated November 2, 2001. (Ex. E). Plaintiff consented to the divorce settlement at that time and never indicated that he was coerced. (Ex. E). In fact, on the record before Judge Lobis, the plaintiff was specifically asked whether he believed that his divorce settlement was a fair resolution and whether he had been forced or coerced in any manner. Plaintiff answered that the settlement was fair and not coerced. (Ex. E). The Stipulation of Settlement along with the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Divorce Judgment were drafted by plaintiff's retained attorney. (Ex. E).

Plaintiff does not deny that he also continued to harass those associated with Ms.

Shipilina (other than her mother), by filing a disciplinary complaint against Nicholas J. Mundy in December of 2001, which was dismissed in October 2002. (Exs. J, K).

The plaintiff's opposition then continues with self-serving allegations that he received threatening telephone calls in February and March of 2002. (Ex. A ¶¶289-291, Hollander 21-

2, 3). Even assuming that such telephone calls were made, which is denied, there is no sufficient reason to believe that they were made in connection with a RICO conspiracy, or that the words used constituted a threat as opposed to plaintiff's subjective interpretation as to the intention of the call. (Ex. A ¶¶289-291). Nevertheless, there is no allegation that they were made by Mundy or Petrovich or at their behest.<sup>12</sup> (Hollander 21-2, 21-3).

In March, 2002, the plaintiff, pro se, instituted a proceeding in the New York County Family Court against Ms. Shipilina seeking an order of protection arising out of these purported threats ironically claiming that he was the victim of harassment. (Ex. H). The plaintiff does not deny that this petition was dismissed after trial on August 12, 2002. This was just one of many frivolous applications made by plaintiff. Judge refused discovery.

In May of 2002, the plaintiff, pro se, moved to vacate and set aside the Stipulation of Settlement arising out of his divorce action, which was denied by Hon. Justice Joan B. Lobis on August 1, 2002. (Ex. F). In plaintiff's affidavit in support of his motion to vacate, he indicated that Ms. Shipilina engaged in a "methodical, cold-blooded cabal that has trampled [his] rights as a human being and driven him into a state of deep emotional despair, depression and anxiety...and necessitates the daily use of prescribed psychotropic medication, Paroxetine HCL at 40 mg a day." (Ex. F ¶3). His admitted emotional distress appears to have been created by what he perceives to be alleged improper actions on the part of his wife, as opposed to this RICO claim. Did not connect the dots until dissection of Taff's memo

Further, as much as the plaintiff would like this Court to now to believe that "there is a fact dispute here that can be resolved through discovery" as to whether he was under "duress, coercion and fraud" when he entered into the divorce, this issue has already been resolved by a competent Court and the plaintiff is collaterally estopped from asserting otherwise in this action. (Hollander 20-3). The plaintiff acknowledges that he already had a chance to litigate this issue in his motion to vacate.<sup>13</sup> In fact, Justice Lobis' dedicated a large portion of her decision highlighting the facts which negate the proposition that the divorce settlement was coerced. (Ex. F). Justice Lobis cited to plaintiff's allocution on the record and the questions asked and answered in connection with that allocution, the provisions contained in the settlement agreement which undermine his claim of duress, duress isn't duress under the law the fact that intensive successful negotiation occurred over an extended period of time, the fact that he initialed every portion of the agreement, the fact that his own counsel prepared the documents, and his education as an attorney and MBA graduate to show that he should have been aware that he was entering into a binding agreement. (Ex. F). Lastly, plaintiff's opposition alleges that the divorce settlement was made by his attorneys without his knowledge or approval (Hollander 34-5). However, again, was it this issue was addressed by Justice Lobis. Nonetheless, the proper remedy is perhaps an action against his attorneys in that matter, not this RICO claim.

On March 25, 2003, the plaintiff commenced an action in the Supreme Court of the State of New York, County of New York, bearing Index No. 03/105646, against nine of the defendants named in the instant action, including Mundy and Petrovich alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress. (Ex. L). Despite the plaintiff's contentions that Mundy and Petrovich introduced such evidence to "create another false impression" that plaintiff "meant to harass," such information was provided to inform the Court as to the procedural history of opposition highlights his hysteria when he states that this was "just another effort by the Russian mafia" to harm him. (Hollander 24-1). Rather, the complaint was filed due to plaintiff's past abuse of the legal system.

B. Plaintiff's Allegations

The plaintiff commenced the instant Federal action by serving his complaint upon Mundy on or about June 10, 2003. (Ex. A). Petrovich has still never been properly served with a copy of the plaintiff's complaint.

i. The Purported Enterprise

Plaintiff's opposition clarifies that the enterprise he has named in this action is the Russian mafia. (Hollander pp. 26-31). Plaintiff further alleges that the defendants, including Mundy and Petrovich, are members of the Russian mafia. (Hollander 26-3, 27-1). As shown in the defendant's initial motion papers and more fully below, the plaintiff has not sufficiently *highly alleged that this enterprise exists and that Mundy and Petrovich are members of the enterprise. This perhaps is the most deficient part of his complaint.

ii. Plaintiff's Allegations Against Mundy and Petrovich

The defendants' initial Memorandum of Law laboriously sorted through plaintiff's nearly one hundred page chaotic complaint and carefully set forth all allegations asserted against misunderstood!

<sup>14</sup>Although it is unimportant for the purposes of this motion and notwithstanding plaintiff's opposition and purported affidavit of service attesting to the fact that the Summons with Notice in the emotional distress action was served upon Mundy and Petrovich, no such document was ever served upon them. (Hollander 24-2, 25-1). In any event, the purported service of the Summons with Notice upon Petrovich at Mundy's office was also procedurally improper as that was not Petrovich's place of business.

Mundy and Petrovich. (Dubin pp. 8-10).<sup>15</sup> Although virtually every allegation set forth in plaintiff's extensive complaint was referenced in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law as they pertained to Mundy and Petrovich, pages 33 through 37 of plaintiff's opposition finds a reason to nit-pick and asserts that certain trivial allegations were left out (Hollander pp.33-34) and others contained incidental misstatements (Hollander pp. 34-37). Therefore, for the convenience of this Court and to appease plaintiff, the defendants have again summarized the allegations against Mundy and Petrovich below incorporating the purported omissions and misstatements addressed by plaintiff's opposition.<sup>16</sup>

Mundy and Petrovich are alleged to be three of nineteen domestic members of the enterprise, in addition to the countless foreign members. In particular, Mundy is alleged, in conclusory fashion, to (1) act as consiliari and manager of United States immigration issues in New York for the enterprise; (2) operate a green card and visa mill that fraudulently obtains United States visas, residency status and naturalization for Russian aliens (Hollander 34-1); (3) advise its clients to commit perjury before the INS, IRS, Customs Service and the New York State Courts; (4) use coercion and intimidation against parties, witnesses and informants in proceedings; (5) participate in money laundering and the use of international facilities to aid a racketeering enterprise; and (6) mastermind and direct illegal activities to acquire United States visas, residency status and naturalization for the members of the enterprise. (Ex. A, ¶¶27-32).

Petrovich is alleged to (1) assist Mundy in executing illegal activities necessary to import and keep in members of the enterprise in the United States and (2) be an attorney licensed in Russia, acting as an attorney in the United States, although not admitted, under the supervision of Mundy. (Ex. A, ¶33, ¶34) (Hollander 34-2).

The complaint avers that Mundy and Petrovich, as members of the enterprise, engaged in illegal activities against the plaintiff by: (1) using fraudulent and/or illegal means to assist Ms. Shipilina in obtaining immigration benefits (Ex. A, ¶207, ¶¶222-225, ¶229, ¶230, ¶232, ¶234, ¶¶236-237, ¶¶239-241) (Hollander 33-1, 33-2); (2) using illegal means to protect the enterprise and prevent plaintiff from exposing the activities of the enterprise (Ex. A, ¶228, ¶243, ¶¶275-277, ¶¶316-318) (Hollander 33-4); (3) intimidating plaintiff to settle divorce proceedings that he instituted against Ms. Shipilina (Ex. A, ¶¶243-245, ¶273) (Hollander 33-3); (4) intimidating witnesses from providing testimony to any United States authorities/Courts including the plaintiff's divorce proceedings and any other U.S investigation such as the INS (Ex. A, ¶¶265-268) (Hollander 34-4); (5) intimidating plaintiff to dissuade him from trying to set aside the agreed upon divorce settlement (Ex. A, ¶¶280-284); (6) participating in tampering and bribery to prevent the deportation of Ms. Shipilina (Ex. A, ¶¶254-255, ¶¶286-290, ¶306, ¶307); and (7) using illegal means of bribery in violation of the foreign corrupt practices act (money which came from illegal Russian mafia activities) including the bribing of a New York City Detective, intimidating plaintiff and witnesses through Chechen Islamic Mafiosi in order to obstruct the criminal indictment against Inessa Shipilina in Russia for defaming plaintiff (which was closed as a result) and preventing plaintiff from cooperating with the INS, and laundering money through the international systems to carry out such intimidation and bribery (Ex. A, ¶¶286-290, ¶¶293-295, ¶298, ¶300, ¶301, ¶306, ¶307, ¶318) (Hollander 35-1, 35-2).

of A allegations*

Through the use of these outlandish, extremely broad and incredible allegations, the plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich engaged in predicate criminal acts in furtherance of an alleged RICO conspiracy as follows: (1) white slave trade and importing aliens for immoral purposes; (2) fraud and misuse of visas and the procurement of nationality unlawfully; (3) witness and informant tampering (Hollander 35-3); (4) use of United States mail and interstate and international telephone systems to further mail and wire frauds; (5) bribery using international facilities (Hollander 36-1); and (6) money laundering. Plaintiff's opposition indicates that aiding in racketeering activity is also being alleged as a predicate act committed by Mundy and Petrovich. (Hollander 74-4).

*check
Prosecution & witnesses*

In addition, it is alleged that Mundy and Petrovich committed other criminal acts including (1) suborning perjury before the INS, IRS, Customs Service, New York State Courts and New York City Police Department (Ex. A, ¶701, ¶703, ¶707, ¶708, ¶724, ¶725); (2) obstructing INS proceedings and aiding and abetting such proceedings with coercion and intimidation to obtain permanent residency for Ms. Shipilina (Ex. A, ¶702, ¶709, ¶710, ¶715, ¶721, ¶726, ¶727, ¶731, ¶737) (Hollander 36-2); (3) tampering with witnesses or victims including threats of injury, intimidation and coercion and aiding and abetting such tampering in connection with the plaintiff's divorce/annulment proceedings, the criminal defamation case in Russia and the INS investigation against Ms. Shipilina (Ex. A, ¶704, ¶¶711-714, ¶716, ¶¶728-730, ¶732) (Hollander 36-3); (4) aiding and abetting bribery in violation of the foreign corrupt practices act by bribing New York City Detective Henning (Ex. A, ¶717, ¶719, ¶733, ¶735) (Hollander 36-4); (5) aiding and abetting the laundering of money received from the Russian mafia and used to threaten witnesses and bribe Russian officials (Ex. A, ¶718, ¶734) (Hollander 36-5); (6) aiding and abetting the harassment of plaintiff (Ex. A, ¶¶720, ¶736); and (7) conspiring to violate federal law, commit predicate acts and break New York criminal laws. (Ex. A ¶¶705-706, ¶¶722-723, ¶¶738-739) (Hollander 33-5).

Accordingly, the plaintiff has alleged seven causes of action against Mundy and Petrovich. The first, second, third and fourth causes of action allege violations of sections 18 U.S.C. 1962(a), (b), (c) and (d) respectively. (Ex. A., ¶¶886-893). The fifth cause of action alleges intentional infliction of emotional distress (Ex. A., ¶894, ¶895). The sixth cause of action alleges abuse of process (Ex. A. ¶898, ¶899) and the seventh cause of action alleges malicious prosecution (Ex. A, ¶¶896-899)<sup>17</sup>.

Plaintiff claims that "the Enterprise movants, however, have seized on my complaint's length, not just to imply that the length itself is wrong, but to omit, misrepresent and twist allegations of out of their common sense meaning in the probable hope that the time pressured court will miss what the Complaint actually alleges." (Hollander 37-2). Each and every purported exclusion or misstatement that the plaintiff highlighted throughout pages 33 through 37 of his opposition has now been incorporated above to provide a complete summary of the allegations against Mundy and Petrovich. These additional allegations do not alter the fact that the plaintiff has failed to adequately plead his RICO and state law claims against Mundy and Petrovich.

iii. How These Facts Turn Into A RICO Claim Is Ludicrous

How this becomes a RICO action spanning the world is absurd. Despite plaintiff's attempts to make this matter complex and turn it into a RICO action spanning the globe, the facts, if summarized, are very simple.

makarenko The plaintiff met a woman in Russia. He pursued her, lived with her and fell in love with her. He was aware at all times as to the nature of her profession, or at least to a certain degree. In fact, he assisted her in locating work in a gentlemen's club and told her to pursue her work as a night club dancer regardless if other people judged her. He suspected dishonesty on her part, yet married her in Russia nonetheless. He then took her back to New York as his wife. When he further suspected infidelities at her work, he oddly contracted for how she should behave and what she could and could not do. He was even willing to accept her alleged infidelities and her line of work. The way he justifies being lured by his wife is that he was allegedly drugged for over two years, a statement so far-fetched it is uncertain how this obvious well-educated plaintiff can even believe it, let alone allege it. Ironically, by his very own definition, the plaintiff himself was a part of and pursued the alleged underworld he now alleges exists. In any event, the plaintiff and his wife eventually separated. His wife was forced to seek protection from the court due to plaintiff's conduct. Plaintiff then sought an annulment. After being unsuccessful in procuring an annulment, a settlement was reached and the divorce finalized. Unable to let go and in an effort to re-live the marriage and divorce, he pursued an onslaught of frivolous litigation such as a disciplinary action against his former wife's attorneys, a motion to set aside the divorce settlement, a Family Court proceeding seeking protection, a defamation case against Ms. Shipilina's mother, many other applications for protection with the courts, police department and FBI (all of which turned out to be unsuccessful), a state court action and the instant RICO action. His motive in pursuing such a cause of action is best described by plaintiff himself: "could anything demonstrate...pain more effectively than a man discovering that the woman he loved and cherished was, and continued to be, a porn star who had deceived him into marriage..." (Hollander 17-1).

The only time Mundy's or Petrovich's names are even mentioned in a specific context emerging coercion bribery, intimidation, uses for child slavery in all these events, is in defending Ms. Shipilina in the divorce and assisting her in certain suborning attorney before govt agencies immigration matters. In fact, upon even a cursory review of the complaint, the only thing that is clear, as this matter pertains to Mundy and Petrovich, is that they advocated zealously on by very cursory

if intimidation, bribery etc can be considered zealous Ms. Shipilina's behalf in connection with her divorce. Nowhere in plaintiff's rendition of the facts is it alleged that Mundy or Petrovich were involved with any other defendants, other than 20120 Complaint 485 et al. Re this memo on abgahr p 17-21

 Ms. Shipilina, or performed such alleged illegal activities for anyone other than Ms. Shipilina.

In fact, plaintiff has admitted that he knows of no connection between Mundy and Petrovich
Mundy with Gladat was said and any of the other defendants. (Hollander 29-1). Never said that

To cloud plaintiff's inability to sufficiently allege that Mundy and Petrovich are among Temporary doesn't reflect this purported enterprise or engaged in wrongdoing, the plaintiff grasps for straws and asserts
 "if [sic] seems a little ludicrous that I, a sole practitioner lawyer, eking out a living could 'harass, intimidate and persecute' an entire law firm that advertises on the Internet in Russian on the very same page as an agency marketing Russian girls for marriage and linked to pornography, www.russianday.com, Exhibit C, and has offices in New Jersey, New York City and Rockland County." (Hollander 25-2). This perhaps best demonstrates the ends to which he will go to manipulate facts to manufacture his baseless claims. Plaintiff has attached some sort of printout from the internet site, www.russianday.com, as Exhibit C to his declaration, allegedly demonstrating that Mundy advertises on this website, which purportedly markets
 Russian girls for marriage and is linked to pornography.

First, it is completely suspect where this printout, with no foundation, bearing Mundy's
Debby checked it while miff called it technical have done name (although not Mundy's address or any other information) has come from. This alleged advertisement appears to simply be a copy of the law firm's letterhead onto this web-site.
 Mundy does not advertise on this website and this document could have been created by anyone, including the plaintiff. Nevertheless, Exhibit C lends absolutely no credibility to the plaintiff's claims. Plaintiff's attempt to mislead the Court into believing that this document impacts this matter is only his most recent effort to desperately hold on to this meritless claim.

Website since taken down

If one actually goes to this website at different times and looks at the advertisement space at top center of the page where Mundy allegedly advertised, one will see many different types of advertisements from food to eyeglasses to cruise ship companies. If one hits the "refresh" button, a different advertisement will appear. If one continues to perform this activity on the following day, many other different advertisements will appear.

Thus, under the plaintiff's reasoning, since these advertisements also appear on the same internet page as advertisements which allegedly market Russian girls for marriage and are linked to pornography, these eyeglass, cruise ship and food companies must also be engaged in wrongdoing and be considered part of the Russian mafia. In fact, every other advertiser that can be found on this page such as florists, hotels, mortgage brokers, telephone companies, insurance agencies, banks, electronic companies, etc. must also be engaged in wrongdoing or be part of the Russian mafia under plaintiff's analysis. It is significant that the most heavily relied upon piece of documentary evidence that the plaintiff can even conjure up to support his RICO claim or allegation that Mundy and Petrovich are somehow connected to Russian woman, pornography and improper immigration matters is this innocuous advertisement. At the very least, the introduction of this meaningless document evidences that if the plaintiff truly had any real evidence, other than his creative imagination, purporting to demonstrate Mundy and Petrovich's involvement with the Russian mafia, he surely would have alerted the Court to it by attaching it to his declaration.

At best, the plaintiff's investigation and allegations have uncovered that the plaintiff may have been used by Ms. Shipilina for immigration purposes, that Ms. Shipilina may have been engaged in stripping or prostitution, that Ms. Shipilina may have been unfaithful to him, that Ms. Shipilina may have used drugs, that plaintiff may have been threatened by a friend of Ms. Shipilina to curb his harassment, that Ms. Shipilina may never have cared about plaintiff, that she may have misled him, caused him embarrassment, humiliated him. There are a lot of possibilities. What is perfectly clear, however, is that these isolated alleged incidents of wrongdoing set forth by plaintiff do not establish a claim for RICO or his other state law claims. Plaintiff's opposition indicates that Mundy and Petrovich "seek to have the Court view the allegations against them in isolation... That would mean missing the forest for the trees.... If defendants are permitted to narrow the focus of individual defendants in a vacuum, then there is no RICO statute..." (Hollander 31-4). Precisely. All the plaintiff has set forth, at most, are allegations of isolated acts, some criminal, some not. If anything, the proper authorities to deal with plaintiff's allegations were the divorce court or possibly a criminal investigation by the New York Police Department, INS or the federal government, not this Court. In fact, plaintiff's opposition concedes this and asserts that INS, FBI, New York City Board of Elections, U.S. Attorney and District Attorney investigations are being held.

(Hollander 38-1). The RICO statute was not designed to allow private citizens to redress the wrongs that the plaintiff claims here.

In addition to vague allegations of wrongdoing, the best the plaintiff can do to tangentially tie Mundy and Petrovich to these isolated incidents of alleged wrongdoing on the part of Ms. Shipilina is to set forth a purported advertisement which was found at some unspecified time and which found its way to this website in some unspecified manner, among thousands of other advertisers. It is unclear how this information benefits plaintiff's claims.

POINT I

PLAINTIFF HAS STILL FAILED TO SATISFY THE STANDARD OF REVIEW ON A MOTION TO DISMISS PURSUANT TO FED. R. CIV. P. 12(b)(6) AS PLAINTIFF CAN PROVE NO SET OF FACTS WHICH WOULD ENTITLE HIM TO RELIEF

Plaintiff's opposition sets forth his abridged version of the standard of review on a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) and concludes that dismissal is appropriate only when it is clear that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of claim which would entitle him to relief when all inferences are read in favor of plaintiff. (Hollander pp 38-39). Plaintiff's opposition further asserts that the issue on a motion to dismiss is not whether he will prevail but whether the plaintiff is entitled to offer evidence to support his claims. (Hollander p. 39). The defendants do not dispute these legal statements. However, as demonstrated infra and in the defendants' initial motion papers, the plaintiff has still not pled sufficient claims. Sufficiency determined by giving fact notice Conley 335US 47

Conveniently absent from plaintiff's characterization of the legal standard is the fact that the plaintiff must sufficiently set forth well pleaded factual allegations not bald conclusory statements and allegations, and that legal conclusions, deductions, opinions couched as factual allegations and unwarranted deductions of fact are not given a presumption of truthfulness. See Friedman v. U.S., 2003 WL 1460525 (S.D.N.Y. 2003); Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp.2d 392, 396-97 (S.D.N.Y. 2000); Lakonia Mgmt. Ltd. v. Meriwether, 106 F. Fernandez - conclusory allegations or legal conclusions masquerading as factual conclusions do not suffice

It is no wonder that plaintiff interestingly fails to address this case law, although cited in the defendants' initial motion papers, given that his entire complaint, and now his opposition, is based upon nothing more than bald conclusory allegations, conjecture and suspicion. While virtually every other line of the defendants' motion was addressed by plaintiff, it is noteworthy that this line of cases was ignored by plaintiff. Instead, plaintiff has inaccurately suggested, against the case law above, that conclusory allegations are acceptable as long as he provides "fair notice of the claims against" the defendants. (Hollander 31-2). Alternatively, plaintiff's opposition inaccurately suggests that if his complaint is comprised of bald conclusory statements, deduction and opinions, then the defendants should have moved for a more definite statement as opposed to dismissal. (Hollander 39-2). Unfortunately for the plaintiff, the line of cases cited above is contrary to his view of the law. Knowing this, the only support plaintiff can muster up to support of this statement is the case Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 156 L.E.2d 1, 122 S.Ct 992 (2002), which merely indicates that a defendant can move for a more definite statement if the pleading fails to specify allegations in a manner that provides sufficient notice. (Hollander 39-2).

In reviewing this motion to dismiss pursuant Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the Court can look not to only the complaint, but the documents attached or incorporated by reference thereto. International Broth. of Teamsters v. Carey, 163 F. Supp.2d 271, 279 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Kramer v. Time Warner Inc. 937 F.2d 767, 773 (2d Cir. 1991). In this context, the Second Circuit has held that a complaint is deemed to "include...documents that the plaintiff either possessed or knew about and upon which they relied in bringing the suit." Rothman v. Gregor, 220 F.3d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 2000). In fact, plaintiff admits that the documents attached to the defendants' initial motion papers can be considered by this Court. (Hollander 40-1). Plaintiff further admits that knowledge not enough, requires reliance, IT only argued against that not he had knowledge of such documents. (Hollander 40-1). Plaintiff also cannot deny that he has knowledge of the documents appended to the attached Reply Declaration since he drafted each and every letter, card and agreement appended thereto. Thus, the defendants assert that the plaintiff had possession and full knowledge of each and every exhibit attached to the instant motion, that the exhibits go to the heart of the complaint and the veracity of the statements made by the plaintiff therein, and it is therefore appropriate for this Court to consider the same in deciding the instant motion.<sup>18</sup>

PLAINTIFF'S FIRST, SECOND, THIRD AND FOURTH CAUSES OF ACTION FOR RICO VIOLATIONS SHOULD BE DISMISSED

A. The Threshold Requirements to Sustain RICO Claims

Plaintiff's complaint alleges civil RICO violations under 18 U.S.C. §1962(a), (b), (c) and (d). (Ex. A, ¶¶886-893). To prevail on a claim for damages under RICO, this Court has consistently employed the standard set for by the United States Supreme Court, the elements of which are set forth in the defendants' initial motion papers as well as above. Plaintiff's opposition concedes that these elements are necessary to plead RICO. (Hollander 44-3).

Despite the fact that the plaintiff is aware of these elements and has simply alleged that they have been satisfied, the plaintiff has clearly failed to sufficiently allege (1) the existence of two or more predicate acts against Mundy and Petrovich, (2) a pattern, (3) that Mundy and Petrovich invests, maintains or participates in an enterprise, (4) or that an enterprise even exists. Further, the plaintiff does not have standing to maintain this action. Lastly, the plaintiff's claim of conspiracy to commit RICO violations similarly fails.

<sup>18</sup>Despite plaintiff's protestations to the contrary, the defendants are not attempting to argue facts, are not attempting to turn this motion into one for summary judgment, and are not attempting to compel the Court to apply a higher standard than required for pleadings. (Hollander 3-2, 6-1, 77-1). To the contrary, the defendants' assert that the plaintiff has been unable to properly allege his RICO and state law claims as required under the Federal pleading standard and pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(a)(2) and Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) based upon a reading of the complaint itself and the documents attached to this motion which the plaintiff has knowledge of. In fact, even the plaintiffs' opposition acknowledges, albeit unintentionally, while citing to Gitterman v. Vitouis, 564 F. Supp. 46, 49 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) that the legal feasibility of the complaint must be tested, as opposed to merely accepting all allegations as true. (Hollander 4-1). Further, plaintiff cites to Villager Pond, Inc. v. Town of Darien, 56 F.3d 375, 378 (2d Cir. 1995) for the proposition that the Court should determine whether the complaint itself is legally sufficient." (Hollander 39-1).

B. Plaintiff's Complaint Fails To Adequately Allege Predicate Acts and Is Dismissable

i. Predicate Acts Based Upon Fraud Must Be Pled
With Particularity under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)

As demonstrated in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law, allegations of fraud that are pled as predicate acts in a RICO claim must satisfy Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). See Mills v. Polar Molecular Corp., 12 F. 3d 1170, 1176 (2d Cir. 1993); Economic Opportunity Comm'n of Nassau County v. County of Nassau, Inc., 47 F. Supp.2d 353, 361 (E.D.N.Y. 1999). In fact, the plaintiff acknowledges that when the "...predicate acts are fraudulent in nature, then Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) applies..." (Hollander 45-1). The plaintiff even cites to Supreme Court cases Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 122 L.Ed.2d 517, 113 S.Ct. 1160 (1993) and Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A. 534 U.S. at 513 for the proposition that allegations and predicate acts based upon fraud require greater particularity under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Hollander 46-2).

The Second Circuit has made clear that "[i]n the RICO context, Rule 9(b) calls for the complaint to specify the statements it claims were false or misleading, give particulars as to the respect in which plaintiffs contend the statements were fraudulent, state when and where the statements were made, and identify those responsible for the statements." Moore v. Paine Webber, Inc., 189 F.3d 165, 173 (2d Cir. 1999) (citations omitted) (quoting McLaughlin v. Anderson, 962 F.2d 187, 191 (1992)). This rule is clear and has been followed by many courts. See Economic Opportunity Comm'n of Nassau County v. County of Nassau, Inc. 47 F. Supp.2d at 361-362; Spoto v. Herkimer County Trust, 2000 WL 533293 *6 (N.D.N.Y. April 27, 2000); Official Publications, Inc. v. Kable News Co. Inc., 692 F. Supp. 239, 245 (S.D.N.Y. 1988), rev'd on other grounds, 884 F.2d 664 (2d Cir. 1989). Allegations that do not specify the time, place, speaker or content of the allegedly fraudulent statements do not satisfy the particularity requirement of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Denny v. Barber, 576 F.2d 465, 469, (2d Cir. 1978).

Unable to dispute these line of cases, plaintiff instead, can only cite to Int'l Motor Sports Group v. Gordon, 1999 WL 619633 at *3 (S.D.N.Y 1999) for the proposition that this Court decided, in the circumstances of that particular case, that "[a] plaintiff need not plead dates, times and places with absolute precision, so long as the complaint 'gives fair notice and reasonable notice to defendants for the claim and the grounds upon which it is based.'" (Hollander 47-2). However, plaintiff conveniently fails to mention that this Court quoted the Second Circuit and stated "to plead fraud with sufficient particularity, a complaint 'must (1) detail the statements (or omissions) that the plaintiff contends are fraudulent, (2) identify the speaker, (3) state where and when the statements (or omissions) were made, and (4) explain why the statements (or omissions) are fraudulent.'" Int'l Motor Sports Group v. Gordon, 1999 WL 619633 at *3 (quoting Harsco Corp. v. Segui, 91 F.3d 337, 347 (2d Cir. 1996)). This Court even acknowledged the use of the word "must" by Harsco. Id. The decision went on to acknowledge that "[t]he purpose of the rule is (1) to provide a defendant with fair notice of plaintiff's claim, (2) to safeguard a defendant's reputation from 'improvident charges of wrongdoing and (3) to protect against the institution of a strike suit.'" Id. (quotations omitted) (citing Harsco 91 F.3d at 347 quoting Acito v. IMCERA Group, Inc. 47 F.3d 47, 52 (2d Cir. 1995)). Plaintiff's attempt to convince this Court to ignore the line of cases cited above requiring specificity, in favor of a decision determined in a different context but which still acknowledged the specificity requirement under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) and the important purpose for doing so, should not be countenanced.

Alternatively, plaintiff attempts to overshadow the cases cited above and Rule 9(b) by continuously citing to Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 WL 216664679 *13 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) and suggesting that since information is within the defendant's knowledge, Rule 9(b)'s requirements should be read permissively. (Hollander 47-2). Unlike that case where the defendant was a corporate insider who possessed certain documents and the Court acknowledged that Rule 9(b) applies more leniently to complaints against corporate insiders, these defendants here are not corporate insiders and plaintiff has not shown what information is exclusively within the possession of the defendants, other than his general statement that details of predicate acts by the Russian mafia are not public. (Hollander 47-2). Further, plaintiff overlooks the fact that this Court acknowledged the importance of pleading fraud with particularity under Rule 9(b) and the policy goals behind this rule in its decision. Id. at *12.

Finally, where multiple defendants are involved, the complaint must inform each defendant of the nature of his alleged participation in the fraud. DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus., Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir. 1987). This is not disputed by plaintiff. (Hollander 48-3).

Plus it is

As shown in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law and below, the defendants predicate acts based upon fraud have not been alleged with sufficient particularity under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Despite plaintiff's suggestions to the contrary and in light of the case law cited infra above and in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law, merely alleging the "gist" of was said, some unspecified time period of when it was said and how the statements were generally made and misleading, is insufficient to plead predicate acts based upon fraud. (Hollander 48-1). In addition, the complaint has not informed Mundy and Petrovich specifically of their alleged participation in the fraud. Likewise, the plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged other non-fraudulent predicate acts.

ii. Predicate Acts Based Upon Fraud Have Not Been Pled with Particularity by Plaintiff under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b)

aa. Fraud Misuse of Visas and Procurement of Nationality Unlawfully

Plaintiff acknowledges that these alleged predicate acts are susceptible to the particularity requirement under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Hollander 49-3).

In respect to the plaintiff's allegations that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate criminal acts of fraud, misuse of visas and procurement of nationality unlawfully, nothing is set forth in the plaintiff's complaint other than vague conclusions. Plaintiff's opposition highlights the sections of the complaint which reference these predicate acts. (Ex. Inform perusal Ad

A. ¶¶19, ¶¶28-29, ¶¶32-33, ¶¶223-225, ¶¶324-325, ¶¶327-328, ¶¶408-409, ¶¶467-468, ¶491, ¶493, ¶503 ¶505, ¶514, ¶522, ¶524). (Hollander 50-3). As indicated in the defendants' initial motion papers, the plaintiff merely concludes that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate criminal acts of fraud and misuse of visas and procurement of nationality unlawfully by running an alien registration and visa mill operation. There is absolutely no other support, or particularity, for the plaintiff's conclusory allegations that Mundy and Petrovich participated in such illegal activity. (Ex. A. not included in H&M not 224 in H&M ¶¶19, ¶¶28-29, ¶¶32-33, ¶¶223-225, ¶¶324-325, ¶¶327-328, ¶¶408-409, ¶¶467-468, ¶491, ¶493, ¶503 ¶505, ¶514, ¶522, ¶524). (Hollander 50-3).

The defendants highlighted this fact in their initial motion papers and noted that with the exception of his ex-wife, Ms. Shipilina, the plaintiff failed to name a single person for whom or with whom these purported illegal activities were performed. The plaintiff has provided absolutely no specifics whatsoever. No specific dates, times, names or places have been furnished. Plaintiff fails to identify a single document or statement that purports to show such conduct on the part of Mundy and Petrovich. In essence, the plaintiff's complaint does not demonstrate by any stretch of the imagination that Mundy and Petrovich participated in fraud, misuse of visas, or procurement of nationality unlawfully. Rather, the only thing that is clear upon a review of these paragraphs of the plaintiff's complaint is that Mundy and Petrovich assisted Ms. Shipilina with immigration matters and advocated on her behalf in connection with her divorce proceedings.

 Plaintiff's silence in addressing these failures constitutes an admission that they he has not pled such acts with the requisite particularity as they pertain to Mundy and Petrovich. check law
 (Hollander pp. 49-50). Plaintiff has not addressed any of the concerns noted above, and he continues to cling to this bare allegation in the complaint. Rather, plaintiff only states that such information is in the possession of the defendant and ie asks this Court to ignore the cases cited above requiring particularity in favor of reading Rule 9(b) permissively. (Hollander 50-3). It states categories but hasn't provided details of A know
 However plaintiff fails to state what information is in the defendants' knowledge and why the pleading of fraud as required under the Federal Rules should be ignored. In addition, despite plaintiff's contentions that the complaint in general provides fair notice (Hollander 50-3), Failed to law the complaint must inform each defendant, including Mundy and Petrovich, of the nature of his alleged participation in this fraud, where multiple defendants are involved. See DiVittorio v. Equidyne Extractive Indus., Inc., 822 F.2d 1242, 1247 (2d Cir. 1987). The allegations in this regard, cited above, which reference Mundy and Petrovich in particular, do not accomplish this. (Hollander 50-3) The other conclusory allegations cited by plaintiff in his opposition that reference the other defendants' engagement in such activities also do not provide adequate notice to Mundy and Petrovich, or sufficiently demonstrate their involvement. (Hollander 50-3).

The plaintiff has still not pled the requisite elements of mail and wire fraud, nor has he pled these acts with particularity as required under the Federal Rules.

The defendants' Initial Memorandum of Law properly set for the elements that must be satisfied for a complaint alleging mail and wire fraud: (1) the existence of a scheme to defraud, (2) defendant's knowing or intentional participation in the scheme, and (3) the use of interstate mails or transmission facilities in furtherance of the scheme. S.Q.K.F.C., Inc. v. Bell Atlantic Tricon Leasing Corp., 84 F.3d 629, 633 (2d Cir. 1996). See also Browning Avenue Realty Corp. v. Rosenheim, 774 F.Supp. 129, 137 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (to plead mail and wire fraud, plaintiff must allege participation in a scheme to defraud and knowing use of interstate mails or interstate wires to further the scheme). These cases are clear and the plaintiff's opposition has not indicated that they have been overruled or distinguished.

Nevertheless, in a blatant attempt to mislead this Court into believing that the defendants have provided the incorrect elements necessary to allege such claims, plaintiff asserts that "[t]he Enterprise movants exploit the similarity between mail and wire fraud to foist the false assumption that when a letter is sent or delivered by the US Postal Service, it must cross state lines...Not true, whether a letter sent through US Postal Service travels across town or around the world is irrelevant for mail fraud." (Hollander 58-2). Essentially, the plaintiff argues against the cases cited above, and asserts that, in respect to element three above, interstate use is only required under the wire fraud statute, not the mail fraud statute. (Hollander 58-2). Although plaintiff cites to U.S v. Zagari, 111 F.3d 307, 327 (2d Cir. 1997) for this contention, this case does not stand for this proposition, no matter how badly plaintiff would like it to. (Hollander 58-1)<sup>19</sup>.

Plaintiff's opposition cannot satisfactorily dispute that he has not alleged any facts to support the allegations that there was a scheme to defraud the plaintiff by interstate mails or wires or that these defendants knowingly participated in such a scheme, even if all allegations of the complaint pertaining to Mundy and Petrovich as referenced by plaintiff in his opposition <sup>19</sup>U.S v. Zagari, 111 F.3d 307, 327 (2d Cir. 1997) only states that the essential elements of a mail or wire fraud violation are (1) scheme to defraud, (2) money or property as the object of the scheme, and (3) use of mails or wires to further the scheme. This is far different than what plaintiff has set forth. (Hollander 58-1).

are read. (Ex. A ¶¶31, ¶¶227-228, ¶232, ¶234, ¶236, ¶240, ¶241, ¶243, ¶245, ¶254, ¶265, ¶273, ¶275, ¶¶280-282, ¶¶287-289, ¶¶293-295, ¶298, ¶¶300-301, ¶¶306-308, ¶¶315-318, ¶488, ¶493, ¶¶495-498, ¶505, ¶¶507-510) (Hollander 57-1, 59-3). Plaintiff's mere conclusion that Mundy and Petrovich acted with the intent to defraud is still not sufficient. In fact, plaintiff's opposition only highlights that Mundy and Petrovich did not participate in any scheme to defraud. Plaintiff asserts, in his opposition, that the scheme was that the Russian mafia tricked American men into bringing mafia managers and prostitutes to America as companions and wives (Hollander 59-1) and that the scheme falsely depicted "its managers and prostitutes as honest, hard-working women who want to raise a family because if the truth were told the mafia knows American men would run the other way" (Hollander 59-1). Even assuming that these are "schemes to defraud" as contemplated by the statute, there is no allegation that Mundy and Petrovich knowingly participated in these schemes.

Moreover, the crux of the plaintiff's allegations is that Mundy and Petrovich used only intrastate and international mail and wire systems, not interstate systems. (Ex. A ¶31, ¶¶227-228, ¶232, ¶234, ¶236, ¶240, ¶241, ¶243, ¶245, ¶254, ¶265, ¶273, ¶275, ¶¶280-282, ¶¶287-289, ¶¶293-295, ¶298, ¶¶300-301, ¶¶306-308, ¶¶315-318, ¶488, ¶493, ¶¶495-498, ¶505, ¶¶507-510). Despite plaintiff's protestations to the contrary, to properly plead mail and wire fraud violations, the plaintiff must demonstrate interstate use as cited in the cases above and in the defendants' initial motion papers. Although plaintiff asserts that intrastate mail communications are covered by the mail fraud statute, he can only cite to the Eighth Circuit (US v. Elliot 89 F.3d 1360, 1364 (8th Cir. 1996)), which is contrary to this Circuit. (Hollander 58-2).

ought to use not only interstate filed to highlight see 493 same state interstate

Although plaintiff asserts that international wire communications are covered by the wire fraud act, he can only cite to a dissenting opinion in the Third Circuit (US v. Goldberg, 830 F.2d 459 (3d Cir. 1987)) and the Ninth Circuit (Wentz v. US, 244 F.2d 172, 175 (9th Cir. 1957)) for this proposition, which, in any event, is contrary to the Second Circuit and Southern District decisions cited above. (Hollander 62-1). The defendants' initial Memorandum of Law has sufficiently demonstrated that plaintiff has not alleged such interstate use on the part of Mundy and Petrovich, and these arguments will not be rehashed herein. (Dubin pp. 25-28). Plaintiff's opposition does not alter this fact. (Hollander pp. 62-64). check

Given that the plaintiff has failed to demonstrate a scheme to defraud or that Mundy and Petrovich knowingly participated in the scheme, and has further failed to show that they used interstate mail or wire communications in furtherance of the scheme, the plaintiff cannot state a claim for mail or wire fraud.

Additionally, plaintiff acknowledges that these alleged predicate acts, based upon fraud, are susceptible to the particularity requirement under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Hollander 57-2). Despite admitting this, they try to lessen the standard apparently recognizing that they have not properly plead such predicate acts. (Hollander 57-2, 58-1, pp. 64-66). In fact, plaintiff suggests that he is unaware of any specifics, and, instead, asks this Court to allow them to embark on a fishing expedition at the expense of over sixty defendants to determine whether such predicate acts were committed. (Hollander 67-1). Examining all of the paragraphs, as cited by plaintiffs' opposition, which purportedly allege the predicate acts of mail and wire fraud as they pertain to Mundy and Petrovich, (Ex. A ¶31, ¶¶227-228, ¶232, ¶234, ¶236, ¶240, ¶241, ¶243, ¶245, ¶254, ¶265, ¶273, ¶275, ¶¶280-282, ¶¶287-289, ¶¶293-295, ¶298, ¶¶300-301, ¶¶306-308, ¶¶315-318, ¶488, ¶493, ¶¶495-498, ¶505, ¶¶507-510), it is clear that the requisite specificity is not provided. Again, the deficiencies of the plaintiff's pleading of these allegations are addressed fully in the defendants' initial motion papers and will not be repeated herein. (Dubin pp. 28-30). #### cc. Bribery as a Predicate Act

Despite plaintiff's citation to the Eighth Circuit case of Abel v. Farmers Commodities Corp., 259 F.3d 910, 919 (8th Cir. 2001) for the proposition that Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) does not apply to the predicate act of bribery (Hollander 70-2), this Circuit has stated that when an allegation of bribery is a predicate act for a RICO claim, it must meet Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b) particularity requirements. Mayatextil v. Liztex, 1993 WL 51094 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (citing Gregoris Motors v. Nissian Motor Corp., 630 F. Supp. 902, 912 (S.D.N.Y. 1986)).

Plaintiff's opposition identifies those paragraphs which relate to his allegations of bribery. Specifically, the plaintiff references ¶¶254-255, ¶323, ¶499, ¶511, 517 and ¶523. (Hollander 70-2). A reading of these paragraphs, however, reveals that only ¶¶254-255, ¶499 and ¶511 are alleged against Mundy and Petrovich. <sup>without stated liability</sup> The plaintiff's conclusions that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate act of bribery are still insufficient under Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Ex. A., ¶¶499, ¶511). Even affording the rest of the plaintiff's complaint a liberal reading it is again clear that the plaintiff's allegations do not meet the heightened pleading requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). (Ex. A., ¶¶254-255). This lack of particularity is fully addressed in the defendants' initial motion papers and plaintiff's opposition has not cured his deficiencies nor addressed any of the issues raised by the defendants. (Dubin pp. 30-32). Rather, plaintiff essentially concedes that he has not pled this predicate act with any particularity, and, therefore, begs this Court to merely apply Rule 9(b) permissively in contradiction of the case law cited above. iii. Non-Fraudulent Predicate Acts Have Still Not Been Pled Properly

aa. White Slave Trade and Importing Aliens for Immoral Purposes as Predicate Acts

Even if the predicate act of white slave trade and importing aliens for immoral purposes must only comply with general notice requirements as opposed to Rule 9(b) specificity such allegation still must be sufficiently pled. (Hollander 50-2). Conclusions and inferences of wrongdoing are simply not sufficient. Alleg to law

In respect to the plaintiff's allegations that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate criminal acts of white slave trade and importing aliens for immoral purposes, nothing is set forth in the plaintiff's complaint other than vague conclusions. Plaintiff's opposition highlights the sections of the complaint which reference these predicate acts. (Ex. A. ¶19, ¶¶22-23 ¶27, ¶33, ¶38, ¶320, ¶322, ¶329, ¶403, ¶410, ¶434, ¶466, ¶485, ¶490, ¶502, ¶521). (Hollander 50-2) False

A careful review of these sections, however, reveals that only ¶27, ¶33, ¶485 and ¶490 reference Mundy and Petrovich. These paragraphs do nothing more than simply conclude that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate criminal acts of white slavery trade and importing aliens for immoral purposes by running an alien registration and visa mill operation. Even without a Rule 9(b) specificity analysis, the pleading of these conclusions is simply insufficient as a matter of law. Plaintiff has not indicated one person with or for whom these activities have been carried out, except for Ms. Shipilina. Plaintiff's allegations are simply inadequate, especially where plaintiff cannot allege, with the exception of his ex-wife Ms. Shipilina, a single person for whom or with whom these purported illegal activities were performed, or any dates, times, names or places where such activities took place. Find several liable false to law

bb. Witness and Informant Tampering As Predicate a Act

The plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich tampered with witnesses and informants in connection with the Russian criminal defamation case, the plaintiff's divorce proceeding and the INS' investigation into the deportation of Ms. Shipilina. (Ex. A, ¶¶224-225, ¶¶228-229, ¶¶232, ¶¶234, ¶¶236-237, ¶¶239-241, ¶¶243-245, ¶¶265-268, ¶¶273, ¶¶280-284, ¶¶286-290, ¶¶293, ¶¶297-298, ¶¶302-304, ¶¶306-312, ¶¶316-318, ¶¶487, ¶¶492, ¶¶504, ¶¶506, ¶¶509) even not employed (Hollander 51-1, 52-3). Even if the Court determines that the particularity requirement under Rule 9(b) does not apply to the predicate acts alleged in these contexts, it is still clear that the plaintiff's conclusion that Mundy and Petrovich engaged in witness and informant tampering is insufficient. The defendants' initial Memorandum of Law fully demonstrated how the plaintiff's vague and conclusory allegations, at this pleading stage, are insufficient to allege the predicate act of tampering. (Dubin pp. 18-25).<sup>20</sup> As such, this portion of the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law will not be repeated herein. Notably, other than criticizing the defendants, the plaintiff has not attempted to sufficiently plead his claims of tampering beyond the general allegation already contained in the complaint, nor has plaintiff addressed any of the arguments set forth in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law. (Hollander pp. 53-55). As to how could the plaintiff justify As to how could the plaintiff justify

cc. Money Laundering as a Predicate Act

Even if the predicate act of money laundering must only comply with general notice requirements as opposed to Rule 9(b) specificity as plaintiff's opposition suggests (Hollander 73-3), such allegations must still be pled with sufficient particularity to withstand a motion to

dismiss. Casio Computer Co. v. Sayo, 2000 WL 1877516 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). Conclusions and also to law inferences of wrongdoing are simply not sufficient.

The plaintiff's conclusions that Mundy and Petrovich participated in the predicate act of money laundering remain insufficient. The plaintiff's opposition has highlighted those paragraphs of the complaint which allege that Mundy and Petrovich engaged in the laundering of money. (Ex. ¶¶293, ¶¶295-299, ¶¶301-302). A reading of these paragraphs, however, also to law reveals they have not been sufficiently pled.

dd. Aiding in Racketeering Activity as a Predicate Act

Lastly, plaintiff's opposition makes clear that he is alleging aiding in racketeering activity as a predicate act. (Hollander 70-3, 71-1, 72-3, 73-2, 74-4, 117-2). Plaintiff's opposition references paragraphs ¶294, ¶¶298-302, ¶495, ¶497, ¶507, ¶532, however such check on statute allegations are not sufficient to plead this predicate act. As outlined below, plaintiff has been also to law unable to sufficiently allege any sort of link between Mundy, Petrovich and the other defendants to adequately plead that Mundy and Petrovich aided and abetted racketeering.

Indeed, the plaintiff has set forth nothing more than legal conclusions, deductions and opinions in support of his allegations of not only aiding in racketeering activity by Mundy and Petrovich, but white slave trade and importing aliens for improper purposes, misuse of visas, procurement of nationality unlawfully, witness tampering, mail and wire fraud, bribery and money laundering. The Court must not give such conclusory statements a presumption of also to law truthfulness in determining this motion to dismiss.

Thus, Mundy and Petrovich respectfully submit that since the plaintiff's complaint fails to adequately allege predicate acts in support of his RICO claims, the first, second, third and fourth causes of action must be dismissed as a matter of law.

C. Plaintiff's Complaint Fails to Adequately Allege a Pattern of Racketeering Activity

To sufficiently plead a pattern of racketeering activity, a plaintiff must allege "(1) at least two predicate acts of racketeering occurring within a ten-year period; (2) that the predicate acts are related to each other; and (3) that the predicate acts amount to or pose a threat of continuing criminal activity." Price v. Gast, 2000 WL 36981 *6 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 11, 2000). "It is this factor of continuity plus relationship which combines to constitute a pattern." H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. at 238-39, 109 S.Ct. at 290 (citations omitted). To satisfy the "continued criminal activity" prong in alleging a pattern of racketeering activity under a RICO cause of action, the plaintiff must make a showing of either "closed-ended continuity" or "open-ended continuity." Id. The plaintiff's opposition concedes that this is the standard for alleging a pattern of racketeering activity. (Hollander 77-2).

Plaintiff's complaint fails to sufficiently allege a pattern of racketeering activity since the plaintiff has not properly plead closed-ended continuity or open-ended continuity. (Hollander pp. 76-85).

i. Closed-ended Continuity

As addressed more fully in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law, in order to measure whether closed-ended continuity exists, several factors may be considered including the length of time over which the alleged predicate acts took place, the number and variety of acts, the number of participants, the number of victims, and the presence of separate schemes. GICC Capital Corp. v. Tech. Finance Group, Inc., 67 F.3d 463, 467 (2d Cir. 1995).

check
may be

However, the plaintiff must prove a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. at 242, 109 S.Ct. at 2902. Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy this requirement. Id. "Since the Supreme Court decided H.J. Inc., this Court [Second Circuit] has never held a period of less than two years to constitute a 'substantial period of time,' for the purposes of the closed-ended continuity test. De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d 286, 321 (2d Cir. 2001). The plaintiff does not dispute this case law. (Hollander 81-1).

Under this line of cases, and despite plaintiff's opposition, the plaintiff's complaint fails to properly plead a pattern of racketeering since closed-ended continuity is not sufficiently alleged. Specifically, the plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich first met with Ms. Shipilina at the "end of October, 2000" (Ex. A, ¶223) even though they did not appear on her behalf until after the plaintiff commenced the annulment/divorce proceedings in February, 2001. (Ex. B). Therefore, no predicate act is even alleged to have been committed by Mundy or Petrovich prior to October, 2000. The allegations in the complaint also reveal that neither Mundy nor Petrovich ever met with any other members of the purported enterprise prior to October, 2000 or participated with them in predicate acts. (Ex. A). The last predicate act alleged to have been committed by Mundy or Petrovich was in March, 2002. (Ex. A, ¶293, ¶298, ¶¶315-318, ¶715). The allegations in the complaint reveal that neither Mundy nor Petrovich ever committed any other predicate or criminal acts after March, 2002 or had any connection with other members of the enterprise after that date. (Ex. A). Hence, the period of time between the predicate acts purportedly committed by Mundy and Petrovich amounts to, at most, merely one year and five months. It is well settled that closed-ended continuity cannot exist over such an abbreviated period of time. See De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 321 (Court held that approximately one year and a half is too short of a period of time and does not satisfy the closed-ended continuity requirement). See also Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d 229, 242 (2d Cir. 1999).

*Falco v Bernas

Significantly, plaintiff does not dispute that he has only alleged predicate acts on behalf of Mundy and Petrovich for a period of one year and a half, at most. Plaintiff does not even attempt to now allege that predicate acts were committed by them extending over a longer period of time. (Hollander pp. 80-82). Thus, plaintiff admits that he has not alleged that Mundy and Petrovich committed predicate acts over a "substantial period of time." Instead, his entire opposition in this regard focuses on the predicate acts of other defendants. (Hollander pp. 80-82). Plaintiff cites to De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 321 and asserts that this Court must look at the predicate acts of the defendants together in determining duration. (Hollander 80-2, 81-1). Under this theory, the plaintiff alleges that the predicate acts began in 1999, when Ms. Shipilina and member Perlin targeted plaintiff, and continued until June, 2003 when plaintiff received a threatening telephone call (Hollander pp. 81-82). Plaintiff makes this argument, however, against a back-drop of facts which undoubtedly shows no relation whatsoever between Mundy and Petrovich and any of the other defendants in this action (other than that they represented Ms. Shipilina in her divorce). As discussed infra, the plaintiff even admits that he knows of no connection between the defendants. (Hollander 29-1). To therefore assert that he has satisfied the prong of closed-ended continuity based upon acts committed by other defendants, where plaintiff admittedly cannot allege a connection between Mundy, Petrovich and these other defendants, is insufficient.

ii. Open-ended Continuity

As addressed more fully in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law, to satisfy open-ended continuity, "the plaintiff need not show that the predicates extended over a substantial period of time but must show that there was a threat of continuing criminal activity beyond the period during which the predicate acts were performed." Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 242; The Jordan (Bermuda) Inv. Co. v. Hunter Green Inv. Ltd., 154 F. Supp.2d 682, 694 (S.D.N.Y. 2001). Plaintiff acknowledges that if he cannot plead closed-ended continuity, then he must allege a threat of continuing racketeering activity which is ongoing and that will project into the future. (Hollander 82-1).

Despite plaintiff's opposition, however, the plaintiff's complaint fails to properly plead a pattern of racketeering since open-ended continuity is also not sufficiently alleged. As indicated, the predicate acts alleged to have been committed by Mundy and Petrovich occurred from October, 2000 through March, 2002, at best. (Ex. A). There is no allegation that Mundy and Petrovich committed predicate acts after March, 2002 or until the complaint was filed and served in April, 2003. (Ex. A). Even taking the plaintiff's allegations as true, they go no further than describing past criminal acts by Mundy and Petrovich with finite goals, which were completed. The plaintiff's allegations, taken at their face value, if proved, would establish, at most, that there was a "discrete and relatively short-lived scheme" to defraud the plaintiff, which is insufficient to establish a claim of open-continuity. Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 244. The plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged that the past alleged wrongdoing on the part of Mundy and Petrovich in representing Ms. Shipilina in her divorce and immigration matters now implies a threat of continued criminal activity. De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 323.<sup>21</sup>

Certainly recognizing that there is no sufficient continuing threat by Mundy and Petrovich alleged, plaintiff's opposition, instead, again relies upon acts committed by other defendants and alleges that the Russian mafia will continue to commit predicate acts upon him and other American targets in the future. (Hollander 82-2, 83-2). Plaintiff further suggests that because Mundy and Petrovich are members of this Russian mafia, the requirement of open-ended continuity has been satisfied as it pertains to them. (Hollander 83-1). Again, the plaintiff improperly relies upon the acts of other defendants in this context to establish the requirement of open-ended continuity despite the fact that he is unable to show any connection between Mundy, Petrovich and the other defendants and despite the fact that he cannot show that Mundy and Petrovich are part of this purported enterprise, as discussed below. To therefore assert that he has satisfied the prong of open-ended continuity based upon acts allegedly committed by other defendants, where plaintiff admittedly cannot allege a connection between Mundy, Petrovich and these other defendants, is insufficient.

Failed to RDH

Thus, without sufficiently alleging closed-ended or open-ended continuity, the plaintiff has failed to plead a "pattern" of racketeering activity, and, thus plaintiff's RICO claims must fail as a matter of law.

D. Plaintiff's Complaint Fails to Adequately Allege The Existence of a RICO Enterprise

As detailed fully in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law, a RICO plaintiff must plead each defendant's participation in the "operation or management" of an "enterprise" as those terms are defined by the statute. Dietrich v. Bauer, 76 F. Supp.2d 312, 347 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). This is not disputed by plaintiff. (Hollander pp. 97-104).

Failed to RDH

A RICO enterprise is a "group of persons associated together for a common purpose or engaging in a common course of conduct...[It is] proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by any evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 101 S.Ct. 2524, 2528 (1981).

Falsely prove since complaint doesn't prove

See also Kashekar v. Rubin & Rothman, 97 F. Supp.2d at 391; First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp. 820 F. Supp., 89 (S.D.N.Y. 1993). Plaintiff acknowledges that this standard must be satisfied to allege an enterprise. (Hollander 99-1).

Failed to RDH

The purported enterprise alleged by plaintiff is the Russian mafia, which is identified as the "Russian Mafiosi in the media and by law enforcement agencies; the targets of the...FBI unit on Russian organized crime; various Russian, Chechen, American, Cypriot and Mexican gangsters along with those of other nationalities; assorted Chechen Islamic terrorists; and the more than thirty Russian gangs now operating in the U.S, most notably New York, Miami, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver..." (Hollander 2-4, 82-2, 83-1, 98-2, pp.26-31). Mundy and Petrovich are alleged by plaintiff to be some of the members of the Russian mafia. (Hollander 27-2, 28-2, 83-1, 98-2).

The plaintiff spends various paragraphs in his preliminary statement, five pages in his statement of facts and over seven pages in section E of the argument section of his opposition using every trick imaginable to obscure the case law cited above and one simple concept, namely that his complaint has not alleged an enterprise within the meaning of the statute as defined by this Circuit, and, more importantly, that Mundy and Petrovich are part of this purported enterprise. (Hollander pp. 26-31, 97-104). One trick utilized by plaintiff is his request that the Court simply "take judicial notice of the Russian mafia" from various news sources to demonstrate that he has adequately pled the existence of an enterprise and that Mundy and Petrovich are part of it, despite the fact that the law in this Circuit certainly demands much more. (Hollander 6-2, 27-1). Another trick employed by the plaintiff is his assertion that the existence of an enterprise and its members does not have to be sufficiently alleged at this pleading stage, but, rather, at the end of the discovery phase. (Hollander 27-1). As much as the plaintiff would like to use discovery, at the expense of over sixty defendants all over the world, as a fishing expedition to ascertain whether the enterprise, as he has alleged it, even exists, and who its members are, the cases interpreting the RICO statute requires more.

method to prove existence of enterprise alleged on brief
under Fed R/C

Taking a step back from the nearly three hundred pages of documents that the plaintiff has set before this Court (consisting of plaintiff's complaint, declaration with exhibits and memorandum of law in opposition), it becomes clear that the plaintiff's failure to properly plead the existence of an enterprise, and that Mundy and Petrovich are part of it, is perhaps the most deficient part of his complaint.

Regardless of the plethora of cases and creative arguments set forth by plaintiff in his opposition, he still cannot change the fact that a reading of the complaint makes clear that the entire foundation and configuration of the alleged enterprise centers around Ms. Shipilina and the people she purportedly encountered and places to which she purportedly traveled. Based upon the tracking of Ms. Shipilina's purported dealings and travels, the plaintiff alleges that the Russian mafia exists and these sixty-three domestic and foreign persons and entities are members of this enterprise.<sup>22</sup> In fact, plaintiff admits that Ms. Shipilina is the only link: "[a]ll the RICO defendants do have some connection with Enterprise movant Shipilina because she's the thread that weaves through this section of the Russian mafia..." (Hollander 9-2). Even Mundy and Petrovich's association with Ms. Shipilina is tenuous as they have only been alleged to have represented her in the divorce/annulment proceedings commenced by the plaintiff and in isolated immigration matters.

<sup>22</sup>This same argument was elaborated upon in the defendants' initial motion papers. The plaintiff has been unable to discredit this argument. Although the plaintiff suggests that this is not true, he cannot offer any valid argument in support. In particular, the plaintiff states: "The Enterprise movant also try to discredit the existence of the Russian mafia by claiming 'the configuration of the alleged [E]nterprise centers around Ms. Shipilina and the people she purportedly encountered and places to which she purportedly traveled.' (Memorandum p 7-2). The Russian mafia does not center around Shipilina although the defendants in this case do have connections to her. Enterprise movant Shipilina is a mid-level manager and asset of the Russian mafia, who works with, works for, cooperates with or directs other members of the criminal enterprise. When I walked into the cross hairs of the Russian mob...Shipilina was the one dispatched by defendant Perlin to sucker me into unknowingly helping the mob infiltrate another of its members into the U.S.," (Hollander 28-1). Although plaintiff states that the enterprise does not center around her, he cannot adequately state why not, and, in fact, appears to admit unintentionally that it does center around her.

However, there is still absolutely no other connection offered by plaintiff among any of the defendants comprising this purported enterprise, or at least between Mundy, Petrovich and the other defendants, other than that they have had some form of contact with Ms. Shipilina. The plaintiff has been provided with an opportunity to show a connection, but still has not done so. In fact, the plaintiff's opposition explicitly admits that he knows of no other connection between the defendants other than the fact they have some connection with Ms. Shipilina. In the plaintiff's own words: "The Enterprise movant object, 'there is absolutely no connection offered by plaintiff among any of the defendants comprising the purported enterprise'...The Enterprise movant Kuba, Mundy and Petrovich claim their only connection with the defendants in this case is with Enterprise movant Shipilina...I don't know that and neither does this Court because there has been no discovery." (Hollander 29-1 emphasis added).<sup>23</sup>

What we are left, with when taking a step back, is not an enterprise, at least not one that includes Mundy and Petrovich. The complaint has failed to allege any sensible, logical, or coherent explanation as to how Mundy and Petrovich are joined to all these other defendants together as a group of the Russian mafia to perpetrate the acts and frauds alleged in the complaint. Indeed, there can be no such explanation, because no "association" exists. The complaint clearly fails to allege any sufficient facts revealing a continuous structure of the enterprise, interrelationship of alleged actions or coordinated roles played by the members of the purported enterprise which include Mundy and Petrovich. There is no other connection among Mundy and Petrovich and the other defendants, other than that Mundy and Petrovich represented Ms. Shipilina in isolated matters. Conclusory allegations that Mundy and <sup>23</sup>Even though plaintiff has not pled any connection between Mundy, Petrovich and any of the defendants, other than Ms. Shipilina, and admits to be unaware of any such connection, the plaintiff later attempts to divert this Court's attention away from this defect by painting the defendants' emphasis of this defect as "absurd" and providing an analogy which is unconvincing. (Hollander 30-1).

Petrovich and disparate parties are associated in fact by virtue of their involvement with Ms. Shipilina are insufficient to sustain a RICO claim, absent specific allegations as to how the members were associated together in an enterprise. First Nationwide Bank v. Gelf Funding Corp., 820 F. Supp. at 98. Thus, the plaintiff's allegations do not plead as a matter of law an enterprise known as the Russian mafia, and certainly do not sufficiently allege that Mundy and Petrovich are a part of it.<sup>24</sup>

To deal with the fact that plaintiff has neither sufficiently alleged an enterprise or that Mundy and Petrovich are members, the plaintiff makes the most ridiculous argument yet. He states that "[g]iven the notoriety of the Russian mafia, the Court could actually take judicial notice of its existence. Whether the defendants are members of it is another matter, which must await discovery, for the Complaint only does what it is suppose to: allege they are members..." (Hollander 99-3).

This is flawed in so many ways. First, the law cited in the defendants' initial Memorandum of Law and below reveals that plaintiff must sufficiently allege the existence of an enterprise, including its members, at this pleading stage, not at some later time as plaintiff suggests. Plaintiff is not entitled to conduct discovery to discover facts that would establish a RICO enterprise. Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 44 F. Supp.2d 565, 580 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (citing Giannacopoulos v. Credit Suisse, 965 F. Supp. 549, 552-53 (S.D.N.Y. 1997)). Moreover, the parade of horrible would be endless, if not devastating, if this illogical reasoning by plaintiff was the law. Under the plaintiff's theory, any person or entity alleged to be part of the "Mafia" (which the Court would take judicial notice of as constituting an enterprise) would be susceptible to a RICO claim simply because they are alleged to be part of this group, and these alleged members could not succeed on a motion to dismiss (even if they had no involvement in the "mafia" and their involvement was not shown other than the conclusion that they were a member) because discovery would be the correct forum to determine whether they are or are not a member. This is preposterous. To show how ridiculous this argument really is, this Court, under plaintiff's reasoning, could be deemed to be a member of the Russian mafia in this RICO claim if it has had some association with Ms. Shipilina since judicial notice could be taken of the Russian mafia's existence as an enterprise, and a determination as to whether this Court was a member would have to await the conclusion of discovery.

<sup>24</sup>Besides the fact that the plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged the existence of an enterprise and its members under New York law, a common sense approach also dictates that plaintiff's allegations are highly deficient. In other words, all that has been alleged is that Mundy and Petrovich came into contact with and represented Ms. Shipilina, an alleged member of the enterprise, in isolated matters. If no further connection is required to be alleged among the defendants, by plaintiff's reasoning, anyone can be deemed to be a member of this enterprise and susceptible to a RICO claim merely by coming into contact with Ms. Shipilina, at least at this stage of the action. Outside the context of this matter, by plaintiff's reasoning, any person or attorney who comes into contact with or represents someone alleged to be affiliated with organized crime could also then be named as a member of the RICO enterprise if that person is a member of the enterprise, even if no association to the enterprise exists other than that they came into contact with or performed legal work for an alleged member on an occasion.

Thus, even if this Court does take judicial notice that the Russian mafia presently exists and that it constitutes an enterprise, there still must be a sufficient showing that the defendants plaintiff has named, like Mundy and Petrovich, are actually members of the enterprise. False

Lastly, it is clear that the plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged the existence of an enterprise under another line of cases recognized by the United States Supreme Court and this Court. "It is firmly established that, to state a claim under RICO, a Plaintiff must allege and prove the existence of an enterprise which is 'separate and distinct from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity.'" Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp.2d at 400 (quoting Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 44 F. Supp.2d 565, 580 S.D.N.Y. 1999). In Goldfine, since the alleged enterprise would not have existed but for the alleged pattern of racketeering activity, the RICO claims were dismissed against the defendants. Id.

The United State Supreme Court held in United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583, 101 S.Ct. at 2524 that the "enterprise" is not the 'pattern of racketeering activity'; it is an entity separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages."

In Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., the RICO claims were dismissed because the plaintiff did not allege an enterprise separate and apart from its pattern of racketeering activity. The Court found that even assuming that the defendants were part of a continuing enterprise, it was part of that enterprise only by virtue of the alleged racketeering activity. Therefore, plaintiff had not alleged an ascertainable structure distinct from that inherent in the alleged pattern of racketeering activity, and the alleged enterprise including the defendants would not have existed were the predicate acts removed from the equation.

Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 44 F. Supp. at 581.

Despite plaintiff's best efforts to prove otherwise, each of these cases cited above are still valid law and have never been overturned. (Hollander pp. 100-101). In fact, many other Courts including Courts in this Circuit have agreed and followed their reasoning. See Brewer v. Village of Old Field, 2004 WL 691715 (E.D.N.Y. 2004) (to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion in a civil RICO case, the plaintiff must allege the existence of an enterprise which is separate and distinct from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity); G-I Holdings Inc. v. Baron & Budd, 238 F. Supp.2d 521 (2002) (plaintiff adequately alleged an enterprise that was sufficiently distinct from defendant's law firm to support claim alleging racketeering activity); Anatian v. Coutts Bank Switzerland Ltd, 193 F.3d 85 (2d. Cir. 1999) (affirm the District Court's ruling that the enterprise must be sufficiently distinct from the pattern of racketeering activity); Mark v. J.I. Racing Inc., 1997 WL 403179 *4 (E.D.N.Y. 1997) (the enterprise must have some sort of existence independent of the commission of the predicate acts); Department of Economic Development v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 924 F. Supp. 449 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (must allege a distinct person and enterprise to state a RICO claim).<sup>25</sup>

In light of the cases cited above, plaintiff's RICO claims further fail since the plaintiff has not plead an enterprise which would exist as a continuous structure, separate and distinct from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity. To the contrary, plaintiff's allegations reveal that the defendants are only part of the purported enterprise by virtue of the alleged racketeering activity. The plaintiff has not alleged that the this purported segment of the Russian mafia would still exist if the predicate acts alleged were removed from the equation. The plaintiff's attempt, with nothing more than conclusions and gigantic inferences, to claim that the Russian mafia, or at least this segment, would exist separate from the predicate acts alleged by running strip clubs is unpersuasive, unfounded, speculative and simply insufficient. (Hollander 103-2).

E. Plaintiff Lacks Standing to Assert a RICO Claim

Plaintiff acknowledges that he must satisfy three requirements to have standing to assert a RICO violation: (i) violation of section 1962; (ii) injury to business or property; and (iii) causation of the injury by the violation. First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d

763, 767 (2d Cir. 1994) cert denied 513 U.S. 1079 (1995); Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23 (2d Cir. 1990). Plaintiff further acknowledges that this third requirement is satisfied if his injuries are both factually and proximately caused by the alleged RICO violation. Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 268, 112 S.Ct. 1311, 1316-1318 (1992); Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d 113 (2d Cir. 2003). (Hollander 105-2).

Take to not necessarily alleged

While the term proximate cause is utilized, the Second Circuit has held that liability under statutes such as RICO does not "depend on whether there is proximate causation as that term is used at common law." Abrahams v. Young & Rubicam Inc., 79 F.3d 234, 237 (2d Cir. 1996). The Abrahams Court went on to state that with statutory claims, the issue is one of statutory intent: "was the plaintiff...in the category the statute meant to protect, and was the harm that occurred...the 'mischief' the statute sought to avoid." Id at 237. Despite plaintiff's attempts to portray otherwise, this law is still valid in this Circuit. Two years later In re American Express Co. S'holders Litig. v. Robinson, 39 F.3d 395, 400 (2d Cir. 1994), the Court determined that to have standing, the plaintiff must show that he was "the intended target" of the RICO violation, and that any alleged RICO injury must have been the "preconceived purpose" of the RICO activities. Again, despite plaintiff's attempts to distinguish this case and its holding as an antiquated concept, this case and the law contained therein is still valid in this Circuit.

Stop Pre Lerner

The plaintiff's assertion that this Circuit has moved away from the body of law embraced by the defendants is inaccurate and disingenuous since those cases are still valid later and many Courts in this Circuit have held consistently since then. (Hollander 106-1). In fact, this very Court in Bona v. Barasch, 2003 WL 1395932 *24 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) cited to In re American Express Co. S'holders Litig. v. Robinson for the proposition that the plaintiff did not have standing because injury to shareholders was neither the "preconceived purpose" nor the "specifically intended consequence" of a scheme to discredit an American Express competitor. Bona v. Barasch, 2003 WL 1395932 *24. This Court also cited to Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House Ins., 897 F.2d 21, 23-24 (2d Cir. 1990) for the proposition that there was no proximate cause because the plaintiff was not "the target of the racketeering activity." Bona v. Barasch, 2003 WL 1395932 *24.

In G-I Holdings v. Baron & Budd, 238 F. Supp. at 548, the Court held that while the term proximate cause is used, the Second Circuit has made clear that liability under the RICO statute does not depend on whether there is proximate causation as that term is defined in common law. Rather, the question is whether the plaintiff was in the category the statute meant to protect and whether the harm that occurred was the mischief the statute sought to avoid. Thus, the Court held that to have standing the plaintiff must show that he was the intended target of the RICO violation and that any RICO injury must have been the preconceived purpose of the RICO activities. Id. See also Information Resources, Inc. v. The Dun & Bradstreet Corp., 260 F. Supp.2d 659 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (plaintiff must show that he is within the class the statute sought to protect and that the harm done was one that the statute wants to prevent; with statutory claims, the issue is one of statutory intent: was the plaintiff in the category the statute meant to protect and was the harm that occurred the mischief the statute sought to avoid); Giro v. Banco Espanol De Credito, 208 F.3d 203, 2000 WL 287694 (2d Cir. 2000) (plaintiff must show that he is within the class the statute sought to protect and the harm done was one the statute sought to prevent); BCCI Holdings (Luxembourg) Societe Anonyme v. Pharon, 43 F. Supp.2d 359 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (plaintiff must show that he was the intended target of the RICO violations and that any injury was the preconceived purpose of the RICO activities); Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Phillip Morris, Inc., 191 F.3d 229, 236 (2d Cir. 1999) (the zone of interest test is an inquiry into whether the plaintiff is within the class of persons sought to benefit by the provision at issue).

The plaintiff does not have standing to allege RICO against the defendants under this line of cases. Plaintiff's allegations do not sufficiently demonstrate that the plaintiff, or people like plaintiff in this situation, were within the class of people that the RICO statute meant to protect. Further, the harm claimed by plaintiff here was not the mischief the statute intended to protect. In fact, the injuries claimed by plaintiff would be better dealt with by governmental agencies like the FBI, INS or District Attorneys' office in the event they occurred. The injuries claimed by plaintiff here were not the preconceived purpose nor the specifically intended consequence of the scheme to carry out the predicate acts and RICO activity alleged. Most telling is the plaintiff's inability to explain how a reasonable person could conclude that the sixty-three named defendants, located throughout the world, are engaged in a RICO enterprise with the preconceived purpose of intentionally targeting him in order to injure his business or property.

Knowing that the law cited above is still valid and severely detrimental to his RICO claim as applied to the facts of this matter, plaintiff spends two pages discussing Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d 113 and suggests that Lerner demonstrates that the Court has moved away from the holdings of Abrahams and In re American Express Co. S'holder Litig., discussed above. (Hollander pp. 106-107). However, Lerner does not overrule these cases or the other cases cited above, which came after them. Further, despite plaintiff's suggestions to the contrary, Lerner did not indicate that common law principles for determining proximate cause seems favored, and this Circuit is moving away from the zone-of-interest test detailed above. (Hollander 106-1, 107-1). Rather, the Lerner Court suggested that in light of the complexity of applying the zone-of-interest test to the RICO statute, it appeared wiser and more prudent to resolve that case on grounds of proximate causation, and, therefore, they limited their discussion to that concept. Since the action was dismissable for lack of standing under the lesser proximate cause standard, the Court indicated that they would not "delve deeply into the implications" of the zone-of-interest test to determine standing in the RICO context. Id. at 121-122. In fact, plaintiff acknowledges that "[t]he Lerner court, however, took a circuitous route to get here and, to a degree, left its options open for defining proximate causation." (Hollander 106-1).<sup>26</sup>

Nonetheless, even if this Court adopts Lerner and a more relaxed proximate cause standard, the plaintiff still has no standing to allege his RICO claim because he has not adequately alleged that he was injured "by reason of" the RICO predicate acts. Bona v. Barasch, 2003 WL 1395932 *24. The Court in Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d 366 discussed Lerner's two-part test for proximate causation. Even when applying this Lerner two-part test, the plaintiff still does not have standing to assert this RICO claim.

"First, the plaintiff's injury must have been 'proximately caused by a pattern of racketeering activity violating [18 U.S.C. § 1962 or by individual RICO predicate acts.'" Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d at 373 (quoting Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d at 122-23). The Baisch Court clarified this to mean that "plaintiff does not have standing if he suffered an injury that was indirectly (and hence not proximately) caused by the racketeering activity or RICO predicate acts, even though the injury was proximately caused by some non-RICO violations committed by the defendants." Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d at 373. In Lerner, the plaintiff's injuries were proximately caused not by the racketeering activity itself, but by the defendant's violation of the state reporting requirements, which were not RICO predicate acts...Thus plaintiff therein lacked standing. Id.

In applying this first part of the Lerner test, the Court in Bona v. Barasch referenced three policy reasons for RICO's directness requirement outlined in the Supreme Court Case of Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 112 S.Ct. 1311, 117 L.E.2d 532. First, the less direct an injury is, the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff's damages attributable to the violations as distinct from other independent factors. Second, recognizing claims for the indirectly injured would force Courts to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages among plaintiff's removed at different levels of injury from the violative acts to obviate the risks of multiple recoveries. Third, the need to grapple with these problem is simply unjustified by the general interest in deterring injurious conduct since the directly injured victims can generally be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general, without any of the problems attendant upon suits by plaintiffs injured more remotely. Bona v. Barasch, 2003 WL 1395932 *24 (citing Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. at 269).

Thus, a plaintiff, who complained of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant's acts, was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover. Bona v. Barasch, 2003 WL 1395932 *24; Commercial Cleaning Services, L.L.C. v. Colin, 271 F.3d 374, 381 (2d. Cir. 2001).

With these legal considerations in mind, the plaintiff here has not demonstrated that his purported injuries were proximately/directly caused by a pattern of racketeering activity violating section 1962 or by individual predicate acts on the part of Mundy and Petrovich and or any other defendants. If plaintiff sustained any injuries to his business or property, which is denied, they were caused by his own acts, or at worst, by Ms. Shipilina and her infidelities, which is not a RICO predicate act. Alternatively, they were caused by other non-predicate state law violations. Despite plaintiff conclusions that his injuries were direct, unfortunately for plaintiff, the facts detailed infra reveal otherwise, and his conclusions are not enough. (Hollander 108-1).

"Second, the plaintiff must have suffered a direct injury that was foreseeable: Central to the notion of proximate cause [under RICO] is the idea that a person is not liable to all those who may have been injured by his conduct, but only those with respect to whom his acts were a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation, and whose injury was reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence." Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d at 374 (quoting Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d at 123). Elaborating on the second prong, "Lerner notes that 'the reasonably foreseeable victims of a RICO violation are the targets, competitors and intended victims of the racketeering activity.'" Id (quoting Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d at 124). The connection between the alleged RICO violation here and the injury to the plaintiff's business and property alleged to have been caused by Mundy and Petrovich is too attenuated to satisfy this prong of the proximate cause requirement. The alleged acts by Mundy, Petrovich or the other defendants cannot be deemed to have been a substantial cause of the injuries alleged, and, further, plaintiff's claimed injuries here were certainly not reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence. The plaintiff is not a reasonably foreseeable victim of the RICO violation because he is not a target, competitor or intended victim of the racketeering activity.

F. Plaintiff Has Failed to Plead Conspiracy to Violate RICO within 18 U.S.C. §1962(d)

As plaintiff acknowledges, a claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d) requires that the defendants conspire to commit a substantive RICO violation under 18 U.S.C. §1962(a)(b)(c).

To state a claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d), plaintiff must adequately allege that the defendants agreed to form and associate themselves with a RICO enterprise and agreed to commit two predicate acts in furtherance of a pattern of racketeering activity in connection with that enterprise. Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d 229, 244 (2d Cir. 1999).<sup>27</sup>

In any event, this Court has been clear that "[i]n order to allege a conspiracy under §1962(d), the plaintiff must assert that 'each defendant by words or actions manifested an agreement to commit two predicate acts in furtherance of the common purpose of a RICO enterprise. United States Fire Ins. Co. v. United Limousine Service Inc., 303 F. Supp.2d 432 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (quoting Colony at Holbrook, Inc. v. Strata Inc., 928 F. Supp. 1224, 1238 (E.D.N.Y. 1996)).<sup>28</sup>

However, a conspiracy claim under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d) will not survive if the complaint contains nothing more than "conclusory statements" of a conspiracy. Morin v. Trupin, 747 F. Supp. 1051, 1067 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) Case law is unequivocal that "[b]are allegations of 'conspiracy'...are insufficient to support of a civil RICO claim". Id. at 1067 (quoting Crunwald v. Bornfreund, 668 F. Supp. 128, 133 (E.D.N.Y. 1987)). "Indeed, even a 'mere [allegation of an] agreement to commit the predicate acts is not sufficient to support a charge of conspiracy under §1962(d)." Morin v. Trupin, 747 F. Supp. at 1067 (quoting Seville Indus. Machinery

<sup>27</sup> Plaintiff's opposition states "[t]he Enterprise movants' implication that a necessary element of a RICO conspiracy is the [sic] conspirators 'agreed to form' a RICO enterprise makes no sense if a RICO enterprise already exists, such as the Russian Mafia." (Hollander 115-1). Plaintiff cites Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 244 for the proposition that the "complaint only needs to allege the existence of an agreement to violate 1962(a), (b) or (c)." (Hollander 115-1). As shown infra, however, this statement does make logical sense given that plaintiff has failed to allege that an enterprise exists which includes Mundy and Petrovich. Plaintiff's entire case is premised upon the inaccurate notion that he has alleged an enterprise.

Corp. v. Southmost Machinery Corp., 742 F.2d 786, 792 N. 8 (3d Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1211, 105 S.Ct. 1179 (1985).

Knowing that his conspiracy claim is premised upon nothing but conclusions, the plaintiff again attempts to divert this Court's attention away from such failures by employing various tactics. First, the plaintiff's opposition objects to the word "conclusory" and then defines it, despite the fact that this is the carefully chosen word of many courts in defining allegations that are insufficient. (Hollander 114-1). Next, the plaintiff tries to justify his conclusory allegations by suggesting that such case law is inapplicable since the underlying facts are purportedly within the defendants' knowledge and discovery is necessary to obtain them. (Hollander 114-1). Again, the plaintiff tries to ignore the pleading standard set forth by the courts in favor of a fishing expedition to determine if a conspiracy exists. Then, the plaintiff tries to distinguish Morin based upon the fact that the allegations set forth in Morin are essentially more bare than the allegations set forth in this action. (Hollander 114-2). However, plaintiff cannot dispute that Morin still stands for the proposition cited, and, further many other courts, have held consistently with Morin. See United States Fire Ins. Co. v. United Limousine Service Inc., 303 F. Supp.2d 453-54; Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith Inc. v. Young, 1994 WL 88129 *30 (S.D.N.Y. 1994); Oak Beverages v. Tomra of Massachusetts, L.L.C., 96 F. Supp.2d 336 (S.D.N.Y. 2000); Kadosh v. TRW, Inc., 1994 WL 681763 (S.D.N.Y. 1994). In fact, in FD Property Holding, Inc. v. US Traffic Corp., 206 F. Supp.2d 362 (E.D.N.Y. 2002), the Court held that allegations of a RICO conspiracy should state with specificity what the agreement was, who entered into the agreement, when the agreement commenced, and what actions were taken in furtherance of it.

The plaintiff alleges that Mundy and Petrovich conspired to commit predicate and other acts of white slave trade, importing aliens for immoral purposes, fraud and misuse of visas, the procurement of nationality unlawfully, witness tampering, mail and wire fraud, bribery and money laundering. (Ex. A, ¶¶489, ¶501, ¶513, ¶705, ¶706, ¶722, ¶723, ¶738, ¶739) (Hollander 115-2). Plaintiff's opposition makes clear the allegations set forth in support of such conspiracy claims are continued in various paragraphs. (Ex. A, ¶¶135-136, ¶228, ¶234, ¶236, ¶243, ¶254, ¶265, ¶275, ¶280, ¶287, ¶293, ¶298, ¶306, ¶316, ¶319, ¶321, ¶326). (Hollander 113-2). Although these allegations are replete with the term "conspired" and the phrase "agreed to," those bald allegations, which are directed towards Mundy and Petrovich, are still insufficient. The plaintiff has failed to adequately plead specifically when or where such purported agreements occurred, with whom they were entered into with, the specific nature of the agreements, what the terms of the agreements to conspire were and what actions were taken in furtherance of it. All that is provided are vague dates of conspiracy to harm plaintiff. Plaintiff has failed to sufficiently allege that Mundy and Petrovich manifested an agreement to commit to commit two predicate acts in furtherance of the common purpose of a RICO enterprise. The plaintiff is under the misguided impression that if he repeats the same speculation and bare conclusions enough times using the words "agreed to," his claim will survive. He is inaccurate.

Additionally, there can be no RICO conspiracy without a substantive RICO violation. NRB Indus., Inc. v. R.A. Taylor & Assocs., Inc., 1998 WL 3638 *3 (S.D.N.Y. Jan. 7, 1998). In other words, if the plaintiff fails to state a claim for violation of §1962(a), (b) or (c), the RICO conspiracy claim must also fail. Id. See also Discon v. NYNEX Corp., 93 F.3d at 1064, rev'd on other grounds, 525 U.S. 128 (1998). The plaintiff has failed to assert a substantive RICO violation against Mundy and Petrovich, therefore, plaintiff's conspiracy claims against Mundy and Petrovich under 18 U.S.C. §1962(d) must fail. The plaintiff cannot dispute this. (Hollander p.116).

Instead, plaintiff cites to Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 507, 146 L.E.2d 561, 120 S.Ct. 1608 (2000) for the proposition that "[c]o-conspirators who might not themselves have violated one of the substantive provisions of 1962 can still be sued providing others were alleged to have done so" and that "conspiracy is...a mechanism for subjecting co-conspirators to liability for the tortious acts of one of their members, and a tortious act is a 1962(a), (b), or (c) violation or may even be the commission of one predicate act." (Hollander p. 116).

This statement inaccurately presumes that the plaintiff has sufficiently alleged a substantive RICO violation against the other defendants, and, further, even if he has, that Mundy and Petrovich are "co-conspirators" and conspired with such other persons to violate 1962 (a), (b), or (c) or to commit a predicate act. As detailed infra and in the codefendants' motion papers, in addition to failing to sufficiently allege a RICO violation against Mundy and Petrovich, plaintiff has similarly failed to adequately allege a RICO violation against the other defendants. In any event, as demonstrated infra, plaintiff has not been able to allege that Mundy and Petrovich are liable for the acts of the other defendants and are "co-conspirators" with them. In fact, plaintiff has admitted that he is unaware of any relationship or connection between Mundy, Petrovich and the other defendants with the exception of Ms. Shipilina. Therefore, plaintiff's attempts to hold Mundy and Petrovich liable for the acts of these others "alleged members" based upon nothing more than plaintiff's conclusion that they are "co-conspirators" must fail.

G. There Is No Valid Claim for Aiding and Abetting Rico Violations

Plaintiff has made it clear that he is not alleging a private right of action for aiding and abetting a RICO violation. (Hollander 117-2).

POINT III

PLAINTIFF'S PENDANT STATE LAW CLAIMS STILL FAIL AS A MATTER OF LAW

A. This Court Should Exercise its Discretion and Retain Jurisdiction Over Plaintiff's Pendant State Law Claims

Even if the plaintiff's RICO claims are dismissed, this Court may exercise its discretion and retain jurisdiction over plaintiff's pendent state law claims. See 28 U.S.C. §1367(a)(7), Perez v. Ortiz, 849 F.2d 793, 798 (2d Cir. 1988). There are certain factors including judicial economy, convenience, fairness and comity which guides the Court in determining whether to keep the state law claims. See 28 U.S.C. §1367(c), United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 726, 86 S.Ct. 1130, 1139 (1986) (Hollander 119-4). It is respectfully submitted that this Court should exercise its discretion and address the instant state law claims in the interest of judicial and party economy, taking into consideration the plaintiff's abuse of the legal system and history of litigation. This Court should exercise supplemental jurisdiction over plaintiff's pendent state claims so that they too can be dismissed since they are barred by the statute of limitations and are not properly pled.

B. Plaintiff's Pendant State Law Claims Do Not State a Cause of Action and Are Barred by the Statute of Limitations

i. Plaintiff's Claim for Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Should be Dismissed

The plaintiff's fifth cause of action alleges intentional infliction of emotional distress. (Ex. A, ¶894, ¶895). To state such a claim, the plaintiff must demonstrate (1) extreme and outrageous conduct (2) intent to cause, or disregard of a substantial probability of causing, severe emotional distress, (3) a casual connection between the conduct and injury, and (4) severe emotional distress. Bender v. City of New York, 78 F.3d 787, 790 (2d Cir. 1996); Howell v. New York Post Company, Inc., 81 N.Y.2d 115, 121, 612 N.E.2d 699, 702, 596

N.Y.S.2d 350, 353 (1993). Plaintiff concedes that these elements must be satisfied. (Hollander 121-1). The requirements of this standard are very strict, and liability has been found only where the conduct has been "so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized community." Dillon v. City of New York, 261 A.D.2d 34, 41, 704 N.Y.S.2d 1, 7 (1st Dep't 1999). Plaintiff again agrees, and, further, indicates that whether the acts are extreme and outrageous is susceptible to determination as a matter of law. (Hollander 122-2).

Plaintiff summarizes his allegations supporting his intentional infliction of emotional distress claim and provides a comprehensive list. (Ex. A ¶¶137, ¶168, ¶¶171-172, ¶¶175-181, ¶185, ¶216, ¶¶228-230, ¶232, ¶234, ¶¶236-237, ¶¶239-241, ¶243, ¶245, ¶¶257-259, ¶273, ¶¶280-284, ¶¶287-292, ¶¶306-309, ¶¶316-318). (Hollander 120-3, 122-1, 123-2). Among the acts plaintiff claims has caused his alleged emotional distress are slipping drugs into his food (Ex. A ¶137, ¶168, ¶¶171-172, ¶¶175-181, ¶185, ¶216), filing false reports about plaintiff (Ex. A ¶¶228-230, ¶234, ¶¶239-241), threatening plaintiff with death (Ex. A ¶¶236-237), threatening plaintiff with physical harm through telephone calls (Ex. A ¶¶280-284, ¶¶287-292, ¶¶316-318), and using police power to threaten plaintiff with jail (Ex. A ¶¶306-309). (Hollander 122-1).

Plaintiff continues to fail to sufficiently plead every element of a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. First, if the Court looks at each allegation, it becomes apparent that plaintiff fails to demonstrate any conduct that is "atrocious, and utterly intolerable in a civilized community," on the part of Mundy and Petrovich, which would qualify as "extreme and outrageous conduct." (Ex. A ¶¶228-230, ¶232, ¶234, ¶¶236, ¶¶240-241, ¶243, ¶245, ¶273, ¶¶280, ¶287, ¶¶306-307, ¶316). At most, plaintiff's allegations show that Mundy and Petrovich zealously represented Ms. Shipilina in her divorce and certain immigration matters, and sought protection for her against from her former husband. In any event, as far as the allegation that drugs were secretly fed to plaintiff, he does not even attempt to hold Mundy and Petrovich liable, nor does he allege that they are responsible for using police power to threaten plaintiff. Any purported threats are a clear result of plaintiff's hysteria as opposed to Mundy and Petrovich's conduct. For example, plaintiff references ¶240 and indicates that Mundy's February 5, 2001 letter evidences the defendants' intention to threaten and intimidate plaintiff. This letter was attached to Mundy and Petrovich's initial motion papers as Exhibit P. The Court can compare plaintiff's allegation in ¶240 with the letter itself and reach its own conclusion as to whether this demonstrates "extreme and outrageous conduct" on the part of Mundy and Petrovich. This letter is nothing short of amicable. The alleged filing of false reports about plaintiff does not rise to the level of extreme and outrageous conduct, even if it did happen which is denied. The acts plaintiff claims caused his emotional distress do not qualify as extreme and outrageous, at least not at the hand of Mundy and Petrovich. In addition, any attempt by plaintiff to hold Mundy and Petrovich responsible for the alleged "extreme and outrageous conduct" of the other defendants fails given that plaintiff has, admittedly, been unable to show or sufficiently even allege any connection between Mundy, Petrovich and the other defendants.

Second, plaintiff also fails to demonstrate, let alone even allege in the complaint, that Mundy and Petrovich intended to cause severe emotional distress. Plaintiff's statement in his opposition that "[t]he Complaint alleges that the Russian mafia, through its members...Kuba; Mundy; Petrovich...engaged in acts to intentional or recklessly cause the plaintiff emotional distress" is insufficient. (Hollander 121-2). Third, plaintiff has failed to show a casual connection between the conduct of Mundy and Petrovich and plaintiff's purported injuries. If anything, the correlation alleged, is a connection between Ms. Shipilina's infidelities and plaintiff's distress. Lastly, plaintiff has failed to sufficiently allege emotional distress. Plaintiff's opposition indicates that his "emotional distress is alleged in ¶284, ¶292, ¶905 of his complaint." (Hollander 123-3). Plaintiff's claim of emotional distress continues to be bare and conclusory, with uncorroborated injuries. Insofar as the plaintiff even suggests that he has sustained some form of severe distress or depression it was not caused, intentionally or otherwise, by any conduct on the part of Mundy or Petrovich.

Moreover, plaintiff concedes that a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress in New York has a one year statute of limitations. N.Y. Civ. Prac. L.&R. 215(3) (McKinney 2003); Stordeur v. Computer Assocs. Int'l, Inc., 995 F. Supp. 94, 98 (E.D.N.Y. 1998); Brown v. Bronx Cross County Medical Group, 834 F. Supp 105, 110 (S.D.N.Y. 1993); Campbell v. Chabot, 189 A.D.2d 746, 747, 592 N.Y.S.2d 423 (2d Dep't 1993); Gallagher v. Directors Guild of America, Inc., 144 A.D.2d 261, 262, 263, 533 N.Y.S.2d 863, 864 (1st Dep't 1988) (Hollander 123-4).

The time within which an action must be commenced, except as otherwise expressly prescribed, shall be computed from the time the cause of action accrued to the time the claim is interposed." N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. §203(a) (McKinney 2003). The claim "accrues when the wrong is done, regardless of when it was discovered..." Stordeur v. Computer Associates Int'l, Inc., 995 F. Supp. at 98. See also Britt v. The Legal Aid Society, Inc., 95 N.Y.2d 443, 741 N.E.2d 109, 718 N.Y.S.2d 264 (2000). Plaintiff is under the misguided assumption that the claim accrues at the time of his awareness. It does not. (Hollander 124-1,2).

Plaintiff has set forth all allegations in support of intentional infliction of emotional distress claim. (Ex. A ¶137, ¶168, ¶¶171-172, ¶¶175-181, ¶185, ¶216, ¶¶228-230, ¶232, ¶234, ¶¶236-237, ¶¶239-241, ¶243, ¶245, ¶¶257-259, ¶273, ¶¶280-284, ¶¶287-292, ¶¶306-309, ¶¶316-318). It is apparent that only ¶¶228-229, ¶232, ¶234, ¶¶236, ¶¶240-241, ¶243, ¶245, ¶273, ¶¶280, ¶287, ¶¶306-309 and ¶316 are directed towards Mundy and Petrovich. A review of these allegations reveal that the last possible date that the plaintiff's claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress could have accrued is prior to March, 2002. Paragraphs 228-229, 232, 234, 236 references alleged wrongs during December of 2000 and January of 2001. Paragraphs 240, 241, 243 and 245 reference alleged wrongs in February and March of 2001. Paragraphs 273 and 280 reference alleged wrongs in July 2001 and October of 2001 respectively. Paragraph 287 references an alleged wrong in February of 2002. All of these paragraphs make clear that the last date any wrongs could have accrued was prior to March of 2002.

Paragraphs 306-309 alleges that Mundy and Petrovich agreed to bribe Detective Henning in March of 2001 and that Detective Henning telephoned plaintiff on March 27, 2002 regarding his surrender for arrest.<sup>29</sup> Paragraph 316 references an alleged threatening telephone call in March of 2002 by Madison or Pierre at Mundy and Petrovich's behest. However, these allegations are not sufficient to demonstrate that Mundy or Petrovich inflicted emotional distress upon plaintiff at these time periods. At best, these allegations show that other parties, which the plaintiff has been unable to sufficiently connect to Mundy and Petrovich, may have committed wrongdoing in March, 2002. In fact, plaintiff concedes that the alleged wrongdoing on March 27, 2002 was "the date that movant Henning threatened the plaintiff with arrest and member defendant Madison, a.k.a. Pierre, threatened the plaintiff...(Hollander 125-1). Mundy and Petrovich are not mentioned in this regard in plaintiff's opposition. Plaintiff's emotional distress claim is again wrongfully premised upon holding <sup>29</sup>It is unclear whether March of 2001 was the time period that Mundy and Petrovich are alleged to have bribed Detective Henning or whether that is a typographical error which is supposed to read March, 2002. (Ex. A ¶306).

Mundy and Petrovich liable for the alleged wrongs of others where he cannot even show an adequate connection among them. What would be considered extreme and outrageous is if the plaintiff was allowed to extend the statute of limitation period on an intentional tort claim against Mundy and Petrovich, based merely upon the allegation (with nothing more) that some other person performed some act at a later date.

As such, even assuming that the Summons with Notice in the State Court action was actually served upon Mundy and Petrovich, which is vehemently denied, and, further, that the filing and service of that action tolled the statute of limitations as to the intentional infliction of emotional distress claim, the claim is still time barred against Mundy and Petrovich given that the last alleged wrong on their part occurred prior to March 27, 2002,<sup>30</sup> and the state Court action was not commenced within one year of that date.

Plaintiff's opposition references a June, 2003 threatening telephone call (Hollander 123-4). Again, there is no indication that this telephone call was made by or on behalf of Mundy and Petrovich. An allegation, which is not even in the complaint, that some unspecified telephone call was made by some unspecified person cannot extend the statute of limitation period for plaintiff's emotional distress claim against Mundy and Petrovich.

Plaintiff's opposition also lamely attempts to extend the statute of limitations period by referring to two other dates. First, plaintiff tries to argue that the statute of limitation did not expire until April 23, 2002 because "the wrongs earliest possible termination was not until the plaintiff became aware of the unwillingness of movant Henning to go forward with the arrest of the plaintiff." This occurred on April 23, 2002 when the plaintiff's attorney told him that the matter had been referred to the Queen District Attorney for a decision on whether to arrest the plaintiff. (Hollander 124-2). It is entirely unclear what wrong, relative to his emotional distress claim, that plaintiff is even talking about here. However, the statute of limitation accrues when the wrong was done, not when plaintiff became aware of it. Nevertheless, there is no indication that this would extend the statute of limitation period against Mundy and Petrovich.

Second, plaintiff tries to argue that the statute of limitation did not expire until October 11, 2003 because "...even after April 23, 2002, there was continuing uncertainty caused by the threat of the future outrageous act of arresting the plaintiff for exercising his rights that was as effective in causing emotional distress as acts continuously committed. In fact, the plaintiff's uncertainty until October 11, 2003 when he finally learned that he was not going to be arrested after reading movant Henning's affidavit in this action...So, the statute of limitations did not start running until October 11, 2003." (Hollander 124-2). Again, it is unclear what plaintiff is talking about here because there cannot be an accrual of an alleged wrong for something that was not done. Further, a claim accrues when the wrong is done, not when plaintiff becomes aware of something. Additionally, this act which may have been committed by Detective Henning, does not extend the statute of limitations period as to Mundy and Petrovich. As the Court can see, plaintiff will try anything to create the indica that his emotional distress claim is not time barred.

Thus, the plaintiff' failure to commence his claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress within the applicable statute of limitations is yet another basis for dismissal as to his fifth cause of action.

ii. Plaintiff's Claim for Abuse of Process Should be Dismissed

To state a claim for abuse of process, plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) regularly issued process, either civil or criminal, compelling the performance of forbearance of some prescribed act; (2) that defendant intended to do harm without excuse or social or economic justification and plaintiff did sustain injury to or an interference with his person or property; and (3) that defendant used the process in a perverted manner and sought some collateral advantage or corresponding detriment lying outside the legitimate ends of the process. Id. at 403. See also Curiano v. Suozzi, 63 N.Y.2d 113, 116, 469 N.E.2d 1324, 1326, 480 N.Y.S.2d 466, 468 (1984). Plaintiff does not dispute that these are the elements that must be alleged. Where the defendants utilize legal procedure in a manner consonant with the purpose for which the procedure was designed, the cause of action for abuse of process will not stand. See Raved v. Raved, 105 A.D.2d 735, 481 N.Y.S.2d 170 (2d Dep't 1984). The plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to establish how this process was diverted from its lawful purpose to withstand a motion to dismiss. Id.

The plaintiff's sixth cause of action alleging abuse of process is premised upon the claims found in ¶228, ¶234, ¶¶239-241, ¶¶306-313 as confirmed by plaintiff's opposition. (Hollander 121-1, 126-2). A reading of the plaintiff's allegations in these paragraphs makes absolutely no chronological, or other, sense. To the degree that the allegations can be grasped, it appears that paragraphs 228 and 229 allege that Ms. Shipilina filed a false December 13, 2000 report against plaintiff at the direction of Mundy and Petrovich. Paragraph 234 alleges that Mundy, Petrovich and Ms. Shipilina agreed in December, 2000 or January, 2001 to obtain an order of protection against plaintiff based upon falsehoods. Paragraphs 239 through 241 alleges that on January 31, 2001, Ms. Shipilina actually obtained a temporary order of protection based on false testimony in an ex-parte court proceeding in the Queens Family Court.<sup>31</sup> It is then alleged in paragraphs 306 through 313 that Mundy, Petrovich and

<sup>31</sup>As a side note, it is perfectly common for an order to protection like this to be issued in an ex-parte proceeding despite plaintiff's attempts to make it appear as though such a proceeding was improper.

Mrs. Shipilina improperly used the order of protection to initiate the criminal process by having Detective Henning threaten plaintiff with arrest for violating the restraining order. (Hollander 126-2,3). Essentially, plaintiff's opposition alleges abuse of process based upon (1) the temporary order of protection issued by the Family Court and (2) a threatened arrest for plaintiff's violation of the protection order. (Hollander 127-1).

Plaintiff still fails to sufficiently plead the elements of a claim for abuse of process against Mundy and Petrovich. At the outset, plaintiff must do more than just plead the elements of survive, abuse of process to motion to dismiss. In addition to merely pleading the elements, there must be some basis of truth to his allegations.

First, the plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged that Mundy or Petrovich intended to do harm without excuse or social or economic justification. Taking a step back once again, the only thing that becomes clear from plaintiff's allegations is that it was necessary for Mrs. Shipilina to obtain an order of protection against him due to his improper conduct and it was necessary for her to seek police protection from his potential violation of the order. Hence, there certainly was social justification for seeking the order and enforcing it.

Moreover, plaintiff still cannot sufficiently allege that process was utilized in a perverted manner to seek some collateral advantage or corresponding detriment lying outside the legitimate ends of the process. Plaintiff cannot sufficiently allege that the process to obtain an order of protection was utilized in a perverted manner given that a court determined that issuing an order of protection was legitimate. There is no allegation that seeking the order of protection was found to be frivolous. Even if the order of protection was found to be unjustified, that still does not mean that process was abused in a perverted manner outside the legitimate ends of the process. ElGreco Leather Products Co., Inc. v. Show Works, Inc., 6523 F. Supp. 1038 (E.D.N.Y. 1985).

In respect to the alleged acts by Detective Henning, plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged that there was any regularly issued process by which threatened plaintiff with arrest for violating the Protective Order, nor is it sufficiently alleged that Detective Henning used process in a perverted manner. There must be some basis of credibility to plaintiff's allegations that Detective Henning acted outside the police process. Was a disciplinary complaint taken against him, was the police department sued, was he reprimanded, was this incident reported to the news, etc. In any event, plaintiff cannot sufficiently allege abuse of process against Mundy and Petrovich by the acts of Detective Henning where no connection has been adequately alleged. Further, plaintiff's conjecture that such procedures were employed for collateral advantage, such as to intimidate plaintiff into lying to the INS, keeping plaintiff quiet about the Russian mafia, ceasing his cooperation with the INS or prevent him from re-opening the Russian defamation case, is speculative at best (Hollander 126-4). In fact, it is entirely unclear and nonsensical that an order of protection (which merely sought to protect Ms. Shipilina from plaintiff) was carried out for the purposes plaintiff now conveniently claims above. It is obvious plaintiff is grasping, albeit unsuccessfully, for any reason he can think of to show that some sort of collateral advantage was sought by the measure of process.

Furthermore, plaintiff acknowledges that a one year statute of limitations governs his abuse of process claim. See Bittner v. Cummings, 188 A.D.2d 504, 506, 591 N.Y.S.2d 429, 431 (2d Dep't 1992); Gallagher v. Directors Guild of America, Inc., 144 A.D.2d 261, 533 N.Y.S.2d 863 (1st Dep't 1988); Hansen v. Petrone, 124 A.D.2d 782, 508, N.Y.S.2d 500 (2d Dep't 1986). (Hollander 127-2). Plaintiff alleges that the statute of limitations did not expire by the time he filed the instant action on April 18, 2003 because "[s]ince the bogus case against the plaintiff for allegedly violating the temporary order of protection was not closed until June 19, 2003...the abuse of process wrong did not terminate [sic] until then." (Hollander 127-2).

Despite this statement, the abuse of process claim is still time barred against Mundy and Petrovich. First and foremost, nowhere in the complaint are any of the claims, or dates, that plaintiff now conveniently sets forth in an attempt to extend the statute of limitations, alleged. It is not alleged that the violation of the temporary order of protection case was closed or when it was closed, nor is it alleged how this constitutes abuse of process in light of the elements above. Mundy and Petrovich had no notice of plaintiff's assertions prior to receiving plaintiff's opposition. (Ex. A).

Nevertheless, plaintiff's argument that this claim is not time barred is based only upon the improper assumption that Detective Henning's referral of the plaintiff's violation of the protection order to the District Attorney's office was abuse of process, which it was not as detailed infra. In any event, this action was undertaken by Detective Henning, not Mundy or Petrovich. Therefore, the statute of limitations cannot be extended due to Detective Henning's actions unrelated to Mundy and Petrovich.

If anything, the only abuse of process that can even be claimed against Mundy and Petrovich arise out of their efforts to obtain an order of protection. Although this is not abuse of process, such actions were completed by January, 2001.

Lastly, this Court should note that the dates showing that plaintiff's abuse of process claim is time barred as argued above are the defendants' best guesses at what the plaintiff is actually alleging in connection with his abuse of process claim and the corresponding dates. In other words, the plaintiff has made clear in his opposition that ¶228, ¶234, ¶¶239-241, ¶¶306-313 are the only allegations set forth in support of his abuse of process claims. A reading of these paragraphs, however, is confusing and the dates make no logical sense. In any event, a literal reading of these paragraphs indicates that the very latest date that Mundy and Petrovich specifically are alleged to have committed any wrongful acts in support of the plaintiff's abuse of process claim is March 27, 2002. (Ex. A ¶308). Any alleged wrongdoing on the part of the codefendants cannot be attributable to Mundy and Petrovich as discussed extensively above. This action alleging abuse of process was not commenced within the one year time period.

iii. Plaintiff's Claim for Malicious Prosecution Should be Dismissed

The elements necessary to maintain a cause of action for malicious prosecution are (1) the defendant either initiated or continued a prior judicial proceeding against the plaintiff; (2) the prior proceeding terminated in plaintiff's favor; (3) there was no probable cause for the prior judicial proceeding; (4) the prior judicial proceeding was instituted with malice; and (5) the plaintiff suffered a special injury of interference with his person or property as a result of this proceeding). Hornstein v. Wolf, 109 A.D.2d 129, 132, 491 N.Y.S.2d 183, 186 (2d Dep't 1985), aff'd 67 N.Y.2d 721, 499 N.Y.S.2d 938, 490 N.E.2d 857; Engel v. CBS, Inc., 93 N.Y.2d 195, 711 N.E.2d 626, 689 N.Y.S.2d 411(1999).

Additionally, an essential element of a claim for malicious prosecution is that the proceeding was terminated in favor of the accused. This requirement is satisfied only when the case has been tried on the merits and the outcome was a finding of innocence. Martin v. Adler, 135 Misc. 2d 383, 515 N.Y.S.2d 400 (Rockland County Ct. 1987). In Martin, because the charges were dropped for neglect to prosecute, the merits were never reached. Since there was an absence of an affirmative finding of innocence, the cause of action for malicious prosecution was dismissed. Id. The New York Court of Appeals held similarly in Hollender v. Trumpf VII Coop, 58 N.Y.2d 420 (1983). A malicious prosecution claim was dismissed where the person bringing the action did not show that the matter terminated in his favor. The Court stated "only when [the] final disposition is such as to indicate innocence that this burden is met." Id (citations omitted). Thus, where dismissal on the merits was never reached, the absence of an affirmative finding of innocence on the merits forecloses a cause of action sounding in malicious prosecution. Sokol v. Sofokles, 136 A.D.2d 535, 523 N.Y.S.2d 155 (2d Dep't 1988); Davis v. State of New York, 124 A.D.2d 420, 507 N.Y.S.2d 520 (3d Dep't 1986). See also Reinhart v. Jakubowski, 139 A.D.2d 765, 657 N.Y.S.2d 802(3d Dep't 1997) (disposition terminates favorably to accused when the final disposition of the proceedings involves the merits and indicates the accused's innocence); Nadeau v. La Poiné, 272 A.D.2d 769, 707 N.Y.S.2d 704 (3rd Dept. ) (adjournment in contemplation of dismissal bars recovery for malicious prosecution as it is not a determination of guilt or innocence)

The plaintiff's seventh cause of action alleging malicious prosecution is premised upon the claims found in ¶228, ¶234, ¶239, ¶¶306-310 as confirmed by plaintiff's opposition. (Hollander 121-1, 128-1, 129-1). These are the same allegations set forth in support of plaintiff's abuse of process cause of action cited above. Thus, plaintiff's malicious of prosecution is based upon the fact that (1) Mundy, Petrovich and Ms. Shipilina initiated a Family Court proceeding in Queens County seeking an order of protection (Ex. A ¶228, ¶234, ¶239) and (2) Mundy and Petrovich with the assistance of Detective Henning used that injunction to have the District Attorney open a case against plaintiff and to threaten him with an arrest (Ex. A ¶¶306-310).

The plaintiff's malicious prosecution claim is deficient in every respect. The Family Court proceeding allegedly initiated in Queens County at the behest of Mundy and Petrovich was not terminated in plaintiff's favor. A dismissal on the merits was never reached, and the absence of an affirmative finding of innocence on the merits forecloses a cause of action sounding in malicious prosecution. Plaintiff concedes that a finding on the merits was never reached. (Hollander 128-2). Second, there is absolutely no sufficient allegation that there was no probable cause for the commencement of an application for a protection other than plaintiff's generic allegation that procuring such protection was based upon falsehoods.<sup>32</sup> (Hollander 129-1). Third, similarly has been no sufficient allegation of malice on the part of Mundy and Petrovich, notwithstanding plaintiff's conclusory allegations of such. (Hollander 129-1, 2). Conclusory allegations of malice are insufficient to form the factual basis for such an allegation. See Hornstein v. Wolf, 109 A.D.2d at 132, 491 N.Y.S.2d at 186.

Further, the violation of the protection order by plaintiff, which was investigated by Detective Henning and then referred to the District Attorney, also does not constitute malicious prosecution, at least not against Mundy and Petrovich.<sup>33</sup>

It is absurd that plaintiff is trying to hold Mundy and Petrovich liable for an investigation that was undertaken by the police department and District Attorney. The plaintiff can offer no explanation how Mundy and Petrovich influenced the police and District Attorney. What is clear is that these two officers saw it necessary to investigate plaintiff's action for violating a protection order.

In any event, the investigations by the Police Department and the District Attorney's office do not constitute an initiation of a judicial proceeding against the plaintiff. Most telling, is plaintiff's inability to cite any law for such a proposition. (Hollander pp. 127-130). Because <sup>32</sup>Knowing that he has not pled lack of probable cause for the commencement of such proceedings, plaintiff states that since Ms. Shipilina obtained the order of protection based upon falsehoods, lack of probable cause should be inferred. (Hollander 129-1). This is insufficient.

no proceeding was commenced, there was no termination in plaintiff's favor. Nothing was tried on its merits. Moreover, there certainly was probable cause for both the New York police department and District Attorney's office to investigate plaintiff's behavior and violation of the order of protection. If there was no such probable cause, the plaintiff cannot explain why the District Attorney's office investigated for as long as they did. In fact, plaintiff's opposition does not even allege that the police and District Attorney had no probable cause to investigate him for violating the protection order. Rather, plaintiff asserts that the "bribing or rewarding Henning for instituting proceedings to arrest the plaintiff also infers lack of probable cause." (Hollander 129-1).

Lastly, plaintiff has not sufficiently alleged any malice. Plaintiff's contention that a case was opened up by both the police department and District Attorney to "force plaintiff to lie to the INS in order to protect the Russian mafia's Scheme...prevent the plaintiff from exposing some of the mafia's activities, stop his cooperation with the INS in Moscow and avoid reopening of the Krasnodar criminal case" is not only speculative at best, but nonsensical. (Hollander 129-2). Plaintiff is essentially arguing that the entire New York Police Department (or at least the supervisors of Detective Henning) and the District Attorneys' office are part of the Russian mafia or are working at the behest of the Russia mafia. Plaintiff has shown no malice on the part of the Detective Henning and the District Attorney in investigating the violation of the protection order.

Additionally, plaintiff concedes that his claim for malicious prosecution is governed by a one year statute of limitations period. N.Y. Civ. Prac. L.&R. § 215(3); Preston v. New York, 223 F. Supp.2d 452, 468 (S.D.N.Y. 2002); Hansen v. Petrone, 124 A.D.2d at 782, 508 N.Y.S.2d at 500. (Hollander 130-1). The claim begins to run when the action terminates in plaintiff's favor. See Dudick v. Guyas, 277 A.D.2d 686, 716 N.Y.S.2d 407 (3d Dep't. 2000).

Plaintiff claims that Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina "abandoned and failed to prosecute the temporary of protection when they did not appear at a court hearing, which caused dismissal of the petition. (Complaint 311)." (Hollander 128-2). Paragraph 311 in the complaint indicates that the "temporary order of protection has been dismissed nine months earlier in July 2001." (Ex. A ¶311). Therefore, assuming that the dismissal or abandonment can even be construed as a termination in favor of plaintiff (which is against the case law cited above), the statute of limitations began to run in July, 2001. Plaintiff's attempt to extend the statute of limitations running date to June 19, 2002, which represents the date that the District Attorney and Detective Henning purportedly determined that there had been no violation of the protection order, is inadequate as this claim pertains to Mundy and Petrovich. In addition, it makes no sense how their decision not to prosecute plaintiff in June, 2002 can extend the running of the statute of limitations.

Lastly, looking at this claim realistically, it is clear that the tort of malicious prosecution, like abuse of process, was not meant to redress the alleged wrongs plaintiff is claiming here. Malicious prosecution and abuse of process were not designed to allow a plaintiff to seek a remedy against a private law firm for seeking an order of protection for its client arising out of harassment by her ex-husband. Further, these torts were not designed to allow plaintiff to seek a remedy against a private law firm for reporting to a police officer, which in turn reported the matter to the District Attorney, that an ex-husband was violating an order of protection.

Even citing the definition of such torts as set forth by plaintiff it becomes clear that seeking an order of protection and police assistance for a potential violation of that order does not fit within the definition: (1) Abuse of Process: "the misuse or perversion of regularly issued court process for an improper collateral purpose not justified by the nature of the action" (Hollander 125-2; (2) Malicious Prosecution: "one that is begun in malice, without probable cause to believe it can succeed, and which finally ends in failure." (Hollander 127-2). This Courts needs to look no further than these definitions to see that plaintiff's allegations do not a state a claim for such torts.

iv. Plaintiff's Claim for Prima Facie Tort is Withdrawn

Plaintiff's sixth and seventh causes of action alternatively alleging a claim for prima facie tort have been withdrawn by plaintiff. (Hollander 130-3).

POINT IV

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO CONTAIN A SHORT AND PLAIN STATEMENT OF THE CLAIMS SHOWING THAT THE PLEADER IS ENTITLED TO RELIEF AND THEREFORE SHOULD BE DISMISSED AS A MATTER OF LAW

It is respectfully submitted that the plaintiff's complaint should also be dismissed pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. §8(a)(2). Courts have not hesitated to dismiss actions under Fed. R. Civ. P. §8(a)(2) where a complaint sets forth "a meandering, disorganized, prolix narrative" that defy comprehension or was "so verbose, confused and redundant" that its true substance, if any, is well disguised." Brown v. Califano, 75 F.R.D. at 499. See also Prezzi v. Schelter, 469 F.2d 691, 692 (2d Cir. 1972), cert. denied, 411 U.S. 935, 93 S.Ct. 911 (1973) Karlinsky v. New York Racing Ass'n Inc., 310 F. Supp. 937, 939 (S.D.N.Y. 1970).

Plaintiff's ninety-one page, nine hundred and fifteen paragraph, complaint is a prime example of a pleading which fails to comport with Fed. R. Civ. P. §8(a)(2). It is meandering prolix narrative which defies comprehension. It is of no moment that the defendants were able to work through plaintiff's extensive meandering complaint and file a sixty-six page motion to dismiss. (Hollander 131-1).

Further, plaintiff attempts to paint a picture of a plaintiff who has merely instituted a few lawsuits. (Hollander 131-3). This Court only needs to read the statement of facts above to realize that this is untrue. The reality is that the plaintiff has commenced an onslaught of litigation and applications for investigation all arising out of the plaintiff's marriage and divorce to Ms. Shipilina, including an annulment proceeding, a divorce action, a motion to set aside the settlement of the divorce, two petitions to the New York County Court for orders of protection, an action for emotional distress in the New York County Court, a defamation case in Russia, a disciplinary complaint and the instant RICO action. The plaintiff has also petitioned the FBI, INS, District Attorney, this Court and other governmental agencies for orders of protection and applications for investigation. All of the allegations in these actions and investigations overlap in some manner. In addition, plaintiff has noticed his intention to commence a class action lawsuit (as he references the website www.been-scammed.com to search for a class of persons), in addition to whatever creative lawsuits he ponders next. (Hollander 136-2)

Lastly, it is submitted that the plaintiff has already been given the opportunity to plead his claims on the merits. To allow the plaintiff to amend his pleading and force the defendants as well as the Court to respond once again would be a needless waste of party and judicial resources and cause great prejudice to such parties. Accordingly, plaintiff should not be allowed to amend his complaint. It is respectfully requested that the instant complaint be dismissed with prejudice pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. § 8(a)(2).

POINT V

DEFENDANTS ARE ENTITLED TO INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

It is well established in this circuit that a defendant may seek to enjoin a party who has a history of litigation entailing vexation, harassment and needless expense to other parties and who poses an unnecessary burden on the courts and their supporting personnel. Becker v. Dunkin Donuts of America, Inc., 665 F. Supp 211 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (citations omitted)

(quoting In re Martin-Trigona v. Lavien, 737 F.2d 1254, 1262 (2d Cir. 1984). Although plaintiff has tried to distinguish the facts in Becker from the present matter, he cannot deny that this Court has discretion to enjoin a party in this regard.

Although plaintiff has tried to distinguish the facts in Lipin v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, P.A., 202 F. Supp.2d 126 (S.D.N.Y. 2002), he cannot deny that the Court will consider various factors in determining whether to restrict a litigant's future access to the Court including: (1) the litigant's history of litigation and whether it entailed vexatious, harassing or duplicative lawsuits; (2) the litigant's motive in pursuing the litigation, e.g. whether the litigant has an objective good faith expectation of prevailing; (3) whether the litigant is represented by counsel; (4) whether the litigant has caused needless expense to other parties or has posed an unnecessary burden on the court and their personnel; and (5) whether other sanctions would be adequate to protect the court and other parties. Id.

An application of these factors to the facts of this action demands that nothing short of injunctive relief will subvert the plaintiff's continuing course of harassment. The plaintiff's history of abusive, harassing and duplicative lawsuits and applications is apparent. Plaintiff has commenced an annulment proceeding, a divorce action, a motion to set aside the settlement of the divorce, two petitions to the New York County Court for orders of protection, a disciplinary complaint, an action for emotional distress in the New York County Court, a defamation case in Russia, a disciplinary complaint, the instant RICO action and various petitions to the FBI, INS, District Attorney, this Court and other governmental agencies for protection and to investigate certain acts. In the context of these actions, plaintiff has engaged in abusive litigation tactics as evidenced by the exhibits submitted in support of this motion. In addition, plaintiff has noticed his intention to commence a class action lawsuit. (Hollander 136-2). It is certainly logical to presume that plaintiff will not stop there.

Plaintiff's motive in pursuing all of this litigation arises out of his marriage and divorce from Ms. Shipilina and his efforts to punish her and those who have assisted her. The fact that the disciplinary committee, courts and governmental agencies have all found his applications to be without merit best evidences his lack of an objective good faith expectation for prevailing. In addition, the fact that Ms. Shipilina found it necessary to file criminal complaints and seek orders of protection demonstrates plaintiff's harassment outside the litigation context. The exhibits submitted herewith demonstrate the lengths plaintiff will go to control and harass. Lastly, the plaintiff is not represented by counsel and has caused needless expense to over sixty-three defendants across the world as well as to the Court.

POINT VI

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT PROPERLY SERVED PETROVICH AND THEREFORE THIS COURT HAS NO JURISDICTION OVER PETROVICH

In the event this Court finds that the plaintiff has stated a cause of action against Mundy and Petrovich, the plaintiff's claims against Petrovich still cannot stand, because this Court does not have jurisdiction over him. The plaintiff's complaint has never been served upon Petrovich.

The plaintiff's opposition confirms that he attempted to served Petrovich only at his "actual place of business" and with a follow-up mailing at his "actual place of business" pursuant to N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. §308(2). (Hollander pp. 137-139).

The plaintiff served the complaint upon Petrovich at the office of Kuba, Mundy & Associates located at 321 Broadway, New York, New York 10007. (Hollander 137-1, 138-1, Hollander Declaration Ex. D). As the attached affidavit of Petrovich details, however, Petrovich does not maintain his place of business at the office of Kuba, Mundy & Associates located at 321 Broadway, New York, New York 10007, nor has Petrovich ever maintained his place of business at such an address. Petrovich is not an employee of Kuba, Mundy & Associates, but rather, has merely served as a translator for the law firm on occasion.

Further, Petrovich has not been "ducking service" as plaintiff's opposition suggests. (Hollander 138-2). Rather, it appears that plaintiff has now been trying to serve Petrovich at a location where he does not reside. Plaintiff has never requested Petrovich's correct address from counsel and it is disingenuous for plaintiff to assert that his efforts to "personally serve Petrovich have been thwarted." (Hollander 138-2).

Accordingly, since the plaintiff's complaint has never been served upon Petrovich properly, Petrovich respectfully requests that this action be dismissed since this Court has no jurisdiction of the person of Petrovich.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that this Court issue an Order dismissing the plaintiff's complaint in its entirety with prejudice, granting an injunction prohibiting plaintiff from filing any further related claims, and for such other and further relief as this Court may deem just and proper.

familiar with the matters set forth herein; and submit this Reply Declaration in regard to the motion on behalf of defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich (collectively referred herein as "Mundy/Petrovich Defendants") dismissing this action pursuant to Rules 8(a)(2), 9(b) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("F.R.Civ.P.).

2. The FlashDancers Defendants have previously joined in the motion of the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants, except with regard to matters pertaining solely and exclusively to the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants and not to all defendants generally. The FlashDancers Defendants likewise join in the reply which the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants are anticipated to serve and file herein, and, furthermore, incorporate by reference all generally applicable legal arguments made or hereafter made by any of other co-defendants in support of dismissal of the Complaint pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 8(a), 9(b) and/or 12(b)(6).<sup>2</sup>

3. The plaintiffs' opposition to the Mundy/Petrovich motion consists of a 147 page memorandum of law and a book of exhibits.

False to Memo

<sup>2</sup> Also as previously explained, the FlashDancers Defendants have no independent knowledge of the factual matters asserted in the motion of the Mundy/Petrovich Defendants, or those which may be asserted in the reply to be filed by those defendants or any other defendant. Accordingly, it would be inappropriate under F.R.Civ.P. 11 for the FlashDancers Defendants to join in those particular assertions.

4. Plaintiff addresses his claims against the FlashDancers Defendants at pp. 139-142 of his memorandum of law.

5. Plaintiff devotes nearly his entire presentation to supporting the proposition that the enumeration, in ¶ 3 of the FlashDancers Declaration, of plaintiff's allegations against the FlashDancers Defendants is incomplete. (Pl. Mem. Law pp. 139-142.) In reply, declarant respectfully submits that ¶ 3 of his prior declaration, which is more than four (4) pages long and refers to at least sixty-five (65) different allegations of the Complaint, is more than a fair summary of the plaintiff's allegations against the FlashDancers Defendants, and that the additional twenty-three (23) paragraphs of the Complaint referred to in the opposing memorandum of law are, at best, cumulative and/or otherwise immaterial to testing the sufficiency of the Complaint on this motion pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 8(a), 9(b) and 12(b)(6).

6. Plaintiff next complains (Pl. Mem. Law p. 142) that the FlashDancers Defendants' summary of ¶¶ 402 and 408-410 of the

7. Finally, plaintiff urges that RICO liability is "joint and several", citing Fleischauer v. Feltner, 879 F.2d 1290 (6th Cir. 1989). This post-trial appellate decision, which is factually inapposite to the case at bar, does not deal with Rule 8(a), 9(b) and 12(b)(6) issues, but rather with a host of issues irrelevant to the case at bar. Moreover, the "joint and several" formulation quoted by plaintiff is taken out of context. Again, the Fleischauer issue was not pleading sufficiency, but rather whether one RICO co-defendant was entitled to a charge to the jury on the issue of contribution by co-defendants. Indeed, when this section of the Fleischauer opinion is cited, it is for the proposition that, "there is no right to contribution under RICO," rather than in response to pleading sufficiency motions. See, e.g., Dept. of Econ. Develop. v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 747 F.Supp. 922 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (Stewart, J.).<sup>3</sup>

8. That being said, declarant reiterates the basic thrust of his

<sup>3</sup> Ironically, one of the propositions for which Fleischauer is most often cited is that "courts have uniformly held that injuries such as emotional distress or physical injury are not cognizable under RICO. Shaw v. Rolex Watch U.S.A., Inc., 776 F.Supp. 128 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (Conner, J.). See, also, Mayes v. Local 106, I.U.O.E., 1999 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1118 (N.D.N.Y. Feb. 5, 1999) ("Unquantifiable harm ... is not actionable under civil RICO. Nor is personal injury, such as to reputation or for emotional distress, generally considered an injury to business or property that is compensable under RICO.") earlier declaration, which despite plaintiff's nit-picking over those paragraphs of the Complaint mentioned and those not mentioned in ¶ 3 of the FlashDancers Declaration, is nowhere denied by him:

6. Out of the 915 numbered paragraphs of the Complaint, the only allegations made of alleged culpable conduct involving any of the FlashDancers Defendants and the plaintiff are the allegations that certain "managers" of the "FlashDancers" night club, together with defendant A. Shipilina, arranged for allegedly "threatening" telephone calls to be made to plaintiff. (Complaint, ¶¶ 281, 288 and 317.) [Emphasis added.]

to
complaint*

9. As well established in the motion of the Mundy/Petrovich defendants, this is simply not the stuff of which a Civil RICO case can be made.

WHEREFORE, declarant urges the Court to dismiss this action as against the FlashDancers Defendants, with costs.

DEFENDANT DR. PAULSON'S
REPLY IN FURTHER SUPPORT OF MOTION TO DISMISS

Return date: January 30,

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Defendant Dr. Marc Paulsen, by his attorney Nelson M. Stern, respectfully submits this Reply in further support of the motion to dismiss the complaint with prejudice. Plaintiff has named sixty-three defendants in a ninety-one page complaint and hopes that by sheer volume he will avoid being dismissed. Taken as a whole, the defendants' motion papers dissect the claims and illustrate their deficiencies.<sup>1</sup>

As it relates to defendant Paulsen, plaintiff's complaint is a vindictive assault in retribution for his refusal to testify at plaintiff's divorce proceeding. The claims are frivolous and lack factual merit even under the liberal pleading rules.<sup>2</sup> Dr. Paulsen asks this Court to dismiss the complaint by applying its inherent authority to maintain the integrity of our judicial system.

ARGUMENT

Defendant Paulsen seeks an Order as follows, none of which were sufficiently opposed by Plaintiff:

1. Dismissing the complaint in its entirety, with prejudice, under FRCP 8(a)(2) for failure to contain a short and plain statement of the claim showing that the plaintiff is entitled to relief, and

2. Dismissing the causes of action as against Dr. Marc Paulsen alleging violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. Sec. 1962(a) - (d), for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted, FRCP 12(b)(6), and for failure to plead predicate acts with sufficient particularity, FRCP 9(b), and

3. Dismissing the pendent state law claims for failure to state claims upon which relief can be granted, FRCP 12(b)(6), and

4. Enjoining Plaintiff from filing any further claims against Dr. Marc Paulsen.

Plaintiff's RICO claims against Dr. Paulsen are barred by the applicable four year statute of limitation. Agency Corp. v. Malley-Duff & Assocs., Inc., 483 U.S. 143, 146-7 (1987), Merrill Lynch Ltd. Partnerships Litigation v. Merrill Lynch & Co., Inc., 154 F3d 56, 58 (2d Cir. 1998). In his opposition papers, Plaintiff alleges that defendant Paulsen's conduct constituting RICO violations occurred in October 1998. Plaintiff's Opposition Memorandum of Law, page 143. Plaintiff filed the summons in this case on April 18, 2003, more than four years later. Plaintiff's claims against Dr. Paulsen are barred by the statute of limitation.

*Filed to Court
#376,
380, 711-73*

Plaintiff named Dr. Paulsen as a defendant as retribution for his refusal to testify for plaintiff in his divorce proceeding. The complaint was an act of vengeance and should not be countenanced by the Court. The Court is urged to use its inherent authority to maintain the integrity of judicial process and not allow this misuse.

Ad Henderson

Finally, defendant vehemently denies all the allegations of the complaint.

REPLY MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN FURTHER SUPPORT OF

-----X
This reply memorandum is submitted in further support of the motion by Defendant Bank of Cyprus, Ltd. (the "Bank") to dismiss, with prejudice, Plaintiff's complaint (the "Complaint") pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure ("FRCP") for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted and to grant such other relief as the court should deem fitting and proper.

I. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Plaintiff has invested tremendous effort in this action. He has produced a complaint nearly one hundred pages in length, comprised of 915 paragraphs and seven counts alleged against over sixty defendants. He has opposed other motions and opposes this motion in papers fifty-four pages in length. Despite his effort and his voluminous output, however, he has failed to establish any link between the Bank and himself or any defendant and he has failed to establish that the Bank played any role in this unfortunate affair. There is no bank account, "Stephanos" has no surname. There has been no business anywhere in the world between the Bank and Plaintiff or his ex-wife. There is no causal nexus between any activity of the Bank and any injury suffered by Plaintiff. All there is speculation. There has been no investment by the Bank in any "enterprise"; no interest in or control of any "enterprise"; no conduct or direction of any "enterprise"; and no knowing agreement to commit wrongful acts. There is no and can be no cause of action and there should be no more litigation. The Court must dismiss counts one through four as against the Bank with prejudice or, on its own motion, fashion a resolution that will spare all parties - including Plaintiff - any further disruption, turmoil, or expense.

II. STATEMENT OF FACTS

The facts of this case remain as set forth in the Affidavits of Yiannis Kypri, dated June 17, 2004, Athos Hadjimitsis, dated June 17, 2004, and Zaharo Sofianou, dated June 30, 2004, and in the Bank's prior Memorandum of Law (the "Bank Memo"), except to the extent the accompanying Declaration of Alina Shipilina, dated July 21, 2004, reinforces the aforesaid sworn statements that the Bank has never done business with Ms. Shipilina. The only specific associations alleged by Plaintiff between the Bank and any of the defendants is that between Ms. Shipilina and a "Stephanos" and an account she purportedly maintained with the Bank. As her declaration states, Ms. Shipilina is unable to provide either a last name for "Stephanos" or the name of the bank for which he may have worked.<sup>1</sup> Moreover, despite the Bank's clear statement that there is no account bearing the number 54660, Plaintiff has supplied no account statement or any other indication that the account actually exists. Succinctly put, the Bank has had no role in any aspect of this matter.

III. ARGUMENT

A. PLAINTIFF'S OPPOSITION RELIES ON SPECULATION AND UNWARRANTED DEDUCTIONS AND FAILS TO ALLEGE ANY FACTS THAT ENTITLE HIM TO RELIEF

A court should grant a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) if, after construing the allegations liberally and in a light most favorable to the pleader, it appears beyond doubt that the pleader can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief. Harris v. City of New York, et al., 186 F.3d 243, 247 (2nd Cir. 1999) (citations omitted). In evaluating the underlying allegations, the court is not required to accept as true "unwarranted deductions." First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 771 (2d Cir. 1994) (citations omitted).

Plaintiff has failed to provide even the most tenuous support for any of his claims against the Bank. His pleading is founded entirely on wild speculations which do not permit any reasoned conclusion or inference. He attempts to slip around this fundamental flaw by arguing that mere notice pleading is required. Plaintiff is correct - as far as he goes. In simple terms, notice pleading is the standard; however, Plaintiff may not rely on speculation and unwarranted deductions and he must, at least, plead the elements of each cause of action. This he has demonstrably failed to do, despite a multitude of speculative claims.

1. Plaintiff Has Failed to Plead Causal Nexus or the Requisite Investment in an Enterprise. His First Cause ("Use of Income from Racketeering Activities") Must Be Dismissed.

Plaintiff's argument that he has pleaded a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a) is three pronged. First, he argues that a violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a) does not require injury flowing from the investment of racketeering income. Opposition at 18. Next, Plaintiff back peddles and baldly states that "if [, however,] the Court requires a racketeering injury" then the Complaint has satisfied such requirement. Id. at 19. Finally, he asserts that the investment comprising a required element in this cause of action need not be in the "enterprise" in question. These arguments all fail.

a. Plaintiff Must Allege a Causal Nexus Between the Offending Acts and His Injury.

To state a claim under Section 1962(a), "a plaintiff must allege injury 'by reason of' defendants' investment of racketeering income in an enterprise." Ouaknine, et al. v. MacFarlane, et al., 897 F.2d 75, 82-83 (2nd Cir. 1990) (internal citations omitted); See R.C.M. Executive Gallery Corp., et al. v. Rols Capital Co., et al., 901 F. Supp. 630, 642 (S.D.N.Y. 1995). Plaintiff incorrectly contends that the racketeering investments need not have caused his injury. Opposition at 18. The opposite is true. The failure to plead a causal nexus between the injury and the racketeering investment requires dismissal of the claim. See Dangerfield v. Merrill Lynch, et al., No. 02-2561 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 16908 at 25-26 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 26, 2003); See also Discon Incorporated v. Nynex Corporation, et al., 93 F.3d 1055, 1063 (2nd Cir. 1996).

b. Plaintiff Has Not Pleaded Any Causal Nexus.

Plaintiff's fallback position – that, if he must plead a causal nexus between his injury and the investment of racketeering income, then he has done so, is incorrect. Plaintiff relies on three sections of his Complaint to make this argument. The first section, paragraphs 633-636, provides mere conclusory allegations against the Bank of predicate acts. "[T]he essence of a violation of § 1962(a) is not commission of predicate acts but investment of racketeering income." Ouaknine, 897 F.2d at 83. Allegations of predicate acts are insufficient to state a cause of action. Id.; see also, Allen, et al. v. New World Coffee, Inc., No. 00-2610, 2001 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 3269 at 22-23 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 27, 2001).

The second section, paragraphs 874 and 875, speaks to the effect of the Enterprise (as defined in the Complaint) on interstate and foreign commerce and alleges that "[t]he Enterprise member defendants generate funds . . . through numerous predicate acts . . . ."

Plaintiff again refers to predicate acts. He simply has not alleged the essential nexus between any investment by the Bank and his injury and, in consequence, he has not stated a cause of action.

Finally, according to Plaintiff, the third section, paragraphs 900 - 908, alleges that Plaintiff has been injured by the Enterprise activities. None of these paragraphs allege that the Bank's investment of racketeering income caused Plaintiff's injury. These paragraphs are baldly conclusory and Plaintiff simply is wrong. He has not stated a cause of action.

c. Plaintiff Has Not Alleged that the Bank Invested in an Enterprise.

In stark contrast to his conclusory allegations about his injuries, Plaintiff specifically alleges that the Bank engaged in the alleged acts "to generate revenues for its banking operations." Complaint ¶ 636. On its face, this allegation defeats Plaintiff's cause under Section 1962(a). He has it backwards. Plaintiff has specifically pleaded that the acts attributed to the Bank resulted in an investment in the Bank, not an investment in the enterprise. Accordingly, Plaintiff's first cause of action must be dismissed. See, R.C.M. Executive Gallery Corp., 901 F. Supp. at 642. Neither causal nexus nor the requisite investment has been pleaded.

2. Plaintiff Has Not Pleaded Interest In or Control of an Enterprise. His Second Cause ("Racketeering Activities To Maintain Interest or Control") Must Be Dismissed.

"The purpose of Section 1962(b) is to prohibit the takeover of a legitimate business through racketeering . . . ." Goldberg v. Merrill Lynch, No. 97-8779, 1998 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 1187 at 11 (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 9, 1998). To state a claim under this Section, a plaintiff must allege that he or she was injured because the defendant acquired or maintained an interest in, or control of, an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C. § 1962(b).

Plaintiff argues that he has sufficiently pleaded a violation of Section 1962(b) by alleging that the Bank "operates a money laundering business for the Russian Mafia . . . [and] engages in the predicate acts necessary to launder and hide Russian mafia money . . . in order to maintain its money laundering business in which it has a property interest". Opposition 19-20. The Bank's purpose, according to Plaintiff's own words, is not to maintain an interest in an enterprise, but to maintain an interest in itself; not to generate revenues for the Russian Mafia, nor the Enterprise, but to generate revenues for itself. Complaint ¶ 636. Plaintiff again has it backwards. Plaintiff must allege that the Bank maintained or acquired an interest in or control of the Enterprise. Solow v. Delit, No. 90-2273, 1992 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 14234 at 16 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 21, 1992). He has not and his second cause of action must be dismissed.

3. Plaintiff's Has Not Pleaded Conduct or Direction of an Enterprise. His Third Cause ("Participation in the Conduct of the Enterprise's Affairs") Must Be Dismissed.

To state a claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), a plaintiff must allege that the defendant conducts or directs the enterprise. Mere subordinate or discretionary activity on behalf of the enterprise is insufficient. See U.S. v. Viola, et al., <sup>15</sup> 33 F.3d 37, 41 (2d Cir. 1994) Plaintiff mistakenly relies on the First Circuit's opinion in United States v. Otero, 37 F.3d 739, 750 (1st Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1177, 130 L. Ed. 2d 1116, 115 S. Ct. 1161 (1995), which held that "one may 'take part in' the conduct of an enterprise by knowingly implementing decisions as well as by making them." Id. Plaintiff further argues that he has satisfied Otero. Opposition 20-21.

The Supreme Court of the United States has set a higher standard than Otero and the Second Circuit follows this higher standard. To conduct or to participate directly or indirectly in the conduct of an enterprise's affairs, "one must participate in the operation or management of the enterprise itself" and play "some part in directing the enterprise's affairs". Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 185 and 179, 122 L. Ed. 2d 525, 540 and 536-537, 113 S. Ct. 1163, 1173 and 1170 (1993)). "[T]he simple taking of directions and performance of tasks that are 'necessary and helpful' to the enterprise, without more, is insufficient to bring a defendant within the scope of § 1962(c)". Viola, 33 F.3d at 41 (2d Cir. 1994) (citation omitted).

Plaintiff falls back on the argument that the Complaint includes allegations that the Bank exerts control over mob activities by making decisions and exercising broad discretion.

The Complaint makes no such allegations. Complaint ¶ 637. Simple allegations that the Bank exercises "broad discretion" when deciding how to carry out "the laundering and hiding of illegal funds" fail to state the requisite participation in management or control. See Industrial Bank of

state a claim under § 1962(c)"); Lasalle Nat'l Bank v. Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co., et al., 951

F. Supp. 1071, 1090-1091 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (knowing assistance in a fraudulent bond rating scheme where the defendant had influence or "substantial persuasive power" in structuring the bond program did not constitute operation or management of the enterprise); Redtail Leasing v.

defendant does not 'direct' an enterprise's affairs under § 1962(c) merely by engaging in wrongful conduct that assists the enterprise"). Accordingly, Plaintiff's third cause of action fails to state a cause of action and must be dismissed.

4. Plaintiff Has Failed To Plead Knowing Agreement to Participate in a Conspiracy. His Fourth Cause of Action ("Conspiracy") Must Be Dismissed.

To state a claim under 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d), a plaintiff must plead facts alleging that each defendant "knowingly agreed to participate in the conspiracy". Colony at Holbrook, Inc. v. Strata G.C., Inc., 928 F.Supp 1224, 1238 (E.D.N.Y. 1996); see, Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F.Supp. 2d 340, 354 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). A plaintiff must further allege that "the defendants understood the scope of the enterprise and knowingly agreed to further its affairs". Connolly v. Havens, 763 F. Supp. 6, 14 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (citations omitted).

Plaintiff's allegations that "the Bank agreed to commit the predicate acts . . . with the requisite mens rea . . . and such acts furthered the Enterprise's purpose" (Opposition at 21-22), at best, merely parrot the applicable standard. Parroting does not obviate the need to provide specific factual allegations that (1) the Bank consciously agreed to participate in a conspiracy, (2) understood the scope of the enterprise, and (3) knowingly agreed to further the enterprise's affairs. Connolly, at 13-14. There must be an informed agreement and there is none. Moreover, because Plaintiff has failed to plead any substantive RICO violation in Counts I through III of the Complaint, there can be no RICO conspiracy. Schmidt, at 353. Accordingly, like the other causes, Plaintiff's fourth cause must be dismissed.

5. Plaintiff Has Failed to Plead Proximate Cause

Reprising a portion of his attempt to salvage his first count, Plaintiff concludes by arguing that he has alleged a causal relationship between the Bank's acts and his injury. He relies primarily on paragraph 683 of the Complaint. This paragraph speculates that "each predicate act was committed on behalf of every Member of the Enterprise, since each act was committed with knowledge of, or was reasonably foreseeable to each of the Members." Opposition at 23. The aforesaid conclusion is unsupported by any fact whatever. It is simply wild speculation.

Moreover, to plead a RICO violation, a Plaintiff must allege acts which are "a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation" and the injury must be "reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence". Standardbred Owners Ass'n. v. Roosevelt Raceway Assocs., 985 F.2d 102, 104 (2d Cir. 1993) (citing Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23 (2d Cir. 1990)). Plaintiff's speculations are insufficient. Casio Computer Co., Ltd. v. Sayo, No. 98-3772, 2000 WL 1877516 at 19 (S.D.N.Y. Oct. 13, 2000). Counts one through four must be dismissed.

B. PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT MUST BE DISMISSED WITH PREJUDICE

Plaintiff's opposition fails offer any substantive argument as to why his Complaint should not be dismissed with prejudice. Nor could he. There is no bank account. "Stephanos" has no surname and no identified place of employment. The Bank engages in no financial transactions in New York with customers anywhere and there is no connection whatever between the Bank and Plaintiff or his ex-wife. There simply is no cause of action against the Bank and Plaintiff should not be granted leave to amend his Complaint. Cortec Industries, Inc. v. Sum Holding L.P., 949 F.2d 42, 48 (2d Cir. 1991) (failure to plead any fact sufficient to support claims requires dismissal of with prejudice). The unfortunate problem that exists in this case cannot be solved in a court of law. Plaintiff must look elsewhere and the Court should facilitate this effort, to the extent it can, by dismissing Plaintiff's complaint with prejudice. Alternatively, the Court, on its own motion, might fashion appropriate relief for the Bank. It is entirely blameless.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully requested that the motion of Defendant Bank of Cyprus, Ltd., to dismiss the Complaint, with prejudice, and to grant such other relief as the Court should deem fitting and proper, be granted in its entirety.

I. Preliminary Statement

(1-2, 2-1) Bank claims plaintiff failed to “establish” links among defendants and to plaintiff and “establish” Bank played a role. Establish means “to prove,” Blacks Law Dictionary, 8th ed. P 586. The function of a complaint is to give notice, not prove. NOW, Inc v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994). The bank makes allegations in its memo more appropriate for an answer. The bank’s attorneys invoke a new rule of law that when the attorneys for the defense say there are no ..... the Court must believe them and “[t]he Court must dismiss” the case purely on their say-so. Such a rule would put an end to litigation as we know it with defendants avoiding the consequences of their misdeeds by merely having their attorneys claim that the allegations against them are false.

The defendants can spare the plaintiff their hypocritical compassion and crystal ball analysis that the plaintiff is experiencing “disruption, turmoil and expense.”

The arrogance of the bank’s attorneys has so inflated their self image that now they presume to speak for the plaintiff. The plaintiff speaks for himself.

II. Statement of Facts

(2-2) Once again, a motion to dismiss presents a question of law, not of fact. See Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682, 90 L.Ed. 939, 66 S.Ct. 773, 776 (1946). But as another example of the Enterprise movants dissembling the information in papers already presented, Shipilina’s declaration does not indicate she never did any business with the bank.

Can’t the B/C read, the allegations against it are contained in the Complaint 101-103, 456-458, 633-637, 682, 683 and 827-830. The allegations concerning Shipilina's account are allegations against her not the bank, Complaint 450-2, 767. Stephanos is alleged to be either an employee of the bank or some other financial institution in Limassol, Cyprus, Complaint 104. Without the assistance of discovery, pinpointing Stephanos last name and his employer is unlikely; besides, the federal procedure does not require parties to prove their allegations in pleadings. Cater Constr. Co. v. Nischwitz, 111 F.2d 971, 973 (7th Cir. 1940); see Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 40 L.Ed.2d 90, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 1686 (1974). That's why the federal courts permit using "John Doe," Lowenstein v. Rooney, 401 F.Supp. 952, 960 (EDNY 1975) and pleading "on information and belief," Gitterman v. Vitoulis, 564 F.Supp. 46, 50 (SDNY). The affidavits the bank provided the Court concerning Shipilina's account are extraneous material, but beyond that, they are limited to the Bank of Cyprus Ltd, which is just part of the Bank of Cyprus Group conglomerate that includes mutual funds.

III. Argument

A. Rule 12(b)(6) Standard

(3-1) What's with these guys, they keep using the same tricks over and over. Once again they omit the same crucial part of the standard for determining a 12(b)(6). The only difference is this time they cite a difference case, Harris v. City of NY, 186 F.3d. 243, 247 (2nd Cir. 1999). "On a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the court must accept as true the factual allegations in the complaint, and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff." They also omit another statement by that Court in the same paragraph, "[a]ny ... movant for dismissal faces a difficult (though not insurmountable) hurdle...." (Citation omitted).

(3-2) Refer Plaintiff Opp Bank 17-1,2. B/C uses terms attacking the Complaint but doesn't define them or furnish cites that define them, "even the most tenuous support," "wild speculations.” They apparently have added these to their list of opprobrium descriptors of “insufficient,” “conclusory,” “bare” after the plaintiff showed what the courts really meant by such terms and that they didn’t apply to the Complaint. Re: Plaintiff Opp Bank 13, 14, 15, 22-2

The plaintiff will leave it to the bank to define the meanings of its new terms that it hopes will do what its old terms couldn’t. On one hand the bank admits that pleadings are meant to provide notice, but then accuses the plaintiff of trying slip something over on the Court but stating that rule. How can a party slip something over on the Court, if his statement of a legal rule is correct? Sounds Orwellian to me. The Bank makes a blanket objection that the Complaint “must, at least, plead the elements of each cause of action.” So which elements doesn’t it plead? Why didn’t they move for a more definite statement under Rule 12(e)? Further the banks statement is not fully accurate. There has been some ambiguity among SCt and other federal court decisions as to whether pleading must allege the ultimate facts, or elements, of each cause of action. The Rules eliminated “facts” and “cause of action” from the codes and put in “claim showing that the pleader is entitled to relief.” W&M Civ 1216, p148. Complaint need not plead law or match facts to every element of legal theory, Kreiger v. Fadely, 211 F.3d 134, 136 (D.C. Cir 2000). Complaints need not spell out every element of a legal theory; that’s the big difference between notice and code pleading. Hemenway v. Peabody Coal Co., 159 F.3d 255, 261 (7th Cir 1998)(Easterbrook J.)

1. Use of income from racketeering activities 1962(a)

(3-3) Plaintiff does not “back peddle” but argues in the alternative. The bank complains the plaintiff’s alternative argument “baldly” states a disjunctive. The defendants seem much enamored with the word “baldly,” presumably the archaic definition which means “lacking merit.” Webster’s Third New International Dictionary. But how can a disjunctive phrase be lacking in merit? Perhaps the bank uses “baldly” to mean lacking amplification. But in order to achieve that definition, the bank reengineers the Plaintiff’s Opp Bank p 18-3, p 19-1 by not fully recounting what it states. That way they get to use that favored lawyerly expression “baldly.”

a. Must the injury flow from the investment of racketeering income or from the predicate acts.

(4-2) Refer Plaintiff Opp Bank p 18-3. The bank claims the law requires an allegation of injury flowing from the investment of racketeering income by citing Quaknine v. MacFarlane, 897 F.2d 75, 82-83 (2nd Cir 1990). Quaknine dismissed the argument that the Supreme Court in Sedima did not require the injury come from the investment of racketeering income. Quaknine recounted the Supreme “Court stated that ‘[I]f the defendant engages in a pattern of racketeering activity in a manner forbidden by [§ 1962(a-c)], and the racketeering activities injure the plaintiff in his business or property, the plaintiff had a claim under § 1964(c).’” Sedima at 495, 105 S.Ct. at 3284. “That statement is not controlling here, however, for the Court was dealing only with § 1962(c)....” So the question then is what carries more weight, Supreme Court dicta or a holding by the 2nd Circuit. I’ll go with S.Ct. dicta. Dangerfield v. Merrill Lynch, 2003 U.S. Dist. Lexis 16908 at *28, n 2 states that Fourth Cir does not require a claim under 1962(a) to allege a distinct investment injury, see Busby v. Crown Supply, Inc., 896 F.2d 833, 836-40 (4th Cir. 1990) and the plaintiff might have been able to make a good faith argument for the adoption of the 4th Cir standard. [ RCM, 901 F.Supp. 630, 642 (SDNY 1995) rules against injury from using income to invest in operations.]

b. If 1962(a) requires injury from investment then the Complaint alleges so.

(4-3) The bank complains about the plaintiff making reference to predicate acts to reargue what they argued in section (a) above in an effort to muddy the waters of what Plaintiff Opp Bank memorandum says, which is, if the court requires a racketeering investment injury, then the Complaint alleges such injury. Before there is racketeering income to be invested there has to be predicate acts that generate that income. Can't have racketeering income unless there exists a pattern of racketeering activity; that is, predicate acts. This the bank ignores. Let's try to make it simple for the bank. 1962(a) states, "It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity ... to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such income, or proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in ... interstate or foreign commerce." The "income" must come from a "pattern of racketeering activity," which is defined by the 18 USC 1961(5) as at least two acts of "racketeering activity." According to 18 USC 1961(1), "racketeering activity" means any number of a list of predicate acts that included those alleged against the Bank of money laundering under 18 USC 1956 and use of international facilities to distribute the proceeds from unlawful Enterprise activities in aid of a racketeering enterprise under 18 U.S.C. 1952. Once the predicate acts are alleged, then the Complaint alleges the bank engages in those predicate acts in order to generate revenues for its banking operations, which affect interstate and foreign commerce, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(a). Complaint 636.

(4-3) The bank repeats in its reply the same objection as in its first memo that the predicate act allegations and use of racketeering income are "mere conclusory." As stated in Plaintiff Opp Bank pp 13-14: But "[w]hether these charges [in the complaint] be called 'allegations of fact' or 'mere conclusions of the pleader,' we hold that they must be taken into account in deciding whether the [plaintiff] is entitled to have its case tried." U.S. v. Employing Plasterer's Ass'n, 347 U.S. 186, 188, 98 L.Ed. 618, 74 S.Ct. 452, 454 (1954). For "the ancient distinction between "facts" and "conclusions" is no longer significant." Oil, Chem. & Atomic Workers Int'l Union v. Delta Ref. Co., 277 F.2d 694, 697 (6th Cir. 1960)(citing U.S. v. Employing Plasterer's Ass'n, 347 U.S. 186, 188). The plaintiff need only give the defendants notice of the claims. See Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intel. & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 122 L.Ed.2d 517, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 1163 (1993). "A complaint that complies with the federal rules of civil procedure cannot be dismissed on the ground that it is conclusory or fails to allege facts. The federal rules require (with irrelevant exceptions) only that the complaint state a claim not that it plead the facts if true would establish ... that the claim was valid." Higgs v. Carver, 286 F.3d 437, 439 (7th Cir. 2002)(Posner, J.)(citation omitted). And "what may be insufficient in New York courts need not necessarily be insufficient" in Federal court. Mueller v. Rayon Consultants, 170 F.Supp 555, 558 (S.D.N.Y. 1959). The pleader need only "disclose adequate information as the basis of his claim for relief as distinguished from a bare averment that he wants relief and is entitled to it." Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ 2d 1216, p 165 (citing October 1955 Report of the Judicial Conference of the United States).

(5-1) The Bank deletes one of the Complaint's paragraphs (881) cited in the Plaintiff Opp Bank p 19 and mischaracterized another (875). The Bank claims 875 deals with the Enterprise's effect on interstate and foreign traffic. They are wrong, it addresses, as does 881, the pattern of racketeering activity. I just don't see how attorneys so full of themselves could miss the boldfaced underlined heading in the Complaint that include these two paragraphs: XIII. Pattern of Racketeering Activity. And, once again, under the law, a pattern requires at least two predicate acts. So why does the bank keep complaining about the Complaint referring to predicate acts? Because they will twist the law, the allegations and the plaintiff's memoranda any which way in order to win.

(5-2) The Bank once again deletes a pertinent paragraph in the Complaint when it claims none of the paragraphs 900-907 allege that the Bank's use of racketeering income caused the plaintiff injury. The deleted ¶ 683 states, "[e]ach predicate act was committed on behalf of every Member of the Enterprise, since each act was committed with the knowledge of, or was reasonably foreseeable to, each of the Members." And the Complaint alleges the Bank as a member of the Enterprise at ¶¶ 101-03. Besides ¶¶ 900-907 do not, as the Bank falsely states, allege injury by "Enterprise activities," they allege injury from, among other acts, the use of funds from racketeering activities.

(5-2) The Bank also claims the allegations of injury from investment income are "baldly conclusory"—all this legal lingo must come from too many Perry Mason shows. More seriously, the U.S. Supreme Court held that on a motion to dismiss general factual allegations of injury resulting from defendant's conduct embrace those specific facts necessary to support the claim. NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798, 803 (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2137 (1992)).

c. Investment in an enterprise and what is an enterprise anyway?

(5-3) Income from racketeering activity that is invested in a RICO enterprise or a legitimate enterprise violates 1962(a). See U.S. v. Godoy, 678 F.2d 84, 86-87 (9th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 959 (1983); U.S. v. McNary, 620 F.2d 621, 628 (7th Cir. 1980).

2. 1962(b)

(5-4, 6-1) Despite the cite by the Bank that the purpose of 1962(b) is to prohibit the takeover of legitimate businesses, Professor Lynch found that only a handful of cases under 1962(b) involved defendants infiltrating legitimate businesses. 87 Colum. L. Rev. 661, 726-28 (1987). Also, the Bank failed to state entire requirement of 1962(b) by deleting the phrase “directly or indirectly.” 1962(b) states, “unlawful for any person through a pattern of racketeering activity ... to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in ... interstate or foreign commerce.”

(6-2) Once again the Bank tries to put words in the plaintiff’s mouth by falsely claiming, “The Bank’s purpose, according to Plaintiff’s own words, is not to maintain an interest in an enterprise, but to maintain an interest in itself; not to generate revenues for the Russian mafia ... but to generate revenues for itself. Complaint ¶ 636.” The Bank is deceptively trying to confuse the allegations concerning 1962(a) with 1962(b) in order to claim the defendant Bank is not distinct from the enterprise in which it seeks to maintain an interest under 1962(b). As the plaintiff explained in Plaintiff Opp Bank p 19-2,3, the term “enterprise” can mean the criminal RICO association or another organization. The Bank had mistakenly believed “enterprise” only applied to the RICO association. Contrary to the Bank’s deception, the Complaint actually states at ¶ 636: “Member Bank of Cyprus engages in the predicate acts [of money laundering and using foreign facilities to aid the Russian mafia] in order to generate revenues for its banking operations, which affect interstate and foreign commerce, in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(a) ....” Here the money comes from the money laundering and aiding the Russian mafia and flows back into its operations. In addition, “Member Bank of Cyprus engages in the predicate acts [of money laundering and using foreign facilities to aid the Russian mafia] ... to maintain its money laundering business with the Enterprise [the Russian mafia] in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(b) ....” Here the Bank engages in money laundering and aiding the Russian mob because if it did not it would lose its interest in the Russian mafia or RICO Enterprise. The Bank’s interest in the RICO Enterprise is the money laundering operations they as part of it. The U.S. Supreme Court adopted a broad definition of the word “interest” as “[t]he most general term that can be employed to denote a right, claim, title or legal share in something.” Russello v. U.S., 464 U.S. 16, 21, 104 S.Ct. 296, 78 L.Ed.2d 17 (1983)(quoting Black’s Law Dictionary).

3. 1962(c)

(6-3, 4) The Bank’s statement that to violate 1962(c) requires “that the defendant conducts or directs the enterprise,” is wrong under the U.S. Supreme Court, wrong in the 2d Circuit and wrong in the 1st Circuit. “[T]he phrase ‘directly or indirectly’ [in 1962(c)] makes clear that RICO liability is not limited to those with a formal position in the enterprise...,” Reves at 179, or that only primary responsibility for the enterprise’s affairs is required, but “one must have some part in directing those affairs.” Id. What is needed is that a person participates in the operation or management of the enterprise. Reves at 185. But an enterprise is “operated” not just by upper management but also by lower rung participants who are under the direction of upper management or by others associated with the enterprise. Reves at 184. But the Court did not decide how far down the ladder of operation 1962(c) reaches. Reves at 184, n. 9. An enterprise is also operated or managed by others associated with it who exert control over it. Reves at 184. “One is liable under RICO if he ... has ‘discretionary authority in carrying out the instructions of the principals.’” Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d at 376 (2d Cir. 2003)(citing US v. Diaz, 176 F.3d 52, 93 (2d Cir. 1999)). In addition, a defendant may also take part in the conduct of an enterprise by knowingly implementing decisions as well as making them. US v. Oreto, 37 F.3d 739, 750 (1st Cir. 1994).

(6-3, 4) U.S. v. Viola, 35 F.3d 37, 41 (2d Cir. 1994) to which the Bank gives the wrong cite, perhaps to hide the Bank’s misstatement of the case’s holding, does not hold that “discretionary activity on behalf of the enterprise is insufficient” for a defendant to violate 1962(c). It does hold that where the defendant played no part in the management or control of the enterprise as defined by Reves but only took directions and performed acts, functions or duties that were necessary or helpful to the operation of the enterprise, that is still not enough for liability under 1962(c). Id. at 40-41. In fact, in the Second Circuit case Napoli v. U.S., 45 F.3d 680, 683 (2d Cir. 1995), defendants were liable under 1962(c) for exercising discretion. The defendants—investigators working pursuant to directions from attorneys in their firm to bribe witnesses and falsify evidence—though not acting in a managerial role exercised broad discretion in carrying out instructions from the law firm principals. Not only does the Complaint satisfy Otero, but Reves, Baisch, Viola and Napoli.

(7-2) Once again the Bank misleads the Court about what the plaintiff has said. The Bank claims the plaintiff argues, “that the Bank exerts control over mob activities.” That’s not accurate, Plaintiff Opp Bank states, “the Bank exerts control over that aspect of the mob’s activities by making and knowingly implementing decisions in which it exercises broad discretion in carrying out the laundering and hiding of illegal funds.” “That aspect” refers to money laundering operations. The Bank’s intentional dissemblance tries to mislead the Court into believing the plaintiffs claims the bank controls all mob activities. In addition, as to what Plaintiff Opp Bank really states, the Bank further lies by claiming the Complaint makes no such allegation and refers the Court to ¶ 637 but fails to alert the Court to the cites given by the plaintiff, which are ¶¶ 15, 101-03, 456-58, 633-636, 874(b), (d), (j), (k), 881, but not 637. Why must these lawyers lie, prevaricate and dissemble repeatedly?

(7-2) The Bank is not an outside money manager but the conductor of the segment of the Enterprise’s business that launders money. As alleged, the Bank directs those affairs of the Enterprise, but even if that were not alleged, and the Bank considered a lower rung participant of the Enterprise, the Bank’s commission of crimes that advance the Russian mafia’s objectives must be assessed by a fact-finder to determine whether or not its criminal activity, assessed in the context of all the relevant circumstances, constitutes participation in the operation or management of the Enterprise's affairs. U.S. V Allen, 155 F.3d 35, 42 (2d Cir. 1998)

(7-2) If that's not good enough then and still considering the Bank a lower rung participant them:

"Reves makes it clear that a defendant can act under the direction of superiors in a RICO enterprise and still participate in the operation of the enterprise within the meaning of 1962(c)," Wong, 40 F.3d at 1373;

"[W]e agree with the First Circuit that one may be liable under the operation or management test by 'knowingly implementing decisions, as well as by making them,'" U.S. v. Starret, 55 F.3d 1525, 1548 (11th Cir. 1995).

The Bank cites three SDNY cases for the proposition that a RICO defendant who exercises "broad discretion" does not meet the "requisite participation in management and control." None of the cited district court cases deal with "broad discretion."

Industrial Bank Latvia the Bank still doesn't provide the full lexis cite and even deletes the WL cite. The Bank relies on dicta and the only alleged misconduct of Asia Bank was allowing a defendant to maintain an account and receive transfers into that account.

Lasalle Nat'l Bank, 951 F.Supp. 1071, 1090-91, dealt with an outsider to the RICO enterprise.

Redtail Leasing, reiterates that a rung participant must do more than just assist a RICO enterprise.

4. Conspiracy 1962(d)

(8-1) To repeat Plaintiff Opp Bank at p 21: ). “[T]he Second Circuit established that the core requirement of a RICO conspiracy claim is an agreement to commit the predicate act.... [T]he Second Circuit held that a complaint must, at a minimum, specifically plead such an agreement... ‘to commit at least two predicate acts.’” Colony at 1238. So in the Second Circuit, a complaint must allege the defendants concurred, consented, settled upon, assented or agreed to the committing of two predicate acts. It is the agreement to commit predicate acts in furtherance of the common purpose of the RICO enterprise that infers a RICO conspiracy. See Colony at 1238. And furthering a RICO’s purpose can be met by merely adopting the goal of advancing or facilitating violations of RICO 1962(a-c). See Salinas v. U.S., 522 U.S. 52, 65, 139 L.Ed.2d 352, 118 S.Ct. 469, 477 (1997). By agreeing to launder and hide money from Russian mafia activities, the Bank, at the very least, advanced and facilitated the Enterprise’s criminal endeavors that include violations of 18 U.S.C. 1962(a-c).

(8-2) The Bank concurs with the above law when it states, “Plaintiff’s allegations that ‘the Bank agreed to commit the predicate acts ... with the requisite mens rea ... and such acts furthered the Enterprise’s purpose’ (Plaintiff Opp Bank at 21-22), at best, merely parrot the applicable standard.” Parrot means to repeat, Webster’s Third New International Dictionary, so the Bank agrees that the standard for 1962(d) conspiracy is agreement to commit predicate acts that further the Enterprise’s purpose.

(8-2) In Connolly v Havens, 763 F.Supp. 6, 14 (SDNY 1991) the Court gave three reasons for rejecting a complaint:

(1) It just repeated the language from the statute’s conspiracy section, which this Complaint does not do, ¶¶ 637, 682, 683, regardless of the Bank’s parroting the Connolly court.

(2) Connolly also stated the complaint before it failed to indicate which two activities constituted the alleged mail fraud predicate acts. Mail fraud pleading requires Rule 9(b) particularity, the predicate acts alleged against the Bank do not because they are financial transactions involving money from illegal Enterprise activities in order to hide the origin and ownership of the funds and avoid U.S. reporting requirements in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1956(a)(1)(B)(i) & (ii); transfers of funds from illegal Enterprise activities in order to hide the origin and ownership of the money and avoid U.S. reporting requirements in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1956(a)(2)(B)(i) & (ii); and use of international facilities to distribute the proceeds from unlawful Enterprise activities constitutes actions in aid of a racketeering enterprise under 18 U.S.C. 1952. (Complaint ¶¶ 15, 101-03, 456-58, 633-35, 874(b), (d), 881)

(3) The Connolly complaint failed to even state that the defendants agreed to commit at least two predicate acts or further the Enterprise's affairs through the commission of various offenses. Not so with the Complaint, which states the Bank agreed to commit the predicates specified in ¶¶ 633-635 in order to further the purpose of the Enterprise. (Complaint ¶ 637)

(8-2) The Bank complains, "There must be an informed agreement and there is none." What the Bank really means, unless it is again foolishly demanding the Complaint provide evidence, that the Complaint allege an agreement, which it does in ¶¶ 637, 682, 683.

(8-2) Co-conspirators who might not themselves have violated one of the substantive provisions of 1962 can still be sued providing others in the Enterprise were alleged to have done so. Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 506-07, 120 S.Ct. 1608, 1617 (2000). Conspiracy is a mechanism for subjecting co-conspirators to liability for the tortious acts of one of their members, and a tortious act is a 1962(a), (b), or (c) violation or may even be the commission of one predicate act. Beck at 506 n. 10. The Complaint alleges numerous violations of 18 USC 1962 and predicate acts committed by the movants in furtherance of the Enterprise's Scheme.

5. Proximate Cause

(8-3) The Bank's mendacity is showing again. Contrary to its claim, the Complaint does not "primarily rely of ¶ 683" for alleging direct injuries but on it along with ¶¶ 900-907, as Plaintiff Opp Bank states at p 23. In addition, its misguided belief that the Complaint must provided evidence is showing again when it states, "unsupported by any fact whatever." The plaintiff must not be put to the test to prove his allegations at the pleading stage. NOW, Inc v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994). "The purpose of a motion to dismiss is not to test the weight of the evidence which might be offered in support of it but to assess the legal feasibility of the complaint." (Citing Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639 (2d Cir. 1980)). If the allegations of injury are "simply wild speculation," then it will come out in discovery. "[P]leading standard relies on liberal discovery rules and summary judgment motions to define disputed facts and issues and to dispose of unmeritorious claims." Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 512, 152 L.Ed.2d 1, 122 S.Ct. 992 (2002).

(9-2) The Bank's prevarication as to the law is showing again. The Bank cites an appeal from a summary judgment case Standardbred Owners Ass'n. v. Roosevelt Raceway, 985 F.2d 102, 104 (2d Cir. 1990) for the proposition that proximate cause requires "a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation" and the injury must be 'reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence.' The Bank on its own adds the introductory phrase: "a Plaintiff must allege acts which are" such, which hides the fact that the Second Circuit had the benefit of evidence from discovery in reaching its decision. The Bank also fails to point out that "This rule is intended to preclude recovery by plaintiffs who 'complain of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person.” Standardbred at 104. Derivative injuries are not claimed in the Complaint. The Bank continues its ploy of making its self-serving rule applicable to Rule 12(b)(6) motions by citing a magistrate’s report and recommendation discussion of proximate cause in Casio Computer v. Sayo, 2000 WL 1877516 at *19 (SDNY Oct 13, 2000) without even mentioning that the magistrate recommended dismissal of the third amended complaint for the plaintiff’s “failure to plead the predicate act of wire fraud with particularity” as required by Rule Rule 9(b). Id. at *31. There are no fraud allegations against the Bank. Further, in Casio the judge actually dismissed the third amended complaint on the grounds of forum non conveniens, id. at *1, another salient fact not mentioned by the Bank. The U.S. Supreme Court’s position on pleading injury is more appropriate than lawyers making their own self-serving rules based on concealing the facts of a cited case. The Supreme Court said on a motion to dismiss general factual allegations of injury resulting from defendant’s conduct embrace those specific facts necessary to support the claim. NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798, 803 (citing Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2137 (1992)).

Finally, the Bank completely ignores Plaintiff Opp Bank section at p 24 on joint liability of RICO members

B. The Complaint should not be dismissed.

(9-2) The Bank fails to offer a legitimate legal argument as to why the Complaint with respect to it should be dismissed with prejudice. Especially, since leave to amend is ordinarily granted unless presiding court gives reasons why leave should be denied. Verdon v. Consolidated Rail Corp., 828 F.Supp. 1129 (SDNY 1993).

(9-2) Again for the third time, Shipilina's Global Equity Fund account is not an allegation against the Bank, yet. The use of fictitious names are permitted by the Rules to prevent wrong doers whose identities are subsequently revealed by discovery from going free. Does the Bank state that it has no employees in Cyprus with the name Stephanos? No. The Bank has a global Internet network for dealing with customers. A Wall Street hotel refers its guest to the Bank's Broad Street office. The plaintiff never alleged he had dealings with the Bank, and the Bank's statement of no connection with movant Shipilina is an allegation for its answer. The Bank cites to Cortec Industries v. Sun Holding, 949 F.2d 42, 28 (2d Cir. 1991) for grounds that the Complaint should be dismissed with prejudice. But the Cortec court dismissed the complaint with prejudice because the plaintiff was a third party in the transaction and liability under § 12(2) of the 1933 Securities Act did not flow to third parties, so the plaintiff could not make any allegations that brought it within the Act. Cortec at 49. The allegations against the Bank bring it within the RICO act.

(9-2) The only way to lessen the harm caused by members of the Russian mafia furthering that mob's effort to infiltrate and expand it's illegal activities into hard currency markets is through civil RICO, the weapon that America's elected officials gave to this country's citizens knowing that in a democracy based on laws there can be no successful appeal from the ballot to the bullet. The Bank's lawyers state, "It is entirely blameless." Given the source of that statement, it means nothing. Defense lawyers don't admit their clients are to blame, so why should their affirmation that their clients are blamelessness mean anything.

Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Defendants' Exhibits Q through Z for Failure to Authenticate and to Strike the Reply Memorandum's References to those Exhibits.

The defendants' Reply Memorandum submits documentary evidence in support of their motion to dismiss. A motion to dismiss is not the place for presenting evidence, Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500-01, 91 L.Ed. 451, 67 S.Ct. 385 (1947). If the Court, however, decides to allow the defendants to turn a motion for dismissal into a litigation of personal destruction targeting the plaintiff, then the defendants should be required to show that their evidence is genuine by authenticating it.

When documentary evidence is submitted in support of a motion, it must be authenticated by an affidavit or affidavit substitute of an individual having first hand knowledge of the document. 1 Matthew Bender Federal Litigation Guide: New York and Connecticut § 9.75, (2004). The document should be attached to the affidavit or affidavit substitute. Id. The defendants failed to provide any authenticating affidavits or substitutes to the documents in their Exhibits Q through Z.

In addition, Exhibit Z purports to contain translations of foreign public documents, but, except for a handwritten document in Russian that may or may not be a public document, there are no other Russian language public documents included in that exhibit from which the English translations could have been made. All very convenient, since the inclusion of copies of foreign public documents require an attestation by the person authorized to make attestations for those documents and a final certification as to the genuineness of the signature and position of the attester. Fed. R. Civ. P. 44(a)(2). The reason for these requirements are to make sure the documents are what they purport to be, but the defendants blithely ignore the Rules and include only alleged translations but not copies of the original Russian documents, if there are any. Further, there is no translator's signed and notarized affidavit as to his qualifications for making such translations and the necessary apostile so that it can be used in an American court in accordance with the Hague Convention. T.I.A.S. 10072; 33 U.S. Treaty Series (UST) 883; 527 U.N. Treaty Series (UNTS) 189; Martindale-Hubble International Law Digest or <http://www.state.gov/m/a/auth/c1267.htm>. So what good are these documents, except to further the defendants' efforts to bias the Court against the plaintiff.

Furthermore, Exhibits Q and U also contain purported translations of apparently non-public documents without any notarized affidavits or apostiles.

The plaintiff requests the defendants Exhibits Q through Z be stricken from their Reply Memorandum along with all references to those Exhibits.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Defendants, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy (collectively referred herein as "Mundy") and Peter Petrovich ("Petrovich"), by their attorneys, McManus, Collura & Richter, P.C., respectfully submit this Memorandum of Law together with the Affidavit of Alinia A. Shipilina in opposition to the plaintiff's motion to strike Exhibits Q through Z attached to the Reply Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin dated May 13, 2004, which were submitted in further support of the defendants' motion to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint, and to strike all references by the defendants to such exhibits, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The facts giving rise to the instant action as well as the facts and procedural history relevant to this action are fully detailed in the defendants' Memorandum of Law dated September 29, 2003 and the defendants' Reply Memorandum of Law dated May 13, 2004 submitted in support of the defendants' motion to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint.

In evaluating the instant application by plaintiff and this opposition, the Court is respectfully referred to Exhibits Q through Z themselves, which are attached the Reply Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin dated May 13, 2004.

ARGUMENT

The plaintiff moves to strike Exhibits Q through Z attached to the reply motion to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint on behalf of Kuba and Petrovich on essentially two grounds.

First, plaintiff submits that Exhibits Q through Z should be stricken in their entirety, because they are purportedly not authenticated by an affidavit or an affidavit substitute of an individual having first hand knowledge of the documents.

✓ Second, plaintiff submits that Exhibits Q, U and Z are translations of foreign public documents and non public documents that do not comport with the proper procedures for translations.

✓ Tellingly, nowhere in the plaintiff's motion to strike Exhibits Q through Z does he deny <sup>adhere</sup> having prepared, drafted and/or executed those documents alleged to have been prepared, drafted and executed by him. In addition, nowhere in the plaintiff's motion does he indicate that the translations are not true and accurate. Plaintiff's motion is significant for what it states as for what it does not state. The plaintiff is in the best position to deny having prepared such documents or indicate that the translations are inaccurate, however, he fails to do so and presumably will continue to be unable to do so in reply to this opposition. Rather, he seeks to have this Court ignore admissible information which dispute his allegation and chronology of events as outlined in his complaint and opposition to the defendants' motion to dismiss.

In any event, the attached Affidavit of Alinia Shipilina, the plaintiff's ex-wife and the person to whom most of these documents were directed against, authenticates such exhibits. Accordingly, plaintiff's motion based upon the fact that Exhibits Q through Z have not been supported by an affidavit of a person with <sup>first-hand</sup> knowledge is now moot and must be ignored.

✓ In addition, the plaintiff criticizes Exhibit Q (various letters and cards written by plaintiff to Alinia A. Shipilina) for containing translations of non-public documents without a notarized affidavit by the translator. First, it is the Russian version of document itself that is the evidence in support of the motion to dismiss. The translation of the documents attached as Exhibit Q was simply provided by the defendants as a courtesy to this Court. In any event, the plaintiff submits no controlling law to support the proposition that such non-public documents must be supported by a notarized affidavit from the translator. Nor does plaintiff indicate that the documents, created by him, are inaccurate or was not truly translated as indicated. Nonetheless, the translated documents contain a stamp verifying that such documents have been translated and by whom. The translator has also signed the document below the stamp. Further, a copy of the document in Russia has been attached to the translation. The defendants also submit that an original of each of these documents can be inspected by the Court at the Court's request. Lastly, the attached affidavit of Alinia Shipilina attests to the veracity of the documents contained in Exhibit Q.

✓ The plaintiff also criticizes Exhibit U (Marriage contract between plaintiff and Alinia A. Shipilina) for containing a translation of a non-public document without a notarized affidavit by the translator. Again, it is the Russian version of the contract itself that is the evidence in support of the motion to dismiss. The translation of the contract was simply provided by the defendants as a courtesy. The plaintiff also, again, fails to submit any controlling law to support the proposition that such a non-public document must be supported by a notarized affidavit. Nor does the plaintiff indicate that the contract is inaccurate or was not translated as indicated. Nonetheless, the translated documents has been certified by the translator, Yefim, Krasnyanski, and, further, the notary public affirms that Vorobyova, Valeria Aleksandrovna executed the document after reading the contents aloud to plaintiff and Alinia Shipilina. Lastly, the attached affidavit of Alinia Shipilina attests to the veracity of contract attached as Exhibit U.

attester, and without an executed and notarized affidavit of the translator reflecting his qualifications.

✓ Interestingly, the plaintiff does not indicate that the documents attached as Exhibit Z are inaccurate or were not translated as indicated. Nonetheless, the translated documents contain a stamp verifying that such documents have been translated and by whom. The translator has also signed the document below the stamp. The defendants submit that they do not maintain a copy of the Russian version of such documents. In the event this Court deems these documents attached as Exhibit Z as inadmissible on the grounds that the original Russian version of the documents are unavailable, it is submitted that these documents do nothing to alter the fact that this matter should be dismissed for all reasons set forth in the defendants' motion to dismiss.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the plaintiff's motion to strike Exhibits Q through Z attached to the Reply Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin dated May 13, 2004 and all references by the defendants to such exhibits be denied, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

Alina A. Shipilina, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. I am a defendant in the above entitled action, represented by Jack Sachs, Esq. I am fully familiar with the facts and proceedings giving rise to this action and the contents contained in this affidavit.

2. I submit this affidavit in opposition to the plaintiff's motion to strike Exhibits Q through Z attached to the Reply Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin dated May 13, 2004, which were submitted in further support of the defendants' motion to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint, and to strike all references by the defendants to such exhibits, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

3. I have reviewed the Reply Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin dated May 13, 2004, with my counsel, and have reviewed Exhibits Q through Z that are attached to the Reply Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin. The motion papers and attached documentation were submitted in support of the defendants, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy's ("collectively referred herein as "Mundy") and Peter Petrovich's ("Petrovich").

motion to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint. My counsel, on my behalf, has also joined in the motion to dismiss submitted by Kuba and Petrovich. I have knowledge as to each of the exhibits attached to the Reply Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin, and that the documents are true and accurate. The contents of the documents speak for themselves.

4. Specifically, I respectfully refer this Court to the attached exhibits in support of the defendants' motion to dismiss, which are identified as follows:

a. Attached as Exhibit Q are six separate documents which represent various letters and cards written by the plaintiff to me in both Russian and English. In particular, the first document attached as Exhibit Q is a letter written by plaintiff to me dated February 17, 2000. The second document attached as Exhibit Q is a card written by plaintiff to me dated October 30, 1999. The third and fourth documents attached as Exhibit Q represent a letter written by plaintiff to me dated August 7, 1999. The fifth document attached as Exhibit Q is a letter written by plaintiff to me which represents a diary of plaintiff's thoughts. The sixth document attached as Exhibit Q is an undated letter written by plaintiff to me.

b. Attached as Exhibit R is a hand-made card drafted by plaintiff and forwarded to me, dated February 20, 2000.

c. Attached as Exhibit S is a card sent by plaintiff to me, dated February 19, 2000.

d. Attached as Exhibit T is a card sent by plaintiff to me, dated March 21, 2000.

e. Attached as Exhibit U is a marriage contract drafted by plaintiff, dated March 11, 2000.

f. Attached as Exhibit V is a card sent by plaintiff to me, dated June 18, 2000

g. Attached as Exhibit W is an August 1, 2000 Agreement drafted by plaintiff which was presented to me. The Agreement incorporates earlier June 18, 2000 and July 31, 2000 agreements.

h. Attached as Exhibit X is a Personal and Business Management Agreement prepared and drafted by plaintiff in July, 2000.

i. Attached as Exhibit Y is an investigation report/letter prepared by plaintiff and forwarded to me, posing various questions.

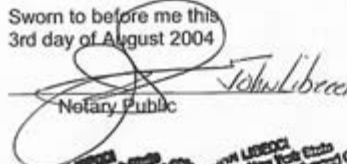

j. Attached as Exhibit Z are plaintiff's complaint, my mother, Innessa Shipilina's affidavits and Court determinations/decisions in connection with the defamation case commenced by plaintiff in Russia.

5. Each of the documents, identified as Exhibits Q through Y, were personally received by me from the plaintiff. An original of each of Exhibits Q through Y is available and can be inspected by the Court at the Court's request. The documents are in possession of counsel for Kuba and Petrovich.

WHEREFORE, it is respectfully submitted that the plaintiff's motion to strike Exhibits Q through Z attached to the Reply Declaration of Bradley E. Dubin dated May 13, 2004 and to strike all references by the defendants to such exhibits be denied, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

Preliminary Statement

This is the plaintiff's memorandum of law in reply to the Enterprise movants' opposition to the plaintiff's motion to strike certain exhibits and references in the Enterprise movants' motions to dismiss memoranda.

A. Nomenclature

The term "Enterprise movants" or "movants" refers to all the defendants who have submitted motions to dismiss. The Enterprise movants are Flash Dancers Topless Club; Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.; Lepofsky-CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.; Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers; Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 (collectively "FlashDancers"); Cybertech Internet Solutions; Kuba, Mundy & Associates; Mundy; Petrovich; Shipilina; Paulsen; Henning and the Bank of Cyprus. Other defendants in this action who are not presently moving to dismiss are referred to as "mafia defendant" followed by their proper name.

This memorandum of law ("Plaintiff Reply Strike") replies to the Enterprise movants' opposition memorandum ("Defendants Opposition Strike") to the plaintiff's motion to strike memorandum ("Plaintiff Memo. Strike"). The designations for the other papers are the Bank of Cyprus' motion to dismiss memorandum ("Defendant Bank Memo."), the plaintiff's opposition memorandum to the Bank's motion ("Plaintiff Opposition Bank"). The defendants who have appeared in this case, except for Anastasia and Nicolay Vasilyeva, joined in a joint memorandum in support of dismissal ("Defendants Joint Memo.") and a joint reply memorandum ("Defendants Joint Reply"), those defendants are FlashDancers, Cybertech Internet Solutions, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina, Paulsen, Henning and the Bank of Cyprus, since it confirmed before Judge Castel that it joined all the arguments advanced by all the other defendants to the extent applicable. July 13, 2004, Conf. Tr. p 5, ln 17-22. The plaintiff submitted an opposition memorandum (“Plaintiff Opposition Memo.”) to defendants’ joint memorandum and the separate short motion to dismiss papers submitted by FlashDancers, Cybertech, Shipilina, Paulsen and Henning.

Cites to any memoranda submitted are in parentheses stating the designated name and followed by the page number with a hyphen to a number that indicates the paragraph on that page whether a full paragraph or not. For example, (Defendants Opposition Strike p 3-1) refers to page 3, the first group of lines on that page. Cites to the Complaint are in parentheses stating “Complaint” followed by the paragraph number. For example, (Complaint ¶ 2) refers to the Russian mafia’s Scheme to infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary operations into the U.S.

The plaintiff uses the term “Russian mafia” to mean the Russian International Crime Organization or the “Enterprise” as stated in the Complaint ¶¶ 1, 10-15. The “Russian mafia” includes those identified as Russian Mafiosi in the media and by law enforcement agencies; the targets of the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s unit on Russian organized crime; various Russian, Chechen, American, Cypriot and Mexican gangsters along with those of other nationalities; assorted Chechen Islamic terrorists; and the more than thirty Russian gangs now operating in the US, most notably New York, Miami, San Francisco, Los Angeles and Denver, Robert I. Friedman, Red Mafiya: How the Russian Mob Has Invaded America, p. xix-xx, Little Brown & Company (2002). The defendants in this action comprise part of the Russian mafia. (Complaint ¶15)

Argument

A. The Enterprise movants continue their improper efforts to bring before the Court extraneous material on Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

The movants' memorandum in opposition to the plaintiff's motion to strike certain exhibits continues their strategy to interject extraneous material into Rule 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss. Enterprise movants in their various memoranda of law have submitted 47 separate documents divided into 30 exhibit tabs. The fewer number of exhibit tabs hides the actual number of extraneous exhibits they ask the Court to consider in deciding their motions to dismiss. The Enterprise movants argue without legal support "the plaintiff had possession and full knowledge of each and every [of the 47 documents] ..., and it is therefore appropriate for this Court to consider the same in deciding the [motions to dismiss]." (Defendants Joint Reply p 27-1) Their argument ignores the law in the Second Circuit for considering external documents as part of the complaint: "[W]e reiterate here that a plaintiff's reliance on the terms and effect of a document in drafting the complaint is a necessary prerequisite to the court's consideration of the document on a dismissal motion; mere notice or possession is not enough." Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc., 282 F.3d 147, 153 (2d Cir. 2002)(emphasis is the Court's). Further, when deciding motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), the Court's consideration is limited to the allegations in the complaint, which are accepted as true; documents incorporated by reference into the complaint; matters of which judicial notice may be taken; and documents relied on by the plaintiff in drafting the complaint. Brass v. American Film Technologies, Inc., 987 F.2d 142, 150 (2d Cir. 1993).

The plaintiff used only 8 of the 47 documents submitted by the Enterprise movants: (1) the annulment-divorce complaint, Exhibit B; (2) the police report based on perjured statements of attempted extortion in which the charges were never pressed, Exhibit D, second document; (3) movant Shipilina's masturbation video clips produced by movant Paulsen and mafia defendant Perlin, Exhibit G; (4) the plaintiff's petition in state court for an order of protection to stop threatening calls from the defendants, Exhibit H; (5) motion for a subpoena duces tecum on the F.B.I. to discover the identity of a threatening caller, Exhibit I, fifth document; (6) disciplinary complaint against movant Mundy for attempted coercion, Exhibit J; (7) Enterprise movant Mundy's February 5, 2001 letter threatening "difficult" divorce proceedings, Exhibit P; and (8) the criminal indictment by the Krasnodar, Russia prosecutor of mafia defendant Inessa Shipilina, Exhibit Z, the second to last document. The plaintiff also relied on other sources—and no, I am not waiving the attorney work product privilege—including movant Shipilina's diary of over one hundred pages. Gee whiz, the movants didn't include the diary in their voluminous exhibits. I guess it doesn't support their so-called facts and false inferences.

So why all these exhibits and statements of alleged facts from the Enterprise movants on a motion to dismiss? After all, "Whether a complaint states a cause of action on which relief could be granted is a question of law..." Bell v. Hood, 327 U.S. 678, 682, 90 L.Ed. 939, 66 S.Ct. 773, 776 (1946), and it is the allegations in the complaint, not those in the defendants' memoranda of law, that are considered as true, see Brass at 150. The answer quite simply is "the defendants seek to argue the merits ... in the context of a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, which is not the purpose of the motion." T.S. Haulers, Inc. v. Town of Riverhead, 190 F.Supp.2d 455, 464 (E.D.N.Y. 2002)(citing see Villager Pond Inc. v. Town of Darien, 56 F.3d 375, 378 (2d Cir.1995)(holding that the issue to consider is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims).

Under the disguise of motions to dismiss, the Enterprise movants attempt to slip by their own allegations of fact that belong in answers or allege findings of facts that belong in summary judgment motions in order to finesse the Court into using extraneous material to dismiss a RICO complaint. Basically, the Enterprise movants seek under the cloak of Rule 12(b)(6) either (1) a judgment on the pleadings without the plaintiff having the opportunity to respond to movants' answers simply because there are no formal answers, although there are before the Court the allegations that the movants would have included in their answers only those are now found in the movants' memoranda of law, or (2) a summary judgment in which the Court views the assertions in movants' memoranda as findings of fact that the plaintiff had no opportunity to rebut because the movants brought motions to dismiss. If successful, such a strategy would violate the plaintiff's due process rights to reply to counterclaims, or move to reply to answers and amend the complaint, or to a reasonable opportunity to make his record before the Court.

The plaintiff requests the Court not accept or consider any extraneous material in deciding the motions to dismiss.<sup>1</sup> If the Court, however, decides to go the route of conversion, then the plaintiff requests notice and a reasonable opportunity to show that genuine issues of material facts do exist. Davis v. Bryan, 810 F.2d 42, 45 (2d Cir. 1987)(citations omitted). In such event, the plaintiff preserves his right to appeal any possible conversion decision at the appropriate time.

B. The Enterprise movants cannot seem to distinguish discovery from a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss.

The Enterprise movants claim in the tradition of a feudal inquisitionist that silence means what they decide it to mean. "Plaintiff's motion is significant for what it states as for what it does not state." (Defendants Opposition Strike p 2-2) Are they mind readers, or is this another ploy to have the Court consider extraneous matter in the form of the movants' inferences they ascribe to the plaintiff not responding to what are effectively discovery demands during Rule 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss.<sup>2</sup> “The plaintiff is in the best position to deny having prepared such documents or indicate that the translations are inaccurate, however, he fails to do so and presumably will continue to be unable to do so in reply to this opposition.” (Defendants Opposition Strike p 2-2) A motion to dismiss is not discovery and lacks the procedural protections of discovery. If the Enterprise movants want admissions or the answers to questions that may lead to admissible evidence, then they have to wait for the discovery stage or request discovery now on specific limited issues, which they haven’t. They shouldn’t be allowed at this stage of the proceeding to even attempt to sway the Court with inferences of ultimate fact, especially when these inferences are based on the plaintiff not answering in his memoranda the depositions questions and requests for admissions the movants would otherwise make during discovery.

Let’s take an example of the danger posed by the movants using the sounds of silence as a tool for discovery during a Rule 12(b)(6) proceeding. The movants state, “[N]owhere in the plaintiff’s motion [to strike] does he indicate that the translations are not true and accurate.” (Defendants Opposition Strike p 2-2) Meaning, according to the movants’ Animal Farm logic, that the Court should accept that the translations are true and accurate. Exhibit Z of the Defendants Joint Reply contains the alleged translations of maybe five Russian language documents. Except for one handwritten document in Exhibit Z, there are no other Russian language documents in that exhibit or other exhibits from which the English translations could have apparently come. But that doesn’t matter to the movants, they assert the Court should still accept those translations as accurate because the plaintiff does not come out and deny their accuracy. Even if the plaintiff was required, which he is not, to confirm or deny the accuracy of translations submitted by the movants, how could he do it without the Russian language documents from which the translations were allegedly made. It's comparable to being indicted by the Spanish inquisition and not allowed to look at the indictment. The accused can't plead to any count because he doesn't know what it says, so his silence is construed as guilt. It's heads they win; tails due process loses!

C. Enterprise movants continue their attempt to try the case during a Rule 12(b)(6) motion even using unauthenticated documents.

The attorneys for the Enterprise movants are beginning to behave like pro se defendants. Perhaps the special rules accorded non-attorney pro se parties should apply to them. First, they improperly submit extraneous exhibits on a motion to dismiss and don't even bother to take the time and effort to authenticate those documents. Then after an objection by the plaintiff, they still don't do all that is required to authenticate their extraneous exhibits. Rather, they invent an excuse for part of their failure by claiming some of the exhibits don't need authentication because they are provided as a "courtesy to this Court." (Defendants Opposition Strike p 2-4, p 3-2) That's a slick rationale for the whispering of untrustworthy evidence into the Court's ears. Take Exhibit U for example, the only document there is the purported English "courtesy" translation. How's the Court suppose to know whether it is authentic without the Russian language version? Because the movants claim it to be, I don't think so.

But even slicker are the movants arguing for the acceptance of their documents by claiming the plaintiff is "seek[ing] to have this Court ignore admissible information." (Defendants Opposition Strike p 2-2) By "admissible information" they mean "evidence." (See Defendants Opposition Strike p 2-4, p 3-2) But it is not the Court's function at this stage of the proceedings to weigh the evidence that might be presented at trial; instead, the Court should merely determine whether the complaint itself is legally sufficient. Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639 (2d Cir. 1980). I just don't understand why the Enterprise movants blatantly ignore the Federal Rules of Procedure, unless they are trying to slip something by. And, of course, they are. They want the Court to ignore the due process concerns built into the Rules and try the case here and now._

1. Unauthenticated Foreign Official Records, Fed. R. Civ. P. 44(a)(2)

The Enterprise movants infer that because “the plaintiff does not indicate that the documents attached as Exhibit Z are inaccurate or were not translated as indicated” (Defendants Opposition Strike p 4-2) those documents are authentic. Where in the law did the movants find this Joseph Heller Catch-22? If a party doesn't claim the English translations of foreign records are inaccurate, then they are accurate, even though there are no copies of the foreign language records for a party to compare to the alleged English translations. Give me a break, except for a handwritten document in Russian, which is unlikely a public record unless the Russians have run out of typewriters, there are no copies of the original Russian official records from which the English translations purportedly came.

Further, if the documents in Exhibit Z are themselves copies of foreign records, they do not comply with Rule 44(a)(2) on authentication. The documents only contain copies of stamps and signatures. There are no original stamps or signatures or raised seals. The stamps that are legible all state “Translated in translation service department Krasnodar Chamber of Commerce and Industry.” It's unclear whether the Chamber of Commerce is the attester or certifier of the attester's signature and attester's official position. Since attesters are government officials, a private association like the local chamber of commerce is most likely not the attester. It's probably not the certifier either for how would a local chamber of commerce know the signature of the official authorized as the attester and the attester's official position.

Moreover, the documents in Exhibit Z do not comply with the Hague treaty in which public documents executed in the territory of one contracting state, Russia, are used in another contracting state, America. Hague Legalization Convention, Oct. 5, 1961, Art. 1, Fed. R. Civ. P. 44 Treaties & Conventions. The Convention, which is U.S. law, requires such documents be certified, id. Art. 4. The movants failed to do the necessary homework under the Rules and the Hague treaty to authenticate the Exhibit Z documents.

Just an aside here, the movants' statement "complaints, affidavits and decisions in connection with plaintiff's defamation case in Russia" (Defendants Opposition Memo. p 3-3) is typical of the classic dissembling attorney. The defamation case referred to was not a civil defamation case brought by the plaintiff as the movants imply, but a criminal indictment of mafia defendant Inessa Shipilina brought by the city prosecutor of Krasnodar—big difference. Movant Shipilina uses the same dissemblance in her affidavit at paragraph j.

2. Other Unauthenticated Foreign Language Documents

Concerning the Russian language documents in Exhibit Q, the Enterprise movants ask the Court to accept the truth of the matters asserted in the purported English translations even though they (1) were made by a person in Krasnodar, Russia whose name cannot be determined; (2) lack a notary seal or notary stamp although there is some type of stamp but the movants don't say what it states; and (3) lack verifying statements as to the translators' qualifications and that the English translations are accurate. The movants argue such requirements do not matter because "it is the Russian version of (sic) document itself that is the evidence in support of the motion to dismiss." (Defendants Opposition Strike p 2-3 (emphasis added)) Once again, "The purpose of a motion to dismiss is not to test the weight of the evidence which might be offered ... but to assess the legal feasibility of the complaint.” Gitterman v. Vitoulis, 564 F.Supp. 46, 49 (S.D.N.Y. 1982)(citation omitted). So why do the Enterprise movants keep coming back to argue evidentiary issues on a motion to dismiss? Because they want to short-circuit the procedures that protect the plaintiff’s right to due process.

The movants also claim the plaintiff provides “no controlling law” (Defendants Opposition Strike p 2-4) requiring formalities for authenticating the English translations of Russian documents in Exhibit Q. Common sense requires that more is needed than just the copy of a foreign stamp and illegible signature to meet the movants’ burden that the alleged translations are what they purport to be. See U.S. v. Branch, 970 F.2d 1368, 1370 (4th Cir. 1992). So, in addition to stamps that a ten year old could fabricate, the movants rely on Shipilina’s affidavit which states, “the documents are true and accurate.” Considering movant Shipilina’s obvious bias, which cannot be tested at this stage, there is also no indication by the movants that she, a Russian alien, has a proficiency in English sufficient to translate from Russian into English. The movants have not met their burden.

Concerning Exhibit U, the movants make the same arguments about this purported English translation of a Russian marriage contract. However, there is no copy of the Russian original in Exhibit U. But that doesn’t stop the movants from contending that the Russian version, even though absent, serves as the evidence (Defendants Opposition Strike p 3-2), and, therefore, the English translation need not exhibit incidences of being what it purports to be. Fed. R. Evid. 901(a). Interesting argument, I assume the Court is somehow supposed to divine the missing Russian language document, so it can be used as evidence. Actually, the movants clearly want the Court to rely on the alleged English translation based solely on the copy of a signature claiming the translation accurate even though that signature is not notarized. That's not enough to show the translation is what it purports to be, and calling it a "courtesy" translation doesn't get around the authentication requirements either. Id. (Defendants Opposition Strike p 3-2) Further, if the Russian version shows up and was executed before a notary, a copy of it must be certified according to the Hague Legalization Convention, Art. 1(c). In addition, notaries in Russia are government officials who maintain records that are considered official documents, so the Russian version is a foreign official record under Fed. R. Civ. P. 44(a)(2) that requires attestation and certification. If Rule 44 does not apply, then Fed. R. Evid. 902(3) does, since it applies not only to public records but to the broader category of public documents, Weinstein's Federal Evidence, § 902.05[3], and also requires attestation and certification.

Further, there is no indication that movant Shipilina has sufficient English language ability to attest to the translation's accuracy in Exhibit U. Even if she did, there's no original for her to compare with the translation.

Conclusion

The plaintiff requests the Court strike all extraneous materials submitted in deciding the Rule 12(b)(6) motions to dismiss.

Dear Judge Castel:

This office represents Alina Shipilina, one of the sixty-five defendants, in various parts of the world, in the above matter. Concerning the conference scheduled for July 13, 2004, I am booked to leave on a cruise to Alaska July 11th, returning the 18th, and will be unable to attend. I do not think it necessary for me to request an adjournment due to my absence, since I am working closely with another of the attorneys, Bradley E. Dubin (who represents Kuba, Mundy & Associates), and have joined in his motion to dismiss. He said he will let me know what will have transpired at the conference.

As to the information requested prior to the conference, as of this juncture there has only been motion practice, unusually voluminous<sup>1</sup> considering the action was brought by a single individual. As to others of the items, an examination of the pleadings will reveal that it is premature to estimate the length of a trial, or, for that matter, if one may actually take place, or what type of settlement, or with whom, may be attempted.

Your consideration in excusing me from attending the conference will be much appreciated.

Respectfully,

Jack Sachs

Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (PKC)

Dear Judge Castel:

I received a copy of the letter that attorney Jack Sachs sent your Honor on June 23, 2004 in which he requested to be excused from the July 13, 2004 conference. (Copy attached) I have no problem with Mr. Sachs not being there, but I do believe it improper that he, as an attorney for one of the defendants, used his request to gratuitously further arguments previously made in the defendants' papers.

I don't see what bearing it has on Mr. Sachs' request to be excused by saying he represents "one of the sixty-five defendants, in various parts of the world...." He is clearly trying to bolster the defendants' position as presented in their memoranda of law, which criticizes the number of defendants and their locations.

I also believe it improper for Mr. Sachs to unilaterally respond to your Honor's request for a joint status report, and under the guise of doing so, imply there is something amiss with an individual filing papers of many pages, which again is another argument presented in the defendants' memoranda of law. Further, Mr. Dubin, the lead counsel for the defendants, and I have already had three telephone conversations in our effort to provide you with a joint report.

There is a proper place and time for presenting arguments, and I do not believe it is fair to use ministerial letters for reiterating one sides' position.

Respectfully,

Roy Den Hollander

Re: Client: Kuba, Mundy & Associates and Nicholas J. Mundy
Matter: Roy Den Hollander v. Kuba, Mundy & Associates and Nicholas J.
Mundy
Docket No.: 03 CV 2717

Dear Honorable Sir:

Our office represents the defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy (collectively referred herein as "Mundy") and Peter Petrovich ("Petrovich") in connection with the above-referenced matter. Kindly allow this correspondence to serve as a formal response to Your Honor's June 21, 2004 request that the parties submit to your Court a joint status report. This correspondence is being written on behalf of all of the defendants who have appeared in this action and who have executed this correspondence below. The plaintiff has advised that he will be providing his own report.

1. Nature of Action and/or Principal Defenses

a. Nature of Action

The plaintiff, pro se<sup>1</sup>, commenced the instant action in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York on April 18, 2003 against sixty-three separate domestic and foreign defendants spanning the globe, located in the United States, Russia, Cyprus and Mexico, by virtue of a 91 page, 915 separately numbered paragraph, complaint. Plaintiff alleges that these sixty-three defendants compose a segment of the Russian Mafia which have caused him harm. Accordingly, the complaint alleges seven causes of action. The first four causes of action allege violations of various sections of the RICO statute, 18 U.S.C §1962(a), (b), (c) and (d), against all defendants. The remaining three causes of action allege supplemental state law claims against certain defendants for intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of process, malicious prosecution and alternatively prima facie tort. Since serving the complaint, the plaintiff has withdrawn his cause of action for prima facie tort.

b. Potential Defenses

It is the defendants' position that the plaintiff has not sufficiently pleaded the elements of his RICO claims, and, as such, these causes of action must be dismissed. In addition, the plaintiff's state law claims fail to state causes of action and are time barred by the applicable statutes of limitations. In asserting that the plaintiff has failed to properly plead his RICO and state law claims, it is submitted that this action, as well as the plaintiff's abusive litigation preceding this action, are nothing more than an attempt by the plaintiff to use this forum to re-live the consequences of his marriage to and divorce from the defendant Alinia Shiplina while at the same time attempting to punish Ms. Shiplina and anyone who has ever come into contact with her or assisted her in preventing him from harassing her.

There are many pending motions which are discussed in detail below.

2. List of All Existing Deadlines, due date and/or cut-off dates

There is only one existing deadline/due date in connection with this action. By Order dated June 15, 2004, Judge Mukasey ordered that answering papers to the Bank of Cyprus' motion to dismiss must be served by August 13, 2004, and any reply papers due by September 10, 2004.

3. Description of Motions Made, Decided and Outstanding

Many motions have been made in connection with this action. The motions are detailed below.

a. Plaintiff's Motion for a Protective Order

The plaintiff applied for a Protective Order on June 19, 2003. The defendants, Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lynn Lepofsky, CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers and Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 (collectively referred herein as "Flashdancers"), opposed the application on June 25, 2003. Judge Mukasey denied the plaintiff's application by Order dated July 28, 2004.

b. Defendants' Motions to Dismiss

The defendants Kuba and Petrovich moved to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint on September 19, 2003. The defendant Dr. Marc Paulsen ("Dr. Paulsen") joined in Kuba and Petrovich's motion on September 19, 2003. The defendant Alinia A. Shipilina ("Shipilina") also joined in Kuba and Petrovich's motion on September 19, 2003. The defendants Flashdancers also joined in Kuba and Petrovich's motion on September 19, 2003. The defendant Detective Robert W. Hennings ("Detective Hennings") served his own motion to dismiss on October 6, 2003. Also joined the verified motion

The plaintiff submitted his papers in opposition to the motions of Kuba and Petrovich, Shipilina, Dr. Paulsen, Flashdancers and Detective Hennings on December 19, 2003. On March 29, 2004, Cybertech Internet Solutions, Inc. ("Cybertech") moved to dismiss plaintiff's complaint. The plaintiff submitted an addendum to his December 19, 2003 opposition on April 30, 2004 in response to the motion to dismiss submitted by Cybertech.

The defendants Kuba and Petrovich submitted their reply papers on or about May 13, 2004. The defendant Shipilina submitted her reply papers on May 14, 2003. The Flashdancers, defendants submitted their reply papers on May 14, 2003. The defendant Dr. Paulsen replied on January 28, 2004. The defendants Cybertech and Detective Hennings do not intend to reply to the plaintiff's opposition.

Hence, Kuba and Petrovich's motion to dismiss, Flashdancers' motion to dismiss, Cybertech's motion to dismiss, Shipilina's motion to dismiss, Dr. Paulsen's motion to dismiss and Detective Hennings' motion to dismiss have been fully submitted to the Court. All of the aforementioned motions to dismiss are currently pending as no decision has yet been rendered.

On June 30, 2004, the defendant, the Bank of Cyprus, moved to dismiss the plaintiff's complaint for failure to state a claim. Judge Mukasey ordered that opposition papers are due by August 13, 2004 and reply papers are due by September 10, 2004.

c. Plaintiff's Motion For Default

The plaintiff moved on December 27, 2003 for an entry of default against Cybertech and Anastasia A. Vasilyeva and Nicolay N. Vasilyev listed in the complaint as Dima-Husband Anastasia Vasilyeva. Cybertech opposed this motion on January 8, 2004. The plaintiff replied on January 13, 2004. Anastasia Vasilyeva and Nicolay N. Vasilyev did not respond.

On January 12, 2004, Judge Mukasey issued an order denying plaintiff's motion without prejudice to renewal, if appropriate, after the Court decides the defendants' outstanding motions to dismiss. The Court further directed the plaintiff not to seek entries of default against any other defendants pending further order of the Court.

d. Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Exhibits

The plaintiff moved on June 14, 2004 to strike exhibits Q to Z attached to the defendants Mundy and Petrovich's reply motion in support of their motion to dismiss. Mundy and Petrovich have not yet opposed this motion, but intend to do so. The plaintiff has verbally indicated that he intends to reply to Mundy and Petrovich's opposition. Therefore, it is requested that the Court set forth a schedule in connection with Mundy and Petrovich's opposition and plaintiff's reply regarding plaintiff's motion to strike exhibits.

4. Description of Discovery Completed

At the July 23, 2003 conference, Judge Mukasey stayed all discovery in this action. Accordingly, no discovery has been conducted and none has been completed.

5. Identification of Discovery Necessary to Engage in Settlement Negotiations

In the event the motions to dismiss are denied, all defendants will need to engage in discovery to even begin discussing settlement. Document and deposition discovery will be essential.

6. The Estimated Length of Trial

It is difficult to accurately estimate the potential trial length at this time. Many parties have not yet entered appearances in this action and it is unclear whether they intend to do so. In addition, it is unclear whether certain defendants will be dismissed out of the action. Therefore, it is uncertain how many parties would be involved in this action should it proceed to trial. In light of the fact that sixty-three defendants have been named as parties and there will be extensive documents and witnesses associated with this action, the defendants anticipate a trial length lasting at least one month, assuming this matter survives dispositive motions.

7. Description of Prior Settlement Discussions

There have been no settlement discussions in this matter. No settlement demand has been made by plaintiff. Likewise, no settlement offers have been made by the defendants. There have been no settlement conferences with the Court.

8. Other Relevant Information to Advance This Matter to Trial or Settlement

The defendants are not aware at this time of any other relevant information which would advance this matter to trial or settlement.

Counsel for the defendants will appear on July 13, 2004 before your Honor and will be prepared to discuss the entry of a revised scheduling order.<sup>2</sup> Thank you for attention to these matters. If Your Honor has any questions in the interim, we remain available at the Court's convenience.

<sup>2</sup>Jack Sachs, attorney for the defendant Alinia Shipilina, has requested to be excused from attending the conference. Plaintiff has consented to this request. See letters from counsel to your Honor dated June 23, 2004 (Sachs) and June 28, 2004 (Hollander), respectively.

1. Nature of the Case

This is a civil R.I.C.O. action under 18 U.S.C. 1961-68 against the Russian Mafia, the Chechen Baraev Islamic Terror and Crime clan and a relatively small number of alleged members and associates of those organized crime groups.

Pimps, prostitutes, pushers, pornographers and assorted criminals from the former Soviet Union have joined with underworld characters in Western markets over the past decade to create a global web of smuggling, protection, extortion, counterfeiting, tampering with witnesses, revenge, evasion of taxes and other illegal activities. The R.I.C.O. complaint alleges a Russian-New York enterprise that violates R.I.C.O. and numerous other laws. The enterprise brings prostitutes to New York and other states in the U.S.A., passes drugs and huge sums of money back and forth between the countries, creates and traffics in pornography, and threatens physical violence to anyone who might get in the way. A central member and site of the enterprise's illegal actions is the establishment called "Flash Dancers Topless Club," located on Broadway and 52d Street in New York City. In addition, the enterprise often acts in other countries where there is a link of some kind, such as a connection to brothels in Cyprus and Mexico City that some defendants run, or to specific participants in the enterprise traveling in other places.

The plaintiff, a business consultant and attorney representing himself pro se and former writer and political producer for Channel 5 and Channel 7 TV News in New York, instituted the R.I.C.O. suit to recover damages for loss of profits to his business, loss of business opportunities, harm to his business reputation and other injuries, which resulted from the plaintiff unwittingly falling victim to one of the Russian mafia's schemes: duping and secretly feeding narcotics to American men so that they will marry mafia members, usually prostitutes, in order for these gangsters to obtain legal entry into the U.S.A. to carry out and expand the enterprise's activities.

This case grew out of discoveries by the plaintiff that began while managing Kroll Associates in Moscow. A number of the plaintiff's witnesses in Krasnodar, Russia have been threatened, and the plaintiff has received four threats so far of which he tape-recorded three. The FBI has identified one of the threatening callers, but is afraid that by interviewing him it would provoke him to harm the plaintiff. As such, the FBI has told the plaintiff not to open his door to anyone he does not know and to be careful when out in public.

2. Existing Deadlines

July 9, 2004	Defendant Bank of Cyprus to join the unified motion to dismiss by certain U.S. defendants or serve its own motion to dismiss.
August 13, 2004	Plaintiff to serve answering papers if defendant Bank of Cyprus files its own motion to dismiss.
September 10, 2004	Defendant Bank of Cyprus to serve reply to the plaintiff's answer.

3. Motions So Far

September 19, 2003 Defendants Flash Dancers Topless Club; Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.; Lepofsky-CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.; Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers; Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 (Flash Dancers Defendants); Kuba, Mundy & Associates law firm; Mundy; Petrovich; Shipilina; Paulsen; and Henning served a unified motion to dismiss.

December 19, 2003 Plaintiff served an answer to the unified motion to dismiss.

December 27, 2003 Plaintiff served application for certificates of default against U.S. defendants Cybertech Internet Solutions, listed in the complaint as Cybertech Internet Strip Club Network, which is operated by Cybertech Internet Solutions, and against Anastasia and Nicolay Vasilyeva.

January 8, 2004 Cybertech Internet Solutions served a letter in opposition to the plaintiff's application for a certificate of default. Defendants Anastasia and Nicolay Vasilyeva did not respond.

January 13, 2004 Plaintiff answered Cybertech Internet Solutions' letter but, unknown to the plaintiff, the Court had decided on January 12, 2004 to deny the application for default without prejudice pending the Court's decision on the unified motion to dismiss.

March 29, 2004 Defendant Cybertech Internet Solutions served a letter in which Cybertech joined the unified motion to dismiss and made its own motion to dismiss with respect to issues specific to it.

April 30, 2004	Plaintiff answered Cybertech's motion to dismiss with respect to specific issues concerning it.
May 14, 2004	The unified motion to dismiss' reply was served as were replies relating to specific issues concerning the Flash Dancers Defendants and defendant Shipilina. No replies relating to specific issues concerning defendants Henning or Cybertech were served.
June 15, 2004	Plaintiff served a motion to strike certain exhibits and references to those exhibits submitted in the defendants' unified reply memorandum of law for failure to authenticate. No date has been set for an answer or reply.

4. Discovery

Judge Mukasey ordered at the preliminary conference on July 23, 2003 that all discovery was stayed pending further order of the Court.

5. Remaining Discovery for Settlement Talks

Judge Mukasey ordered at the preliminary conference on July 23, 2003 that all discovery was stayed pending further order of the Court.

6. Length of Trial

Insufficient information at this time to estimate.

7. Settlement Discussions

None.

8. Other Issues

Waiver of Process Expenses:

The plaintiff, in order to avoid the unnecessary cost of serving a summons, followed Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d) in notifying the defendants listed below, all of whom are located in the U.S., of the commencement of the R.I.C.O. action and mailed a request to each for a waiver of service. Exhibit A. None of the defendants below responded; therefore, the plaintiff, pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(5) requests reimbursement for the costs of serving the summons in the amount of $1,144.50, broken down by the defendants listed below. Exhibit B.

DECLARATION

Defendants

STATE OF NEW YORK            } COUNTY OF NEW YORK        } ss.:

Alina Shipilina, one of the defendants in the above-captioned matter, at the direction of the Court during the conference held on July 13, 2004, makes the following declaration under the penalties of perjury:

My attorney, Jack Sachs, has informed me that the plaintiff in this action told the Court, at the conference of July 13, 2004, that I knew of, and should furnish, the addresses of four other parties mentioned as defendants in the complaint, to wit:

- A. Tanya, Phodes Studio Prostitute
- B. Stephanos
- C. Juginta Raszyukevichina
- D. Salvador

I have the following to reply to the assertion of the plaintiff as to my knowledge of the whereabouts of the four co-defendants:

A. In 1999, in Moscow, I was introduced to a woman named Tanya, who I believe at the time was seeing one Leonid Perlman, another co-defendant, who I believe was a principal in Phodes Studio Co., yet another defendant in this matter. From the start we did not get along, and the few times we were together were very unpleasant. I did not socialize with her, nor did I have any reason to know her last name, or her address.

B. I knew a man named Stephanos (a very common name in Cyprus), who worked in a bank (of which there are many in Cyprus) there. I never knew his last name, nor do I remember in which bank he worked. I never had any reason to know his address, nor can I tell if this is the same person to whom plaintiff refers.

C. I first met Juginta Raszyukevichina during my brief (3 months) stay in Mexico in 1999. After I left Mexico, I had only one contact with her, a telephone call to me in New York in the year 2000. I believe she said she was calling from The Netherlands at that time. During the time I knew her I became aware that she traveled a great deal, and in the short time I knew her she never gave me any address, let alone one at which she could be reached years later.

D. I met a man named Salvador during the same brief stay in Mexico, in 1999. I was never informed as to the nature of his business connection, if any, with Phodes Studio. I never knew his last name, and although I was at his house once or twice, I went with other people, and was unaware of his specific address. I have had no contact with him whatsoever since I left Mexico in 1999.

Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (MBM)

Dear Special Agent Babler:

On August 18th I left a voicemail message for you concerning your interview with Anastasia A. Vasilyeva, Nicolay N. Vasilyev and apparently the father of one of them. I have enclosed a copy of the letter that the Vasilyevs sent to the US district court in the above captioned action. Also attached is a translation.

Once again, I do not represent the Vasilyevs who are defendants in this case. I would, however, like to talk to you concerning this letter. I will be in Wisconsin until August 25th and can be reached at 917 687 0652.

Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

Zahnow, Cynthia “Cindy” D. Interview

On 8/22/3 RDH and GWJ visited Custom Tailoring 18900 W. Bluemound Rd., Brookfield, Wisc 53045, tel. 262 796 0434. The shop is small and in the back of the Galleria West Mall. It is next to the Valentina women’s clothing store that sells expensive designer clothes and specializes in expensive wedding dresses.

Custom Tailoring and Valentina are geographically arranged and present the same image as Vasilyeva’s Fashion House in Krasnodar. Valentina has a storefront with tall model like attendants and manikins draped with fashionable clothes. Off to the side is the apparently captive tailoring shop, Custom Tailoring, that serves Valentina’s clients.

Approximately from 11:50am to 12:05 pm, RDH interviewed Cindy Zahnow in the presence of GWJ, a young (20s) male employee with black hair and a seamstress with burnette hair in her 30s or 40s. Purpose was to confirm information that Vasilyeva provided the court in a letter.

After RDH introduced himself as a NYC lawyer in an ongoing case in the federal court in NY, Zahnow did not recall Anastasia’s patronymic but said she would check her records and for RDH to call her Monday at work.

Zahnow said that Anastasia had left to work at the Boston Store in downtown Mil. within the last few weeks. The young said Vasilyeva left work on July 25 or 28.

Zahnow found Vasilyeva the job because it paid benefits.

Zahnow said that one of Vasilyeva’s child was born with defects and that Anastasia was probably at that moment in Children’s Hospital.

Anastasia’s father arranged to come to America to help with the child, but the FBI had delayed his entry for about six weeks while it conducted an investigation into Anastasia’s father. The FBI had visited Custom Tailoring as part of its investigation.

Zahnow said she was not Russian.

Zahnow said she knew what was going on in the case concerning the “kook”. She asked of RDH are you the “kook”? I asked who mentioned the word “kook”. Zahnow said that Anastasia had shown the complaint to “everybody”. But Zahnow would not say who used the word kook in describing the plaintiff.

RDH asked again whether Zahnow knew Anastasia’s last name and she said no and that she probably didn’t have it in her files.

I gave Zahnow my card.

RDH and GWJ left and returned to aske for Zahnow's card. She did not have one. As RDH and GWJ left, Zahnow sneaked up behind them and asked if they were talking about her to which RDH replied that he nevers defames people as others do.

Zahnow then walked into Valentina.

Cynthia Zahnow was arrested in 12/27/00 for disorderly conduct. Case dismissed on proscecutor's motion.

There are no Corporation records for Custom Tailoring and no telephone listings.

Valentina is owned by Gina Chirchirillo and Anthony "Tony" J Chirchirillo. Gina was arrested 3/14/95 for issuing worthless check, dismissed on prosecutor's motion and 12/18/95 for issuing a worthless check, pleaded guilty. Gina and Tony live at 1725 Old Oak Ct, Brookfield, WI 53005, which is also the Register Agent Office for Valentina, telephone number is unpublished.

Barry P. Babler FBI Special Agent Interview

(414 276 4684, direct 414 291 4258)

8/22/3 at around 1:05 to 1:18pm, RDH interviewed Babler at FBI office 330 Kilbourn Ave, Milwaukee, WI 532202.

Babler came out into the waiting room to talk to me alone. (Usually two FBI agents talk to someone.) Babler was very nervous but had a good tan.

I introduce myself and mentioned the RICO case.

Babler apologized for not returning my call of Monday 8/18/3.

Babler said that Anastasia Vasilyeva had come to him concerning the RICO case and asked for advice on what to do. Vasilyeva said the case involved Russian organized crime. Babler told her that he couldn't give her legal advice, and that he did not give her legal advice. Babler had a copy of the complaint, which he said he had read.

Babler said that the FBI only conducted a routine inquiry into Anastasia's father after he had arrived in America. Babler said the inquiry resulted from a random choice of papers that normally flow across his desk. The inquiry entailed confirming the paper work was accurate. Such routine inquiries never take six weeks and are done only after the alien arrives. The inquiry of Anastasia's father did not take 6 weeks; did not take a month. It was done quickly after the father had already arrived. (Contradicts Zahnnow.)

Babler does not read Russian.

I asked him whether he knew Anasatasia's middle name. He said it would be the first name of her father. He thought the father's first name was Anatole. I asked if he would check. He said it was in his records in his office and would check later because he had an appointment at that moment. Babler told me to call him in an hour and a half and he would give me the name.

Babler said he heard about similar situations as mine.

After I mentioned to him I had been traveling to Russia since 1991, he said he was surprised that I was not on their list.

At around 3:20pm, RDH telephoned Babler.

Babler was no longer nervous; he was in the typical FBI authoritarian mood. He refused to provide the name of Anastasia's father because it is information that impacts one of our investigations and cannot give it out. (Babler previously indicated it was only a routine inquiry that had been completed. Now it was an investigation, apparently ongoing.)

He said he was involve in another investigation of a gentleman in my situation but nothing could be done because the fraud occurred in Russia. He said it was not at all infrequent for an older American man to marry a younger Russian woman who only wants to get to America. Babler asked me whether I lived in Wisconsin or NY. I told him NY, but it seemed a strange question.

After hanging up with Babler, I called Vasilyevas' home number which was busy for at least 5 minutes later.

8/25/3 from around 12:45 to 1pm, RDH was at the FBI Office on Kilbourn Ave. trying to meet with a supervisor to find out why the FBI was interfering with his investigation into the RICO case. The boss of the office and head for the state, David Mitchell, was out of town for a week. His assistant, Jeffrey Troy, was busy, and the receptionist told me to call back around 2pm. The receptionist made a point that I should call back at 2pm and not stop by. At 2pm I called Troy's office, the secretary said we have a lot of things going one this week, but she would call me back in 15 minutes. At 2:20pm Troy's office called me back to say that Troy was busy in meeting all day and that he would contact me by telephone tomorrow, 8/26/3.

Brookfield Town Police

8/25/3 at 8:15am Officer Sean Schmidt received a telephone complaint from Cindy Zahnow concerning the 8/22/3 interview with her. Case No. 031776.

At around 8:45am Schmidt called RDH on his mobile. Schmidt very nastily said that if I contacted Zahnow again I would be arrested for aggravated harassment and that I had no legitimate reason for contacting her. To add to the intimidating effect, Schmidt said Zahnow told him that an FBI agent had talked to me concerning my interview of Zahnow. Schmidt was clearly implying I was the subject of an FBI inquiry.

I explained to Schmidt about the letter by one of her employees to the court in the Federal case. I said I have a right to confirm the information in the letter. Schmidt went on that I have no legitimate right to contact her again, to visit her shop and if I do I will be arrested for aggravated harassment.

Schmidt added that Zahnow told him that an FBI agent had contacted her and told her to call the local police concerning the interview. Zahnow did not tell Schmidt the name Around 11:30am, RDH visited the Town of Brookfield police and talked with Acting Chief Chris Perket. Told the Chief I did not appreciate the intimidation implicated in the threat to arrest me. I informed him about the RICO case in federal court, that the defendants in Wisconsin were Russian and Zahnow was the former employer of one defendant. I added I was within my rights to continue my investigation into the case. I requested a copy of the complaint that they later provided.

8/26/3 at around 10:50am, RDH called Sean Schmidt and asked why his report did not include that Zahnow told him an FBI agent told her to call the Brookfield police to file a complaint. Schmidt confirmed that is what she said but did not put it in the report because it was not confirmed. I told Schmidt that I would probably need a statement as to what she said and he agreed. Schmidt said he did not include Zahnow's statement about the FBI because he had no way of confirming whether it was true.

Robert S. Mueller, Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
J. Edgar Hoover Building
935 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20535-0001

Dear Director Mueller:

I want to know why the Milwaukee, Wisconsin office of the FBI is interfering with my investigation of the facts in a civil RICO case presently in the US District Court for the Southern District of New York.

I am the plaintiff in the RICO action, and as a lawyer, I represent myself pro se. The defendants include Russian, Chechen and American organized criminals, an Islamic mafia group once headed by Arbi and Movsar Baraev, and others. The case is titled Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club et al., 03 CV 2717 and is before Chief Judge Michael B. Mukasey. Currently, the domestic parties are proceeding through the Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) motion stage.

Two of the defendants, Anastasia and Nicolay Vasilyeva, are currently alien residents living in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. As the RICO complaint alleges, they also run a call-girl operation through a model and fashion house in Kransnodar, Russia by providing prostitutes to local officials and criminals and exporting prostitutes to Cypriot brothels/strip-clubs that are run by Russian organized crime and to other countries such as the USA.

In July 2003, the Vasilyevas sent a letter to the New York Southern District Court with a copy to me that responded to the complaint. See attached Exhibit A, copy of the original letter with an English translation. From August 21st to the 25th I traveled to Milwaukee to determine the accuracy of some of the statements in the letter and continue my investigation into the facts of the case.

On August 22nd at around noon, I interviewed Anastasia Vasilyeva's former employer and apparent friend, Cynthia Zahnow, who manages a small tailoring shop that seems to be part of the upscale Valentina fashion house in the Town of Brookfield outside of Milwaukee. Ms. Zahnow answered a number of my questions during the 10 to 15 minute interview that provided me with some useful information. Other people were present during the conversation. I left my business card with her.

On the same day at a little after one o'clock in the afternoon, I interviewed FBI Special Agent Barry P. Babler at the FBI's Milwaukee office. The Vasilyeva's letter to the Court stated that Mr. Babler had "inspected all of us" when Anastasia Vasilyeva's father came to Wisconsin from Russia on December 25, 2002. See Exhibit A, p 3, last paragraph of the English translation.

Mr. Babler talked with me for around 10 minutes in the waiting room of the FBI office and without another agent being present. Mr. Babler said there was no investigation into Anastasia Vasilyeva's father, only a routine inquiry that resulted from a random check of aliens visiting Wisconsin. He stated the inquiry only concerned confirming the father's paper work.

Mr. Babler added that he was familiar with the RICO case, had read the complaint (which is 91 pages long) and had a copy of it in his office. According to Mr. Babler, Anastasia Vasilyeva had contacted him after being served the complaint (June 2003), told him it concerned the Russian mafia and asked him for advice. Mr. Babler recounted that he told her he could not provide any legal advice.

Also during my interview of Mr. Babler, he agreed to give me the first name of Anastasia Vasilyeva's father which is necessary for determining her patronymic and in turn finding any criminal records that may exist in Russia. He told me to call back later that day. When I called back, he refused to provide me the father's first name as promised because, as he said, it would impact one of the FBI's investigations. The routine inquiry was now an investigation and apparently ongoing.

On August 25 at around 8:45 am, I received a call from Police Officer Sean Schmidt of the Town of Brookfield. Officer Schmidt said a complaint had been made against me by Ms. Zahnow and, if I contacted her again, I would be arrested for aggravated harassment.

Officer Schmidt continued that he understood from Ms. Zahnow that an FBI agent had been talking to me concerning my interview with Ms. Zahnow on the same day that the interview took place, August 22nd. In addition, Officer Schmidt said Ms. Zahnow told him that the FBI agent had contacted her and told her to call the local police to file a complaint against me.

Ms. Zahnow had no way of knowing that I had a discussion with an FBI agent while in Milwaukee unless it came from the FBI itself. Since the only agent I talked to during my trip was Mr. Babler, the mostly likely chain of events is that after I interviewed Ms. Zahnow, she contacted Anastasia Vasilyeva who then called Mr. Babler. Mr. Babler then either contacted Ms. Zahnow directly or told Anastasia Vasilyeva to tell her to make a complaint with the local police. Either way, it's the FBI interfering with a pending case in a federal court.

On August 25th before my plane left for New York, I visited the Milwaukee FBI office again to find out the reason for the FBI's interference. The head agent, David Mitchell, was on vacation, and the acting manager, Jeffrey Troy, was busy in meetings, apparently because of the influx of tens of thousands Harley Davidson enthusiasts. Mr. Troy's secretary said he would call me at my number in New York. He hasn't, and, if he does, I doubt he will provide me with any reasonable answers.

This is the third in a series of what I can only characterize as “bizarre” responses by the FBI concerning the fact pattern of this RICO suit. The other two occurrences concerned the New York City office and a series of threatening telephone calls made to me.

In closing, I want to know why the Milwaukee FBI is protecting two Russian alien defendants who ran and apparently still run an international prostitution ring centered in Krasnodar, Russia. I am taking this route of contacting you before I decide whether it is necessary to take up the District Court’s time with a motion for a preliminary injunction against the FBI.

Thank you very much. If you have any questions, please contact me.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Mr. Roy Den Hollander

Dear Mr. Den Hollander:

Your letter, dated August 28, 2003, to the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) was referred to this office for response.

Your allegation, in summary, is that an FBI agent in the Milwaukee Field Office interfered in your investigation in support of the civil RICO complaint you filed in the Southern District of New York. After reviewing the details set forth in your letter, and inquiring into the matter with cognizant personnel in the FBI Milwaukee Field Office, I am satisfied that the Milwaukee agent acted appropriately in his contacts with the parties in your complaint and did not, in any manner, interfere with your investigation.

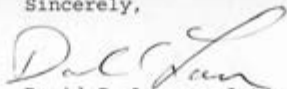

Specifically, the agent made it clear to all parties who contacted him that the FBI had no interest in the matters alleged in your civil complaint and that he could not advise them as to how to respond or proceed. The only exception was the agent's advice to one party to contact the police because that person had alleged that you were harassing her.

Mr. Roy Den Hollander

Furthermore, in refusing to provide you the name of your defendant's father or any other FBI record information, the agent was acting in compliance with the Privacy Act, which prohibits release of this information. Finally, I assure you that the FBI is not "protecting" your named defendants or anyone else, for that matter. In closing, let me reiterate that the FBI has no interest in your litigation or its outcome.

I trust that this response addresses your concerns.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (MBM)

Dear Mr. Larson:

Thank you for your letter of December 16, 2003 in response to my complaint that the FBI Milwaukee Field Office interfered with my investigation in the above captioned case.

I am concerned that Special Agent Babler provided legal advice to a particular party complaining about harassment by telling her to contact the police. I understand that the FBI rules and regulations prohibit agents from providing such advice to the public.

In addition, Special Agent Babler's action does not appear accidental or even negligent. He knew I was in Milwaukee conducting the type of research that attorney's do on a case. (Please see the attached August 20, 2003 letter to Babler.) In this instance, I was trying to confirm the representations made to a federal court by two defendants. (Please see the attached letter to S.D.N.Y. court.) Despite this knowledge, Special Agent Babler went ahead and advised a member of the public to use the local police to complain of harassment. Being an experienced law enforcement officer in modern day America, Special Agent Babler had to have known that the police would respond to such a complaint from a woman by threatening me with arrest. As simple logic dictates, such a threat would have some deterrent effect or at least consume valuable time in my investigation of a pending case. Regardless of Special Agent Babler's motives, his action negatively impacted my investigation into a matter before a federal court and he should be reprimanded. It is unacceptable in a republic for one law enforcement agency to use its street smarts to manipulate another agency into interfering with a lawful investigation in a civil case.

Further, your letter did not indicate whether Anastasia Anatolyevna Vasilyeva (father's first name Anatole) or Cynthia D. Zahnow (the interviewee) was the party that contacted Special Agent Babler.

Lastly, I would like to know whether it is normal procedure for the FBI to investigate visitors to the USA from Russia as in the case of Special Agent's Babler's investigation of Anastasia's father when he visited in December 2002?

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Hollander:

I received your letter dated January 5, 2004, requesting additional information with regard to your complaint that a Special Agent (SA) assigned to the FBI's Milwaukee Division interfered with your investigation in the above-captioned matter. As you were advised by my previous letter dated December 16, 2004, the FBI's Office of the General Counsel has determined that there was no impropriety on the part of the Milwaukee SA in your case. Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (PKC)

Dear Judge Castel:

I am the attorney-plaintiff representing myself pro se in this action

In accordance with your Honor's individual practice rules under Section 2(A)(1) Pre-Motion Conferences in Civil Cases, I am requesting a pre-motion conference so as to be able to make a motion to supplement the Complaint under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(d).

The supplemental complaint, a copy of which is attached as Exhibit A, will update the earlier Complaint filed on April 18, 2003 with subsequent occurrences and events that relate to the original Complaint as required by Quaratino v. Tiffany & Co. 71 F.3d 58, 66 (2d Cir. 1995).

In addition to defendants FlashDancers, Cybertech Internet Solutions, Kuba Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy, Peter Petrovich, Alina A. Shipilina, Doctor Marc L. Paulsen, Anastasia and Nicolay Vasilyeva, Bob Henning and Inessa Shipilina, the supplemental complaint will include four new parties allegedly participating in the subsequent events as permitted under Griffin v. County Sch. Bd. of Prince Edwards Co. 377 U.S. 218, 227, 84 S.Ct. 1226, 1231 (1964); U.S. v. National Screen Serv. Corp., 20 F.R.D. 226, 227 (S.D.N.Y. 1957).

One of the basic policies of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure "is that a party should be given every opportunity to join all of his grievances against other parties regardless of when they arose." Wright & Miller, Federal Prac. and Proc.: Civ.2d § 1506, p 193 of 1990 edition.

Cynthia D. Zahnow

Additional Defendants.

I. Introduction

1. The events included in this supplemental complaint happened after the original complaint ("Complaint") was filed on April 18, 2003.

II. Krasnodar Is Calling

2. Early on June 4, 2003, the plaintiff received a telephone threat from a thuggish-sounding man speaking in Russian who warned the plaintiff it would be "bad" for him if he traveled to Krasnodar, Russia to investigate some of the defendants in this RICO action.
3. After the threatening caller hung up, the plaintiff dialed *57, the recorded message said the call had been traced; also the plaintiff noted the number that registered on his caller id by the threatening call.
4. The plaintiff contacted a telephone supervisor at the foreign area code listed on his caller id, but that area code had no such number because, according to the operator, the caller likely used a device that sends out a false number.
5. The plaintiff contacted his telephone provider's Harassing Call Center but the *57 trace failed to show a working number because the call, according to the Center, probably came from a number that did not exist or a prepaid calling card, still the Center opened a case.

6. On June 19, 2003, the plaintiff filed a complaint with his local police precinct No. 13, but the case was subsequently closed because there was no information as to the telephone number from where the call was made.
7. The plaintiff also notified the Federal Bureau of Investigation (“FBI”) about the threatening call.
8. The FBI’s Russian Organized Crime Unit declined to take any action concerning the threatening call but began looking into other matters contained in the RICO Complaint.
9. When the threatening call was made on June 4, 2003, none of the defendants had yet been served, but a number of them were on notice of the RICO action having been filed as a result of the plaintiff’s request for waivers of service of summons that had been mailed to them, along with a copy of the Complaint, on April 20 or 26, 2003.
10. The defendants who had notice of the RICO action and a copy of the Complaint before the threatening call of June 4, 2003 were Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Cybertech Internet Solutions, Lynn Lepofsky, Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers, Kuba Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy, Peter Petrovich, Alina A. Shipilina, Doctor Marc L. Paulsen, Anastasia and Nicolay Vasilyeva and Bob Henning.
11. On information and belief, the defendants in ¶ 10 knew the plaintiff was an attorney admitted to practice in the Southern District Court of New York and therefore a Court officer.
12. On information and belief, the defendants listed in ¶ 10, or some group of them, most likely Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina, agreed and arranged for the threatening call to be made in order to intimidate the plaintiff into not serving the Complaint or not otherwise prosecuting the RICO action.
13. On information and belief, the defendants listed in ¶ 10, or some group of them, most likely Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina, contacted Inessa Shipilina, Magomet Ali Kurban, Viktor Vladimirovich Kononenko or Baraev Mobster 1 in Krasnodar to have one of them make the threatening call or arrange for it to be made.
14. Magomet Ali Kurban and Viktor Vladimirovich Kononenko are Krasnodar organized crime members who work closely with fellow Enterprise members Alina and Inessa Shipilina.
15. Magomet Ali Kurban and Viktor Vladimirovich Kononenko enabled defendants Alina and Inessa Shipilina to take control of the gymnasium at the Kuban State Physical Culture Academy, a state university, and use the gymnasium for personal profit by running various private enterprises out of it.
16. The defendants listed in ¶ 10, or some group of them, most likely Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina, engaged in the predicate acts of obstructing justice by arranging for the threatening of an attorney admitted to practice before the Court and therefore an officer of the Court, 18 U.S.C. 1503, tampering with a witness and victim via the threat, 18 U.S.C. 1512, using interstate or foreign facilities to arrange for the intimidation of the plaintiff, 18 U.S.C. 1952, and communicating by foreign telephone facilities to protect and further the Enterprise's Scheme, which is wire fraud under 18 U.S.C. 1343.

17. The defendants listed in ¶ 10, or some group of them, most likely Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina, engaged in the predicate acts in ¶ 16 to maintain, directly or indirectly, their interests in and control of part of the Enterprise and to participate in the operation, management or exert authority within the Enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(b) & (c).
18. The defendants listed in ¶ 10, or some group of them, most likely Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina, agreed to commit the predicate acts in ¶ 16 in furtherance of the common purpose, the Scheme, of the RICO enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(d).
19. Inessa Shipilina, Magomet Ali Kurban , Viktor Vladimirovich Kononenko or Baraev Mobster 1's conduct in arranging and making the threat constitute the predicate acts of obstructing justice by threatening an attorney admitted to practice before the Court, 18 U.S.C. 1503, tampering with a witness and victim, 18 U.S.C. 1512, using interstate or foreign facilities to arrange for and intimidate the plaintiff, 18 U.S.C. 1952, and communicating by foreign telephone facilities to protect and further the Enterprise's Scheme, which is wire fraud under 18 U.S.C. 1343.
20. Inessa Shipilina, Magomet Ali Kurban , Viktor Vladimirovich Kononenko or Baraev Mobster 1 engaged in the predicate acts in ¶ 19 to maintain, directly or indirectly, their interests in and control of part of the Enterprise and to participate in the operation, management or exert authority within the Enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(b) & (c).
21. Inessa Shipilina, Magomet Ali Kurban, Viktor Vladimirovich Kononenko or Baraev Mobster 1 agreed to commit the predicate acts in ¶ 19 in furtherance of the common purpose, the Scheme, of the RICO enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(d).

III. The Letter

22. On July 2, 2003, defendants Anastasia and Nicolay Vasilyva sent a letter to the Court that made a number of factual claims, including their employment or lack of and that FBI Special Agent Barry P. Babler had investigated the two of them as well as defendant Anastasia's father who traveled from Russia to their Milwaukee, Wisconsin home on December 25, 2002.
23. The plaintiff went to Milwaukee, Wisconsin from August 21 to 25, 2003 to check out the accuracy of the statements made by the defendants Vasilyevas to the Court.

24. On Friday, August 22, 2003, the plaintiff interviewed for about fifteen minutes Cynthia D. Zahnow in the presence of witnesses at the shop she managed, "Custom Tailoring," where defendant Anastasia claimed in her letter to be working.
25. Zahnow knew about the RICO action, had seen the Complaint and claimed Anastasia no longer worked for her.
26. According to Zahnow, before Anastasia's father visited Milwaukee, the FBI came to Zahnow's store to ask her questions about the Vasilyevas as part of its investigation into the father, which delayed his visit for about six weeks.
27. The plaintiff then visited the Milwaukee FBI office, about an hour after the Zahnow interview, where he talked with Special Agent Babler, who appeared very nervous, in the reception area of the FBI office without another agent present.
28. According to Babler, he conducted an FBI inquiry into Anastasia's father, but the inquiry, which he emphasized was not an investigation, did not delay the father's visit, was done after the father arrived, didn't even take a month, was routine and resulted from a random check of paper work that came across Babler's desk.
29. Babler was familiar with the RICO action, had read the 91 page Complaint and, according to him, the Vasilyevas' requested legal advice from him as an FBI agent on how to deal with the Complaint that involved Russian mafiosi.
30. Babler denied giving the Vasilyevas any advice.
31. Babler added he was surprised that the plaintiff was not on the FBI's list of people who travel periodically to Russia, apparently he checked.
32. The plaintiff requested the first name of Anastasia's father, which Babler agreed to provide if the plaintiff called him back later that afternoon.
33. When the plaintiff called Babler back, he claimed he could not reveal the name because it would impact an FBI investigation, apparently the former inquiry was now a current investigation, and Babler asked whether the plaintiff lived in Wisconsin or New York to which the plaintiff replied New York.
34. Early Monday morning on August 25, 2003, the plaintiff received a call from Police Officer Sean Schmidt of the Brookfield Town Police threatening him with arrest for aggravated harassment as a result of the interview with Cynthia Zahnow on Friday August 22nd.
35. According to Officer Schmidt, Zahnow claimed the FBI had talked with the plaintiff right after the plaintiff's interview with Zahnow, which she had no way of knowing unless told by the FBI, and that she was filing the aggravated harassment complaint against the plaintiff after the FBI contacted her and told her to complain to the local police about the plaintiff.

36. The complaint filed by Zahnow falsely and misleading claimed the plaintiff had been coming to her business and also calling her even though the plaintiff only made one visit and no calls.
37. Since the only FBI agent the plaintiff talked to during his trip was Babler, the mostly likely chain of events is that after the plaintiff interviewed Zahnow, she contacted Anastasia Vasilyeva who then brought in Babler to figure a way to thwart the plaintiff's investigation.
38. On information and belief, all three agreed on a course of action at Babler's suggestion to intentionally thwart the plaintiff's investigation by having Zahnow make false harassment accusations against the plaintiff with the local police in order to harass and scare the plaintiff off his investigation and back to New York.
39. The plaintiff, indignant and disturbed over FBI Special Agent Babler's interference into the RICO investigation and apparent efforts to use the local police to scare the plaintiff out of town, visited the Brookfield Town Police at 11:30 am where he appraised Acting Chief Chris Perket of the RICO case and his lack of appreciation for the intimidation implicated in the threat of arrest.
40. At around 12:45 pm, the plaintiff visited the Milwaukee FBI Headquarters to complain to someone in charge about Babler's interference in a pending federal case, but the man in charge was out of town and the acting head, Jeffrey Troy, busy.
41. At 2 pm the plaintiff telephoned the FBI's acting head as instructed by Troy's secretary, but he was still busy, and his secretary assured the plaintiff that Jeffrey Troy would telephone him on August 26, 2003 back in New York, the plaintiff is still waiting for that call.
42. After returning to New York, the plaintiff mailed a letter to FBI Director Mueller demanding to know why FBI Special Agent Babler was trying to thwart the plaintiff's investigation into this RICO case by advising to have Zahnow file false aggravated harassment charges against the plaintiff.
43. In a December 16, 2003 letter from David C. Larson, Acting Chief, Investigative Law Unit for the FBI, Exhibit A, Mr. Larson confirmed that Babler gave advice to a defendant in this case to contact the local police.
44. On information and belief Zahnow, Babler and defendant Anastasia Vasilyeva knew the plaintiff was an attorney admitted to practice in the Southern District Court of New York and therefore a Court officer.

45. Zahnow, Babler and defendant Anastasia Vasilyeva intentionally committed the predicate acts of obstructing justice by corruptly influencing, intimidating and impeding an attorney admitted to practice before the Court and causing with false accusations the threat of arrest to be made against that attorney in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1503, and tampering with a witness and victim in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1512.
46. Zahnow and defendant Anastasia Vasilyeva engaged in the predicate acts in ¶ 45 to maintain, directly or indirectly, their interests in and control of part of the Enterprise and to exert control; that is, authority in conducting some of the affairs of the Enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(b) & (c).
47. Zahnow and defendant Anastasia Vasilyeva agreed to commit the predicate acts in ¶ 45 in furtherance of the common purpose, the Scheme, of the RICO enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(d).
48. Zahnow, Babler and defendant Anastasia Vasilyeva agreed to commit the offenses under 18 U.S.C. 1503 & 1512, which constitute violations of 19 U.S.C. 371, the federal conspiracy statute.

IV. Mundy's End Run

49. Defendant Mundy, after receiving the RICO Complaint along with the plaintiff's request for waiver of summons service, filed a complaint against the plaintiff with the Lawyers Disciplinary Committee for the Supreme Court, Appellate Division of New York State.
50. Besides claiming to the Disciplinary Committee that the plaintiff "may indeed be mentally incompetent" and "paranoid delusion," member Mundy "urge[d] the Committee to assist in any way possible in putting an end to [the plaintiff's] actionable conduct" by which he meant this RICO suit.
51. Member Mundy's disciplinary complaint states, "Mr. Den Hollander's District Court complaint [RICO], prepared pro se, is 91 pages in length and contains 915 numbers (sic) paragraphs. It is a meandering, disorganized, prolix narrative, and an embarrassment to the justice system. A review of the caption alone should question whether Mr. Den Hollander is fit to practice law."
52. On information and belief, member Mundy used the U.S. Postal Service to send the disciplinary complaint to the Committee with the intent of protecting and furthering the Enterprise's Scheme by his "urgent request" to have the Committee "censure or suspend" the plaintiff, which would threaten the plaintiff's livelihood and his ability to pursue the RICO action, or at least start an investigation that could intimidate the plaintiff into withdrawing the RICO claim.
53. Member Mundy knowingly filed unproven and unfounded accusations against the plaintiff apparently with the intent of effectively denying the plaintiff access to the Court by threatening him with a difficult disciplinary committee proceeding if the plaintiff continued with the RICO action.

54. Tellingly, Mundy's disciplinary complaint against the plaintiff cited no ethical canons or disciplinary rules the plaintiff was supposed to have violated that allegedly caused Mundy to invoke the power of the Committee.
55. Member Mundy's conduct constitutes the predicate act of mail fraud under 18 U.S.C. 1341, since his attempt to misuse the Committee was incident to an essential part of the Enterprise's Scheme that it remain untouched by the law.
56. On information and belief, defendant Mundy knew the plaintiff was an attorney admitted to practice in the Southern District Court of New York and therefore a Court officer.
57. Member Mundy's conduct constitutes the predicate acts of obstruction of justice by threatening an attorney admitted to practice before the Court, which violates 18 U.S.C. 1503 and tampering with a witness and victim in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1512.
58. Member Mundy engaged in the predicate acts in ¶¶ 55 & 57 to maintain, directly or indirectly, his interests in and control of part of the Enterprise and to participate in the operation, management or exert authority within the Enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(b) & (c).

V. Shipilina's Delusive Declaration

59. On July 13, 2004, Judge Castel ordered defendant Alina Shipilina to provide the addresses for four other defendants if she had knowledge of those addresses.
60. The four defendants are Tanya-Phodes Studio prostitute, Stephanos-bank employee, Juginta Raszyukevichina ("Azul") and Salvador-partner Phodes Studio.
61. In her July 21, 2004 declaration, defendant Shipilina knowingly made false, incomplete and misleading statements regarding her dealings and relationships with these four defendants.
62. On information and belief, defendant Shipilina intentionally covered up the full extent of her dealings and relationships with the four defendants in order to protect and further the Enterprise's Scheme.
63. On information and belief, in order to facilitate the carrying on of the Enterprise's illegal activities, defendant Shipilina intentionally covered up the full extent of her dealings and relationships with the four defendants.
64. On information and belief, defendant Shipilina reasonably foresaw that her delusive declaration would be communicated to the Court and the plaintiff by the U.S. Postal Service.

65. Defendant Shipilina falsely and misleadingly says in her Declaration ¶ A. that she only “believe[d]” defendant Perlin “was a principal in Phodes Studio,” she was together with Tanya only a “few times,” she “did not socialize with [Tanya] and she had no “reason to know [Tanya’s] last name.”
66. Defendant Shipilina falsely and misleadingly says in her Declaration ¶ B. that she does not “remember in which bank [Stephanos] worked,” “never knew [Stephanos’] last name,” “never had any reason to know his address,” and cannot “tell if this is the same person” whom she visited at his bank in September 2000 in Cyprus.
67. Defendant Shipilina falsely and misleadingly fails to say in her Declaration ¶ C. that she and Azul worked together at The Men’s Club in Mexico City, traveled together to resort locations with their customers and keeps Azul’s telephone numbers in her electronic organizer.
68. Defendant Shipilina falsely and misleadingly says in her Declaration ¶ D. that she “was never informed as to the nature of [Salvador’s] business connections, if any, with Phodes Studio,” she “went to his house with other people” when she went alone, and “was unaware of his specific address.”
69. Defendant Shipilina’s conduct constitutes the predicate acts of mail fraud under 18 U.S.C. 1343 and using the mail in aid of a racketeering enterprise under 18 U.S.C. 1952.
70. By falsely concealing facts from the Court in her July 21, 2004 affidavit, defendant Shipilina also obstructed justice by corruptly influencing and impeding the due administration of justice by the Court in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1503.
71. Defendant Shipilina engaged in the predicate acts in ¶¶ 69 & 70 in order to maintain, directly or indirectly, her interests in and control of part of the Enterprise and to participate in the operation, management or exert authority within the Enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962(b) & (c).
72. By intentionally concealing facts in her affidavit, defendant Shipilina also committed perjury under 18 U.S.C. 1621.

VI. Effect on Interstate and Foreign Commerce

73. The additional activities recounted in this supplemental complaint either impact interstate and foreign commerce directly or were carried out to protect and further the Enterprise’s activities cited in the Complaint that effect interstate and foreign commerce (Complaint ¶ 874)

VIII. Pattern of Racketeering Activities

74. The predicate acts recounted in this supplemental complaint illustrate the continuing nature of the Enterprise's illegal activities to protect and further the Enterprise's continuing Scheme to infiltrate and expand its activities into the U.S. and other markets.
75. The predicate acts recounted in this supplemental complaint occurred over a temporal proximity of eleven months and when included with the activities in the Complaint, the period is approximately five years.
76. The predicate acts recounted in this supplemental complaint illustrate that the Enterprise continues to further its Scheme by protecting valuable members from exposure and the law with obstruction of justice, tampering with a witness and victim, using interstate or foreign facilities and the mail, and engaging in wire and mail fraud.

IX. Damages

77. The Enterprise's additional illegal activities recounted in this supplemental complaint have increased the harm to the plaintiff's business and property by causing loss of profits, business interruption expenses, loss of business opportunities and damage to the plaintiff's reputation and good will in the amount of $100,000.

Re: Client: Kuba, Mundy & Associates and Nicholas J. Mundy
Matter: Roy Den Hollander v. Kuba, Mundy & Associates and Nicholas J. Mundy
Docket No.: 03 CV 2717

Dear Honorable Sir:

Our office represents the defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich (collectively referred herein as "Mundy") in connection with the above-referenced matter.

I am in receipt of plaintiff's August 23, 2004 correspondence to this Court requesting a pre-motion conference in order to make an application to supplement his initial April 18, 2004 complaint. Although Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(d) provides this Court with discretion to permit the plaintiff to serve a supplemental pleading setting forth purported transactions or occurrences which have happened since the date of the initial pleading, these defendants respectfully submit that plaintiff's request should be denied at this time. Each of the allegations and predicate acts as they refer to Mundy are merely repetitive of the allegations and predicate acts already set forth against Mundy in the plaintiff's initial complaint, which has already been addressed in the defendants' motion to dismiss. In any event, all other allegations set forth by plaintiff in his proposed supplemental pleading have been addressed by the many motions to dismiss now pending before this Court. It is respectfully submitted that plaintiff's request should not be considered until these motions are determined by this Court.

Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (PKC)

Dear Judge Castel:

I am the attorney-plaintiff representing myself pro se in this action.

Once again misleading statements by the moving defendants require a response. In their August 26, 2004 letter to the Court, the moving defendants request the Court deny a pre-motion conference to determine whether the plaintiff will be allowed to make a motion to supplement his complaint.

The defendants falsely claim that the proposed supplemental complaint, as it concerns Mundy, is “merely repetitive of the allegations and predicate acts already set forth ... in the plaintiff’s initial complaint.” Unless the defendants ascribe to a Doctor Who view of time, their statement as to the factual allegations makes no sense. The supplemental complaint alleges events that occurred only after the filing of the original complaint; therefore, the events in the original complaint and supplemental complaint cannot be “repetitive”, since the events in the supplemental complaint had not yet occurred on filing of the original complaint. As for the predicate acts alleged against Mundy in the supplemental complaint, the obstruction of justice section under 18 U.S.C. 1503 was not alleged against Mundy in the original complaint.

Finally the defendants claim, “all other allegations set forth by the plaintiff in his proposed supplemental pleading have been addressed....” (emphasis added) by their motions to dismiss. There are no references in any of their memoranda of law to the events that transpired in Milwaukee, Wisconsin in August 2003 or to movant Shipilina’s delusive declaration to this Court. As for the threatening Russian telephone call and Mundy’s filing of a disciplinary complaint against the plaintiff, the defendants’ motions do not address the predicate acts such conduct specifically violated.

Thank you for your time.

Respectfully,

Roy Den Hollander

Re: Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers
03 Civ. 2717 (PKC)

Dear Judge Castel:

This office represents defendant Alina Shipilina in the above matter. Addressing the "Supplemental Complaint," which Plaintiff is requesting the Court to accept upon motion under Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(d), defendant Shipilina urges the Court to deny such request/motion for the following reasons:

The first sentence of FRCP §15(d) reads:

"Upon motion of a party the court may, upon reasonable notice and upon such terms as are just, permit the party to serve a supplemental pleading setting forth transactions or events which have happened since the date of the pleading sought to be supplemented." Emphasis supplied.

The language of the rule is plain enough. It is submitted that this simple requirement has not been met, since it appears that few, if any, of the events cited in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened, as the rule requires, but are either fabrications or, by their very wording, rampant speculation on the part of Plaintiff.

To begin with, ¶¶ 1 - 8 deal with a phantom "threatening" phone call, which was apparently impossible to trace, then summarily dismissed by the FBI. Did that really happen? ¶¶ 11 - 13 begin with the phrase, "On information and belief," which is defined in Black's Law Dictionary, Second Pocket Edition (2001), as "based on secondhand information that the declarant believes to be true." ¶¶ 12 and 13 preface the occurrences with the phrase, "most likely," which indicates the events are not based on any "information," secondhand or otherwise, but are mere speculation, or even wishful thinking on the part of Plaintiff.

In ¶ 11, Plaintiff asserts that the defendants in ¶ 10 knew plaintiff was an attorney admitted to practice in the Southern District of New York. What my client, at least, was not aware of is that Plaintiff is also an employee of the office of the U. S. Attorney for the

J. K. SACHS

ATTORNEY AT LAW

Southern District of New York, presenting what closely resembles an indictment, for crimes not even "alleged," but rather committed. The "most likely" phraseology also appears, curiously, in the accusatory ¶¶ 16, 17, and 18. It is submitted that the statements in ¶¶ 19 through 21, insofar as my client is concerned, would constitute actionable libel were they not inserted in a court pleading, of which we are certain plaintiff must be aware.

Plaintiff's wrath, as befits a scorned lover, manifests itself most clearly in Section V of the proposed supplemental pleading, calling into play many or all of the pejorative adjectives in Plaintiff's vocabulary each time my client's name comes up in his unsubstantiated conclusory statements. Ms. Shipilina stands by her declaration as submitted, and if her replies do not suit Plaintiff's agenda, so be it.

It is apparent, as well, that much of what appears in the proposed supplemental pleading is duplicative of the reams of pleadings already filed by Plaintiff, and responded to by the wealth of defendants, throughout the world, as it were, who have all allegedly conspired to tread upon plaintiff's legal toes.

Wherefore, it is most respectfully requested that plaintiff's request for permission to move to submit the supplemental pleading be denied.

Respectfully,

Jack Sachs (JS 4241)

Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (PKC)

Dear Judge Castel:

I am the attorney-plaintiff representing myself pro se in this action.

This is in response to attorney Jack Sachs' August 30, 2004 letter to the Court in which he opposes the plaintiff's request for a pre-motion conference, but then rambles on to argue as though he were responding to a motion already made using the type of vitriolic invective that overly protective boyfriends do, such as "[p]laintiff's wrath, as befits a scorned lover ...." Who is Mr. Sachs trying to impress with this sophomoric name-calling? His client is not accused with breaking hearts but breaking the law, 18 U.S.C. 1964(c).

Mr. Sachs complains that some of the allegations in the proposed supplemental complaint "libel" his client. All the attorneys know, including him, that no matter what names he and the others call the plaintiff in this proceeding there is no recourse to a libel claim, so why even raise that non-issue. Me doth think Mr. Sachs protests too much, especially when the proposed supplemental complaint paragraphs he claims as libeling his client, ¶¶ 19-21, don't deal with his client unless he now represents Inessa Shipilina and two notorious organized crime figures in Krasnodar: Magomet Ali Kurban (Kurban is the last name) and Viktor Vladimirovich Kononenko.

Mr. Sachs emotionally objects to alleged "pejorative adjectives" in Section V. Shipilina's Delusive Declaration, but doesn't specify them. Further, he doesn't claim they are libelous, since much of Section V is based on his client's own diary. Mr. Sachs also calls the allegations in that section "unsubstantiated conclusory statements"—a little redundant on those modifiers. But, "[a] complaint that complies with the federal rules of civil procedure cannot be dismissed on the ground that it is conclusory or fails to allege facts. The federal rules require (with irrelevant exceptions) only that the complaint state a claim not that it plead the facts if true would establish ... that the claim was valid.” Higgs v. Carver, 286 F.3d 437, 439 (7th Cir. 2002) (Posner, J.)(citation omitted).

Mr. Sachs objects in a somewhat whiney manner that the pleadings are too long and the proposed supplemental complaint “is duplicative” of much already pled. As concerns his known client, Alina A. Shipilina, the original Complaint does not deal with the threatening call from a Russian-speaking goon nor Shipilina’s false declaration to the Court. All those events occurred after the Complaint was filed, so the supplemental complaint cannot be duplicative.

The pre-motion conference request is for permission to move for a supplemental complaint, not to supplement evidence. We are not at that stage although that hasn’t stopped Mr. Sachs from demanding proof. Mr. Sachs absurdly believes the phrase “which have happened” in Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(d) means the supplemental complaint must prove to Mr. Sachs’ satisfaction its allegations. A supplemental pleading “stands with the original pleading and is a mere addition to, or continuation of, the original complaint or answer.” U.S. v Russell, 241 F.2d 879, 882 (1st Cir. 1957). And the function of a complaint is to give notice, not prove. NOW, Inc v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994).

To compound his sophistic arguments, Mr. Sachs claims that ¶¶ 11-13 are “fabrications” or “rampant speculation” largely because the plaintiff used the term “[o]n information and belief.” Mr. Sachs may not like it, but the courts permit “claimants to aver facts that they believe to be true, but that lack [admissible] evidentiary support at the time of pleading,” especially when the admissible evidence is within the defendants’ knowledge or control. Moore’s Fed. Prac., 3rd Ed., § 8.04[4]. Besides, complaints do not provide evidence. Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500-01, 91 L.Ed. 451, 67 S.Ct. 385 (1947); Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 639-40 (2d Cir. 1980). Of course, these types of arguments should wait for the formal motion, if the Court allows such.

But there is one dissemblance of Mr. Sachs’ that needs to be corrected now. The plaintiff never claimed to be “an employee of the office of the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York.”

In closing, it appears that Mr. Sachs’ unnecessarily nasty letter, which makes arguments more appropriate of an opposition to a motion rather than a request for a pre-motion conference, is largely the result of the inartful drafting of his client’s declaration that gave rise to supplemental allegations against her; therefore, the strident effort to prevent a pre-motion conference.

Respectfully,

Roy Den Hollander

MEMORANDUM AND

P. KEVIN CASTEL, U.S.D.J.:

Plaintiff Roy Den Hollander ("Den Hollander") brings this action pro se against what he alleges to be a criminal enterprise that spans the globe, from New York to Russia to Chechnya to Cyprus to Mexico. The defendants are alleged to be members of the enterprise and include plaintiff's former wife, her mother, associates and divorce lawyers, various exotic dancing clubs, members of alleged organized crime groups, modeling and escort agencies, a Cypriot bank and New York City police detective. Various other actors are identified by partial name or by fictitious appellation ("Maria—Prostitute Recruiter for Julia Heart Agency," "Krasnodar Briber 1," "California Pimp," "Mexican Organized Criminal Gang 1," "Chechen Criminal Gangs 1 to 2"). Plaintiff's Complaint, some 90 pages and over 900 paragraphs in length, spins a tale of a dark netherworld of international intrigue and deception, detailing an alleged criminal enterprise among the defendants (the "Enterprise") that engaged in extensive criminal activities, including, but by no means limited to, drug trafficking, money laundering, immigration fraud, prostitution, pornography, extortion and fraud, in an effort "to infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets, especially the United States" (the "Scheme"). (Complaint ¶¶ 1-2, 13, 15) Plaintiff asserts claims under the civil enforcement provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968, in order to redress the alleged injury to plaintiff arising out of his discovery of this Scheme. Plaintiff also asserts various state law causes of actions.

Defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy (together, "Mundy"), Peter Petrovich ("Petrovich"), Cybertech Internet Solutions, Inc. ("Cybertech"), Detective Robert W. Henning ("Henning"), Bank of Cyprus, Ltd. ("Bank of Cyprus"), Dr. Marc Paulsen ("Paulsen"), and Alina Shipilina ("Shipilina"), together with Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lynn Lepofsky, "Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers" and "Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5" (collectively, "Flash Dancers defendants"), now move to dismiss the Complaint for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), Fed. R. Civ. P.<sup>1</sup> Defendants also move to dismiss the Complaint for failing to plead fraud with the particularity required by Rule 9(b), Fed. R. Civ. P. Defendants seek to dismiss the state law claims either because they fail to state a claim or because the Court, in their view, ought not exercise supplemental jurisdiction.<sup>2</sup> For the reasons set forth herein, defendants' motion is granted, and plaintiff's Complaint is dismissed with prejudice.

<sup>1</sup> Separate motion papers were filed by defendants Mundy, Petrovich, Henning and the Bank of Cyprus. Defendants Paulsen, Shipilina, Cybertech and the Flash Dancers defendants filed papers joining, to the extent applicable, the motion filed by the Mundy defendants, and in some cases filed separate reply papers. Defendants also filed various affidavits attempting to put certain exhibits before the Court. In opposition to the motions, plaintiff, without prior consent of the Court and in contravention of my Individual Practices, filed a 147-page memorandum of law, along with an affidavit and exhibits, and a Motion to Strike certain material contained in defendants' affidavits. I find it unnecessary to consider any materials outside the Complaint in deciding the motions to dismiss and I grant plaintiff's Motion to Strike.

<sup>2</sup> Because of my disposition of this motion, it is not necessary to reach the claims of lack of in personam jurisdiction asserted by defendant Petrovich. At a July 13, 2004 conference, the Court dismissed the Complaint without prejudice as to all domestic defendants who, as of then, had not been served, including the fictitious defendants.

Factual Background

Because the Complaint includes some 900 paragraphs of allegations against the Enterprise and its members, many of which are not necessary to my decision on the motion, I will not detail all of the alleged criminal activities and predicate acts outlined in the Complaint.<sup>3</sup> I note that a large number of the allegations are made on information and belief. For purposes of deciding this motion, I have, as required by the dictates of Rule 12(b)(6), accepted the well-pleaded allegations as true.

In brief plaintiff, a lawyer, member of the bar of this Court and former consultant for Kroll Associates in Moscow, alleges that the Enterprise has damaged his business, and that in the process he has been "drugged, defrauded, coerced and threatened . . . with severe bodily harm." (Complaint ¶ 3) According to the Complaint, plaintiff was lured into the web of the Enterprise in July 1999 when he met, and eventually married, his former wife, defendant Shipilina. (Complaint ¶¶ 128-140) Plaintiff alleges that his former wife is "a lucrative member of the Enterprise," and details the criminal activities that he asserts she has engaged in as part of the Enterprise, including "running prostitution, aiding pornography <sup>3</sup> Complaint ¶¶ 320-465 set forth "Other Criminal Operations by the Enterprise that Impact the U.S.," detailing an alleged worldwide operation for the distribution of prostitutes, pornography and narcotics with a nexus to Krasnodar, Moscow and St. Petersburg in Russia; California, Wisconsin and New York in the United States; Cyprus and Mexico. Paragraphs 466-683 set forth the alleged predicate acts for each of the defendants (including, inter alia, mail fraud, "white slavery," witness tampering, distribution of pornography, money laundering, murder-for-hire and bribing foreign officials) and the relevant statutory provisions alleged to have been violated. Paragraphs 684-853 set forth "Other Criminal Acts by Defendants," along with the federal and state statutes allegedly violated by each defendant. Paragraphs 854-873 detail "Plaintiff's Efforts to Obtain Assistance from Enforcement Agencies and State Courts," and ¶ 874 alleges the effect of the Enterprise's activities on interstate commerce, including, inter alia, to "[i]ncrease the risk of sexually transmitted diseases among interstate and foreign customers" and to "[i]ncrease health insurance premiums nationwide by increasing the incidents of diseases among some of the insureds." Paragraphs 875-885 set forth allegations alleged to demonstrate a pattern of racketeering activity by defendants. Finally, ¶¶ 886-899 incorporate the preceding allegations and set forth causes of action under 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962(a)-(d) and state law, and ¶¶ 900-914 set forth plaintiff's claim for damages.

rings, laundering money, smuggling drugs and building relationships among Russian, Chechen and American organized crime groups." (Complaint ¶ 36) He also alleges, on information and belief, that Ms. Shipilina and another member of the Enterprise "decided to target the plaintiff as part of the Enterprise's ongoing Scheme to infiltrate and expand its operations in the U.S." (Complaint ¶ 135), and that, by "win[ning] the devotion and cloud[ing] the mind of plaintiff by secretly feeding him narcotics" (¶ 137), they would "use the plaintiff as an unwitting means for . . . Shipilina to fraudulently enter America where she would participate in expanding the Enterprise's activities" (¶ 136). To that end, plaintiff and defendant Shipilina were married on March 11, 2000 in Krasnodar. (Complaint ¶ 36) The couple chose the March date because, according to the Complaint, it "would follow the end of plaintiff's consultancy with Kroll Associates." (Complaint ¶ 173) Plaintiff subsequently became suspicious of his wife's activities and motives, and in August 2000, "launched an investigation that continues to the present day and ended up diverting [plaintiff] from his law and consulting business for two years." (Complaint ¶ 217)

Wrong

As a result of his initial investigation and continued suspicion of the Enterprise's Scheme, plaintiff sought a divorce from defendant Shipilina. Plaintiff alleges, in considerable detail, that, as a result of his desire to divorce Ms. Shipilina, defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates (his wife's lawyers), New York Police Department Detective Henning, and others filed false documents and reports with the INS and the NYPD, and engaged, with the help of other defendants (including the "Baraev Islamic Terror and Crime Clan," the "Aspyan Criminal Association" and other "gangsters"), in a campaign of intimidation and threats of violence (aided by the payment of bribes to public officials in the United States and Krasnodar) to prevent plaintiff from "providing testimony to any U.S. authorities, including the New York divorce court" and the INS about Ms. Shipilina's immigration status and the Enterprise's illegal activities. See Complaint ¶¶ 220-319.

Plaintiff alleges that the defendants' actions outlined above, along with numerous other acts set forth in the Complaint, constitute, inter alia, "white slavery" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2421, misuse of visas in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1546, concealment of prostitution activities in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341, unlawful procurement of nationality in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1425, intimidation and witness tampering in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1512, bribing of Russian public officials in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1952, murder-for-hire in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1958, counterfeiting of visas in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1546, importing pornography for distribution in violation of 18 U.S.C. §§ 1462 and 1465, foreign travel in aid of a racketeering enterprise in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1952 and intimidating plaintiff in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1343, and constitute sufficient predicate acts to create a "pattern of racketeering activity" and give rise to a RICO violation.

Acting to Protect Scheme

By letter dated August 23, 2004, in accordance with this Court's individual practices, plaintiff sought leave to file a motion to supplement his Complaint. Attached to that letter was a proposed "Supplemental Complaint," which purports to "update the earlier Complaint . . . with subsequent occurrences and events that relate to the original Complaint . . ." The Supplemental Complaint, drafted with defendants' motions to dismiss in hand, consists of allegations of additional "predicate acts," including the continued harassment of and interference with plaintiff as a result of his investigation of the Enterprise and its Scheme, and defendant Shipilina's obstruction of justice by filing false and misleading documents in this case. The only allegation in the Supplemental Complaint relating to causation and damages is that "[t]he Enterprise's additional illegal activities recounted in this supplemental complaint have increased the harm to the plaintiff's business and property by causing loss of profits, business interruption expenses, loss of business opportunities and damage to the plaintiff's reputation and good will in the amount of $100,000." (Supplemental Complaint ¶ 77)<sup>4</sup>

Rule 15(d) provides that the court may permit a party to supplement his pleadings to set forth "transactions or occurrences or events which have happened since the date of the pleading sought to be supplemented." Rule 15(d), Fed. R. Civ. P. Although defendants object to the proposed Supplemental Complaint on the grounds that few, if any, of the events set forth in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened (see Letter from Jack Sachs dated August 30, 2004 at 1), it is not the Court's role at this stage of the litigation to assess the truth or validity of plaintiff's allegations, no matter how fanciful they appear or how difficult they may be to prove. I grant plaintiff leave to file the Supplemental Complaint and, in reviewing the adequacy of plaintiff's pleadings on these motions to dismiss, I will consider the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint.

Legal Standard

It is axiomatic that in deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the Court must accept all factual allegations as true and draw all inferences in favor of plaintiff. Levy v. Southbrook International Investments, Ltd., 263 F.3d 10, 14 (2d Cir. 2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 1054 (2002). For purposes of this motion, I have accepted, without deciding, that the allegations would otherwise state a claim under section 1962 and have restricted my examination to whether plaintiff has adequately alleged the causation and injury necessary under section 1964(c).

"Dismissal is not appropriate 'unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief.'" Chance v. Armstrong, 143 F.3d 698, 701 (2d Cir. 1998) (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957)). "This rule applies with particular force . . . where the complaint is submitted pro se . . . At the 12(b)(6) stage, '[t]he issue is not whether a plaintiff is likely to prevail ultimately, but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims. Indeed it may appear on the face of the pleading that a recovery is very remote and unlikely but that is not the test.'" Id. at 701 (citations omitted). As a result, where a plaintiff is proceeding pro se, the Court must construe the pleadings liberally, and must "interpret them to raise the strongest arguments that they suggest." Burgos v. Hopkins, 14 F.3d 787, 790 (2d Cir. 1994).

In order to state a claim for civil remedies, including treble damages, under RICO, a plaintiff must allege both that the defendant has violated the substantive RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. § 1962, and that he was "injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962." 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (emphasis added).<sup>5</sup> To satisfy the "by reason of" language of section 1964(c), a plaintiff must demonstrate both injury and causation. To do so, he must allege facts demonstrating both that plaintiff's injury is to his business or property—and not physical, emotional or reputational harm or any economic aspect of such harm—and that plaintiff's injury is proximately caused by the acts constituting the RICO violation. See Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 265-68 (1992); Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., 473 U.S. 479, 497 (1985); Ideal Steel Supply Corp. v. Anza, 373 F.3d 251, 257 (2d Cir. 2004) (vacating 12(b)(6) dismissal finding that competitor had standing to assert a RICO claim); Manson v. Stacescu, 11 F.3d 1127 (2d Cir. 1993), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 915 (1994); Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 741 F.2d 511, 515 (2d Cir. 1984), vacated on other grounds, 473 U.S. 922 (1985); Rylewicz v. Beaton Services, Ltd., 888 F.2d 1175, 1180 (7th Cir. 1989); Grogan v. Platt, 835 F.2d 844, 847 (11th Cir.) (“[P]ecuniary losses are so fundamentally a part of personal injuries that they should be considered something other than injury to ‘business or property’.”), rehearing denied, 851 F.2d 1423 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 981 (1988); Shaw v. Rolex Watch U.S.A., Inc., 776 F. Supp. 128, 134-35 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (emotional distress and physical injury not cognizable under RICO). “[A] defendant who violates section 1962 is not liable for treble damages to everyone he might have injured by other conduct, nor is the defendant liable to those who have not been injured.” Sedima, 473 U.S. at 496-7 (citations and internal quotation omitted). Thus, to survive a motion to dismiss, plaintiff must allege facts demonstrating that the unlawful activity in question was both the proximate cause of an injury compensable under the statute and the actual cause. Here, even taking plaintiff's allegations as true and assuming, for purposes of this motion only, that plaintiff's allegations would state a claim for a violation of sections 1962(a)-(d), plaintiff has failed to meet his burden with respect to pleading causation under section 1964(c).

<sup>5</sup> Section 1962(a) makes it unlawful for any person to use or invest income derived from a pattern of racketeering activity towards the acquisition, establishment or operation of an enterprise engaged in or affecting interstate commerce. Section 1962(b) makes it unlawful for any person to acquire or maintain an interest in an enterprise engaged in or affecting interstate commerce through a pattern of racketeering activity. Section 1962(c) makes it unlawful "for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity . . ." Finally, section 1962(d) makes it unlawful to conspire to violate any of the previous sections.

First, many of plaintiff's claimed injuries, including damages to plaintiff's “business reputation and good will” (Complaint ¶¶ 902-903, 907(e)) and “imperil[ing] his safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear" (§ 905), simply are not the type of injuries to "business or property" that are actionable under RICO. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 265-68; Manson, 11 F.3d at 1132-33; Shaw, 776 F. Supp. at 134-35. Second, to the extent that plaintiff seeks compensation for "loss of profits," "business interruption expenses," "loss of business opportunities" and investigation expenses (§ 907), even if these could constitute the type of injuries contemplated by the statute, plaintiff alleges that they all arose out of "plaintiff's ongoing investigation of the Enterprise's Scheme" (§ 907(a), (d)). As set forth in more detail below, because plaintiff's injuries are alleged to arise from his discovery and investigation of the Enterprise, plaintiff has not adequately alleged proximate causation, and lacks standing to bring his claim.

Lack of Proximate Causation

A RICO pattern or predicate act has proximately caused a plaintiff's injury if it is "a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation, and if the injury is reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence." Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23-24 (2d Cir. 1990) (emphasis added); see also Ideal Steel, 373 F.3d at 257; Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d 113, 123 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 124 S. Ct. 532 (2003). It is not enough to allege that but-for the alleged violation, the alleged injury would not have occurred. In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litigation, 39 F.3d 395, 399 (2d Cir. 1994). The real issue is "was the plaintiff in the category of people meant by the statute to be safeguarded, and was the harm that which the act meant to avoid?" Abrahams v. Young & Rubicam Inc., 79 F.3d 234, 237 & n.3 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 816 (1996). The Second Circuit has "repeatedly emphasized that the reasonably foreseeable victims of a RICO violation are the targets, competitors and intended victims of the racketeering enterprise." Lerner, 318 F.3d at 124. As a result, courts routinely find that the proximate cause requirement is not met, and plaintiffs lack standing to assert a civil RICO claim, where the plaintiff's injuries are caused not by the RICO violations themselves, but by the exposure of those acts, or where plaintiff seeks to recover for injuries caused by his refusal to aid and abet the violations.

it did not hinder

For example, in American Express, the Second Circuit upheld a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal of a RICO complaint where the alleged injuries were not proximately caused by the alleged racketeering injuries of fraud and bribery, but rather were caused by the fact that those activities did not have their intended effect and instead were uncovered and exposed by their intended target. 39 F.3d at 396. <sup>note to background not discussion</sup> In that case, shareholders of American Express brought a civil RICO action against the company based on the deceitful acts of defamation directed toward a former board member and competitor, Edward Safra, by certain employees of American Express. Id. at 396-98. Plaintiffs asserted standing based on the derivative pecuniary injury they suffered when the company experienced some $10 million in losses (including damage to "business reputation and goodwill") following the revelation of the acts directed at Mr. Safra. Id. at 398, 400. The Second Circuit found that plaintiffs, although injured, had not adequately alleged causation because the acts that caused the injury (principally the defamation of Mr. Safra and attendant circumstances) were directed at Mr. Safra, and not the shareholders or the company. Id. at 400. The American Express Court found that "[t]he injuries alleged thus were neither the 'preconceived purpose' nor the 'specifically-intended consequence' of the RICO defendants' acts. Moreover, any losses to American Express were caused only because the scheme itself was exposed and thus failed. Therefore, the harm to American Express was neither the 'necessary result' of the scheme nor . . . 'foreseeable' . . . ." Id.; see also Young & Rubicam, 79 F.3d at 238-39 (upholding dismissal for failure to state a claim where plaintiff was not injured by the scheme itself but rather "by the fallout from the scheme's exposure"); Hecht, 897 F.2d at 24 (upholding dismissal where plaintiff "was 'neither the target of the racketeering enterprise nor the competitor[] nor the customer[] of the racketeers,'" but rather an employee who lost his job and anticipated commissions because of his failure to aid and abet his employer's RICO violations) (alterations in original; citations omitted). Specifically, the Second Circuit found that

"[T]he commission of the RICO violations was not what injured American Express. Rather, it was the exposure of those acts that caused the appellants' harm. . . . Any fair reading of the complaint in the instant case discloses that the RICO defendants' 'preconceived purpose' was most assuredly not to cause some $10 million in losses to American Express. Instead, the complaint consistently alleges that the RICO defendants' actions, however misguided and injurious to American Express in the end, were undertaken to further American Express's competitive interests. . . . The injuries alleged thus were neither the 'preconceived purpose' nor the 'specifically-intended consequence' of the RICO defendants' acts." 39 F.3d at 400.

Similarly, in Hecht, supra, the Second Circuit upheld dismissal of allegations that made it clear that the plaintiff was not a target of the § 1962(d) conspiracy, but discovered the conspiracy and was discharged for threatening to disclose it. 897 F.2d at 24.

As the core allegations of plaintiff's Complaint in this case make clear, plaintiff's alleged injuries arise not as a result of any conspiracy directed at him, but rather as a result of his discovery and investigation of that conspiracy. The gravamen of plaintiff's Complaint is that the defendants sought to "infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets" (Complaint ¶ 2); that is, to generate profits in the United States from the Enterprise's illegal prostitution, pornography, money laundering and other activities. (Complaint ¶¶ 1-2, 13 and passim) The factual allegations detailing these activities largely predate plaintiff's "discovery" of the Scheme in August 2000, and are not alleged to have caused plaintiff injury. Plaintiff's damages allegations, set forth in paragraphs 900-914 and read in the context of the factual allegations of the Complaint, further make clear that the damages he seeks arise from his discovery of the alleged Scheme, and not from the original purpose of the Scheme itself or any of the acts taken to effect that Scheme. To be sure, plaintiff alleges that defendants took actions directed at him—including threats of physical harm—that he deems "predicate acts," and that the Enterprise has harmed "his business reputation and goodwill" (see Complaint ¶¶ 902, 903), but as plaintiff himself asserts, any such injury—even if it were the type of injury compensable under RICO—arose from his discovery of the Scheme in August 2000 and his "investigation that continues to the present day" (Complaint ¶ 217).<sup>6</sup>

Plaintiff, in essence, portrays himself in his pleadings as a whistleblower, albeit one who is having a difficult time being heard. As the Second Circuit has made clear in the context of employee whistleblowers, retaliation for such actions, even if it results in financial harm in the form of job loss, does not give rise to RICO standing. See Hecht, supra, 897 F.2d at 24; Burdick v. American Express Co., 865 F.2d 527 (2d Cir. 1989).

In Burdick, while employed at the defendant company, plaintiff became aware of illegal practices that he alleged constituted a pattern of racketeering activity. Plaintiff complained about the practices, and refused to participate in such activities. As a result, he <sup>6</sup> Although plaintiff does include general allegations that, inter alia, "plaintiff has suffered damages to his business and financial interests by the use of funds from racketeering activities to finance the Enterprise's Scheme" (¶ 900; see also ¶¶ 904-906), this Court need not accept such conclusory allegations for purposes of this motion. American Express, 39 F.3d at 400 n.3 ("[W]hile the complaint does cursorily assert that [plaintiff] was a victim of the RICO defendant's acts and that these acts were the proximate cause of American Express's alleged injuries, these conclusory allegations of the legal status of defendants' acts need not be accepted as true for the purposes of ruling on a motion to dismiss.") was fired. He subsequently brought an action seeking treble damages under section 1964(c). 865 F.2d at 528-29. The Second Circuit found that "in order to establish standing, [plaintiff] must show that the damage to his business or property resulted from the alleged mail and securities fraud, the predicate acts constituting the violation in this case. A careful review of [plaintiff's] complaint demonstrates that he cannot meet this requirement." 865 F.2d at 529. The Second Circuit further found that "Plaintiff's second claim, that he was discharged 'as a result of' his complaints concerning Shearson's fraudulent activities, fares no better. . . . His injury resulted from [defendant's] decision to fire him after he reported the [illegal] scheme to his superiors. Firing [plaintiff] under these circumstances was wrong, but it did not violate the RICO Act." Id. (quoting Nodine v. Textron, Inc., 819 F.2d 347, 349 (1st Cir. 1987)) (other citations omitted).

That plaintiff's claimed damages in this case were caused by alleged retaliation for his discovery and subsequent investigation of the Scheme is highlighted in that portion of his Complaint that attempts to quantify his damages: there, plaintiff itemizes such damages as "expenses . . . for the plaintiff's investigation and efforts to avoid and rectify injury from the Enterprise's Scheme" and "plaintiff's ongoing investigation of the Enterprise's Scheme in order to prevent and rectify injury to the plaintiff" (Complaint ¶¶ 907(a)-(c)). Although plaintiff conclusorily alleges as well that he has sustained damages to his "reputation and good will as a result of the false allegations made against the plaintiff in carrying out the Enterprise's Scheme" (Complaint ¶ 907(e)), the factual allegations in the Complaint make clear that plaintiff, while perhaps a means of effecting the Scheme, was not a target of the Scheme, and the object of the Scheme itself was to expand a prostitution and pornography empire "into the U.S. hard currency markets" and not to cause harm to plaintiff's reputation.

and goodwill or business. Indeed, taking plaintiff's allegations as true, the success of the Scheme depended on a lack of harm to plaintiff, for it was through plaintiff and with plaintiff's (perhaps unknowing) cooperation that the Enterprise hoped to succeed in infiltrating the United States. The aim of even those alleged predicate acts aimed directly at plaintiff, such as bodily threats and harassment, was not to cause injury to plaintiff's business or property, but rather, to prevent him from interfering with defendant Shipilina's efforts to obtain legal residency and, therefore, extend the Enterprise's Scheme into the U.S. hard currency markets. Cf. Manson, supra, 11 F.3d at 1132-33 (affirming dismissal of RICO complaint where plaintiff alleged threats "which were made to intimidate him and to stop him from investigating the alleged scheme"). That plaintiff would put his legal and consulting businesses on hold to investigate the Enterprise simply is not a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the predicate acts alleged; indeed, plaintiff's resistance to and investigation of the Scheme is what the predicate acts, as alleged, were designed to prevent. As a result, plaintiff has not alleged causation and injury within the meaning of section 1964(c), and therefore has not stated a cause of action under the civil RICO statute.

Because I find that plaintiff has failed to adequately allege causation and injury—that is, that he was injured by reason of any purported violation of section 1962—I need not determine whether he has adequately alleged a violation of the substantive RICO statute.

State Law Claims

Defendants also move to dismiss plaintiff's state law claims for intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of process and malicious prosecution. Because I find that plaintiff's RICO claims must be dismissed, this Court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to hear the state law claims. In light of the early stage of this litigation, the Court declines to assert supplemental jurisdiction over those claims under 28 U.S.C. § 1367.

A district court's exercise of supplemental jurisdiction is governed by 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a), which provides in pertinent part, that "in any civil action of which the district courts have original jurisdiction, the district courts shall have supplemental jurisdiction over all other claims that are so related to claims in the action within such original jurisdiction that they form part of the same case or controversy under Article III of the United States Constitution." Subsection (c) provides that a district court "may" decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over a claim if the court has dismissed all claims over which it had original jurisdiction. 28 U.S.C. § 1367(c)(3).

The Second Circuit has held that "in the usual case in which all federal-law claims are eliminated before trial, the balance of factors to be considered under the pendent jurisdiction doctrine . . . will point toward declining to exercise jurisdiction over the remaining state-law claims." Valencia ex rel. Franco v. Lee, 316 F.3d 299, 306 (2d Cir. 2003); see also Travelers Ins. Co. v. Keeling, 996 F.2d 1485, 1490 (2d Cir. 1993) (quoting Carnegie-Mellon Univ. v. Cohill, 484 U.S. 343, 350 (1988)). The balance of factors to be considered includes judicial economy, convenience, fairness and comity. Valencia, 316 F.3d at 305.

Because this Court has dismissed all federal causes of action under the RICO statute, the court declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state law causes of action. While district courts are capable and are bound to apply the state law to claims, "[n]eedless decisions of state law should be avoided both as a matter of comity and to promote justice between the parties, by procuring for them a surer-footed reading of applicable law." New York v. Niagara Mohawk Power Corp., 263 F. Supp. 2d 650, 670 (W.D.N.Y.

2003). This is especially true where neither the courts nor the parties have yet invested time or other resources in conducting discovery or otherwise preparing this case for trial. Judicial economy, fairness, convenience and comity will be served best by declining to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims and, accordingly, they are dismissed.

Leave to Amend

A Court generally should not dismiss a pro se complaint ""without granting leave to amend a least once when a liberal reading of the complaint gives any indication that a valid claim might be stated."" Thompson v. Carter, 284 F.3d 411, 416 (2d Cir. 2002) (quoting Branum v. Clark, 927 F.2d 698, 705 (2d Cir. 1991)). Here, however, plaintiff is a lawyer and member of the bar of this Court. He has demonstrated that he is capable of drafting a detailed pleading, supplemented when necessary by additional allegations. Under Rule 15(a), Fed. R. Civ. P., although leave to amend a pleading should be "freely given when justice so requires," amendment is not permitted when to do so would be futile—in other words, when the amended pleading would not itself withstand a motion to dismiss. See Milanes v. Rust-Oleum Corp., 244 F.3d 104, 110 (2d Cir. 2001); Whimsicality, Inc. v. Battat, 27 F.Supp. 2d 456, 466 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). The sheer length and detail of plaintiff's Complaint, which sets forth in great detail the investigation into the allegations that plaintiff has already conducted, makes clear that plaintiff has put forward his best case for relief. Indeed, having been fully apprised of the bases for the motions to dismiss, he sought leave to file a Supplemental Complaint, which leave I have granted. Plaintiff made no request to file an amended Complaint in the event the motions to dismiss were granted. Even the most liberal reading of the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint fails to indicate that, however restated, any valid

Delegated of C misconducting the

claim would survive. See Manson, supra, 11 F.3d at 1133 (holding that amendment would be futile where plaintiffs did not have standing to sue under RICO). As a result, I dismiss the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint with prejudice.

Conclusion

Plaintiff's request for leave to file the "Supplemental Complaint" (dated August 23, 2004) is granted and the Supplemental Complaint is deemed filed. Plaintiff's Motion to Strike Exhibits Q-Z of defendants' Reply Memorandum for Failure to Authenticate (Docket Number 59) is granted. Defendants' Motions to Dismiss the Complaint (Docket Numbers 21, 26, 28 and 62), as supplemented, is granted. Plaintiff's Complaint and the Supplemental Complaint are dismissed with prejudice. Plaintiff's Motion for Default Judgment (Docket Number 47) is denied as moot.

SO ORDERED.

Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (PKC)

Dear Judge Castel:

My years of living in this society have made me relatively tolerant of back handed sniping, even when it impugns my honor by subtly calling me a liar that spins tales, Memorandum and Order at 1, or makes fanciful allegations, Memorandum and Order at 6 (citing opposing attorney Jack Sachs' letter of August 30, 2004 at 1 as the source for this side comment).

But I do find particularly trying when manifest partiality or personal prejudice singles out me, the pro se plaintiff, for criticism, especially when such censure is based on a false premise used to justify a chain of events that led to dismissal with prejudice of the Complaint.

Yes, I filed a 147-page law memorandum with five exhibits in opposition to the defendants' combined motion to dismiss while their two key memoranda totaled 148 pages with 47 separate documents attached, but you saw fit to rebuke only me, Memorandum and Order at 2, n.1, and that rebuke was unfounded.

You claim my 147-page memorandum of law contravenes your Individual Practice Rules, but it did not contravene Chief Judge Mukasey's rules who was the sitting Judge at the time it was filed. You claim I made a Motion to Strike extraneous materials without your consent, but that was because you were not on the case at that time—Chief Judge Mukasey was and my motion complied with his rules. Had I known then that you would end up with the case, I would have requested "prior consent," but I'm not that prescient. Your rules for which you wrongly accused me of violating in a written order did not apply because the case had not yet been transferred to you and there was no notice to me at the time that it would be.

More important, however, is that the above incidents of partiality or personal prejudice and error in applying your Individual Rules contributed to overlooking controlling decisions cited in my memoranda, not fully considering the legal arguments I advanced and fundamentally misconstruing and overlooking allegations in the Complaint, which was reinforced by the failure to consider my memoranda of law, Memorandum and Order at 2, n.1. Other indications in your opinion also indicate an ignoring of my memoranda but not the defendants'. And no, my Motion to Strike did not request striking my legal memoranda.

After having been burnt once and not wanting to be falsely accused of violating any more rules, I am requesting a pre-motion conference in order to move for your recusal from this case because of impartiality that might be reasonable questioned under 28 U.S.C. 455(a) or personal prejudice under 28 U.S.C. 144 so that an impartial judge may hear any request for reconsideration under S.D.N.Y. Local Civil Rule 6.3.

Thank you for your time.

Very truly yours,

Roy Den Hollander

New York, New York 10007MEMO ENDORSEDRe: Client: Kuba, Mundy & Associates and Nicholas J. Mundy
Matter: Roy Den Hollander v. Kuba, Mundy & Associates and Nicholas J. Mundy
Docket No.: 03 CV 2717

Honorable Sir:

Our office represents the defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich in connection with the above-referenced matter. I am in receipt of the plaintiff's correspondence to your Honor dated October 4, 2004, which copied the appearing parties in this action as well as the Clerk of the Court. I regret having to burden this Court with any further correspondences pertaining to this matter given that it has been dismissed with prejudice, however, these defendants are compelled to respond to plaintiff's request for a pre-motion conference in order to move for your recusal from this case.

This matter has been fully litigated and the plaintiff had his day in Court on his claims. Simply because plaintiff dislikes like the result of your Honor's decision or disagrees with your reasoning does not provide him with authority to Judge shop and seek your recusal to this end.

The plaintiff has had a fair and reasonable opportunity to litigate this matter. The plaintiff served a nine hundred and fifteen separately numbered paragraph complaint totaling ninety-one pages in length, which was considered by your Honor. In fact, the relative portions of the complaint were cited in your Honor's decision and your Honor accepted the allegations as true in deciding the defendants' motions to dismiss. The plaintiff also had an opportunity to submit an extensive one hundred and forty-seven page memorandum of law in opposition to certain defendants' motions to dismiss as well as had the opportunity to submit other motions papers in opposition to certain other defendants' motions to dismiss. The plaintiff was afforded the opportunity before Chief Judge Mukasey to apply for a protective order. The plaintiff was also provided with an opportunity to move for an entry of default against certain defendants named in the complaint. The plaintiff was provided with the opportunity to move to strike the exhibits annexed to the defendants' reply motion submitted in further support of their motion to dismiss, and, plaintiff's motion was, in fact, granted by the Court. Lastly, the plaintiff was given the opportunity to move for a conference to supplement his complaint, and the Court granted this request by allowing the complaint to be supplemented. The supplemental complaint was considered by your Honor in the decision. In addition, the plaintiff was present at all conferences on this matter before your Honor and Chief Judge Mukasey and was provided with an opportunity to address the Court at those times. At no time during any of these conferences or while various motions were pending before the Court did plaintiff allude to any bias, prejudice or impartiality on the part of the Court. Your Honor then addressed plaintiff's complaint, plaintiff's supplemental complaint and all motions papers undecided by Chief Judge Mukasey in rendering its extensive seventeen page decision.

what good a opportunity of not readbut didn't consider memo of law

This matter has been pending against sixty-three separate domestic and foreign defendants for eighteen months, which has prejudiced these defendants and presumably the other defendants as well. This matter has taken up the time and been considered by two Federal judges. The plaintiff's request that a third Federal judge should now be burdened with having to address all of these papers on a request for reconsideration would vitiate judicial economy as well as greatly prejudice the defendants by allowing this matter to remain open longer than it already has.

Furthermore, the plaintiff's request for recusal is based upon nothing more than one sentence contained in footnote one of your Honor's seventeen page decision which states that "In opposition to the motions, plaintiff, without prior consent of the Court and in contravention of my Individual Practices, filed a 147-page memorandum of law, along with an affidavit and exhibits, and a Motion to Strike certain material contained in defendants' affidavits." This statement was made by your Honor in the context of providing nothing more than the procedural history related to this action. Neither this statement by the Court nor any other statements throughout the decision indicates that the Court struck the plaintiff's opposition and did not consider it in connection with the defendants' motions to dismiss due to its length. This statement bears no impact upon the substance of your Honor's decision and the extensive legal precedent cited in support. The plaintiff is simply looking for any excuse he can now muster up in order to take a second bite at the apple.

Lastly, plaintiff's request pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §144 and 28 U.S.C. §455(a) is deficient on its face.

28 U.S.C. §144 mandates that plaintiff was to provide "...a timely and sufficient affidavit that the judge before whom the matter is pending has a personal bias or prejudice against him or in favor of any adverse party..." Further, the affidavit "shall be accompanied by a certificate of counsel of record stating that it is made in good faith." Plaintiff's request utterly fails to include a sufficient notarized affidavit. Further, plaintiff's request is not timely and was not filed while the matter is pending. To the contrary, this request is conveniently being made after an adverse decision dismissing the action. Lastly, no certificate has been provided stating that such a request was made in good faith.

28 U.S.C. §455 mandates that your Honor should "...disqualify himself on any proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned." In light of the foregoing, there is no reasonable basis to conclude that your Honor's decision is a result of impartiality as opposed to plaintiff's failure to properly plead his RICO claims.

Hence, plaintiff's request for a pre-motion conference seeking your recusal must be denied. It is clear that plaintiff is attempting to relitigate the same issues before a different Judge because he does not like the result and/or is attempting to simply buy more time in moving for reconsideration before your Honor beyond the ten day period proscribed by S.D.N.Y. Local Civil Rule 6.3.

Thank you for attention to this matter. If you have any questions, I remain available at the Court's convenience.

Respectfully submitted,

Dear Mr. Hollander:

This is strictly between us, and could be considered in the nature of a housekeeping measure.

As you will note from the letterhead, the final "s" in my name is an integral part of the name itself, not a post-apostrophal possessive appendage.

I'm flattered that I was singled out of the several attorneys for the various defendants for special mention in your motion. If you should do so in any further pleading, though, please get the spelling straight.

Yours truly,

Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiff's Motion to Disqualify Judge Castel
Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al, 03 CV 2717 (PKC)

Judge Castel's Memorandum and Order ("Order") of September 28, 2004 in the case Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al. raises questions of partiality under 28 U.S.C. 455(a) or indicates personal prejudice under 28 U.S.C. 144 toward the plaintiff.

In the written Order, Judge Castel singles out the plaintiff—but not the defendants—for censure in violating his Individual Practice Rules. "[P]laintiff, without prior consent of the Court and in contravention of my Individual Practices, filed a 147-page memorandum of law, along with an affidavit and exhibits...." Order at 2 n.1. Judge Castel saw fit not to rebuke the defendants even though their two key memoranda totaled 148 pages with 47 separate documents disguised as 30 exhibits and two affidavits. The plaintiff's memorandum contained only four exhibits and one affidavit, yet the plaintiff alone was criticized. Judge Castel also rebuked the plaintiff for filing a Motion to Strike without his prior consent. The motion requested exclusion of external documents the plaintiff did not rely on in drafting the Complaint.

What makes the above one-sided censure of the plaintiff egregious is that it is based on a false premise. When the plaintiff submitted his memorandum of law and Motion to Strike, the case was before Chief Judge Mukasey, not Judge Castel. The plaintiff's memorandum and motion complied with Chief Judge Mukasey's rules. The case was subsequently transferred to Judge Castel, but the Judge, or one of his clerks, over looked this obvious fact in order to take advantage of an apparent opportunity to discredit the plaintiff before the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, which is where this case is going.

Perhaps this was just one of those inadvertent screw-ups, but I doubt it, since the plaintiff's nonexistent violation of the Judge's rules apparently led to the Court ignoring the plaintiff's memoranda but not the defendants. The first sentence of the first page of the Order plays off a sarcasm that the defendants used throughout their papers. The Complaint alleges the Enterprise, or Russian mafia, to be an organization that "spans the globe." The defendants used this repeatedly in their papers to snipe at the plaintiff's Complaint as farfetched. The defendants can ridicule all they want, but when the Court repeats their derision in a written Order, it becomes a different matter entirely. Judge Castel also picked up another criticism directed at the plaintiff, this time concerning the Supplemental Complaint, leveled by one of the defendant's lawyers. In opposing the plaintiff's request to file a Supplemental Complaint, Jack Sachs' wrote, "[S]ince it appears that few, if any, of the events cited in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened,...." (Sach's August 30, 2004 letter to the Court, the emphasis is his.) Judge Castel went one better in citing to Sach's letter by writing, "few, if any, of the events set forth in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened ...." The Court conveniently left out Sach's qualifier of "it appears" and went on to state "it is not the Court's role at this stage of the litigation to assess the truth or validity of plaintiff's allegations, no matter how fanciful they appear or how difficult they may be to prove." (Emphasis added) Everyone knows on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss that the Court doesn't determine fact issues, so why add this back handed slap to make sure everyone knows that the Court doesn't believe the Complaint's allegations and that it thinks they can't be proved—unless to discredit the plaintiff. Moreover, how does the Judge know or why should he care at this stage in the litigation whether the plaintiff has a witness to the events in Wisconsin as described in the Supplemental Complaint. Does it matter that the plaintiff actually has a witness, since it shouldn't even be an issue at this point?

The Judge also criticized the plaintiff for drafting the Supplemental Complaint “with the defendants’ motions to dismiss in hand ....” Order at 5. But one of the basic policies of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure “is that a party should be given every opportunity to join all of his grievances against other parties regardless of when they arose.” Wright & Miller, Federal Prac. and Proc.: Civ.2d § 1506, p 193 of 1990 edition. Finally, the Court once again chose to denigrate the plaintiff’s allegations for no discernable legal reason by stating on page one of its Order that the Complaint “spins a tale.”

Such comments by Judge Castel are unnecessary, inappropriate and do not bolster the legal basis for the Order, but they do discredit the plaintiff for when he appears before the Second Circuit to argue his appeal. As such, the only conclusion is that these remarks manifest Judge Castel’s partiality, beyond that already held by Second Circuit courts against civil RICO actions, or personal prejudiced toward the plaintiff.

WHEREFORE, the plaintiff requests the recusal of Judge Castel from any further proceedings in this case.

Memorandum of Law in Support of Plaintiff's Motion for Reconsideration of Judge Castel's September 28, 2004 Memorandum and Order in Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al, 03 CV 2717 (PKC)

In Judge Castel's Memorandum and Order ("Order"), which dismissed the Complaint with prejudice, the Judge, or one of his clerks, wrote, "I find it unnecessary to consider any materials outside the Complaint in deciding the motions to dismiss and I grant the plaintiff's Motion to Strike." Order at 2 n.1. The plaintiff's Motion to Strike requested Judge Castel to ignore external documents, including 39 documents submitted by defendants, that the plaintiff did not rely on in drafting the Complaint in accordance with Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc., 282 F.3d 147, 153 (2d Cir. 2002). The Motion to Strike did not request the Judge to strike the plaintiff's memoranda of law submitted in opposition to the defendants' memoranda of law, but the Judge, apparently on his own motion, did. As pointed out in the plaintiff's accompanying Memorandum for the Disqualification of Judge Castel at 1 & 2, the Judge's apparent rationale for ignoring the plaintiff's memoranda, but apparently not the defendants' memoranda, was the Court's misconception that the plaintiff had violated Judge Castel's Individual Practice Rules when the plaintiff had not. Judge Castel made a point of rebuking the plaintiff, despite his innocence. Order at 2 n.1. In addition, Judge Castel's partiality or personal prejudice against the plaintiff, as presented in the Memorandum for Disqualification, likely contributed to the Court overlooking the plaintiff's memoranda but not the defendants'.

By not considering the plaintiff's memoranda of law, the Judge overlooked controlling decisions cited in the Memorandum In Opposition to Certain Defendants' Motions to Dismiss at pp 104-112 and the Memorandum in Opposition to Defendant Bank of Cyprus at pp 23-25 that might reasonably have altered the result, Adams v. U.S., 686 F.Supp. 417, 418 (S.D.N.Y. 1994).

In addition, by overlooking the plaintiff's memoranda of law the issues on the motion to dismiss were, in effect, not fully briefed, since the Court did not consider the plaintiff's arguments, Jacovitz v. Regency Maritime Corp., 1994 U.S. Dist Lexis 13632 *3 (S.D.N.Y. 1994). And by fundamentally misconstruing and ignoring allegations in the Complaint, which were reinforced by the Court's failure to consider the plaintiff's memoranda of law, the Court overlooked fact allegations, See Morin v. Trupin, 823 F.Supp. 201, 205 (S.D.N.Y. 1993).

WHEREFORE, the plaintiff requests reconsideration of the Order for the above reasons providing the motion to disqualify Judge Castel is granted. If the disqualification motion is denied, the plaintiff withdraws this Motion for Reconsideration.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Defendants, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich, by their attorneys, McManus, Collura & Richter, P.C., respectfully submit this Memorandum of Law in opposition to the plaintiff's motion to disqualify Judge Castel from any further proceedings in this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455(a) and 28 U.S.C. § 144, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

ARGUMENT

Plaintiff's motion to disqualify arises only out of the Memorandum and Order dated September 28, 2004 in the case of Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et. al, 2004 WL 2186558 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) ("Order"). Plaintiff alleges that the Order evidences reasonably questioned impartiality on the part of Judge Castel pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455(a) and/or personal prejudice on the part of Judge Castel pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 144 against the plaintiff.

A. Legal Standard: 28 U.S.C. § 455(a)

On the merits of the pending petition, the applicable standard is well settled, 28 U.S.C. § 455(a) mandates that Judge Castel "... shall disqualify himself on any proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned."

The trial Judge himself must decide a motion filed pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455(a). In re Gaminig Lottery Securities Litigation, 2001 WL 1020905 *6 (S.D.N.Y. 2001). The instant application for recusal is committed to Judge Castel's "sound discretion." U.S. v. Maggiore, 2004 WL 768646 *2 (E.D.N.Y. 2004); Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F.Supp 510, 514 (S.D.N.Y. 1989). The Second Circuit has explained that the Judge presiding over the case is in the best position to appreciate the implications of those matters alleged in a recusal motion. In re Initial Public Offering Securities Litigation, 174 F.Supp.2d 70 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (citing In re Drexel Burnha Lambert, Inc. 861 F.2d 1307, 1312 (2d Cir. 1988)).

28 U.S.C. § 455(a) requires a showing that would cause an objective, disinterested, observer fully informed of the underlying facts to entertain significant doubt that justice would be done absent recusal. In re Gaminig Lottery Securities Litigation, 2001 WL 1020905 *6. Thus, the test to be applied is an objective one which assumes that a reasonable person knows and understands all the relevant facts. Id. See also In re

International Business Machines Corp., 45 F.3d 641, 643 (2d Cir. 1995). Stated another way, the Court just asks whether a reasonable person, knowing all the facts, would conclude that the Court's impartiality might reasonably be questioned. Bilzerian v. U.S., 1995 WL 758754 * 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1995)

However, there is a substantial burden on the moving party to show that the judge is not impartial. Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F.Supp 510, 514. The remedy of mandamus will be invoked only where the petitioner has demonstrated that its right to such relief is "clear and indisputable." In re International Business Machines Corp., 45 F.3d 641, 643 (quoting Moses H. Cone Memorial Hospital v. Mercury Construction Corp., 460 U.S. 1, 18, 103 S.Ct. 927, 938, 74 L.Ed.2d 765 (1983)). This is the standard that the Second Circuit has explicitly applied in the context of a mandamus petition to challenge a judge's denial of a recusal motion. In re International Business Machines Corp., 45 F.3d 641, 643. Further, it must be clear and indisputable that the conduct was "so extreme as to display clear inability to render fair judgment." U.S. v. Maggiore, 2004 WL 768646 *2 (quoting Liteky v. United States, 510 U.S. 540, 114 S.Ct. 1147, 127 L.Ed.2d 474 (1994)). In other words, "before recusal would be appropriate, a judge must display so deep and profound a bias such that fair judgment would be impossible." Bilzerian v. U.S., 1995 WL 758754 * 1 (citing Liteky v. United States 510 U.S. 540, 114 S.Ct. 1147, 127 L.Ed.2d 474). A judge should not recuse himself on unsupported, irrational or highly tenuous speculation. Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F.Supp 510, 514.

Unless this standard is met, a judge is as much obligated not to recuse himself when it is not called for as he is obliged to when it is. In re Gaminig Lottery Securities Litigation, 2001 WL 1020905 *6; Bilzerian v. U.S., 1995 WL 758754 * 1. Section 455(a) was not meant to require disqualification every time one party can make some argument, no matter how unreasonable, that the appearance of prejudice would result. The reason for this stringent standard is that the Court must be alert to avoid the possibility that those who would question the Judge's impartiality are in fact seeking to avoid the consequences of his adverse decision. Lamborn v. Dittmer 726 F.Supp 510, 514. Litigants are entitled to an unbiased judge, not a judge of their choosing. In re Initial Public Offering Securities Litigation, 174 F.Supp.2d 70, 74; U.S. v. Terry, 802 F.Supp 1094, 1097 (S.D.N.Y. 1992).

Of further significance, the Second Circuit, quoting the United States Supreme Court, has stated "... the ultimate inquiry is whether circumstances satisfy section 455(a), i.e., create an objectively reasonable basis for questioning a judge's impartiality, by showing a deep-seated favoritism or antagonism that would make fair judgment impossible. [J]udicial rulings alone the Court observed, almost never constitute a valid basis for a bias or partiality motion and can only in the rarest circumstances evidence the degree of favoritism or antagonism required." In re International Business Machines Corp., 45 F.3d 641, 644 (quoting Liteky v. United States 510 U.S. 540, 114 S.Ct. 1147, 127 L.Ed.2d 474 (1994)) (internal quotations omitted). See also In re Gaming Lottery Securities Litigation, 2001 WL 1020905 *6 (judicial rulings can only in the rarest circumstances evidence the degree of favoritism or antagonism required when no extrajudicial source is involved. Almost invariably, they are proper grounds for appeal not for recusal); Johnson v. John Doe, 2001 WL 619287 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (adverse rulings do not create the appearance of bias that would prompt a court to disqualify itself); Bilzerian v. U.S., 1995 WL 758754 * 2 (judicial rulings alone almost never constitute a valid basis for a bias or partiality motion. This is because in and of themselves they cannot show reliance on an extrajudicial source and only in the rarest circumstances evidence the degree of favoritism or antagonism required); U.S. v. Terry 802 F. Supp 1094, 1097 (motion to recuse under § 455(a) may be made only on the basis of alleged bias or prejudice from an extrajudicial source, not upon trial rulings or conduct).

In light of the law detailed above and the arguments cited in Section C below, the plaintiff's application, left to the sound discretion of Judge Castel, must be denied. An objective, disinterested, observer fully informed of the underlying facts would no doubt conclude that the Court's impartiality is not reasonably questionable. The plaintiff has not satisfied the substantial burden of showing that his right to relief is clear and indisputable, nor has he shown that the conduct alleged was so extreme as to display clear inability to render fair judgment or that Judge Castel exhibited so deep and profound a bias such that fair judgment was impossible. In fact, plaintiff has shown no bias or prejudice on the part of Judge Castel. In any event, the Order alone cannot constitute a legal basis for alleged bias or partiality to evidence the degree of favoritism or antagonism required.<sup>1</sup>

28 U.S.C. § 144 provides that:

"Whenever a party to any proceeding in a district court makes and files a timely and sufficient affidavit that the judge before whom the matter is pending has a personal bias or prejudice either against him or in favor of any adverse party, such judge shall proceed no further therein, but another judge shall be assigned to hear such proceeding.

The affidavit shall state the facts and the reasons for the belief that bias or prejudice exists, and shall be filed not less than ten days before the beginning of the term at which the proceeding is to be heard, or good cause shall be shown for failure to file it within such time. A party may file only one such affidavit in any case. It shall be accompanied by a certificate of counsel of record stating that it is made in good faith." (emphasis added)

To begin with, plaintiff's motion under 28 U.S.C. § 144 is procedurally defective as a matter of law and must be denied based upon such deficiencies alone. Before even reaching the merits of the recusal motion under 28 U.S.C. § 144, it is necessary for the Court to determine whether the procedural requirement under 28 U.S.C. § 144 have been met. Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F.Supp 510, 514; Apple v. Jewish Hospital and Medical Center, 829 F.2d 326, 333 (2d. Cir. 1987). They have not here.

First, plaintiff's application is untimely and was not filed while the matter was pending. To the contrary, this request is conveniently being made after an adverse decision dismissing the action. This Court has indicated that in addition to lapse of time, four other factors are taken into account in considering the timeliness of such a motion: (1) whether movant has participated in a substantial manner in trial or pre-trial proceedings; (2) whether granting the motion would represent a waste of judicial resources; (3) whether the motion was made after entry of judgement; and (4) whether the movant can demonstrate good cause for delay. Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F.Supp 510, 514 (S.D.N.Y. 1989); Herskowitz v. Charney, 1994 WL 455172 *2 (S.D.N.Y. 1994). The underlying rationale for the timeliness rule is to prevent waste of judicial resources which would occur if proceedings had to be duplicated after recusal, and to prevent a movant from hedging his bets by holding back and waiting to see the outcome of his case before making his recusal motion. Id.; Apple v. Jewish Hospital and Medical Center, 829 F.2d 326, 334 (judicial resources should not be wasted and a movant may not hold back and wait, hedging its bets against the eventual outcome).

In the instant matter, as detailed below, plaintiff participated extensively in this action, filing various pleadings and motions and appearing in Court. He has repeatedly and vigorously presented his arguments to this Court. Further, recusal would certainly result in a waste of judicial resources if a third Federal Judge would now have to preside over this matter and re-read the extensive record. Furthermore, the delay by plaintiff has certainly allowed him to hedge his bet. Had plaintiff been successful on the defendants' motion to dismiss, he would not be filing this motion. Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F.Supp 510, 514 (S.D.N.Y. 1989).

Second, 28 U.S.C. § 144 mandates that plaintiff was to provide "...a timely and sufficient affidavit that the judge before whom the matter is pending has a personal bias or prejudice against him or in favor of any adverse party..." 28 U.S.C. § 144, "Affidavits filed under § 144 are strictly scrutinized for form and timeliness." Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F. Supp 510, 514. See also Galella v. Onassis, 487 F.2d 986, 997 (2d Cir. 1973) (a judge may be disqualified for bias only on motion supported by a written affidavit of facts supporting the claim of bias); Herskowitz v. Charney, 1994 WL 455172 *2 (an application that a judge recuse herself pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 144 must be accompanied by an affidavit); Apple v. Jewish Hospital and Medical Center, 829 F.2d 326, 333 (§ 144 requires a party to file an affidavit, though the filing of such an affidavit does not automatically disqualify a judge). Here, the plaintiff has utterly failed to include any sufficient notarized affidavit.

Third, 28 U.S.C. § 144 mandates that the affidavit "shall be accompanied by a certificate of counsel of record stating that it is made in good faith." 28 U.S.C. § 144. The Court in Lamborn v. Dittmer noted that the defendant's motion was deficient in form because the affidavit was not accompanied by the certificate of good faith as required under the statute. The Court stated that this requirement is importance because a judge is not allowed to scrutinize a § 144 affidavit for accuracy even if he knows to a certainty that the allegations of personal prejudice are false. Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F. Supp 510, 515. The Court went on to state that if a certificate is to serve the purpose of shielding a court which cannot test the truth of claimed facts, it should at least carry the assertion that counsel believes the facts alleged to be accurate and correct. Id. Here, no certificate has been provided by the plaintiff's lawyer stating that such a request was made in good faith. Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F. Supp 510, 514.

Hence, procedural requirements under 28 U.S.C. § 144 are strictly construed and the lack of respect for such clear requirements by plaintiff in itself is sufficient grounds for denying the motion for recusal under 28 U.S.C. § 144. Id.

However, even though plaintiff's motion is deficient in both timeliness and form, his motion similarly fails on the merits. Courts considering the substantive standards of 28 U.S.C. § 144 have concluded that they are to be construed in pari materia with section 28 U.S.C. § 455. Apple v. Jewish Hospital and Medical Center, 829 F.2d 326, 333. In large measure, the grounds for disqualification are the same under both statutes. State of N.Y. v. Sokol, 1996 WL 428381 *4 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). Sections 455 and 144 are not redundant but complementary. Id.

The substantive test for bias or prejudice is identical in both Sections 144 and 455, i.e., whether an objective, disinterested, observer, fully informed of the facts underlying the grounds on which recusal is sought, would entertain significant doubt that justice would be done if the judge were not recused. Id.

The bias or prejudice that results in recusal is the same under both sections, that is, it looks to extrajudicial conduct as the basis for making such a determination, not conduct which arises in a judicial context. Apple v. Jewish Hospital and Medical Center, 829 F.2d 326, 333. That is, the bias or prejudice must be extrajudicial, i.e. it must be established by matters outside and apart from the litigation. State of N.Y. v. Sokol, 1996 WL 428381*5. Another Court has stated "[i]n order to succeed on a motion to recuse pursuant to §144, petitioner must demonstrate that the Court's alleged bias or prejudice resulted from an extrajudicial source." Bilzerian v. U.S. 1995 WL 758754 *1. "This requires evidence that the judge formed 'an opinion on the merits on some basis other than what the judge learned from his participation in the case.'" Bilzerian v. U.S. 1995 WL 758754 *1. quoting U.S. v. Grinnell Corp., 384 U.S. 563, 583 (1966). See also Lamborn v. Dittmer, 726 F.Supp 510, 515 (disqualifying prejudice must stem from an extrajudicial source and result in an opinion on the merits on some basis other than what the judge has learned from his participation in the case); Herskowitz v. Charney 1994 WL 455172 *2 (judicial rulings alone almost never constitute valid basis for a bias or partiality motion).

In the instant action, an objective observer, fully informed of the facts underlying the grounds on which recusal is sought, would not entertain significant doubt that justice would not be done if the judge was not recused.

Further, it is not even alleged by plaintiff, because it cannot be, that the alleged bias was based upon anything other than the Order. There was no extrajudicial conduct.

C. Plaintiff's Motion Pursuant to 28 U.S.C § 455(a) and 28 U.S.C § 144 Must Be Denied

Based upon the foregoing, plaintiff's motion has no basis in law or fact, and is nothing more than the result of a disgruntled litigant who now seeks to multiply this proceeding unreasonably and vexatiously simply because his complaint and supplemental complaint have been dismissed with prejudice by this Court and he is unhappy with that result.

Only now that the complaint and supplemental complaint have been dismissed does plaintiff conjure up this purported impartiality and prejudice on the part of the Court in an attempt to retry his claims and allow this matter to linger longer than it already unnecessarily has. The plaintiff's real dispute is not with some of the statements issued by the Court in its Order, but with the outcome of the Order. If the Court had concluded that the plaintiff's complaint should go forward, there is no doubt that he would welcome Judge Castel proceeding with this action. Plaintiff is desperate and figures he now has nothing to lose. This conduct by plaintiff is reminiscent and consistent with his conduct in the underlying proceedings whereby he sought to admonish anyone who stood in the way of his claims, including the attorneys and Judges. However, simply because plaintiff dislikes like the result of Judge Castel's decision or disagrees with his reasoning does not provide him with authority to now Judge shop and seek Judge Castel's recusal to this end. Ellis v. Provident Life & Accident Insurance Company, 962 F. Supp 445 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (The court regularly cautioned against permitting judge shopping by litigants as inconsistent with the ends of justice).

Plaintiff makes this application despite the fact that this matter has been fully litigated on its merits and the plaintiff has had his day in Court on his claims. The facts and procedural history related to this action reveal that plaintiff has clearly had a fair and reasonable opportunity to litigate this matter. The plaintiff served a nine hundred and fifteen separately numbered paragraph complaint totaling ninety-one pages in length, which was considered by Judge Castel. In fact, the relative portions of the complaint were cited in Judge Castel's decision and Judge Castel explicitly stated that he accepted the allegations contained in the complaint and supplemental complaint as true in deciding the defendants' motions to dismiss. The plaintiff had an opportunity to submit an extensive one hundred and forty-seven page memorandum of law in opposition to certain defendants' motions to dismiss as well as had the opportunity to submit other motions papers in opposition to certain other defendants' motions to dismiss. These motion papers were considered by the Court in deciding the defendants' motions to dismiss. Indeed, plaintiff cannot point to a single reference or statement in the Order which demonstrates that plaintiffs opposition was not considered in determining the defendants' motions to dismiss. The plaintiff was also provided with the opportunity to move to strike the exhibits annexed to the defendants' reply motion submitted in further support of their motion to dismiss. In fact, this motion was granted by Judge Castel and all exhibits and references to such exhibits contained in the defendants' motion papers were struck by Judge Castel and not considered in the Order. Further, the plaintiff was permitted the opportunity to move for a conference before Judge Castel to supplement his complaint. Judge Castel again granted plaintiff's request, allowed the complaint to be supplemented, and considered the supplemental complaint, while taking the allegations as true, in deciding the defendants' motions to dismiss. The plaintiff also conveniently fails to mention that he was afforded the opportunity before Chief Judge Mukasey, the Judge presiding over this matter prior to Judge Castel, to apply for a protective order, and was similarly provided with an opportunity before Chief Judge Mukasey to move for an entry of default against certain defendants named in the complaint.

Additionally, the plaintiff was present at all conferences on this matter before Chief Judge Mukasey and Judge Castel and was provided with an opportunity to address the Court at those times. Significantly, at no time during any of these conferences or while the aforementioned motions were pending before the Court did plaintiff suggest any bias, prejudice or impartiality on the part of the Court, either verbally or in writing.

Hence, Judge Castel addressed plaintiff's complaint, plaintiff's supplemental complaint and all motions papers undecided by Chief Judge Mukasey and rendered an extensive seventeen page Order based upon controlling legal precedent in this Circuit. In rendering its decision, the Court granted plaintiff's motion to supplement his complaint and considered it along with the initial complaint, took all relevant facts as true in the complaint and supplemental complaint, struck the exhibits of the defendant and stated that the Court refused to look outside the allegations in the complaint in making its determination. Based upon these rulings, the Order, which speaks for itself, clearly reveals that plaintiff's complaint and supplemental complaint were dismissed by the Court only because they failed to satisfy the standard for stating a claim under the civil enforcement provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C §§ 1961-1968, not because of some concocted impartiality or prejudice conveniently invented, after-the-fact, by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff's request for disqualification of Judge Castel is based upon nothing more than limited facts and verbiage contained in Judge Castel's decision, interpreted by the plaintiff in contravention of its objectively determined meaning, which, in any event, neither impacts the substance of the decision nor the law cited in support.

The bulk of plaintiff's request for recusal and the entire first page of his motion is based upon one sentence contained in footnote one of Judge Castel's nearly seventeen page decision which states that "In opposition to the motions, plaintiff, without prior consent of the Court and in contravention of my Individual Practices, filed a 147-page memorandum of law, along with an affidavit and exhibits, and a Motion to Strike certain material contained in defendants' affidavits."

This statement was made by Judge Castel in the context of providing nothing more than the procedural history related to this action. Neither this statement by the Court, nor any other statements throughout the decision, indicates that the Court struck the plaintiff's opposition memorandum and did not consider it in connection with the defendants' motions to dismiss due to its length. Further, this statement by Judge Castel does not indicate that the Court struck the plaintiff's motion to strike the exhibits attached to the defendants' reply motion to dismiss and references to such exhibits in their motion papers. To the contrary, the Court considered plaintiff's motion, granted it and then struck the exhibit and references to such exhibits by the defendants. Thus, this statement by Judge Castel does not evidence the striking of any motion papers submitted by the defendants, and, moreover, has absolutely no impact upon the substance of Judge Castel's decision and the extensive legal precedent cited in support. In fact, hypothetically, even if this statement was taken out of the Order all together, the decision would still remain the same. The plaintiff is simply looking for any excuse he can now muster up in order to take a second bite at the apple.

The remainder of plaintiff's motion, pages two and three, criticizes the writing style of Judge Castel and the various phrases, nouns, adjectives and verbs used in support. Plaintiff first suggests that the phrase "spans the globe" used in the sentence by the Court that "Plaintiff Roy Den Hollander ("Den Hollander") brings this action pro se against what he alleges to be a criminal enterprise that spans the globe, from New York to Russia to Chechnya to Cyprus to Mexico" was a sarcastic attempt by the Court to ridicule plaintiff. To begin with, despite plaintiff's sensitive interpretation of the Court's use of the phrase "spans the globe," the criminal enterprise as alleged by plaintiff in his complaint did in fact span the globe (as Judge Castel correctly noted) from New York to Russia to Chechnya to Cyprus to Mexico and the truth of this statement by Judge Castel did not create the indicia of ridicule or sarcasm. Nevertheless, this statement certainly does not impact the substance of the decision nor the law cited in support, and the Court's holding would remain the same even if the phrase was not present.

The plaintiff next takes issue, out of context, with Judge Castel's statements "few, if any, of the events set forth in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened" and "no matter how fanciful they appear or how difficult they may be to prove" in the sentence by the Court that stated: "Although defendants object to the proposed Supplemental Complaint on the grounds that few, if any, of the events set forth in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened (see Letter from Jack Sachs dated August 30, 2004 at 1), it is not the Court's role at this state of the litigation to assess the truth or validity of plaintiff's allegations, no matter how fanciful they appear or how difficult they may be to prove." How the plaintiff believes that this sentence is a "back handed slap to make sure everyone knows that the Court doesn't believe the Complaint's allegations and that it thinks they can't be proved-unless to discredit the plaintiff" is nonsensical. Perhaps this objection by plaintiff best illustrates the lengths he will go to attempt to create the impression of impropriety where clearly none exists.

The Court was merely setting forth the standard under Rule 15(d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. In setting forth this standard, the Court was actually granting plaintiff's request to supplement his complaint and denying the defendants' opposition. The Court was not ridiculing plaintiff, but rather, merely indicating that despite Jack Sach's letter suggesting that few, if any, of the events in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened, it was not the Court's role to evaluate the validity of the events no matter how unbelievable or fanciful they may appear to Jack Sachs in this instance. How the plaintiff believes he was rebuked when the Court accepted his pleading and his allegations contained therein is preposterous.

Lastly, plaintiff criticizes Judge Castel for, in the context of providing procedural history, stating that "The Supplemental Complaint, drafted with the defendants' motions to dismiss in hand, consists of allegations of additional 'predicate acts'..." Besides the fact that this statement is true, it bears no impact upon the decision by the Court or the law cited in support.

Besides the fact that the Order itself as a matter of law cannot serve as a basis by plaintiff to demonstrate bias or prejudice which justifies recusal, the referencing of these few phrases by plaintiff does not in the least bit illustrate any bias or prejudice on the part of Judge Castel towards plaintiff and cannot serve as a predicate for his recusal in this action. Rather, after reading the seventeen page decision, the reader is left with the impression that this matter has been dismissed because the allegations do not sufficiently allege a RICO claim, not because the plaintiff is disliked or because the Court was biased. This makes logical sense given that Judge Castel has no interest in the outcome of this case other than the interest of every judicial officer that the truth be discovered and the law correctly applied. See Ellis v. Provident Life & Accident Insurance Company, 962 F.Supp 445. Thus, the fact that the Court delivered an adverse ruling against plaintiff, without more, does not provide a basis to question his impartiality and move for recusal. See Schiff v. U.S., 919 F.2d 830, 834 (2d Cir. 1990); United States v. Wolfson, 558 F.2d 59, 64 (2d Cir. 1977). If the plaintiff is dissatisfied with the earlier Order, he should seek to appeal rather than move for recusal. D'Amico v. U.S., 2000 WL 686371 (S.D.N.Y. 2000)

In conclusion, this matter has been pending against sixty-three separate domestic and foreign defendants for eighteen months, which has prejudiced these defendants and presumably the other defendants as well. This matter has taken up the time and been considered by two Federal judges. The plaintiff's request that a third Federal judge should now be burdened with having to address all of these papers on a request for reconsideration would vitiate judicial economy as well as greatly prejudice the defendants by allowing this matter to remain open longer than it already has. It is clear that plaintiff is attempting to relitigate the same issues before a different Judge because he does not like the result issued by Judge Castel. His motion must be denied.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the plaintiff's motion to disqualify Judge Castel from any further proceedings in this matter pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 455(a) and 28 U.S.C. § 144 should be denied, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Defendants, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich, by their attorneys, McManus, Collura & Richter, P.C., respectfully submit this Memorandum of Law in opposition to the plaintiff's motion to reconsider the decision of Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et. al., 2004 WL 2186558 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) ("Order"), which dismissed the plaintiff's complaint and supplemental complaint with prejudice, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

ARGUMENT

The majority of the plaintiff's application for reconsideration is based upon and repetitive of the arguments contained in the plaintiff's application for disqualification of Judge Castel. These arguments have been sufficiently addressed in the defendants' memorandum of law in opposition to that motion and will not be repeated fully herein. In sum, that opposition memorandum of law submitted by these defendants reveals that Judge Castel did not exhibit any bias or prejudice against the plaintiff, that plaintiff has not adequately demonstrated, in fact or law, that recusal is justified in this instance, nor has the plaintiff demonstrated that his memorandum of law in opposition to the defendants' motions to dismiss was ignored. To the contrary, the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint and supplemental complaint were taken as true and plaintiff's memorandum of law was considered in opposition to the defendants' motions to dismiss. Notwithstanding this fact, the Order, which speaks for itself, clearly reveals that plaintiff's complaint and supplemental complaint were dismissed by the Court only because they failed to satisfy the standard for stating a claim under the civil enforcement provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C §§ 1961-1968, not because plaintiff's opposition was ignored. Without rehashing the legal arguments already addressed by this Court, the defendants respectfully refer the Court to the defendants' motions to dismiss and reply motions to dismiss as well as the Court's extensive Order. The reasons for dismissal have been clearly spelled out in Judge Castel's Order.

The plaintiff has not now sufficiently demonstrated that this Court overlooked relevant facts, controlling decisions or prevailing law in rendering its decision. In fact, the plaintiff cannot point to specific facts or legal precedent which was ignored by the Court or which held contrary to the Order. Instead, plaintiff simply refers to his initial memorandum of law submitted in opposition to the defendants' motions to dismiss, and attempts to now relitigate his arguments which were already addressed by this Court and found unpersuasive.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the plaintiff's motion for reconsideration of the Order, which dismissed the plaintiff's complaint and supplemental complaint with prejudice should be denied, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR DISQUALIFICATION

This memorandum is submitted on behalf of defendants "Flash Dancers Topless Club,"<sup>1</sup> "Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.," "Lynn Lepofsky, CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.," "Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers," and "Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5" (collectively referred to herein as "FlashDancers Defendants"), in opposition to plaintiff's motion "to disqualify Judge Castel" dated October 8, 2004.

<sup>1</sup> "Flash Dancers Topless Club" is not a legal entity and has no capacity to sue or be sued. "FlashDancers" is the tradename under which defendant Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. conducts business at premises 1674 Broadway, New York, New York. It is also a federally registered service mark owned by defendant Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.

Plaintiff's motion is frivolous. The Court has said and done nothing that would lead anyone to suspect, much less conclude - - by any standard - - that the Court was not impartial as between the parties.

It is axiomatic that the fact that the Court may have criticized plaintiff in its Memorandum and Order of September 28, 2004, or may have inadvertently misstated en passant that one of plaintiff's submissions exceeded the Court's Individual Practices page limitation, notwithstanding that the page limitation did not apply, are not grounds for disqualification.*

Read in the context of plaintiff's companion motion for reconsideration - - which plaintiff expressly seeks to have decided only if disqualification is granted - - it is immediately obvious that what plaintiff really seeks is a classic "second bite" at the litigation "apple," before another judge. In this regard, this plaintiff is no different than any other disappointed litigant, and his proper remedy is not "judge-shopping" and/or a motion for reconsideration but an appeal as to any matter he believes was determined adversely to him and constitutes error cognizable error.

* Indeed, even assuming, arguendo, that it was improper by any standard for the Court to have expressed criticism of plaintiff in the terms with respect to which he now complains, and/or for the Court to have referred to its Individual Practices, any such "errors" were, at most, "harmless" and must be disregarded pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 61.

WHEREFORE, it is respectfully submitted on behalf of the FlashDancers Defendants that the plaintiff's motion for disqualification should be denied.

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

This memorandum is submitted on behalf of defendants "Flash Dancers Topless Club,"<sup>1</sup> "Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.," "Lynn Lepofsky, CEO Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc.," "Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers," and "Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5" (collectively referred to herein as "FlashDancers Defendants"), in opposition to plaintiff's motion for reconsideration dated October 8, 2004.

At the outset, we note that plaintiff's motion states that "if the plaintiff's [companion] motion requesting the disqualification of Judge

Castel is denied, then the plaintiff withdraws this motion for reconsideration." We respectfully submit, however, in the event recusal is denied, that plaintiff not be permitted to withdraw this motion. Rather, in such event, the Court should proceed to determine and deny the motion for the reasons and in the manner set forth below.

Plaintiff's motion is premised on plaintiff's misreading of Note 1 set forth in the margin of the Memorandum and Order herein dated September 28, 2004, at p. 2 ("Note 1"). Plaintiff apparently misinterprets Note 1 to state that the Court not only disregarded "affidavits and exhibits" submitted by both plaintiff and certain defendants (and concomitantly granted plaintiff's Motion to Strike), but that the Court also disregarded the plaintiff's memoranda of law submitted in opposition to the various motions to dismiss.

Note 1 says no such thing. Nowhere in the Court's opinion is there the slightest indication that the Court disregarded plaintiff's memoranda of law.

The Court's observation en passant that plaintiff filed a 147-page long memorandum of law "without prior consent of the Court and in contravention of my Individual Practices," does not state or imply that the Court disregarded either of plaintiff's memoranda of law, and it is obvious from the balance of the decision that the Court did not ignore plaintiff's memoranda of law notwithstanding any confusion as to which set of Individual Practices apply in this case - - this Court's or Judge Mukasey's (which do not contain such a page limitation).

Accordingly, the misstatement in Note 1 on which plaintiff's motion is predicated is, at most, a harmless error which did not affect the substantial rights of the parties and must be disregarded pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 61:

No ... error or defect in any ruling or order or in anything done or omitted by the court ... is ground for ... vacating, modifying, or otherwise disturbing a judgment or order, unless refusal to take such action appears to the court inconsistent with substantial justice. The court at every stage of the proceeding must disregard any error or defect in the proceedings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. [Emphasis added.]

In this case, denial of plaintiff's motion is clearly not "inconsistent with substantial justice." Accordingly, there is no basis for substantive reconsideration of the motions to dismiss and plaintiff's motion should be denied.

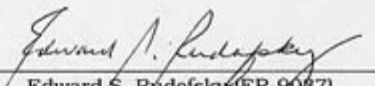

However, to avoid the slightest possibility of confusion as to the effect of Note 1, it is respectfully submitted that the Court may wish to clarify Note 1 to make it crystal clear that it was only the "affidavits and exhibits" - - and not the plaintiff's memoranda of law - - which were disregarded in ruling on the motions to dismiss. This clarification will contribute to the "just, speedy and inexpensive determination of [this] action" (see F.R.Civ.P. 1) by making it clear beyond peradventure that any inadvertent error by the Court in referring to its own Individual Practices did not prejudice plaintiff in any way, thereby avoiding any possibility of further confusion as to this point should plaintiff appeal.

WHEREFORE, it is respectfully submitted on behalf of the FlashDancers Defendants that the plaintiff's motion for reconsideration should be denied.

03 Civ. 2717 (PKC)

ORDER

P. KEVIN CASTEL, U.S.D.J.

Plaintiff has moved to disqualify me under 28 U.S.C. § 455(a) arguing that my "impartiality might reasonably be questioned." Plaintiff's assertion is premised upon statements made in a Memorandum and Order dated September 28, 2004 (the "Mem. & Order"), that set forth my rulings on then-pending motions.

The legal standard under section 455(a) is a simple one. "A judge is required to recuse 'in any proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned,' 28 U.S.C. § 455(a) (1988), and 'the test to be applied is an objective one which assumes that a reasonable person knows and understands all the relevant facts.'" In re International Business Machines Corp., 45 F.3d 641, 643 (2d Cir. 1995) (quoting In re Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., 861 F.2d 1307, 1313 (2d Cir. 1988) (emphasis in original), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1102 (1989)). Except in the rarest of circumstances, adverse judicial rulings do not provide a basis to demonstrate a judge's lack of impartiality. See In re International Business Machine, 45 F.3d at 644 (citing Liteky v. United States, 510 U.S. 540 (1994)).

This action was commenced with the filing of the complaint on April 18, 2003. The action was assigned to Chief Judge Michael B. Mukasey. Between September 22, 2003 and October 8, 2003, various defendants moved to dismiss the complaint. Plaintiff responded to the motions on December 17, 2003. Reply papers were filed on May 18, 2004. In June, Chief Judge Mukasey set a briefing schedule for certain late served and appearing defendants, including the Bank of Cyprus that required their motion to dismiss to be filed by July 9, 2004, answering papers by August 13, 2004 and reply papers by September 10, 2004. Although the docket reflects a formal reassignment of the case to me on August 13, 2004, I wrote to the parties on June 21, 2004 advising them that the case had been reassigned to me. I held a conference on the record on July 13, 2004. It was the plaintiff's one and only appearance before me. As the transcript reflects, it was routine and dealt principally with scheduling matters. I left standing Chief Judge Mukasey's deadline of August 13 for plaintiff's answering brief to the Bank of Cyprus motion to dismiss but accelerated the date for the defendant's reply brief to August 27. At plaintiff's request, I ordered one defendant's counsel to provide addresses of four individuals, to the extent known, who had not been served.

On August 23, 2004, plaintiff sought leave to file a motion to supplement his complaint. In the Mem. & Order, I granted plaintiff's motion to strike certain exhibits from the record on the motion to dismiss and granted plaintiff leave to file the Supplemental Complaint. As supplemented, I granted defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint.

In plaintiff's motion to disqualify, he argues that statements made in the course of the Mem. & Order display bias and lack of impartiality. The first statement referenced by plaintiff was a comment upon the 147-page length of plaintiff's answering brief and the erroneous assertion that the length of the brief violated my Individual Practices. The comment appears in footnote 1 (Mem. & Order at 1) and reads in full as follows:

Separate motion papers were filed by defendants Mundy, Petrovich, Henning and the Bank of Cyprus. Defendants Paulsen, Shipilina, Cybertech and the Flash Dancers defendants filed papers joining, to the extent applicable, the motion filed by the Mundy defendants, and in some cases filed separate reply papers. Defendants also filed various affidavits attempting to put certain exhibits before the Court. In opposition to the motions, plaintiff, without prior consent of the Court and in contravention of my Individual Practices, filed a 147-page memorandum of law, along with an affidavit and exhibits, and a Motion to Strike certain material contained in defendants' affidavits. I find it unnecessary to consider any materials outside the Complaint in deciding the motions to dismiss and I grant plaintiff's Motion to Strike.

The fact that a brief of such length was filed by plaintiff had bearing on whether plaintiff had a full and fair opportunity to advance his arguments and also on the issue of whether the Court, on its own motion, should grant plaintiff leave to further replead. The Mem. & Order erroneously asserted that the 147-page plaintiff's memorandum violated the page limits in my Individual Practices; those page limits were inapplicable to plaintiff because the brief had been filed while the case was still before Chief Judge Mukasey, who does not impose page limits. Plaintiff's memorandum was, of course, carefully reviewed and considered in deciding the motions in the Mem. & Order but my comment on page limits was both erroneous and superfluous. The opinion will be amended to delete the inaccurate phrase. A reasonable person could not view the comment as evidencing bias or prejudice on my part against plaintiff.

Plaintiff also points to another comment that he asserts betrays bias—a reference to the fact that the alleged enterprise “spans the globe.” This phrase, in his view, is a form of judicial adoption of the ridicule with which his allegations were treated by defendants. My full statement, the first sentence in the Mem. & Order, reads in full as follows: “Plaintiff Roy Den Hollander ("Den Hollander") brings this action pro se against what he alleges to be a criminal enterprise that spans the globe, from New York to Russia to Chechnya to Cyprus to Mexico. " In my view, it is a brief, accurate and non-perjorative introduction to a description of his allegations. It reflects no bias or prejudice to a reasonable person.

Plaintiff's motion to disqualify also takes me to task for writing that "few, if any, of the events set forth in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened." In context, the words I wrote referenced defendants' argument premised upon the factual plausibility of plaintiff's allegations. I flat-out rejected this argument and noted that "[i]t is axiomatic that in deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the Court must accept all factual allegations as true and draw all inferences in favor of plaintiff." (Mem. & Order at 6) The words I wrote are plain and clearly communicated a rejection—not an embrace—of this particular argument by defendants:

Although defendants object to the proposed Supplemental Complaint on the grounds that few, if any, of the events set forth in the Supplemental Complaint every really happened (see Letter from Jack Sachs dated August 30, 2004 at 1), it is not the Court's role at this stage of the litigation to assess the truth or validity of plaintiff's allegations, no matter how fanciful they appear or how difficult they may be to prove. I grant plaintiff leave to file the Supplemental Complaint and, in reviewing the adequacy of plaintiff's pleadings on these motions to dismiss, I will consider the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint.

No reasonable person could conclude that these comments reflect bias or prejudice on my part against plaintiff.

Plaintiff also asserts that he was unfairly criticized for drafting his Supplemental Complaint "with the defendants' motion to dismiss in hand. . . ." (Mem. & Order at 5)

What I wrote was as follows:

The Supplemental Complaint, drafted with defendants' motions to dismiss in hand, consists of allegations of additional "predicate acts," including the continued harassment of and interference with plaintiff as a result of his investigation of the Enterprise and its Scheme, and defendant Shipilina's obstruction of justice by filing false and misleading documents in this case. The only allegation in the Supplemental Complaint relating to causation and damages is that "[t]he Enterprise's additional illegal activities recounted in this supplemental complaint have increased the harm to the plaintiff's business and property by causing loss of profits, business interruption expenses, loss of business opportunities and damage to the plaintiff's reputation and good will in the amount of $100,000." (footnote and citation omitted)

The point cannot reasonably be viewed as criticism of plaintiff. Plaintiff is correct that there is nothing inappropriate with seeking to cure a pleading deficiency called to one's attention by an opposing party. My comment was a legitimate observation that bore on the propriety of holding plaintiff to his allegations and not granting him further lead to replead. Plaintiff, a member of the bar of this Court, was fully aware of the asserted pleading deficiencies raised in the motion to dismiss and, with those assertions in hand, he sought to supplement his complaint. Yet, the supplemental pleading added nothing of material significance to cure the deficiencies in his allegations. The shortcomings in the pleading were not likely to have been the product of oversight but rather the inability to truthfully allege more. The observation was a fair comment upon the procedural history of the case and no reasonable person would conclude that it displayed bias or prejudice against plaintiff.

Whether taken separately or as a whole, none of the grounds asserted by plaintiff would lead a reasonable person, aware of all of the facts, to question the judge's impartiality. The statements, observations and, most importantly, rulings, expressed in the Mem. & Order were all based upon the pleadings, arguments and authorities submitted or cited to the Court and not upon any extra-judicial source.

As an alternative, plaintiff seeks disqualification on the basis of 28 U.S.C. § 144, which reads in full as follows:

It did not say this

Costel
w affect breaking supp complaint as as unwarranted
and

How does it know to reference
say 20?

Whenever a party to any proceeding in a district court makes and files a timely and sufficient affidavit that the judge before whom the matter is pending has a personal bias or prejudice either against him or in favor of any adverse party, such judge shall proceed no further therein, but another judge shall be assigned to hear such proceeding.

The affidavit shall state the facts and the reasons for the belief that bias or prejudice exists, and shall be filed not less than ten days before the beginning of the term at which the proceeding is to be heard, or good cause shall be shown for failure to file it within such time. A party may file only one such affidavit in any case. It shall be accompanied by a certificate of counsel of record stating that it is made in good faith.

Section 144 requires the timely filing of an affidavit of bias, i.e. actual personal bias or prejudice. No affidavit of any kind has been filed by plaintiff in support of the motion. While plaintiff is proceeding pro se, he is a lawyer and member of the bar of this Court. The election not to file an affidavit can most reasonably be viewed as a conscious choice on his part. Because section 144 has not been properly triggered, I need not refrain from proceeding and have no reason to assign the motion to another judge of the Court.

The motion to disqualify is denied.

SO ORDERED.

ORDER

P. KEVIN CASTEL, U.S.D.J.

Plaintiff moves to reconsider my Memorandum and Order of September 28, 2004. His principal argument is that the Court failed to consider his 147-page memorandum in opposition to the motion to dismiss. Contrary to plaintiff's assumption, it was thoroughly and carefully considered by the Court.

Although I considered plaintiff's memorandum, I incorrectly stated that it violated the page limits in my Individual Practices. Accordingly, footnote 1, page 1, of my Memorandum and Order is amended to delete the phrase " , without prior consent of the Court and in contravention of my Individual Practices,". As amended, it reads as follows:

Separate motion papers were filed by defendants Mundy, Petrovich, Henning and the Bank of Cyprus. Defendants Paulsen, Shipilina, Cybertech and the Flash Dancers defendants filed papers joining, to the extent applicable, the motion filed by the Mundy defendants, and in some cases filed separate reply papers. Defendants also filed various affidavits attempting to put certain exhibits before the Court. In opposition to the motions, plaintiff filed a 147-page memorandum of law, along with an affidavit and exhibits, and a Motion to Strike certain material contained in defendants' affidavits. I find it unnecessary to consider any materials outside the Complaint in deciding the motions to dismiss and I grant plaintiff's Motion to Strike.

Except insofar as the above amendment is ordered, the motion to reconsider is denied.

Dear Judge Castel:

There is an unfinished cost issue in this case concerning reimburse to me for service of process under Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(5) caused by the defendants failure to respond to a request for waiver of service under Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d). (July 13, 2004 Status Conference Tr. ln 24, p. 8 to ln 12, p. 9.)

You may recall that in your Endorsed Letter Order entered July 8, 2005, you stated that I should raise this issue within ten days of issuance of the Second Circuit's mandate. That mandate will issue on February 24, 2006, and I will be petitioning the U.S. Supreme Court for certiorari.

In accordance with the July Order, I am requesting an instruction from this Court directing the defendants to reimburse me for service of process. The amounts owed by each are listed below and documented in the Plaintiff's Status Report, which was served on June 29, 2004 and sent to your chambers in preparation for the July 13, 2004 status conference.

Re: Hollander v. Flash Dancers, etc., et al.
Docket No. 03-cv-2717 (PKC)

Dear Judge Castel:

We represent Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. d/b/a "Flash Dancers" (s/h/a "Flash Dancers Topless Club"), Lynn Lepofsky, "Barry - Night Manager Flash Dancers" and "Flash Dancers Managers 1 - 5" (collectively, the "Flash Dancers defendants"), and submit this letter pursuant to Your Honor's endorsement dated April 4, 2006 on plaintiff's letter to the Court dated February 17, 2006.

Plaintiff seeks to recover costs of service on certain of the Flash Dancers defendants, pursuant to F.R.Civ.P. 4(d), as follows:

(1)	Flash Dancers Topless Club	$55
(2)	Jay-Jay Cabaret Inc.	$55
(3)	Lynn H. Lepofsky	$35
(4)	Barry - Night Manager, etc.	$55

Plaintiff also seeks to recover his costs for "copying of complaint" ($127.30), and "taxi to process server" ($6.20). These costs are not apportioned among the various defendants.

We do not believe that plaintiff should be entitled to recover costs for naming and "serving" a non-existent entity, namely "Flash Dancers Topless Club." Any reasonable investigation would have revealed to plaintiff that "Flash Dancers" is merely the trade name (and Federally registered trademark) of Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., and that it was utterly inappropriate to name and serve "Flash Dancers Topless Club" as a defendant in this action (in addition to naming and serving both the corporation itself and its principal, Ms. Lepofsky).

We also do not believe that the costs of "copying of complaint" and "taxi to process server" are recoverable pursuant to Rule 4(d). Rule 4(d)(2) provides that it is the costs "subsequently incurred in effecting service" that are recoverable. The costs of making copies and taking a taxi to the process server are not costs incurred in "effecting service," e.g., the charges billed to the plaintiff by the process server.

Accordingly, we believe that plaintiff could, at most, recover $145 for serving Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Ms. Lepofsky and "Barry."

However, the Flash Dancers defendants are entitled to an offset, against this sum, on account of a Bill of Costs granted by the Court of Appeals in favor of the Flash Dancers defendants and against plaintiff in the sum of $331.63 (copy enclosed).

We moved for leave to file a Bill of Costs in the Court of Appeals "out of time" on February 23, 2006. Plaintiff then moved to impose sanctions on us for making this motion and to deny it. By full panel Order dated March 15, 2006, the Court of Appeals denied plaintiff's motion.* Thereafter by Order dated April 11, 2006, the Court granted our motion. A certified statement of the Costs was thereafter transmitted by the Court of Appeals to the District Court on April 12, 2006.

Therefore, assuming, arguendo, that plaintiff is entitled to recover $145, on account of services of process on Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Ms. Lepofsky and "Barry," and to credit that amount against the Flash Dancers defendants' Bill of Costs, the net due to the Flash Dancers defendants is $186.63, which plaintiff should be directed to pay at this time.

Respectfully,

Edward S. Rudofsky

Re: Client: Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich Matter: Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Docket No.: 03 CV 2717

Honorable Sir:

Our office represents defendants-appellees Kuba, Mundy & Associates ("Kuba Mundy"), Nicholas J. Mundy ("Mr. Mundy") and Peter Petrovich ("Mr. Petrovich") (collectively, "defendants") in connection with the above referenced matter.

I am in receipt of plaintiff-appellant Roy Den Hollander's ("plaintiff") February 17, 2006 letter application seeking service of process costs in the amount of $35 from Mr. Mundy, $35 from Kuba Mundy and $141 from Mr. Petrovich arising out of their alleged failure to acknowledge service of plaintiff's complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d). Your Honor's Order dated April 4, 2006 indicates that defendants should submit a written response by April 18, 2006. Kindly allow this correspondence to service as our formal response.

Fed R. Civ. P. 4(d)(2) indicates that, to avoid costs associated with service of the summons, plaintiff may notify defendants of commencement of the action and request that defendants waive service of a summons. The notice and request:

(A) shall be in writing and shall be addressed directly to the defendant, if an individual, or else to an officer or managing or general agent (or other agent authorized by appointment or law to receive service of process) of a defendant subject to service under subdivision (h);

(B) shall be dispatched through first-class mail or other reliable means;

(C) shall be accompanied by a copy of the complaint and shall identify the court in which has been filed;

(D) shall inform the defendant, by means of a text prescribed in an official form promulgated pursuant to Rule 84, of the consequences of compliance and of a failure to comply with the request;

(E) shall set forth the date on which the request is sent;

(F) shall allow the defendant a reasonable time to return the waiver, which shall be at least 30 days from the date on which the request is sent, or 60 days from that date if the defendant is addressed outside any judicial district of the United States; and

(G) shall provide the defendant with an extra copy of the notice and request, as well as a prepaid means of compliance in writing.

Additionally, Fed R. Civ. P. 4(d)(2) indicates that "[i]f a defendant...fails to comply with a request for waiver made by a plaintiff... the court shall impose the costs subsequently incurred in effecting service on the defendant unless good cause for the failure be shown."

Plaintiff's letter application provides absolutely no details or supporting documentation and utterly fails to satisfy the burden of demonstrating that plaintiff served a waiver of service upon defendants, that defendants failed to respond, that plaintiff complied with the aforementioned procedures designated under Fed R. Civ. P. 4(d)(2)(A)-(G) and that plaintiff incurred additional costs by defendants' alleged failure to respond.

Furthermore, on September 28, 2004, plaintiff's complaint was dismissed with prejudice. See Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al., 340 F. Supp.2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2004). Plaintiff subsequently moved for reconsideration, which was denied. The dismissal of this action with prejudice was thereafter affirmed by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit ("Second Circuit"). See Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al., 2006 WL 267148 (2d Cir. 2006). Logic dictates that plaintiff should not be entitled to recover costs of serving a frivolous action, which has been dismissed with prejudice and affirmed by the Second Circuit.

Moreover, in respect to Mr. Petrovich, plaintiff's complaint was never served upon him. This issue was raised in defendants' motion to dismiss. Plaintiff contended during this lawsuit that he attempted to serve Mr. Petrovich at his "actual place of business" with a follow-up mailing to his "actual place of business" pursuant to N.Y. Civ. Prac. L. & R. §308(2)<sup>1</sup>. Plaintiff served the complaint upon Mr. Petrovich at the office of Kuba Mundy located at 321 Broadway, New York, New York 10007. Mr. Petrovich, however never maintained his place of business at the office of Kuba Mundy located at 321 Broadway, New York, New York 10007. Mr. Petrovich has never been an employee of Kuba Mundy, but rather, merely served as a translator for the law firm on occasion. Mr. Petrovich attested to the foregoing in an affidavit before this Court in connection with defendants' motion to dismiss. This provides yet another reason for denying plaintiff's request for costs from Mr. Petrovich.

Thank you for your consideration. If you have any questions, I remain available at the Court's convenience.

Respectfully submitted,

Bradley E. Dubin

Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (PKC), Second Circuit 04-6700-CV

Dear Judge Castel:

Pursuant to your order of April 4, 2006, this is the plaintiff's reply to the Flash Dancers defendants' objection to reimbursing the plaintiff for service of process under Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(5) as a result of Flash Dancers' failure to respond to a request for waiver of service under Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d).

Flash Dancers claims that the costs for copying the complaint and transportation to deliver the summonses and complaints to the plaintiff's process server are not recoverable under Rule 4(d). The attorney for Flash Dancers, Edward S. Rudofsky, wrongly attributed Rule 4(d)(2) for the quote used on page 2 of his letter. The pertinent part of Rule 4(d)(2) actually states the defendant "has a duty to avoid unnecessary costs of serving the summons" while Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(5) states:

"The costs to be imposed on a defendant under paragraph (2) for failure to comply with a request to waive service of a summons shall include the costs subsequently incurred in effecting service ... together with the costs, including a reasonable attorney's fee, of any motion required to collect the costs of service."

Any reasonable research into the meaning of "costs" in Rules 4(d)(2) & 4(d)(5) would have revealed to Flash Dancers' attorney that "In order to encourage utilization of [waiver of service], current subdivision (d) follows former Rule 4(c)(2)(D) by assessing the defendant for those costs that could have been avoided if the defendant had cooperated reasonably in the manner of service prescribed by the waiver provision." Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc., Civ. 3d § 1092.1.

Flash Dancers and all the appearing defendants first received a copy of the complaint as part of the plaintiff's request for waiver of service of summons. Flash Dancers chose to ignore the request thereby necessitating that the plaintiff make another set of copies to be served with the summons. Had Flash Dancers and the other defendants abided by the Rule, the plaintiff would have avoided the costs of 13 additional copies and transportation to Gotham Process Service.

Federal district courts have required reimbursement for copying and related costs for serving process when waiver has been refused. In Kennemer v. Jefferson Autoplex, L.L.C., 2004 WL 1291185 *1 (E.D.La.), the court approved costs for copying and postage, and in Graves v. Church of Apostolic Faith, Inc., 2003 WL 21659168 *1 (E.D.Pa.), the court required reimbursement for copying and courier service. Fairness requires that a person who causes another additional and unnecessary expenses in effecting service ought to reimburse the party who was forced to bear the additional costs.

The Flash Dancers' defendants also object that no apportionment was made of the copying and taxi costs. In order to apportion the copying costs, their attorney can simply divide the number of copies served on them by the total number of copies served on all defendants as a result of denials of waiver and multiply that fraction times the total cost. The Flash Dancers defendants were served with four copies and the total number of copies served on all defendants was thirteen. Four thirteenths of $127.30 equals $39.17. As for the cost of taking the taxi to Gotham Process Service, the defendants can apportion that however they wish.

Flash Dancers' attorney additionally objects that "Flash Dancers Topless Club" is a "non-existent entity." When the summons was served, however, it was the name on the signs of the strip bar. Exhibit A. The exact connection between the strip club and Jay-Jay Cabaret was initially unclear. The New York State Division of Corporation did not have, and still does not have, any listing for Flash Dancers. In addition, its Jay-Jay Cabaret listing did not, and still does not, show any connection to the Flash Dancers Topless Club on Broadway. Exhibit B. Service of process on Flash Dancers Topless Club was done in order to avoid a future dispute over adequacy of service.

Flash Dancers' attorney further argues that whatever amount this Court allows for reimbursement should be offset against the amount stated in the Second Circuit's decision to allow Flash Dancers to file late its bill of costs. Mr. Rudofsky, however, failed to provide this Court with the full and accurate procedural status of Flash Dancers' bill of cost motion. True, he included an easy-to-overlook footnote on page 2 of his letter, but even that is not fully explanatory.

The plaintiff filed a motion requesting the Second Circuit consider for rehearing en banc that Flash Dancers' failed to demonstrate good cause<sup>1</sup> for filing its bill of costs late as required by the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure and decisions by the Courts of Appeals. The motion requesting the Second Circuit to consider whether to rehear en banc the panel's decision was granted on April 11, 2006. Exhibit C. There has been no decision yet as to whether the petition for rehearing en banc will be granted or denied. Therefore, contrary to Flash Dancers' representations, there is still no final decision on its bill of costs motion.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Southern District Court of New York, CV-03-2717 (PKC), Second Circuit 04-6700-CV

Dear Judge Castel:

Pursuant to your order of April 4, 2006, this is the plaintiff's reply to the objection of defendants Kuba, Mundy & Associates ("Kuba Mundy"), Nicholas J. Mundy ("Mundy") and Peter Petrovich ("Petrovich") reimbursing the plaintiff for service of process under Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d)(5), which was caused by the defendants' failure to respond to a request for waiver of service under Fed. R. Civ. P. 4(d).

Bradley E. Dubin has represented the above defendants throughout this case and, assuming he has not lost all or most of the papers submitted, has in his files all the "details or supporting documentation," Dubin Letter, April 11, 2006, p. 2, that show the plaintiff has complied with Rule 4(d)(2). Mr. Dubin's clients chose to ignore their "duty to avoid unnecessary costs of serving the summons," Rule 4(d)(2), and now Mr. Dubin chooses to ignore his duty not to conceal or knowingly fail to disclose pertinent information to this Court, especially when he knows the details and supporting documentation he claims do not exist lie in his filing cabinets. See In re Santangelo, 265 A.D.2d 69, 701 N.Y.S.2d 355, 357 (A.D. 1 Dept. 2000)(charges against lawyer "relate[d] more to non-disclosure rather than to the making of affirmatively false or misleading statements....").

Mr. Dubin received, as part of the Plaintiff's Status Report required by your honor for the July 13, 2004 status conference and with the Exhibits to Plaintiff's Opposition to Motions to Dismiss, the affidavits of mailing and manifold certificates of mailing, Exhibit A, of the documents required to be served on the defendants under Rule 4(d)(2). Mr. Dubin also received in the Plaintiff's Status Report the costs of service by Gotham Process Service that the plaintiff incurred by the defendants failure to respond to the waiver of service request. Exhibit B.

Mr. Dubin's objection also falsely implies his clients did respond to the waiver of service request by stating the plaintiff fails to show that the "defendants failed to respond." The plaintiff, a lawyer admitted to this Court, affirms the defendants did not respond; therefore, the burden shifts to Mr. Dubin's clients to show they did. Mr. Dubin's clients can do that by producing copies of the signed and dated Notice of Lawsuit and Request for Waiver of Service of Summons provided each defendant plus an affidavit that it was placed in the U.S. Postal system.

Mr. Dubin wrongly claims that plaintiff "attempted" to serve Petrovich and cites as support plaintiff's memorandum of law, pp. 137-38, in opposition to defendants' motion to dismiss. The memorandum states no such thing; rather it states that under New York law, Petrovich was served.

In New York, the filing of an affidavit of proof of service is prima facie evidence that service was proper and shifts to the defendant the burden of proving that service was defective. See Nolan v. City of Yonkers, 168 F.R.D. 140, 144 (SDNY 1995). The affidavit of service on Petrovich was filed with the Court's clerk and is attached as Exhibit C. Mr. Dubin responds that Petrovich "merely served as a translator" for Kuba Mundy, "has never been an employee" and "never maintained his place of business" at that law firm's address. (Dubin Letter, April 11, 2006, pp 2-3). Mr. Dubin uses as support for his statements an affidavit by Petrovich but failed to provide it as an exhibit to his letter. Moreover, the self-serving nature of Petrovich's affidavit makes it suspect when considered in connection with the affidavit of Alan Flacks who is not a party to this action. The attached affidavit of Mr. Flacks, Exhibit D, states that when he called the Kuba Mundy law firm on November 17, 2003 and ask for Petrovich, a female with the first name of Svetlana, told Mr. Flacks that Petrovich was no longer working at the office but from his home. Id. ¶¶ 1-4. Petrovich, therefore, had worked in the Kuba Mundy office at 321 Broadway at some prior point in time.

Under New York CPLR 308(2), process can be served by delivering the papers to a person of suitable age at the defendant's "actual place of business" and followed with a mailing of the papers by first class U.S. post to that address. The process server delivered and mailed the Complaint and Summons to Petrovich at the Kuba, Mundy law firm at 321 Broadway on June 10 and 11, 2003 respectively. Exhibit C. No one told the process server that Petrovich did not work there, and the mailing of the papers was not returned as undeliverable. Further, an envelope mailed to Petrovich at the law firm by first class U.S. post on April 20, 2003, which contained the request for a waiver of summons and the Complaint, Exhibit A, was also not returned as undeliverable. The inference is that Petrovich was working at Kuba Mundy when service occurred.

In addition, New York State CPLR 308(6) provides that a defendant's "actual place of business" is any location that the defendant publicly holds out as his place of business. Such a location includes the place where the defendant receives business correspondence although it need not be the same place where the defendant conducts business activities. See 1994 Report of the Adv. Comm. on Civ. Prac., reprinted in 2 McKinney's N.Y. Session Laws, 1994, at 3027, 3032. On December 5, 2003, Mr. Flacks telephoned the Kuba Mundy office and was told first by a gentlemen named Yi Feng and then by a female with the first name of Stephanie that any business correspondence for Petrovich should be sent to the law firm at 321 Broadway. Exhibit D, Flacks's Affidavit ¶¶ 5-8. Since Petrovich was receiving business correspondence at Kuba Mundy as late as December 2003, the inference is that he was also receiving business mail there when the waiver of service was mailed April 20, 2003 and the follow-up service mailing was made on June 11, 2003. All of which means Petrovich was served.

Finally, Mr. Dubin claims that his "logic dictates that plaintiff should not be entitled to recover costs of serving a frivolous action, which has been dismissed with prejudice and affirmed by the Second Circuit." (Dubin Letter, April 11, 2006, pp 2). There's been no finding by any court that this civil RICO action is frivolous. Mr. Dubin's brand of logic is not the law. The Advisory Committee Notes for the 1993 Amendments to Rule 4(d)(2)(B) state:

"A defendant failing to comply with a request for waiver shall be given an opportunity to show good cause for the failure, but sufficient cause should be rare. It is not good cause for failure to waive service that the claim is unjust...."

The plaintiff requests this Court deny Mr. Dubin's objection and require his clients to reimburse the plaintiff for costs of the service of process.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

ROY DEN HOLLANDER,

Plaintiff,

-against-

FLASH DANCERS TOPLESS CLUB, et al.,

Defendants.

03 Civ. 2717 (PKC)

ORDER

P. KEVIN CASTEL, U.S.D.J.

This action was commenced on April 18, 2003. On September 28, 2004, I granted defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint. On September 30, 2004, Final Judgment was entered by the Clerk dismissing the case with prejudice. On October 25, 2004, plaintiff filed a Notice of Appeal.

On July 13, 2004, prior to Final Judgment, plaintiff raised the issue of recovery of the costs of service and was advised by the Court that the issue would not be taken up at that juncture but plaintiff was invited "to remind the court of the issue the next time we get together." On June 21, 2005, over eight months after entry of Final Judgment, plaintiff wrote to this Court regarding the costs of service. By Order signed July 7, 2005, I instructed the plaintiff to raise the issue of costs within ten (10) days of the issuance of the mandate by the Court of Appeals. The mandate was issued on February 27, 2006 and filed with the district court on February 28, 2006. Plaintiff wrote to this Court on February 17, 2006, i.e., before the issuance of the mandate, to address the issue of costs, and on April 10, 2006, I entered an Order directing defendants to show cause why judgment should not be entered against certain defendants for the costs of service.

Rule 4(d), Fed. R. Civ. P., provides a regime in which a plaintiff may mail to a defendant a form of waiver of service of process, giving the defendant the opportunity to avoid the costs of service of process by returning the signed waiver. If a defendant elects not to waive service, then Rule 4(d)(2) provides that in certain instances the plaintiff may recover the costs of service:

If a defendant located within the United States fails to comply with a request for waiver made by a plaintiff located within the United States, the court shall impose the costs subsequently incurred in effecting service on the defendant unless good cause for the failure be shown.

There are thirteen persons and entities listed in plaintiff's letter of February 17, 2005. I will grant defendant's motion as to eleven of the thirteen defendants.

Defendant Bob Henning has paid the cost of service on or about March 2, 2006 and plaintiff has not further challenged the amount of payment. All further relief as to defendant Henning is denied.

With respect to "Flash Dancers Topless Club" plaintiff has failed to establish the existence of a juridical entity by that name. It is merely the trade name of an entity, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., which is the subject of an application for costs of service in its own right. All relief as to "Flash Dancers Topless Club" is denied.

With respect to the remaining eleven defendants, plaintiff may recover the amount listed in the right hand column next to the party's name on Mr. Den Hollander's letter of February 17, 2006 (the amounts range from $35 to $175). As to these eleven defendants, I will also allow plaintiff to recover one-thirteenth of the costs of photocopying ($127.60) and the costs of a taxi ($6.20) for a total of $133.80 allocated in the following manner: $133.80 divided by 13 equals $10.30 equals one defendants share for each of the eleven defendants, i.e. those listed in the February 17 letter other than Henning and Flash Dancers.

The Clerk is direct to enter judgment in accordance with the foregoing.

SO ORDERED.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Defendants-Appellees, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy (collectively "Mundy") and Peter Petrovich ("Petrovich"), by their attorneys, McManus, Collura & Richter, P.C., submit this Brief in opposition to Plaintiff-Appellant, Roy Den Hollander's ("Hollander"), appeal of the final Order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (the "District Court"), Castel, J., Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al., 340 F. Supp.2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2004), which dismissed Hollander's Complaint and Supplemental Complaint with prejudice (the "Order"), together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

STATEMENT OF ISSUES

1. Whether the District Court correctly dismissed Hollander's Complaint and Supplemental Complaint with prejudice pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) after determining that he failed to adequately allege the causation and injury necessary to sustain his claims for violation of the civil enforcement provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§1961-1968?

2. Whether Hollander failed to adequately allege the other constituent elements necessary to establish his claims against Mundy and Petrovich for violation of the civil enforcement provisions of RICO?

3. Whether the District Court correctly denied Hollander the opportunity to continue his vexatious and abusive litigation tactics by filing an Amended Complaint, which would have been futile and resulted in continued harassment and needless expense to the parties and the Court?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Hollander, a licensed attorney, commenced this action pro se against 63 separate domestic and foreign Defendants spanning the globe, from the United States to Russia to Chechnya to Cyprus to Mexico, including his former wife, her mother, associates and divorce lawyers, exotic dancing clubs, members of alleged organized crime groups, modeling and escort agencies, a Cypriot bank and a New York City police detective. Various other Defendants are identified by partial name or by fictitious designation (i.e. "Maria-Prostitute Recruiter for Julia Heart Agency," "Krasnodar Briber 1," "California Pimp," "Albatross Club Gangster #1") (A 23-24<sup>1</sup>).

Hollander's Complaint, consisting of 915 separately numbered allegations and in excess of ninety pages (A 23-113), alleges a criminal enterprise of purported illegal activity among the Defendants, including, but not limited to, drug trafficking, money laundering, immigration fraud, prostitution, pornography, extortion and fraud, aimed at infiltrating and expanding its unlawful and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets (especially the United States) in violation of the RICO statute (A 24-26, 110 ¶¶1-2, 13, 15, 886-893). Hollander also alleges state law claims against various Defendants (A 111 ¶¶894-899). Hollander's brief clarifies that the Defendants allegedly represent a segment of the Russian mafia.

Hollander's narrative resembles a delusional, imaginary, tale of fantasy that reads more like a fanciful fiction novel than a legal pleading. At the very best, Hollander's Complaint can be characterized as a frivolous, circuitous attempt to utilize this forum to re-litigate his divorce from his ex-wife, and, at the same time, humiliate her and seemingly anyone who has ever come in contact with her or assisted her in preventing him from harassing her. In fact, the filing of the instant action was, at the time, just another customary act by Hollander in furtherance of his personal vendetta against his ex-wife, and anyone in contact with her. Each and every one of his previous efforts, including the filing of baseless reports, complaints and legal actions against his ex-wife and the purported mafia, requests for orders of protection, an application to have his divorce settlement set-aside, the filing of a defamation action in Russia against his former mother-in-law and the filing of an improper grievance against his ex-wife's attorneys, were all rebuffed by the Queens Police Department, the New York City Police Department ("NYPD"), the Krasnodar Police Department, the Federal Bureau of Investigation ("FBI"), the Immigration Naturalization Services ("INS"), the New York City Board of Elections, the United States Attorneys Office, the Queens District Attorneys Office, the First Department Disciplinary Committee ("Disciplinary Committee"), the New York County Supreme and Family Courts, the District Court or the Russian Courts.

All appearing Defendants moved to dismiss Hollander's Complaint (A 132, D 21-24, 26, 28-29, 49, 53-55, 62-66, 78). In opposition, Hollander submitted another mountain of paper, nearly two hundred pages in length. Simultaneously, Hollander submitted a nine page Supplemental Complaint consisting of an additional seventy-seven separately numbered allegations (A 114-122). The District Court rendered an extensive seventeen page decision dismissing the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint with prejudice, holding that Hollander did not have standing because he failed to allege the requisite injury and causation necessary to sustain his RICO claims (A 131-147). The District Court refused to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the state law claims (A 131-147).

Hollander then shifted his anger, at least momentarily, to the District Court by moving for the recusal of Judge Castel and for reconsideration of his Order (D 90-93). Hollander's motions were denied by the District Court (D 100-101).

After noticing fifty-one issues to be addressed on appeal (D 102-103), Hollander now submits his brief before this Court lashing out again at the District Court (even calling it a "liar") (Hollander Brief pp. 46, 54) and simply reiterating the same conclusory statements and bald speculation, conjecture, suspicions and gigantic leaps of logic already insufficiently contained in his Complaint, Supplemental Complaint, opposition to the motion to dismiss, motions for recusal and reconsideration and his countless reports and complaints to various Courts and law enforcement agencies. In fact, Hollander's rendition of the facts set forth in his brief is no different than the facts already set forth in his pleadings and which the District Court relied upon in dismissing the action. (Hollander Brief pp. 2-8).

Hollander's systematic abuse of the legal system, which has persisted for many years, must finally be stopped and his request that the District Court's Order be vacated must be denied.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

A. Identification of Mundy and Petrovich

Mundy is a small "general practice" law firm with an emphasis on immigration law. Mundy defended Hollander's former wife, Alina Shipilina ("Shipilina"), in the divorce/annulment proceedings commenced by Hollander, as well as against his relentless course of harassment that followed once the divorce proceedings were resolved. Mundy continues to represent Shipilina in immigration matters pending before the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.<sup>2</sup>

B. Facts Underlying The Complaint as Alleged and Admitted by Hollander

I. Hollander Meets Shipilina; Marries Her; and Investigates Her

Hollander is a middle-aged American lawyer who arrived in Russia in July 1999 (A 35 ¶128). He lived and worked in Russia throughout 1999 and 2000 (A 35 ¶128). While living in Russia, Hollander met "a tall, blue-eyed, bleached blonde" woman, Shipilina, sometime in the late summer of 1999 (A 35 ¶130).

Shipilina is alleged to be a lucrative member of an enterprise of illegal activity "by running prostitution, aiding pornography rings, laundering money, smuggling drugs and building relationships among Russian, Chechen and American organized crime groups" (A 28 ¶36). Hollander alleges that Shipilina, and other member of the enterprise, "decided to target plaintiff as part of the Enterprise's ongoing Scheme to infiltrate and expand its operations in the U.S" (A 36 ¶135), and that, by "win[ning] the devotion and cloud[ing] the mind of the plaintiff by secretly feeding him narcotics" (A 36 ¶137), they would "use the plaintiff as an unwitting means for...Shipilina to fraudulently enter America where she would participate in expanding the Enterprise's activities" (A 36 ¶136).

Hollander proposed to Shipilina on January 31, 2000 (A 45 ¶239). In February 2000, Hollander and Shipilina set March 2000 as their anticipated wedding date (A 39 ¶173). In or around March 2000, Hollander alleges that he first began to sense that his soon to be wife was being dishonest with him, secretly slipping narcotics into his meals and pretending to be something she was not in order to marry him so that she could enter the United States (A 39 ¶174).

Nonetheless, Hollander married Shipilina in Russia on March 11, 2000 (A 40 ¶182). In June 2000, Hollander and Shipilina separated after he learned of her alleged adultery, and he returned to New York from Russia without her (A 42 ¶¶198-199). They later reunited after he forgave her (A 42 ¶¶204, 206), but according to Hollander, he was still unaware of her true profession (A 42 ¶198). Hollander then brought his wife to America in July 2000 (A 42 ¶205).

Hollander alleges that Shipilina began working as a lap-dancer, joined her cohorts in prostitution and continued to drug his food in order to deter him from seeking an annulment/divorce throughout July and August 2000 (A 34 ¶¶213-216). Hollander alleges that it was at this time that he became aware of the nature of his wife's profession, and that he was being used for immigration purposes (A 43 ¶¶213-220).

In August 2000 and for the following year, Hollander "launched an investigation that continues to the present day and ended up diverting him from his law and consulting business for two years" (A 43 ¶217). His investigation into his wife's affairs took place in both the United States and abroad. In fact, his fascination took him as far as Krasnodar, Russia (A 43, 47 ¶¶217, 256-260). Hollander even commenced a defamation action in Russia against Shipilina's mother, Inessa Shipilina ("Inessa"), which was later closed (A 49-51 ¶¶285, 298, 303).

In late October 2000, Hollander alleges to have met with Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina to arrange for a separation (A 44 ¶¶222-223). Significantly, Mundy's representation of Shipilina in this divorce proceeding is the very first time that Mundy and Petrovich are alleged to have had any interaction with Shipilina, or any other Defendants in this action (A 23-122). Hollander acknowledges that Mundy and Petrovich were merely representing Shipilina in her separation and ultimate divorce (A 44 ¶223, D 44 p. 20).

In December 2000, Shipilina filed a report against Hollander indicating that he attempted to extort money from her otherwise he would have her deported back to Russia (D 21, Ex. D).<sup>3</sup>

In December 2000, Hollander and Shipilina formally separated (A 44 ¶221). Shipilina was compelled to obtain an order of protection against her husband due to his conduct (A 45 ¶¶234, 239).

ii Attempted Annulment; Divorce; and Subsequent Litigation

Thereafter, Hollander commenced an annulment proceeding against Shipilina in or around February 2001 (A 46 ¶242). The attempted annulment was unsuccessful and Hollander, instead, pursued divorce.

As a result of his desire to terminate the marriage, Hollander alleges that his wife's attorneys, Mundy, NYPD Detective Henning and others filed false documents and reports with the INS and NYPD, and engaged, with the assistance of other Defendants (the "Barev Islamic Terror and Crime Clan," the "Aspyan Criminal Association" and other "gangsters"), in a campaign of intimidation and threats of violence (aided by the payment of bribes to public officials in the United States and Krasnodar) to prevent him from "providing testimony to any U.S. authorities, including the New York divorce court" and the INS regarding Shipilina's immigration status and the Defendants' illegal activities (A 44-52 ¶¶220-319)<sup>4</sup>.

space refers to the page number or numbers of that document. The subsequent abbreviation "Ex. _" with a letter in the blank space refers to the exhibit attached to that document.

<sup>4</sup> The divorce Complaint alleged prostitution, drug use and fraud against Shipilina and sought to end their marriage on the basis of fraud. (D 21 Ex. B). Interestingly, Mundy defended Shipilina in the divorce/annulment proceedings as well as the relentless course of harassment that followed by Hollander once the divorce proceeding was resolved (A 44 ¶¶222-223). Shipilina's Answer contained a counterclaim, which alleged that Hollander threatened to have her deported "if she did not do everything he told her to," including the payment of a large sum of money (D 21 Ex. C). The counterclaim also alleged that Hollander improperly created a public website in Shipilina's name on which he posted a copy of her personal diary and nude photographs without her knowledge or consent (D 21 Ex. C, ¶5).

In response to the creation of this offensive public website, Shipilina filed another report on June 27, 2001 with the NYPD (D 21 Ex. D). Hollander acknowledges that this website was created and that he was investigated for such impropriety.

The divorce action settled pursuant to Stipulation of Settlement dated November 2, 2001 (D 21 Ex. E). Hollander voluntarily consented to the divorce settlement on the record before the Court (D 21 Ex. E). The Stipulation of Settlement along with the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Divorce Judgment were drafted by Hollander's attorney (D 21 Ex. E).

however, the Complaint did not allege that Mundy threatened him or asked him to file false documents as Hollander now conveniently alleges (D 21 Ex. B).

Hollander also harassed those associated with Shipilina (other than her mother), by filing a fabricated and baseless disciplinary complaint with the Disciplinary Committee against Nicholas J. Mundy in December of 2001. The incredible and far-fetched allegations contained in Hollander's grievance complaint are surpassed only by the outlandish allegations that he has conjured in this action (D 21 Ex. J). The disciplinary complaint was later dismissed (D 21 Ex K).

Hollander alleges that he received threatening telephone calls in February and March of 2002 (A 50 ¶¶289-291)<sup>5</sup>.

In March 2002, Hollander instituted a proceeding, pro se, in the New York County Family Court against Shipilina seeking an order of protection arising out of these purported threats ironically claiming that he was the victim of harassment (D

<sup>5</sup> Even assuming that such telephone calls were made, which is denied, there is no reason to believe that they were made in connection with a RICO conspiracy, or that the words used constituted a threat as opposed to Hollander's subjective interpretation as to the intention of the call. (A 50 ¶¶289-291). Nevertheless, there is no allegation that they were made by Mundy or Petrovich or at their behest.

21 Ex. H)<sup>6</sup>. The petition was dismissed after trial on August 12, 2002. This was just one of many frivolous applications made by Hollander<sup>7</sup>.

In May 2002, Hollander, pro se, moved to vacate and set aside the Stipulation of Settlement entered in his divorce action (D 21, Ex. F). In Hollander's supporting affidavit, he indicated that Shipilina engaged in a "methodical, cold-blooded cabal that has trampled [his] rights as a human being and driven him into a state of deep emotional despair, depression and anxiety...and necessitates the daily use of prescribed psychotropic medication, Paroxetine HCL at 40 mg a day" (D 21 Ex. F ¶3)<sup>8</sup>. His admitted emotional distress appears to have been created by what he perceives to be alleged improper actions on the part of his wife, as opposed to a RICO conspiracy. Hollander's motion was denied by the Court on August 1, 2002 (D 21 Ex. F).

<sup>7</sup> Notably, Hollander's Complaint acknowledges that this Family Court proceeding in March, 2002 was not the first time that he applied for an order of protection. In fact, the Complaint details his pattern of filing complaints in connection with Shipilina, which all have been dismissed. Specifically, Hollander applied for a temporary order of protection in a Queens County Court in February of 2001 and the Judge "laughed at the plaintiff and denied his request." (A 106 ¶¶854-855). Hollander filed another report of a threat against him with his local police precinct and the "two police officers...laughed at the plaintiff." (A 106 ¶¶856-857). After filing another complaint with the police station, Hollander's complaint was again dismissed. (A 106 ¶¶858-861). Hollander then sought the assistance of the FBI in connection with purported threats. (A 106-107 ¶¶862-867). Subsequently, Hollander applied for another protection order in a New York County Court, which was denied (A 107 ¶¶868-870).

<sup>8</sup> Hollander's abuse of the court system and use of litigation as a means to harass and intimidate are evident even upon a cursory review of his motion papers (D 21

On March 25, 2003, Hollander commenced an action in the New York County Supreme Court, bearing Index No. 03/105646, against 9 of the Defendants named in this action, including Mundy and Petrovich, alleging intentional infliction of emotional distress (D 21 Ex. L). A Complaint has never been served in the action.

Faced with Hollander's assault of frivolous litigation, Nicholas J. Mundy reluctantly filed a disciplinary complaint against Hollander on April 23, 2003.

C. Hollander's Complaint

Hollander commenced this action by serving his Complaint upon Mundy less than two months later on June 10, 2003 (A 23-113)<sup>9</sup>.

I. The Purported Enterprise

The Complaint alleges the existence of a criminal RICO enterprise characterized as the "Russian International Crime Organization [which] generates profits worldwide from numerous criminal activities that include without limitation Ex. F). Without regard for ethics or common decency, among the 22 exhibits attached to Hollander's frivolous motion was a CD Rom labeled "Masturbation Video Promo Featuring Alina Shipilina" (D 21 Ex. G).

drug trafficking, money laundering, tax evasion, immigration fraud, prostitution, pornography, white slavery, bribery, mail and wire fraud, extortion, coercion and terror" (A 24 ¶1).

The enterprise allegedly "rose out of the ashes of the Soviet Union when the collapse of communism unleashed that empire's restraints on organized crime, corrupt government officials, travel, trade, communication and emigration" (A 25 ¶10). The enterprise purportedly consists of "domestic and foreign corporations, partnerships, individuals, government officials, law firms, organized crime gangs...and an Islamic terrorist and crime clan" (A 26 ¶11). Hollander's Brief clarifies that the enterprise named is the Russian mafia, and that the Defendants represent a segment of it (Hollander Brief pp. 3-5, 11-12).

The focus of the enterprise is alleged "to infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets, especially in the United States, for the personal enrichment of the members of the Enterprise..." (A 25 ¶2). Hollander's brief confirms that this is the enterprise's "key goal" (Hollander Brief p. 6).

Even a cursory review of the Complaint makes evident that the entire foundation and configuration of the alleged enterprise centers around Shipilina and the people she purportedly met and the places she purportedly visited. The Complaint first tracks her encounter with Hollander in Russia, then details her subsequent trips, jobs and dealings in Mexico, the United States, Russia and Cyprus (A 23-122). To this end, Hollander invents an enterprise allegedly operating worldwide and he names every entity, person and place that Shipilina ever allegedly encountered as members of the enterprise.

The Complaint, however, fails to offer any connection among the Defendants (and in particular between Mundy, Petrovich and the other Defendants) other than they have had some contact with Shipilina (A 23-122). Notably, the Complaint acknowledges that Mundy and Petrovich's only association with any of the Defendants arise out of Mundy's representation of Shipilina in the annulment/divorce proceedings and present immigrations matters involving Shipilina (A 23-113).

In fact, Hollander's opposition papers below confirm that he unaware of any connection between Mundy and Petrovich and the other Defendants, except they briefly came into contact with Shipilina to defend her divorce and she purportedly briefly came into contact with some of the other Defendants.

ii. Hollander's Allegations against Mundy and Petrovich

Mundy and Petrovich are alleged to be 3 of 19 domestic members of the enterprise, in addition to the countless foreign members. Specifically, Mundy is alleged, in conclusory fashion, to (1) act as consiliari and manager of United States immigration issues in New York for the enterprise; (2) operate a green card and visa mill that fraudulently obtains United States visas, residency status and naturalization for Russian aliens; (3) advise its clients to commit perjury before the INS, IRS, Customs Service and the New York State Courts; (4) use coercion and intimidation against parties, witnesses and informants in proceedings; (5) participate in money laundering and the use of international facilities to aid a racketeering enterprise; and (6) mastermind and direct illegal activities to acquire United States visas, residency status and naturalization for the members of the enterprise (A 27 ¶¶27-32).

Petrovich is alleged to (1) assist Mundy in executing illegal activities necessary to import and keep in members of the enterprise in the United States and (2) be an attorney licensed in Russia, acting as an attorney in the United States, although not admitted, under the supervision of Mundy (A 28 ¶¶33-34).

The Complaint avers that Mundy and Petrovich, as members of the enterprise, engaged in illegal activities against Hollander by: (1) using fraudulent and/or illegal means to assist Shipilina in obtaining immigration benefits (A 42-45 ¶¶207, 222-225, 229, 230, 232, 234, 236-237, 239-241); (2) using illegal means to protect the enterprise and prevent Hollander from exposing the activities of the enterprise (A 45-52 ¶¶228, 243, 275-277, 316-318); (3) intimidating Hollander to settle divorce proceedings that he instituted against Shipilina (A 46-48 ¶¶243-245, 273);(4) intimidating witnesses from providing testimony to any United States authorities/Courts including the Hollanders' divorce proceedings and any other U.S investigation such as by the INS (A 47-48 ¶¶265-268); (5) intimidating Hollander to dissuade him from trying to set aside the agreed upon divorce settlement (A 49 ¶¶280-284); (6) participating in tampering and bribery to prevent the deportation of Shipilina (A 47-51, ¶¶254-255, 286-290, 306-307); and (7) using illegal means of bribery in violation of the foreign corrupt practices act (money which came from illegal Russian mafia activities) including the bribing of a New York City Detective, intimidating Hollander and witnesses through Chechen Islamic Mafiosi in order to obstruct the criminal indictment against Inessa in Russia for defaming Hollander (which was closed as a result); (8) and preventing Hollander from cooperating with the INS, and laundering money through the international systems to carry out such intimidation and bribery (A 49-52 ¶¶286-290, 293-295, 298, 300-301, 306-307, 318).

Through the use of these outlandish, extremely broad and incredible allegations Hollander alleges that Mundy and Petrovich engaged in the following predicate criminal acts in furtherance of an alleged RICO conspiracy: (1) white slave trade and importing aliens for immoral purposes; (2) fraud and misuse of visas and the procurement of nationality unlawfully; (3) witness and informant tampering; (4) use of United States mail and interstate and international telephone systems to further mail and wire frauds; (5) bribery using international facilities; (6) money laundering; and (7) aiding in racketeering activity (A 23-113).

Additionally, it is alleged that Mundy and Petrovich committed other criminal acts including (1) suborning perjury before the INS, IRS, Customs Service, New York State Courts and NYPD (A 90-92 ¶¶701, 703, 707-708, 724-725); (2) obstructing INS proceedings and aiding and abetting such proceedings with coercion and intimidation to obtain permanent residency for Shipilina (A 90-93 ¶¶702, 709-710, 715, 721, 726-727, 731, 737); (3) tampering with witnesses or victims including threats of injury, intimidation and coercion and aiding and abetting such tampering in connection with Hollander's divorce/annulment proceedings, the defamation case in Russia and the INS investigation against Shipilina (A 90-93 ¶¶704, 711-714, 716, 728-730, 732); (4) aiding and abetting bribery in violation of the foreign corrupt practices act by bribing Detective Henning (A 91-93 ¶¶717, 719, 733, 735); (5) aiding and abetting the laundering of money received from the Russian mafia and used to threaten witnesses and bribe Russian officials (A 91-93 ¶¶718, 734); (6) aiding and abetting the harassment of Hollander (A 91-93 ¶¶720, 736); and (7) conspiring to violate federal law, commit predicate acts and break New York criminal laws. (A 90-93 ¶¶705-706, 722-723, 738-739).

Accordingly, Hollander alleges seven causes of action against Mundy and Petrovich. The first, second, third and fourth causes of action allege violations of sections 18 U.S.C. 1962(a), (b), (c) and (d) respectively (A 110 ¶¶886-893). The fifth, sixth and seventh causes of action allege intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of process and malicious prosecution respectively (A 110 ¶¶894-899).<sup>10</sup>

iii. Damages/Injuries Alleged by Hollander

Generally, Hollander claims that the enterprise damaged his "law and consulting business as well as drugged, defrauded, coerced and threatened [him] with severe bodily harm" (A 25 ¶3).

Hollander's more specific claims of damages are encompassed in paragraphs 900-907 of his Complaint (A 111 ¶¶900-907) while paragraphs 908 through 914 detail his requested relief (A 111-112 ¶¶908-914). Paragraphs 900 through 907 claim 3 categories of damages: (1) damage to Hollander's business and finances; (2) damage to his business reputation and good will; and (3) damages arising out of personal fear.

In respect to number 1 above, Hollander claims that his business and financial interests/assets have been damaged by: (A) "the use of funds from racketeering activities to finance the Enterprise's scheme (A 111 ¶900); (B) the depletion of his resources arising out of litigation with the enterprise (A 111 ¶¶901); (C) "racketeering activities used to acquire or preserve influence over some of the Enterprise's activities" (A 112 ¶904); (D) "[t]he predicate acts committed in furtherance of the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff" (A 112 ¶905); (E) "overt criminal and tortuous acts done in furtherance of conspiracies" (A 112 ¶906); (F) loss of profits from his law and consulting business for over 2 years in the amount of $200,000 resulting from the cessation of work as a result of bringing Shipilina to the United States and his investigation of the enterprise (A 112 ¶907(a)); (G) business interruption expenses of $50,000 including the costs to bring his business back to operating level (A 112 ¶907(b)); (H) loss of business opportunities (A 112 ¶907(c)); and (I) expenses in the amount of $100,000 for his investigation of the enterprise's bribery, perjury and tampering (A 112 ¶907(d)).

In respect to number 2 above, Hollander claims that he has been damaged: (A) by the bribery of public officials to subvert the proper administration of the law and thwart his efforts to rectify the harm done to his business reputation and goodwill (A 111 ¶902); (B) by funds from racketeering activities used to purchase intimidation of witnesses to thwart his efforts to rectify the harm to his business reputation and goodwill (A 112 ¶903); and (C) in the amount of $500,000 arising out of damage to his reputation and good will due to false allegations waged against him (A 112 ¶907(e)).

In respect to number 3 above, Hollander claims that the predicate acts committed by the enterprise have imperiled his safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear (A 112 ¶905).

iv. These Facts Do Not Create A RICO Claim

Despite Hollander's dramatic attempt to make this matter complex and turn it into a worldwide conspiracy, the facts, if summarized, are very simple.

Hollander met a woman in Russia. He pursued her, lived with her and fell in love with her. He was aware of the nature of her profession, or at least to a certain degree. He suspected dishonesty on her part, yet married her in Russia nonetheless. He then took her back to New York as his wife. When he further suspected infidelities, he was willing to accept them to a certain degree. The way he justifies being lured by his wife is that he was allegedly drugged for over two years, a statement so far-fetched it is uncertain how this obvious well-educated person can even believe it, let alone allege it.

In any event, Hollander and his wife eventually separated. She was forced to seek protection from the court due to his conduct. Hollander then sought an annulment. After being unsuccessful in procuring an annulment, a settlement was reached and the divorce finalized. Unable to let go and in an effort to re-live the marriage and divorce, Hollander investigated his wife for over a year. Simultaneously, he pursued an onslaught of frivolous litigation such as a disciplinary action against his ex-wife's attorneys, a motion to set aside the divorce settlement, a Family Court proceeding seeking protection, a defamation case against his ex-mother-in-law, numerous other applications for protection with the courts, police department and FBI (all of which turned out unsuccessful), a state court action and the instant RICO action.

The only time Mundy's or Petrovich's names are mentioned in the context of these events is in defending Shipilina in the divorce and assisting her in immigration matters. It is not alleged that Mundy or Petrovich performed illegal activities for any Defendants other than Shipilina. In fact, Hollander knows of no connection between Mundy and Petrovich and the other Defendants.

At best, Hollander's investigation and allegations have uncovered that he may have been used by Shipilina for immigration purposes, that Shipilina may have been engaged in stripping or prostitution, that Shipilina may have been unfaithful to him, that Shipilina may have used drugs, that Hollander may have been threatened by a friend of Shipilina to curb his harassment, that Shipilina may never have cared about him and that she may have misled him, caused him embarrassment and humiliated him. There is an endless list of possibilities. What is perfectly clear, however, is that these isolated alleged incidents of wrongdoing set forth by Hollander do not establish entitlement to the relief requested in this action. At most, Hollander has set forth nothing more than allegations of isolated acts, some criminal, some not. If anything, the proper authorities to deal with such allegations were the divorce court or possibly a criminal investigation by the NYPD, INS or the federal government, not this Court. The RICO statute was not designed to allow private citizens to redress the wrongs that Hollander claims here.

D. Hollander's Further Requests for Orders of Protection After Serving His Complaint

After serving his Complaint, Hollander wrote to the District Court on June 19, 2003 seeking another order of protection (D 18).<sup>11</sup> On July 7, 2003, Hollander again wrote to the District Court requesting yet another order of protection (D 21 Ex. O). The District Court denied his requests on July 28, 2003 (D 18).

E. Defendants' Motions to Dismiss

All appearing Defendants moved to dismiss Hollander's Complaint for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) and for failing to plead fraud with particularity pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b). Defendants' initial and reply motion papers were served from September 2003 through August 2004 (A 132, D 21-24, 26, 28-29, 49, 53-55, 62-66, 78). Hollander submitted his opposition in December 2003.

<sup>11</sup> This letter confirms that Hollander has been involved in a series of investigations and complaints to state and federal authorities in connection with Shipilina, which have been dismissed or ignored (D 18).

F. Hollander's Supplemental Complaint

In August 2004, after receiving all of the Defendants' motions to dismiss, Hollander moved to supplement his complaint, with an attached 77 paragraph Supplemental Complaint (A 114-122).<sup>12</sup>

G. The District Court's Order of Dismissal With Prejudice

On September 28, 2004, after granting Hollander's application to file a Supplemental Complaint, the District Court dismissed the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint (A 131-147). The Court held that Hollander had no standing since he failed to allege the requisite causation and injury under section 18 U.S.C. §1964(c) to sustain his RICO claims. Since the Court found that Hollander failed to sufficiently allege causation and injury, it concluded that it was unnecessary to address whether Hollander adequately alleged a violation of the <sup>12</sup> In addition to naming four new Defendants, the Supplemental Complaint alleges that: (1) Hollander received threatening telephone calls in June 2003 allegedly from, or at the behest of, Mundy, Petrovich and other Defendants aimed at preventing the filing of this action, which the authorities ignored after he reported the incident (D 109 ¶¶2-21); (2) that an FBI agent interfered with his investigation into this RICO case and advised a witness to file harassment charges against him (even though the FBI has investigated and dismissed this assertion) (D 109 ¶¶22-48 and Ex. A); (3) that Mundy's filing of a grievance against him was an attempt to obstruct justice and constituted mail fraud (D 109 ¶¶49-58); and (4) Shipilina submitted false information to the District Court in providing contact information regarding certain Defendants (D 109 ¶¶59-72). In respect to causation and damages, Hollander alleges that these additional illegal activities increased the harm to his business and property by causing loss of profits, business interruption expenses, loss of business opportunities and damage to his reputation and good will in the amount of $100,000 (D 109 ¶77).

substantive RICO statute, and, the other arguments raised in the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss (A 144).<sup>13</sup>

The District Court further held that Hollander's action was dismissed with prejudice and leave to amend was denied (A 146-147). Lastly, the District Court declined to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims (A 144-146).

H. Hollander's Motion For Recusal of Judge Castel and Motion for Reconsideration

Infuriated by the Order, Hollander forwarded an offensive letter to Judge Castel on October 4, 2004 demanding his recusal and suggesting that he would not tolerate the Court's purported "back handed sniping" (D 90).

Thereafter, Hollander filed motions for recusal and reconsideration, which were opposed by the Defendants (D 91-98). The District Court denied Hollander's motions (A 150-157).<sup>14</sup>

I. Notice of Appeal and Appellant's Brief

On October 25, 2004 Hollander filed a Notice of Appeal of the District Court's decision dismissing the Complaint.

<sup>13</sup>The District Court also granted Hollander's Motion to Strike exhibits Q-Z attached to Mundy and Petrovich's reply papers indicating that this action was dismissible without looking outside the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint (A 131-147).

<sup>14</sup> In denying Hollander's motion for reconsideration, however, the Court did modify the decision by deleting a phrase contained in the first footnote (A 156).

STATEMENT OF STANDARD OF REVIEW

A. Standard of Review on a Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)

The Court is empowered to dismiss Hollander's Complaint and Supplemental Complaint for failure to state a claim pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) where it appears beyond doubt that he can prove no set of facts that would entitle him to relief. King v. Simpson, 189 F.3d 284, 287 (2d Cir. 1999); Harris v. City of New York, 186 F.3d 243, 247 (2d Cir. 1999); Bernheim v. Litt, 79 F.3d 318, 321 (2d Cir. 1996).

In reviewing a motion to dismiss under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the Court is required to deem all factual allegations in the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of Hollander. Koppel v. 4987 Corp., 167 F.3d 125, 127 (2d Cir. 1999); Jaghory v. New York State Dep't of Educ., 131 F.3d 326, 329 (2d Cir. 1997)<sup>15</sup>.

However, the Court must only accept as true well pleaded factual allegations contained in the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint, not bald conclusory statements. Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp.2d 392, 396-97 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). "A complaint which consists of conclusory allegations unsupported by factual assertions fails even the liberal standard of Rule 12(b)(6)." Lakonia Mgmt. Ltd. v.

<sup>15</sup> Notably, the District Court Order cited this rule of law and confirmed that it accepted all of Hollander's allegations as true and drew all inferences in his favor (A 136-137).

Meriwether, 106 F. Supp.2d 540, 543 (S.D.N.Y. 2000); De Jesus v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 87 F.3d 65, 70 (2d Cir. 1996). In addition, "legal conclusions, deductions, or opinions couched as factual allegations are not given a presumption of truthfulness." Friedman v. U.S., 2003 WL 1460525 (S.D.N.Y. 2003); L'Europeenne de Banque v. La Republica de Venezuela, 700 F. Supp 114, 122 (S.D.N.Y. 1988).

Review of a motion to dismiss pursuant Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) must be limited to the Complaint and documents attached or incorporated by reference thereto. International Broth. of Teamsters v. Carey, 163 F. Supp.2d 271, 279 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Kramer v. Time Warner Inc. 937 F.2d 767, 773 (2d Cir. 1991). In this context, this Court has held that a Complaint is deemed to "include...documents that the plaintiff either possessed or knew about and upon which they relied in bringing the suit." Rothman v. Gregor, 220 F.3d 81, 88 (2d Cir. 2000).

B. Threshold Requirements to Sustain RICO Claims

18 U.S.C. §1962(a) specifically provides, in pertinent part, that:

It shall be unlawful for any person who has received any income derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt in which such person has participated as a principal within the meaning of Section 2, title 18, United States Code, to use or invest, directly or indirectly, any part of such income, or the proceeds of such income, in acquisition of any interest in, or the establishment or operation of, any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce...

18 U.S.C. §1962(b) specifically provides that:

It shall be unlawful for any person through a pattern of racketeering activity or through collection of an unlawful debt to acquire or maintain, directly or indirectly, any interest in or control of any enterprise which is engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce.

18 U.S.C. §1962(c) specifically provides that:

It shall be unlawful for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity or collection of unlawful debt.

18 U.S.C. §1962(d) specifically provides that:

It shall be unlawful for any person to conspire to violate any of the provisions of subsection (a), (b) or (c) of this section.

To prevail on a claim for damages under RICO, New York Federal Courts have consistently employed the standard set forth by the United States Supreme Court and specified that Hollander must first allege that the Defendants violated the substantive RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. §1962. In so doing, Hollander must properly allege the existence of seven constituent elements: (1) that the Defendants (2) through the commission of two or more acts (3) constituting a "pattern" (4) of "racketeering activity" (5) directly or indirectly invests in, or maintains an interest in, or participates in (6) an "enterprise" (7) the activities of which affect interstate or foreign commerce. Burell v. State Farm and Cas. Co., 226 F. Supp.2d 427, 443 (S.D.N.Y. 2002); Citadel Mgmt., Inc. v. Telexis Trust Inc., 123 F. Supp.2d 133, 154 (S.D.N.Y. 2000); Feeley v. The Whitman Corp., 65 F. Supp.2d 164, 174 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). Further, "the plaintiff only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation" of section 1962. Sedima S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3285 (1985).

The District Court correctly recognized that "to state a claim for civil remedies, including treble damages, under RICO, [Hollander] must allege both that the defendant has violated the substantive RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. §1962, and that he was 'injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962.' 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c) (emphasis added)" (A 137).

If one element is lacking, a Court will refuse to allow a party to add a RICO claim. LaSalle Nat'l Bank v. Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Co., 951 F.Supp 1071, 1091 & n. 16 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). The Court mandates the sufficient pleading of these elements because it is "mindful of the potential abuse of the RICO statute." Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 WL 21664679 (S.D.N.Y. 2003).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The District Court held that even taking Hollander's allegations as true and assuming, for the purposes of the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss, that his allegations would state a claim for a violation of 18 U.S.C. §1962(a)-(d), Hollander did not have standing as he failed to meet his burden with respect to pleading causation and injury, that he was injured by reason of any purported violation of 18 U.S.C. §1962-under 18 U.S.C. §1964(c) (A 138, 144). As such, the District Court noted that it was unnecessary for it to determine whether Hollander adequately alleged a violation of the substantive RICO statute (A 144).

Applying the applicable and controlling principles and legal precedent, the District Court correctly held that the damages claimed by Hollander are not the type of injuries to business or property actionable under RICO. Furthermore, even as to those injuries to business or property compensable under RICO, Hollander failed to allege that they were proximately caused by reason of the Defendant's alleged unlawful activity.

Moreover, although the District found it unnecessary to determine whether Hollander adequately alleged a violation of the substantive RICO statute (in light of his failure to demonstrate standing), Hollander utterly failed to adequately plead the other constituent elements necessary to establish a substantive RICO violation against Mundy and Petrovich including (1) a pattern of racketeering activity and (2) that an enterprise exists.

Lastly, the District Court correctly denied Hollander the right to file an Amended Complaint.

ARGUMENT

POINT I

THE DISTRICT COURT CORRECTLY HELD THAT HOLLANDER FAILED TO ADEQUATELY ALLEGE THE INJURY AND CAUSATION NECESSARY TO SUSTAIN HIS RICO CLAIMS

A. The District Court Applied the Correct Legal Analysis to Determine that Hollander Must Have Standing by Sufficiently Pleading Causation and Injury to Assert a RICO Claim

i. The Test: Standing to Assert a RICO Claim

In order for a plaintiff to state a claim for civil remedies under RICO, he must allege both that the defendants violated the substantive RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. §1962, and that he was "injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of section 1962." 18 U.S.C. §1964(c).

The Courts have reiterated that for a plaintiff to have standing to assert a RICO violation, he must sufficiently plead, at a minimum, (1) defendant's violation of the substantive RICO statute, 18 U.S.C. §1962; (2) injury to plaintiff's business or property; and (3) causation of the injury by the defendant's violation of section 1962. Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 265-68, 112 S.Ct. 1311, 117 L.Ed.2d 532 (1992); Ideal Steel Supply Corp. v. Anza, 373 F.3d 251 (2d Cir. 2004); Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d 113 (2d Cir. 2003); First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d 763, 767 (2d Cir. 1994) cert denied 513 U.S. 1079 (1995); Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23 (2d Cir. 1990); Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 741 F.2d 511, 515 (2d Cir. 1984) vacated on other grounds, 473 U.S. 922, 105 S.Ct. 3550, 87 L.Ed.2d 673 (1985). In other words, in addition to having to show a substantive RICO violation, a plaintiff must satisfy the "by reason of" language of 18 U.S.C. §1964(c) by demonstrating both injury and causation. State Farm Mut. Automobile Ins. Co. v. CPT Medical Services, P.C., 375 F. Supp.2d 141 (E.D.N.Y. 2005).

The District Court's clearly and properly set forth this standard in its Order.

ii. Injury must be to Business and Property

In respect to element number 2 above (injury), the District Court correctly held that alleged injuries to business reputation and good will, and alleged peril to a person's safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear do not constitute actionable injuries to business or property for RICO purposes (A 137-139).

The statute and cases consistently support the District Court's conclusion that that the injury must be to business or property and not physical, emotional or reputational harm or any economic aspect of such harm. See Kimm v. Lee, 2005 WL 89386 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (harm to professional reputation is not compensable in a RICO claim); State Farm Mut. Automobile Ins. Co. v. CPT Medical Services, P.C., 375 F. Supp.2d 141 (Plaintiff must allege injury to business or property to state civil claim for RICO conspiracy, and not, for example, physical, emotional or reputational harm); Burrowes v. Combs, 312 F. Supp.2d 449 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (damage to a person's professional reputation is not an injury cognizable under RICO); Tsipouras v. W&M Properties, Inc., 9 F. Supp.2d 365 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (mere injury to character, business reputation and intentional infliction of emotional distress are not actionable under civil RICO); Roitman v. New York City Transit Authority, 704 F. Supp. 346 (E.D.N.Y. 1989) (damage to Plaintiff's reputation was a personal injury as opposed to a property injury and thus not actionable); See Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 741 F.2d at 515 (the requirement that the injury be to plaintiff's business or property means that he must show proprietary type of damage. As an example, a person physically injured in a fire whose origin was arson is not given a right to recover for his personal injuries, rather only damage to his business or his building); Shaw v. Rolex Watch U.S.A., Inc., 776 F. Supp. 128 (S.D.N.Y. 1991) (citing Rafferty v. Halprin, 1991 WL 148798 (S.D.N.Y. 1991), James v. Lan-O-Tone Prods., Inc., 1989 WL 61852 (S.D.N.Y. 1989), Pohlot v. Pohlot, 664 F. Supp. 112 (S.D.N.Y. 1987)) (emotional distress and physical injury not cognizable under RICO); Grogan v. Platt, 835 F.2d 844, 847 (11th Cir.), rehearing denied, 851 F.2d 1423 (11th Cir.), cert denied, 488

U.S. 981, 109 S.Ct. 531, 102 L.Ed.2d 562 (1988) (pecuniary losses are so fundamentally a part of personal injuries that they should be considered something other than injury to business or property).

Further, the District Court correctly indicated that indefinite, speculative and unprovable damages are not recoverable under civil RICO actions. See Tsipouras v. W&M Properties, Inc., 9 F. Supp.2d 365 (plaintiff's bonus was not recoverable under civil RICO because its accrual was speculative and its amount and nature unprovable); Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House Inc., 897 F.2d at 24 (claim for lost commission too speculative); Stochastic Decisions, Inc. v. DiDomenico, 995 F.2d 1158, 1166 (2d Cir. 1993), cert denied, 510 U.S. 945, 114 S.Ct. 385, 126 L.Ed.2d 334 (1993) (RICO action dismissed for lack of standing where amount of injury was indefinite and unprovable). A cause of action under RICO does not accrue until the amount of damages becomes clear and definite. Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhodes, 859 F.2d at 1106 (2d Cir. 1988), cert denied, 490 U.S. 1007, 109 S.Ct. 1643 (1989). See also First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 27 F.3d at 768 (amount of damages to sustain civil RICO must be clear and definite).

iii. Causation

Standing to sue is limited to those persons whose injuries were both factually and proximately caused by the alleged RICO violation. Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d 113; Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503

U.S. 258, 268, 112 S.Ct. 1311, 1316-1318 (1992). While the term proximate cause is utilized, this Court has held that liability under statutes such as RICO does not "depend on whether there is proximate causation as that term is used at common law." Abrahams v. Young & Rubicam Inc., 79 F.3d 234, 237 (2d Cir. 1996). Rather, with statutory claims, the issue is one of statutory intent: "was the plaintiff...in the category the statute meant to protect," and was "the harm that occurred . . . the 'mischief' the statute sought to avoid." Id.

In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig. v. Robinson, 39 F.3d 395, 400 (2d Cir. 1994), the Court determined that plaintiffs must show that they were "the intended target" of the RICO violation, and that any alleged RICO injury must have been the "preconceived purpose" of the RICO activities to have standing. Id.

Likewise, in G-I Holdings v. Baron & Budd, 238 F.Supp.2d 521, 548 (S.D.N.Y. 2002), the Court held that while the term proximate cause is used, the Second Circuit has made clear that liability under the RICO statute does not depend on whether there is proximate causation as that term is defined in common law. Instead, the question is whether a plaintiff was in the category the statute meant to protect and whether the harm that occurred was the mischief the statute sought to avoid. Thus, the Court held that to have standing a plaintiff must show that he was the intended target of the RICO violation and that any RICO injury must have been the preconceived purpose of the RICO activities. Id. See also Giro

v. Banco Espanol De Credito, 208 F.3d 203, 2000 WL 287694 (2d Cir. 2000) (plaintiff must show that he is within the class the statute sought to protect and the harm done was one the statute sought to prevent); BCCI Holdings (Luxemborg Societe Anonyme v. Pharon, 43 F.Supp.2d 359 (S.D.N.Y. 1999) (plaintiff must show that he was the intended target of the RICO violations and that any injury was the preconceived purpose of the RICO activities); Laborers Local 17 Health & Benefit Fund v. Phillip Morris, Inc., 191 F.3d 229, 236 (2d Cir. 1999) (the zone of interest test is an inquiry into whether the plaintiff is within the class of persons sought to benefit by the provision at issue).

These cases are still valid in this Circuit. In fact, many Courts have recently cited such cases and held consistently. For example, last year in Ideal Steel Supply Corp. v. Anza, this Court cited In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig. and Abrahams v. Young & Rubicam Inc., recognizing that dismissals in those actions were upheld because the injuries alleged were not the preconceived purpose nor the specifically intended target/consequence of the defendants' alleged acts. Ideal Steel Supply Corp. v. Anza, 373 F.3d at 258-260. In Bona v. Barasch, 2003 WL 1395932 *24 (S.D.N.Y. 2003), the Court also cited to In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig. for the same proposition. Id. See also Information Resources, Inc. v. The Dunn and Bradstreet Corp., 260 F. Supp.2d 659 (S.D.N.Y. 2003) (with statutory claims, the issue is one of statutory intent: plaintiff must show that he is within the class the statute meant to protect and that the harm done is one that the statute sought to avoid).

This Circuit has also discussed a varying approach to determine proximate cause in addition to the zone of interest-intended target analysis. See Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d 113. The Court in Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d 366 (2d Cir. 2003) made clear, however, that this analysis incorporates the zone of interest-intended target test. Id. at 373.

The Baisch Court discussed the two part test for determining proximate causation discussed in Lerner. "First, the plaintiff's injury must have been 'proximately caused by a pattern of racketeering activity violating [18 U.S.C. §] 1962 or by individual RICO predicate acts.'" Id. at 373 (quoting Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d at 23). In other words, the Baisch Court clarified that "a plaintiff does not have standing if he suffered an injury that was indirectly (and hence not proximately) caused by the racketeering activity or RICO predicate acts, even though the injury was proximately caused by some non-RICO violations committed by the defendants." Id.<sup>16</sup> Stated another way, the plaintiff

<sup>16</sup> In applying this first part of the Lerner test, the Court in Bona v. Barasch referenced three policy reasons for RICO's directness requirement outlined in the Supreme Court Case of Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp. First, the less direct an injury is, the more difficult it becomes to ascertain the amount of a plaintiff's damages attributable to the violations as distinct from other independent factors. Second, recognizing claims for the indirectly injured would force Courts to adopt complicated rules apportioning damages among plaintiff's removed at must plead that the violation was not only the logical, or "but for," cause of the injury but also was its legally cognizable or proximate cause. Ideal Steel Supply Corp. v. Anza, 373 F.3d at 257.

"Second, the plaintiff must have suffered a direct injury that was foreseeable: Central to the notion of proximate cause is the idea that a person is not liable to all those who may have been injured by his conduct, but only those with respect to whom his acts were a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation, and whose injury was reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence." Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d at 374 (quoting Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d at 123); Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d at 23-24. This Court has repeatedly emphasized that this analysis incorporates the zone-of-interest analysis. Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d at 374. In other words, "Lerner noted that 'the reasonably foreseeable victims of a RICO violation are the targets, competitors and intended victims of the racketeering enterprise.'" Id. (quoting Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d at 124). See also Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d at 24; Sperber v. Boesky, 849 F.2d at 65.

different levels of injury from the violative acts to obviate the risks of multiple recoveries. Third, the need to grapple with these problem is simply unjustified by the general interest in deterring injurious conduct since the directly injured victims can generally be counted on to vindicate the law as private attorneys general, without any of the problems attendant upon suits by plaintiffs injured more remotely. Bona v. Barasch, 2003 WL 1395932 *24 (citing Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 112 S.Ct. 1311, 117 L.E.2d 532).

Regardless of the designation of the test utilized, this Circuit has been clear that the requirement "that a defendant's action be the proximate cause of a plaintiff's harm represents a policy choice premised on recognition of the impracticality of asserting liability based on the almost infinite expanse of actions that are in some sense casually related to an injury." Ideal Steel Supply Corp. v. Anza, 373 F.3d at 257 (citing Sperber v. Boesky, 849 F.2d 60, 63 (2d Cir. 1988). "In marking that boundary, the Supreme Court has emphasized that a plaintiff cannot complain of harm so remotely caused by a defendant's actions that imposing legal liability would transgress our 'ideas of what justice demands, or what is administratively possible and convenient.'" Id. (citing Commercial Cleaning Services, L.L.C v. Colin Service Systems, Inc., 271 F.3d 374, 380 (2d Cir. 2001) quoting Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 5093 U.S at 268, 112 S.Ct. 1311).

Applying the aforementioned principles, this Circuit has routinely upheld the dismissal of a variety of civil RICO complaints where the alleged injury was too remote from the alleged racketeering activity to meet the proximate cause requirement (i.e. where the plaintiff's injuries are caused not by the RICO violations themselves but the exposure of those acts, or where Plaintiff seeks to recover for injuries caused by his refusal to aid and abet violations). See Ideal Steel Supply Corp. v. Anza, 373 F.3d 251. For example, in Sperber v. Boesky, plaintiffs sought damages from a defendant convicted of insider trading alleging that they lost money investing in other companies in which the defendant was also a shareholder. Plaintiffs' theory was that defendant's reputation as a successful investor, gained as a result of the pattern of insider trading, artificially inflated the prices of stock purchased by them. Plaintiffs' alleged investment losses as the share prices fell following the defendants' insider trading conviction. This Court affirmed the dismissal since the alleged injuries were too remote from defendant's unlawful activity. Sperber v. Boesky, 849 F.2d at 62.

In Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., plaintiff brought a civil RICO action against his former employer and co-workers alleging they implemented a scheme to defraud customers in violation of mail and wire fraud statutes. Plaintiff alleged that he was injured by the scheme because clients whom he serviced discovered the frauds and ceased business with his employer, thereby costing him commissions he would have otherwise earned and because he was fired for refusing to participate in the frauds. This Court affirmed dismissal stating that the plaintiff was neither the target of the racketeering enterprise, nor the competitor, nor the customer of the racketeers, and that plaintiff's injuries were not reasonably foreseeable or the natural consequence of the RICO violations. Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d at 22-24.

In Lerner v. Fleet Bank, plaintiffs, who had invested with an attorney that absconded their money, brought civil RICO claims against the banks in which their funds had been deposited. Plaintiffs claimed that the banks engaged in racketeering activity by sending back to payees bounced checks that the banks stamped "refer to maker" rather than "insufficient funds"; telling some payees their checks had been dishonored because of a computer error or the check had been written on the wrong account, rather than because the attorney had insufficient funds; and sending statements to the attorney that did not mention the dishonored checks. Plaintiffs alleged that the banks also failed to report the attorney's overdrafts and other defaults to disciplinary authorities, which would have caused the attorney to be disbarred and led plaintiffs to discontinue their investments with him. This Court held that plaintiffs' injuries and the banks' mailings were too attenuated to meet the proximate cause requirement. Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d at 122-24.

In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig., this Court upheld the dismissal of a derivative action complaint by shareholders of American Express alleging that company officials had committed mail and wire frauds and bribery in an effort to defame Edmond Safra, an American Express competitor. When the fraudulent acts were discovered, American Express was injured by losing business and goodwill and having to pay millions of dollars in legal fees and settlements.

This Court upheld dismissal because the alleged injuries to the company were not proximately caused by the racketeering activities of fraud and bribery, but were caused by the fact that these activities did not have their intended effect and instead were discovered by their intended target. The target of the unlawful acts was the competitor Safra, not American Express. Accordingly, the injuries alleged were neither the preconceived purpose nor the specifically intended consequence of the RICO defendants' acts. Further, any losses to American Express were caused only because the scheme itself was exposed and failed. Therefore, the harm to American Express was neither the necessary result of the scheme, nor foreseeable. In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig. v. Robinson, 39 F.3d 395-400.

Lastly, in Abrahams v. Rount & Rubicam, Inc., the defendant advertising agency paid nearly $1 million to 2 individual defendants who informed it, falsely, that Abrahams, then a Jamaican tourism official, could be bribed to grant the agency the Jamaican Tourism Board advertising business. Although none of the bribery money was given to Abrahams, he was indicted with the scheme's participants. After the charges were dropped, Abrahams commenced a civil RICO action alleging injuries to his reputation and emotional, financial, political and social status as a result of the public dissemination. This Court found that he was neither an intended target of the scheme nor an intended beneficiary of the laws prohibiting it, nor was he injured by the scheme itself, rather he was injured by the fallout from the scheme's exposure. This Court upheld dismissal under 18 U.S.C. §1964(c). Abrahams v. Young & Rubicam Inc., 79 F.3d at 234-39.

Significantly, the District Court provided, and incorporated, an accurate and comprehensive analysis of the proximate cause principles detailed above in its Order, recognizing that the current state of the law incorporates the zone of interest analysis and that alleged injuries too attenuated from the purported racketeering activity fails to meet the proximate cause requirement (A 136-144).

B. The District Court Correctly Determined that Hollander Did Not Sustain the Requisite Injury to Business or Property

Hollander claims that the Defendants' bribing of public officials subverted the proper administration of justice and thwarted his efforts to rectify the harm done to his business reputation and goodwill (A 111 ¶902), that the funds from racketeering activities were used to purchase intimidation of witnesses thwarting his efforts to rectify the harm to his business reputation and goodwill (A 112 ¶903), and that his reputation and good will have been damaged in the amount of $500,000 arising out of the false allegations waged against him (A 112 ¶907(e)). Hollander also claims that the enterprise Defendants' predicate acts imperiled his safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear (A 112 ¶905).

The District Court accurately determined that Hollander's claimed injuries to his business and reputation and goodwill (A 111-112 ¶¶902-903, 907(e)), and peril to "his safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear" (A 112 ¶905) do not constitute the type of injury to "business or property" actionable under RICO (A 138-139). See Kimm v. Lee, 2005 WL 89386; State Farm Mut. Automobile Ins. Co. v. CPT Medical Services, P.C., 375 F. Supp.2d 141; Burrowes v. Combs, 312 F. Supp.2d 449; Tsipouras v. W&M Properties, Inc., 9 F. Supp.2d 365; Roitman v. New York City Transit Authority, 704 F.Supp. 346; Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 741 F.2d 511; Shaw v. Rolex Watch U.S.A., Inc., 776 F. Supp. 128; Grogan v. Platt, 835 F.2d 844. Hollander is unable to cite any cases in this Circuit to the contrary (Hollander Brief pp. 35-36).

C. The District Court Correctly Determined that Hollander's Additional Claim of Damages Were Not Proximately Caused By A Reason of a Violation of 18 U.S.C. §1962

Hollander claims additional damages to his business and financial interests, including the depletion of his resources arising out of litigation with the enterprise (A 111 ¶¶901), "loss of profits" from his law and consulting business in the amount of $200,000 for bringing Shipilina to the United States and his investigation of the enterprise (A 112 ¶907(a)), "business interruption" expenses of $50,000 to bring his business back to operating level (A 112 ¶907(b)), "loss of business opportunities" (A 112 ¶907(c)), and investigation of the enterprise expenses in the amount of $100,000 (A 112 ¶907(d)).

The District Court analyzed Hollander's claims under this Circuit's two-step proximate cause analysis incorporating the zone-of-interest test. Even evaluating

Hollander's claims under this more relaxed analysis, the District Court still correctly found that, even if the aforementioned damages could constitute the type of injuries to business or property contemplated by the RICO statute, they were not caused by reason of the Defendants' purported violation of 18 U.S.C. §1962

The District Court first concluded that Hollander's purported injuries were not caused by the RICO violations themselves, but rather, exposure of those acts. Specifically, the District Court found that Hollander's injuries, including loss profits, business interruption expenses, loss of business opportunity and investigation expenses, arose not from a conspiracy directed at Hollander but from his investigation of the enterprise (A 141-142)

One factual example provided by the District Court in support was that Hollander alleged that the Defendants sought to infiltrate and expand their activities into hard currency markets (i.e. to generate profits in the United States from the enterprise's illegal prostitution, pornography, money laundering etc.) (A 24-26 ¶¶1-2, 13, A 141-142). The District Court noted that these activities, as admitted by Hollander's Complaint, predated Hollander's investigation of the scheme in August 2000 (A 43 ¶¶213-220, A 141-142). A further example provided by the District Court in support was Hollander's own words in the damages portion of his Complaint whereby he admits that he sustained damages as a result of his investigation of the enterprise. (A 112 ¶907(a)-(d), A 142). The District Court noted that this is bolstered by the fact that Hollander "alleges that defendants took actions directed at him-including threats of physical harm...but as plaintiff himself asserts, any such injury... arose from his discovery of the Scheme in August 2000 and his 'investigation that continues to the present day' (Complaint ¶217)" (A 142).

The District Court also stated that to the extent Hollander portrays himself as a whistleblower sustaining retaliatory damages, like expenses for investigation and efforts to avoid and rectify his injury, such alleged damages arose out of his discovery and investigation of the scheme, which does not give rise to RICO standing (A 112 ¶907(a)-(e), 142-143).

The District Court was absolutely correct. Hollander failed to allege that his purported injuries were proximately/directly caused by a pattern of racketeering activity or predicate acts violating the RICO. If Hollander sustained any injury to his business or property, they were caused by his own actions and investigation, or at worst, by Shipilina and her alleged infidelities. Such purported indirect injuries cannot be said to have been proximately caused by the RICO acts<sup>17</sup>.

<sup>17</sup> Hollander suggests that the District Court's Order wrongly stated that Hollander discovered the scheme in August 2000 as opposed to his actual discovery in July 2002 (Hollander Brief pp. 13-14). This has no bearing on the District's conclusion that the injuries alleged by Hollander arose out of his August 2000 and onward investigation. In any event, this appears to fly in the face of Hollander's Complaint whereby he suggested that he was aware of the alleged scheme, to some degree, in August 2000 or shortly thereafter after he commenced his investigation (A 43-44

The District Court additionally concluded that, while Hollander may have allegedly been a means of effecting the scheme, the object of the scheme was not to target Hollander and injure his reputation and business. Rather, it was to continue its activities and expand its illegal acts into the United States hard currency markets. In fact, the District Court noted that the alleged scheme therefore depended on lack of harm to Hollander so that they could succeed in infiltrating into the United States. The District Court lastly noted that even those alleged predicate acts aimed at Hollander directly (i.e. harassment, threats) was merely to prevent him from interfering with the Defendants, Shipilina's efforts to obtain residency and therefore extend the enterprise into the United States, not to injure his business and property. As such, the District Court held that the injuries claimed by Hollander were not the reasonably foreseeable consequence of the predicate acts alleged (A 143-144).

The District Court was absolutely correct. Although Hollander spends countless pages in his brief (i.e. Hollander Brief pp. 20, 25) citing damages allegedly sustained by him prior to and after August 2000, which the District Court supposedly ignored, Hollander still cannot get beyond the fact that the Defendants' acts were not a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation that led to such alleged injuries, and were not reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence.

The damages claimed by Hollander here are not the mischief the RICO statute seeks to prevent. Indeed, any fair reading of the Complaint discloses that the preconceived purpose of the RICO activities was most assuredly not to cause loss to Hollander's reputation and business. Rather, the Complaint consistently alleges that the RICO Defendants' actions, however misguided and purportedly injurious to Hollander in the end, were undertaken to further their illegal activities and efforts to expand into the United States. If anything, Hollander's alleged harm was an unintended and unanticipated mere by-product of the alleged racketeering activity. Thus, the injuries alleged were not the preconceived purpose, nor the specifically intended consequence of the RICO Defendants' acts. Most tellingly, is Hollander's continued inability in his Brief to sufficiently explain how 63 persons, worldwide, are engaged in a RICO enterprise with the preconceived purpose of intentionally targeting his business and property for financial ruin. Since Hollander's alleged injuries are too remote and attenuated from the alleged racketeering activity to meet the proximate cause requirement, his action was properly dismissed.

D. The District Court Correctly Determined that Hollander's Additional Claim of Damages Are Conclusory and Incomprehensible

Hollander also claims damages to his business and financial interests/assets: "by the use of funds from racketeering activities to finance the Enterprise's Scheme" (A 111 ¶900), "from racketeering activities used to acquire or preserve influence over some of the Enterprise's activities" (A 112 ¶904), by "[t]he predicate acts committed in furtherance of the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff" (A 112 ¶905), and "from overt criminal and tortuous acts done in furtherance of conspiracies" (A 112 ¶906).

These allegations do not indicate how Hollander has allegedly been harmed. Rather, they merely state which activities caused his purported harm. Such general, bald, conclusory allegations do nothing to bolster or add to Hollander's damage claims, and, thus, were properly rejected by the Court (A 142). Interestingly, Hollander's brief on this point does not explain how these allegations are not conclusory, or attempt to add (in substance) to his damage claims. Rather, he devotes three pages to chastising the District Court, providing this Court with a history lesson on pleading practice under the Federal Rules and citing inapposite case law (Hollander Brief pp. 22-25).

POINT II

DESPITE THE DISTRICT COURT'S DETERMINATION THAT IT WAS UNNECESSARY TO ADDRESS THE SUBSTANTIVE RICO STATUTE HOLLANDER SIMILIARY FAILED TO PLEAD ITS ELEMENTS

Although the District Court did not deem it necessary to address whether Hollander has failed to properly plead the elements necessary to establish a violation of the substantive RICO statute in light of its initial failure to establish standing-injury and causation, Hollander failed to plead, at least in respect to Mundy and Petrovich, (1) a pattern of racketeering activities and (2) that an enterprise exists.

A. Hollander's Complaint Fails to Adequately Allege a Pattern of Racketeering Activity

To sufficiently plead a pattern of racketeering activity, Hollander must allege "(1) at least two predicate acts of racketeering occurring within a ten-year period; (2) that the predicate acts are related to each other; and (3) that the predicate acts amount to or pose a threat of continuing criminal activity." Price v. Gast, 2000 WL 36981 *6 (S.D.N.Y. Apr. 11, 2000); H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 2900 (1989).

"It is this factor of continuity plus relationship which combines to constitute a pattern." H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. at 238-39, 109 S.Ct. at 290 (citations omitted). To satisfy the "continued criminal activity" prong in alleging a pattern of racketeering activity under a RICO claim, Hollander must make a showing of either "closed-ended continuity" or "open-ended continuity." Id.

i. Closed-ended Continuity

In order to measure whether closed-ended continuity exists, several factors may be considered including the length of time over which the alleged predicate acts took place, the number and variety of acts, the number of participants, the number of victims, and the presence of separate schemes. GICC Capital Corp. v. Tech. Finance Group, Inc., 67 F.3d 463, 467 (2d Cir. 1995).

However, Hollander must prove a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time. H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. at 242, 109 S.Ct. at 2902. Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy this requirement. Id. "Since the Supreme Court decided H.J. Inc., this Court [Second Circuit] has never held a period of less than two years to constitute a 'substantial period of time,' for the purposes of the closed-ended continuity test. De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d 286, 321 (2d Cir. 2001). See also Cofacredit S.A. v. Windso Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d 229, 242 (2d Cir. 1999); Jacobson v. Cooper, 882 F.2d 717, 720 (2d Cir. 1989).

In determining the duration of a pattern of racketeering activity, Courts focus solely on the predicate acts of racketeering each defendant is alleged to have committed. De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 321. Moreover, acts that do not constitute predicate racketeering activity are not included in the calculation for determining continuity. Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 243.

Hollander's Complaint fails to properly plead a pattern of racketeering since closed-ended continuity is not sufficiently alleged. Hollander alleges that Mundy and Petrovich first met with Shipilina at the "end of October, 2000" (A 44 ¶223) (even though they did not appear on her behalf until after Hollander commenced the annulment/divorce proceedings in February, 2001). Therefore, no predicate act is even alleged to have been committed by Mundy or Petrovich prior to October, 2000. The allegations in the Complaint also reveal that neither Mundy nor Petrovich ever met with any other members of the purported enterprise prior to October, 2000 or participated with them in predicate acts. (A 23-113). The last predicate act alleged in the Complaint to have been committed by Mundy or Petrovich was in March, 2002. (A 50-52, 91 ¶¶293, 298, 315-318, 715). Hence, the period of time between the predicate acts purportedly committed by Mundy and Petrovich amounts to, at most, merely one year and five months. It is well settled that closed-ended continuity cannot exist over such an abbreviated period of time.

See De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 321; Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 243<sup>18</sup>.

ii. Open-ended Continuity

To satisfy open-ended continuity, "the plaintiff need not show that the predicates extended over a substantial period of time but must show that there was a threat of continuing criminal activity beyond the period during which the predicate acts were performed." Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 242; The Jordan (Bermuda) Inv. Co. v. Hunter Green Inv. Ltd., 154 F.Supp.2d 682, 694 (S.D.N.Y. 2001).

In the Second Circuit, "cases assessing whether a threat of continuity exists have looked first to the nature of the predicate acts alleged or to the nature of the enterprise at whose behest the predicate acts were performed." De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 323 (quoting GICC Capital Corp. v. Technology Finance Group, Inc., 67 F.3d at 466 (internal quotations omitted)). "[W]here the enterprise primarily conducts a legitimate business, there must be some evidence from which it may be inferred that the predicate acts were the regular way of operating that business, or that the nature of the predicate acts themselves implies a threat of continued criminal activity.” De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d at 323 (quoting Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 243).

Hollander has similarly failed to sufficiently establish that there has been open-ended continuity. The predicate racketeering acts alleged to have been committed by Mundy and Petrovich occurred from October, 2000 through March, 2002, at best (or April 2003 if it is believed that the filing of a grievance can be deemed a predicate act as Hollander’s Supplemental Complaint absurdly alleges) (A 23-113,119-120). Even taking Hollander’s allegations as true, they go no further than describing past criminal acts by Mundy and Petrovich with finite goals, which were completed. Hollander’s allegations, taken at their face value, if proved, would establish, at most, that there was a “discrete and relatively short-lived scheme” to defraud him, which is insufficient to establish a claim of open-continuity. Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co. Inc., 187 F.3d at 244.

In an apparent ploy, albeit unsuccessful, to plead his RICO claims, Hollander insufficiently chose to make broad and sweeping conclusions such as “on information and belief, member defendants’ predicate acts will repeat and multiply into the future,” instead of simply proving, or even alleging, continuing criminal activity beyond the period during which the predicate acts were performed by Mundy or Petrovich. (A 108 ¶¶876-877). There is not one iota of evidence to support Hollander’s conclusion that such acts even occurred, let alone will repeat into the future. Thus, the Complaint is totally devoid of any specific allegation or factual basis to support his opinion and such legal conclusions and opinions couched as factual allegations are insufficient to demonstrate the threat of ongoing criminal activity.

B. Hollander's Complaint Fails to Adequately Allege The Existence of a RICO Enterprise

A RICO plaintiff must plead each defendant's participation in the "operation or management" of an "enterprise" as those terms are defined for the purposes of the statute. Dietrich v. Bauer, 76 F. Supp.2d 312, 347 (S.D.N.Y. 1999). A RICO enterprise is statutorily defined as "any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity." 18 U.S.C. §1691(4) (emphasis added).

A RICO enterprise as a "group of persons associated together for a common purpose or engaging in a common course of conduct...[It is] proved by evidence of an ongoing organization, formal or informal, and by any evidence that the various associates function as a continuing unit." United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 101 S.Ct. 2524, 2528 (1981); First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp. 820 F. Supp., 89 (S.D.N.Y. 1993).

"In determining whether the members of a purported association-in-fact functioned as a unit, '[c]ourts in the Second Circuit must look to the 'hierarchy, organization, and activities' of the association." Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F.

Supp.2d 340, 349 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (quoting First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding Corp., 820 F. Supp. at 98).

Consistent with these standards, "a RICO enterprise must exhibit structural continuity over its alleged lifespan." Kovian v. Fulton County Nat'l. Bank and Trust Co., No. 86- CV-154 1990 WL 36809, at 16 (N.D.N.Y. March 28, 1990). As the Eighth Circuit has explained, "continuity of structure exists where there is an organizational pattern or system of authority that provides a mechanism for directing the group's affairs on a continuing, rather than an ad hoc, basis." Handeen v. LeMaire, 112 F.3d 1339, 1351 (8th Cir. 1997) (quoting United States v. Kragness, 830 F.2d 842, 856 (8th Cir. 1987)).

Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 349.

In addition, "[i]t is firmly established that, to state a claim under RICO, a Plaintiff must allege and prove the existence of an enterprise which is 'separate and distinct from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity.'" Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp.2d 392, 400 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (quoting Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 44 F. Supp.2d 565, 580 (S.D.N.Y. 1999)). The United States Supreme Court held in United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583, 101 S.Ct. at 2524 that the "'enterprise' is not the 'pattern of racketeering activity'; it is an entity separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages."

In Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., the RICO claims were dismissed because the plaintiff did not allege an enterprise separate and apart from its pattern of racketeering activity. The Court found that even assuming that the defendants were part of a continuing enterprise, it was part of that enterprise only by virtue of the alleged racketeering activity. Therefore, plaintiff had not alleged an ascertainable structure distinct from that inherent in the alleged pattern of racketeering activity, and the alleged enterprise including the defendants would not have existed were the predicate acts removed from the equation. Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 44 F. Supp. at 581.

In fact, many other Courts including this Circuit have agreed and followed the reasoning in the aforementioned cases. See Brewer v. Village of Old Field, 2004 WL 691715 (E.D.N.Y. 2004); G-I Holdings Inc. v. Baron & Budd, 238 F. Supp.2d 521 (2002); Anatian v. Coutts Bank Switzerland Ltd, 193 F.3d 85 (2d. Cir. 1999); Mark v. J.I. Racing Inc., 1997 WL 403179 *4 (E.D.N.Y. 1997); Department of Economic Development v. Arthur Andersen & Co., 924 F. Supp. 449 (S.D.N.Y. 1996).

Hollander's RICO claims fail as a matter of law, because he has not pled an enterprise within the meaning of the RICO statute. The enterprise allegedly consists of all Defendants, which encompasses "domestic and foreign corporations, partnerships, individuals, government officials, law firms, [American, Russian and Chechen] organized crime gangs... and an Islamic terrorist and crime clan" (A 26 ¶11). This is purported to be a segment of the Russian mafia. The Complaint, however, is completely devoid of any sensible, logical, or coherent explanation as to how Mundy and Petrovich are joined to all these other Defendants as a group of the Russian mafia to perpetrate the acts and frauds alleged in the Complaint.

The Complaint fails to allege any sufficient facts revealing a continuous structure of the enterprise, interrelationship of alleged actions or coordinated roles played by the members of the purported enterprise which include Mundy and Petrovich. The entire enterprise is based upon Shipilina and the people she purportedly encountered, places she purportedly traveled, and institutions she purported worked at or visited. There is no other connection among Mundy and Petrovich and the other 61 domestic and foreign defendants other than Mundy and Petrovich represented Shipilina in isolated matters (i.e her divorce and immigration matters).

Additionally, Hollander has not pled any details which would even remotely suggest that the purported enterprise would exist as a continuous structure, separate and distinct from the alleged pattern of racketeering activity. To the contrary, Hollander's allegations reveal that the Defendants are only part of the purported enterprise by virtue of the alleged racketeering activity. Hollander has not alleged that this purported segment of the mafia would still exists if the predicate acts were removed from the equation. Thus, Hollander's preposterous allegations of a RICO enterprise and ongoing organization between the Defendants may be the most damning evidence of the frivolous nature of this Complaint. Hollander's allegations of the existence of a RICO enterprise, stretches the bounds and limits of even the most delusional imagination.

POINT III

THE DISTRICT COURT'S DETERMINATION TO DENY LEAVE TO AMEND THE COMPLAINT WAS PROPER

The record cannot be clearer that Hollander has a long standing history of engaging in abusive, vexatious, duplicative and harassing litigation causing needless expense and burden to numerous parties and the Courts and their supporting personnel. His motive is a vindictive personal vendetta arising out of his marriage and divorce as opposed to an objective good faith expectation of prevailing on the merits of his applications. This is best evidenced by the fact that all of his applications and requests before the Courts and various law enforcement agencies have been found meritless.

The record speaks for itself. Hollander commenced an annulment proceeding, divorce action, motion to set aside the settlement of the divorce, two petitions to the New York County Court for orders of protection, a disciplinary complaint, an action for emotional distress in New York County, a defamation action in Russia, the instant RICO action against 63 parties/entities a Motion for Reconsideration, a Motion for Recusal and numerous applications to the FBI, INS, District Attorney, United States Attorney, the District Court and other governmental agencies for protection and to investigate the Defendants. All of the allegations in these actions and investigations overlap. The length of his pleadings and motions before the Courts, and his repeated applications to law enforcement agencies can be described as nothing short of exhausting.

Hollander's abusive tactics are only further evidenced by the exhibits that he has set before the Courts, his admission in creating a repugnant website of Shipilina without her knowledge or consent and the fact that Shipilina has been compelled to file criminal complaints and seek orders of protection. His latest tactic is the solicitation of potential members of a class action lawsuit through his website, www.been-scammed.com.

Hollander should have been enjoined by the District Court from proceeding any further. See Lipin v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, P.A., 202 F.Supp.2d 126 (S.D.N.Y. 2002); Becker v. Dunkin Donuts of America, Inc., 665 F.Supp.2d 111 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). Instead, the District Court merely denied his right to Amend the Complaint. The District Court aptly recognized that Hollander is an attorney, that he is capable of drafting a detailed pleading (supplemented when necessary), that he has been afforded the opportunity to be heard and that his investigation disclosed in detail has demonstrated that he has set forth his best case for relief (evidenced by the fact that he was allowed to supplement his Complaint after being apprised of the basis of the Defendants' Motions to Dismiss). As such, the District Court correctly held, for these reasons and the fact that standing cannot be established, that any amendment would be futile and unable to withstand a dismissal motion. See Milanese v. Rust-Oleum Corp., 244 F.3d 104, 110 (2d Cir. 2001); Whimsicality, Inc. v. Battat, 27 F.Supp.2d 456, 466 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (A 146-147).

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated above, it is respectfully submitted that the Order of the District Court dismissing Hollander's Complaint and Supplemental Complaint with prejudice be affirmed.

Preliminary Statement

Plaintiff-appellant, Roy Den Hollander, a New York attorney, appeals from the Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal of his Civil RICO action against a variety of colorfully-named domestic and international defendants alleged by appellant to be members of an international crime cartel engaged in a vast, world-wide criminal enterprise. As explained in a submission below, the Complaint “reads more like a Tom Clancy novel than a legal pleading.” (SDNY # 22, Memorandum of Law, at p. 2)<sup>1</sup>

This is the latest in a series of escalating legal actions taken by the plaintiff-appellant arising out of his failed marriage to and divorce from defendant-appellee Alina A. Shiplina.<sup>2</sup> By his own admission, plaintiff-appellant was “laughed” out of court in Queens County (JA 106 at ¶¶ 855-56); his various and sundry to complaints to the New York City Police Department and the Federal Bureau of Investigation did not result in any action being taken against any of the defendants-appellees (or anyone else) (JA 106-07 at ¶¶ 856-67); an application to “a New York County court” was denied (JA 107 at ¶¶ 868-70);<sup>3</sup> and plaintiff-appellant filed but then failed to prosecute a civil action commenced against nine (9) of the defendants-appellees in Supreme Court, New York County.<sup>4</sup> Plaintiff-appellant also filed a grievance against Ms. Shipilina's matrimonial counsel, defendant-appellee Nicholas Mundy, which was dismissed by the Departmental Disciplinary Committee.<sup>5</sup>

Plaintiff-appellant's principal target clearly appears to be his ex-wife. He has also joined in this action, inter alia, his former mother-in-law, his wife's attorneys, and anyone whom he perceives as having had contact with her or in any way being supportive of her.

This brief is submitted on behalf of defendants-appellees Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. d/b/a FlashDancers, s/h/a "Flash Dancers Topless Club," Lynn Lepofsky, "Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers" and "Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 (collectively, "FlashDancers Appellees),<sup>6</sup> who have apparently been named as parties because Ms. Shipilina was allegedly a dancer at FlashDancers (JA 43, at ¶ 213) and an unknown individual present at the time (whom plaintiff-appellant denominates "Flash Dancers Gangster

1") came to her aid when plaintiff-appellant's process server attempted to serve her while she was performing. (JA 45, at ¶¶ 247-52)

In order to avoid duplication, we address in this brief the allegations of the Complaint, as supplemented, in regard to the FlashDancers Appellees. Accordingly, and as in the Court below, we respectfully adopt on behalf of our clients and incorporate in this brief the arguments of general application made by the other defendants-appellees.

Counter-Statement of the Case

Plaintiff-appellant commenced this action by the filing of a 915-paragraph Complaint on April 18, 2003. (JA 7)

By letter dated June 19, 2003, plaintiff-appellant requested an "order of protection" against defendants. (JA 8, at SDNY # 18) The District Court (Mukasey, Ch. J.) denied this application on July 28, 2003. (JA 9, at SDNY # 19)

Discovery was stayed pending Rule 12(b) motion practice in accordance with a briefing schedule managed by the District Court. (JA 9, at SDNY ## 19 et seq.) Each of defendants-appellees moved to dismiss. (JA 9 et seq., at SDNY ## 21, 23, 26, 28, 50, 62)

The District Court assisted plaintiff-appellant in his quest to serve foreign defendants (JA 11 et seq., at SDNY ## 30-41 and 56-58), but denied his application to take default judgments against certain defendants, pending the further Order of the Court (JA 14, at SDNY # 45)

In the course of the Rule 12(b) motion practice, plaintiff-appellant (a) requested leave to file a 77-paragraph "Supplemental Complaint" alleging additional predicate acts and adding four (4) additional defendants (JA 114-122), and (b) moved to strike certain exhibits submitted by the Kuba, Mundy defendants "for failure to authenticate." (JA 15, at SDNY # 59) The District Court ultimately granted both applications. (JA 132, at note 1; JA 136)

At the request of the plaintiff-appellant, defendant Shipilina was ordered to provide the names and addresses of certain defendants, if known to her. (JA 16, at Minute Entry following SDNY # 66; see also JA 17 at # 67)

In a thorough and thoughtful Memorandum and Order dated September 28, 2004, Judge Castel granted the motions to dismiss and directed the Clerk to enter judgment dismissing the action, which the Clerk did. (JA 131-48)

Plaintiff-appellant then moved to disqualify Judge Castel and for reconsideration of the Memorandum and Order. (JA 19-20, SDNY ## 89 – 92). While those motions were pending, plaintiff-appellant filed his first Notice of Appeal. (JA 149)

Judge Castel denied the motion for disqualification in an Order dated October 27, 2004. (JA 150-55) The following day, His Honor granted the motion for reconsideration to the extent of correcting an inadvertent misstatement of fact in note 1 of the Memorandum and Order of September 28, 2004. (JA 156-57). Plaintiff-appellant then filed a new Notice of Appeal. (JA 158)

Following a Civil Appeals Management Plan (CAMP) Conference with Staff Counsel in this Court, plaintiff-appellant wrote to the District Court to confirm that the dismissal below was intended to finally determine the action in its entirety.<sup>7</sup> The District Court endorsed the letter to the effect that the September 28, 2004 Memorandum and Order “makes plain that ‘... plaintiff’s Complaint is dismissed with prejudice.’” (JA 21, at SDNY # 108) level of generality and indefiniteness ... mask(s) any legal deficiencies and

... challenge. That ... only leads to essentially nothing

<sup>7</sup> In the same letter, plaintiff-appellant renewed his request for the costs of serving process on those defendants who had not voluntarily appeared pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 4(d). The District Court directed deferred the issue pending issuance of the mandate of this Court. (JA 21, at SDNY # 108).

Argument

THE ACTION WAS PROPERLY DISMISSED AS AGAINST THE FLASHDANCERS APPELLEES

Plaintiff-appellant argues, essentially, that by alleging multiple bad acts, by multiple individuals, colorfully labeling them "gangsters," "pimps," "prostitutes," and "Russian Mafia," he may, and liberally employing terms of art such as "member," "enterprise" and "predicate acts," he has pleaded a cause of action under 18 U.S.C. § 1964 (Civil RICO) and thereby immunized his Complaint against attack under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.

While this argument may even have superficial appeal, it does not survive critical scrutiny. (JA 131-47). Indeed, as other Courts have so often pointed out, prolix "dragnet" pleading is the antithesis of that which is intended by, or satisfies, the particularity requirements of Fed.R.Civ.P. 9(b). See, e.g., Old Time Enters., Inc. v. Int'l Coffee Corp., 862 F.2d 1213 (4th Cir. 1988) (pleading "all even remotely conceivable theories while retaining a level of generality and indefiniteness ... mask[s] any legal deficiencies and precludes[s] effective challenge. That ... only leads to essentially nothing being alleged, for the needle in the haystack might as well not be there.");

Lubin v. Sybendon Corp., 688 F.Supp. 1425 (S.D. Cal. 1988)

("indiscriminate[] grouping [of] all of the individual defendants into one wrongdoing monolith").

Moreover, the allegations of the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint do not state a claim against any of the FlashDancers Appellees under Civil RICO (First through Fourth Causes of Action), nor for intentional infliction of emotional distress (Fifth Cause of Action).<sup>8</sup>

Defendant-appellee "Flash Dancers Topless Club" is not a juridicial entity. "FlashDancers" is the trade name of defendant-appellee Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., and is the name of the nightclub operated by that defendant-appellee.

Defendant-appellee Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. d/b/a "FlashDancers" has been doing business at a single location (1674 Broadway) since in or about 1986; is duly licensed and regulated by the New York State Liquor Authority (SLA) and numerous New York City agencies with jurisdiction (e.g., Department of Consumer Affairs, Building Department, Police Department, Mayor's Midtown Task Force); and has never been even accused of any (much less all) of the incredible litany of felonies alleged by plaintiff-appellant in his Complaint. (See SDNY # 24, Declaration, at p. 6, ¶ 4).

Defendant-appellee Lynn Lepofsky is alleged to be “the chairman or chief executive officer of Jay-Jay Cabaret.” (JA 26, at ¶ 20).

Defendants-Appellees “Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers” and “Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5” are alleged to be individuals employed by Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. as managers. Their true identities are unpleaded and unknown.

All of the allegations against the FlashDancers Appellees are merely general and conclusory. See, e.g., JA 23-113, at ¶ 1 (“Listing of all defendants”); ¶ 2 (“Listing of all defendants with known addresses”); ¶ 3 (“Listing of all defendants with unknown addresses”); ¶¶ 16 – 23 (purportedly identifying “Domestic Members” of the “Enterprise”); ¶ 213 (alleging that the plaintiff’s wife, defendant Alina Shipilina (“A. Shipilina”), began working at the “FlashDancers” nightclub in July 2000); ¶¶ 281, 288, and 317 (alleging, generally, that defendant A. Shipilina and “FlashDancers” club managers “arranged” for another “member” of the alleged “Enterprise” to “make ... threatening phone call[s] to the plaintiff”); ¶¶ 326 – 329 (alleging, generally, “upon information and belief,” that the FlashDancers Defendants, together with other named defendants, "entered into an agreement in 2000 with Members Smolin, Asypyan, Volchok, Raketa, Alina Shipilina, Albatross Club and Club Gangster 1 for the importation of prostitutes, pornography and narcotics into the U.S.; providing sponsors, petitioners and employees on visa applications for Russian prostitutes; and recruiting and hiring Russians unlawfully admitted to the U.S."; "sign on as sponsors, petitioners and employers in order to obtain visas for Russian prostitutes"; "swear or declare as true information concerning Russian prostitutes that is intentionally false or omits facts in order to obtain the visas"; and "employ the imported prostitutes to sell sexual services to club customers and Internet subscribers ..."; ¶ 331 (alleging, generally, "upon information and belief," that the FlashDancers Defendants "sell and distribute" "Krasnodar pornography" on the Internet); ¶ 333 – 334 (alleging, generally, "upon information and belief," that the defendant A. Shipilina and certain of the FlashDancers Defendants "agreed to surreptitiously feed imported narcotics to the prostitutes and lap-dancing customers at Flash Dancers in order to keep them returning" and "secretly slip narcotics to the prostitution and lap-dancing customers at Flash Dancers"); ¶¶ 402 and 408-410 (identical, general allegations "upon information and belief," of fraud in immigration matters, but with respect to "Cypriot," rather than "Russian," "prostitutes"); ¶¶ 434 – 442 (general allegations, "upon information and belief," of "hir[ing] illegal Russian immigrants and Russian prostitutes to work as lap dancers and prostitutes"; "promot[ing] prostitution"; not "report[ing] to the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization that the club hires aliens for the purpose of prostitution and other immoral acts"; "fraudulent[ly] conceal[ing]" information from the New York State Liquor Authority"; "misrepresenting" information on a New York State Liquor Authority "license changes application"; "falsely represent[ing] to the U.S. and New York State tax authorities that the club's lap-dancers work as independent contractors when they are actually employees"; and "false[ly] reporting that its lap-dancers are independent contractors ..."); ¶¶ 466 – 481 (general allegations "upon information and belief" of "importing aliens for immoral purposes" in violation of 8 U.S.C. § 1328 and "white slavery" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2421, "material misrepresentations" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1546, "aid[ing] and abet[ting] fraud and misuse of visas" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1546, "failure to report to the INS on alien prostitutes" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 2424, "importation by mail or otherwise for sale and distribution of pornography" in violation of 18 U.S.C.

§§ 1461, 1462 and 1465, "mail fraud" on the New York State Liquor Authority in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1341, "acquir[ing] and dispens[ing] narcotics" in violation of 21 U.S.C. §§ 841 and 952, and "tampering with a witness and informant" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1512, all of which are further alleged to be predicate acts in violation of various sections of "RICO," 18 U.S.C. § 1962(a), (b), (c) and (d)); ¶¶ 684 – 699 (alleging "material and false statements" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1001 and 1621, and 28 U.S.C. § 1746, "hiring of Russian aliens not lawfully admitted to work in the U.S." and "failing to abide by the U.S. employment verification system for aliens" in violation of 8 U.S.C. § 1324a, "promotion of prostitution" in violation of New York Penal Law § 230.25, "false reporting of lap-dancers as independent contractors" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 72 and "New York State Income Earnings and Corporate Taxes 1801," "conspiracies" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 371 and New York Penal Law § 105, "coercion" and "intimidation" in violation of New York Penal Law §§ 135.65 and 215.15, "tampering with a witness" in violation of New York Penal Law § 215.10, "obstruction of an ongoing INS proceeding" in violation of 18 U.S.C. § 1505, and "unlawful imprisonment" of "the plaintiff's process server" in violation of New York Penal Law § 135.10, all of which are alleged under the rubric of "Other Criminal Acts"; and ¶¶ 874m and p-r (activities of FlashDancers Defendants which affect interstate commerce).<sup>9</sup> See, also, JA 114-22 (Supplemental Complaint), at ¶¶ 2-12 (alleging that "Flash Dancers Topless Club," "Jay-Jay Cabaret," Lynn Lepofsky and "Barry-Night Manager Flash Dancers" were part of a group of defendants who had notice of the commencement of this action, knew that the plaintiff-appellant was an attorney admitted in the Southern District of New York "and therefore a Court officer," and that those defendants "or some group of them, most likely Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina," arranged for another alleged (but non-specific) "threatening" telephone call to be made to the plaintiff-appellant).

<sup>9</sup> In the course of the motion practice below, plaintiff-appellant criticized this list of the allegations against the FlashDancers Appellees as incomplete. (See SDNY # 44, Memorandum of Law, at pp. 139-142.) His criticism is not well taken, as the additional allegations to which he pointed are either already enumerated, not made against the FlashDancers Appellees, or cumulative. In any event, even taking the additional allegations cited by plaintiff-appellant into account, the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint fail to state a claim for all of the reasons set forth by the District Court, by the other appellees, and in this brief.

Memorandum and Order. (JA 131-47) See, generally, G. Joseph, Civil

RICO (2nd Ed. 2000) (hereinafter "Civil RICO"), § 23, pp. 157 et seq.:

The complexity of the RICO statute demands precision in pleading. *** RICO complaints are strictly scrutinized because "[t]he mere assertion of a RICO claim ... has an almost inevitable stigmatizing effect on those named as defendants. In fairness to innocent parties, courts should strive to flush out frivolous RICO allegations at an early stage of the litigation." Figueroa Ruiz v. Alegria, 896 F.2d 645, 650 (1st Cir. 1990).

The plaintiff must specifically identify, and factually plead, each element of a viable RICO claim. A trial judge is not "obligated to construct a cause of action from allegations and a complaint filed by a party who was unwilling or unable to plead the cause of action himself." Glenn v. First Nat'l Bank in Grand Junction, 868 F.2d 368 (10th Cir. 1989) ("The law recognizes a significant difference between notice pleading and 'shotgun' pleading"). In the First Circuit's formulation:

[T]he complaint must be anchored in a bed of facts, not allowed to float freely on a sea of bombast. That is to say, a court assessing a claim's sufficiency has no obligation to take matters on blind faith; "despite the highly deferential reading which we accord a litigant's complaint under Rule 12(b)(6), we need not credit bald assertions, periphrastic circumlocutions, unsubstantiated conclusions, or outright vituperation."

Miranda v. Ponce Fed. Bank, 948 F.2d 41, 44 (1st Cir. 1991) (citations omitted). [Emphasis added.]

As the First Circuit observed in Correa-Martinez v. Arrillaga-Belendez, 903 F.2d 49 (1st Cir. 1990):

In the menagerie of the Civil Rules, the tiger patrolling the courthouse gates is rather tame, but "not entirely . . . toothless." ***

Despite the highly deferential reading which we accord a litigant's complaint under Rule 12(b)(6), we need not credit bald assertions, periphrastic circumlocutions, unsubstantiated conclusions, or outright vituperation. *** Moreover, the rule does not entitle a plaintiff to rest on "subjective characterizations" or conclusory descriptions of "a general scenario which could be dominated by unpleaded facts." *** We understand that, for pleading purposes, the dividing line between sufficient facts and insufficient conclusions "is often blurred." *** But the line must be plotted:

It is only when such conclusions are logically compelled, or at least supported, by the stated facts, that is, when the suggested inference rises to what experience indicates is an acceptable level of probability, that 'conclusions' become 'facts' for pleading purposes.

[Citations omitted; emphasis added.]

As the appeal at bar proves beyond peradventure of doubt, "[g]auzy generalities, unsupported conclusions, subjective characterizations, and problematic suppositions can sprout as easily as crabgrass in an imaginative litigant's (or lawyer's) word processor." The Dartmouth Review v. Dartmouth College, 889 F.2d 13 (1st Cir. 1989) (emphasis added).

As Judge Robert Sweet recently explained in West 79th Street Corp. v. Congregation Kahl Minchas Chinuch, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 19501, No. 03 CV 8606 (S.D.N.Y. 2004):

It has been suggested that "the civil provisions of [RICO] are the most misused statutes in the federal corpus of law." Spoto v. Herkimer County Trust, 2000 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 6057, No. 99 Civ. 1476, 2000 WL 533293, at *1 (N.D.N.Y. 2000); see also Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F. Supp. 2d 392, 394 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) ("I surmise that every member of the federal bench has before him or her at least one -- and possibly more -- garden variety fraud or breach of contract cases that some Plaintiff has attempted to transform into a vehicle for treble damages by resort to what [has been] referred to as 'the litigation equivalent of a thermonuclear device' -- a civil RICO suit.") (quoting Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F. Supp. 2d 340, 346 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (quoting Katzman v. Victoria's Secret Catalogue, 167 F.R.D. 649, 655 (S.D.N.Y. 1996) (citations omitted), aff'd, 113 F.3d 1229 (2d Cir. 1997))). "Because the 'mere assertion of a RICO claim . . . has an almost inevitable stigmatizing effect on those named as defendants, . . . courts should strive to flush out frivolous RICO allegations at an early stage of the litigation.'" Katzman, 167 F.R.D. at 655 (quoting Figueroa Ruiz v. Alegria, 896 F.2d 645, 650 (1st Cir. 1990)); accord Schmidt, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 346. To this end, courts must be wary of putative civil RICO claims that are nothing more than sheep masquerading in wolves' clothing. [Emphasis added.]

Moreover, plaintiff-appellant's only specific allegations of alleged wrong-doing by any of the FlashDancers Appellees - - his claim that Ms. Shipilina and either "Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers" or "Flash Dancers Manager 3", "4" or "5" (as the case may - - or may not - - have been) "arranged" for an unknown individual to make three (3) telephone calls to plaintiff-appellant, over a period of six (6) months (JA 49 and 52, ¶¶ 281, 288, and 317; emphasis added) - - do not allege predicate Civil RICO acts by any of these FlashDancers Appellees, much less by Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. or its "chairman/chief executive officer" (Ms. Lepofsky). In this regard, the Court's attention is called to plaintiff-appellant's careful delineation between the alleged decision to have the calls made for an allegedly illegal purpose, which plaintiff-appellant, in each instance, attributes only to "Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina" (see JA 49 and 52, at ¶¶ 280, 287, and 316), and his allegation of the actual conduct attributed to either "Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers" or "Flash Dancers Manager 3", or "4" or "5". (JA 49 and 52, ¶¶ 281, 288, and 317). In each instance, the only alleged act of which the latter are accused is allegedly assisting Ms. Shipilina in "arranging" to have an unknown individual<sup>10</sup> make a telephone call on her behalf. There is no allegation that either "Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers" or "Flash Dancers Manager 3", or "4" or "5", gave any instruction to the caller as to what to say, or how to say it, or had any knowledge whatsoever as to the alleged substance of any (much less all) of the calls.

<sup>10</sup> Plaintiff-appellant alleges that the caller used the fictitious aliases "John Madison" and John Pierre, and "upon information and belief ... is a member of American Organized Crime Gang 1." (JA 28, ¶¶ 44-45; JA 49, ¶ 282; JA 50, ¶ 289; JA 52, ¶ 318) The basis of plaintiff-appellant's "information and belief" is nowhere alleged.

These allegations do not support a Civil RICO claim against the FlashDancers Appellees. They do not implicate Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. nor Lynn Lepofsky in any way. Moreover, even as to "Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers" or "Flash Dancers Manager 3", or "4" or "5", these bare-bones allegations of helping Ms. Shipilina "arrange" for telephone calls in furtherance of a scheme expressly attributed by the plaintiff-appellant to "Members Mundy, Petrovich and Alina Shipilina" (i.e., not to any of the FlashDancers Appellees, and particularly not to "Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers" nor "Flash Dancers Manager 3", "4" or "5"), do not allege scienter, a specific predicate act, a nexus to interstate or foreign commerce,<sup>11</sup> or proximate causation of any injury to plaintiff-appellant's business or property. See, generally, Civil RICO, §§ 12 -15 and 23(B) (citing cases).

"Lumping" defendants together, so that it is not possible to ascertain which allegation is made against which specific defendant, is another ground for dismissal under Fed.R.Civ.P. 12(b)(6). See, e.g., Goren v. New Vision Int'l, Inc. 156 F.3d 721, 730 (7th Cir. 1988) ("a RICO plaintiff must plead the specified facts as to each defendant. It cannot avoid Rule 12(b)(6) by "lumping together the defendants."); accord, In Re Mastercard Int'l Inc., 132 F.Supp.2d 468 (E.D. La. 2001). At bar, this rule applies both to plaintiff-appellant's many multi-defendant allegations, and particularly to his allegations that "Shipilina and [either] Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers or Flash Dancers Manager 3" or "4" or "5" (as the case may - - or may not - - have been) "arranged" for the alleged telephone calls to be made - - classic "lumped" allegations making it impossible to determine what mens rea and what misconduct is attributed to Ms. Shipilina and what (if any) is actually attributed to the others.

Conclusion

For all of the reasons set forth in the District Court's Memorandum and Order (JA 131-47), as well as the reasons set forth above and in the accompanying briefs of all other defendants-appellees, the Judgment dismissing this action, with prejudice, should be affirmed on appeal, with costs.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Appellee Alina A. Shipilina ("Shipilina"), by her attorney, Jack Sachs, makes this submission in opposition to Appellant Roy Den Hollander's ("Hollander") appeal of the final order of the United States District Court, Southern District of New York (the "District Court"), Castel, J., Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al., 340 F.Supp2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2004), dismissing the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint with prejudice.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether Hollander failed to adequately allege the constituent elements necessary to establish his claims against Shipilina for violations of the civil enforcement provisions of RICO?
2. Did the District Court correctly dismiss Hollander's Complaint and Supplemental Complaint with prejudice pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6)?
3. Did the District Court correctly deny Hollander the opportunity to file an Amended Complaint?

STATEMENT OF SHIPILINA'S POSITION

Appellees Kuba, Mundy & Associates, et al., by their attorneys, McManus, Collura & Richter, P.C., have submitted to this Court a Reply Brief, dated October 12, 2005, which most clearly and comprehensively outlines the case, including the flights of fancy in Hollander's pleadings, the florid and offensive language in his brief, and his continuous vilification of Shipilina throughout.

Appellee Shipilina, therefore, herewith joins in and endorses the brief submitted by Kuba, Mundy & Associates, et al.

MUNICIPAL APPELLEE'S BRIEF

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This action alleges, inter alia, violations of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act, 18 USC §1961-68 ("RICO"), and various pendant state law claims, including intentional infliction of emotional distress, abuse of process, and malicious prosecution. Plaintiff-appellant ("plaintiff"), appeals pro se from a judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District (Castel, D.J.), entered September 30, 2004, which dismissed the RICO action for failure to state a claim, and declined to exercise pendent jurisdiction over the state law claims.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Did the District Court properly grant defendants' motions to dismiss the RICO causes of action?

2. Having granted defendants' motions to dismiss plaintiff's federal claims, did the District Court properly decline to exercise pendant subject matter jurisdiction over plaintiff's state law claims against the City?

3. In any event, were all state causes of action against the City barred by plaintiff's failure to file a timely notice of claim?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

On or about April 18, 2003, plaintiff filed a summons and complaint in District Court (23-113).<sup>1</sup> The voluminous complaint alleged a wide-reaching international criminal enterprise, which allegedly "generate[d] profits worldwide from numerous criminal activities that include without limitation drug trafficking, money laundering, tax evasion, immigration fraud, prostitution, pornography, white slavery, bribery, mail and wire fraud, murder, extortion, coercion and terror" (24 ¶1). Plaintiff alleged such RICO violations on the part of numerous domestic and international participants, centering largely upon his estranged wife, Alina Shipilina ("Shipilina") and her attorneys, Nicholas J. Mundy ("Mundy") and Peter Petrovich ("Petrovich").

Robert Henning, a detective in the New York City Police Department ("Henning" or "the municipal appellee"), was also alleged to have participated in the criminal enterprise. According to the complaint, on March 27, 2002, Henning telephoned plaintiff "in the Kafkaesque hours before 9 a.m." and instructed him to surrender for arrest at a time worked out with his attorney, pursuant to Shipilina's report that he violated an order of protection (51 ¶308-09). The complaint alleged that Henning placed the call in exchange for "bribes or rewards in the form of money or sexual services" from Shipilina, for the purpose of intimidating plaintiff into ceasing cooperation with the Immigration and Naturalization Service ("INS") or reopening an alleged criminal investigation against Shipilina in Russia (51 ¶307). The order of protection was alleged to be invalid (52 ¶311). After a conversation with plaintiff's attorneys, Henning allegedly referred the matter to the Queens County District Attorney's office, which declined to prosecute (52 ¶314).

Plaintiff admitted in the complaint that Henning never placed him under arrest (52 ¶314). In fact, Henning was not alleged to have any further connection to the international crime ring.

The complaint alleged seven causes of action arising from Henning's participation in the purported criminal enterprises. The first, second, third and fourth causes of action alleged violations of RICO sections 18 U.S.C. §§ 1962(a), (b), (c) and (d) (110 ¶¶ 886-93). The fifth cause of action alleged intentional infliction of emotional distress (111 ¶¶ 894-95). The sixth cause of action alleged abuse of process (111 ¶¶ 898-99) and the seventh cause of action alleged malicious prosecution (111 ¶¶ 896-99). Plaintiff's sixth and seventh causes of action alternatively alleged prima facie tort (111 ¶¶ 896-99).

On September 22, 2003, Mundy and Petrovich filed a motion to dismiss the complaint for, inter alia, failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure ("FRCP") 12(b)(6) (9 ¶ 21).<sup>2</sup> On October 8, 2003, Henning filed a similar motion (11 ¶28). As to the federal claims, Henning joined in the arguments made by Mundy and Petrovich. As to the pendent state causes of action, Henning argued that they should also be dismissed. The claims were not only time-barred, but also fatally deficient in that plaintiff failed to file a timely notice of claim against the City of New York, a condition precedent to bringing a tort claim against a police officer.

Appended to the Henning's motion to dismiss was the Declaration of Assistant Corporation Counsel Vikrant Pawar, dated October 6, 2003 ("Pawar Declaration") (11 ¶28). Therein, Pawar established that the City of New York had searched its records and determined that no notice of claim had been received from plaintiff with respect to the incident alleged in the complaint.

<sup>2</sup> The appendix does not contain the motions to dismiss, or, indeed, any of the papers filed by the various appellees. Accordingly, citations as to these papers refer to the relevant entries in the docket sheet of the District Court.

DECISION BELOW

Assuming plaintiff's evidence to be true, and granting him the benefit of every inference (136-37), the District Court, in its September 28, 2004 decision dismissing the complaint (131-147), found that the complaint failed to state a cause of action under RICO. Even assuming his complaint stated a claim for violations of the RICO statute, the District Court held that plaintiff failed to allege facts sufficient to show that "the unlawful activity in question was both the proximate cause of an injury compensable under the statute and the actual cause" (138). Moreover, the Court held that plaintiff failed to allege "that he was injured by reason of any purported violation of §1962" (144). Having dismissed the federal action, the District Court also declined to exercise pendent jurisdiction over the state law claims asserted against Henning and the other defendants (144-46).

RELEVANT STATUTES

New York General Municipal Law ("GML")

§ 50-e. Notice of claim

(1) When service required; time for service; upon whom service required.

In any case founded upon tort where a notice of claim is required by law as a condition precedent to the commencement of an action or special proceeding against a public corporation, as defined in the general construction law, or any officer, appointee or employee thereof, the notice of claim shall...be served...within ninety days after the claim arises... except that in wrongful death actions, the ninety days shall run from the appointment of a representative of the decedent's estate.

(5) Application for leave to serve a late notice.

Upon application, the court, in its discretion, may extend the time to serve a notice of claim specified in paragraph (a) of subdivision one. The extension shall not exceed the time limited for the commencement of an action by the claimant against a public corporation.

§ 50-i Presentation of tort claims; commencement of actions.

(1) No action or special proceeding shall be prosecuted or maintained against a city...for personal injury, wrongful death or damage to real or personal property alleged to have been sustained by reason of the negligence or wrongful act of such city ... or of any officer, agent or employee thereof ... unless, (a) a notice of claim shall have been made and served upon the city ... in compliance with section fifty-e of this chapter, (b) it shall appear by and as an allegation in the complaint or moving papers that at least thirty days have elapsed since the service of such notice and that adjustment or payment thereof has been neglected or refused, and (c) the action or special proceeding shall be commenced within one year and ninety days after the happening of the event upon which the claim is based; except that wrongful death actions shall be commence within two years after the happening of the death.

POINT I*THE DISTRICT COURT PROPERLY DISMISSED
PLAINTIFF'S FEDERAL CAUSES OF ACTION FOR FAILURE TO STATE A CLAIM.

With respect to the propriety of the District Court's dismissal of plaintiff's federal claims, the municipal appellee hereby adopts the thoughtful and well-reasoned arguments of appellees Mundy and Petrovich. For a full analysis of those issues, we respectfully refer the Court to the brief filed on their behalf.

POINT II*ONCE IT DETERMINED THAT PLAINTIFF'S FEDERAL CLAIMS WERE MERITLESS, THE DISTRICT COURT PROPERLY DECLINED TO EXERCISE PENDENT JURISDICTION OVER PLAINTIFF'S STATE LAW CLAIMS.

As plaintiff does not contest (App. Br., at 1-2), the District Court, having properly dismissed all federal claims contained in the complaint, correctly declined to exercise pendent jurisdiction over the remaining state law claims. "The decision to exercise pendent jurisdiction is vested in the sound discretion of the district court." Grace v. Rosenstock, 228 F.3d 40, 55 (2d Cir. 2000), citing United Mine Workers of America v. Gibbs, 383 U.S. 715, 725-28 (1966). "The discretion is limited, however, by the consideration that needless decisions of state law should be avoided." Id. Thus, far from being an abuse of discretion to decline to exercise pendent jurisdiction here, the District Court would have abused its discretion in maintaining jurisdiction over the pendent claims once it determined that the RICO action was to be dismissed. Accordingly, this Court should affirm the dismissal of plaintiff's state law claims as a proper exercise of discretion.

POINT III

IN THE ALTERNATIVE, PLAINTIFF'S STATE LAW CLAIMS WERE PROPERLY DISMISSED
BECAUSE HE FAILED TO FILE A TIMELY NOTICE OF CLAIM AS REQUIRED UNDER NEW YORK'S GENERAL MUNICIPAL LAW.

Even assuming that the District Court erred in dismissing the federal causes of action, dismissal of the state law claims against Henning should be affirmed. Plaintiff failed to file a timely notice of claim with the City of New York, a condition precedent to bringing a tort action against a police officer. Moreover, as the relevant statute of limitations has now expired, plaintiff's state law claims are time-barred.

Under New York's General Municipal Law ("GML"), a notice of claim is a condition precedent to bringing a tort action against a municipality or any of its officers, agents or employees. GML §§50-e and 50-i. GML §50-e requires that a notice of claim be filed within ninety days of the accrual of the cause of action. That requirement has been strictly construed by the New York State Court of Appeals, as well as this Court. Baez v. New York City Health and Hosp. Corp., 80 N.Y.2d 571, 576; 592 N.Y.S.2d 640 (1992); Shakur v. McGrath, 517 F.2d 983, 985 (2d. Cir. 1975).

The purpose of the notice of claim requirement is to provide a public corporation with an adequate opportunity to investigate the circumstances surrounding the incident, interview witnesses if possible, and to explore the merits of the claim while the information is still readily available. See O'Brien v. City of Syracuse, 54 N.Y.2d 353 (1981); Adkins v. City of New York, 43 N.Y.2d 346 (1977); Gilliam v. City of New York, 250 A.D.2d 680 (2d Dept., 1998); Simms v. City of New York, 207 A.D.2d 480 (2d Dept., 1994).

A plaintiff's failure to timely file a notice of claim requires dismissal of pendent state tort claims against the City or its employees in a federal action. Brown v. Metropolitan Transportation Authority, 717 F. Supp. 257, 259 (S.D.N.Y. 1989). In fact, under GML §50-i(1)(b), the mere failure to plead compliance with this requirement mandates dismissal for failure to state a cause of action. See Alifieris v. American Airlines, Inc., 63 N.Y.2d 370 (1984); cf. C.S.A. Contr. Corp. v. N.Y. City Sch. Constr. Auth., 5 N.Y.3d 189, 192 (2005); Caban v. New York City Transit Auth., 207 A.D.2d 287, 288 (2d Dept. 1994).

Plaintiff did not allege in his complaint that he filed a notice of claim. In any event, assuming arguendo that the facts of the complaint are true, the cause of action against Henning accrued in the "Kafkaesque" early morning hours of March 27, 2002, when he allegedly placed the offending telephone call to plaintiff's home (111 ¶308). The 90-day period in which plaintiff could file his notice of claim therefore expired on June 27, 2002. According to the Pawar Declaration, no notice of claim was ever filed by plaintiff, during the relevant time period or thereafter, prior to service and filing of the complaint. Thus, plaintiff failed to satisfy a condition precedent to filing a personal injury action against a City employee.

Furthermore, at no time did plaintiff move for permission to file a late notice of claim, nor may he do so at this juncture, because the time in which he might have been permitted to file a late notice of claim has already passed. The statute of limitations applicable to pendent state tort actions is determined by reference to the state's law regarding statute of limitations. Guaranty Trust Co. v. York, 326 U.S. 99 (1943). The time in which a late notice may be filed "shall not exceed the time limited for the commencement of an action by the claimant against the public corporation." GML §50-e(5); Pierson v. City of New York, 56 N.Y.2d 950, 954-55 (1982).

Under New York law, all personal injury claims brought against a city or any of its officers, agents or employees must be commenced within one year and ninety days after the occurrence of the event upon which the claim is based. GML §50-i; Diggs-White v. City of New York, 306 A.D.2d 371 (2d Dept. 2003); Norr v. Spiegler, 72 A.D.2d 20, 22-23 (1st Dept. 1980), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 661, (1981); McLaurin v. New Rochelle Police Officers, 373 F. Supp. 2d 385, 401 (S.D.N.Y.

2005). The statute of limitations in GML §50-i is strictly construed. Galloway v. N.Y. City Police Dep't, 7 A.D.3d 444, 445 (1st Dept. 2004).

Here, the statute of limitations expired on June 27, 2003. Plaintiff made no judicial application to file a late notice of claim prior to that date. Any conceivable state law claims must therefore be dismissed for failure to satisfy a condition precedent.

In sum, the District Court correctly determined that the complaint failed to state a cause of action under the federal RICO statute, and properly declined to exercise pendent jurisdiction over the state claims. Even if the RICO claims should be reinstated by this Court, however, the dismissal of the state causes of actions should be affirmed.

CONCLUSION

THE ORDER APPEALED FROM

New York, N.Y. 10007

Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Second Circuit Court of Appeals, 04-6700-CV

Dear Mr. Bass:

I am moving in the above captioned case to strike the entire brief of defendants-appellees Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich for violation of Fed. R. App. P. §32 and Local Rule §32; or in the alternative, to strike various designated parts of that brief for violations of Fed. R. App. P. §§28, 30 and Local Rules §§11, 28 and the Blue Book's legal citation system; and for monetary sanctions.

In addition, I am requesting that various designated parts of the brief for defendant-appellees Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lynn Lepofsky, Barry Night Manager and Flash Dancers Manager 1 to 5 be struck for violations of Fed. R. App. P. §30 and Local Rules §§11, 28 and for monetary sanctions.

The motion also requests rejecting the brief of defendant-appellee Municipal or Detective Robert Henning for violating Fed. R. App. P. §32; or in the alternative, striking various designated parts of the brief for violations of Fed. R. App. P. §30 and Local Rules §11; and for monetary sanctions.

A sentence in the defendant-appellee Alina A. Shipilina's brief is requested to be stricken in violation of Local Rule §28 and the motion asks for monetary sanctions.

Defendant-appellee Bank of Cyprus failed to file a brief for which the motion requests the decision below be reversed with respect to the Bank and monetary sanctions be levied.

One copy of the motion papers is enclosed.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

-----X
ROY DEN HOLLANDER

Plaintiff-Appellant,

Docket No. 03 CV 2717

- against -

DECLARATION

Flash Dancers Topless Club et al.

Defendant-Appellees
-----X

Anne P. Richter, an attorney duly admitted to practice law before the Courts of the State of New York and the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, declares the following statements to be true under the penalties of perjury:

1. I am a member of the law firm of McManus, Collura & Richter, P.C., attorneys for Defendants-Appellees, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich (collectively "Mundy"), in the above entitled action and as such I am fully familiar with all the facts and proceedings previously had herein.

2. I submit this Declaration in opposition to the Plaintiff-Appellant, Roy Den Hollander's ("Hollander"), Motion to Strike the Brief, or portions of the Brief, of Mundy, as well as, the Briefs, or portions of the Briefs, of the other Defendants-Appellees, and for monetary sanctions, together with such other and further relief as this Court deems just and proper.

3. On September 28, 2004, Judge Castel of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (the "District Court") dismissed Hollander's pro se Complaint and Supplemental Complaint, filed against a purported segment of the "Russian mafia" (comprised of 63 domestic and foreign defendants worldwide), with prejudice (the "Order").

4. Hollander subsequently filed a Notice of Appeal of the Order to this Court. On June 14, 2005, Hollander called me to discuss the Joint Appendix. On June 15, 2005, I requested, in writing, that Hollander incorporate 26 documents listed on the District Court's Docket Report into the Joint Appendix. See Exhibit A attached to the Declaration of Edward S. Rudofsky in opposition to Hollander's Motion to Strike and for Sanctions. Thereafter, Hollander submitted his final designation of documents to be incorporated into the Joint Appendix, which failed to include the documents I requested. Instead, the Joint Appendix merely included the documents that he unilaterally selected. Although I initially requested that Hollander include various documents in the Joint Appendix, I did not object to his limited Joint Appendix at that time, because (a) the Rules of this Court provide that reference can be made to District Court Docket Report, (b) I did not want undue burden Hollander with the extensive costs of such inclusion and (c) I did not want engage in motion practice seeking to compel Hollander to include documents that can simply be cited by referencing the District Court Docket Report.

5. On August 9, 2005, Hollander filed his Brief in support of his appeal of the Order as well as his Joint Appendix. On October 12, 2005, Briefs were filed in opposition on behalf Mundy and the other Appellees.

6. Hollander has now filed a Motion to Strike Mundy's Brief, or have certain portions of the Brief redacted, and has requested monetary sanctions. In summary, the basis of his application is that: (1) Mundy violated Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure ("F.R.A.P.") §30, Local Rule 11(e) and Local Rule 28 by citing documents outside the Joint Appendix, including their Memorandum of Law below; (2) Mundy violated F.R.A.P. §28(a)(7) and Local Rule 28 by making remarks, irrelevant to the appeal, against Hollander; (3) Mundy violated F.R.A.P. §28(a)(6) as their Brief's "Statement of the Case" failed to include a proper description of the case's nature, course of proceedings and disposition; (4) Mundy violated F.R.A.P. §32(a)(4) and Local Rule 32(a) by submitting a Brief with the right and top margins less than one inch; and (5) Mundy violated the legal citations system of the Blue Book by failing to cite specific pages when referencing a case.

7. In respect to Hollander's first assertion that Mundy improperly cited documents outside the Joint Appendix in violation of F.R.A.P. §30, Local Rule 11(e) and Local Rule 28, Mundy is permitted to cite documents included in the record. F.R.A.P. §30(a)(2) explicitly states that "[p]arts of the record may be relied on by the court or the parties even though not included in the appendix.” Similarly, F.R.A.P. §30(b)(1) indicates that, in determining the contents of the appendix, “[t]he parties must not engage in unnecessary designation of parts of the record, because the entire record is available to the court.” F.R.A.P. §10(a)(1) confirms that all original papers and exhibits, including the Memorandum of Law, filed in the District Court are part of the Record on Appeal.

8. The Rules are clear that Mundy was permitted to cite documents referenced listed on the District Court’s Docket Report and which are part of the record. Hence, Hollander’s frivolous attempt to shield this Court from reviewing the full record, which contains a realistic assessment of the procedural history and pertinent legal issues relating to this matter, should not be countenanced.

9. Hollander’s second assertion that Mundy violated F.R.A.P. §28 and Local Rule 28 by making remarks, irrelevant to the appeal, against Hollander is equally unavailing. The Brief set forth by Mundy and the facts contained therein are logically arranged, concise, supported by documentary evidence and provide a comprehensive and realistic assessment of the facts and history related to this litigation. In the event Hollander disagrees with certain assertions and characterizations, his remedy is to address such concerns in his Reply Brief, or this Court can simply decide to determine his appeal without reference to such facts.

The remedy he requests, namely to simply strike the facts he disagrees with or dislikes, is improper.

10. Likewise, Hollander's third assertion that Mundy violated F.R.A.P. §28 by failing to set forth a proper "Statement of the Case" is meritless. The Statement of the Case set forth in Mundy's Brief speaks for itself and provides a proper description of the course of proceedings related to this matter, the nature of the case, and the disposition below.

11. Hollander's fourth assertion that Mundy violated F.R.A.P. §32 and Local Rule 32(a) by submitting a Brief with the right and top margins less than one inch is simply absurd and shows the extent Hollander will go to abusively litigate this matter. I can personally attest that the margins on the Brief submitted by Mundy were set in my computer at one inch on all sides. Perhaps the appellate printer inadvertently copied the Brief to reflect margins slightly less than one inch. If the Court wants the brief reprinted to correct what appears to be less than 1/16" discrepancy. We will have the brief reprinted.

12. Lastly, Hollander asserts that Mundy violated the legal citation system of the Blue Book by failing to cite specific pages when referencing a case or proposition. Hollander fails to recognize that Mundy cited, in certain instances, to cases for general propositions as opposed to specific references. In the event Mundy's Brief fails to include a specific page number for a particular proposition, this was inadvertent and Hollander's request that the Court reject the Brief is egregious.

13. Hollander's request for monetary sanctions is patently frivolous and is itself a sanctionable request.

EDWARD S. RUDOFISKY hereby declares the following to be true under the penalty of perjury:

1. I am a member of the firm of Zane and Rudofsky, attorneys for defendants-appellees Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. d/b/a FlashDancers (s/h/a "Flash Dancers Topless Club"), Lynn Lepofsky, "Barry Night Manager Flash Dancers," and "Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5" (collectively, "FlashDancers Appellees"); am fully familiar with the facts and circumstances set forth herein; and submit this declaration in opposition to the motion of plaintiff-appellant, Roy Den Hollander, to strike certain portions of the brief filed herein on behalf of the FlashDancers Appellees ("FlashDancers Brief"), as well as portions of the briefs of other defendants-appellees, and for monetary sanctions.

2. In his moving papers, Mr. Hollander asserts that the FlashDancers Brief violates Fed.R.App.P. 30 by citing to documents not in the Joint Appendix and quoting from a memorandum of law filed in the District Court.

3. Mr. Hollander was requested by counsel for the Kuba, Mundy defendants-appellees, on her own behalf and on behalf of declarant, to include twenty-six (26) designated documents in the Joint Appendix (see Exhibit A hereto), but ultimately (and wrongfully) declined to do so.

4. Be that as it may, the FlashDancers Brief cites to documents included in the Record on Appeal as specifically permitted by Fed.R.App.P. 30(a)(2): "Parts of the record may be relied on by ... the parties even though not included in the appendix." (Emphasis added.)

5. In light of the portion of Fed.R.App.P. 30(a)(2) expressly permitting reliance on "parts of the record ... even though not included in the appendix," counsel for defendants-appellees were under no obligation to raise Mr. Hollander's refusal to include defendants-appellees' requested documents in the Appendix at the CAMP Conference with Staff Counsel.

6. Memoranda of law filed in the District Court are part of the Record on Appeal. See Fed.R.App.P. 10(a)(1). In objecting to a quotation from a memorandum of law filed by the Kuba, Mundy defendants-appellees, Mr. Hollander is confusing Fed. R.App.P. 10(a) (1) with the portion of Rule 30(a)(2) which prohibits the inclusion of memoranda of law in the Appendix unless they have independent relevance.

7. Mr. Hollander also asserts that certain assertions in the FlashDancers Brief are (according to Mr. Hollander) untrue and irrelevant, and thereafter (likewise according to Mr. Hollander) should be stricken pursuant to Local Court of Appeals Rule 28.

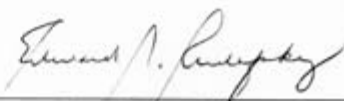

8. The 20 page-long FlashDancers Brief does not violate Local Rule 28. It is "logically arranged, with proper headings, concise and free from burdensome, immaterial and scandalous matter" in accordance with Local Rule 28[1]. Obviously, Mr. Hollander disagrees with certain assertions and characterizations made in the FlashDancers Brief. His remedy, however, is to address these items in his Reply Brief. Thereafter, should the Court, upon review, determine that any portion of the FlashDancers Brief is untrue or irrelevant (as Mr. Hollander claims, but which we respectfully urge is not the case), the Court will (obviously) disregard that portion in deciding the appeal, as it would in any other matter.

9. Furthermore, the branch of Mr. Hollander's motion alleging a violation of Local Rule 28 cannot be determined without review of the briefs and record. Accordingly, in the unlikely event this branch of the motion is not summarily denied as meritless on its face, it should be referred to the panel which hears the appeal.

10. The request for monetary sanctions is patently frivolous.

WHEREFORE, declarant urges the Court to deny the motion to strike in all respects, together with all such other, further and different relief as is just, necessary and proper.

Re: Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club
Docket No. 04-6700-cv

Dear Ms. Young:

I am of counsel to Michael A. Cardozo, Corporation Counsel of the City of New York and the attorney of record for defendant-appellee Robert Henning ("the municipal appellee") on the above-entitled appeal. We oppose appellant's motion, dated October 20, 2005, to strike portions of the appellees' briefs and for sanctions.

First, as to appellant's allegation that the municipal appellee's brief violated FRAP §30, we respectfully direct the Court's attention to the Declaration of Edward S. Rudofsky in Opposition to Motion To Strike, dated October 26, 2005, and join in that well-reasoned opposition.

Appellant further contends that the municipal appellee's brief should be rejected because it did not contain the correct caption. He does not, however, indicate in what manner he believes the caption to be incorrect. Appended hereto are excerpts from the public docket sheet, setting forth the official caption for this matter. We believe it to be identical to the one utilized in our brief.

Respectfully submitted,

FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

Roy Den Hollander

Appellant-Plaintiff,

Docket No. 04-6700-cv

v.

Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.,

Appellees-Defendants.

-----X

REPLY TO FLASHDANCERS AND HENNING’S RESPONSES TO MOTION TO REJECT CERTAIN DEFENDANT-APPELLEES’ BRIEFS OR STRIKE DESIGNATED PARTS OF BRIEFS AND FOR SANCTIONS.

Plaintiff-appellant, Roy Den Hollander, submits this Reply to (1) Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lynn Lepofsky, Barry Night Manager and Flash Dancers Manager 1 to 5 (collectively “FlashDancers”) and (2) Municipal or Robert Henning’s response to plaintiff’s motion to strike certain briefs or sections of briefs and for sanctions.

FlashDancers Response

The Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure (“F.R.A.P.”) §27(a)(2)(B)(ii) requires that an affidavit submitted with a motion “must contain only factual information, not legal argument” (emphasis added), and F.R.A.P. §27(a)(3)(A) applies this requirement to any response filed to a motion. FlashDancers’ attorneys submitted an affidavit titled “Declaration in Opposition to Motion to Strike, etc.” (“FlashDancers Opposition”) in which they mix factual assertions and legal arguments in violation of F.R.A.P. §27(a)(2)(B)(ii). Plaintiff requests rejection of this response filed by FlashDancers’ attorneys. Since the time to respond under F.R.A.P. §27(a)(3)(A) has now passed, they should not be permitted to correct this latest violation in their continuing disregard of the rules.

*****

FlashDancers’ attorneys try to excuse the references in the FlashDancers Brief to documents not in the Joint Appendix by falsely claiming plaintiff wrongly declined to include them. FlashDancers Opposition ¶13. To support this assertion, they include in FlashDancers Opposition at Exhibit A only the first of four letters detailing the negotiations over the Appendix. Taken together, the letters show that the defendants-appellees ignored their obligations under F.R.A.P. §30(b) in determining the contents of the Appendix:

June 15, 2005 letter, Exhibit A: Mundy and FlashDancers’ attorneys designated six memoranda of law totaling 168 pages, 29 extraneous exhibits consisting of 54 separate documents totaling 178 pages of which 10 exhibits made up of 23 separate documents and 54 pages were stricken by the District Court, Disqualify Order p.2-2, October 27, 2004, A-151, and various orders for time extensions.

July 16, 2005 letter, Exhibit B: Plaintiff revises his designation of the Joint Appendix to six documents and three pages of quotes from his District Court Memorandum in Opposition, A 126-130, to which defendants subsequently agreed. In this letter, plaintiff asked whether defendants had finalized their designations for the Appendix following the CAMP conference on June 21, 2005.

July 21, 2005 letter, Exhibit C: Mundy, FlashDancers and Shipilina's attorneys stated through Mundy's attorney "We do not have any objection to the documents you wish to include in the appendix ...," and went on to suggest the inclusion of the docket entries and the notice of appeal but no other documents.

July 23, 2005 letter [mistakenly dated July 16, 2005], Exhibit D: Plaintiff specifically states he is not including the extraneous documents Mundy and FlashDancers' lawyers originally designated in the June 15, 2005 letter.

F.R.A.P. §30(b)(2) requires that when the appellant informs the appellees that parts of their designations are unnecessary, it is the appellees' obligation to advance the costs to include those designations. Not only didn't Mundy and FlashDancers' attorneys advance any cost, they didn't even respond to the plaintiff denying most of their designations. Given the conduct of appellees' attorneys, a reasonable man would conclude they agreed to the plaintiff's final designation. A realistic man, however, would conclude they were trying to set a trap by which they could use the extraneous documents they filed in the District Court to fabricate support for their misleading and irrelevant allegations in their appeal briefs—all without the cost of printing these documents in the Joint Appendix. In effect, their strategy is to manipulate this Court into doing their work for them, but if this Court chooses not to thumb through over a hundred pages without specific cites to check defendants’ factual allegations, they hope this Court will still accept their ad hominem and misrepresentations on faith and use them in reaching its decision.

Under Local Rule §11(e), FlashDancers’ lawyers have an “obligation under F.R.A.P. §30 to reproduce in an appendix to their briefs ... exhibits ... to which they ‘wish to direct the particular attention of the court.’” They didn’t do this although they had the opportunity.

While F.R.A.P. §30(a)(2) states: “Parts of the record may be relied on by the court or the parties even though not included in the appendix,” (emphasis added), FlashDancers’ lawyers abuse this rule that exists to prevent a procedural miscarriage of justice. By citing to Mundy’s Memorandum of Law in the District Court, which in turn refers to 21 extraneous documents totaling 114 pages, FlashDancers’ attorneys disguise the real number of documents they rely on outside the Joint Appendix to five as opposed to the 21 plus three memoranda of law. This ruse in citing also allows them to avoid giving the page or paragraph numbers for particular documents, once again shifting their work and expenses to the Court while making factual allegations that belong in an answer at the District Court level.

The disregard of the rules by FlashDancers’ attorneys led them to citing three memoranda of law, Flash Dancers Brief p.2-1,2, n. 1-3, p.3-1, n. 4-5, p.9-1, p.13, n.9, and even arguing that a quote, FlashDancers Opposition ¶6, from Mundy’s memorandum to dismiss comparing the Complaint to a Tom Clancy novel, FlashDancers Brief p.2-1, had independent relevance.

Flash Dancers’ attorneys quote Local Rule §28(1) but for some reason omitted the word “irrelevant.” FlashDancers Opposition ¶8. That’s what this motion accuses them of doing by making factual allegations irrelevant to the issues at hand. It does not accuse them of failing to submit admissible evidence as they indicate with the phrase “untrue or/and irrelevant,” id. ¶¶7, 8. And no, I’m not conceding their mountain of documents is admissible. The appeal before this Court is not from a summary judgment or trial verdict—no evidentiary hearing is needed by a panel of judges as FlashDancers’ attorneys request. Id. ¶¶8, 9. The legal remedy this motion requests is not a decision on whether FlashDancers’ factual allegations are true, but whether their allegations have any place on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) appeal—which they don’t. In an appeal of a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal, this Court restricts its inquiry to “facts stated on the face of the complaint, in documents appended to the complaint or incorporated in the complaint by reference, and to matters of which judicial notice may be taken.” Allen v. WestPoint-Pepperell, Inc., 945 F.2d 40, 44 (2d Cir. 1991); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c). A search of over a hundred pages of documents is not necessary for this Court to reach a decision—just look to the Joint Appendix.

The FlashDancers Brief exposes another ploy also used by Mundy’s lawyers to shift their work to this Court, hide their misleading statements and which, in part, made the plaintiff’s motion necessary. FlashDancers’ lawyers rely on 14 cases, four of them are imbedded in block quotations from cases, which leaves 10 that they actually cite in their narrative. In seven of these 10 cases cited, they leave out the specific pages. The incomplete citations with their page and paragraph locations in the FlashDancers Brief are: Old Time Enters p.7-2, Lubin p.8-1, Glenn p.14-3, Correa-Martinez p.14-5, The Dartmouth Review, p.15-3, West 79th Street Corp. p.15-4, In re MasterCard Int’l Inc. p.19-1. FlashDancers’ attorneys know better, they have Blue Books that call for specific page citations “to allow the reader [Court] to locate a cited source accurately and efficiently.” Blue Book, §§1.2 to 1.4 (17th ed.). Yet, they disregard even these rules.

FlashDancers’ attorneys fault the plaintiff for engaging in motion practice, but when an opposing party violates rules of procedure, it’s better to resolve those violations before submitting a reply brief.

Henning’s Response

The City’s attorneys fault the plaintiff for not indicating in what manner the caption of the case on their brief in opposition is incorrect. Are they blind? All they need do is go to PACER, copy off the caption, Exhibit E, and compare it to their cover. Or they can compare the caption on the Henning cover to the correct one on the Mundy, FlashDancers or Shipilina briefs.

Henning’s attorneys omitted the following defendants: Dima-Husband of Anastasia Vasilyeva, Krasnodar Prostitutes 1 to 3, Stephanos-Bank Employee, Melios Athanasiou Agencies, IRINIS 182C Entertainment Company, Melios Athanasiou-Owner and CEO Melios Athanasiou Agencies and IRINIS 182C, Irina Athanasiou-Owner and Executive of Melios Athanasiou Agencies and IRINIS 182C, Marios Athanasiou-Manager Zygots and Tramps Cabarets, A. Charalambous-Cyprus Immigration Chief, Julia Heart Agency, Maria-Prostitute Recruiter for Julia Heart Agency, The Men’s Club, Mexico City, Roberto & Rosa Elina Quilan-Managers Men’s Club, Max Gracia Appedole, Juginta Raszyukevichina a.k.a. Azul, Salvador-Partner Phodes Studio, Alfredo Ibarra Sotelo, Mexican Organized Criminal Gang 1.

Henning's attorneys list Alina A. Shipilina and Cybertech Internet Strip Club or Cybertech Internet Solutions as defendants when they are appellees.

Conclusion

The strategy of FlashDancers and Henning's attorneys is clear: (1) make factual allegations that are irrelevant on the appeal of a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal, (2) fill those allegations with lies, prevarications and dissemblings in the hope they will influence the Court, and (3) make it practically impossible for the Court to check these allegations by citing without page references to the mass of documents they filed in the District Court but failed to include in the Joint Appendix.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff requests FlashDancers' attorneys submit a brief that redacts the sections cited in the plaintiff's October 20, 2005 Memorandum of Law, pp 8 to 10, monetary sanctions levied for the violations of F.R.A.P. §30 and Local Rule §28 and reject FlashDancers Opposition for mixing fact and legal arguments in its declaration in violation of F.R.A.P. §27(a)(2)(B)(ii).

AND, the plaintiff requests the Henning Brief be rejected for filing a brief with the wrong case caption. In the alternative, Henning's attorneys redact p.4-2 & 3, n.2 from their brief and monetary sanctions be levied.

AND, if this Court rejects the Henning Brief or grants any redactions in the FlashDancers or Henning Briefs, plaintiff requests an extension of time from November 9 to November 21 for filing his reply brief in order to make appropriate changes that will free up space for more complete arguments on the issues before this Court.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

-----X
Roy Den Hollander

Plaintiff-Appellant,

Docket No. 04-6700-cv

v.

Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.,

Defendants-Appellees.

-----X

REPLY TO MUNDY’S RESPONSE TO PLAINTIFF’S MOTION TO STRIKE CERTAIN DEFENDANTS-APPELLEES’ BRIEFS OR STRIKE
DESIGNATED PARTS OF BRIEFS AND FOR SANCTIONS.

Plaintiff-appellant, Roy Den Hollander, submits this reply to the response of defendants-appellees Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich (collectively “Mundy”) to the plaintiff’s motion to strike certain briefs or sections of briefs and for sanctions.

Mixing Facts and Legal Arguments

The Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure (“F.R.A.P.”) §27(a)(2)(B)(ii) requires that an affidavit submitted with a motion “must contain only factual information, not legal argument,” (emphasis added), and F.R.A.P. §27(a)(3)(A) applies this requirement to any response filed to a motion. Mundy’s attorneys submitted a declaration (“Mundy Opposition”), which has the same legal effect as an affidavit under 28 U.S.C. §1746, in which they mix factual assertions and legal arguments in violation of F.R.A.P. §27(a)(2)(B)(ii). The plaintiff requests rejection of the response filed by Mundy's attorneys. Since the time to respond under F.R.A.P. §27(a)(3)(A) has now passed, they should not be permitted to correct this latest in a long line of violations of the rules.

Formatting

Mundy's attorneys admit that the right and top margins of their appeal brief are not within the requirements of F.R.A.P. §32(a)(4) and Local Rule §32(a).<sup>1</sup> Mundy Opposition ¶11. But because the plaintiff calls them on it, they try to turn the tables by whining about "the extent [plaintiff] will go to abusively litigate this matter," id. ¶11. How can a plaintiff be "abusive" if he holds the defendants to follow the same rules that he must follow? He can't, but that doesn't stop Mundy's attorneys from appealing to Orwellian logic when in reality, it is they who are abusing the rules by failing to submit a brief in the proper format. Plaintiff requests that their brief be rejected.

Spinning

Mundy's attorneys in the Mundy Opposition not only continue to fail to get the Complaint's allegations correct, but prevaricate and spin the procedural history of the Joint Appendix and misrepresent the Federal Rules of Appellate and Civil Procedure.

<sup>1</sup> Mundy's attorneys claim that the margins are off by 1/16th of an inch, but it's really 1/8th or 2/16th of an inch. An objective fact that they still dissemble about.

The Complaint does not allege the defendants are a “purported segment of the Russian mafia” (“the Enterprise”), Mundy Opposition ¶3, rather the Complaint’s allegations “concern a portion of the Enterprise’s activities in America, Russia, Cyprus and Mexico and some of its Members, the defendants, who are alleged to engage in money laundering, prostitution, pornography, white slavery ....” (Complaint ¶15, A-26, emphasis added.) And the plaintiff, although pro se, is also an attorney, so this RICO case is treated under the Court’s rules as a counseled case with no special pro se considerations.

The history of the negotiations over the Appendix is laid out in the four letters included as exhibits in plaintiff’s reply to FlashDancers and Henning’s responses to the Motion to Strike. Reply FlashDancers, Exhibits A-D, October 31, 2005.

Mundy’s attorneys declare under the “penalties of perjury” that their June 15, 2005 letter, Reply FlashDancers, Exhibit A, requested the incorporation of 26 documents. Mundy Opposition ¶4 (emphasis added). That is false. Mundy and FlashDancers’ attorneys were actually designating 54 separate documents of which 23 had been stricken by the District Court, Disqualify Order p.2-2, October 27, 2004, A-151. The trick they use in misleading this Court over the number of documents designated is that when Mundy’s attorneys filed a paper in the District Court, they often included extraneous exhibits and many of those exhibits had more than one document. When the 26 docket entries in the June 15, 2005 letter are examined, what Mundy and FlashDancers' attorneys actually designated were mixed legal argument and fact documents, 29 exhibits consisting of 54 separate documents totaling 178 pages and various orders for extensions of time.<sup>2</sup>

In the July 16, 2005 letter, Reply FlashDancers, Exhibit B, plaintiff revises his designation of the Joint Appendix to six documents and three pages of quotes from his District Court Memorandum in Opposition, A 126-130, to which defendants subsequently agreed. In this letter, plaintiff asked whether defendants had finalized their designations for the Appendix following the CAMP conference on June 21, 2005.

The July 21, 2005 letter, Reply FlashDancers, Exhibit C, has Mundy's attorneys saying, "We [which includes FlashDancers and Shipilina's lawyers] do not have any objection to the documents you wish to include in the appendix ..., " and goes on to suggest the inclusion of two additional documents, which were added, but requests no others. This contradicts the claim of Mundy's attorneys that the Appendix documents were "unilaterally selected," Mundy Opposition ¶4.

<sup>2</sup> Plaintiff's Reply FlashDancers at p.2-3 mistakenly referred to six documents as legal memoranda when they were a mixture of legal argument and factual allegations and these documents did not comprise 168 pages but 20 pages.

In the July 23, 2005 letter [mistakenly dated July 16, 2005], Reply FlashDancers, Exhibit D, plaintiff specifically says he is not including the documents Mundy and FlashDancers' lawyers originally designated in the June 15, 2005 letter, except for the ones already agreed to.

Mundy's attorneys plead three reasons for their Joint Appendix nonfeasance, Mundy Opposition ¶4,: (a) F.R.A.P. §30(a)(2) states "[p]arts of the record may be relied on by the court or the parties even though not included in the appendix." This rule exists to prevent a procedural miscarriage of justice, not to allow attorneys to short circuit the purpose of a Joint Appendix or shift to this Court the expenses and burden of tracking down alleged support for defendants' factual averments that don't belong on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) appeal; (b) Mundy's attorneys didn't want to "burden" plaintiff with the costs—no, they didn't want to burden their clients with the cost. F.R.A.P. §30(b)(2) requires that when the appellant, here the plaintiff, informs the appellees, here the defendants, that parts of their designations are unnecessary, it is the appellees' obligation to advance the costs to include those designations (emphasis added); and (c) Mundy's attorneys didn't want to engage in motion practice because, according to them, documents can simply be cited that are in the Docket Report. If that were the case, then there would be no need for a Joint Appendix or any Appendix as required by F.R.A.P. §30.

Further, Local Rule §11(e) places on Mundy’s lawyers an “obligation under F.R.A.P. §30 to reproduce in an appendix to their briefs ... exhibits ... to which they ‘wish to direct the particular attention of the court.’” They didn’t do that, and the real reasons were (a) to shift their work to the Court, (b) shift their expenses to the Court, (c) consume the plaintiff’s time and reply brief space with refuting their factual allegations that belong in an answer before the District Court, and (d) finesse this Court of Appeals into using extraneous material to reach a decision by including in their appeal brief these misleading defense allegations for which they point for support, usually without specific page cites, to hundreds of pages of documents, many unauthenticated.<sup>3</sup> “[T]he defendants seek to argue the merits ... in the context of a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, which is not the purpose of the motion.” T.S. Haulers, Inc. v. Town of Riverhead, 190 F.Supp.2d 455, 464 (E.D.N.Y. 2002)(citing see Villager Pond Inc. v. Town of Darien, 56 F.3d 375, 378 (2d Cir.1995)).

Mundy’s attorneys object that by the Motion to Strike, the plaintiff is engaging in a “frivolous attempt to shield this Court from reviewing the full record....” Mundy Opposition ¶8. If this Court wants to read the hundreds of pages of documents filed by defendants, including documents the District Court struck, or thumb through them to find the specific location of Mundy’s alleged support for their defense allegations, that's its privilege. But to be fair to the plaintiff, he should be granted additional space in his reply brief and time to counter these irrelevant averments on this Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) appeal and reimbursed the cost of the Joint Appendix, since under Mundy's argument, Joint Appendices are superfluous—all attorneys need do is cite generally to a district court docket entry number.

<sup>3</sup> The Mundy Brief ends up citing to over 35 documents of more than 380 pages not in the Joint Appendix and many not even designated in the Mundy June 15, 2005 letter, such as their two memoranda of law in the District Court that totaled 148 pages.

Mundy's attorneys at Mundy Opposition ¶10 argue in effect that if the "Statement of the Case" contains the elements required in F.R.A.P. §28(a)(6), it can also be packed with vitriolic vituperative attacks on the opposing party and misleading factual allegations that are irrelevant to an appeal of a complaint's dismissal. Just because F.R.A.P. §28(a)(6) requires "thou shall" rather than "thou shall not," I doubt that even former President Clinton would construe it to allow the inclusion of the type of matter that Mundy's attorneys do.

Furthermore, their calumnies and irrelevancies still violate Local Rule §28.

Scandalous

The Mundy Opposition ¶9 inappropriately omits part of the application of Local Rule §28 to the Mundy Brief. Plaintiff's motion specifies the sections of the Mundy Brief that violate Local Rule §28 because they are "irrelevant" and those sections that breach the rule for being "scandalous" by using many ad hominem vilifications of the plaintiff in the defendants' strategy of litigation by character assassination. To be sure there are some overlaps: scandalous is often irrelevant, but irrelevant not always scandalous. Still, the Memorandum of Law in plaintiff's motion at pp 4-3 to 6-1 delineates which sections of the Mundy Brief violate which. The response of Mundy's attorneys simply ignores their brief's name-calling.

The Bluebook

The case citations for which Mundy's attorneys fail to provide specific pages, Mundy Brief p.44-1, p.39-2 (Ideal Steel) and p.34-3 (Lerner), are not, as they claim, for general propositions but specific law: what constitutes a compensable RICO injury, proximate cause for exposure of or failing to assist in RICO acts and the RICO standing requirements. Mundy's attorneys also failed to include specific pages for an additional eight cases cited, Mundy Brief p.32-4 to p.33-1, but did include in parentheses what they claimed were the specific propositions those case supported concerning what didn't constitute "business" or "property" under RICO. Once again their strategy is to transfer their work and cost to this Court and overburden their opponent with tracking down their citations.

Sanctions

Finally, Mundy's attorneys use their favorite word "frivolous" again in describing plaintiff's request for sanctions and claim that by making such a request is itself "sanctionable." The plaintiff-attorney has spent around 30 hours on this motion and incurred mailing costs that would not have been necessary had Mundy's attorneys not tried to play fast and loose with the rules. Rules of procedure exist not just for the efficient administration of justice but to protect a person's due process rights under the Constitution. When attorneys try to game the system by picking which rules they will follow and which ones they will ignore, it not only wastes everybody's time, but if successful, makes suspect the system of justice.

Conclusion

This reply requests that the Mundy Opposition, Mundy's attorneys response to the Motion to Strike, be rejected for improperly mixing facts and legal arguments in an affidavit they label a "Declaration."

In addition to the relief requested in plaintiff's Motion to Strike Memorandum of Law, if the Mundy Brief is not rejected outright for formatting errors, Mundy's attorneys be required to provide the specific page cites for all the cases they cited without such.

In the event this Court rejects the Mundy Brief or grants any redactions, plaintiff requests an extension of time from November 9 to November 21 for filing his reply brief in order to make appropriate changes in its draft that will free up space for more complete arguments on the issues before this Court.

Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Second Circuit Court of Appeals, 04-6700-CV

Dear Mr. Bass:

In October 2005, I submitted a Motion to Strike various briefs or sections of briefs and for sanctions. The return date on the motion was noticed as November 8, 2005, Exhibit A. The motion has not yet been decided although oral argument is scheduled for January 26, 2006. According to the Committee on Federal Courts of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, Appeals to the Second Circuit, p. 50 (8th ed, 1997) "Except in the most unusual of cases [of which this is not one], by Friday afternoon of the same week, all motions have been decided."

It is now over seven weeks since the return date and the assignment on November 3, 2005 of the motion to the panel that will decide the appeal. Oral argument depends on the briefs and documents before the Court, but until the decision of the motion, those briefs and documents are unclear. It seems logical and also a matter of due process that the motion be decided at a reasonable time before oral argument on the appeal.

Do you have any indication as to when the Motion to Strike will be decided and is this delay normal?

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

UPON DUE CONSIDERATION it is hereby ORDERED, ADJUDGED, AND DECREED that the judgment of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Castel, J.) is AFFIRMED.

Plaintiff-appellant Roy Den Hollander appeals from a September 28, 2004 order dismissing pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) Hollander's claims for civil remedies under the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68, and denying leave to amend the complaint. We assume the parties' familiarity with the facts of the case, the relevant procedural background, and the issues on appeal.

We review a district court's grant of a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) de novo, construing the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff and accepting its allegations as true. Desiano v. Warner-Lambert Co., 326 F.3d 339, 347 (2d Cir. 2003). "A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief." Todd v. Exxon Corp., 275 F.3d 191, 197-98 (2d Cir. 2001) (citations and quotation marks omitted).

I. Injury to Business or Property and Proximate Causation

Section 1964(c) of Title 18 authorizes suit by "[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of § 1962." Thus, a RICO plaintiff "only has standing if, and can only recover to the extent that, he has been injured in his business or property by the conduct constituting the violation." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 496 (1985). This injury must be proximately caused by the predicate acts of the RICO violation. See Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d 113, 120 (2d Cir. 2003).

We have held that "the RICO pattern or acts proximately cause a plaintiff's injury if they are a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation, and if the injury is reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence." Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23-24 (2d Cir. 1990). Thus, we have affirmed the dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) of a RICO complaint where the alleged injuries were proximately caused not by the alleged racketeering violations, but by the public exposure of those activities or their discovery by the victim and the consequences of that exposure or discovery. See In re Am. Express Co. S'holders Litig., 39 F.3d 395, 400 (2d Cir. 1994) (holding that injury to American Express shareholders following disclosure of a scheme to discredit a competitor was not a foreseeable result of that scheme, although the disclosure resulted in business injury to American Express); Burdick v. Am. Express Co., 865 F.2d 527, 529 (2d Cir. 1989) (holding that a plaintiff fired by the defendant company after he complained about racketeering activities and refused to participate in them could not show proximate causation, even though their actions allegedly interfered with his "ability . . . to earn a living for himself" and deprived him of his job).

Hollander's complaint deals primarily with damages stemming from the investigation he initiated, including "[l]oss of profits from the plaintiff's law and consulting business from cessation of normal work as the result of . . . the plaintiff's ongoing investigation of the Enterprise's Scheme"; "[b]usiness interruption expenses of $50,000"; "[l]oss of business opportunities of $150,000" and expenses of the investigation. These are the costs of Hollander's acts, not the defendants' RICO violations. Indeed, as the district court noted, the conspirators allegedly tried to prevent Hollander from investigating them, and thus from incurring the expenses he claims as damages.

One of the lost profit allegations appears to involve more than just the investigation: "Loss of profits from the plaintiff's law and consulting business . . . from cessation of normal work as a result of the initial success of the Enterprise's Scheme in defrauding the plaintiff into arranging for Member Alina Shipilina to enter the U.S. and, subsequently, the plaintiff's ongoing investigation of the Enterprise's Scheme." (emphasis added). We take it that Hollander alleges that he ceased business while helping to arrange Shipilina's immigration, and that he lost money because he could have been gainfully employed instead of making those arrangements. Even if it was the criminal syndicate's intent to trick Hollander into "arranging for Member Alina Shipilina to enter the U.S.," it was not the object of the conspiracy to cause him to cease work and thereby lose profits in order to make those arrangements.

Other allegations involve efforts to "thwart" Hollander's efforts, via his investigation and this litigation, to recover unspecified injuries to his business. "Funds from racketeering activities have been used to build a litigation war chest to fund fraudulent proceedings against the plaintiff and fraudulently defend against legitimate proceedings . . ."; "Funds from racketeering activities have been used to bribe public employees into subverting the proper administration of the law . . . so as to thwart the plaintiff's efforts to rectify the Enterprise's harm done to his business reputation and goodwill." These allegations involve injury to the administration of law, which of course is not compensable under RICO, and the hindrance of the plaintiff's efforts to repair other damages. But injuries caused not by the alleged racketeering violations, but by the discovery of those actions and the consequences of that discovery, are not cognizable damages under RICO. See In re Am. Express Co. S'holders Litig., 39 F.3d at 400; Burdick, 865 F.2d at 529.

Finally, the complaint also contains conclusory allegations that claim damages to financial interests, but do not specify how racketeering activities caused those damages. "The plaintiff has suffered damages to his business and financial interests by the use of funds from racketeering activities to finance the Enterprise's Scheme." "The predicate acts committed in furtherance of the Enterprise's Scheme against the plaintiff have caused damages to his business and financial assets as well as imperiled his safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear." These paragraphs allege that damages to financial interests have been caused, but make no factual allegation from which an inference of proximate cause could reasonably be drawn. Merely restating the requirements of RICO in the form of an allegation does not suffice to state a claim without some factual allegation from which proximately caused financial injury may be inferred. See In re Am. Express Co. S'holders Litig., 39 F.3d at 400 n.3 ("[W]hile the complaint does cursorily assert that American Express was a victim of the RICO defendants' acts and that these acts were the proximate cause of American Express's alleged injuries, these conclusory allegations of the legal status of the defendants' acts need not be accepted as true for the purposes of ruling on a motion to dismiss.").

Nor does the Supplemental Complaint indicate any damages to business or property proximately caused by racketeering violations. It alleges that the "additional illegal activities recounted in this supplemental complaint have increased the harm to the plaintiff's business and property by causing loss of profits, business interruption expenses, loss of business opportunities and damage to the plaintiff's reputation and good will in the amount of $100,000." It fails to indicate how the alleged activities, principally threats against him and abuses of the justice system in response to his lawsuit, damaged his business in any direct way. Thus, Hollander has failed to state a claim under RICO.

II. Leave to Amend

Hollander also challenges the district court's denial of leave to amend the complaint. We review the district court's denial of leave to file an amended complaint for abuse of discretion. Milanese v. Rust-Oleum Corp., 244 F.3d 104, 110 (2d Cir. 2001). Leave to file an amended complaint "shall be freely given when justice so requires." Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(a). Although "it is rare that such leave should be denied, especially when there has been no prior amendment," Ricciuti v. N.Y.C. Transit Auth., 941 F.2d 119, 123 (2d Cir. 1991) (citations omitted), it is "well established that leave to amend a complaint need not be granted when amendment would be futile." Ellis v. Chao, 336 F.3d 114, 127 (2d Cir. 2003).

In In re Tamoxifen Citrate Antitrust Litig., 429 F.3d 370 (2d Cir. 2005) ("Tamoxifen"), we considered a cursory request for leave to amend "which appeared in a footnote in the middle of [the plaintiffs'] brief opposing the defendants' motion to dismiss."<sup>1</sup> Id. at 404. The additional allegations proposed by the plaintiffs on appeal were legally insufficient to state a claim on which relief could be granted, and so we found that any amendment would have been futile and that the denial of leave was not an abuse of discretion. Id. For the same reasons, Hollander's request for leave to amend was properly denied.

Hollander argues that, if allowed to amend his complaint, he would "make clear to even the District Court" that although the court found Hollander's damage allegations to stem from his investigation of the scheme beginning in 2000, in fact "Hollander did not discover the Scheme until two years later in July 2002." This amendment would not help Hollander's case, however, because he has failed to allege any injury to his business or property proximately caused in 2000, in 2002, or at any other time. "It appears beyond doubt that the plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of his claim which would entitle him to relief," Tamoxifen, 429 F.3d at 404-05 (quoting Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 45-46 (1957) (alterations omitted)), and so the denial of leave was not an abuse of discretion. See id.

<sup>1</sup> The district court stated in its opinion that "[p]laintiff made no request to file an amended Complaint in the event the motions to dismiss were granted." Hollander asserts that this is incorrect, citing to a document in the joint appendix labeled "Excerpts from Plaintiff's Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Certain Defendants' Motion to Dismiss." One of the "excerpts" states, "If this Court dismisses the Complaint or part of it under Rule 12(b)(6), then the plaintiff requests leave to amend." We have no reason to doubt that these "excerpts" accurately reproduce the filing in question. The district court thus appears to have erred in finding that leave to amend had not been requested.

Despite this error, the court engaged in a full analysis of whether leave was appropriate, and concluded that "[e]ven the most liberal reading of the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint fails to indicate that, however restated, any valid claim would survive." As discussed above, because Hollander has failed on appeal to identify any additional allegations he could make that might render his claim viable, the denial of leave was not an abuse of discretion.

III. Conclusion

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the district court is hereby AFFIRMED. The pending motion to strike material in the appellees' briefs is DENIED.

AFFIRMATION OF FACT IN OPPOSITION TO DEFENDANT FLASH DANCERS' REQUEST—AFTER THE DEADLINE HAS PASSED—TO FILE A BILL OF COSTS AND AFFIRMATION IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SANCTIONS

I, Roy Den Hollander, am the attorney plaintiff-appellant, am familiar with the matters within, submit this affirmation in opposition to defendant-appellee Flash Dancers' request—after the deadline has passed—for an extension of time to file a bill of costs and submit this affirmation in support of a motion for sanctions against Flash Dancers' attorneys, the firm of Zane and Rudofsky.

1. The Second Circuit's Summary Order in this case was entered February 3, 2006.

2. Flash Dancers' attorneys had until February 17, 2006 to serve and file a bill of costs—they didn't.

3. The three member firm of Zane and Rudofsky blames its nonfeasance on a trip to California by Mr. Rudofsky and his overlooking a decision by the Second Circuit that was mailed to him, recorded in the New York Law Journal and listed on this Court's Pacer web site.

4. Zane and Rudofsky now seek that this Court punish plaintiff-appellant for that law firm's failure to perform its duty towards its client Flash Dancers.

5. Zane and Rudofsky's also seek that this Court charge plaintiff-appellant for more expenses then allowed: the bill improperly inflates the number of copies necessary and inappropriately includes delivery charges for serving and filing.

6. Granting Zane and Rudofsky's motion for an extension of time will prejudice plaintiff-appellant to the amount of $446.51 that will be levied against him in violation of his due process rights as protected by the F.R.A.P. just to absolve Zane and Rudofsky of their negligence.

7. In order to respond to Zane and Rudofsky's motion, plaintiff-appellant was required to put in six and one half hours of work to draft, serve and file his opposition and incurred transportation and mailing expenses.

WHEREFORE, plaintiff-appellant Hollander requests that this Court:

(1) deny defendant-appellee Flash Dancer's motion for an extension of time to file the submitted bill of costs after it was due;

(2) provide affirmative relief against the firm of Zane and Rudofsky in the form of sanctions for its obvious failures to abide by F.R.A.P. and the Local Rules that have wasted this Court and plaintiff-appellant's time and caused unnecessary expenses; and

(3) schedule oral argument on Zane and Rudofsky substantive motion and plaintiff-appellant's motion for sanctions.

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO FLASH DANCERS MOTION FOR EXTENSION OF TIME TO FILE BILL OF COSTS

The plaintiff-appellant, Roy Den Hollander, strongly opposes any extension of time for Flash Dancer’s attorneys, the firm of Zane and Rudofsky, to submit a bill of costs after the time allotted for filing has already passed.

Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure (“F.R.A.P.”) § 39(d)(1) states “A party who wants costs taxed must—within 14 days after entry of judgment—file with the circuit clerk ... an itemized ... bill of costs.” (Emphasis added). “Must” means to be obliged, required, compelled or commanded to do something. American Heritage Dictionary, 2d College Ed. The three member firm of Zane and Rudofsky failed to comply with the rules.

Mr. Rudofsky tries to excuse the violation of this rule on a trip he took to California and inadvertently overlooking a decision by the Second Circuit that was mailed to him, recorded in the New York Law Journal and listed on this Court’s Pacer web site. (Rudofsky Declaration ¶ 4). Mr. Rudofsky works for a three member firm—he is not a sole practitioner. Exhibit A. It seems unlikely that when Mr. Rudofsky is out-of-town or dealing with other cases, his firm does not have any procedures in place to prevent legal deadlines from falling due without appropriate action. At the very least someone must open his mail and keep him apprised of court decisions, as was the case here since the notification as to the submission of costs accompanied the Second Circuit’s Summary Order.

Of course, Zane and Rudofsky may not have procedures in place for tracking cases or may have failed to execute them—but that is not the fault of the plaintiff-appellant. Zane and Rudofsky are simply trying to shift the consequence of their negligence onto the plaintiff-appellant by asking this Court to suspend the F.R.A.P. for that firm’s mistake. This is not fair, and violates the plaintiff-appellant’s due process rights as protected by the F.R.A.P. The Plaintiff-appellant does not represent Flash Dancers— Zane and Rudofsky do! What harm may flow to Flash Dancers because of its attorneys nonfeasance is not the fault of plaintiff-appellant.

Mr. Rudofsky claims there will be no prejudice to any party by allowing for an extension of time. (Rudofsky Declaration ¶ 6). That’s false! The plaintiff-appellant will be prejudiced to the amount of $446.51 that will be levied against him in violation of his rights under the F.R.A.P. just to absolve Zane and Rudofsky of their mistake.

Mr. Rudofsky not only asks this Court to off-load the consequences of his error onto the plaintiff-appellant but also to excuse his other violations of the local rules.

Mr. Rudofsky claims he failed to contact the plaintiff-appellant before making his motion for an extension of time because “[i]n light of [plaintiff-appellant’s] pro se status and the nature of his claims [Mr. Rudofsky did] not feel that it would be appropriate to discuss the matter with [the plaintiff-appellant].” (Rudofsky Declaration ¶ 7). Plaintiff-appellant is an attorney representing himself; therefore, this is not a pro se case under the Court’s rules but a “counseled” case. Mr. Rudofsky knows that. He also knows that throughout these proceedings, the lead attorneys for the defendants, Bradley E. Dubin and Anne P. Richter, have contacted the plaintiff-appellant numerous times on various matters. Those discussions have always been courteous, professional and without rancor. To the extent that Mr. Rudofsky implies his failure to contact the plaintiff-appellant was because it would somehow result in a difficult situation or be inappropriate is false, and he knows that.

Mr. Rudofsky’s bill of costs violates this Court’s requirements as set out in the letter from Clerk Roseann B. MacKechnie, Exhibit B. “[D]elivery charges,” of papers should not be included in a bill of costs, Exhibit B(8), but Mr. Rudofsky included such costs under “Service and Filed (7)” in the amount of $106, Exhibit

C. In addition, only the number of “necessary copies” should be included in a bill of costs, Exhibit B(6), which in this case were 26 not 30 as claimed by Mr. Rudofsky, Exhibit C.

In conclusion, appellant-plaintiff Hollander requests that this Court:

- (1) deny defendant-appellee Flash Dancer’s motion for an extension of time to file the submitted bill of costs after it was due;
- (2) provide affirmative relief against the firm of Zane and Rudofsky in the form of sanctions for its obvious failures to abide by F.R.A.P. and the Local Rules that have wasted this Court and the plaintiff-appellant’s time and caused unnecessary expenses; and
- (3) schedule oral argument on Zane and Rudofsky substantive motion and the plaintiff-appellant’s motion for sanctions.

DECLARATION OF EDWARD S. RUDOFISKY IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR SANCTIONS

EDWARD S. RUDOFISKY hereby declares the following to be true under the penalty of perjury:

1. I am a member of the firm of Zane and Rudofisky, attorneys for appellees Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lynn Lepofsky, Barry, Night Manager Flash Dancers and Flash Dancers Managers 1 to 5 ("Flash Dancers Appellees"); am familiar with the matters set forth herein; and submit this declaration in response to appellant's motion for sanctions dated February 27, 2006.

2. Appellant's opposition to the underlying motion and appellant's own motion for sanctions are meritless. The Flash Dancers Appellees clearly incurred printing expenses for their brief on the appeal and clearly would have been entitled to timely submit a Bill of Costs as a matter of right. The only additional relief requested in Flash Dancers Appellees' motion was permission to do so "out of time." Whether that motion is granted or not, it is clearly not sanctionable.

3. In point of fact, prior to making the motion for leave to submit a Bill of Costs "out of time" I contacted the Clerk's Office and was instructed that such a motion was not only a proper motion but the only method for seeking permission to file a late Bill of Costs.

4. The itemized and verified Bill of Costs submitted clearly discloses the printer's charges. It is declarant's understanding that, should the relief requested in the underlying motion be granted, the Clerk will determine the allowable items and grant the Bill of Costs accordingly.

5. The present motion by appellant only underscores the correctness of the judgment not to contact him prior to moving for relief. We have no wish to debate with appellant the question of who opens declarant's mail when declarant is traveling or other such petty issues.

6. Declarant has been an honorable member of the Circuit Court Bar and practitioner in this Court for more than thirty (30) years. If the Court feels that declarant's forthright explanation for the delay in submitting a Bill of Costs is inappropriate or insufficient, declarant understands that the Court will deny the underlying motion. However, what appellant apparently does not understand is that declarant has a right to have the Court pass on the reasonableness of declarant's explanation for the delay, and that the making of the underlying motion in no way prejudiced appellant (who would have unquestionably been responsible for the Bill of Costs, to the extent allowed, had it been timely presented).

WHEREFORE, declarant requests that the Court (a) deny the motion for sanctions, and (b) grant the requested extension of time to file an itemized and verified bill of costs to and including the date of the Court Order and that the Clerk be directed to accept the same for filing as of that date.

AFFIRMATION OF FACT IN REPLY TO OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SANCTIONS

I, Roy Den Hollander, am the attorney plaintiff-appellant, am familiar with the matters within and submit this affirmation in reply to Edward S. Rudofsky's opposition to plaintiff's motion for sanctions.

1. The issue for sanctions is not whether the Flash Dancers clients of Zane and Rudofsky incurred costs in printing their appeal brief, but whether the costs of the motion practice intentionally engaged in by Mr. Rudofsky as a result of his firm's negligent failure to file a bill of costs on time should be born by the plaintiff and this Court? The plaintiff believes it should not because no man should be allowed to escape the costs flowing from his own wrong, which is what negligence is.

2. Mr. Rudofsky tries to shift his responsibility for the costs of a motion to absolve him of his negligence onto the Clerk' Office. Rudofsky Opposition ¶ 3. As "an honorable member of the Circuit Court Bar and practitioner in this Court for more than thirty (30) years," Rudofsky Opposition ¶ 6, he should know by now that the Clerk's Office role is not to opine on whether a motion is "proper," Rudofsky Opposition ¶ 3, or sanctionable—that decision is for the judges. The Clerk's Office provides information on procedural options within this Court; it does not render judgments or make decisions for counsel. Mr. Rudofsky had the option to avoid wasting this Court and the plaintiff's time with a meritless motion, but he—not the Clerk—chose not to.

3. As for Mr. Rudofsky's inclusion of additional expenses in his bill of costs that are not permitted, he once again tries to shift to the Clerk's Office his responsibility and, in this instance, the work necessary for obeying the rules of this Court. Mr. Rudofsky claims it is up to the Clerk—not him—to weed out the allowable costs from the printers bill he submitted. Rudofsky Opposition ¶ 4. If that were so, then why did the Clerk go to the trouble of drafting and sending with the Summary Order a letter to counsel listing specifically which items can be included and those that cannot as well as including a specific form to be used, which Mr. Rudofsky didn't use or follow. Plaintiff's Motion Sanctions Exhibit B.

Mr. Rudofsky's failure to do the work required of him, or, worst, his scheme to slip unallowable costs by this Court and the plaintiff is grounds alone for sanctions.

4. Mr. Rudofsky declares that his firm's inabilities to track cases when he is on vacation are "petty issues." Rudofsky Opposition ¶ 5. Negligence by an attorney that results in missing a deadline under a court's rule is never petty.

5. What we have in Mr. Rudofsky's bill of costs motion and his opposition to plaintiff's sanction motion is not a law firm that got caught in a force majeure but rather a firm that shuts down when one of its three members is voluntarily in California because of an inept system or no system for tracking cases. That is not the fault of the plaintiff or this Court, and it is unbecoming of a long-time practitioner before this Court to blame everyone else for his firm's mistakes.

WHEREFORE, the plaintiff requests sanctions for Mr. Rudofsky's intentional efforts to engage in unnecessary motion practice not because of a force majeure but rather to shift the blame for his firm's negligence onto others, including this Court, and to have them bear the costs of his mistakes.

PETITION FOR REHEARING EN BANC

The three-judge panel<sup>1</sup> presided over by J. Sonia Sotomayor has ruled that a bill of costs can be filed late without a showing of good cause, which conflicts with the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure §§ 39(d)(1) & 26(b) and Apex Oil Co. v. Belcher Co. of N.Y., Inc., 865 F.2d 504, 505 (2d Cir. 1989), so consideration by the full court is therefore necessary to secure and maintain uniformity of the Court's decisions.

ARGUMENT

Fed. R. App. P. 39(a)(d)(1) requires the prevailing party to file a bill of costs within 14 days after entry of judgment with the Circuit Clerk. The Summary Order in the civil RICO case Hollander v. Flash Dancers, 2006 U.S. App. Lexis 2781 or 2006 WL 267148, Docket 04-6700 Civ., was entered on February 3, 2006 and the prevailing party, appellee Flash Dancers, moved on February 23, 2006 to file its bill of costs late. Judge Sotomayor's panel granted

Flash Dancers motion by denying appellant Hollander's objection to the late filing of Flash Dancers' bill of costs. Exhibit A, Panel Orders

This Court has the "discretion to relieve movants from the 14-day timeliness requirement of Rule 39 upon showing of just cause." Apex Oil Co., 865 F.2d at 505. That "discretion" is based on Fed. R. App. P. 26(b), which allows the circuit courts to enlarge time limits prescribed by the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure "for good cause shown." Denofre v. Transportation Ins. Rating Bur., 560 F.2d 859, 860 (7th Cir. 1977).

The issue is whether Flash Dancers has shown "just" or "good" cause for filing its bill of costs after the 14-day time period expired?

The declaration of Flash Dancer's attorney states the reason for the late filing on a trip voluntarily taken and an office mistake:

"I was attending a Bar Association meeting in California when the Clerk's written notification regarding the submission of an itemized bill of costs was received and due to several sets of motion papers and briefs required to be filed in several other matters, immediately following my return to New York, I did not see this item until Tuesday, February 21, 2006. Exhibit B, Declaration of Edward Rudofsky ¶ 4.

The Clerk's written notification about filing a bill of costs was mailed with the Summary Order on February 3, 2006.

Flash Dancer's attorney has practiced before this Court for over thirty years, belongs to a three member firm, Exhibit C, Zane and Rudofsky, and is most likely familiar with the Second Circuit's website that lists the rules of procedure and includes PACER for retrieving information on specific cases, which can be accessed by internet from California. This combination of experience with Second Circuit procedures, the benefit of having a firm that presumably tracks its cases, although in this situation was inattentive, and global access to Second Circuit information does not support a finding of "just" or "good" cause for noncompliance when compared with the decisions in other cases.

Second Circuit: Where an automatic stay prevented the prevailing party from timely filing a bill of costs in the Court of Appeals because the losing party was in bankruptcy, this Court ruled that the prevailing party should have made a motion in the bankruptcy court for relief from the stay within 14 days of judgment entry. Apex Oil Co. v. Belcher Co. of N.Y., Inc., 865 F.2d 504, 505 (2d Cir. 1989). This Court stated, "[w]e see no reason why the bankruptcy of the losing party on appeal should result in a windfall time enlargement for the prevailing party .... This holding is not only consistent with Rule 39 but also provides a bright-line test." Id. at 505-06.

Fifth Circuit: After an appeal was remanded back to the district court, the prevailing party failed to timely file its bill of costs. The Fifth Circuit labeled the prevailing party's attempt "to lay blame for its own failings at the doorstep of the district court [as] pure sophistry.” Religious Technology Center v. Liebreich, 98 Fed. Appx. 979, 987 (2004).

In another Fifth Circuit case, one of the prevailing parties moved 10 days after the deadline for an extension of time to file its bill of costs. The attorneys argued they had “inadvertently misplaced the blank Bill of Costs form that accompanied their copy of the opinion” and they had not become aware of Rule 39(d)’s 14-day period until receiving a motion from another prevailing party. Sims v. Great-West Life Assur. Co., 941 F.2d 368, 370 (5th Cir. 1991). The Fifth Circuit found that “[t]hese are patently insufficient reasons to demonstrate good cause to enlarge the time limits in question.” Id. at 370 (citations omitted).

Good cause for filing a bill of costs late was found when the prevailing party, due to Christmas mailing delays, did not receive the Circuit’s opinion until after the 14-day period had expired. Knoblauch v. C.I.R., 752 F.2d 125, 128 (5th Cir. 1985). Flash Dancers’ attorney does not say when his firm received the Second Circuit’s opinion, but it was mailed on February 3, 2006—well after the traditional Christmas delays.

Seventh Circuit: In Denofre v. Transportation Ins. Rating Bur., 560 F.2d 859, 861 (7th Cir. 1977), the Court of Appeals stated, “[t]he fact that the attorney of record was absent from his office [out of town on other matters] during the relevant times [14-day period] does not save the situation [motion to file late].

We do not think that good cause is shown to enlarge a time period expressly specified in the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure [previously 39(c)] by the mere in attendance to the daily chores in one's law office, particularly by a firm of fourteen lawyers.... If attention had been given promptly to incoming matters which ... involve deadlines, there was sufficient time at least to have filed within the fourteen days a motion for extension of time....”

Ninth Circuit: Good cause existed for the late filing of a bill of costs due to circumstances beyond counsel's control that delayed receipt of the court's opinion as a result of the shutdown in aviation, including U.S. Postal flights, following 911. Tickmor v. Choice Hotels International, Inc., 275 F.3d 1164, 1165 (9th Cir. 2002).

In another case, the Ninth Circuit ruled, “in attendance to office chores and good faith mistakes are not sufficient to show good cause.” Mollura v. Miller, 621 F.2d 334, 335(9th Cir. 1980). In Mollura, counsel for the prevailing party moved to file a bill of costs late because of a law office mistake in calendaring. The court held the “mere averment of mistake is insufficient under these circumstances to show good cause.” Id. at 336. “Claims for costs should be filed promptly after the entry of judgment. Rule 39(d)'s ... definite time limit must be scrupulously observed by litigants.” Id. at 336 (citation omitted).

Finding good cause “merely from a mistake in calendaring or from in attendance to office chores, would seriously undermine the policy of the rules.” Id.

CONCLUSION

A busy schedule hardly constitutes good cause for failing to comply with the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure. Plaintiff-appellant requests reversal of the panel’s order allowing Flash Dancers to file a bill of costs late because its attorney of record was volitionally out-of-town and the attorney’s three-member law firm was in attentive to office chores.

Second Circuit Court of Appeals, 04-6700-CV

Dear Ms Gibbs:

Apparently, there is some continuing confusion over the "Petition for Rehearing En Banc" that I filed on March 24, 2006. I had assumed this Court's granting of my April 4, 2006 motion had resolved the confusion, but it has not.

The April motion requested the Second Circuit to direct you to docket my "Petition for Rehearing En Banc," which you had refused to do under the mistaken belief that petitions for rehearing en banc only applied to appeal decisions rather than "other proceedings" in the Second Circuit. Fed. R. App. P. § 35(a). The April motion was not, as the docket incorrectly indicates at 4/4/06, a motion for leave to file a late petition for rehearing of my appeal.

The March 24, 2006 Petition for Rehearing En Banc states in paragraph one that it concerns the panel's order granting defendant Flash Dancers leave to file its bill of costs late. It does not request a rehearing en banc of the panel's February 3, 2006 Summary Order denying my appeal from the District Court. Since the March 24, 2006 Petition for Rehearing En Banc concerns the panel's orders granting Flash Dancers leave to file a bill of costs late (April 11, 2006) and denying my opposition (March 15, 2006), the only orders required under Local Rule 35(a) are those two. Both are attached in Exhibit A of my second set of papers for Petition for Rehearing En Banc that includes the required change in caption that we discussed on Friday, May 19th. The April 11, 2006 order granting Flash Dancers' motion was not included in the March 24, 2006 Petition for Rehearing En Banc because the order was not docketed until after the filing of the petition.

The second set, which includes the full caption, is, as the original set, less than 15 pages, excluding material not counted under Rule 32, and is, as the original set, properly numbered with the exhibits following the argument and noted by letters in ascending order.

Finally, the applicable Rule is § 35 En Banc Determination, not Rule § 40: Petition for Panel Rehearing. I was not and am not requesting a rehearing by the panel.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Affirmation in Support of a Motion Requesting this Court to Direct its Case Manager Satisha Gibbs to Docket a Petition for Rehearing En
Banc of a Panel's Decision Permitting the Late Filing of a Bill of Costs Without a Showing of Good Cause.

I, Roy Den Hollander, am the attorney plaintiff-appellant, am familiar with the matters within and submit this affirmation in support of this motion requiring the Second Circuit's case manager, Satisha Gibbs, to docket a petition for rehearing en banc of a panel's decision to allow the late filing of a bill of cost without a showing of good cause.

1. On March 15, 2006, a panel<sup>1</sup> of this Court granted defendant Flash Dancers' motion to file a bill of costs after the time period for submitting such had expired. Exhibit A, Panel Order.

2. On March 24, 20006, appellant Hollander submitted a petition for rehearing en banc requesting this Court to review the panel's granting of

Flash Dancers' motion on the grounds that it conflicts with the decision of another panel of this Court set out in Apex Oil Co. v. Belcher Co. of N.Y., Inc., 865 F.2d 504, 505 (2d Cir. 1989), which requires a showing of good cause for enlarging the time limits prescribed in the Rules of Appellate Procedure. Exhibit B, Cover page of petition for rehearing en banc.

3. On March 29, 2006, Satisha Gibbs, the case manager for the above captioned case, mailed appellant Hollander a notice stating:

“This will advise you that we received and filed the petitiin (sic) for rehearing .... Upon review we have determined that it does not comply with the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure or Second Circuit Rules in the following manner:

Missing information: Motion to file late petition for rehearing.

You are hereby notified to submit 1 original and 4 copies of the motion to file petition late to this office not later than 4/12/2006.” Exhibit C, Gibbs' Notice.

4. Ms. Gibbs clearly confused the petition as one referring to the panel's Summary Order disposing of this case's appeal from the District Court, which was entered on February 3, 2006. Any petition for rehearing of the Summary Order would have been out of time on March 24th and required an accompanying motion to file late.

5. The petition that was filed on March 24th, however, did not request review of the Summary Order but rehearing of the panel's decision to grant Flash Dancers' motion to file a bill of costs after the deadline had expired.

This reason for the petition is stated in the first sentence of its first paragraph. Exhibit B, Cover page of petition for rehearing en banc.

6. On March 31, 2006, at approximately 4:40 PM, appellant Hollander telephoned Ms. Gibbs who emphatically said that a petition for rehearing en banc was not permitted for requesting a review of the panel's decision on Flash Dancers' motion.

7. Ms. Gibbs then instructed appellant Hollander to file a motion, not a petition, requesting that the panel review its decision of Flash Dancers' motion.

WHEREFORE, Ms. Gibbs' interpretation of the Rules of Appellate Procedure is inaccurate as set out in the attached Memorandum of Law and appellant Hollander, by this motion, requests:

(1) This court instruct Ms. Gibbs to docket the petition for rehearing en banc as originally filed with the date of filing as March 24th;

(2) This Court rescind Ms. Gibbs' order to file an additional motion, whether to request a late filing of the petition or to request the panel's review of its decision; and

(3) Appellant Hollander be awarded costs in time of four hours at $150 an hour and money for copying and mailing of $13.20 for a total of $613.20 in making this motion that should never have been necessary in the first place.

Executed under the penalty of perjury.

MEMORANDUM OF LAW

The Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure § 35(a) states, “A majority of the circuit judges who are in regular active service may order that an appeal or other proceeding be heard or reheard by the court of appeals en banc.” (Emphasis added). Case Manager Gibbs failed to docket appellant Hollander’s “Petition for Rehearing En Banc” (“Petition”) because it did not request a rehearing of this case’s appeal but rather a rehearing of the panel’s decision granting a motion. A panel’s decision on a motion is clearly within the statutory words of “other proceeding.”

Fed. R. App. P. § 46(c) states, “Cases and controversies shall be heard and determined by a ... panel ... unless a hearing or rehearing before the court en banc is ordered by a majority of judges ....” The motion order that is the subject of appellant Hollander’s Petition grows out of a case before this Court, Hollander v. Flash Dancer, et al., and involves a controversy over whether a panel of this Court can enlarge time limits prescribed by the Rules of Appellate Procedure without good cause and in contradiction of another panel’s decision in Apex Oil Co. v. Belcher Co. of N.Y., Inc., 865 F.2d 504, 505 (2d Cir. 1989).

An intra-circuit conflict can only be resolved by a Court of Appeals sitting en banc, see Tornay v. U.S., 840 F.2d 1424, 1427 n.3 (9th Cir. 1988); therefore, appellant Hollander’s Petition provides the only way of conforming this Court’s decisions on whether the deadlines of the Appellate Rules require a showing of good cause for any time extensions. Case Manager Gibbs' refusal to docket appellant Hollander's petition prevents this Court from securing and maintaining uniformity of its decisions.

Chief Judge John M. Walker, Jr.
U.S. Court of Appeals, Second Circuit
40 Foley Square
New York, N.Y. 10007

Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.
Second Circuit Court of Appeals, 04-6700-CV

Dear Chief Judge Walker:

I am the appellant in the above captioned civil RICO case. This letter is my fourth attempt to have the case manager docket a Petition for Rehearing En Banc of a decision of a motion that allowed for the late filing of costs by one of the successful appellees.

A panel<sup>1</sup> of this Court upheld a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal by the Southern District Court on February 3, 2006. Appellee Flash Dancers subsequently requested that it be allowed to move for costs after the 14-day deadline for making a cost motion had passed. Fed. R. App. P. § 39(d)(1). I opposed the motion for failure to show “good cause” for the delay. The panel granted Flash Dancers’ motion to file late along with some of its requested costs.

On March 24, 2006, I filed a Petition for Rehearing En Banc requesting this Court to review the granting of Flash Dancers’ motion on the grounds that the decision conflicts with the “good cause” requirement of another of this Court’s panel in Apex Oil Co. v. Belcher Co. of N.Y., Inc., 865 F.2d 504, 505 (2d Cir. 1989), and cases in other circuits.

Case manager Shatisa Gibbs refused to docket the Petition claiming that petitions for rehearing en banc were not permitted to request the review of a panel’s decision on a motion and were only allowed to review a panel’s decision of an appeal. However, Fed. R. App. P. § 35(a) states, “A majority of the circuit judges who are in regular active service may order that an appeal or other proceeding be heard or reheard by the court of appeals en banc.” (Emphasis added.)

On April 4, 2006, I moved this Court to instruct Ms. Gibbs to docket my Petition for Rehearing En Banc of the panel's decision on the Flash Dancers' motion. Exhibit A, Motion for Gibbs to Docket Petition. Ms. Gibbs incorrectly docketed the motion as one for leave to file late a petition for rehearing. On April 11, 2006, this Court granted my motion, thereby requiring Ms. Gibbs to docket my Petition for Rehearing En Banc. Exhibit B, Court Order.

Unfortunately, Ms. Gibbs still refuses to docket the Petition. In a telephone conversation of May 19, 2006, Ms. Gibbs raised additional objections to docketing the Petition and directed me to comply with Fed. R. App. P. § 40 when the appropriate rule was § 35. The only objection she presented that carried some validity was the Petition's cover should include the full caption. I complied by submitting to Ms. Gibbs another original and 24 copies of the Petition, this time with a full caption, and providing Deputy Chief Clerk Arseen with a copy of my cover letter to Ms. Gibbs. Exhibit C, Cover Letter to Petition Copies. The petitions were delivered to Ms. Gibbs on May 30th, but, as of June 30th, the Petition has still not been docketed.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Re: Roy Den Hollander v. Flash Dancers Topless Club
C/O No.04-6700

Dear Mr. Hollander:

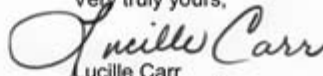

Chief Judge Walker forwarded your letter dated June 30, 2006, to me for response.

First of all, I would like to apologize for the delay in getting your petition for en banc review to the Court. There was apparently some initial confusion as to whether such a petition for en banc review was permitted as of right from the denial of a procedural motion. However, the Court granted your motion for en banc review in an order dated April 11, 2006. Following the grant of that motion, your petition should have been sent to the full Court. One of our case managers, however, improperly delayed transmission and your petition for en banc review was not docketed until June 5, 2006. It is now with the full Court and we will notify you as soon as the full Court issues its decision.

Again, I apologize for the delay in the handling of your motion. I have spoken to Ms. Gibbs, the case manager who was responsible for the delay, and explained to her how this case should have been processed. I sincerely regret the inconvenience this case has created for you, but I trust that future experiences at the Second Circuit will be more satisfactory. Should you ever have questions or problems in the future, please do not hesitate to call me. My direct line is 212-857-8599.

Thank you for your patience.

Very truly yours,

MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

---

This short form memorandum in opposition to the petition for certiorari is respectfully submitted on behalf of respondents Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc. d/b/a Flashdancers, s/h/a Flash Dancers Topless Club, Lynn Leposky, "Barry – Night Manager Flash Dancers" and "Flash Dancers Managers 1-5" in accordance with the procedure outlined in Stern et al, Supreme Court Practice: 8th Edition, § 6.37(d), pp. 460-461, and Appendix IV, p. 1037 ("Short Forms of Opposition to Certiorari").

Petitioner seeks discretionary Supreme Court review of an Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, __ F.3d __, 2006 U.S.App. LEXIS 2781, 2006 WL 267148 (Feb. 3, 2006) (Laval and Sotomayor, CJJ., and Kravitz, D.J.), affirming an Order of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York (Castel, D.J.), dismissing petitioner's claim for civil remedies under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C §§ 1961-1968, pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), for failure to state a claim for which relief can be granted.

The Supreme Court "has traditionally expended its limited time and resources on those cases that present issues of national importance..." (Stern et al, Supreme Court Practice: 8th Edition, § 4.2, p. 223). This is clearly not such a case. We annex hereto the entire dismissed Complaint and Supplemental Complaint, asserting a total of 988 patently incredible allegations against 67 defendants. In an effort to make his case seem reasonable and capable of review, petitioner has disingenuously included only 307 (31%) of these allegations in the appendix to his petition. However, his complaint (as supplemented) must be read in its entirety in order to understand the incredible nature of the allegations which the District Court faced in trying to ascertain which accusations were "well pleaded" and should be credited for purposes of Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

No District Court should be expected to have to deal with such patently vexatious and unreasonable litigation, particularly filed "pro se" by a member of the bar.* As the First Circuit so aptly stated in Correa-Martinez v. Arrillaga-Belendez, 903 F.2d 49 (1st Cir. 1990):

In the menagerie of the Civil Rules, the tiger patrolling the courthouse gates is rather tame, but "not entirely... toothless."*** Despite the highly deferential reading which we accord a litigant's complaint under Rule 12(b)(6), we need not credit bald assertions, periphrastic circumlocutions, unsubstantiated conclusions, or outright vituperation. *** Moreover, the rule does not entitle a plaintiff to rest on "subjective characterizations" or conclusory descriptions of "a general scenario which could be dominated by unpleaded facts." *** We understand that, for pleading purposes, the dividing line between sufficient facts and insufficient conclusions "is often blurred." *** But the line must be plotted:

It is only when such conclusions are logically compelled, or at least supported, by the stated facts, that is, when the suggested inference rises to what experience indicates is an acceptable level of probability, that 'conclusions' become 'facts' for pleading purposes.

[Citations omitted; emphasis added.]

* Any notion as to petitioner's good faith is quickly dispelled by review of his public website, www.royandalina.com, which he has titled "Stupid Frigging Fool: The tragicomedy of an American lawyer and a Russian mafia prostitute," and has dedicated "To Mother, May She burn in Hell."

WHEREFORE, we urge the Court to deny the petition for certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

EDWARD S. RUDOFISKY

REPLY BRIEF TO RESPONDENT FLASH DANCERS OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

Once again the defendant-respondent Flash Dancers is attempting to avoid the legal issues by resorting to its strategy of litigation by personal destruction. Flash Dancers and the other respondents had frequently unleashed their canons of misinformation and character assassination in the lower courts, and now Flash Dancers does the same in this Court with its Opposition Memorandum (“Flash Dancers Opp.”).

Flash Dancers and its attorneys’ aim is clear: use ad hominem to shut down the argument and marginalize the plaintiff so that they do not have to argue the merits—try the person, not the issues. Character assassination and misinformation has all too often been successful for the unscrupulous by hiding their nefarious deeds under the cloak of patriotism, religion or other popular views depending on the particular time period in America’s history. Flash Dancers is attempting the same tactic by trying to stir emotions against the petitioner in order to deflect attention from the legal issues before this Court that arose from Flash Dancers' RICO violations.

Flash Dancers' attorneys forget that the purpose behind the Bill of Rights, and of the First Amendment in particular, is to protect unpopular individuals from retaliation—and their ideas from suppression—at the hand of an intolerant society. McIntyre v. Ohio Elections Commission, 514 U.S. 334, 357, 115 S.Ct. 1511, 1524, 131 L. Ed. 2d 426 (Stevens, J.)(1995). “The proponents of the First Amendment ... were determined that every American should possess an unrestrained freedom to express his views, however odious they might be to vested interests whose power they might challenge.” Feldman v. United States, 322 U.S. 487, 501, 64 S.Ct. 1082, 1089, 88 L. Ed 1480 (Black, J. dissenting) (1944).

Respondent Flash Dancers openly operates a sexual bazaar in Times Square, New York City, which hardly puts it in a position to claim the allegations against it in this case are “subjective characterizations or conclusory descriptions,” Flash Dancers Opp., p. 4. A quick scan of Flash Dancers website, www.flashdancersnyc.com, reveals just some of the respondent's sordid activities. The site has been tamed down a great deal since this case started in the federal courts. Previously, the site sold pornography, escorts and the viewing of live sex acts over the internet in the same manner that New York Elites and Exotica 2000 did before U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement closed down those Russian mafia operations for prostitution and money laundering.<sup>1</sup> Press Release U.S. Attorney Southern District of New York, SA-2.

Flash Dancers also characterizes the petitioner's allegations as "incredible," Flash Dancers Opp., p. 3, but on the de novo review of a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, a defendant-appellees' protestations are not the pertinent legal standard. The standard as stated by this Court is that it "must ... take the allegations of the complaint at face value for the purpose of the motion." California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515, 92 S.Ct. 609, 614, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642 (1972)(citing Walker Process Equip., Inc. v. Food Machinery & Chemical Corp., 382 U.S. 172, 174-175, 86 S.Ct. 347, 348-349, 15 L.Ed.2d 247 (1965)). The District Court in its opinion at p. 6 (A-12) stated, "[i]t is axiomatic that in deciding a motion to dismiss pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), the Court must accept all factual allegations as true and draw all inferences in favor of plaintiff." Levy v. Southbrook International Investments, Ltd., 263 F.3d 10, 14 (2d Cir. 2001), cert. denied 535 U.S. 1054 (2002). Regardless of Flash Dancers opinion about the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint "[t]he issue is not whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail but whether the claimant is entitled to offer evidence to support the claims. Indeed it may appear on the face of the pleadings that a recovery is very remote and unlikely but that is not the test.” Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236, 94 S.Ct. 1683, 1686, 40 L.Ed.2d 90 (1974).

Flash Dancers further claims this case is “patently vexatious and unreasonable,” Flash Dancers Opp., p. 4, and Flash Dancers’ papers below have called this RICO action numerous names, the most favorite being “frivolous. But there has been no finding by either of the two courts below as to this case being vexatious, unreasonable or frivolous. How could there be when the allegations are against a portion of the Russian mafia’s operations in America.

The Russian mafia has been operating in the United States for years. Scott P. Boylan, Organized Crime and Corruption in Russia, Vol. 19, Fordham Int’l L.J., 1999, 2013 (1996). With the fall of the Soviet Union, the activities of Russian organized crime groups have spread to the United States and Europe. Id. “Not only does the Mafia kill and steal in Russia, it does so in the United States as well.” Id. at 2001. Mafia members are involved in "theft, extortion, money-laundering, gun-trafficking, drug running, prostitution, smuggling, loan sharking, contract killing and more." Id. “The U.S. Department of Justice has established task forces to deal with the Russian Mafia in New York, Los Angeles, and Miami.” Id. In 1994, the Russian mob had more than 300 members in the New York area alone, making it larger than the Bonanno, Colombo, or Lucchese crime families. Allan

Friedman, The Organizatsiya: Brooklyn's Booming Russian Mob is Slicker, Smarter, and Much Meaner than La Cosa Nostra, N.Y. Mag., Nov. 7, 1994, at 50. Russia's international professional criminals have caused the most economic damage in the U.S. Scott O'Neal, Russian Organized Crime, FBI Law Enforcement Bulletin, May 2000.

The issues raised in the petition for writ of certiorari go to the heart of whether Civil RICO will be effectively used in the future against the archetypal intimidating monsters of organized crime, which is what Congress intended in passing the statute. Flash Dancers hopes to convince this Court that such issues are not of "national importance" so that Flash Dancers and its compatriots in Russian organized crime can continue making lots of money in the shadows beyond the reach of the best disinfectant: the spotlight of public scrutiny.

*****

Flash Dancers accuses the petitioner of trying to deceive this Court by not including in his Appendix the entire Complaint and Supplemental Complaint. Flash Dancers Opp., p. 3. The Supreme Court's rules do not require the inclusion of pleadings in a petition for certiorari, but the petitioner included those sections of the pleadings that he believed essential to understanding the petition. Sup. Ct. R. 14(1)(i)(vi). The petitioner also followed the practice of the law firm he worked for just out of law school, Cravath Swaine and Moore, by not including all the allegations. In addition, the District Court below stated many of the allegations were not necessary to its decision to dismiss, Dist. Order p. 3 ¶ 1, A-9.

Flash Dancers indicated that the abridged versions of the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint were also meant to disguise “bald assertions, periphrastic circumlocutions, unsubstantiated conclusions, or outright vituperation...subjective characterizations or conclusory descriptions....” Flash Dancers Opp., p. 4. But nowhere does Flash Dancers state which of the allegations excluded or, for that matter, included fit those descriptions. Apparently, Flash Dancers wants this Court to expend its limited time paging through the Flash Dancers’ appendix searching for allegations the respondent never cited. Flash Dancers’ attorneys chose the easy way out by making general conclusions unsupported by analysis or specifics.

Finally, the petitioner requests that Flash Dancers’ memorandum in opposition be rejected for failing to present pertinent arguments under Sup. Ct. R. 15(2) that address the issues raised in the petition for writ of certiorari.

Re: Shipilina, Alina A., INS A Number 047-202-363, SS Number 063 90 4695

Dear Sir or Madam:

I am writing to inform you of the repeated violation of currency transport regulations by Alina (aka Angelina) Alexandrovna Shipilina or Chipilina, a Russian national who works as a stripper and prostitute here in New York City. Every two or three months, Ms. Shipilina transports well over $15,000 in cash out of the country without notifying Customs. Ms. Shipilina carries the money hidden in her suitcase, the heels of her shoes, or internally. She transports the cash to either Russia or Cyprus where she has a bank account in Limassol. Ms. Shipilina is in the United States as a Conditional Permanent Resident. She first entered the United States on July 10, 2000. See Exhibit 1, copy of Permanent Resident Card, photographs and description.

A number of the below cites are to Exhibit 3 that contains a copy of Ms. Shipilina's diary, which was written in Russian, and an English translation.

Her main source of income and cash comes from working as a lap dancer at the topless club Flash Dancers, located at 1674 Broadway (212 315 5107) in New York City. See Exhibit 2, copies of some of her work schedules for 2000. She works at the club under the assumed name of "Angelina". The club charges her about $140 a night to dance and her average net is between $500 and $600 a night. See Exhibit 3, pages 46, 47, 48 of the English translation, pages 127, 128, 129, 130 of her Russian diary. Her gross, therefore, averages $640 to $740 a night—all cash. She dances five nights a week, which gives her a monthly gross of around $13,000 to $15,000 in cash from just stripping. Her diary states that for a month and a half from the end of July to the beginning of September 2000 she netted between $17,000 and $18,000. See Exhibit 3, page 48 of the English translation, page 130 of her Russian diary. A sampling of her earnings just from stripping for the year 2000 is contained in Exhibit 4. Ms. Shipilina also engages in prostitution, but I do not have any figures on those earnings.

Ms. Shipilina's trips overseas in which she illegally transported cash to Russia or Cyprus follow:

1. September 9, 2000, departed JFK for Moscow on Aeroflot, the Russian International Airline. September 10, 2001, flew from Moscow to her home in Krasnodar. September 18 or 19 flew to Cyprus from Krasnodar. September 25 returned to Krasnodar from Cyprus. October 2, 2000, returned to New York on Aeroflot from Moscow.
2. December 21, 2000, Ms. Shipilina departs on Aeroflot from JFK to Moscow. Returned to New York from Moscow around January 18, 2001.
3. Over the last half of April and the first half of May, Ms. Shipilina traveled back to Krasnodar, Russia and Limassol, Cyprus.

Given her past record of transporting cash out of the country, Ms. Shipilina is due for another trip soon.

Before taking her cash back to Russia, Ms. Shipilina stores it in her safe deposit box (number 14299) at the Citibank at 411 Fifth Avenue, New York City. See Exhibit 3, page 47 of the English translation, page 129 of her Russian diary. The safe deposit box is under the name: Alina A. Chipilina. See Exhibit 5, copy of her safe deposit box agreement. She also has two bank accounts under the name Alina A. Chipilina at Citibank at 262 First Avenue, New York City (checking 67147197 and money market 67147234). See Exhibit 6, copy of her August 2000 bank statement. She also has a bank account in Limassol, Cyprus, under the name Alina A. Chipilina, but I am unaware of which bank it is with.

Ms. Shipilina is now living under the name of Alina A. Chipilina at the following address:

28-15 34 Street, Apt. 4H
Astoria, New York 11103.

Her telephone number (718 274 4902) and mobile number (917 374 4713) are under the name Alina A. Shipilina.

Ms. Shipilina currently owns an apartment in Krasnodar, Russia at 138 Rashpilevskaya, Apt 8

Krasnodar, 350020
Telephone 55 67 71
Mobile 63 66 95

Ms. Shipilina has two international passports issued by the Russian Government. A copy of three of the pages of the one that lists her last name as Chipilina is attached as Exhibit 7. She had a second international passport issued to her in April 2000. See Exhibit 3, page 40 of the English translation of Ms. Shipilina's diary; page 104 of the Russian version. I have also attached a copy of her internal Russian passport as Exhibit 8.

1. Chechen Connections:
  - a. Seen associating with Chechen gangsters in Sochi in 1999, according to Yulya Yurevna Kudinova.
  - b. Grew up in Gorzny from late 1970s until 1991, according to Alina and Alexey Dikov.
  - c. Lived in Gorzny with her mother, Inessa, and father, who was chief of police, according to Alina. There is some question as to whether Alina had a traditional father. In addition, Inessa told my driver that Alina's father was an Army officer.
  - a. A Chechen man who worked at the Vita S Movie Theater at the end of Krasnaya Ulitsa (54 75 77) helped Alina and her mother move from Grozny and find a place in Krasnodar when Alina's parents allegedly divorced, according to Alina. Alina introduced Roy Den Hollander to this man twice in 2000. Alexey Dikov believes the man is Arab and not Chechen.
  - d. Still has connections in Chechnya, according to Alina.
  - e. Still has connections with people whom she knew in Chechnya but now live in the Krasnodar area, such as Yulya Alyabyeva who lives in Kanevskaya, according to Alina.
2. Russian organized crime connections
  - a. Seen associating with Russian gangsters in Krasnodar, according to a male model of Anastasia Vasiljeva and her husband Dima.
  - b. Alina met Khachatryan Araratovich Aspyan at the Albatross Club in Krasnodar.
  - c. Albatross club is meeting place for criminals, some of whom protect Alina's interests.
  - d. Aspyan is a close contact person of Ded Khasan (Grandfather Khasan) who is a Russian mafia kingpin.
  - e. Alina was seen with Volchok (Woofy) and Raketa (Rocket) who are also criminal leaders in Krasnodar.
  - f. Two Krasnodar wise guys own Zygos brothel/strip club in Limassol, Cyprus, where Alina worked during the first half of 1999.
3. Narcotics Use
  - a. Surreptitiously puts narcotics into food or drink of sex customers to help keep them satisfied, according to Alinal.

- b. Put “salts and sugars” in Roy Den Hollander’s food without his knowledge, which caused narcotic like symptoms, according to Alina’s diary.
  - c. Brings into US an apparent narcotic, a green-brown powder that Alina obtains from her “herbalist” in Krasnodar, according to Alina. FBI tested sample but refused to tell Roy Den Hollander the results.
- 4. When Roy Den Hollander managed the Kroll Associates’ Moscow Office, Alina repeatedly inquired as to who were the company’s contacts with the FBI, how the FBI operated in Russia and the company’s sources of information in the FSB and MVD.
- 5. Alina has two Russian international passports.
  - a. 43 No. 7489821, issued Sept. 9, 1997, expired Sept 9, 2002. This passport she used to travel to the US.
  - b. 51 No 0207805, expires 4/4/05. This passport she uses to travel to Cyprus and other places she wants to keep hidden from US Customs.
- 6. Alina keeps an account at the Bank of Cyprus, Aigos Fylaeos 282, 3083 Aiga Fyaa, Limassol, Cyprus. The account is a Global Equity Fund, Number 54660, in the name Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina. Alina use to work as a lap dancer and prostitute in Limassol.
- 7. Every two or three months, Alina transports over $15,000 in cash out of the country without notifying Customs.

Re: Alina (aka Angelina) Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina)

Dear Agents Pisano and Thomas:

In response to your request at our meeting on February 13th, I am enclosing the following information:

1. The telephone number for the man who made the two threatening phone calls is 212 802 7065. I have also attached a transcript of the threatening messages and the circumstances under which they were received.
2. The account in Cyprus where Alina Shipilina hides some of the money she earns in the US is a Global Equity Fund at the Bank of Cyprus, Aigos Fylaeos 282, 3083 Aiga Fyaa, Limassol, Cyprus, Account Number 54660. Once again, Ms. Shipilina does not know that I have this account information.
3. Photographs of Ms. Shipilina taken within the past two years.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Mike Byrnes, Special Agent
Federal Bureau of Investigation
26 Federal Plaza
New York, NY 10278

Dear Special Agent Byrnes:

In response to your telephone voicemail message of September 2, 2003, I am more than willing to provide you with information that may be helpful in your investigation, but in return I also need information.

As you know, the FBI has information concerning the identity of a man who made three threatening telephone calls to me, two of which are on an audiotape in the possession of the FBI. The information as to the man's identity will not only help prove some parts of my federal civil RICO case, 03 CV 2717, but may lead to the identity of the Russian man who most recently threaten me over the telephone, an audiotape of which is also in the FBI's possession.

The FBI has decided not to investigate any of the threats; however, I do not understand why the FBI will not release the information concerning the identity of the man who made the first three threatening calls. Given special agent Mario Pisano's statement that the FBI would not even interview the man because of what he might do to me and Pisano's added precautions not to open my door to anyone I don't know and to be careful when out in the public, I understand that the FBI does not want to bother with the safety of a tax-paying US citizen—fine. But that is no reason to thwart my efforts to protect myself. I am still fearful for my life, which causes me to periodically change my living pattern and, in accordance with Pisano's advice, take extra precautions when outside of my apartment.

In conclusion, I am willing to provide the FBI with information, but I need the information concerning the identity of the first threatening caller and the laboratory report on the substance that I turned over for testing to special agents Pisano and Thomas on February 13, 2002.

If you are not in a position to make these decisions, then please provide me with the name of the supervisor who can.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

26 Federal Plaza
New York, NY 10278

Dear Special Agent Byrnes:

This is a follow up to our telephone conversations of August 11, 2003. You may recall that you had telephoned me in the morning and told me that after reviewing the RICO complaint and the text of the threatening call I had received that the matter was not within the purview of the FBI. It was more a state and local matter.

About an hour later, you called back and apologized for being short in the previous call. You explained that during the first call someone was in your office before whom you didn't want to go into certain matters concerning the information I had provided. You said there were some items in the complaint that you were interested in obtaining more information about. We agreed that you would provide me with specific topics for which I would review my files for additional information contingent on my decision that the release of the information at this time was consistent with my legal strategy. So far, I have not received the list of topics from you.

Thank you for your time.

FBI Interview II

On February 13, 2001, I visited FBI at 26 Federal Plaza in order to have tested a substance that Alina Shipilina threatened to poison me with. I was interviewed by agents Mario Pisano, 212 384 2295, and Vadim Thomas, 212 384 3698. During the interview Mr. Thomas asked whether there had been any other threats at which point I informed about the two threats from a man calling himself alternatively John Madison or John Pierre who left two voicemails on my mobile, 917 687 0652, saying he was calling on behalf of Angelina, my ex wife's stripping and prostituting name, see John Who document for transcript of threats. The agents asked whether I had informed any other authorities. I told them the police, and I was thinking of informing Customs about the substance they were going to test. Both strongly suggested that I not actively pursue this matter with other authorities because it would end up in different agencies interfering with each other. The agents said that if the local police contact me, then tell them that the FBI was involved and of course cooperate with the local police if they had any requests, but make sure the police knew that the FBI was working on the matter. The agents also said they would test the substance, look into the matter further, requested some additional information and documents that I delivered on February 14, see FBI Substance Test Letter, and would get back to me.

February 26, Agent Pisano called me and said they would interview my ex wife and the man who made the threatening phone calls in order to put them on notice that the FBI was involved, and that Ms. Shipilina and John should not continue such conduct or make good on their threats. Mr. Pisano also told me the FBI had tested the substance but would not tell me the results.

March 8, Agent Pisano called me to say that they had contacted my ex wife, and she refused to talk to them on advise of her attorney Nicholas Mundy. He also said that they were not going to try to talk to the gentleman who made the threats because they thought it might prod him into some rash act against me. This new tact by Mr. Pisano seemed strange to me.

March 14, 2002, Agent Pisano returned my call requesting the name of the man who threatened me in order to provide it to the INS so they could interview him. Pisano said he has an idea of who the man is that made the call and is once again considering whether to go talk to him. He doesn't want to waste his time if he gets the same response he got from Alina when he went to talk to her, which was she refused to talk and referred him to her lawyer. Pisano didn't consider the call a threat and since the man hasn't called again, Pisano didn't seem too concerned. He said I should relax and let them do their job, and if they decide not to contact the man they suspect then they will notify me.

March 18, 2002, Agent Pisano called, said he talked over the telephone to the individual they think made the calls. The individual is going away and Agent Pisano will try to meet with the individual when he comes back. Pisano would not give me the individual's name or say what he did for a living. Pisano said he didn't think the threats made were credible.

FBI Interview

Richard J. Schleck, Special Agent, 212 384 1000

When managing Kroll's Moscow Office, Alina wanted to know the company's clients, sources of information in the FSB and militia, contacts in the FBI and FBI operations in Moscow. Alina raised in Chechnya until 16, still has contacts with people she grew up with there. Alina visited the office often and once I caught her roaming around in my computer. Former boy friend's brother member FSB. When she need an airplane ticket to Moscow, she contacted her FSB contact. Associates with New Russians. Only girl released from Mexican immigration prison and sent home, no records. The others were kept for two weeks. In 1970s her mother traveled extensively in Europe as a dancer. Bank account Cyprus. Meets lots of men at Flash Dancers, including government and businessmen. Has two Russian international passports.

Dear Agent Thomas:

When you and Agent Pisano interviewed me concerning the threats that my ex-wife, Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina, made against me via an unknown man, I mentioned that the brothel-strip club, Zygos, where she worked in Cyprus in 1999 is owned by a couple of organized crime figures from Krasnodar, Russia. I contacted my source of information in Cyprus through my Moscow attorney to obtain the names, but he is fearful about providing them. He did say that the manager of the club Marios Athanasiou, 357 557 9851, and his brother Melios Athanasiou, 357 574 8427, mobile 357 943 4626, know the true owners. Marios also manages another brothel-strip club called Tramps. Melios arranges for girls from various Krasnodar modeling agencies, such as Tatyanna Vasilyeva Fashion House, to obtain Cypriot visas as "artists" to work in both clubs. For what it is worth, my contact also mentioned that the names of the true owners are known within the Russian community of Cyprus.

If I can be of any further assistance, please contact me.

Sincerely

Roy Den Hollander

Telephone Call from Lu Lieber FBI Office of Professional Responsibility

I received a call around 11:40am Wednesday, Feb. 4, 2004 from Lu Lieber (female) of the FBI's Office of Professional Responsibility. Part of the conversation is recorded on Tape 3 at meter 197to 250.

Lieber in a nasty and lame effort at pretending to be an authoritarian figure said:

1. the FBI would not tell me the results of the substance tested,
2. the FBI would not tell me the name of the man who made the threats, but did say they knew who the man was that made the threats, and
3. that the FBI has no obligation to provide information or the results of an on going investigation. The last part infers there is an on going investigation.

Lieber also stressed that the FBI was under no obligation to answer the professional responsibility complaint I made by telephone against Thomas and Pisano and that her telephone call was a courtesy. I responded that the courtesy was my listening to a nasty government bureaucrat tell a US citizen that the FBI was not going to help him. (John Madison in his second threatening telephone call also used the phrase this is a "courtesy call.")

Lieber refused to provide the FBI's decisions in writing.

Special Agent Vadim Thomas
Federal Bureau of Investigation
26 Federal Plaza
New York, NY 10278

Dear Special Agent Thomas:

You may recall that in February 2002 I met with you and another agent at 26 Federal Plaza and requested the FBI test a substance believed to be a narcotic that my ex-wife had brought into the country.

In response to one of your questions, I also told you about two threatening telephone calls that had been made to me. Both of you listened to tape recordings of the calls, but unfortunately the FBI did not have a two speed tape player, so the unknown man making the threats sounded more like Mickey Mouse than an associate of Flash Dancers, which you suggested he probably was. I provided the two of you with a voicemail telephone number that the threatening man used.

The FBI subsequently determined the nature of the substance I had provided for testing and also tracked the telephone number to an individual. This letter is a request for the name and business address of the man to whom the voicemail number was traced and for the nature of the substance tested.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Mexico

12. Defendant defrauded her Moscow agent, Leonid Perlin, out of part of his commission for her work in Mexico from September through November 1999.
  - a. April 20, 2000, "Leonid said that Salvador felt offended with me, because I had affair with Alfonso, I abandon him and he informed police. It is foolish. He simply feared that I can leave him and work for myself. I had to lie that I borrowed from Roy 10,000$ because I told (Leonid) I lost 7,000$ in the credit card account." Page 43 English; p 107 Russian.

United States

13. In early August 2000 Ms. Shipilina told her husband that she wanted to go out with some of her "clients" at Flash Dancers. Ms. Shipilina admitted to her husband that she collected business cards from her clients. Since she only wore tong panties, she would fold the cards and put them inside her. Exhibit 2, various business cards. On the back of the card of a Nomura Manager, she wrote, "Romantic, tall, massage and kissing back." On the back of the card of Mr. Barrera, she wrote, "From Mexico, older man, likes Russian women". Mr. Hollander's telephone logs showed Ms. Shipilina making repeated calls to one of her customers that she admitted pursuing. Exhibit 3, telephone log. A private investigator tried to track the individual down but could not and concluded: "It is our opinion this person is most certainly hiding something but it is unclear as to the reasons for doing so. If there is a possibility anyone in your home could be involved with ...unlawful activities, that would explain the secrecy involved here." Exhibit 4, Investigator's July 31, 2000 Report.
14. In early September 2000, Ms. Shipilina engaged in an act of prostitution under New York State law in a private room at Flash Dancers. Her September 9, 2000, journal entry, "Besides, for the first time I went to a single room – I danced to a bearded man from TV. On Monday we sat there for 2 hours, I danced, .... I allowed him to touch me. I received a pleasure." Page 50 English; p 130 Russian.
15. Finally, in Krasnodar in September 2000 Ms. Shipilina told her husband that she never engaged in prostitution because afterwards, she goes to church and asks forgiveness, which God gives her, so it is as if it never happened. Then defendant told plaintiff, "If God can forgive me, why can't you?"

Brett,

As follow up to my email, I have enclosed a certified computer printout of Alina Shipilina's New York State Voter Registration in which she swears or affirms she is a US citizen. Also enclosed is a copy of the Board of Election records on her and various applicable laws—highlighted.

Next Monday, I have a trial in which I am trying to obtain a permanent order of protection against Alina to put a stop to the threatening telephone calls I notified you about previously. I am not optimistic since the lady judge has refused most by discovery requests and the FBI will not release the name of the man they think made the calls. Justice is hard to find for a man in America these days.

Re: Shipilina, Alina Alexandrovna, INS A Number 047-202-363, Social Security 063 90 4695 (Also uses the last name of Chipilina and the first name of Angelina.)

Dear Brett,

I am resending these documents in case the ones I sent by Express mail did not reach you. As soon as I have the judge's ruling to terminate my marriage in document form, I will fax it or Fed Ex it to you.

I am enclosing a number of documents with accompanying exhibits that may be of assistance in the up coming INS hearing concerning Ms. Shipilina.

1. Information for Tracking Alina Shipilina that includes her addresses, addresses of friends, work addresses, physical description, bank accounts and passport information.
2. Ms. Shipilina Married for the Purpose of Procuring Admission as an Immigrant that lists quotes from her diary and interviews with a few of her associates indicating Ms. Shipilina did not enter a bona fide marriage.
3. Additional Indications of Ms. Shipilina Selling Sexual Favors that were not explicitly detailed in my lawyer's, Xenia Menshova, letter to you of May 1, 2001.
4. Copies of Two Handwritten Letters by Ms. Shipilina that she sent to Leonid Perlin when she was working as a prostitute and lap dancer at the Club Zygos in Limassol, Cyprus. One of the letters contains a return address for her Cyprus agent who is a part owner of Zygos: Melios Athanasiou. A CD with the photographs she refers to is included. I have the originals of the letters presumably with Ms. Shipilina's fingerprints, and I possess the original pages of her diary from May to September 2000 also presumably with her fingerprints. I assume both documents could be used to verify that she wrote her diary. In addition, paragraph 5(i) of her Answer in the divorce proceeding seems to admit the diary is hers.
5. Mexican Immigration Document, the document makes reference to Ms. Shipilina and one of her richer clients, Alfredo Ibarra, on the day Mexican Immigration kicked her out of the country.

6. A copy of the letter and exhibits I provided the Internal Revenue Service about her evasion of US taxes.

Let me know whether there is anything else I can provide.

Regards,

Roy

Dear Brett,

I have enclosed four documents that evidence my divorce from Ms. Shipilina:

1. Stipulation of Settlement signed by both parties.
2. Transcript of the hearing in which Judge Joan Lobis granted both the Plaintiff and Defendant's motions for divorce. For your information on page 16, Ms. Shipilina says, "I cannot have new friends...." By friends she means going out with her customers.
3. Finding of Facts and Conclusions of Law agreed to by counsel for both sides.
4. Judgment for Divorce agreed to by counsel for both sides.

The Judge still has the perfunctory act of signing the Findings of Fact and the Judgment for recording with the clerk. Due to the back up in the system this may take a few weeks. As soon as it occurs, I will let you know.

Thanks again,

Roy

Re: Alina (aka Angelina) Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina)

Dear Brett,

Enclosed are some additional documents that may be of use to the US Attorney.

Exhibit 1 is the "Net Worth Statement" that Ms. Shipilina filed in our divorce proceeding. The statement grossly understates her income and expenses. Exhibit 2 provides an analysis of the misrepresentations and omissions made under oath by Ms. Shipilina in her Net worth Statement.

Ms. Shipilina began work at Flash Dancers' Topless Club on July 17, 2000. Exhibit 3 is a document from an Internet site set up by lap dancers that estimates the average take home pay per night for a dancer at Flash Dancers. Exhibit 4 lists the dates for the vacations that Ms. Shipilina has taken since she began working at Flash Dancers. Although Ms. Shipilina is a very aggressive worker who makes significantly more than the average dancer, Exhibits 3 and 4 will provide an understanding of the relatively large amounts of money on which she evades US taxes.

Exhibit 5 is the only Mexican immigration document I could find concerning Alina. At the bottom of page one it mentions her and Alfredo Ibarra, one of her prostitution clients and the man to whom she prostituted herself in Italy just three months after our marriage and a week before her interview at the US Embassy for her immigration visa. The document is dated November 29, 1999, which was when Mexican Immigration put her on a plane out of the country. All the other documents concerning her arrest and deportation from Mexico were literally torn out of the registers in Mexico. I didn't think she had such pull. She said she was deported for working without a visa, but it could have been anything.

As I mentioned previously, Ms. Shipilina grew up in Grozny, Chechnya, from the mid 1970s until 1991. Ms. Shipilina's acquaintances in Krasnodar, Russia, have told me that she has been seen associating with Chechen organized crime figures in Krasnodar and Sochi.

My Moscow attorney, Xenia Menshova (095 722 9035) who works with Dennis Whelan should be providing you with additional documents.

1. Alina's 50% ownership interest in her apartment in Krasnodar.
2. A copy of her application for a second international passport that she uses to travel to Cyprus where she banks some of her hidden US cash flow.
3. Writing sample.

Thanks much.

April 11, 2002

Brett,

Is there anything you can tell me about the status of the proceedings against my ex-wife Alina Shipilina?

The following is an update on the latest developments here. I don't think they're particularly relevant to the INS proceedings, but I'm sure Alina's attorney, Nicholas Mundy, will try to make some mileage in his efforts to cast me in a negative light.

1. I've enclosed Mr. Mundy's answer to my Disciplinary Complaint against him and my response to his answer. Both refer to an allegation by Alina that she is pursuing that in June 2001 I allegedly violated a Temporary Order of Protection that was later dismissed in July 2001. I assume Mr. Mundy had Alina resurrect the allegation this March of 2002 to try to discredit me before the Disciplinary Committee, deter me from testifying in any potential INS hearing or to cast doubt on my credibility as a witness. The allegation will most likely end up in a trial.
2. I received another threatening telephone call from what sounded like the same man who made the two previous calls of which I recorded the two messages that he left on my voicemail. I was unable to record this third call because I answered the phone personally. He was more explicit this time probably because he wasn't leaving a voicemail. The one sided conversation went pretty much as follows:

Mr. Den Hollander, this is John Pierre calling on behalf of Angelina (once again that's the name Alina uses for stripping and other activities). I told you before to cease and desist with your legal actions. I'm warning you do not testify before the INS or we will meet and you don't want that. You understand what I mean. (In the background, I heard what sounded like Alina say 'About my mother and the prosecutor.') And do not try to get the case in Russia reopened. I'm watching you, I know everything about you, have a nice day.

He hung up before I got to say anything.

The next day I took out a Temporary Order of Protection against Alina to put a stop to these calls. The police, unfortunately closed their case on this matter because they didn't want to expend the resources and the FBI has done nothing further that I am aware of.

That's the latest in this soap opera. You know, I never liked those TV shows.

Hope all is well with you.

Roy

James W. Zigler
Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service
425 I Street, NW
Washington, DC 20536

Dear Mr. Zigler:

Over two months ago, I provided the INS with evidence that a Russian national, Alina A. Shipilina, fraudulently obtained conditional permanent residency, A 047 202 363, in the United States in order to work in the sex industry in New York City. Ms. Shipilina currently works as a lap dancer at the club Flash Dancers where she earns around $15,000 a month on which she does not pay taxes.

In order to gain entry into the US, Ms. Shipilina made material misrepresentations on Form 230, Parts I and II:

1. She failed to answer "Yes" to Question 33(b) in Part II that she was coming to the United States to work as a prostitute and that she had worked as a prostitute within the last 10 year. In fact Ms. Shipilina engaged in prostitution in Cyprus, Mexico, Russia and Italy from at least the beginning of 1999 right up until a few days before receiving her visa on May 30, 2000. She continues her profession in New York City.
2. She failed to answer "Yes" to Question 34 in Part II that she had been arrested and imprisoned. Ms. Shipilina was arrested on November 26, 1999, at a lap dancing club in Mexico City. She was imprisoned and deported back to Russia on November 29, 1999.
3. She lied about her occupation in Cyprus on Question 21 in Part I. She did not work as an artist but as a prostitute and lap dancer at the clubs Tramps and Zygos in Limassol.

For some unknown reason the INS in New York does not want to take action over such blatant violations of the Immigration and Nationality Act. In fact, the agent assigned to this matter, Eugene Kazenko (212 264 5400), has failed to provide me the courtesy of returning even one of my four telephone calls that I made to his office. Perhaps your office will consider the violation of US laws less lightly than the New York Office.

I have enclosed copies of the materials provided to Mr. Kazenko, which include Ms. Shipilina's handwritten diary in Russian and a full certified English translation of which I have also provided to "60 Minutes". The cites in the March 26th letter to NYC INS have been updated to refer to the certified English translation.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander, Esq.

New York, New York 10009

Dear Mr. Hollander:

This office has received your correspondence dated July 5, 2001, which was addressed to Commissioner Ziglar. As this office oversees the operations of the Immigration Service in New York, the Commissioner has asked that we review your concerns and provide you with a response.

As your letter indicates that further review may well be in order, we are forwarding a copy of your correspondence to the Immigration Service's District Office at New York. That office will evaluate the information and take all appropriate action consistent with the enforcement requirements and priorities of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

We very much appreciate your bringing these facts to our attention. Experience has shown that timely information furnished by concerned citizens such as yourself is instrumental in allowing the Immigration Service to maintain an effective and responsive enforcement program, both in New York and throughout the U.S.

Sincerely,

J. Scott Blackman
Regional Director

Brett,

The following is a list of some of the false accusations I believe Alina will make against me in order to attack my credibility.

1. I brought her to America to pimp her out. Copies of the love letters I wrote her before and immediately after our marriage refute this. I can provide copies, which I kept in English while my translator sent her the Russian versions. Also, she never mention this in her dairy where she tends to report even minor matters.

2. I tried to extort money from her. Her attorney Nicholas J. Mundy made that allegation to my attorney in order to pressure me into resolving the divorce suit to her liking and helping Alina obtain a permanent green card; that is, lying to the INS about our marriage being bona fide. When Mundy made the allegation he stated he had an audio tape of my trying to extort money from her or I would deport her but never produced it because it doesn't exist unless they doctored a tape together. On December 22, 2001, I filed a complaint against Mundy with the NY Supreme Court Appellate Division, First Department's Disciplinary Committee for violating not only the Disciplinary Rules for Attorneys but NY Penal Code 135.60 in using this type of tactic against an opposing litigant. See attached copy of complaint.

3. I repeatedly abused her physically. Mundy told one of my attorneys that he had medical records of the physical abuse but once again never produced them because they don't exist unless some Russian doctor created such false reports for a fee. My complaint against him includes that falsehood. See attached complaint.

4. I told her to lie about her past on her application for an immigrant visa. At the time she applied, I didn't know that she worked as a prostitute because I didn't read her diary until afterwards.

I'm sure she will invent a few more, but that's all I can come up with at the moment. I believe the Net Worth Statement in which Alina repeatedly lied under oath to the NY court may be useful to show her willingness to misrepresent and omit the truth. She believes that omissions do not constitute lying.

I will send you by Express Mail an affidavit from an investigation firm in Mexico City about the Men's Club where Alina worked from September through November 1999. The club's lap dancers are known for engaging in prostitution--for what it's worth.

Thanks again

Roy

Hi!

As I told your attorney, any information that can confirm that she is a prostitute, helps us immensley. This can include sworn statements, affidavits, arrest records, anything. So, if any of these people are willing to put their knowledge on paper, that would help. Also, We have the Mexico thing, but it doesn't specifically state prostitution. Do you know if she has ever been picked up before, or had to register as a prostitute?

Let me know.

Brett,

My attorney, Xenia Menshova, tells me that INS needs a person to testify to Alina working as a prostitute.

Brett,

Marc L. Paulsen has changed his telephone number, apparently recently. When I called the number to ask about a sworn statement, another person answered who said they had just gotten the number 310 530 9532. As of July 2001 the following information on Marc was correct:

Marc L. Paulsen, Medical Doctor licensed in California

1944 W 237 St.
Torrance, Cal 90501
310 530 9532
Email: marcpent@cnmnetwork.com

I contacted the California Medical Board off the internet and got the attached information on Doctor Marc. I tried telephone information for Mission Viejo vicinity (code 949) and Torrance vicinity (code 310) but no public listings for a Doctor Marc. Perhaps the Government could track him down.

When I talked to Doctor Marc at the end of June 2001, he said he travels to Russian relatively often to make similar videos with Russian models and the implication was to engage in sex with them in return for money. He said he now uses Red Star models instead of Leo's girls. He also said that US Customs once gave him a "hard time" about the videos he was bringing back from Moscow.

Dear Sir or Madam:

In the course of representing Roy Den Hollander, a US citizen, we became aware of material misrepresentation in the immigration application of his wife, Alina (aka Angelina) Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina), who entered the United States on July 10, 2000, as a Conditional Permanent Resident. Mr. Den Hollander is currently suing for nullification of his marriage on the grounds of these misrepresentations, revealed in her own words in her diary, a copy of which is attached in relevant parts in both Russian and English. The primary misrepresentations are as follows:

I. Ms. Shipilina married Mr. Hollander, as she put it, as a “business” proposition in order to secure US permanent residency. See entries in diary attached as Exhibit 1.

April 5, 2000: refers to March 11 marriage, “Got married. It was fun, but for me it was not serious, just business.” Exhibit 1, page 101.

June 25, 2000: “The problem is his (i.e. her husband’s) real feeling for me. I am something that stimulated him. He sees me as a real wife – but that is absurd. I will never see him as a real husband.” Exhibit 1, page 120.

Exhibit 1, page 114, 117: Shipilina wanted to marry any foreigner in order to live abroad (Exhibit 1, page 82) and finally married Mr. Hollander to secure US citizenship on the basis of a marriage (Exhibit 1, page 95);

February 19, 2000: Shipilina states that her friends in Krasnodar (her city of permanent residence in Russia) knew about her real relation to Mr. Hollander and approved the idea of this kind of “marriage business.” Exhibit 1, page 100.

It is clear that Ms. Shipilina did not intend to enter a genuine marriage in Krasnodar on March 11, 2000. From her perspective, the marriage was a mechanism to allow her to pursue her career as a prostitute in America. Exhibit 1, page 108.

On the basis of this information, our client is filing for annulment of the marriage as a sham.

Other material misrepresentations relate to prostitution and arrest.

1. Ms. Shipilina answered “No” to Question 33(b), whether the applicant engaged in prostitution within 10 years prior to submitting the visa application. He diary suggests otherwise.

Exhibit 1 describes the period from January through June 1999, when Ms. Shipilina worked as a part time prostitute while stripping in a club called “Zygos” in Limassol, Cyprus. The Club offered the following services: strip dance, private dance, table dance, “accompany” (pages: 7, 18, 20 etc) to clients for a night, a day or couple of days.

Exhibit 1, page 17: Ms. Shipilina says that she was “trying to be the first [among club girls] in business.”

Exhibit 1, page 77,78, 95: in Mexico City, Mexico, where she worked for a madam by the name of Kitty and with an agent by the name of Maria Sorrato.

Exhibit 1, page 45: in Moscow, Russia her agent/pimp who organized her business in Moscow and Mexico is identified as Leonid.

Exhibit 3 contains a list of men who had used her services as a prostitute from January to November 1999 for money, presents, and other compensation. At times she would ask God to bless her clients and pray for good business (pages 21, 27, 30, etc.)

Exhibit 1, pages 101, 112, 113: Ms. Shipilina engaged in prostitution after the marriage, specifically in Krasnodar, Russia, and in Milan, Venice, and Florence, Italy, in April-May 2000.

See also:

Exhibit 1, page 130: Ms. Shipilina presently works as a “lap dancer” five nights a week at “Flash Dancers” in Manhattan under the assumed name “Angelina” where she earns ca. $12,000.00 per month in cash. She claims to earn $500 to $600 a night or ca. $50,000.00 in cash since entering the U.S.

Exhibit 1, page 130: Ms. Shipilina does not only dance at the club, she also allows clients to touch her as a “special service.”

Shipilina has two bank accounts at Citibank (checking 67147197 and money market 67147234) at 262 First Avenue and a safe deposit box (number 14299) at the Citibank at 411 Fifth Avenue.

Exhibit 1, page 129: During the fall Shipilina kept thousands of dollars in cash in the safe deposit box. The accounts and safe deposit box are under the name Alina A. Chipilina.

Exhibit 4 and Exhibit 1, page 104: Mr. Shipilina got a second Russian foreign passport for travel to Italy on May 2000 to join one of her Mexico clients (pages 111-114).

Exhibit 1, p. 39. Shipilina acknowledges that she performed masturbation every day for 1.5 years for clients.

Exhibit 1, p. 41, Shipilina hopes to find girls to send to work in Mexico, as each will pay her $100 per month.

Exhibit 2: copy of Ms. Shipilina’s Cyprus “Alien Registration Certificate,” copy of the Ms. Shipilina's work contract in "Zigos," copies of her schedule for July-December 2000. She also works as a part time model for the modeling agency "Grace Del Marco" also located in Manhattan.

2. Ms. Shipilina answered "No" to Question 34, which asks, inter alia, whether the applicant had been arrested or imprisoned.

Exhibit 1, page 76: On Friday November 26, 1999, while lap dancing in the Men's Club in Mexico City, Mexico, the local police raided the club and Ms. Shipilina was arrested for not having a working visa. She was taken to Police Headquarters where her name was taken (the police may have entered her name as Chipilina rather than Shipilina), and she was videotaped and locked up in immigration prison for three days. Since she had a plane ticket back to Russia for the following Monday, the police put her on that plane home rather than engage in any further proceeding.

Exhibit 1, page 91: Ms. Shipilina refers to this incident as an arrest.

On February 2000 Ms. Shipilina tried to return to Mexico to the club to continued work, but her agent, Maria Sorrato, could not give her any guarantee of her safety in entering to Mexico. Exhibit 1, page 96: "...may be to Mexico, but only for only one month. This is risk but money."

Mr. Den Hollander and Ms. Shipilina have separated. Shipilina is now living under the name of Alina A. Chipilina at 28-15 34th Street, Apt.4H, Astoria, New York 11103

Shipilina's telephone number (718 274 4902) and mobile number (917 374 4713) are listed under the name Alina A. Shipilina.

Please confirm your receipt of this notice by posting the attached stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Sincerely,

Xenia Menshova, Esq.

Brett,

Alina Shipilina falsey claimed US citizenship when she registered to vote in Queens, New York, where she lives. I have attached a copy of her registration and the NYC Board of Elections' record. I am sending by express mail a hard copy of Alina's registration statement certified by the Board of Elections.

By claiming to be a US citizen, she violated 8 USC 1227:

"Any alien who falsely represents, or falsely represented, herself to be a citizen of the United States for any purpose or benefit under...any Federal or State law is deportable."

She also violated New York State Election Law 5-210(6) for making a material false statement in an application for registration, which is a class E felony in New York, ie, a maximum of four years. I will send a copy of the law by express mail.

In addition, I beleive her act also violated the Federal Law on Elective Franchise 42 USSC 1973i(c), which has a maximum of 5 years in jail or $10,000 fine. I will send a copy of the law by express mail.

Is this sufficient to deport her? What is the status of the proceedings?

Please confirm receipt of email.

Roy

Dear Director:

Over two months ago, I provided the Investigation Division of the New York City Immigration and Naturalization Office evidence about a Russian national, Alina A. Shipilina, who fraudulently obtained an immigration visa to the United States and is currently living and working in New York City as part of Russia's international sex industry. As best as I can tell, the INS has done nothing concerning this case. I have tried to contact the investigator handling the matter, Eugene Kazenko (212 264 5400), a number of times. Unfortunately, Mr. Kazenko does not return my telephone calls. Perhaps your office could elicit a response from Mr. Kazenko.

I have enclosed a copies of the materials originally provided to Mr. Kazenko, which include evidence that the Ms. Shipilina has also been evading US income taxes since last July on the nearly $15,000 in cash she makes each month as a lap dancer at Flash Dancers on Broadway in New York City. Flash Dancers also employs a number of illegal Russian aliens as lap dancers.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely yours,

Roy Den Hollander

Dear Mr. Hollander:

Your complaint has been received by the Office of Internal Audit (OIA), Immigration and Naturalization Service, and has been assigned case number 01X03913. We have referred the matter to the head of the INS office concerned for information and any action deemed appropriate.

Resource constraints preclude us from initiating an inquiry or investigation into every complaint received. The OIA makes every effort to investigate those matters, which represent the most serious misconduct, and refers other matters to local managers for their review when appropriate. After careful review of this matter, we forwarded it to the appropriate management official for review and any action deemed warranted.

Thank you for bringing this matter to our attention. We trust that future contact with members of the Immigration and Naturalization Service will be of a more positive nature.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Kazenko:

In March I provided you with information concerning my wife's, Alina A. Shipilina (aka Chipilina), violation of US Immigration laws.

The key document was a copy of Ms. Shipilina's Russian diary, which I am sure she denies as hers. I wanted to inform you that I have the original pages of her diary for May to September 2000, which are covered with her fingerprints. Perhaps this information will assist in proving the diary is actually hers.

Dear Mr. Kazenko:

As further evidence that the diary I provided you is in fact Ms. Shipilina's authentic journal, I have enclosed Ms. Shipilina's Answer in the current Annulment/Divorce proceedings in which she admits the diary provided to you is hers. In paragraph 5(i) of the Answer, Ms. Shipilina states "...the Plaintiff (Mr. Hollander)...created an internet website entitled <http://www.alinashipilina.com> in which he posted the Defendant's (Ms. Shipilina) personal diary and naked photographs of the Defendant." A comparison of the diary I provided you with that referred to in Ms. Shipilina's Answer will show that they are one and the same.

Dear Mr. Kazenko:

I recently received a complete certified English translation of Ms. Shipilina's diary, which I have enclosed. The pagination for this translation differs from the pagination included in the exhibits of my first letter to the INS. She is the young Russian lady who currently works at Flash Dancers and made material misrepresentations on her immigrant visa application about never having worked as a prostitute and never having been arrested. I added the underlining.

Dear Ms. Landsness:

Attorney Daniel Retter suggested I provide you with the following information on a Russian alien living in the US against whom the INS initiated deportation proceedings, still ongoing, over a year ago.

Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina, INS A# 047 202 363, committed a deportable offense under 8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(3)(D) by falsely representing herself to be a citizen of the United States when she registered to vote in Queens County on February 22, 2001.

Ms. Shipilina is a Russian immigrant currently living in the United States as a conditional permanent resident. See attached copy of Shipilina's alien registration card. Her current address is 28-15 34 St, 4H, Astoria, NY 11103, telephones 718 274 4902, 917 374 4713.

When she registered to vote, she swore or affirmed that she was a U.S. citizen by signing the New York State Voter Registration form. See attached copy of N.Y. State Voter Registration and copy of Computer Voter Records.

By falsely claiming U.S. citizenship in order to register to vote, Ms. Shipilina also committed a crime in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1015(f) and New York State Election Law 5-210(6), which is a class E felony in New York.

Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina Married for the Purpose of Procuring Admission as an Immigrant

This document contains information evidencing that Alina Shipilina married Roy Den Hollander, a US citizen, for the purpose of procuring her admission to America as an immigrant. The document contains three parts. Part A consists of statements by Ms. Shipilina, Part B interviews with some of Ms. Shipilina's associates and Part C conduct of Ms. Shipilina. Ms. Shipilina married Roy Den Hollander in Krasnodar, Russia, on March 11, 2000.

Part A

The following are statements made by Ms. Shipilina in her personal journal before and during her marriage to Mr. Hollander and in correspondence to Mr. Hollander. Dates refer to the date a particular statement was written by Ms. Shipilina. The page cites are to a Certified English translation by attorney Dennis Whelan and to Ms. Shipilina's hand written journal in Russian.

1. December 10, 1999, "I want very much to find a foreigner and live abroad; I want to buy a flat and marry a foreigner, but I do not want to live in Krasnodar." Page 34 English; p 82 Russian.
2. January 17, 2000, "Roy says that I am the only happiness of his. He wants me to be near him.... If only he were younger...." Page 37 English; p 90 Russian.
3. January 27, 2000, "I do not know, but it worth while marrying him only for the purpose to receive American citizenship. He is not the person I need." Page 39 English; p 95 Russian.
4. January 29, 2000, "Roy is good as a friend and sexual partner, but Roy as a husband...." Page 39 English; p 97 Russian.
5. February 4, 2000, "....he (Mr. Hollander) began speaking about a paper according to which I will not have any right on his money in the case of divorce. So, in this case I will receive nothing.... In my turn I told him about a paper according to which he would have no right to send me out of the country." Page 40 English; p 98 Russian.
6. February 19, 2000, "Lena said as well that the business concerning Roy is very advantageous to me." Page 41 English; p 100 Russian.
7. Ms. Shipilina surreptitiously and repeatedly put substances into Mr. Hollander's meals just days before the wedding that caused narcotic-like symptoms in Mr. Hollander in order to induce him to go through with the wedding. A few days before the scheduled ceremony, Mr. Hollander told Ms. Shipilina that he was thinking of canceling the ceremony.
  - a. April 5, 2000, "Two days prior to registration he (Mr. Hollander) said that he might cancel everything because I told him that I did not like to speak with him about my past.... He infuriated me-I had to speak about Cyprus, about Mexico, that I was tired there and that I had not want and did not have sex there." Page 41 English; p 101 Russian. "....The clairvoyant gave me salt and sugar to admix into his food. His smile began to look like a smile of innocent angel." Page 42 English; p 105 Russian.

- b. July 12, 2000, "...I was admixing something in his (Mr. Hollander's) meals. He wanted to sleep even in the day. I had to tell him, that he was too aggressive towards me and I wanted to lower his level of aggression." Page 48 English; p 126 Russian.
8. April 5, 2000, "And on Saturday, March 11, 2000, we registered our marriage. It was merry! I did not accept it very seriously; for me it was only business. I become so tired of him...." Page 41 English; p 101 Russian.
9. April 5, 2000, "He wrote me a letter saying how it was difficult for him to be alone.... Frankly speaking, I cannot imagine what I will do with him in Moscow. Listen to his philosophy? To wash, to clean and to cook? And leave my mother all alone.... On one hand I would like that we remained friends, but he would not hinder my meetings with friends and I would give him freedom" Pages 41, 42 English; p 103 Russian. Just three days later in an April 8, 2000, postcard, Ms. Shipilina wrote to Mr. Hollander, "My love husband! I'm so miss on you but I must help my mother.... I send you this spring flowers from all my heart. I kiss and hold you." Exhibit 1
10. April 5, 2000, "It took a long time to make my second passport.... But thanks to God, I have now 2 passports. May be I will go for a week to Mexico and meet Alfred to earn some money. But I need a good reason for Roy. It is dangerous, but I will see...." Page 42 English; pp 104-05 Russian.
11. April 20, 2000, "For the first time he finished in me. Oh, my God, whom I allowed to do it...." Page 43 English; p 108 Russian.
12. April 20, 2000, "What will happen if I will not receive a visa to America? I will go—with Leonid's help—to Greece or Venezuela. In June I am sure to go somewhere!" Page 43 English; p 108 Russian.
13. April 5, 2000, "Then, when we went to the disco "Joy", Alexey told me that he wanted me and that I was driving him mad. He bought a bottle of Champaign. I was near to going with him.... I tried to seduce Alexey, to get him,...." Pages 41, 42, English; pp 102, 104 Russian. Then on April 22, 2000, Ms. Shipilina wrote to her husband a postcard, "My dear husband! Only come back and start to be alone again. It difficult, but I must to do a lot of things here.... But you in my heart. A lot of kisses to you." Exhibit 2 Alexey Smolin, 8 902 445 3049, 8612 62 34 13, told Mr. Hollander on June 16, 2001, "Alina offered herself to me. I could have slept with her if I wanted."
14. On May 19, 2000, Ms. Shipilina traveled to Italy to engage in adultery and prostitution with Alfredo Ibarra. Pages 44, 45 English; pp 112-14 Russian. Just days before the trip, Ms. Shipilina wrote on May 10, 2000, two postcards to her husband, "My dear husband! In Krasnodar hard. I try to written dissertation and help my mother.... Your wife." Exhibit 3 And, "You are present to me the best moments in my life. With special love your Angel." Exhibit 4

Part B

The following associates of Ms. Shipilina made statements to Mr. Hollander about Ms. Shipilina's desire to leave Russia to make money:

22. Alexei Dikov, 26 Gudmy, KB 46, Krasnodar, 350063, (H) 8612 62 09 28, Mob 63 55 58, Mob 8 902 439 67 06, Ms. Shipilina's former boy friend, told Mr. Hollander on June 14, 2001, "Alina had one aim, to go outside of Russia."
23. Yulya Kudinova, mobile 8612 42 81 19, Mobile 8 902 464 2405, Email strelez@mailru.com, work 8612 53 73 22, VIP Group 180 Krasnaya Ul, 314, Krasnodar, Ms. Shipilina's friend told Mr. Hollander on June 16, 2001, "Alina always thought about money and how to get it. She was a pit bull in her pursuit of money. She used all connections and a lot of men to get money. Alina didn't have money to start a career as a model and she used men to get it. Alina left Alexei Dikov because he didn't have money."
24. Anastasia Vasiljeva, 158 Krasnaya Ul, Krasnodar (W) 8612 55 74 63, (H) 8612 55 98 07, Email nastya\_top\_model@mail.kubsu.ru, Ms. Shipilina's model agent in Krasnodar, said, "Alina only wanted money and the luxury life."

Part C

Ms. Shipilina's conduct during her marriage infers that she married for the purpose of procuring admission to the US as an immigrant. Dates refer to when Ms. Shipilina made entries in her diary, and the page cites refer to the Certified English translation and the Russian handwritten journal:

25. Ms. Shipilina wanted to give birth to her own children but knew that Mr. Hollander could not have children but she still married him.
26. April 5, 2000, Ms. Shipilina engaged in adultery in Krasnodar three weeks after her marriage with a man named Volodya. Page 41 English; p102 Russian.
27. Ms. Shipilina partied in Krasnodar rather than living with her husband in Moscow:

- a. April 5, 2000, "Katya and me went to discos. In "Joy" there was "Hit FM", nice music. Last time some boys wanted to get acquainted with us, but they did not succeed, because we sat to a taxi accompanied by guards." Page 42 English; p 105 Russian.
  - b. May 19, 2000, "On April 29 there was a show in dramatic theater. I was so glad to see Vitalik and my other acquaintances... A good show, it lasted for approximately 3 hours. There were 50 models participating in the show. Page p 43 English; p 109 Russian.
  - c. May 19, 2000, "Katya and me walked.... On the way from disco Katya got acquainted with Andrey, we went to his friend. I did not like. I went with Andrei and Katya to the same place I tried to seduce Alexei. When I was ready and said I was ready, it turned out that what Andrei wanted was a surprise. My friend Katya was against this and this upset Andrei and Andrei was left with nothing." Pages 43, 44 English; pp 109, 110 Russian.
  - d. May 19, 2000, "Ma went away and this time I did not bring anybody home with me although I wish I had. So I came to Volodya. I told him that I want to go to a picnic out of the city. He began to refuse; he said that he had already gone out of the city with Vladik. I insisted and he admitted that he is married, he has a child (2 years old), and he had married in 1998. His wife is from Kazakhstan but she is Russian. He lied, he wanted me and continued to lie. I was shocked." Pages 44 English; pp 109, 110 Russian.
28. May 19, 2000, Ms. Shipilina engaged in prostitution with Alfredo Ibarra Sotelo in Italy within three months of her marriage and just days before her successful interview for an immigrant visa at the US Embassy. Pages 44-45 English; p112-114 Russian.
29. Ms. Shipilina made a concerted effort to hide her prostitution in Italy for fear that Mr. Hollander would not take her to America. In her May 19, 2000, entry, "And now it is very important to me to extinguish all evidence. I closed package with adhesive tape and tried to hide gold and money. I hope so Roy did not learn anything. Amen! I thank God for everything; bless me!" Further in her June 5, 2000, entry, "I came to Roy. My cellular phone was disconnected. I had to open the door with keys and ring at the door. He looked Ms. Shipilina went to great lengths to hide her prostitution with Mr. Ibarra in so surprised when he saw me. He began to ask me – How I came, what and where and so on. He was inspecting me for a long time and got infuriated because he could not find anything. He thought that I spent time in Moscow with some boy friend and now came to him. .... Next day we went to take photos and when I asked to give me my bag, he took it and began to open all its section and watch what was in as if it was a joke. I was watching at him perplexedly and very calmly. He was examining me. After it I understood that he would examine my "Fa" bag. When Volodya (Mr. Hollander's driver) met me at registration in Moscow I gave him package with everything money, brilliants. I feared that he might tell something to Roy." Page 45 English; pages 114-16 Russian.
30. July 6, 2000, Ms. Shipilina engaged in another act of adultery four months after her marriage with a man named Valodya, 812 430 9508, Ul. Dibunovskaya 37, Apt 521, St Petersburg 197 183, a struggling small businessman. Page 47 English; p 123 Russian.

31. Ms. Shipilina maintained communication with Valodya from St. Petersburg while she was living in Mr. Hollander's apartment in the US. In a July 2000 postcard, Ms. Shipilina wrote to Valodya, "Good luck, peace, love and all the kindness to you. Hello Valodya, This is Angelina. How are you? I am okay. It was really difficult to come here. It turns out that my boss found out information about me from MVD and FSB. And now he watches me. I began to work. It is interesting. I like it a lot. I work about eight hours a day. I dance. (Flash Dancers) It is interesting to meet new people, to learn about different places. I think a lot about you and I miss you and it was great that we could understand each other. Do me a huge, huge favor, please, don't tell anybody, anybody, that I am here—no way. Only my mum knows about it and now you. I kiss you, I embrace you, I miss you." (Four lipstick kisses are on the card.) Exhibit 5
32. Ms. Shipilina dated other men in Krasnodar during the four months following her marriage:
- a. Arsen, pages 41, 42 English; p 102 Russian.
  - b. Roma, page 47 English; p 121 Russian.
33. September 9, 2000, "Besides, for the first time I went to a single room – I danced to a bearded man from TV. On Monday we sat there for 2 hours, I danced .... I allowed him to touch me. I received a pleasure." Page 50 English; p 130 Russian. Then just two days later on September 11, 2000, Ms. Shipilina wrote in a wedding anniversary card to her husband, "Always with you belief, hope, love unforgettable. Your Angel" Exhibit 6
34. Ms. Shipilina refused to allow her husband to travel with her to Krasnodar and Cyprus when she took a three-week vacation in September 2000. Ms. Shipilina later told her husband the names of three former friends with whom she had met in Cyprus. The three, however, were former prostitution and lap dancing clients.
- a. Rikos, pages 3, 4, 5, 7 English; pp 6, 8, 9, 10, 16 Russian.
  - b. Andrios, page 6 English; pp11, 12 Russian.
  - c. Stephanos, pages 12, 13, 15, 16 English; pp 28, 31, 35, 37 Russian.

Dear Sir or Madam:

Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina, INS A# 047 202 363, committed a deportable offense under 8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(3)(D) by falsely representing herself to be a citizen of the United States when she registered to vote in Queens County on February 22, 2001.

Ms. Shipilina is a Russian immigrant currently living in the United States as a conditional permanent resident. See attached copy of Shipilina's alien registration card. Her current address is 28-15 34 St, 4H, Astoria, NY 11103, telephones 718 274 4902, 917 374 4713.

When she registered to vote, she swore or affirmed that she was a U.S. citizen by signing the New York State Voter Registration form. See attached copy of N.Y. State Voter Registration and copy of Computer Voter Records.

By falsely claiming U.S. citizenship in order to register to vote, Ms. Shipilina also committed a crime in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1015(f) and New York State Election Law 5-210(6), which is a class E felony in New York.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact my attorney, Xenia Menshova, at 979 4770 or 722 9035 or me at the above telephone numbers.

Dear Sir:

In the removal proceedings concerning Alina A. Shipilina, INS A# 047 202 363, I have obtained three apostile affidavits from people in Krasnodar swearing to Ms. Shipilina working as a prostitute before applying for an immigrant visa to the U.S. in 2000.

The affidavits show Ms. Shipilina defrauded the Government by lying that she did not work as a prostitute within ten years prior to applying for conditional permanent residency.

Are you interested in me sending you the affidavits?

Dear Mr. Paliska:

In December, I provided your office with information concerning the evasion of taxes by a Russian immigrant, Alina (aka Angelina) Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina) - Social Security Number 063 90 4695, living in Queens, New York.

This letter is to provide you with the street address of the Bank of Cyprus where she maintains a Global Equity Fund, account number 54660, which she did not report on her 2000 tax return. The account is located at

Bank Of Cyprus
Aigos Fylaeos 282

Charles O. Rossotti, Commissioner Internal Revenue Service
1111 Constitution Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20224

Dear Commissioner Rossotti:

As a former attorney with the I.R.S. Chief Counsel's Office, I applaud your decision to concentrate on high income tax evaders. As you noted in the New York Times article, limited I.R.S. resources should not be used to recover limited returns from low income evaders.

There is, however, one class of tax evaders whose members earn over $100,000 year that the I.R.S. still fails to pursue. I roughly estimate the revenue from this class at $13 billion a year. This class of tax evaders is made up of "lap-dancer" who work as independent contractors in the numerous "Gentlemen's Clubs" throughout America.

Take as an example "Flash Dancers" on Broadway in Manhattan. Each lap-dancer is required to work five days a week and the average lap-dancer on the night shift, 8pm to 4am, nets $500 in cash every night. See the attached Club Reviews by Dancers from the Internet. Assuming the average lap-dancer takes six weeks vacation a year, she will net $115,000—all cash.

On the night shift alone at Flash Dancers, seventy-five lap-dancers work as independent contractors every night of the year that results in a pool of untaxed cash revenue of over $13 million a year from this one club. Assuming there are at least a thousand of these Gentlemen's Clubs in the country, then the untaxed revenue stream is $13 billion a year.

Perhaps using similar guidelines for lap-dancers as the I.R.S. uses for bartenders and waitresses or classifying the lap-dancers as employees rather than independent contractors will recapture some of the lost taxes.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely yours,

Roy Den Hollander

Re: Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina), SS# 063 90 4695, INS A# 047 202

Dear Sir or Madam:

On March 5, 2001, I provided your office with a cover letter and various documents showing that Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina, my wife, evaded paying taxes. I am now providing notice that she made material misrepresentations on her tax returns as a result of her tax evasion.

Ms. Shipilina and I are currently involved in Annulment/Divorce proceedings. See Exhibit 1, Annulment/Divorce Complaint. As part of the court proceedings, Ms. Shipilina has turned over copies of her Federal and New York State tax returns and amended returns, which she affirmed under oath to the court that they are duplicates of the returns she filed with the IRS and New York tax authorities. See Exhibit 2, Federal and New York State tax returns.

Ms. Shipilina's 1040X reports her total income for the year 2000 as $18,861, but in her diary she states that for just one and a half months during part of July, August and September she netted $17 to $18,000 dollars. See Exhibit 3, p 50 of a Certified English Translation and Exhibit 4, p 132 of the original documents provided your office in March, which is a copy of her Russian diary. Ms. Shipilina may deny that the document I provided you is her diary, but I possess the original pages of her diary for the months of May through September 2000, which include admissions as to her income and are covered with Ms. Shipilina's fingerprints.

Ms. Shipilina's 1040 lists her business as bartender when in fact she works as a lap dancer at Flash Dancers in Manhattan. I have attached as Exhibit 4 a copy of an affidavit of service for process served on Ms. Shipilina while working at Flash Dancers.

Ms. Shipilina falsely classified herself as single on her tax returns when in fact she was married and still is. See Exhibit 1.

Ms. Shipilina is now living under the name of Alina A. Chipilina at the following address:

28-15 34 Street, Apt. 4H

Astoria, New York 11103.

Her telephone number (718 274 4902) and mobile number (917 374 4713) are under the name Alina A. Shipilina.

I would appreciate confirmation of your receipt of this letter and accompanying materials by signing and dating the second copy of this letter.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Dear Sir or Madam:

On March 5 and again on September 16, 2001, I provided your office with various documents showing that Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina violated the Internal Revenue Code by evading taxes. I am now providing you with information that Ms. Shipilina, my wife, also violated the Code by failing to report on her tax returns for the year 2000 her Cyprus account at the Bank of Cyprus. Ms. Shipilina holds a Global Equity Fund, Account 54660, in the amount of around $17,000USD in the Bank of Cyprus at

Attention: John J. Boyle
One Lefrak City Plaza, 4th Floor
Corona, New York 11368

Dear Mr. Boyle:

Pursuant to our telephone conversation of Monday, March 12, I have enclosed the pertinent information and documentation concerning tax evasion and the illegal transport of cash out of the country by Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina) a Russian immigrant.

Ms. Shipilina is required to make quarterly filings with the IRS because she works as an independent contractor whose total gross monthly income is around $15,000. She has not made any filings since she began working in the United States on July 17, 2000. Her Social Security Number is 063 90 4695 and her Immigration and Naturalization Service Alien Number is 047 202 363. See Exhibit 1, identifying photographs of Ms. Shipilina and copy of her resident card. She was born on November 10, 1975, in Russia. Ms. Shipilina's income consists almost exclusively of cash. A number of the attached Exhibits contain pertinent sections of her diary, which was hand written in Russian. These Exhibits are accompanied by an English translation of the crucial passages.

1. Her main source of income and cash comes from working as an independent contractor giving lap dances and stripping at the topless club Flash Dancers, located at 1674 Broadway (212 315 5107) in New York City. See Exhibit 2, copies of some of her work schedules for 2000. She works at the club under the assumed name of "Angelina". The club charges her about $140 a night to dance there, and her average net is between $500 and $600 a night. See Exhibit 3, pages 30, 31, 32 of the English translation, pages 129, 130, 131, 132 of her Russian diary. Her gross, therefore, averages $640 to $740 a night—all cash. She dances five nights a week, which gives her a monthly gross of around $13,000 to $15,000 in cash. Her diary states that for a month and a half from the end of July to the beginning of September she netted between $17,000 and $18,000. See Exhibit 4, page 32 of the English translation, page 132 of her Russian diary. A sampling of her daily earnings for last year is contained in Exhibit 5.
2. Last year Ms. Shipilina worked from July 17 through the first week in September when she flew back to Russia with over $10,000 in cash that she did not report taking out of the country. She then returned to the US and worked from the beginning of October to the third week in December when she once again returned to Russia with over $10,000 in cash without reporting its transfer out of the country. She returned to the US on January 18, 2001, and has been working continuously since then at Flash Dancers. In the year 2000 she grossed in cash as a lap dancer between $57,600 and $66,000.

3. Before taking her cash back to Russia, she stores it in her safe deposit box (number 14299) at the Citibank at 411 Fifth Avenue, New York City. See Exhibit 6, page 31 of the English translation, page 131 of her Russian diary. The safe deposit box is under the name: Alina A. Chipilina. See Exhibit 7, copy of her safe deposit box agreement. She also has two bank accounts under the name Alina A. Chiplina at Citibank at 262 First Avenue, New York City (checking 67147197 and money market 67147234). See Exhibit 8, copy of her August bank statement. She also has a bank account in Limassol, Cyprus, under the name Alina A. Chipilina, but I am unaware of which bank it is with.
4. Ms. Shipilina also works part time as a model for the agency Grace Del Marco at 350 Fifth Avenue in New York City (212 629 6404) and as a freelance model. Her earnings are paid by check and generally amount to $2,000 or more per month. As a model, she uses the assumed name "Angelina".

Ms. Shipilina is now living under the name of Alina A. Chipilina at the following address:

28-15 34 Street, Apt. 4H
Astoria, New York 11103.

Her telephone number (718 274 4902) and mobile number (917 374 4713) are under the name Alina A. Shipilina.

As an attorney who formerly worked in the Office of the Chief Counsel of the IRS in Washington, DC, I am more than willing to provide any assistance whatsoever in this matter. Furthermore, I have recently filed for a divorce from Ms. Shipilina.

Ms. Shipilina may deny that the document I provided you is her diary, but I possess the original pages of her diary for the months of May through September 2000, which include admissions as to her income and are covered with Ms. Shipilina's fingerprints.

Ms. Shipilina's 1040 lists her business as bartender when in fact she works as a lap dancer at Flash Dancers in Manhattan. I have attached as Exhibit 4 a copy of an affidavit of service for process served on Ms. Shipilina while working at Flash Dancers.

Ms. Shipilina falsely classified herself as "single" on her tax returns when in fact she was "married" and still is. See Exhibit 1.

Ms. Shipilina is now living under the name of Alina A. Chipilina at the following address:

28-15 34 Street, Apt. 4H
Astoria, New York 11103.

Her telephone number (718 274 4902) and mobile number (917 374 4713) are under the name Alina A. Shipilina.

I would appreciate confirmation of your receipt of this letter and accompanying materials by signing and dating the second copy of this letter.

Dear Sir or Madam:

On March 5, 2001, I provided your office with a cover letter and various documents showing that Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina, my wife, evaded paying taxes. I am now providing you with additional evidence that the key document evidencing her tax evasion—her personal diary—is authentic.

I have enclosed Ms. Shipilina's Answer in the current Annulment/Divorce proceedings in which she admits the diary provided your office is hers. In paragraph 5(i) of the Answer, Ms. Shipilina states "...the Plaintiff (Mr. Hollander)...created an internet website entitled <http://www.alinashipilina.com> in which he posted the Defendant's (Ms. Shipilina) personal diary and naked photographs of the Defendant." A comparison of the diary I provided your office with that referred to in Ms. Shipilina's Answer will show that they are one and the same.

Sincerely yours,

Roy Den Hollander

Dear Sir or Madam:

On March 5 and again on September 16, 2001, I provided your office with various documents showing that Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina violated the Internal Revenue Code by evading taxes. I am now providing you with information that Ms Shipilina, my wife, also violated the Code by failing to report on her tax returns for the year 2000 her Cyprus account at the Bank of Cyprus. Ms. Shipilina holds a Global Equity Fund, Account 54660, in the amount of around $17,000USD in the Bank of Cyprus at

Limassol, Cyprus

The beneficiary and signatory is Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina.

I have enclosed a copy of her tax returns for the year 2000.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Sir or Madam:

I previously worked as an attorney in the Office of the Chief Counsel for the IRS in Washington, D.C. I am writing to inform you of tax evasion and the illegal transport of cash out of the country by a Russian immigrant.

Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina) is required to make quarterly filings with the IRS because she works as an independent contractor whose total gross monthly income is around $15,000. She has not made any filings since she began working in the United States on July 17, 2000. Her Social Security Number is 063 90 4695 and her Immigration and Naturalization Service Alien Number is 047 202 363. See Exhibit 1, identifying photographs of Ms. Shipilina and copy of her resident card. She was born on November 10, 1975, in Russia. Ms. Shipilina's income consists almost exclusively of cash. A number of the attached Exhibits contain pertinent sections of her diary, which was hand written in Russian. These Exhibits are accompanied by an English translation of the crucial passages.

1. Her main source of income and cash comes from working as an independent contractor giving lap dances at the topless club Flash Dancers, located at 1674 Broadway (212 315 5107) in New York City. See Exhibit 2, copies of some of her work schedules for 2000. She works at the club under the assumed name of "Angelina". The club charges her about $140 a night to dance there, and her average net is between $500 and $600 a night. See Exhibit 3, pages 30, 31, 32 of the English translation, pages 129, 130, 131, 132 of her Russian diary. Her gross, therefore, averages $640 to $740 a night—all cash. She dances five nights a week, which gives her a monthly gross of around $13,000 to $15,000 in cash. Her diary states that for a month and a half from the end of July to the beginning of September she netted between $17,000 and $18,000. See Exhibit 4, page 32 of the English translation, page 132 of her Russian diary. A sampling of her earnings for last year is contained in Exhibit 5.
2. Last year Ms. Shipilina worked from July 17 through the first week in September when she flew back to Russia with over $10,000 in cash that she did not report taking out of the country. She then returned to the US and worked from the beginning of October to the third week in December when she once again returned to Russia with over $10,000 in cash without reporting its transfer out of the country. She returned to the US on January 18, 2001, and has been working continuously since then at Flash Dancers. In the year 2000 she grossed in cash as a lap dancer between $57,600 and $66,000.

3. Before taking her cash back to Russia, she stores it in her safe deposit box (number 14299) at the Citibank at 411 Fifth Avenue, New York City. See Exhibit 6, page 31 of the English translation, page 131 of her Russian diary. The safe deposit box is under the name: Alina A. Chipilina. See Exhibit 7, copy of her safe deposit box agreement. She also has two bank accounts under the name Alina A. Chiplina at Citibank at 262 First Avenue, New York City (checking 67147197 and money market 67147234). See Exhibit 8, copy of her August bank statement. She also has a bank account in Limassol, Cyprus, under the name Alina A. Chipilina, but I am unaware of which bank it is with.
4. Ms. Shipilina also works part time as a model for the agency Grace Del Marco at 350 Fifth Avenue in New York City (212 629 6404) and as a freelance model. Her earnings are paid by check and generally amount to $1,000 to $2,000 per month. As a model, she uses the assumed name "Angelina".

Ms. Shipilina is now living under the name of Alina A. Chipilina at the following address:

28-15 34 Street, Apt. 4H
Astoria, New York 11103.

Her telephone number (718 274 4902) and mobile number (917 374 4713) are under the name Alina A. Shipilina.

I would appreciate confirmation of your receipt of this letter and accompanying materials by signing the second copy of this letter and returning it in the attached self-addressed stamped envelope.

Dear Sir or Madam:

I previously worked as an attorney in the Office of the Chief Counsel for the IRS in Washington, D.C. I am writing to inform you of tax evasion and the illegal transportation of cash out of the country by a Russian immigrant who works as a lap dancer in New York City.

Much of the proof of the following facts come from Ms. Shipilina's personal journal, which was hand written in Russian. I have provided a certified English translation of that diary.

Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina, who also uses the last name Chipilina and the first name Angelina, reported her gross income for the year 2000 as $18,861 when it was actually around $62,000 with a net of about $50,000. See Exhibit 1, 2000 US, New York State and New York City Income Tax Returns. For the year 2001, she has grossed around $103,000 with a net of about $82,000 as of October 14, 2001. Ms. Shipilina's income consists almost exclusively of cash earned as a stripper. Ms. Shipilina was born in Russia on November 10, 1975, immigrated to the United States on July 10, 2000, and began working as a lap dancer in the United States on July 17, 2000. Her Social Security Number is 063 90 4695 and her Immigration and Naturalization Service Alien Number is 047 202 363. See Exhibit 2, identifying photographs of Ms. Shipilina and copy of her resident card.

Ms. Shipilina and I are currently involved in Annulment/Divorce proceedings. See Exhibits 3 and 4. As part of the court proceedings, Ms. Shipilina has turned over copies of her Federal, New York State and New York City tax returns and amended returns, which she affirmed under oath to the court were duplicates of the returns she filed with the IRS and New York tax authorities.

In her court filings, Ms. Shipilina admits the diary I am providing your office is hers. In paragraph 5(i) of her Answer to the New York Supreme Court, see Exhibit 4, Ms. Shipilina states "... the Plaintiff (Mr. Hollander)...created an internet website entitled <http://www.alinashipilina.com> in which he posted the Defendant's (Ms. Shipilina) personal diary...." A comparison of the diary that I am providing your office with that referred to in Ms.

Shipilina's Answer will show that they are one and the same. Further evidence that the diary is Ms. Shipilina's is that I possess the original pages of her diary for the months of May through September 2000, which are covered with Ms. Shipilina's fingerprints and include admissions as to her income.

1. Ms. Shipilina's main source of income and cash comes from working as a lap dancer and stripper at the topless club Flash Dancers, located at 1674 Broadway (212 315 5107) in New York City. See Exhibit 5, copies of most of her work schedules for 2000; Exhibit 6, copy of an affidavit of service on Ms. Shipilina while working at Flash Dancers; Exhibit 7, copy of private detective's report in which Ms. Shipilina was observed giving lap dances at Flash Dancers. She works at the club under the assumed name of "Angelina". The club charges her about $140 a night to dance there, and her average net is around $550 a night. See Exhibit 8, pages 48, 49, 50 of the English translation of Ms. Shipilina's diary; Exhibit 9, pages 127, 128, 129, 130 of her Russian diary. Her gross, therefore, averages $690 a night—all cash. She dances five nights a week, which gives her a monthly gross of around $14,000 in cash. Her diary states that for a month and a half from the end of July to the beginning of September 2000 she netted between $17,000 and $18,000. See Exhibit 8, page 50 of the English translation; Exhibit 9, page 130 of her Russian diary. A sampling of her earnings for last year is contained in Exhibit 10.
2. In the year 2000, Ms. Shipilina worked five nights a week for 18 weeks, so she grossed around $62,000 with a net of about $50,000. So far, for the year 2001, Ms. Shipilina has worked five nights a week for 30 weeks as of October 14, 2001, so she has grossed around $103,000 with a net of about $82,000.
3. Ms. Shipilina regularly transports over $10,000 in cash out of the country without filing the required reports with the US Customs Service. She previously violated US Customs regulations by transporting over $10,000 in cash out of the country on
  - a. September 9, 2000, when Ms. Shipilina flew aboard Aeroflot to Russia and then to Cyprus. She returned to New York City on September 29, 2000.
  - b. Around December 20, 2000, she flew aboard Aeroflot to Russia and then to Cyprus and returned to New York City on January 18, 2001.
  - c. Over the last half of April 2001 and the first half of May 2001, Ms. Shipilina traveled to Russia and Cyprus.

Ms. Shipilina maintains a Global Equity Fund, account number 54660, at the Bank of Cyprus in the amount of over $17,500 as of September 20, 2001. She did not report this account on her 2000 Tax returns.

4. Before taking her cash back to Russia and Cyprus, Ms. Shipilina stores it in her safe deposit box (number 14299) at the Citibank at 411 Fifth Avenue, New York City. See Exhibit 8, page 50 of the English translation; Exhibit 9, page 129 of her Russian diary. Her safe deposit box is under the name: Alina A. Chipilina. See Exhibit 11, copy of her safe deposit box agreement. She also has two bank accounts under the name Alina A. Chipilina at Citibank at 262 First Avenue, New York City (checking 67147197 and money market 67147234). See Exhibit 12, copy of her August bank statement. Ms. Shipilina also has a PBC Credit Card issued in June 2001 with account number 4559 5422 0049 7293.

5. Ms. Shipilina also works part time as a model for the agency Grace Del Marco at 350 Fifth Avenue in New York City (212 629 6404) and as a freelance model. Her earnings are paid by check and generally amount to $1,000 to $2,000 per month. As a model, she uses the assumed name “Angelina”. See Exhibit 13, Ms. Shipilina’s Grace Del Marco Modeling Card.
6. Ms. Shipilina’s 1040 Tax Return falsely lists her business as “bartender” when in fact she works as a lap dancer at Flash Dancers in Manhattan. See above number 1.
7. Ms. Shipilina falsely classified herself as “single” on her tax returns when in fact she was “married” and still is. See Exhibit 3, Annulment/Divorce Complaint and Exhibit 4, Ms. Shipilina’s Answer.

Ms. Shipilina is now living under the name of Alina A. Chipilina at the following address:

28-15 34 Street, Apt. 4H
Astoria, New York 11103.

Her telephone number with Verizon (718 274 4902) and mobile number with AT&T (917 374 4713) are under the name Alina A. Shipilina.

I would appreciate confirmation of your receipt of this letter and accompanying materials by signing the second copy of this letter and returning it in the attached self-addressed stamped envelope.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Supervisor Rivera
New York City Department of Finance
Tax Enforcement Unit
345 Adam Street, 13th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201

Dear Supervisor Rivera:

In early October, I provided your office with information concerning the evasion of taxes by a Russian immigrant, Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina) - Social Security Number 063 90 4695, living in Queens, New York.

This letter is to provide additional information that you may find useful. Exhibit 1 is the "Net worth Statement" that Ms. Shipilina filed in our divorce proceeding. The statement grossly understates her income and expenses. Exhibit 2 provides an analysis of the misrepresentations and omissions made under oath by Ms. Shipilina in her Net worth Statement.

Ms. Shipilina began work at Flash Dancers' Topless Club on July 17, 2000. In order to assist you in estimating her net income since then, Exhibit 3 is a document from an Internet site set up by lap dancers that estimates the average take home pay per night for a dancer at Flash Dancers. In addition, Exhibit 4 lists the dates for the vacations that Ms. Shipilina has taken since she began working at Flash Dancers. Although Ms. Shipilina is a very aggressive worker who makes significantly more than the average dancer, Exhibits 3 and 4 will provide an understanding of the relatively large amounts of money on which she evades taxes.

Finally, Ms. Shipilina grew up in Grozny, Chechnya, from the mid 1970s until 1991. Ms. Shipilina's acquaintances in Krasnodar, Russia, have told me that she is regularly seen associating with Chechen organized crime figures in Krasnodar and Sochi on the Black Sea.

If I can be of any further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

New York City Department of Finance
Tax Enforcement Unit
345 Adam Street, 13th Floor
Brooklyn, NY 11201

Dear Supervisor Rivera:

I am writing to inform you of tax evasion by a New York City resident who is also a Russian immigrant.

Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina) reported her income for the year 2000 as $18,861 when it was actually over $60,000. See Exhibit 1, 2000 US, New York State and New York City Income Tax Returns. Ms. Shipilina's income consists almost exclusively of cash earned as a stripper. Ms. Shipilina was born in Russia on November 10, 1975, immigrated to the United States on July 10, 2000, and began working as a lap dancer in the United States on July 17, 2000. Her Social Security Number is 063 90 4695 and her Immigration and Naturalization Service Alien Number is 047 202 363. See Exhibit 2, identifying photographs of Ms. Shipilina and copy of her resident card. A number of the following references are to Ms. Shipilina's diary, which was hand written in Russian, and a certified English translation of that diary.

1. Ms. Shipilina's main source of income and cash comes from working as an independent contractor giving lap dances and stripping at the topless club Flash Dancers, located at 1674 Broadway (212 315 5107) in New York City. See Exhibit 3, copies of most of her work schedules for 2000 and Exhibit 4, copy of an affidavit of service on Ms. Shipilina while working at Flash Dancers. She works at the club under the assumed name of "Angelina". The club charges her about $140 a night to dance there, and her average net is between $500 and $600 a night. See Exhibit 5, pages 48, 49, 50 of the English translation of Ms. Shipilina's diary; Exhibit 6, pages 127, 128, 129, 130 of her Russian diary. Her gross, therefore, averages $640 to $740 a night—all cash. She dances five nights a week, which gives her a monthly gross of around $13,000 to $15,000 in cash. Her diary states that for a month and a half from the end of July to the beginning of September 2000 she netted between $17,000 and $18,000. See Exhibit 5, page 50 of the English translation; Exhibit 6, page 130 of her Russian diary. A sampling of her earnings for last year is contained in Exhibit 7.

2. Last year Ms. Shipilina worked from July 17, 2000, through the first week in September 2000 when she flew back to Russia and then to Cyprus with over $10,000 in cash that she did not report taking out of the country. She then returned to the US and worked from the beginning of October 2000 to the third week in December 2000 when she once again returned to Russia with over $10,000 in cash without reporting its transfer out of the country. She returned to the US on January 18, 2001, and continued working at Flash Dancers until she took another trip out of the country from the middle of April 2001 to the middle of May 2001 without reporting her transfer of over $10,000 in cash. This trip took her to Russia and Cyprus. On her return, she continued working at Flash Dancers. Ms. Shipilina maintains a Global Equity Fund, account number 54660, at the Bank of Cyprus in the amount of over $17,500 as of September 20, 2001. She did not report this account on her 2000 Tax returns.
3. Before taking her cash back to Russia and Cyprus, Ms. Shipilina stores it in her safe deposit box (number 14299) at the Citibank at 411 Fifth Avenue, New York City. See Exhibit 5, page 50 of the English translation; Exhibit 6, page 129 of her Russian diary. Her safe deposit box is under the name: Alina A. Chipilina. See Exhibit 8, copy of her safe deposit box agreement. She also has two bank accounts under the name Alina A. Chiplina at Citibank at 262 First Avenue, New York City (checking 67147197 and money market 67147234). See Exhibit 9, copy of her August bank statement. Ms. Shipilina also has a PBC Credit Card issued in June 2001 with account number 4559 5422 0049 7293.
4. Ms. Shipilina also works part time as a model for the agency Grace Del Marco at 350 Fifth Avenue in New York City (212 629 6404) and as a freelance model. Her earnings are paid by check and generally amount to $1,000 to $2,000 per month. As a model, she uses the assumed name “Angelina”. Exhibit 10, Ms. Shipilina’s Grace Del Marco Modeling Card.
5. Ms. Shipilina’s 1040 Tax Return falsely lists her business as “bartender” when in fact she works primarily as a lap dancer at Flash Dancers in Manhattan. See above number 1.
6. Ms. Shipilina falsely classified herself as “single” on her tax returns when in fact she was “married” and still is. See Exhibit 11, Annulment/Divorce Complaint and Exhibit 12, Ms. Shipilina’s Answer.

Ms. Shipilina and I are currently involved in Annulment/Divorce proceedings. See Exhibits 11 and 12. As part of the court proceedings, Ms. Shipilina has turned over copies of her Federal, New York State and New York City tax returns and amended returns, which she affirmed under oath to the court were duplicates of the returns she filed with the IRS and New York tax authorities.

In her court filings, Ms. Shipilina admits the diary I am providing your office is hers. In paragraph 5(i) of her Answer to the New York Supreme Court, see Exhibit 12, Ms. Shipilina states “...the Plaintiff (Mr. Hollander)...created an internet website entitled <http://www.alinashipilina.com> in which he posted the Defendant’s (Ms. Shipilina) personal diary and naked photographs of the Defendant.” A comparison of the diary that I am providing your office with that referred to in Ms. Shipilina's Answer will show that they are one and the same. Further evidence that the diary is Ms. Shipilina's is that I possess the original pages of her dairy for the months of May through September 2000, which are covered with Ms. Shipilina's fingerprints and include admissions as to her income.

Ms. Shipilina is now living under the name of Alina A. Chipilina at the following address:

28-15 34 Street, Apt. 4H
Astoria, New York 11103.

Her telephone number with Verizon (718 274 4902) and mobile number with AT&T (917 374 4713) are under the name Alina A. Shipilina.

I would appreciate confirmation of your receipt of this letter and accompanying materials by signing the second copy of this letter and returning it in the attached self-addressed stamped envelope.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely yours,

Lawrence Grinaldi
New York State Department of Taxation and Finance

Dear Mr. Grinaldi:

In early October, I provided your office with information concerning the evasion of taxes by a Russian immigrant, Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina) - Social Security Number 063 90 4695, living in Queens, New York.

This letter is to provide additional information that you may find useful. Exhibit 1 is the "Net worth Statement" that Ms. Shipilina filed in our divorce proceeding. The statement grossly understates her income and expenses. Exhibit 2 provides an analysis of the misrepresentations and omissions made under oath by Ms. Shipilina in her Net worth Statement.

Ms. Shipilina began work at Flash Dancers' Topless Club on July 17, 2000. In order to assist you in estimating her net income since then, Exhibit 3 is a document from an Internet site set up by lap dancers that estimates the average take home pay per night for a dancer at Flash Dancers. In addition, Exhibit 4 lists the dates for the vacations that Ms. Shipilina has taken since she began working at Flash Dancers. Although Ms. Shipilina is a very aggressive worker who makes significantly more than the average dancer, Exhibits 3 and 4 will provide an understanding of the relatively large amounts of money on which she evades taxes.

Finally, Ms. Shipilina grew up in Grozny, Chechnya, from the mid 1970s until 1991. Ms. Shipilina's acquaintances in Krasnodar, Russia, have told me that she is regularly seen associating with Chechen organized crime figures in Krasnodar and Sochi on the Black Sea.

If I can be of any further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

New York State Department of Taxation and Finance
Tax Compliance Regional Director
55 Hanson Place
Brooklyn, NY 11217

Dear Sir or Madam:

I am writing to inform you of tax evasion by a New York City resident who is also a Russian immigrant.

Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina (aka Chipilina) reported her income for the year 2000 as $18,861 when it was actually over $60,000. See Exhibit 1, 2000 US, New York State and New York City Income Tax Returns. Ms. Shipilina's income consists almost exclusively of cash earned as a stripper. Ms. Shipilina was born in Russia on November 10, 1975, immigrated to the United States on July 10, 2000, and began working as a lap dancer in the United States on July 17, 2000. Her Social Security Number is 063 90 4695 and her Immigration and Naturalization Service Alien Number is 047 202 363. See Exhibit 2, identifying photographs of Ms. Shipilina and copy of her resident card. A number of the following references are to Ms. Shipilina's diary, which was hand written in Russian, and a certified English translation of that diary.

1. Ms. Shipilina's main source of income and cash comes from working as an independent contractor giving lap dances and stripping at the topless club Flash Dancers, located at 1674 Broadway (212 315 5107) in New York City. See Exhibit 3, copies of most of her work schedules for 2000 and Exhibit 4, copy of an affidavit of service on Ms. Shipilina while working at Flash Dancers. She works at the club under the assumed name of "Angelina". The club charges her about $140 a night to dance there, and her average net is between $500 and $600 a night. See Exhibit 5, pages 48, 49, 50 of the English translation of Ms. Shipilina's diary; Exhibit 6, pages 127, 128, 129, 130 of her Russian diary. Her gross, therefore, averages $640 to $740 a night—all cash. She dances five nights a week, which gives her a monthly gross of around $13,000 to $15,000 in cash. Her diary states that for a month and a half from the end of July to the beginning of September 2000 she netted between $17,000 and $18,000. See Exhibit 5, page 50 of the English translation; Exhibit 6, page 130 of her Russian diary. A sampling of her earnings for last year is contained in Exhibit 7.

2. Last year Ms. Shipilina worked from July 17, 2000, through the first week in September 2000 when she flew back to Russia and then to Cyprus with over $10,000 in cash that she did not report taking out of the country. She then returned to the US and worked from the beginning of October 2000 to the third week in December 2000 when she once again returned to Russia with over $10,000 in cash without reporting its transfer out of the country. She returned to the US on January 18, 2001, and continued working at Flash Dancers until she took another trip out of the country from the middle of April 2001 to the middle of May 2001 without reporting her transfer of over $10,000 in cash. This trip took her to Russia and Cyprus. On her return, she continued working at Flash Dancers. Ms. Shipilina maintains a Global Equity Fund, account number 54660, at the Bank of Cyprus in the amount of over $17,500 as of September 20, 2001. She did not report this account on her 2000 Tax returns.
3. Before taking her cash back to Russia and Cyprus, Ms. Shipilina stores it in her safe deposit box (number 14299) at the Citibank at 411 Fifth Avenue, New York City. See Exhibit 5, page 50 of the English translation; Exhibit 6, page 129 of her Russian diary. Her safe deposit box is under the name: Alina A. Chipilina. See Exhibit 8, copy of her safe deposit box agreement. She also has two bank accounts under the name Alina A. Chiplina at Citibank at 262 First Avenue, New York City (checking 67147197 and money market 67147234). See Exhibit 9, copy of her August bank statement. Ms. Shipilina also has a PBC Credit Card issued in June 2001 with account number 4559 5422 0049 7293.
4. Ms. Shipilina also works part time as a model for the agency Grace Del Marco at 350 Fifth Avenue in New York City (212 629 6404) and as a freelance model. Her earnings are paid by check and generally amount to $1,000 to $2,000 per month. As a model, she uses the assumed name “Angelina”. Exhibit 10, Ms. Shipilina’s Grace Del Marco Modeling Card.
5. Ms. Shipilina’s 1040 Tax Return falsely lists her business as “bartender” when in fact she works primarily as a lap dancer at Flash Dancers in Manhattan. See above number 1.
6. Ms. Shipilina falsely classified herself as “single” on her tax returns when in fact she was “married” and still is. See Exhibit 11, Annulment/Divorce Complaint and Exhibit 12, Ms. Shipilina’s Answer.

Ms. Shipilina and I are currently involved in Annulment/Divorce proceedings. See Exhibits 11 and 12. Assemblyman Thomas F. Barraga
Albany Office
LOB 629
Albany, NY 12248

Dear Assemblyman Barraga:

I am inquiring as to why New York State does not tap the vast untaxed revenue stream of lap dancers and strippers who work in the many "gentlemen clubs" through out the state.

An average lap dancer at one of these establishments easily nets $100,000 a year—all cash and all untaxed. The Taxation and Finance Department could readily develop guide lines, as it has for other cash businesses, in order to estimate a dancer's income from a particular club using club specific and industry wide information. For instance the attached "Club Reviews by Dancers", compiled by dancers themselves, lists average take home pay per night for a dancer for a number of different clubs.

Take for example Flash Dancers at 1674 Broadway in Manhattan. The club has a day shift from 12 noon to 8pm and a night shift from 8pm to 4am. The night shift uses around 75 girls each evening. Each girl on the night shift is required to work five nights a week. Assuming ten weeks vacation, not uncommon in the business, the average girl at Flash Dancers works 42 weeks a year and makes an average net income per night of $500. For the year that equals $105,000. For 75 girls the total is $7,875,000 in taxable revenue generated from just one club that will never be reported. As a result, the rest of New York City's taxpayers underwrite lap dancer independence—not fair and not fiscally astute.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

I request under the New York State Freedom of Information law copies of any files, correspondence, documents, records, complaints or telephone notes created or received in April, May or June 2002 regarding an apparent allegation against me for possible prosecution. Detective Robert W. Henning from the 114th Precinct in Queens may have referred the allegation to Robert Alexander in the Computer Crimes Division to determine whether the allegation was a violation or crime.

My full last name is Den Hollander, but at times different agencies mistakenly list my last name as Hollander or Denhollander. My social security is 141 40 7359.

If copying charges and search fees exceed $50, please advise me before proceeding. Otherwise, please bill me at the above address.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

П.ТЕМНИКОВ, Научно-исследовательский финансовый институт, г.Москва:

«Максимально приблизить вопросы обучения к практике»

Сейчас нужнее всего деловому человеку информация. Тем более у нас, когда идет активная наработка правовой базы, идет экономическая реформа.

Вот почему мы так активно тянемся к встречам с людьми, причастными к разработке этих документов, с людьми, стоящими у истоков реформы.

Я второй раз присутствую на мероприятиях, проводимых «Интертрейнингом» (первый раз — на форуме), и в этом смысле могу высказать несколько соображений по организации этих несомненно нужных мероприятий.

Торжественное открытие конгресса в Кремлевском Дворце с внушительным президиумом, конечно, впечатляет и внушает уважение. Но и только. Пора внушительных президиумов прошла.

Пусть меня извинят академики, руководитель ЦБР, другие видные люди, но то, что они говорили нам с трибуны, мы так или иначе слышали либо из их уст по телевидению, либо читали их выступления в массовых изданиях. Так что, прослушав в первый день лекции самого высокого уровня, мы мало почерпнули конкретики, так нужной нам сейчас. И о работе секций. Я участвовал в обсуждении проблемы приватизации. Там мы услышали очень содержательные доклады руководителей управлений Госкомимущества РФ В.С.Палютин, А.Е.Абрамова, В.И.Чайки, оппонировавшего им Г.Я.Кипермана, а нам опять осталось мало времени, чтобы обсудить наши конкретные проблемы, идущие от практики.

Может, лучше было бы сделать так. На пленарных заседаниях рассматривать какие-то ключевые вопросы, которые волнуют всех. Ну, например, та же приватизация. А разойдясь по секциям, мы проблему могли бы обсудить поглубже — детально. Ведь столько вопросов у всех — тема! А то опять слушаем установочные лекции. Хорошо, если бы кто-то поделился реальным опытом приватизации: кто как выбирался из трудностей, кто какие шишки набил, кто с какими документами работал, сколько платил за услуги.

На каждом семинаре нашлось бы о чем поговорить — и бухгалтерам, и плановикам, и руководителям. Академичность в обучении уже зрелых специалистов порой пользы не приносит, в наше время, когда счет идет на недели, а то и на дни, очень важен конкретный практический опыт.

Рой Холландер, адвокат, США:

«СУМЕЕТЕ ЛИ ВЫ «ПРИВАТИЗИРОВАТЬ» НОМЕНКЛАТУРУ?»

Интерес к процессам, идущим в России, у нас, в Штатах, настолько велик, что неудивительна та тяга ученых, специалистов, которая ведет их в Россию. Здесь проходит грандиозный эксперимент по возвращению громадной страны в русло нормальной экономики. Я с большим удовлетворением воспринял приглашение ассоциации «Интертрейнинг». Я и мои коллеги ехали в Москву с большим оптимизмом. Мы были убеждены, что, сбросив оковы принудительной плановой экономики, страна резко пошла вперед. Но, увы, мы этого не увидели. Скорее, наоборот. Кризис поразили все стороны вашей жизни — и экономический, и политический, и, наверное, нравственный кризис.

Причин тому, конечно, немало. Но одной из главных, причем самой очевидной, является та, что у основных рычагов власти на всех уровнях — от столицы до районов — стоят практически те же самые люди, что командовали вашей страной и до перестройки. Поразительно, но это так. На словах вы демонтировали всевластие одной партии, а на деле бывшие партийные функционеры, поменяв облик, сменив названия, по-прежнему управляют административными, выборными органами и даже теперь уже бизнесом. Действительно, власть номенклатуры безгранична.

Наивно думать, что люди, приведшие к краху экономику страны, сейчас выведут ее из кризиса. Ведь для номенклатуры самоцелью всегда была только власть, а вовсе не благо народа. Власть, да еще личное благо.

Неумелые руководители, правившие раньше с помощью принуждения, сейчас ищут новых хозяев, и вызывает удивление тот факт, что рекомендации (очень настойчивые) некогда отвергавшегося Международного валютного фонда теперь выполняются очень быстро. Не думаю, что МВФ очень уж озабочен благосостоянием каждой российской семьи — это ведь не его забота. А инфляция, бешеный рост цен привели к тому, что идет повальное обнищание народа и стремительное обогащение номенклатуры. Нам удивительно, как это в то время, когда здесь повсеместная разруха, руководители ваших предприятий, советов, партий, общественных фондов зачастили в США, в Майами, на курорты Швейцарии, Испании. У многих из них есть валютные счета в зарубежных банках. И это тоже факты, лежащие на поверхности, а вовсе не плод домысла. Вы почитайте только свои газеты и увидите, сколь интенсивен поток номенклатурщиков, стремящихся за океан «за опытом».

Механизм сосредоточения огромных средств в руках кучки людей, греющихся у власти, не является секретом. Мы прошли через это в годы Великой депрессии в начале тридцатых годов: и безработица (до 25 процентов трудоспособных не имели работы), и инфляция, и рэкет, и взяточничество чиновников — все это у нас было. Энергичная политика президента Франклина Делано Рузвельта, названная им «новым курсом», принесла плоды. То была политика выхода из кризиса, направленная на улучшение жизни всех слоев населения.

Как «приватизировать» номенклатуру? Это сложный вопрос, особенно если учесть, что номенклатура сейчас обладает не только властью, но и финансовым могуществом, поскольку все мало-мальски крупные чиновники уже внедрились в коммерческие структуры, и многие приватизационные чеки, которые появились на рынке, уже в руках этих структур. Конечно, если бы удалось аннулировать выданные чеки и оставить спекулянтов ими в проигрыше, а объявить выдачу именных (без права продажи) ваучеров — это было бы здорово, но это вряд ли возможно. Поэтому в ходе приватизации предприятий очень важен государственный контроль за этим процессом. Нужно, чтобы обязательно 51 процент акций остался в руках трудовых коллективов. И чтобы ни в коем случае в результате бюрократических махинаций контрольный пакет акций не перекочевал к администрации, номенклатуре. Опыт этот тоже имеется в разных странах, и им не грех воспользоваться.

Мы искренне желаем успеха реформ в России. Россия должна сохранить свое место в ряду великих держав, а для этого она должна быть сильной.

ТРАВДА

Завершились проходившие в Москве Дни мирового бизнеса, один из организаторов которых Международная ассоциация «Знание». Среди участников — 100 бизнесменов США, которые побывали не только в столице, но и других городах страны. Курск посетил г-н Рой Ден Холландер — бизнес-юрист, профессор Нью-Йоркского университета.

кие службы, которые бы следили за выполнением закона, исключив из него какие бы то ни было лазейки.

Систему регулирования надо принять как можно ско-приятных в Америке, с кем установить контакт, чтобы организовать свое дело. Курские предприниматели показали мне свою продукцию, я попытаюсь заинтересовать ею деловых людей Америки, определить, с кем в дальнейшем можно сотрудничать.

— А что запомнилось из обыденной жизни нашей страны, из культурной программы?

— Самое большое впечатление произвели сами русские люди. В Москве на конференции многие говорили, что у русских не хватает инициативы. Но я убедился, что это не так. Во всяком случае, уже на улицах мне пытались что-то продать, так что дух предпринимательства безусловно есть. Ваши люди изобретательны, трудолюбивы и имеют цель.

Что касается культурной жизни, то она гораздо богаче американской. Особенно впечатляет Большой театр. В Курском ТЮЗе я посмотрел спектакль «Восточная трибуна» и считаю, что его можно смело играть на Бродвее. Правда, за разрешение надо заплатить 1 миллион долларов. Но можно не на самом Бродвее, а где-нибудь рядом — восприятие будет таким же.

Я не большой знаток живописи, но мне понравилась ваша картинная галерея. А краеведческий музей, вернее представленная там история, повергла в шок. Америка тоже переживала тяжелые времена, но это касалось негров. У вас же вся нация подвергалась жесточайшему террору. Теперь я воочию представляю, какой путь прошла Россия и что ей еще предстоит...

Вела беседу
Т. АНТИПЕНКО.

ИНТЕРВЬЮ ДЕЛОВОГО ЧЕЛОВЕКА

«Я почувствовал

дух

предпринимательства»

— На Днях мирового бизнеса я получил сведения о некоторых проблемах нашей страны, как говорится, из первых рук. Прежде всего бросается в глаза неразбериха, несогласованность между союзным и Российским правительствами. Отсюда бизнесмены у нас между двух огней, они вынуждены подчиняться двойному бюрократическому гнету. А это — потеря денег и времени. При конфликте правительства расцвет бизнеса невозможен. Думаю, Союз должен заниматься только вопросами обороны, все остальное, в том числе бизнес, — дело России.

— Г-н Холландер, в прессе появляется немало публикаций как зарубежных специалистов, так и наших бывших соотечественников, которые пытаются указать пути развития России. Причем советы даются самые поларные: от полного копирования Запада до исключительно самобытного, русского варианта. У вас есть мнение по этому вопросу?

— На мой взгляд, вам нужно быстрее двигаться к честной, справедливой экономике в противовес свободной рыночной по западному образцу. Справедливые рыночные отношения предполагают наличие регуляторов, которые не позволяют Западу эксплуатировать ваши природные ресурсы и рабочую силу. И при этом они обеспечат прибыль как вашим, так и иностранным бизнесменам.

А в свободной рыночной системе может произойти что угодно. Зарубежные партнеры могут загрязнить вашу окружающую среду, не платить налоги и получать огромную прибыль.

— Интересно, а есть где-нибудь справедливый рынок?

— Сейчас уже нигде в мире нет свободного рынка, но нет еще и справедливого. Америка находится где-то посередине между ними. В экономике нашей страны существует много регуляторов, защищающих бизнес и окружающую среду от эксплуатации. Но в то же время в законах много лазеек, оттого регуляторы действуют неэффективно.

Для того, чтобы России прийти к справедливому рынку, я бы предложил взять за основу американские правила регулирования и создать такие и способствовать привлечению иностранного капитала. Чем дольше бюрократы будут затягивать этот процесс, кормя народ обещаниями, чем больше будут страдать люди, не ощущая прогресса, тем вероятней возможность появления нового диктатора. Ситуация в вашей стране очень напоминает Германию накануне прихода к власти Гитлера.

— Вы работали в Курске три дня. Встретились со специалистами ЦНТИ, коллективами научно-внедренческого предприятия «Эко-центр», ликероводочного завода, АПЗ-20. О чем шла речь на этих встречах?

— В основном о том, что я сейчас попытался коротко изложить вам в интервью. Я приехал, чтоб поддержать прогрессивные начинания в вашем городе и дать рекомендации как юрист. Посоветовал, как получать информацию о пред-

Dear Sir or Madam:

This is a complaint against Judge Fran L. Lubow of the Family Court of the State of New York, County of Queens for violating:

Judicial Canon 3 (B) (3) that requires a judge “shall be patient, dignified and courteous to litigants ... and others with whom the judge deals in an official capacity,....”

On February 16, 2001, I appeared before Judge Lubow as the petitioner in Roy Den Hollander v. Alina Shipilina, Docket No. O-02615/01, requesting a temporary order of protection against my wife, who grew up in Chechnya, for threatening me with grave bodily harm from her Russian organized crime associates. Judge Lubow discourteously cut me off when I began to explain my reasons for wanting a temporary order of protection. She jumped to the conclusion that I only wanted an order because my wife had previously obtained one against me. At that point both Judge Lubow and her law clerk laughed mockingly at me and Judge Lubow told me to seek any order of protection with the New York County Supreme Court where a divorce proceeding was pending.

I do not think such behavior is fitting for any official in any position of power in this country.

Sincerely yours,

Roy Den Hollander

State Commission on Judicial Conduct
801 Second Avenue
New York, NY 10017

Dear Sir or Madam:

This is a complaint against Judge Helen C. Sturm of the Family Court of the State of New York, County of New York for violating:

1. Judicial Canon 2 (A) that requires a judge to “act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary;” and
2. Judicial Canon 3 (6) that requires a judge to “accord to every person who has a legal interest in a proceeding ... the right to be heard according to law. A judge shall not initiate, permit or consider ex parte communications, or consider other communications made to the judge outside the presence of the parties or their lawyers concerning a pending ... proceeding, except....” for certain situations that do not apply here.

The alleged violations occurred on July 2, 2002, around 9:30 am in Part 8 of the Family Court of the State of New York, County of New York in the matter of Roy Den Hollander v. Shipilina, Docket No. O-03570/02, a petition for a permanent order of protection.

The chain of events began at a preliminary conference on May 6th where Judge Strum set a trial date of July 2nd and instructed the parties to engage in discovery. Petitioner served Respondent’s attorney, Nicholas J. Mundy, two requests for interrogatories, a request for inspection and copying of documents and a notice to admit—four requests in all. Mr. Mundy chose to completely ignore all the discovery requests, so Petitioner filed motions to compel discovery that were returnable on the scheduled trial date of July 2nd.

On July 2nd Petitioner, who represents himself, was instructed along with others to wait outside the courtroom while Mr. Mundy spent around fifteen minutes inside apparently engaged in ex parte communications with Judge Strum and/or her law clerk as inferred by the transcript, see attached Exhibit 1, Transcript of July 2, 2002, proceedings in Hollander v. Shipilina, Docket No. O-03570/02, and the manner in which Judge Strum conducted the proceeding.

Judge Sturm began the proceeding by calling on Respondent’s attorney, Mr. Mundy, even though the issue at hand concerned Petitioner’s motions to compel discovery. In addition, the tenor, flow and length of the initiating conversation between Judge Sturm and Mr. Mundy infer the continuation of previous ex parte talks and carrying out a prearranged decision to resolve quickly and in favor of Mr. Mundy’s client the issue over the motions to compel discovery.

As the transcript illustrates, Judge Sturm decided that Petitioner's discovery requests were intrusive before even affording Petitioner an opportunity to be heard through motion practice. See Exhibit 1, Transcript pp 6, 7, 8. True, Judge Sturm instructed Mr. Mundy and Petitioner to file motion papers for and against a protective order on discovery, but a hearing after the Judge has already made up her mind is no hearing at all. Due process is not met by filing papers after a "Star Chamber" like decision has obviated a party's right to notice and a hearing.

Subsequent events bear out the inevitable conclusion that Judge Sturm had no intention of providing and, in actuality, did not provide Petitioner a meaningful hearing on his discovery requests. Mr. Mundy's partner submitted the motion for a protective order at a proceeding before Judge Sturm on July 16, 2002, while Petitioner served his answer a few days later. Judge Sturm rendered her decision on July 29th. See attached Exhibit 2, Order Directing Discovery. Judge Sturm's ruling made a mockery of her directive of May 6th that the parties engage in discovery by eviscerating Petitioner's rights under discovery. Judge Sturm's ruling carried out her premature decision of July 2nd to deny Petitioner's discovery requests without a meaningful hearing. Motion practice as a mere matter of form over substance does not rise to the level of due process in this country.

In addition to denying Petitioner a proper hearing on discovery requests, the transcript of the July 2, 2002, hearing shows that the entire proceeding does not promote confidence in the integrity and impartiality of Judge Sturm's court.

Sincerely yours,

Roy Den Hollander

Administrator and Counsel
 State Commission on Judicial Conduct

 New York, NY 10017

Dear Mr. Stern:

It has been some time since the Marie Lambert case, and I hope the years have been good for you.

I'm contacting you now concerning the conduct of another New York judge: Helen C. Sturm of the Family Court in Manhattan. This is my second complaint against her, which was necessitated by improper conduct that occurred after I filed my first complaint. Your office dismissed that complaint.

The new violations of the Judicial Rules by Judge Sturm occurred during the discovery phase and trial in the case Roy Den Hollander v. Alina Shipilina, Docket No. O-03570/02. I brought the action to obtain an order of protection against the defendant in order to prevent an organized crime associate of the defendant from making good on his telephone threats.

The threats were made by a man, unknown to me, but whom the Federal Bureau of Investigation identified by tracking down a telephone number I provided them. One FBI agent said the man probably worked at Flash Dancers in Manhattan, the same club where the defendant works.

In my case, I claimed that the defendant, who grew up in Chechnya, had arranged for the man to make three threatening telephone calls in order to, among other things, keep me from testifying against the defendant before the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

Judge Sturm violated Rule 100.3(B)(1) by failing to "be faithful to the law" and Rule 100.3(B)(7) by failing to "dispose of all judicial matters...fairly" when:

1. Judge Sturm denied my discovery motion for a subpoena of Verizon telephone records for the same telephone number that the FBI used to determine the identity of the threatening caller. Exhibit 1, Motion for Verizon Records. The FBI had refused to provide me with the identity of the caller, and, as Judge Sturm knew, identifying the caller through Verizon records was key to proving my case.
2. At the beginning of the trial on August 12, 2002, I requested Judge Sturm to order the defendant to produce her mobile telephone, which she had in court with her, for examination in order to determine whether calls were made from defendant's mobile to my telephone number at the times and dates of the threatening calls.

During discovery, Judge Sturm had ordered defendant to produce telephone records for both defendant's mobile and home telephones if "in fact [defendant] has these documents." Exhibit 2, Order Directing Discovery, Document Requests, Item 2. In response to that order, defendant claimed not to have these records in her possession. Exhibit 3, Respondent's Response, Document Requests, Item 2. Despite her own order, Judge Sturm sharply denied my request to examine defendant's mobile telephone in court by saying, "I'm not going to allow him [plaintiff] to touch her phone." Exhibit 4, page 3, Transcript of August 12, 2002, Trial.

3. In the beginning of my case, I requested permission to play audio tape recordings I had made of two of the three threatening telephone calls that were voicemail messages left on my mobile telephone. In addition to the caller's words, the recordings captured his threatening demeanor that made clear I was in physical danger and that he was calling on behalf of the defendant. The recordings also noted the times and dates that the messages were left. Judge Sturm abruptly refused my admission of this key evidence by saying, "I am not going to take the Court's time to listen to the tape." Exhibit 4, page 6.

The above conduct also illustrates that Judge Sturm violated 100.3(B)(3): "A judge shall be patient..." and 100.3(B)(4): “ A judge shall perform judicial duties without bias or prejudice against or in favor of any person.” By denying key discovery requests and admission of crucial evidence, Judge Sturm made clear her impatience with the proceedings and her biased against plaintiff. It is clear to me that if the sexes of the parties had been reversed, Judge Strum would not have made the same rulings in her rush to judgment.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Dear Mr. Hollander:

The State Commission on Judicial Conduct has reviewed your letter of complaint dated October 8, 2002. The Commission has asked me to advise you that it has dismissed the complaint.

Upon careful consideration, the Commission concluded that there was no indication of judicial misconduct to justify judicial discipline. The Commission is not a court of law and does not have appellate authority to change a judge's decision or to review the merits of matters within a judge's discretion, such as the rulings in a particular case. Judges by law have broad discretion in such matters, and the law precludes the Commission from interfering in that discretion.

Very truly yours,

COMPLAINT AGAINST ATTORNEY STEVEN M. SILPE FOR MATERIAL MISREPRESENTATIONS TO CLIENT

1. Attorney Steven M. Silpe of the firm Cohen Goldstein & Silpe, LLP, (212 315 4400) represented me, Roy Den Hollander, in an annulment/divorce action last year, 2001, in the Supreme Court for New York County, Case No. 3500091/01.
2. Mr. Silpe violated Disciplinary Rule 1-102(A)(4) by making at least two material misrepresentations to me on which I relied to my detriment.
3. On July 26, 2001, just before the beginning of the Preliminary Conference before Judge Joan Lobis, Mr. Silpe said I had to make a choice concerning the divorce cause of action in my complaint on whether to pursue adultery or cruel and inhuman treatment because I could not pursue both issues of fault at the same time.
4. The complaint filed by Mr. Silpe on my behalf asked for an annulment or in the alternative a divorce on the grounds of adultery and cruel and inhuman treatment.
5. I told Mr. Silpe to pursue adultery and to accept a settlement on either annulment or adultery.
6. During the conference with Justice Lobis, both parties were asked by Justice Lobis to leave the room while the lawyers and the Justice discussed the case.
7. After the conference, Mr. Silpe told me there was no settlement and that there would be a trial on annulment and adultery in December 2001. This turned out to be misrepresentation number one.
8. Mr. Silpe instructed me to sign the Preliminary Conference Stipulation, which I did.
9. On arriving home, I reviewed the Stipulation and saw that it indicated the issue of fault had been resolved. I immediately call Mr. Silpe concerned that there had been a misunderstanding and that he had settled the case without my approval.
10. Mr. Silpe assured me that my concerns were groundless, that there was no settlement on the issue of fault and that I should continue my investigations in Russia on obtaining evidence for the December trial on the issues of annulment and adultery. This was misrepresentation two.
11. In reliance on Mr. Silpe's above two misrepresentations, I continued my investigations in Russia and preparation for the December trial that I believed would be on the issues of annulment and adultery.
12. In September, Mr. Silpe filed a motion for a default judgment in the annulment/divorce proceeding even though the opposing side had previously filed an answer. When I learned that the opposing side had filed an answer two months earlier and that Mr. Silpe had gone ahead with the default motion anyway, I fired Mr. Silpe and obtained new counsel.
13. At an October Compliance Conference with my new attorney, I learned for the first time from Justice Lobis and opposing counsel that Mr. Silpe had committed me at the July Preliminary Conference to a settlement in which both sides would admit to innocuous cruel and inhuman conduct.
14. I never gave Mr. Silpe the authority to make such a settlement, but he did so anyway and afterwards lied twice to me by saying he had not made any such settlement on the issue of fault.
15. My reliance on Mr. Silpe's intentional misrepresentations ultimately resulted in no trial on the issue of fault and cost me money and time by deceiving me into preparing for a trial that he knew would never happen.

Roy Den Hollander
Docket No. 2002.2501

To Whom It May Concern:

I am in receipt of Mr. Den Hollander's complaint, dated September 8, 2002.

While I no longer have all of Mr. Den Hollander's file, having passed it on to my successor, Robert H. Moses, Esq., I recollect as follows:

1) Mr. Den Hollander retained us in May 2001, at which time he was being represented by another attorney and there was a Family Court proceeding pending that had been commenced by his ex-wife for, I believe, an Order of Protection against him.

2) After we were retained we commenced an action for divorce and/or annulment on the grounds of cruelty and adultery. The complaint set forth both causes of action in detail and included a specific cause of action for annulment on the ground of fraud. A copy of the complaint (unsigned, because it comes from my computer files) is attached. I did not say to Mr. Den Hollander that he could only pursue a single cause of action for divorce or annulment in the complaint. He himself is a lawyer and knows that is not the case. Furthermore the complaint that we prepared and served sought a divorce on both the grounds of cruelty and adultery, as well as a separate cause of action for an annulment, so I have no idea what Mr. Den Hollander is talking about in paragraph 3 of his complaint.

Cohen Goldstein & Sippe, LLP

Departmental Disciplinary Committee
October 25, 2002

3) At the preliminary conference both sides were advised by the court's law secretary that insofar as both parties wanted a divorce, that is that neither side would be claiming that he/she wanted to remain married, that we should indicate on the preliminary conference form that fault was "resolved", otherwise the Court was going to bifurcate the case and proceed with an immediate trial on fault. Attached is the preliminary conference order. As the committee can see, the check mark that had been made under the heading "unresolved" was crossed off, and the category "resolved" was checked. Next to that, the law secretary wrote "will not be an issue." There was absolutely no agreement of any kind on the grounds for divorce/annulment that either party would or could pursue, nor does the preliminary conference form indicate such. Parenthetically, I will say, that at the time, Mr. Den Hollander said to me that he wanted a divorce on either adultery or cruelty grounds, and that was what we pleaded in his Verified Complaint. However, he now seems to be saying in his complaint to the committee that he only wanted an annulment. If that were the case, we would never have interposed cruelty and adultery causes of action for divorce. The information for them came entirely from him.

4) At the preliminary conference, at which Mr. Den Hollander was present, I fully explained to him the preliminary conference order prior to him signing it. I did say that it only provided that fault would not be an issue, i.e., that one or both of the parties would get a divorce or annulment. I also told him that no grounds had been specified or agreed upon, and that was true.

5) As further proof that the specific grounds for divorce were not resolved and there had been no agreement of any kind on an "innocuous" divorce (Den Hollander complaint, para. 13), on or about August 31, 2001, after not having received an Answer to the complaint, we moved for a judgment of divorce on default, on the grounds set forth in the complaint.

6) Upon receipt of our default motion, defendant's counsel advised us that they had already served an Answer. We had not received it (we checked our files, carefully). Nevertheless, although the Answer had not been timely, I knew a default judgment would not be granted and we withdrew our motion. Mr. Den Hollander complains about this (Den Hollander complaint, para.12) but fails to advise the committee that I deleted all of our time charges in connection with the motion.

Cefen Goldstein & Silpe, LLP

Departmental Disciplinary Committee

7) Mr. Den Hollander was quite upset at the fact that he believed we had received the Answer and had moved for a default judgment anyway. Although I advised Mr. Den Hollander that we had not received the Answer, he discharged us in September 2001. I promptly forwarded his file to our successor, Robert H. Moses, Esq., and did not hear from Mr. Den Hollander (or his counsel) until this complaint.

8) I am advised by Mr. Moses, with whom I spoke upon receipt of this complaint, that no one forced or coerced Mr. Den Hollander into proceeding with an "innocuous cruelty" divorce (Den Hollander complaint, para.13) and that he could have proceeded with a full blown divorce or annulment trial, however ill advised it might have been, if he wanted, on any available ground. As it was, after the parties reached a financial settlement I understand they obtained mutual divorces against one another, on the ground of cruelty.

He never did not say this

9) Mr. Den Hollander's former wife's counsel advised us that Mr. Den Hollander also filed a complaint against him, which complaint was recently dismissed as unfounded and he further advised us that after the financial settlement was made Mr. Den Hollander, acting pro se, moved to set it aside on the ground of coercion and duress. The motion was denied.

In summary, the preliminary conference order was entered into with the express understanding that only the fact of a divorce/annulment was being resolved, in so much as neither party was asserting their desire to remain married. The actual grounds themselves were not agreed upon and certainly no "innocuous" divorce ground was consented to and no agreements regarding the divorce or annulment were made which would have limited Mr. Den Hollander's rights to proceed with a contested divorce or annulment on any ground available. What I told him was correct.

As to the default motion, I can't understand what Mr. Den Hollander is complaining about, both because there was no prejudice to him from our making the motion, which was done in good faith, and because he was not charged for any of the time incurred.

As I hope my recital of events makes clear, I did not misrepresent anything to Mr. Den Hollander and his rights were not prejudiced by me in any way.

Supreme Court, Appellate Division

First Judicial Department

New York, NY 10006

Matter of Steven M. Silpe, Esq. Docket No 2002.2501

Dear Mr. Cahill:

This letter serves as my reply to Steven M. Silpe's answer in the above captioned disciplinary matter and incorporates the disciplinary complaint against him dated September 8, 2002.

Mr. Silpe's stipulation without my consent to forgo a trial on fault and his misrepresentation about that agreement.

Mr. Silpe goes to significant lengths in his answer to mischaracterize the disciplinary allegation against him concerning his misrepresentation on settling the issue of a trial on fault.

The allegation as stated in ¶10 of my complaint is that Mr. Silpe misrepresented to me that there had been no agreement on the issue of fault. In an apparent effort of obfuscation, Mr. Silpe's answer states he made no agreement on the specific grounds that would have supported a divorce or annulment. My complaint does not accuse Mr. Silpe of entering an agreement on the grounds for the divorce or an annulment and then lying about it. What Mr. Silpe did without my consent, and then lied about doing, was stipulating at the July 26, 2001 preliminary conference that there would be no trial on the issue of finding fault, whether in the divorce or annulment cause of action.

Because of Mr. Silpe's misrepresentations to me, his agreement to eliminate a trial on fault did not become fully evident until a compliance conference on October 4, 2001, before Justice Lobis. Her Honor said that the attorneys for both parties had agreed at the July 26, 2001 preliminary conference that a trial on the issue of fault would not take place. She emphasized to my new attorney, Robert Moses (212-949-5928), and me that whether there was to have been a trial on the issue of fault had previously been settled, and in order to set aside that stipulation entered into by Mr. Silpe, I would have to make a motion to the court.

Mr. Moses at the time told me that a motion to set aside the stipulation in order to have a trial on the issue of fault in the divorce and annulment causes of action would cost about $5,000 and likely be denied. Mr. Silpe in ¶8 of his answer states that my attorney, Mr. Moses, recently told him that I could have proceeded with a "full blown divorce or annulment trial...if [I] wanted." Mr. Moses says he did not make that statement to Mr. Silpe. Once again Mr. Silpe is making a misrepresentation. It was my right to a trial on fault that Mr. Silpe stipulated away and then lied about doing so. As a result, I could not have proceeded to a "full blown divorce or annulment trial...if [I] wanted" unless I made a costly motion and the Justice granted that motion, which appeared unlikely.

Mr. Silpe also makes a misrepresentation in ¶4 of his answer. Mr. Silpe did not fully explain to me the preliminary conference order prior to my signing and did not say that the order only provided for fault as a non-issue. Jeffrey Drummond, an attorney who accompanied me to the conference as a friend, witnessed the end of the conference when Mr. Silpe presented me with the order. Mr. Drummond states that Mr. Silpe did not fully explain the order nor say that fault would not be an issue.

The preliminary conference along with the waiting lasted the entire morning on July 26th and comprised two meetings: first with Justice Lobis' law secretary and later with the Justice herself. At both meetings, the defendant and I were required to leave the discussions. As such, neither the defendant nor I were present when the stipulation was reached. I was, therefore, completely dependent on Mr. Silpe's characterization of what occurred in the meetings. After the final meeting, Mr. Silpe was in such a rush to leave for another appointment that he hurried me to sign the order, and all he said was I could continue my discovery in Russia in preparation for a December trial on adultery and annulment. Mr. Drummond witnessed this.

Mr. Silpe's misrepresentation about my having to choose between a cruelty or adultery cause of action for a divorce.

Mr. Silpe also mischaracterized ¶3 of my complaint. ¶3 does not state that Mr. Silpe said I could only pursue in my complaint one cause of action for divorce and one cause of action for annulment. What Mr. Silpe falsely stated at the courthouse on the morning of July 26, 2001, before the preliminary conference started, was that in the divorce cause of action, it was necessary for me to choose between the grounds of adultery and cruelty. It was this statement at that point in time that constituted a misrepresentation on which I relied.

Mr. Silpe's excuse that I am a lawyer and therefore was not misled contradicts the reasons behind the often-repeated advice that a lawyer should not represent himself. I hired Mr. Silpe, trusted him and relied on his advice because he specialized in marital cases, an area of the law in which I had never previously practiced nor studied except for the bar exam. Unfortunately my reliance was misplaced.

I hope the issues in this proceeding are clear that Mr. Silpe's misrepresentations prejudiced my rights.

Thank for your time and if I can be of any further assistance please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely yours,

Roy Den Hollander

Matter of Steven M. Silpe, Esq. Docket No 2002.2501

Dear Mr. Cahill:

On November 7, 2002, I sent my reply to Mr. Silpe's answer to the disciplinary complaint I filed against him. A copy of that reply is attached.

In the reply, I noted that I had witnesses to two material misrepresentations that Mr. Silpe made in his answer to the Committee.

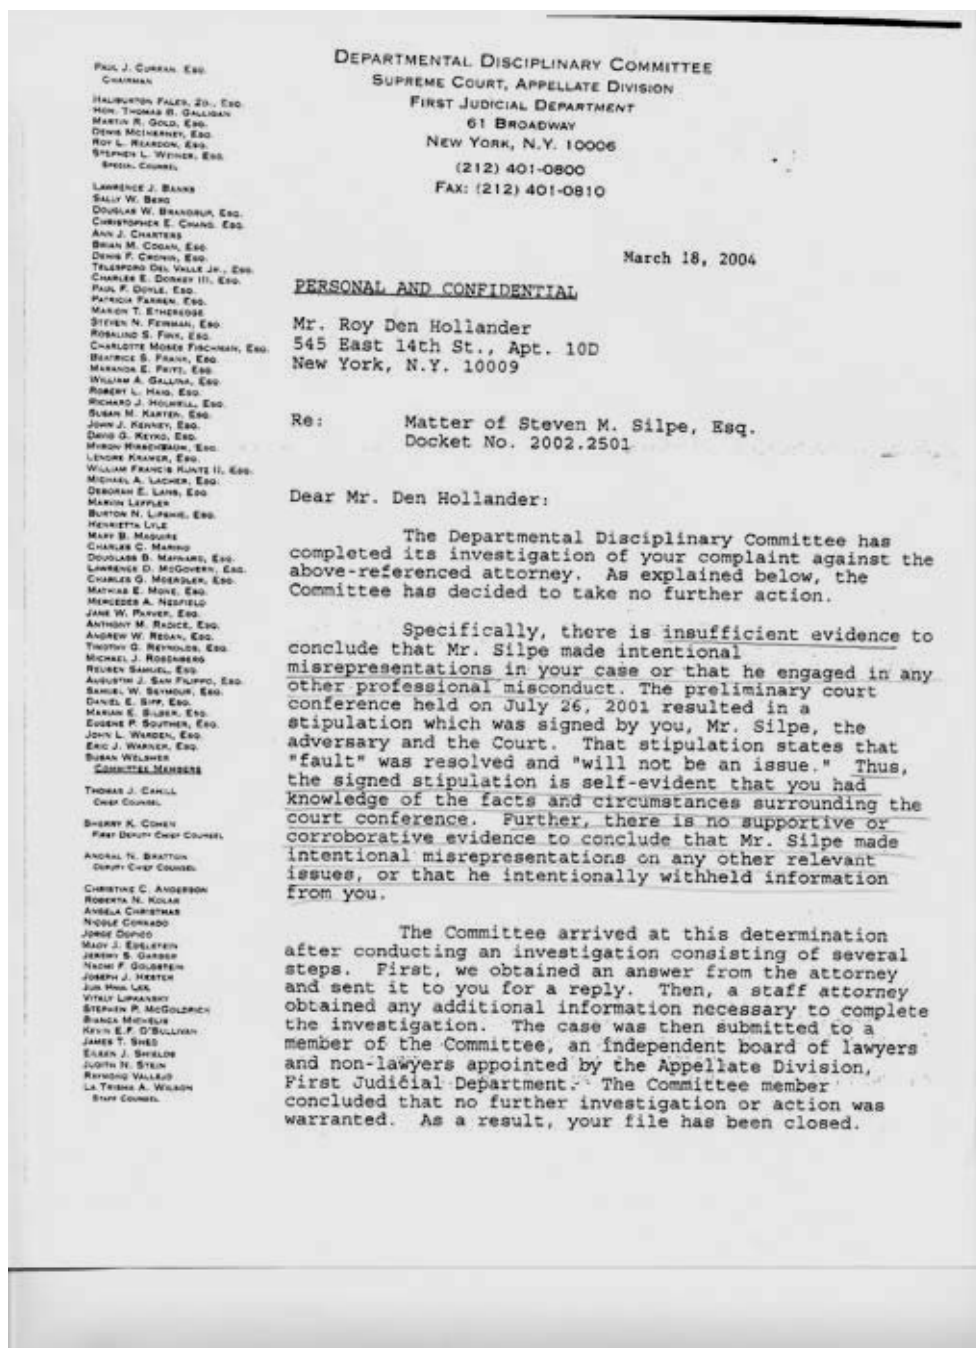

1. Mr. Silpe, in ¶8 of his answer, said that my attorney, Robert H. Moses (212 972 8911), told him that I could have proceeded with a "full blown divorce or annulment trial...if [I] wanted." Mr. Moses says he did not make that statement. So apparently, Mr. Silpe is making a misrepresentation. Mr. Silpe had stipulated away my right to a trial on fault and then lied about doing so. As a result, I could not have proceeded to a "full blown divorce or annulment trial...if [I] wanted" unless I made a costly motion and the Justice granted that motion. Please see Reply p. 2 ¶1.

2. Mr. Silpe also made a misrepresentation in ¶4 of his answer. Contrary to his statement in ¶4, Mr. Silpe did not fully explain to me the preliminary conference order prior to my signing it and did not say that the order only provided for fault as a non-issue. Jeffrey N. Drummond (212 352 9861), an attorney, had accompanied me to the conference as a friend and witnessed when Mr. Silpe presented me with the order for signing. Mr. Drummond confirms my statement that Mr. Silpe did not fully explain the order nor say that fault would not be an issue.

Since filing my reply on November 7, 2002, to my knowledge, neither of the above witnesses has been contacted by the Committee to confirm Mr. Silpe's misrepresentations to this Committee.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Matter of Steven M. Silpe, Esq. Docket No 2002.2501

Dear Mr. Cahill:

In response to your summary dismissal of my complaint against Mr. Silpe in which you cavalierly ignored material evidence—I request a review. However, given the biased nature of your investigation by failing to interview two corroborating witnesses to Mr. Silpe’s misrepresentations, the review will most likely reach the same conclusion. A conclusion that is unsupported in light of all the evidence but supported by just that evidence hand picked to reach the conclusion desired. I, therefore, have two questions:

1. When the review upholds your decision, is there recourse to another tribunal, perhaps the Supreme Court?
2. Is there an inspector general or some other agency that looks into the Committee’s failure to do its duty, incompetence or worst?

You state in your letter of March 18, 2003 at ¶ 2 that my signing of the stipulation is “self-evident” that I had “knowledge of the facts and circumstances surrounding the court conference.” What kind of a standard of proof is “self-evident?” Is it preponderance, beyond a reasonable doubt, or, more likely, whatever an accused attorney says. Furthermore, since when does caveat emptor from the 19th century apply in the 21st to attorney-client relationships? I thought the attorney-client relationship was deemed so important by the law and the Committee that attorneys were held to a standard higher than the sharp practices of yesteryear where the person in the know used that information to deceive others.

Mr. Silpe was my attorney to whom I paid lots of money. He held himself out as competent in domestic relations law of which I never even had a course. I trusted and relied on him as clients are encouraged to do and for which the disciplinary and ethics rules were enacted so that such trust and reliance would only rarely be misplaced. Perhaps the rules exist to give clients a false sense of security that their attorney will act forthrightly.

You also state in ¶ 2 that “there is insufficient evidence to conclude that Mr. Silpe made intentional misrepresentations.... there is no supportive or corroborative evidence to conclude that Mr. Silpe made intentional misrepresentations on any other relevant issues, or that he intentionally withheld information ....” Basically you are calling me a liar, since my statements are evidence that Mr. Silpe made misrepresentations. You’re also telling any client who complains against a lawyer that the client’s words are useless—they will not be believed. Okay, let’s assume my statements mean zero and all clients are liars when they complain against august attorneys. What about the two corroborating witnesses to misrepresentations by Mr. Silpe? The two witnesses to whom you and your Committee never talked—Jeffrey Drummond and Robert Mosses.

As I stated in my November 7, 2002 reply to Mr. Silpe’s answer and again in my November 9, 2003 inquiry into the status of this case:

1. Mr. Silpe, in ¶8 of his answer, said that my attorney, Robert H. Moses (212 972 8911), told Mr. Silpe that I could have proceeded with a “full blown divorce or annulment trial...if [I] wanted.” Mr. Moses says he did not make that statement.

2. Mr. Silpe also made a misrepresentation in ¶4 of his answer. Contrary to his statement in ¶4, Mr. Silpe did not fully explain to me the preliminary conference order prior to my signing it and did not say that the order eliminate fault as a trial issue. Jeffrey N. Drummond (212 352 9861), an attorney, had accompanied me to the conference and witnessed what Mr. Silpe said when he presented me with the order for signing. Mr. Drummond confirms that Mr. Silpe did not fully explain the order nor say that fault would not be an issue.

Mr. Drummond will also confirm that when Mr. Silpe presented me with the stipulation, he was rushing me to sign. Given the emotional nature of the situation, my trust in my attorney (something that will never happen again) and my reliance on Mr. Silpe, I signed the order under circumstances that current consumer law would classify as high-pressure salesmanship. As soon as I had left that emotionally charged situation and read the order, I telephoned Mr. Silpe as to its meaning, and he continued his lie that there was no settlement and I would have a trial in December on the issues of fault—annulment and adultery. Actually, the previous sentence written here is completely useless, since you have already made it clear that I am considered a liar in this proceeding. But how do you answer my corroborating witnesses—are they liars too? No, you just ignore their evidence.

Finally, Mr. Silpe's misrepresentations in ¶s 4 & 8 of his answer amount to hiding the truth from the Committee. But, I assume that is not considered professional misconduct.

Thank you for your time and I look forward to how you will twist this letter into charges against me—it's the American way these days; truth must be punished.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Complaint filed by Roy Den Hollander against Nicholas J. Mundy

In the divorce and annulment proceedings of Roy Den Hollander v. Alina A. Shipilina, No.3500091/01, in the Supreme Court for New York County, Mr. Den Hollander was represented, in part, by Amy Saltzman of the firm Cohen Goldstein & Silpe (212 315 4400). Ms. Shipilina was represented, in part, by Nicholas J. Mundy of the firm Kuba, Mundy & Associates (212 732 5050).

Prior to the Preliminary Conference on July 26, 2001, and prior to receipt of Ms. Shipilina's Answer, Ms. Saltzman had a telephone conversation with Mr. Mundy concerning possible settlement of the above action. During that conversation, according to Ms. Saltzman, Mr. Mundy accused Mr. Den Hollander of extortion and said that he possessed an audiotape of Mr. Den Hollander on which Mr. Den Hollander attempted to extort money from his then wife, Ms. Shipilina, by threatening to have her deported unless she paid him money. Ms. Saltzman became so upset by Mr. Mundy's pronouncement that she notified her supervising partner, Steven Silpe, and the two immediately made a conference telephone call to Mr. Den Hollander. Mr. Silpe and Ms. Saltzman, both sounding upset, conveyed to Mr. Den Hollander that Mr. Mundy had accused Mr. Den Hollander of extortion, that Mr. Mundy had an audio tape of the attempted extortion and that the tape would be used at trial as part of the counterclaim of Ms. Shipilina. The clear inference to Mr. Den Hollander from Mr. Mundy was that unless Mr. Den Hollander settled the case on terms agreeable to his wife, he would be accused of extortion. Mr. Den Hollander immediately felt great fear that unless he settled the divorce case according to his wife's wishes, he would soon be facing unfounded criminal charges in addition to a bitter divorce suit. Months later the case was subsequently settled on grounds previously opposed by Mr. Den Hollander.

It is not only a violation of the Code of Professional Conduct but also of New York State Penal Code 135.60 on coercion or attempted coercion for an attorney to instill fear in an opposing party in a civil litigation by accusing that party of criminal wrong doing in order to induce that party into reaching a settlement favorable to the accusing attorney's client.

Mr. Mundy also violated the Professional Code of Responsibility sometime in March 2001 when, according to Mr. Den Hollander's original attorney in this matter, Judith Bader-York (212 688 9020), Mr. Mundy falsely told Ms. Bader-York that he possessed medical records that showed Mr. Den Hollander had repeatedly battered his wife. No such genuine records exist.

Attached are copies of the Complaint and Answer in the divorce/annulment proceedings.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

Roy Den Hollander

Re: Complaint of Mr. Roy DenHollander
Docket Number 2001.3312

Dear Ms. Killian:

This letter shall serve as my formal response to the above-mentioned complaint. Simply stated, to the extent Mr. Roy DenHollander's complaint is not a fabrication, it is a gross misrepresentation of fact.

This firm served as counsel to Ms. Angelina Shipilina in divorce/annulment proceedings commenced by her husband, Mr. Roy DenHollander. In his complaint, Mr. DenHollander leveled allegations of prostitution, drug use, and fraud against Ms. Shipilina. He sought to annul their marriage on the basis of fraud, and claimed that Ms. Shipilina threatened to injure him if he did not "lie to the Immigration and Naturalization Service to get her a green card". A copy of Mr. DenHollander's Divorce Complaint is enclosed herewith. Mr. DenHollander's Complaint is dated June 21, 2001.

In vast contradiction to Mr. DenHollander's Complaint, Ms. Shipilina's Answer contains a counterclaim alleging that, among other things, Mr. DenHollander threatened to have Ms. Shipilina deported "if she did not do everything he told her to", including payment of a large sum of money. Mr. Roy DenHollander also created a public website in Ms. Shipilina's name (www.alinashipilina.com) where, pending divorce proceedings, he posted a copy of her personal diary and naked photographs of Ms. Shipilina, without her knowledge or consent. A copy of the Answer is enclosed herewith.

Each of Ms. Shipilina's above mentioned allegations were reported by Ms. Shipilina to the New York City Police Department (114th Precinct). These criminal matters are still active and pending. They are being handled by Detective Bob Henning of the 114th Precinct. Tellingly, the incident involving the alleged attempt to extort money from Ms. Shipilina predates Mr. DenHollander's divorce complaint (and thus his version of the facts) by six months. This is evidenced by copies of the Police Reports enclosed herewith.

The divorce action has since settled pursuant to stipulation. Mr. DenHollander was represented by several attorneys throughout the divorce proceeding. A copy of the Stipulation is enclosed herewith.

Mr. DenHollander's only complaint against this firm appears to stem from a telephone conversation with Mr. DenHollander's previous attorney, Amy Saltzman, Esq. Mr. DenHollander was not a party to that telephone conversation, and he has grossly misrepresented the sum and substance of my conversation with Ms. Saltzman. Simply stated, there was nothing improper about the conversation between Ms. Saltzman and myself. Indeed, this firm was under an affirmative obligation to advise Mr. DenHollander's attorney of any potential discovery they were entitled to. Ms. Shipilina advised this firm that she had a tape recording of a conversation between herself and Mr. DenHollander which was potentially discoverable, and which we may present into evidence in the divorce proceedings. I personally explained to Ms. Saltzman that I had not yet listened to the tape or had it transcribed, but would do so if necessary, and that I had an obligation to provide her a copy, if she desired.

There is no "inference ... that unless Mr. DenHollander settled the case on terms agreeable to his wife, he would be accused of extortion", as set forth in Mr. Hollander's complaint. This statement is absurd. Indeed, Ms. Shipilina's complaint was already filed and pending with the Police Department, and she continues to prosecute her complaints to this day. Furthermore, the divorce action has been settled per stipulation, and Mr. Roy DenHollander was represented by new counsel. The Stipulation was read into the record in open Court.

Accordingly, the complaint of Mr. Roy DenHollander is without merit and should be dismissed in it's entirety.

Thank you.

Very truly yours,

Att: Donna M. Killian

Re: Matter of Nicholas J. Mundy, Esq.
Docket No 2001.3312

Dear Ms. Killian:

This letter serves as my response to Nicholas J. Mundy's answer in the above-mentioned disciplinary matter. To the extent that Mr. Mundy's answer does not labor on irrelevancies, it is a gross dissemblance. Mr. Mundy spends much of the beginning of his response rehashing old allegations, reciting extraneous matters and making false inferences in an effort to paint Mr. Den Hollander<sup>[1]</sup>, the complainant, in a negative light. An unfortunate but often used tactic of lawyers.

On the merits, Mr. Mundy completely ignored the allegation that he lied to the complainant's attorney, Judith Bader-York, by claiming to possess genuine medical records that showed the complainant battered his wife. Mr. Mundy's omission of a response can only mean that he admits this allegation.

The only allegation Mr. Mundy did address was his violation of the New York State Penal Code 135.60 when he instilled fear in Mr. Den Hollander by accusing him of criminal wrong doing and inferring exposure of an asserted fact injurious to Mr. Den Hollander in order to induce him into reaching a settlement favorable to Mr. Mundy's client, Alina Shipilina. Mr. Mundy made the communication to Mr. Den Hollander's attorney, Amy Saltzman, knowing full well that Ms. Saltzman would inform her client about it.

Mr. Mundy's specious response to this allegation ignores a number of facts:

1. Mr. Mundy states that his client, Ms. Shipilina, filed a complaint of attempted extortion against Mr. Den Hollander on December 13, 2000, well before Mr. Mundy's conversation with attorney Amy Saltzman about an audiotape evidencing the alleged extortion attempt. The false implication Mr. Mundy creates is that he could not have inferred that criminal charges would be brought against Mr. Den Hollander because Ms. Shipilina had already brought them. However, Ms. Shipilina's complaint, called a "Domestic Incident Report", states at the end of the section "Narrative of the Incident" that Ms. Shipilina "does not want to press charges at this time." So in truth, when Mr. Mundy discussed with Amy Saltzman the alleged extortion attempt, no criminal charges had been instituted. Mr. Mundy conveniently failed to note this fact.
2. Mr. Mundy misleadingly infers that the alleged extortion complaint was not connected to the divorce/annulment proceedings because the divorce/annulment complaint was not filed until six months later. Once again Mr. Mundy omitted crucial facts. Mr. Mundy's firm began representing Ms. Shipilina on both immigration and marital matters in October 2000. By December 2000, it was clear that his client would most likely be involved in a contested divorce. A contested divorce might raise issues that could hinder his client, a Russian alien who grew up in Chechnya, from becoming a permanent United States resident. In preparation for a divorce suit, Mr. Mundy evidently had his client file the Incident Report but held off on having her institute criminal charges against Mr. Den Hollander in order to strengthen his client's bargaining position. If Mr. Mundy had instructed his client to institute the criminal charges in December 2000, then there would have been no club, if needed, with which to cow Mr. Den Hollander and his attorney into submission during divorce negotiations. Furthermore, any reasonable person, not to mention an experienced attorney, knows that contingency plans for a contested divorce begin long before the filing of the complaint or even the notice of action. In Den Hollander v. Shipilina preparation for a potential divorce case clearly began in Mr. Mundy's office well before December 13, 2000, while formal proceedings commenced on February 13, 2001, and not, as Mr. Mundy falsely inferred, six months following the alleged incident of extortion. See attached Action For A Divorce.
3. Mr. Mundy also falsely states in his answer that Ms. Shipilina "continues to prosecute her complaints to this day." As of the date of this response, no action has been taken on the alleged extortion attempt.
4. Mr. Mundy's characterization of his telephone conversation with Ms. Saltzman is inconsistent with her description to

Mr. Den Hollander immediately following the telephone call, which is stated in paragraph two of the complaint against Mr. Mundy. See attached copy of Complaint. It appears that Ms. Saltzman's recollection and notes of the conversation, plus her statements made to her superior, Mr. Steven Silpe, would be useful to the Committee on this point.

5. Mr. Mundy's explanation that discussion of the audiotape with Ms. Saltzman arose because of discovery seems unlikely since Mr. Mundy's client had not yet filed an answer in the divorce/annulment case and the Preliminary Conference, which determines the extent of discovery in marital proceedings, had not yet been held.

Given Mr. Mundy's actions and the communications made to Mr. Den Hollander by Ms. Saltzman and Mr. Silpe, Mr. Mundy clearly violated the following sections of Penal Code 135.60, which states:

A person is guilty of coercion in the second degree when he compels or induces a person to engage in conduct which the latter has a legal right to abstain from engaging in, or to abstain from engaging in conduct in which he has a legal right to engage, by means of instilling in him a fear that, if the demand is not complied with, the actor or another will:

(Paragraphs 1 through 3 and 6 through 8 omitted.)

4. Accuse some person of a crime or cause criminal charges to be instituted against him; or

5. Expose a secret or publicize an asserted fact, whether true or false, tending to subject some person to hatred, contempt or ridicule; or

9. Perform any other act which would not in itself materially benefit the actor but which is calculated to harm another person materially with respect to his health, safety, business, calling, career, financial condition, reputation, or personal relationships.

With respect to recent developments, an unsettling event occurred that raises a serious question as to whether Mr. Mundy is instigating his client to harass Mr. Den Hollander as a form of retaliation for Mr. Den Hollander filing a Disciplinary Complaint against Mr. Mundy. After receiving the Disciplinary Complaint in early March 2002, Mr. Mundy apparently instructed his client to resurrect a Domestic Incident Report dating back to June 27, 2001, alleging a violation of a Temporary Order of Protection against Mr. Den Hollander that was dismissed on July 31, 2001. The matter will end up in another court hearing even though the parties are divorced and the allegations in the report grew out of the divorce/annulment proceedings.

In addition, there is also a Temporary Order of Protection pending in the New York County Family Court, Docket O-03570/02, against Ms. Shipilina for enlisting a gentlemen, unknown to Mr. Den Hollander, but apparently known to the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation, for making threatening telephone calls to Mr. Den Hollander to prevent him from testifying in a potential deportation hearing against Ms. Shipilina. Mr. Mundy will most likely be representing Ms. Shipilina in that matter.

In conclusion, Mr. Mundy's answer is without merit and disciplinary action against him should proceed.

Thank you for your time.

Very truly yours,

Roy Den Hollander

<sup>[1]</sup> I refer to myself in the third person in order to make it easier in distinguishing the players.

In October 2000, my then wife, a Russian immigrant, and I wanted to separate and divorce. She was concerned that either might negatively affect her chance to obtain permanent residency status from the United States Immigration and Naturalization Service. Seeking legal advice, we made an appointment with the law firm of Kuba, Mundy & Associates.

On October 30, 2000, my then wife, Alina Shipilina, and I met with Peter Petrovich, a paralegal for the law firm who worked under the supervision of attorney Nicholas J. Mundy. Despite Mr. Petrovich's lack of a license to practice law in New York State, Mr. Petrovich proceeded to provide my wife and me legal advice.

Mr. Petrovich counseled that we enter into a legal separation agreement that would state our separation as beginning in January or February 2001 even though we intended and did actually separate in December 2000. He said the reason for the false date of the beginning of our separation was because, "It would look better to the INS." According to Mr. Petrovich, our divorce would then become effective one year later. He further advised that with the separation agreement my then wife could still obtain permanent residency status provided I execute a sworn affidavit for the INS in which I would make false statements. I subsequently declined to make such an affidavit.

Mr. Petrovich's legal advice to my then wife and me constituted practicing law without a license while working under the supervision of attorney Nicholas J. Mundy.

Re: Matter of Nicholas J. Mundy, Esq.
 Docket No. 2001.3312

Dear Mr. DenHollander:

The Departmental Disciplinary Committee has completed its investigation of your complaint against the above-referenced attorney. As explained below, the Committee has decided to take no further action.

Specifically, there is no evidence of a threat by Mr. Mundy to force you to settle the matrimonial case with your wife, whom he was representing. There was merely a statement from one counsel to another, concerning evidence that might be used in the case. Since the criminal charge by your wife had already been made at that time, there was no inappropriate threat by Mr. Mundy or a violation of the Disciplinary Code.

The Committee arrived at this determination after conducting an investigation consisting of several steps. First, we obtained an answer from the attorney and sent it to you for a reply. Then, a staff attorney obtained any additional information necessary to complete the investigation. The case was then submitted to a member of the Committee, an independent board of lawyers and non-lawyers appointed by the Appellate Division, First Judicial Department. The Committee member concluded that no further investigation or action was warranted. As a result, your file has been closed.

Matter of Nicholas J. Mundy, Esq.
Docket No 2001.3312

Dear Mr. Cahill:

This is a request for review of the Committee's decision in the above captioned matter and an additional complaint against Nicholas J. Mundy.

The Committee's decision failed to address the second allegation in the original complaint filed against Mundy in December 2001:

"Mr. Mundy also violated the Professional Code of Responsibility sometime in March 2001 when, according to Mr. Den Hollander's original attorney in this matter [Den Hollander v. Shipilina, No. 3500091/01], Judith Bader-York (212 688 9020), Mr. Mundy falsely told Ms. Bader-York that he possessed medical records that showed Mr. Den Hollander had repeatedly battered his wife. No such genuine records exist." See Ex. 1, Complaint Against Nicholas J. Mundy.

This conduct by Mundy violated DR 1-102[1200.3] of the Code of Professional Responsibility because it involved deceit and misrepresentation, since no such medical records existed and no such battery ever occurred.

Mundy's answer to the original complaint did not even address the above allegation as pointed out in the reply:

"On the merits, Mr. Mundy completely ignored the allegation that he lied to the complainant's attorney, Judith Bader-York, by claiming to possess genuine medical records that showed the complainant battered his wife. Mr. Mundy's omission of a response can only mean that he admits this allegation." See Ex. 2, Reply to Mundy's Answer.

In addition, Mundy's statement to Bader-York constituted coercion in the second degree under New York Penal Law 135.60. Mundy's clear inference to Den Hollander was that unless Den Hollander settled the case on terms agreeable to his wife, he would be accused of battery and face contempt or ridicule, or harm to his business, calling, career, financial condition or personal relationships by publication of that false statement. Mundy's misrepresentation instilled fear in Den Hollander.

This attempted coercion by Mundy was not a mere statement from one counsel to another, concerning evidence that might be used in the case, since no such evidence existed. Nor were such charges by Den Hollander's wife already made at the time of Mundy's attempted coercion.

In conclusion, Mundy engaged in conduct involving deceit and misrepresentation in an attempt to coerce Den Hollander to abstain from an activity in which he had a legal right to engage.

Sincerely yours,

Roy Den Hollander

 Docket No. 2001.3312

Dear Mr. DenHollander:

We have received your letter dated October 26, 2002 in which you have requested reconsideration of the determination by this Committee to dismiss your complaint against the above respondent-attorney. As a result of your request we forwarded your letter, together with the entire file, to a different member of the Departmental Disciplinary Committee than the person who originally reviewed and approved the staff recommendation of dismissal.

That independent review has now taken place. I have been formally advised that the second reviewing member is in accord with the original decision not to proceed further with your complaint. Accordingly, I regret to inform you that we cannot be of any further assistance in this matter.

Very truly yours,

Motion No. 2615 - returnable June 25, 1990

In re: Ronald J. Kuba, a Suspended Attorney

Per Curiam

Ronald J. Kuba, Esq. (respondent) was admitted to practice, as an attorney and counsellor-at-law in the Courts of the State of New York, by the Appellate Division, Second Judicial Department, on October 17, 1962, and, at all relevant times pertinent to this proceeding he has maintained an office for the practice of law, in this Department.

On or about July 24, 1989, in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, respondent pled guilty to the crime of filing a false tax return (26 U.S.C. §7201), which is a felony under the laws of the United States. Thereafter, he was sentenced to six months, supervised probation, 600 hours of community service, to be monitored by the Probation Department, and to pay the cost of his prosecution.

Respondent's conviction resulted from his filing a false income tax return for the calendar year 1982, which indicated his taxable income for that year was approximately $24,165.84, and that the amount of tax due and owing thereon was $6,363.18. In fact, respondent's true 1982 taxable income was approximately $126,068.00, upon which there was due and owing an income tax of approximately $53,512.40.

Following respondent's conviction, and sentence, in September 1989, the Departmental Disciplinary Committee (petitioner) filed a petition, seeking an order from this Court, finding that the crime of which respondent was convicted is a "serious crime", pursuant to the Judiciary law, §90, subdivision 4, paragraph d, and 22 NYCRR §603.12(b), suspending respondent from the practice of law, pursuant to the Judiciary Law, §90, subdivision 4, paragraph f, and, directing respondent to show cause, pursuant to the Judiciary Law, §90, subdivision 4, paragraph g, as to whether a final order of censure, suspension or removal from office should not be entered.

In response, respondent submitted an answer to the petition, and he cross-moved, pursuant to the Judiciary Law, §90, subdivision 4, paragraph h, and 22 NYCRR §603.12(a), for a Hearing. Respondent, in his answer, admitted that the crime of which he was convicted is a "serious crime", within the meaning of the Judiciary Law, §90, subdivision 4, paragraph d, and, 22 NYCRR §603.12(b), and he did not object to his immediate suspension, pursuant to the Judiciary Law, §90, subdivision 4, paragraph f.

By our order (M-5280, M-5768), entered January 4, 1990, we granted the petitioner's motion (M-5280), and found that respondent had committed a "serious crime" (Judiciary Law, §90, subdivision 4, paragraph d), suspended respondent from the practice of law, pending a final order of this Court (Judiciary Law, §90 subdivision 4, paragraph f), and directed respondent to show cause as to whether a final order of suspension, censure, or, removal from office should not be entered (Judiciary Law, §90, subdivision 4, paragraph g). Further, we granted the respondent's cross-motion (M-5768), and referred the matter to the petitioner for a hearing.

At that hearing, respondent presented three witnesses, including two members of the Bar of this State, and all three testified as to the respondent's good character, and his fitness to practice law. Further, respondent, who is married, the father of three children, and an immigration lawyer, testified in his own behalf, and stated, in substance, that he is remorseful, and has fully cooperated with the Internal Revenue Service concerning the collection of the unpaid taxes, resulting from his crime.

Subsequent to hearing the witnesses, and examining the exhibits admitted into evidence, the Panel, in its written report (Report), dated May 11, 1990, found that the respondent had testified candidly before them. Also, the Panel stated, in pertinent part (see, Report, at page 3):

"The materials supplied to us from the official judicial record of his [respondent] prosecution apply only to the year 1982...

It is to ... [respondent's] credit that he candidly disclosed to us that there was also an unreported amount of some $15,000 - $20,000 for the year 1981. [respondent] stated further, without contradiction, that this unreported 1981 income has been disclosed to the Internal Revenue Service and that he has entered into a settlement with respect to 1981.

[Respondent] also testified that he had paid some $100,000 to the IRS to cover the indictment year [1982]... ."

Finally, the Panel recommended (see, Report, at page 2):

"Balancing all the considerations, we unanimously conclude that the appropriate sanction is public censure and a suspension of six(6) months to run from the date of ... [respondent's] intermediate suspension, January 4, 1990, after which we recommend automatic reinstatement upon his filing of proof of compliance with the suspension order ...".

By notice of motion, dated June 5, 1990, respondent moves to confirm the Panel's Report and Recommendation. Petitioner does not oppose this application.

We have reviewed the transcript of the hearing, and find that same indicates, inter alia, respondent's concession of the facts surrounding his conviction, his cooperation with the Federal government in the prosecution of the case, and his remorse.

In Matter of Rotwein, 20 AD2d 428, 429 (1st Dept. 1964), which was a disciplinary proceeding, involving a charge of Federal income tax evasion, we stated, in pertinent part:

"The inescapable fact is that respondent perpetrated a deliberate fraud on the Government. It was planned, premeditated and without the pressure of immediate necessity. Such conduct cannot escape some sanction...".

Based upon our analysis, supra, we agree with the Panel's recommendation, as to the sanction to be imposed.

Accordingly, we grant respondent's motion to confirm the Panel's Report and Recommendation, suspend respondent for a period of six (6) months, to run from January 4, 1990, the date of our order of intermediate suspension of respondent. Further, on expiration of that suspension, we direct respondent's automatic reinstatement.

All concur.

Order filed.

COMPLAINT AGAINST ROY DEN HOLLANDER, ESQ.

Dear Sir or Madam:

Please consider this letter a formal complaint against Mr. Roy Den Hollander, Esq., and an urgent request to the Committee to investigate Mr. Den Hollander's fitness to practice law in the State of New York.

Although I make this complaint with much trepidation (as I had hoped that the need to make such indictments against a member of the bar would never arise), I verily believe that the facts set forth in this complaint will reveal that Mr. Den Hollander's reprehensible conduct has left me no choice. I submit that the proven conduct of Mr. Den Hollander will warrant censure and/or suspension from the practice of law. While I apologize for the voluminous nature of the exhibits attached to this complaint, it is the actual legal pleadings and motions of Mr. Den Hollander in various forums that form the facts and basis of this complaint, and which I urge this Committee to personally review. This is not a complaint comprised of allegations, but of simple facts evidenced by the exhibits attached hereto.

Simply stated, Mr. Den Hollander has been engaged in a relentless course of harassment, intimidation and persecution that all began with the commencement of divorce/annulment proceedings against his former wife, Angelina Shipilina, on or about June 21, 2001.

The facts are as follows:

This firm served as counsel to Ms. Angelina Shipilina in the divorce/annulment proceedings commenced by Mr. Den Hollander. In his complaint, Mr. Den Hollander leveled allegations of prostitution, drug use, and fraud against Ms. Shipilina. He sought to annul their marriage on the basis of fraud, and claimed that Ms. Shipilina threatened to injure him if he did not "lie to the Immigration and Naturalization Service to get her a green card". A copy of Mr. Den Hollander's Divorce Complaint is attached as Exhibit "A".

In vast contradiction to Mr. Den Hollander's Complaint, Ms. Shipilina's Answer contains a counterclaim alleging that, among other things, Mr. Den Hollander threatened to have Ms. Shipilina deported "if she did not do everything he told her to", including payment of a large sum of money. Mr. Den Hollander had the audacity to create a public website in Ms. Shipilina's name (www.alinashipilina.com) where, pending divorce proceedings, he posted a copy of her personal diary and naked photographs of Ms. Shipilina, without her knowledge or consent. A copy of the Answer is attached as Exhibit "B".

The creation of this inappropriate and offensive website by Mr. Den Hollander prompted Ms. Shipilina to file a report with the New York City Police Department (114th Pct.). Upon information and belief, the criminal matters were being handled by Detective Bob Henning of the 114th Precinct. Tellingly, the incident involving the alleged attempt to extort money from Ms. Shipilina predates Mr. Den Hollander's divorce complaint by six months. This is evidenced by copies of the Police Reports attached as Exhibit "C".

The divorce action between the parties settled pursuant to Stipulation of Settlement dated November 2, 2001. The Stipulation of Settlement, Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and Divorce Judgment were all drafted by Mr. Den Hollander's retained attorney. A copy of same, along with a copy of the transcript of allocution, are combined as Exhibit "D".

Despite the above, in May, 2002 Mr. Den Hollander made a motion to vacate and set-aside the Stipulation, pro se, which motion was denied by the Honorable Joan B. Lobis by decision dated August 1, 2002. A copy of decision is attached as Exhibit "E". The outlandish, baseless and downright insulting allegations contained within Mr. Den Hollander's motion papers speak volumes about his fitness to practice law. The abuse of the Court system and use of litigation as a means to harass and intimidate are evident in his motion papers, which I urge the Committee to read. Without regard for ethics or even common decency, among the 22 exhibits attached to Mr. Den Hollander's frivolous motion was a CD Rom he labeled "Masturbation Video Promo Featuring Alina Shipilina". A copy of his Motion (without exhibits) is attached as Exhibit "F", and a photocopy of the said CD Rom is attached as Exhibit "G".

Concurrently, in March, 2002, Mr. Den Hollander commenced a Family Court proceeding against Ms. Shipilina, also pro se, seeking an order of protection. Ironically, Mr. Den Hollander's complaint alleged he was the victim of harassment (see Exhibit "H"). Once again, Mr. Den Hollander's very own legal papers provide all the evidence needed to support the conclusion that Mr. Den Hollander is unfit to practice law, improperly using the legal system as a vehicle to harass and incense. I urge the Committee to review Mr. Den Hollander's voluminous discovery demands, which were almost entirely stricken by the Court. They are offensive and repugnant. See Exhibit "I". Mr. Den Hollander's petition was dismissed after trial on August 12, 2002.

Additional harassment and intimidation is evidenced by Mr. Den Hollander's entirely fabricated and baseless disciplinary complaint against the undersigned, which he filed with this Committee in December 2001, and which he made public by annexing as an exhibit to his motion to set-aside the aforesaid divorce stipulation. The incredible and far-fetched allegations contained in Mr. Den Hollander's complaint still dumbfound and amaze me. The complaint was dismissed by the Committee on October 16, 2002. See Exhibit "J" and "K", respectively.

Despite all of the above, I hesitated to file formal charges against Mr. Den Hollander. I was hopeful that his course of harassment had ended. Then, last week, I was named as a defendant in two (2) separate law suits commenced by Mr. Den Hollander in the New York State Supreme Court and the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Ms. Shipilina, this law firm, and dozens of other innocent defendants were named as well. Amazingly, Mr. Den Hollander's allegations have actually become more frivolous and outlandish than ever before, alleging among other things, that I am part of a RICO conspiracy that spans the globe. Mr. Den Hollander's District Court complaint, prepared pro se, is 91 pages in length and contains 915 numbers paragraphs. It is a meandering, disorganized, prolix narrative, and an embarrassment to the justice system. A review of the caption alone should question whether Mr. Den Hollander is fit to practice law. See Exhibits "L" and "M".

By his very own words, Mr. Den Hollander claims to suffer from "deep emotional despair, depression and anxiety", and is under the influence of psychotropic medication necessitated by his apparent condition (see Mr. Den Hollander's affidavit in support of motion to set-aside divorce stipulation attached as Exhibit "F"). I cannot ignore the obvious conclusion one must draw from reading Mr. Den Hollander's very own words, to wit, that he may indeed be mentally incompetent to practice law. Mr. Den Hollander's allegations are not simply far-fetched and irresponsible, but paranoid delusional, if he truly believes them.

Decent people are being forced to defend themselves, time and time again, against Mr. Den Hollander's incredible charges and irrepressible, unrelenting harassment. The time and energy of the Court is being wasted. I urge the Committee to assist in any way possible in putting an end to Mr. Den Hollander's actionable conduct, unbecoming of an attorney licensed to practice law.

I conclude by stating, once again, that this complaint is based on simple fact and hard evidence, not unsubstantiated allegations. The Committee need look no further than the attached exhibits of Mr. Den Hollander's legal pleadings and motions as described above to form the conclusion that he is unfit to practice law and must be disciplined.

I thank the Committee in advance for considering this complaint. Please do not hesitate to contact me if any additional documentation and/or information is required.

Very truly yours,

Complaint of Nicholas J. Mundy, Esq.
Docket No 2,003.1105

Dear Mr. Cahill:

This letter serves as my response to Nicholas J. Mundy's complaint. Mr. Mundy's complaint does not – and cannot – specify a single disciplinary rule or other regulation that I allegedly violated.

The real reason for his “complaint” is that his firm, and he personally, are defendants in a R.I.C.O. action that I filed in federal court on April 18, 2003. The R.I.C.O. complaint alleges a Russian-New York enterprise that violates R.I.C.O. and numerous other laws. The enterprise brings prostitutes to New York and other states in the U.S.A., passes drugs and huge sums of money back and forth between the countries, creates and traffics in pornography, and threatens physical violence to anyone who might get in the way. A central member and site of the enterprise's illegal actions is the establishment called “Flash Dancers Topless Club,” located on Broadway and 52d Street in New York City. In addition, the enterprise often acts in other countries where there is a link of some kind, such as a connection to a brothel in Cyprus that some defendants control, or to specific participants in the enterprise traveling in other places.

Unfortunately for me, one of the aims of the enterprise was for prostitutes in Moscow to deceive American businessmen into marrying them so that the prostitutes could gain legal entry into the U.S.A. I was one of the deceived husbands. In total – and naïve – good faith, I married Ms. Shipilina shortly before I returned to the U.S.A. from my Moscow consultancy with a large American company.

When we returned to the U.S.A., shortly thereafter, my “wife” immediately joined her cohorts in prostitution, working out of “Flash Dancers Topless Club,” tried to engage me in criminal activity, drugged my food to deter me from seeking an annulment or divorce, and threatened me with violence from her Russian associates once I sought an annulment/divorce.

I learned my “wife” worked as a prostitute and was using me for immigration purposes after translating a portion of her diary, which she kept in plain sight. When the annulment/divorce action commenced, I began searching in Russia for information and witnesses relevant to the court proceeding. My investigation discovered, among other culpable conduct, that she had created a pornographic video with very graphic acts and advertised her sexual services via naked photographs. In one case, there is direct evidence that she sold these naked photographs to a man for 10 Cypriot pounds after performing sexual acts on him when she worked in Cyprus for the brothel “Zygos”. The pornographic video, which was imported into America, was produced by a California doctor and Ms. Shipilina's Moscow procurer. The clips from the video that comprise the CD Rom are used to advertise the services sold by Ms. Shipilina's Moscow procurer.

Ms. Shipilina's own representative, Mr. Mundy, hypocritically criticizes the use of these photographs, CD and a portion of her diary that were employed in an attempt to discover even more evidence of her fraud on me and her criminal activities. The Russian language web site was created as a means to find new Russian witnesses, acquire additional information and communicate the truth to potential witnesses and informants after previously forthcoming witnesses and individuals with useful information were being threatened into silence. The web site contained only a small sampling of Ms. Shipilina's widely offered pornographic services and extensive criminal exploits. After a period of time, the web site was closed when it no longer produced evidence.

My investigation disclosed not only marriage fraud but also fraud on the Immigration and Naturalization Service, fraud on the U.S. Department of State, prostitution, pornography, drug smuggling, money laundering and other criminal conduct. As a result, unidentified men have called me by telephone to threaten my physical safety if I pursue my rights in the courts; I even have tape recordings of some of those telephone calls.

Mr. Mundy and his firm participate as full principals in some of this illegal conduct. Among other acts alleged in the R.I.C.O. complaint, and as described below, a firm employee, while I was in the firm's offices, urged me to lie to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which I would not do.

Ultimately, I filed the R.I.C.O. complaint, asking for an injunctive order of protection for myself, together with damages and costs. That complaint was sent by mail to Mr. Mundy on April 21; his April 23 complaint to this body followed—two days later. Obviously he is not only trying to deter my use of the legal system by claiming that the filing of a R.I.C.O. complaint is evidence of unfitness to practice law, but he is also attempting to thwart the purpose of Congress in enacting the civil R.I.C.O. statute: “Those who have been wronged by organized crime should at least be given access to a legal remedy.” Congressional hearings quoted in Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 487, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3280 (1985). Mr. Mundy is attempting to deny me access to a legal remedy by filing unproven and unfounded allegations with this Committee.

Mr. Mundy's “urgent request” to have this Committee censure or suspend me from practicing law is aimed at denying me the right to earn a living, and intends to allow Mr. Mundy to use character assassination in an effort to distract the federal court from the merits of the case. A unique R.I.C.O. defense, but that is Mr. Mundy's strategy: throw enough mud and maybe some will stick; make enough misrepresentations and maybe some will be believed.

The federal court will provide defendant Mundy the opportunity to refute the detailed allegations of the R.I.C.O. complaint where the trier of fact, and not he, will decide whether his characterizations of the complaint hold any merit.

On the whole, Mr. Mundy's complaint to this Committee is very general name-calling, but there are a number of false statements based on half-truths and deceptions, some of which, in their own right, may constitute mail fraud under the R.I.C.O. statute.

Page 1, paragraph 3. Mr. Mundy falsely states that our prior dealings began with my commencing a divorce and annulment action in June 2001. As stated in my July 10, 2002 disciplinary complaint against a Russian lawyer, who was not licensed to practice law but was doing so anyway while working for Mr. Mundy, our dealings began on October 30, 2000. See Exhibit A. On that date Ms. Shipilina, a Russian alien who grew up in Chechnya, and I met with the Russian lawyer for advice on separating. The Russian lawyer, after consulting with Mr. Mundy, suggested that the two of us lie to the Immigration and Naturalization Service (“I.N.S.”) about the date of our separation and that I lie to the I.N.S. in an affidavit to help obtain Ms. Shipilina a green card.

Other dealings with Mr. Mundy's office prior to June 2001 involved Ms. Shipilina filing for a temporary order of protection against me on January 31, 2001 in which she lied to the court. Five days later, Mr. Mundy sent me a letter stating that if I did not respond within seven days, he would commence “difficult” divorce proceedings against me. See Exhibit B. On advice of counsel, I commenced a divorce and annulment action on February 13, 2001. See Exhibit C. Then in March 2001, Mr. Mundy lied to my attorney in an effort to coerce me into a settlement by saying he possessed medical records showing I had repeatedly battered my wife. This is contained in my December 21, 2001 disciplinary complaint against Mr. Mundy, see Exhibit D, and my October 26, 2002 request for reconsideration of this Committee's decision, see Exhibit E.

Page 1, paragraph 4. Mr. Mundy appears to allege that the complaint filed in my divorce and annulment action is grounds for this Committee's sanctions. If he believes that, then logically he should file a disciplinary complaint against my lawyers who prepared the complaint. But, on information and belief, he has not, since it is my constitutional rights that Mr. Mundy wants to chill through state action and not those of my divorce lawyers.

Page 2, paragraph 2. I had consulted with an attorney friend on the advice given by the Kuba, Mundy & Associates law firm that I lie in an affidavit to the I.N.S. In no uncertain terms, my friend confirmed that my decision not to lie was the only acceptable course of action. I then notified Ms. Shipilina that I would not lie for her to the I.N.S. and subsequently she filed a false police report—not a complaint—with 114th Police Precinct. She declined to press charges at the time of filing. The report was most likely intended to create a false record by which Mr. Mundy could pressure me into lying before the I.N.S. in order to obtain his client a green card. See July 10, 2002, Disciplinary Complaint, Exhibit A.

Page 2, paragraph 3. I agreed to settle the annulment/divorce action as a direct result of a threatening telephone call I received in October 2001 from an individual calling himself John Madison. The caller said he was telephoning on behalf of my “soon to be ex-wife, Angelina.” Ms. Shipilina uses the name Angelina when she strips at Flash Dancers Topless Club. I felt extremely threatened and decided not to take any chances with my physical safety.

If this Committee wishes, I can provide a tape of the threatening telephone call, a copy of which Mr. Mundy also possesses.

Page 2, paragraph 4. In an action for reformation of a divorce settlement that essentially requests damages for emotional distress, could anything demonstrate emotional distress more effectively than a man discovering that the woman he loved and cherished was, and apparently continued to be, a porn star who had deceived him into marriage so that she could ply her wares in a hard currency market? I don’t think so.

Mr. Mundy makes unspecified references to the motion for reformation as “outlandish, baseless and downright insulting.” If he would indicate the allegations to which he objects and why, rather than engaging in vituperative generalizations and asking this Committee to do his work by determining the sections that Mr. Mundy is referring to, then as required by your cover letter, I will provide specific responses.

Page 2, paragraph 5. Mr. Mundy omits that the action to obtain an order of protection in March 2002 occurred after two more threatening telephone calls were made by a man who sounded like the John Madison from the first menacing call in October 2001. In these two other calls, the man referred to himself as John Pierre, and once again said he was calling on behalf of Angelina. The purpose of these terrorizing calls was primarily to prevent me from providing information to the I.N.S. concerning Ms. Shipilina’s fraud on the I.N.S. and U.S. State Department in obtaining an immigrant visa.

After a February 2002 call, I filed a complaint with the 13th Police Precinct. The Federal Bureau of Investigation (“F.B.I.”) did start a preliminary investigation and apparently identified the man making the threats, but the F.B.I. agents refused to tell me his name. One of the agents, however, did tell me that the F.B.I. decided not to interview the man for fear he might cause me harm. Then in March 2002 I received another threatening call, and I filed for an order of protection in the Family Court. Unfortunately, the judge refused to grant me a discovery subpoena for telephone records that would have led to identifying the man making the threats and enable me through the discovery process to link that man with Ms. Shipilina.

If this Committee wishes, I can provide a tape of the February menacing call, a copy of which Mr. Mundy also possesses.

Page 2, paragraph 6. Mr. Mundy fails to mention my request for reconsideration of this Committee’s decision and the making of an additional complaint on October 26, 2002. See Exhibit E. Mr. Mundy claims the case is closed, but recently I received a card from this Committee stating that my request for reconsideration has been granted. See Exhibit F.

My request for reconsideration was based on this Committee not addressing the allegation that Mr. Mundy falsely told my divorce attorney that he possessed medical records showing I repeatedly beat my wife. Since no such records existed, Mr. Mundy’s statement violated DR 1-102[1200.3] for engaging in deceit and misrepresentation.

In addition, Mr. Mundy’s statement about records of wife beating constituted coercion in the second degree, N.Y. Penal 135.60, since the clear implication was that unless I settled the case on terms agreeable to his client, I would be accused of battery and face contempt or ridicule, or harm to my business, calling, career, financial condition or personal relationships by publication of that false statement. Furthermore, at the time of Mr. Mundy’s misrepresentation, which instilled fear in me, others had made no previous publication of such charges. See Exhibit E.

Page 3, paragraph 1. Mr. Mundy, who apparently didn't read the R.I.C.O. complaint, fails to state that the federal action includes the cause of action filed in the New York State Supreme Court. They are not two distinct lawsuits. The New York State court case was commenced by a "summons with notice" for procedural purposes and contains only one cause of action. This cause of action is included in the R.I.C.O. complaint and will most likely be removed to the federal court under that court's pendent jurisdiction.

Mr. Mundy argues against my right to file a federal R.I.C.O. complaint that was based on detailed and deep research, and which was drafted with the assistance of a very well-respected attorney. Mr. Mundy's argument, though, is only a set of sweeping generalizations that even claim that certain notorious Russian criminals are innocent victims.

If Mr. Mundy is concerned with the substance, length and perhaps even the weight of the R.I.C.O. complaint, it would appear to be more appropriate to take such matters up with the federal court rather than attempting to use this Committee as a surrogate for federal procedure.

Mr. Mundy goes so far as to request this Committee "to assist in any way possible in putting an end to Mr. Den Hollander's actionable conduct," which, in substance, is an attempt to misuse this Committee to deny me of my civil right to bring a R.I.C.O. suit. Before all the defendants have even been served, Mr. Mundy's strategy is clear: use this Committee to pressure me into withdrawing the federal claim.

In conclusion, Mr. Mundy seeks to have this Committee punish me for exercising my civil rights as a threatened and aggrieved individual. Mr. Mundy does not cite any ethical canons or disciplinary rules that I allegedly violated. Instead, he resorts to castigating me as mentally unfit to exercise my rights because while experiencing a terrible situation, in part, intentionally created by Mr. Mundy, I sought temporary, appropriate medical help.

I thank this Committee for reviewing my answer. Please contact me if any additional information is required.

Very truly yours,

Roy Den Hollander

Re: Complaint of Nicholas J. Mundy, Esq.
Docket No. 2003.1105

Dear Mr. Den Hollander:

As you know, there is pending litigation concerning the same or related facts which have been alleged here. We have found that a judicial resolution of such matters is helpful to the Committee. Accordingly, we have decided to close our investigation at this time.

The Committee arrived at this determination after the case was submitted to a member of the Committee, an independent board of lawyers and non-lawyers appointed by the Appellate Division, First Judicial Department. The Committee member concluded that we should await the conclusion of the litigation. We request, however, that you inform the Committee of any court decision or other event which should bear on our consideration of your professional conduct. Thank you for your anticipated cooperation.

Very truly yours,

1 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

2           These are continued removal proceedings in New York
3 City, in the case of Alina Shipilina, A 47 202 363. The date is 4 May 25th, 2007, Immigration Judge Paul A. DeFonzo presiding. The 5 respondent is present in court today, with counsel, Jack Sachs,
6 Esquire. For the Service, Khalilah Taylor, Esquire, Assistant 7 Chief Counsel. We've been waiting the presentation of proof of 8 the respondent filing a waiver of the requirement to file a joint 9 petition.

10 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

11           Q.   Where do we stand, Mr. Sachs?

12           A.   I'm sorry Judge, I wasn't given that information.

13           Q.   Well --

14           A.   About the waiver, otherwise, I certainly had 15 plenty of time to do that.

16           Q.   The District Director issued a decision denying a 17 good faith waiver application. We were to decide if she was to 18 apply for a waiver based on hardship. If so, you were to give me 19 proof of filing, if not, you were to give me a duplicate original 20 or a copy of supporting documents so that I could then consider 21 the good faith waiver application. How are you seeking to 22 proceed?

23           A.   Well Judge, I could file it Monday. I mean, 24 it's --

25           Q.   Well what relief are you seeking?

1 A. The adjudication of the I-751.

2 Q. Well, the I-751 has previously been denied by the 3 District Director, is that correct?

4 A. Right, yes, Judge.

5 Q. So are you seeking to file a hardship waiver in 6 this case or not?

7 A. I guess, if that's what's necessary.

8 Q. I'm not asking.

9 A. No, no, no, yes, Judge.

10 Q. I want to know what your strategy is in this case.

11 I mean, you were here on this case in July of last year, it's now 12 May of 2007.

13 A. Yes, Judge.

14 Q. Are you giving me here a duplicate of her good 15 faith waiver application?

16 A. No, I haven't made it yet, Judge.

17 Q. From July of 2006? I'd like to know why.

18 A. Well, I don't know if I can get it, there isn't a 19 good reason, Judge, it wasn't done.

20 Q. Well what materials are you giving me today?

21 A. The materials concerning the relationship of what 22 happened with her. The hardship waiver can be filed, my 23 apologies to the Court, Judge, either later today or even Monday.

24 Q. Well I'm not waiting for that, I'm going to 25 consider that your right to submit that application has been

pmp

1 waived. So these materials that you're giving me today, are 2 these materials in support of the application for a good faith
3 relationship?

4 A. Yes, Judge.

5 Q. Are the parties divorced?

6 A. Yes, Judge. I believe there was a huge file and I 7 don't what's in the file here, but --

8 Q. Well I haven't had a chance to see nothing in this 9 file. Whatever you submitted --

10 A. The prior attorney --

11 Q. Or whatever was submitted to the Immigration 12 authorities, I do not have, that is, they have to be submitted to 13 me by someone. Is there an I-751 in this packet that you have 14 given me today?

15 A. Judge, all that stuff was in the original file, 16 Judge.

17 Q. Yes, but that has no bearing on what I am doing.
18 It is your responsibility to get me those materials, as you are 19 the one seeking the relief from removal. I can give you until 1 20 o'clock today to give me the I-751. If I do not get it, I will 21 be denying that application today.

22 A. Okay.

23 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

24 Q. Is this going to be a hardship waiver?

25 A. I understand that it's supposed to be a good faith

pmp

1 marriage waiver.

2 Q. I think that was denied initially. She initially
3 filed a good faith marriage.

4 A. Well that's fine, but she can then renew that 5 application before me.

6 Q. That's what I'm asking, is she renewing it or is 7 she going to file a new one based on a separate ground.

8 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

9 Q. Well, she's renewing it before the Judge.

10 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

11 Q. Okay.

12 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

13 Q. All right, so I need the I-751. I was presented 14 with a packet today.

15 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

16 Q. Do you have that, Ms. Taylor?

17 A. Yes, I do.

18 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

19 That will be Group 3 for identification.

20 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

21 Q. I'll put on you second call. Please come back by 22 1 o'clock with the I-571.

23 A. I will, Your Honor.

3 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

4 Back on the record in the case of Alina Shipilina, A 47
5 202 363. It's still May 25th, 2007, counsel has returned with 6 the respondent. Ms. Taylor continues to be present.

7 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

8 Q. What do you have there, Mr. Sachs?

9 A. Your Honor.

10 Q. Thank you. Presented with an I-751 and supporting 11 documents, including a receipt for an I-751.

12 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

13 Q. Do you have those materials Ms. Taylor?

14 A. Yes, Your Honor.

15 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

16 Group 4, for identification.

17 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

18 Q. Are you ready to go do trial, Mr. Sachs?

19 A. Yes, Judge.

20 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

21 Q. I have to stay with this, so a Monday, Tuesday or 22 a Thursday.

23 A. Is good?

24 Q. Is good.

25 A. All right.

1 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

2 Q. How about January 8th at 3 o'clock. Is that a 3 good date for you?

4 A. Just one second Judge, it sounds good to me.

5 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

6 Q. What day of the week is that?

7 A. That's a Tuesday.

8 Q. No, that's not good, I have another continued
9 case.

10 A. All right.

11 Q. Maybe the following Tuesday?

12 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

13 Q. It looks like I have nothing in January, so any 14 day.

15 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

16 Q. All right, how about the 22nd at 3:00, Ms. Taylor?

17 A. What day of the week is that?

18 Q. Also a Tuesday.

19 A. Okay.

20 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

21 Q. Hearing notice for January 22nd, 2008, at 3 22 o'clock.

23 A. At 3 o'clock.

24 MS. TAYLOR TO MR. SACHS

25 Q. You gave me two copies.

pp

1 A. Sorry?

2 Q. You gave me two copies.

3 A. Sorry.

4 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

5 Q. Ma'am, you speak English, correct?

6 A. Yes.

7 Q. Going to give you a hearing notice to come back
8 for your trial on January 22nd at 3 o'clock. It's important that 9 you return to court on that date. If you don't return to court, 10 I may have to go ahead in this case without you. If that 11 happens, I may have to order you deported because you are not 12 present. Understand?

13 A. Yes, I do.

14 Q. I'm also going to give you a written sheet of 15 warnings which repeat the warnings I have just made to you about 16 the consequences of not appearing to court when you are supposed 17 to. If you have any questions about any of that, you can discuss 18 it with your lawyer. Are you continuing to reside on, I can't 19 read this that well, 34th Street in Astoria?

20 A. Yes, that's correct.

21 Q. All right.

22 JUDGE TO COUNSEL

23 Q. Both parties will continue to have the opportunity 24 to supplement the application with additional information or 25 documentation. Any such materials should be submitted no later

1 than 10 days prior to the hearing date. If you do anticipate 2 presenting any witnesses in support of the claim in addition to 3 the respondent, please provide the Court with a witness list no
4 later than 10 days prior to the hearing date identifying the 5 witness or witnesses, together with their status in this country
6 and A number, if applicable, their residence in this country in a 7 brief proper.

8 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

9 Q. Ms. Taylor, will the Service initiate database
10 checks?

11 A. Yes, I'm going to give a BUCKS slip for 12 fingerprints.

13 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

14 Q. Your client must appear for a biometric scan 15 appointment at the appropriate time. If she fails to do so, I 16 may have to deny her application for failure to prosecute. Will 17 you convey those instructions to her?

18 A. Yes, Your Honor.

19 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

20 I will be denying the hardship waiver effective today, 21 for failure to prosecute. We'll be proceeding on the basis of 22 the good faith waive.

23 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

24 Q. Anything else from the respondent today?

25 A. No, Your Honor.

1 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

2 Q. Ms. Taylor?

3 A. Yes, I'm giving a BUCKS slip for fingerprints.

4 Q. So noted.

1 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

2           These are continued removal proceedings in New York
3 City, in the case of Alina Shipilina, A 47 202 363. The date is 4 January 22nd, 2008, Immigration Judge Paul A. DeFonzo presiding.
5 The respondent is present in court today, with counsel.

6 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

7           Q.   Ma'am, do you speak English?

8           A.   Yes.

9           Q.   Please stand up and raise your right hand. Do you 10 swear that the testimony that you give today will be the truth, 11 the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

12          A.   Yes.

13          Q.   Thank you, please take a seat on the end. Ma'am, 14 are you fluent in English?

15          A.   Yes.

16          Q.   Are you continuing to reside on 34th Street in 17 Astoria?

18 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

19          Q.   Excuse me, Judge.

20          A.   She answered yes?

21 MS. SHIPILINA TO JUDGE

22          Q.   Not much.

23          A.   I'm sorry?

24          Q.   It's not much, (indiscernible) in Russian.

25          A.   Well I asked if you were fluent in English, you

1 said yes. Are you not fluent in English?

2 Q. I'm not fluent in English.

3 A. When you previously appeared in court in this case
4 in July of 2006, you did indicate to me that you believed you
5 could proceed in English. Do you still believe you can proceed 6 in English, or do you require a Russian interpreter?

7 Q. I'll do my best to --

8 A. Well that's not what I'm asking you, since your 9 best may be inadequate. Do you believe you can proceed with your 10 trial which is today, in the English language, or do you require 11 a Russian interpreter?

12 Q. I do English.

13 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

14 The charging document in this case is a Notice To 15 Appear, dated June 22nd, 2006, previously been marked into the 16 record as Exhibit 1. Factual allegations have previously been 17 admitted. Removability has previously been conceded.

18 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

19 Q. Are you continuing to reside on 34th Street in 20 Astoria?

21 A. Yes.

22 Q. Are you working?

23 A. Yes.

24 Q. Where do you work?

25 A. I'm self-employed.

pmp

1 Q. What do you do?

2 A. I work as a model and entertainer.

3 Q. And where do you do that?

4 A. Where?

5 Q. Yes.

6 A. Modeling jobs, I do catalogue, runway. As

7 entertain, I do it at trade shows, promotional works.

8 Q. Do you do them in New York or do you do them

9 elsewhere?

10 A. I do New York mostly, Judge.

11 Q. The gentleman seated across from you, is he still 12 your attorney, authorized to speak for you?

13 A. Yeah.

14 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

15 For the respondent, Jack Sachs, Esquire. For the 16 Service, Khalilah Taylor, Esquire, Assistant Chief Counsel.

17 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

18 Q. Mr. Sachs, when we were last together on this on a 19 master calendar in May of last year, you then indicated the 20 respondent would be seeking a waiver of the requirement to file a 21 joint petition based on the good faith of her marriage. Is she 22 continuing to seek that relief today?

23 A. Yes, Judge.

24 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

25 Also presented in this case is a packet marked Group 2

1 for identification, from the Service. Initially consisting of a 2 copy of an I-551 for the respondent.

3 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

4 Q. Is there any objection to that, Mr. Sachs?

5 A. Your Honor, there's so much in this, I don't know
6 if I, I just have to refresh my recollection of it.

7 Q. That was presented at master calendar on July 8 14th, 2006.

9 A. No, then I, no.

10 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

11 That will be Exhibit 2-A. Also contained in that 12 packet is a copy of a visa face for the respondent.

13 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

14 Q. Any objection to that?

15 A. No, Your Honor.

16 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

17 Two B, and the last item contained in that packet is 18 the notice terminating the respondent's conditional resident 19 status from the District Director in New York. That notice is 20 dated October 1st, 2004.

21 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

22 Q. Any objection to that?

23 A. No, Judge, no, Your Honor.

24 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

25 That will be 2-C. That concludes that packet. I have mp

1 some submissions from the respondent in this case. A packet
2 previously marked as 3, for identification, initially consisting 3 of what is described as a stipulation of settlement referencing
4 the respondent and Roy Dean Hollinder, dated November 4, <sup>00</sup>2991.

5 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

6 Q. Do you have any objection to that, Ms. Taylor?

7 A. No, Judge.

8 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

9 Three A. A letter dated February 2nd, 2006, from the 10 Falcon Private Investigators.

11 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

12 Q. Any objection to that?

13 A. I'm not sure if the examiner is available for 14 cross-examination.

15 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

16 Q. Is he available, Mr. Sachs?

17 A. Not today.

18 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

19 Sustained as to the unavailability of the author for 20 cross-examination. That will be 3-B for identification. There 21 appears to be a statement of qualification and curriculum vitae 22 for the author of the report. That will be considered part of 23 3-B for identification. A letter from the State of Connecticut, 24 dated March 3rd, 2004, again, referencing the author as a court.
25 That will again be considered part of 3-B for identification. At 1 tab 3, I have the psycho-social assessment referencing the 2 respondent, offered by a social worker, Nancy Kahn. My copy of 3 that assessment is not signed.

4 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

5 Q. Is your copy signed, Ms. Taylor?

6 A. No, it's not.

7 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

8 Q. Do you have a signed copy, Mr. --

9 A. Yes, I do, Judge.

10 Q. Sachs?

11 A. Yes, I do. Once second, let me just look for it, 12 I have it here.

13 Q. We'll go off the record while you look for it.

14 A. Thank you, Judge.

15 (OFF THE RECORD)

16 (ON THE RECORD)

17 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

18 Mr. Sachs has provided the Court with a signed copy of 19 the report. I've provided a courtesy copy of the entire signed 20 copy to both the Court's record of proceedings, as well as to the 21 parties.

22 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

23 Q. Any objection to that, Ms. Taylor?

24 A. I'm not sure if Ms. Kahn is available for cross-25 examination one, two, relevance because the son is substance of

1 this report, indicates that the respondent was a battered woman
2 and subjected to domestic violence. This is a waiver based on 3 the good faith of her marriage, not based on any battery or 4 extreme cruelty.

5 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

6 Q. Is the author available, Mr. Sachs?

7 A. Well I spoke to her and she didn't think she could 8 make it today. She could be available at a future -- I had 9 anticipated that and did speak to her, but her schedule wouldn't 10 permit that.

11 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

12 I'll sustain the objection as to her unavailability for 13 cross-examination. So note Ms. Taylor's remarks as to the 14 respective relevancy of the report. That will be 3-C for 15 identification. Document described as a personal and business 16 management agreement, referencing the respondent.

17 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

18 Q. Any objection to that?

19 A. Relevance, and it's not signed by any party.

20 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

21 Q. Do we have a signed copy of this, Mr. Sachs?

22 A. No, we don't, Judge. That's the one with the 23 hearts on it.

24 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

25 Well, I'll admit it into the record, but it's difficult

1 for me to give it any probative value as evidence in the case due
2 to the fact that it's unsigned. Mark it 3-D into the record. A 3 statement from Enessa Alexandrovna Shipilina (phonetic sp.).

4 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

5 Q. Any objection to that?

6 A. Just note it's not notarized or sworn to.

7 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

8 Nevertheless, I'll give it the weight I fell it 9 deserves, given the totality of the evidence in the case. That 10 will be 3-E. Statement from Demetri Morisal (phonetic sp.).

11 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

12 Q. Same position as to that?

13 A. Same objection, Judge.

14 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

15 Again, I'll overrule the objection, giving it the 16 weight that I feel it deserves given the totality of the evidence 17 in the case. That will be 3-F. That concludes that packet. I
18 have an additional submission from the respondent, previously 19 marked Group 4 for identification. Initially, consisting of an 20 I-751 bearing a date of 05-21-02. That will be Exhibit 4-A. I
21 have a receipt from the Regional Service Center in Saint Albans, 22 Vermont. I appear to have the original. That will be 4-B. A 23 letter from the Citizenship and Immigration Services, May 24th, 24 2004.

25 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

*V. H. W. A.
W. H. W. A.
H. W. A. T. N.*

1 Q. Any objection to that, Ms. Taylor?

2 A. No.

3 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

4 Four C. Divorce decree, referencing the respondent.

5 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

6 Q. Any objection to that?

7 A. No, Judge.

8 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

9 Four D, and it appears to be a letter which is 10 presented in some manner of chronological form.

11 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

12 Q. Any objection to that?

13 A. No original Judge, and I'm not sure where it's 14 taken from.

15 Q. I'm sorry, you're not sure?

16 A. Where it's taken from.

17 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

18 Q. Do we have an original, Mr. Sachs?

19 A. I thought I had. That's the letter from?

20 Q. Signed with love, Roy. My copy of the original 21 looks like this, two pages. We're off the record while you look 22 for it.

23 (OFF THE RECORD)

24 (ON THE RECORD)

25 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

1 Q. Mr. Sachs, have you been able to locate an 2 original for that letter?

3 A. No, Your Honor.

4 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

5 Q. What say you, as to the copy, Ms. Taylor?

6 A. Same object, Judge.

7 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

8 Sustained for lack of the original. That will be 4-E 9 for identification.

10 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

11 Q. Well, should you locate the original before the 12 conclusion of the hearing, you can bring that to my attention.

13 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

14 I have an additional submission today from the 15 respondent, a packet tabbed 1 through 6.

16 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

17 Q. Do you have that, Ms. Taylor?

18 A. Yes, I do, Judge.

19 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

20 It will be Group 5, for identification.

21 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

22 Q. Would you like an opportunity to review it?

23 A. Yes, Judge.

24 Q. Go off the record while you do that.

25 (OFF THE RECORD)

(ON THE RECORD)

2

JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

3

Q. Referring to the Group 5 packet, initially I have an affidavit from the respondent. Any objection to that?

5

A. Timeliness, Judge.

6

7

Well, as the respondent is present in court today to be subjected to cross-examination with regard to that document, and it's only a 2-page document, I'll overrule the objection as to timeliness with regard to that. Mark it 5-A. Another copy of the correspondence from the District Director in New York, dated October 1st, 2004, previously marked 2-C. A decision and order with regard to the divorce action.

MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

Q. That's the signed copy, right?

22

A. This copy is signed, but it's a photocopy, but it's the same copy that you presented earlier.

23

24

25

A summons and complaint referencing Roy Dean Hollinder

1 as plaintiff.

2 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

3 Q. What say you as to that?

4 A. Relevance, timeliness, and I haven't had a full 5 opportunity to read over some of it.

6 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

7 Q. This is a substantial submission, is there any 8 special reason why it was not submitted within the 10-day
9 submission deadline, Mr. Sachs?

10 A. No, I don't have a (indiscernible), Your Honor.

11 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

12 Sustain the objection after the untimeliness of the 13 submission, 5-C for identification. An order from the 2nd 14 Circuit Court of Appeals referencing Roy Dean Hollinder as 15 plaintiff, appellant.

16 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

17 Q. What say you as to that, Ms. Taylor?

18 A. Again, timeliness, Judge.

19 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

20 Q. Any special reason why that was not submitted 21 within the submission deadline that I provided, Mr. Sachs?

22 A. No, Judge.

23 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

24 Sustained, as to untimeliness, would appear to relate 25 to the lengthy summons and complaint marked 5-C for 1 identification. Mark the order, 5-D for identification.

2 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

3 Q. Is there anything additional in terms of
4 documentary evidence from the respondent today, Mr. Sachs?

5 A. No, Your Honor.

6 Q. While off the record, you had indicated that you
7 may have an original copy of the letter marked 4-E for 8 identification?

9 A. I had it in my hand a minute ago, Judge.

10 Q. Well while you're looking for that --

11 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

12 Q. Ms. Taylor, is there anything additional in terms
13 of documentary evidence from the Service today?

14 A. No, Judge.

15 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

16 Q. We'll go off the record while you look for it.

17 (OFF THE RECORD)

18 (ON THE RECORD)

19 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

20 Mr. Sachs has presented a copy of the translation.
21 Note that the translation does state at the top, translated from 22 Russian, then parenthetically this text had been prior translated 23 from English, however what has been presented to me does appear 24 to be in the nature of a photocopy. There is no signature in any 25 event, says With Love, Roy at the end and typewritten.

1 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

2 Q. Well the Russian that is translated Judge, has his 3 name typed on it.

4 A. Well again, parenthetically it says this text had 5 been prior translated from English, which leads me to believe 6 that the original of the document was supposed to be in English, 7 but this document is completely typewritten and in fact, does 8 appear to be a photocopy, looking at the translation stamp which 9 is affixed thereto.

10 Q. That's the question I have, the way I put it to 11 the other Judge is that he wrote a letter, gave it to someone to 12 put into Russian, which is here, and then had this translated 13 into English.

14 A. Well where is the letter that he wrote, that is 15 the question?

16 Q. That's something that nobody knows.

17 A. Well in the absence of that original, I do feel 18 compelled to sustain the objection as to lack of the original.

19 Q. Okay.

20 A. Well how are we seeking to proceed today, Mr.
21 Sachs? I have sustained objections to some portion of your 22 documentary evidence including the report from the detective. I 23 don't know to what degree you are seeking to rely on the report.
24 I'll also sustain the objection to the psycho-social report which 25 Ms. Taylor believes also may have relevancy issues. Do you wish

1 to proceed in the absence of those materials?

2 Q. Yes, Judge.

3 A. Or would you like an opportunity to discuss with 4 your client if she would like an opportunity to have those 5 individuals made available.

6 Q. Yeah, the (indiscernible) May I have a moment?

7 A. Go off the record while you do that.

8 Q. Thank you.

9 (OFF THE RECORD)

10 (ON THE RECORD)

11 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

12 We're back on the record. While off the record, Mr.
13 Sachs has inquired as to where I might be adjourning this case.
14 I do have an opening for March 20th at 9 o'clock.

15 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

16 Q. In view of that, would you seeking to proceed 17 today in the absence of the excluded evidence, Mr. Sachs, or 18 would you be interested in having the case adjourned?

19 A. I would be interested in having the case
20 adjourned, and I would request at this time, with enough time, 21 that there be a Russian interpreter next time.

22 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

23 Q. Ms. Taylor, what's the Service's position?

24 A. No objection, Judge.

25 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

1 In view of the unopposed nature of the adjournment
2 request and a consideration of the fact there is a first time,
3 the case has been scheduled to the merits calendar. I will 4 adjourn the case to March 20th, 2008, at 9 o'clock.

5 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

6 Q. Ma'am, I'm going to adjourn your case to March 7 20th at 9 o'clock, in view of the fact that your attorney has 8 some interest in an adjournment. Since I have been compelled to 9 exclude various items of your documentary evidence today. I'm 10 going to give you a new hearing notice for March 20th, at 9
11 o'clock. It's important that you return to court at that time.
12 If you don't, we may have to go ahead in this case without you.
13 If that happens, we may have to order you deported because you 14 are not here. Do you understand?

15 A. I understand.

16 Q. In addition to your new hearing notice, I'm also 17 going to give you a written sheet of warnings which repeats the 18 warnings I have just made to you concerning the consequences of 19 not returning to court when you are supposed to. If you have any 20 questions about any of that, you should discuss it with your 21 lawyer.

22 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

23 Q. Does the Service have any objection to the 24 perspective witnesses appear telephonically in this case?

25 A. No, Judge.

1 Q. So noted, and that would apply to the social 2 worker as well as to the preparer of the polygraph report?

3 A. That's fine.

4 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

5 Q. If you do anticipate presenting any additional 6 witnesses in the case besides those two, they would be expected
7 to appear in person unless you have previously cleared with Ms.
8 Taylor that they may also appear telephonically.

9 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

10 Both parties will continue to have the opportunity to 11 supplement the application with additional information or 12 documentation. Any such materials should also be submitted no 13 later than 10 days prior to the hearing date.

14 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

15 Q. There is a (indiscernible) and understandably so,
16 Judge, since it's put over until March 20th, can I grandfather
17 these things that were excluded today, or should I resubmit them?

18 A. If you're referring to 5-C and 5-D_for 19 identification, there were two objections to those based first on 20 timeliness. Naturally, that objection would be cured upon the 21 next hearing date. As to the relevance objection, I would most 22 likely just have to sustain that objection of connection 23 depending on the contents of those materials. But certainly, the 24 untimeliness objection as to those would be overruled in view of 25 the fact that more than 10 days would have elapsed from their

1 original date of submission which was today, until the next
2 hearing date.

3 Q. Well that's fine, Judge, and I believe I could 4 develop the relevancy to both, Your Honor, to Ms. Taylor's 5 satisfaction.

6 A. All right, well you'll have the opportunity to do
7 that at the merits hearing.

8 Q. Yes, Judge.

9 A. As to the remaining item of excluded evidence, the 10 letter, it is, of course, in your interest to try to locate the 11 original of that, if you would like the Court to consider it.

12 Q. Yes, Judge.

13 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

14 Q. Then Ms. Taylor, where do we stand with the checks 15 at this time?

16 A. Her prints will still be good the next hearing 17 date.

18 Q. Thank you.

19 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

20 Q. Anything else from the respondent today?

21 A. No, Your Honor.

22 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

23 Q. Ms. Taylor?

24 A. No, Judge.

25 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

1 The hearing is adjourned.

1 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

2           These are continued removal proceedings in New York
3 City, in the case of Alina Shipilina, A 47 202 363. The date is 4 March 20th, 2008, Immigration Judge Paul A. DeFonzo presiding.
5 The respondent is present in court today, with counsel. Also 6 present is an interpreter in the Russian language, Edward Bot 7 (phonetic sp.).

8 JUDGE TO INTERPRETER

9           Q. Mr. Bot, would you please stand up and raise your 10 right hand. Do you swear that the interpretation you perform
11 today from the English to Russian and Russian to English 12 languages will be true and accurate to the best of your ability?

13           A. I do.

14           Q. Thank you, please be seated.

15           A. Thank you.

16           Q. You're welcome. Would you please ask the 17 respondent to stand up and to raise her right hand.

18 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

19           Q. Ma'am, do you swear that the testimony that you 20 give today will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but 21 the truth, so help you God?

22           A. Yes.

23           Q. Thank you, please be seated. Ma'am, can you 24 understand the Russian being spoken by the interpreter?

25           A. Yes.

map

1 Q. Russian your best language?

2 A. Yes.

3 Q. You're residing on 34th Street in Astoria?

4 A. Yes.

5 Q. Are you working?

6 A. Yes.

7 Q. Where?

8 A. I work as a model, I do promotions and 9 conventions.

10 Q. The gentleman seated across you, is he still your 11 attorney authorized to speak for you?

12 A. Yes.

13 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

14 For the respondent, Jack Sachs, Esquire. For the 15 Service, Khalilah Taylor, Esquire, Assistant Chief Counsel. We 16 were last together on this case on the individual calendar in 17 January. At that time, the case was adjourned to allow the 18 respondent an opportunity to arrange for the presentation of 19 witnesses. It had previously been represented that the 20 respondent would be seeking to renew her application for a good 21 faith waiver of the joint petition requirement pursuant to 22 Section 216.

23 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

24 Q. Is that the relief she's continuing to seek, Mr.
25 Sachs?

map

1 A. Yes, Your Honor.

2 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

3 Charging document in this case is the Notice To Appear,
4 dated June 22nd, 2006, previously marked Exhibit 1. Factual
5 allegations have previously been admitted, removability has 6 previously been conceded. I have a packet from the Service
7 previously marked Group 2, consisting of a copy of the front of 8 an I-551 for the respondent marked Exhibit 2-A, a visa face for 9 the respondent marked Exhibit 2-B, correspondence from the 10 Department of Homeland Security dated August 1st, 2004, 11 previously marked 2-C. That concludes that packet. I have a 12 submission as well from the respondent previously marked Group 3 13 for identification, initially consisting of a stipulation of 14 settlement referencing the respondent marked Exhibit 3-A, a 15 polygraph report referencing the respondent, dated February 2nd, 16 2006. The Service had previously expressed an interest in cross-17 examining the author.

18 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

19 Q. Has he been made available, Mr. Sachs?

20 A. Unfortunately, I spoke to him yesterday and he had 21 mistaken the date, he was prepared to come in or even testify 22 telephonically.

23 Q. So he's not available?

24 A. No, Judge.

25 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

1 Q. Is the Service continuing to press that objection?

2 A. Yes, Judge.

3 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

4 Sustain the objection for unavailability of the author
5 for cross, that will be 3-B for identification. A psycho-social 6 assessment referencing the respondent is marked 3-C for 7 identification. The Service had also expressed an interest in 8 cross-examining the author.

9 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

10 Q. Is that author available?

11 A. She's sitting, as you instructed, she's in the 12 courtroom.

13 Q. All right.

14 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

15 The Service had also lodged a relevancy objection to 16 that which I'll consider under advisement. Continue to mark it 17 3-C pending the testimony of the author. A document described as 18 a personal and business management agreement referencing the 19 respondent, previously marked 3-D. A letter from Enessa 20 Alexandrovna Shipilina, previously marked 3-E. A letter from 21 Demetri Morisal, previously marked 3-F, and that concludes that 22 packet. I have an additional submission from the respondent 23 previously marked Group 4 for identification. Initially 24 consisting of the I-751, re-questioning the good faith marriage 25 waiver, previously marked Exhibit 4-A. Receipts from the

1 Regional Service Center in Saint Albans, already marked 4-B.
2 A second letter from the Citizenship and Immigration Services
3 Office, this one dated May 24th, 2004, previously marked 4-C.
4 Divorce decree, referencing the respondent, previously marked
5 4-D, and a letter, it appears to be a series letters which was 6 marked 4-E for identification, in the absence of the original.
7 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

8 Q. Has the original been located, Mr. Sachs?

9 A. Which letter is that, sir?

10 Q. The document marked 4-E for identification? It 11 appears to be a series of letter from the ex-husband.

12 A. No, Judge.

13 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

14 Continue to mark it 4-E for identification in the 15 absence of the original. Also from the respondent, packet marked 16 Group 5 for identification, initially consisting of a statement 17 from the respondent marked Exhibit 5-A. I have another copy of 18 the service, for respondent, from October 1st, 2004, already 19 marked 2-C. Court materials referencing the respondent, marked 20 Exhibit 5-B. Another copy of Ms. Kahn's assessment, already 21 marked 3-C for identification. A summons with additional court 22 materials previously marked 5-C for identification. I have 23 sustained an objection as to untimeliness of that submission.
24 Submission is not rendered timely by the adjournment.

25 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

1 Q. Any other objections to that Ms. Taylor?

2 A. Let me just locate it, Judge.

3 Q. That's at tab 5, in the Group 5 packet. Similar 4 objection to the next item which is a summary order from the 2nd
5 Circuit Court of Appeals.

6 A. Yes, just relevancy, Judge.

7 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

8 I'll admit it and consider it for what it's worth, that 9 will be 5-C.

10 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

11 Q. And the 2nd Circuit order, same position as to 12 that?

13 A. Yes, Judge.

14 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

15 Admit that as well for what it's worth, that will be 16 5-D. That concludes that packet.

17 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

18 Q. Is there anything additional in terms of 19 documentary evidence from the respondent today, Mr. Sachs?

20 A. I thought that I had submitted that huge complaint
21 from the -- apparently not, I thought I did. I thought I saw it 22 mentioned in one of my letters. If you had it, it's like an 85, 23 89-page complaint.

24 Q. I believe that's the 5-C packet. The first item
25 is a summons?

1 A. Yes.

2 Q. For the Southern District of New York?

3 A. Yes.

4 Q. Well that's Exhibit 5-C.

5 A. The whole, the complaint as well?

6 Q. This much stuff?

8 Q. Anything else in terms of documentary evidence

9 from the respondent today?

10 A. No, Your Honor.

11 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

12 Q. Ms. Taylor, anything additional in terms of 13 documentary evidence from the Service today?

14 A. No, Judge.

15 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

16 Q. And how are you seeking to proceed today,

17 initially with testimony from the respondent or from the witness?

18 A. Good question. I've never been given that option

19 before. It probably would make sense to have the witness

20 testify, then she could leave and go wherever she wants, and then 21 follow-up with the -- do you have any objection to that, Judge?

22 Well you suggested it. As I said, this is the first time I've 23 been offered that alternative.

24 Q. Is there any objection to the respondent being 25 sequestered while the witness testifies?

1 A. No.

2 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

3 Q. To the respondent, ma'am, your attorney has 4 indicated that he will first be eliciting testimony from your 5 witness. It is of some value to me that you do not hear your 6 witness' testimony, so in a moment, I'm going to invite you to 7 wait outside the courtroom in the waiting room until we are ready
8 to hear from you. I do want to caution you that we may take a 9 brief break or a recess in the proceedings this morning. During 10 the course of any such break or recess, you're not to have any 11 communication with the witness. Should it come to my attention 12 that you have communicated with her, I will have to take that 13 into account when I make the decision in your case. Do you 14 understand?

15 A. Yes.

16 Q. Thank you, you are excused. Please shut the door 17 behind you when you go out.

18 JUDGE TO WITNESS

19 Q. Ma'am, you can come forward.

20 JUDGE TO INTERPRETER

21 Q. You can take a break, Mr. Bot.

22 A. Thank you, should I wait outside also?

23 Q. If you want, or you can wait in here.

24 A. I'll wait in the back.

25 Q. Just don't disappear.

1 A. Okay.

2 JUDGE TO WITNESS

3 Q. Ma'am, please remain standing and raise your right
4 hand. Do you swear that the testimony that you give today will 5 be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help
6 you God?

7 A. I do.

8 Q. Thank you, please be seated. Ma'am, are you
9 fluent in English?

10 A. Yes.

11 Q. At this time, Mr. Sachs is going to have the 12 opportunity to ask you some questions. When he is finished, the 13 attorney for the Government, Ms. Taylor, may ask you some 14 questions. I may also ask you questions when they're finished, 15 or by interrupting them from time-to-time. Please note, there's 16 a microphone on the table in front of you, that's because we're 17 tape recording the proceeding.

18 A. Okay.

19 Q. So when you speak, please do so in a loud and 20 clear voice so that everyone can hear you.

21 A. Okay.

22 Q. Please make sure you do answer the questions, 23 however I would ask that you please limit your answer to the 24 questions that are put to you and if you're not sure of something 25 or you don't remember something, you should let us know. Don't

1 make-up or guess at answers just to please us.

2 A. Okay.

3 Q. I see you have some materials in front of you,
4 please put them one of the chairs or provide or give them to me.

5 A. I don't know (indiscernible)

6 Q. Because you shouldn't refer to materials during 7 testimony unless you have (indiscernible) with the Court.

8 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

9 Q. Go ahead, Mr. Sachs.

10 MR. SACHS TO WITNESS

11 Q. Ms. Kahn, could you please state your 12 qualifications?

13 A. I'm a New York State Licensed Clinical Social 14 Worker and I've been in practice for almost 35 years, post-15 masters from Boston University.

16 Q. Post-masters in what?

17 A. Social work.

18 Q. And, you're familiar with Ms. Shipilina, Alina?

19 A. Yes.

20 Q. Would you state the circumstances under which you 21 came to know her?

22 A. I met with her in May of 2006, I understood at the 23 time that she was filing a battered spouse petition, so I was 24 hired to do a psycho-social evaluation in reference to that.

25 Q. And is that represented by this document that --

1 A. Yes.

2 Q. Okay, now how long did you spend with Ms.
3 Shipilina?

4 A. I met with her in her home for about three hours.

5 Q. And since the reason for originally interviewing 6 her was, as you said, a battered spouse petition, I presume that 7 you spoke about her marriage at length?

8 A. Yes, at length.

9 Q. And what did she tell you about the marriage as to 10 how or when she met her husband?

11 A. She met her husband, I believe, in Moscow, where 12 she was for her work, and after she met him, he pursued her very 13 vigorously, texting her, calling her, sending flowers and so 14 forth.

15 Q. He pursued her?

16 A. He pursued her.

17 Q. And did she state, or did you find out when the 18 subject of marriage came up?

19 A. After, I think, a couple of months of their 20 knowing each other, he impulsively all the sudden, blurted out 21 marry me.

22 Q. So as far as you were able to discover, that the 23 idea of getting married was his idea?

24 A. That's correct. She said she was surprised at the 25 time and needed a little time to think about it.

1 Q. And then what did she say?

2 A. And then she decided that she would marry him, she 3 felt she was in love with him, and she felt they could help each 4 other.

5 Q. Did the topic of coming to the United States as an 6 immigrant ever come up?

7 A. No.

8 Q. So, to your knowledge, that was not the reason she 9 married her husband?

10 A. That's correct.

11 Q. And then, did she describe some of the problems
12 that led to the battered spouse petition?

13 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

14 Q. Objection, Judge, there's not evidence of a 15 battered spouse petition being filed within the court.

16 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

17 Q. I don't have anything in the Court's record about 18 it, Mr. Sachs, so where are we going with this?

19 A. Well, Ms. Kahn had said that's why she was 20 originally hired to interview.

21 Q. Well that's fine, but I don't know the relevancy
22 of it to this proceeding which is supported by a good faith and a 23 marriage waiver. I mean, if a battered spouse petition was ever 24 filed, it has not been brought to my attention. Do you know if 25 one was filed?

1 A. Well apparently, but I've seen it, Judge. She 2 mentioned --

3 Q. So you don't know anything about it?

4 A. Just what I've heard.

5 Q. All right, well if the witness has anything to 6 relate with regard to the good faith nature of the marriage, you
7 can illicit that from her, but I don't know that we need to get 8 into the battered wife petition.

9 A. Okay.

10 Q. That no one is aware exists.

11 A. All right.

12 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

13 Q. Unless you have some notice of it, Ms. Taylor?

14 A. I do not.

15 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

16 Q. All right, go ahead.

17 MR. SACHS TO WITNESS

18 Q. Do you know whether she mentioned anything about 19 her husband's attitude toward her immigration status?

20 A. Well initially, he said that he wanted her to come 21 to the United States to see where he lived and I believe he got a 22 visa for her at some point. And then she came a second time 23 later on to stay with him. Later on in the marriage, as he 24 became more and more abusive, he used her status or lack of 25 status as a way to yield power over her and would periodically

p
1 threaten her that he was going to notify the INS, that he had 2 friends at the INS, that he would have her deported, and that was 3 very frightening to her.

4 Q. I see, and did it come out as to yield power over 5 her in what way?

6 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

7 Q. Objection again, this goes to any type of abuse,
8 which I don't think is relevant. I think (indiscernible).

9 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

10 Q. No, I didn't say anything about abuse.

11 A. Well, I'll allow it, but I'll put you on a short 12 leash, if it doesn't look like it's going in the right direction, 13 Mr. Sachs. Go ahead.

14 MR. SACHS TO WITNESS

15 Q. What were some of the examples? Not necessarily 16 physical abuse, but what were some of the examples?

17 A. Well as I said, he would threaten her if she 18 didn't do what he wanted her to do, that he would report her to 19 the INS. He would have her deported. That was menacing to her, 20 so she tended to do things that she was uncomfortable with 21 because of that.

22 Q. Any examples of things that she was uncomfortable 23 with?

24 A. He got her a job at a topless dance club called 25 Flash Dance, which she didn't want to do, but he kept threatening

1 her. It was very intimidating to her.

2 Q. So he was the one who arranged for the job?

3 A. Correct.

4 Q. Did you ever have any questions or reasons to talk 5 about possible activities as a prostitute?

6 A. No, it never came up.

7 Q. Did you know of any actions in court, either he 8 had against her or she had against him?

9 A. She told me that he had filed some suits against 10 her, against her mother, against a lot of other people accusing 11 her of illegal activities, one point even accusing her of being 12 involved with Al Queda, and she felt that these were all, you 13 know, things to harass her. That was actually after the marriage 14 ended.

15 Q. So as far as you were able to determine, she did 16 nothing to initiate the proceedings to bring her here as a 17 immigrant, is that true?

18 A. That's correct.

19 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

20 Q. I have no further questions at this time, Your 21 Honor.

22 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

23 Q. Ms. Taylor, cross-examination.

24 A. Thank you.

25 Q. You're welcome.

1 MS. TAYLOR TO WITNESS

2 Q. How many times did you meet with the respondent?

3 A. One time.

4 Q. Has she ever been married before, to your 5 knowledge?

6 A. Not to my knowledge.

7 Q. Was there any particular reason that you met her 8 in her home as opposed to your office?

9 A. I usually meet clients in their homes so that 10 they're more comfortable and so that I can get a sense of, more 11 of a sense of who they are and how they live.

12 Q. Now you said her ex-husband got her a job at a 13 topless club, correct?

14 A. Correct.

15 Q. Do you know if she ever worked at a topless club 16 before that?

17 A. Not to my knowledge.

18 Q. And how long was she married?

19 A. I think it was a year and a couple of months.

20 Q. And do you know how long they actually lived
21 together?

22 A. I believe it was about a year, maybe slightly 23 under a year.

24 Q. One year or slightly under a year, and you said 25 that their courtship was a couple of months, by couple, does that

1 mean two?

2 A. Two, three months, I believe.

3 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

4 Q. I don't have any other questions.

5 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

6 Q. Mr. Sachs, redirect?

7 A. No, Your Honor.

8 JUDGE TO WITNESS

9 Q. Thank you, ma'am, your testimony is finished. I 10 appreciate your taking the time to be with us today.

11 A. Thank you.

12 Q. You are excused.

13 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

14 I'll mark the assessment into the record as Exhibit 3-C
15 giving it the weight that I feel it deserves, given the totality 16 of the evidence in the case. We're off the record.

17 (OFF THE RECORD)

18 (ON THE RECORD)

19 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

20 We're rejoined by the respondent.

21 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

22 Q. Ma'am, at this time your attorney is going to have 23 the opportunity to ask you some questions. When he is finished, 24 the attorney for the Government will ask you some questions.

25 When they're both finished, I may ask you some questions. I may

1 also interrupt either one of them from time-to-time to ask you
2 some questions. Ma'am, please note there is a microphone on the 3 table in front of you, that's because we are tape recording these 4 proceedings today. So when you speak, please do so in a loud and 5 clear, excuse me, a loud and a clear voice so that everyone can 6 hear you. If anything is said to you that you don't understand, 7 do not try to please us by creating or by making-up an answer.
8 You should indicate that you don't understand and I will endeavor
9 to have the statement repeated or explained for you. Please do
10 not speak while the interpreter is speaking, and the interpreter
11 may signal you from time-to-time to stop speaking, if he requires 12 additional time to complete his interpretation. When he is 13 finished, you may complete your answer, if your answer was not 14 done. Ma'am, in this kind of a case, your testimony is very 15 important. You should understand that the burden of proof in 16 this kind of a case is on your side, so when you're answering 17 questions today, please insure that your answers are detailed, 18 specific and responsive to the questions put to you by each of 19 us. Please do not answer questions that have not been asked of 20 you because I may have to consider such answers to be 21 unresponsive or to be evasive in nature. Do you understand?

22 A. Yes.

23 Q. It's also important that you understand that if 24 you are not sure of something that you will be telling us today, 25 that it's your responsibility to inform us either that you are

1 not sure, or that you do not exactly remember. If you do not
2 tell us that, I will then conclude that you are sure of whatever
3 it is that you are saying. You understand?

4 A. Yes.

5 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

6 Q. Go ahead, Mr. Sachs.

7 MR. SACHS TO MS. SHIPILINA

8 Q. When and where did you meet Roy Dean Hollinder?

9 A. I was in Moscow at the party for models and I
10 spoke a little English. He used to live in this area. He walked 11 by and he heard English spoken, he walked up and who was speaking 12 English and I said I speak English and that's how we met, that's 13 where we got acquainted.

14 Q. And what happened after that, did the relationship 15 continue?

16 A. He liked me very much. He escorted me home. He 17 started to give me flowers, and he started to ask me out to 18 restaurants, and when I was leaving for Krasnodar, he asked me to 19 give him my telephone number.

20 Q. And then did you see him after that?

21 A. Many times.

22 Q. And would you describe those circumstances?

23 A. He used to invite me and I came to Moscow, I used 24 to spend time with him. He introduced me to everybody at work
25 that he worked with, and I also invited him, used to invite him

1 to my home.

2 Q. Did the subject of marriage ever come up?

3 A. We talked, I talked with him and all of a sudden
4 he says, why don't you marry me. I didn't agree right away
5 because I had to think about it. I felt, you know, inside the 6 connection with him to the degree that I felt very well with him,
7 and after some time, I agreed.

8 Q. Was there any talk at that time either by you or 9 by him as to you becoming an immigrant to the United States?

10 A. We got married through love, because of love, to 11 be together.

12 Q. Did you have any idea of obtaining a green card by 13 marrying him?

14 A. I didn't know anything about this.

15 Q. You didn't know anything about this when?

16 A. Before marriage, after marriage. For me, it was 17 important just to be with the person I loved, not where we lived.

18 Q. So would it be fair to say that you did not marry 19 Mr. Hollinder to get a green card, an immigrant visa to the 20 United States?

21 A. No, absolutely not.

22 Q. When and where did you get married?

23 A. We got married the 11th of March 2000, in the city
24 of Krasnodar.

25 Q. And do you know when the proceedings were started

1 to apply for a green card for you as a wife of a citizen?

2 A. I don't remember exactly, maybe some time in April 3 or May.

4 Q. Okay, who's idea was it?

5 A. My husband's.

6 Q. And you next came to the United States when?

7 A. First time we came in January, and get acquainted
8 with relatives and friends here. When I got the papers, we came 9 here in July 2000 to live together, yes.

10 Q. And when did you start having problems with your 11 husband?

12 A. Here.

13 Q. When?

14 A. When we moved, he stopped sharing things. He 15 didn't want to buy things for me that I wanted to buy. He then 16 started to, strangely, he started to ask me about my past 17 relationships and it happened everyday and the background was 18 that he started to humiliate me and call me names like a monster, 19 and you know, ugly person.

20 Q. Was he ever involved with any employment, did he 21 ever get you a job of any kind?

22 A. Yes, he bought a book about nightlife in New York
23 and he managed in addition, for me to work in a strip club, but I 24 wanted very much to work as a model, but I didn't have money for 25 the portfolio.

1 Q. What was the name of the strip club, do you
2 remember?

3 A. Flash Dance.

4 Q. And how long did you work there?

5 A. I worked there maybe two years. Every day he used
6 to walk me, he used to meet me at 4:00 a.m. at home, and if I
7 happen to be late home a few minutes, he started to abuse me that 8 I already commenced to sleep with somebody, and this was like 9 this every week.

10 Q. Did he ever visit you at the club?

11 A. Yes, he did.

12 Q. And what circumstances?

13 A. He used to come in and buy dances with his friends
14 in front of my eyes, and he forced me to dance.

15 Q. What do you mean forced you to dance?

16 A. He used to pay my name, you cannot refuse.

17 Q. Well did he force you to dance with any specific 18 people or just by yourself, be more specific.

19 A. He used to come, excuse me, with a friend and he 20 forced me to dance for him in front of him.

21 Q. What kind of dance?

22 A. Lap dance, topless.

23 Q. Are you saying that he would force you to dance 24 topless with a friend of his?

25 A. When he was next to me, and it was very hard for

1 me because it hurt me because I love my husband and I just wanted
2 to only do this for my husband.

3 Q. And how long did you live together with him?

4 A. When we moved here, from that moment until 5 December.

6 Q. I see now, had you already received the 7 conditional, the first green card?

8 A. Yes.

9 Q. The petition to remove the condition, what they 10 call the I-751, did you file that together with Roy, or did you 11 file it by yourself?

12 A. When I arrived here, (indiscernible) later.

13 Q. There was another form that you had to fill out 14 with Roy, so that your conditional residence would be 15 approved to become permanent. Do you remember that, yes or no, 16 do you remember that?

17 A. I don't remember exactly, but as far as I 18 remember, I think that I applied it by myself for it, by myself.

19 Q. When did you separate from Roy, do you remember?

20 A. When we moved from December, I wanted to save our 21 relationship and hoped that this would help us to straighten 22 things out between each other.

23 Q. Well you finally wound up with a divorce, is that 24 true?

25 A. True.

1 Q. And was that before you had your interview for the 2 I-751?

3 A. After.

4 Q. Do you recall, I'm going to refer to the interview
5 you had for that document which took place at the end of 6 September of, excuse me a minute, September 9th, 2004. Do you
7 remember that interview?

8 A. Yes.

9 Q. Okay, now as you know, the application was denied 10 as a result of the interview and I'm going to ask you some 11 question about what happened at the interview. You submitted 12 some income tax returns for their consideration, is that true?

13 A. Yes.

14 Q. Now the income tax return for the year 2000, at 15 the time, you were still married to Roy, is that true?

16 A. Yes.

17 Q. Now, it stated in the denial that, that return was 18 filed as single, not at married. Is that true? Is that true, 19 yes or no?

20 A. Yes.

21 Q. Okay, would you please explain why you filed it 22 that way?

23 A. Oh, I went to the accountant and I wanted to say 24 that I want to file as married, but he said that we cannot apply
25 because I didn't have, I didn't know my husband's social security

1 number. I asked my husband to give me his social security
2 number, but he refused me, and that's why I had to do it this 3 way.

4 Q. Was that according to the accountant's
5 instructions?

6 A. Yes.

7 Q. Did you have any intention of committing a fraud
8 of the Immigration Service by filing it that way?

9 A. Absolutely not.

10 Q. Now there's mentioned in the denial about a diary 11 and many things are quoted from supposedly that document. At the 12 interview on September 9th, 2004, were you shown any document at 13 all and asked for identify either as to your handwriting or what 14 the document was?

15 A. No.

16 Q. Was there any mention during the interview of the 17 diary?

18 A. No.

19 Q. Did the officer who interview you ask you for an 20 example of your handwriting or something to identify your 21 handwriting?

22 A. No.

23 Q. Do you have your diary?

24 A. I don't.

25 Q. Why not?

1 A. There isn't.

2 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

3 Q. I'm sorry, I didn't hear you.

4 A. There isn't.

5 Q. There isn't.

6 MR. SACHS TO MS. SHIPILINA

7 Q. Why do you not have it?

8 A. Because it was stolen from me.

9 Q. When, do you have any idea when?

10 A. Maybe in 2001.

11 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

12 Q. Ma'am, I need you to speak louder please, I can 13 barely hear you.

14 A. Okay.

15 Q. If I'm having difficulty hearing you, your voice 16 may not be picked-up on the tape.

17 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

18 Q. Go ahead, Mr. Sachs.

19 MR. SACHS TO MS. SHIPILINA

20 Q. So that nothing at all was either said or done 21 during that interview, to either identify or determine the 22 document from which so many of your comments are taken, is that 23 true?

24 A. Nothing, no.

25 Q. All right, have you ever been to Mexico?

1 A. Yes.

2 Q. Do you remember when?

3 A. In 1999.

4 Q. And how did you enter Mexico, with a visa?

5 A. Yes, with a visa.

6 Q. And describe how you left Mexico. Did you leave
7 on your own terms, did you leave voluntarily?

8 A. My visa was just expired, I went there as a model
9 through agencies.

10 Q. Were you deported from Mexico?

11 A. No.

12 Q. Just one more time, was it ever your intention to 13 obtain an immigrant visa in the United States by marrying Ron 14 Dean?

15 A. No.

16 Q. Okay now, what are some of the problems you had 17 with him after you were divorced?

18 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

19 Q. Objection, relevancy, Judge. Only a period of 20 relevance is whether she entered the marriage in good faith and 21 probably during her marriage, not after.

22 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

23 Q. Where are we going with this, Mr. Sachs?

24 A. Well, according to the decision Judge, they made a 25 whole section of the decision on a document that nobody ever

1 identified, that we don't know who's diary it was, who translated
2 it, was it an original, who sent it, I mean it's just impossible.

3 Q. Okay, but what does that have to do with your 4 question?

5 A. Because the -- I don't know whether that was Group
6 5, Judge, of the Court, he had the pattern and the practice of 7 doing incredibly crazy things trying to hurt her. The complaint
8 in a Federal case, in which I represented her for close to three 9 years, was like a 100 and some odd defendants boiled down that 10 she was the cause of a conspiracy throughout the whole world, 11 that the man was nuts, and he did anything he could to try and 12 damage her. And as I said, with this, I'm sorry, I don't mean to 13 be testifying as a witness, but I went through the whole thing.
14 It was thrown out of the Court of Appeals, he went to the Supreme 15 Court, they threw it out, but he did a lot of damage with it, and 16 if you just look at the complaint, there are people all over the 17 world who are accused of doing things without names, but every 18 way he could, he made her to the monster.

19 Q. Well, I believe it's in the record, I can look at 20 it. I don't know that anything that occurred after the divorce 21 is necessarily germane to the reason that we're here today.

22 A. Well, specifically to the question of this what 23 claims to be her diary and I don't know where they have it, where 24 they got it, nothing. The prior attorney who represented her --

25 (OFF THE RECORD)

(ON THE RECORD)

JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

Q. Go ahead, Mr. Sachs, continue with your response.

A. Thank you, Your Honor. As I said, the reason for having presented that to the Court was just as an illustration that was obtainable as to the incredibly fantastic lengths this person went to harm her. Because that whole action was designed, assuming everybody in the whole world was focused on doing harm to her.

Q. Well, I'm sorry, go ahead.

A. No, I'm sorry, and it's similar to this and if he did supply something, it would not be beyond imagination, having seen what he did in this case, that things were either invented, falsified, whatever. That's things that he did.

Q. Well, the materials that you're making reference to are in the record, so I can consider them for what they're worth as evidence, but I don't see that things that occurred following the conclusion of the marital relationship really has a probative nature for the good faith marriage. So I'm going to sustain the objection.

A. Okay.

Q. Proceed.

A. Well I have no further questions at this time Judge, I would like to reserve redirect, if necessary.

Q. You'll have that opportunity.

mp

1 A. Thank you.

2 Q. You're welcome.

3 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

4 Why don't we take a short break.

5 (OFF THE RECORD)

6 (ON THE RECORD)

7 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

8 Back on the record.

9 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

10 Q. Ms. Taylor, cross-examination.

11 MS. TAYLOR TO MS. SHIPILINA

12 Q. What was your job in Moscow?

13 A. I didn't work in Moscow.

14 Q. You said you met your husband at a party for 15 models, were you working as a model at that time?

16 A. Yes, the modeling agency invited me to meet 17 everybody.

18 Q. Okay, so were you working as a model in Moscow?

19 INTERPRETER TO JUDGE

20 Q. I'm sorry, Your Honor --

21 A. You can shut the door if you need to.

22 Q. Close the door, yes. Thank you.

23 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

24 Q. Repeat the question, Ms. Taylor.

25 MS. TAYLOR TO MS. SHIPILINA

1 Q. Were you working as a model in Moscow?

2 A. Yes, yeah I did a few model jobs.

3 JUDGE FOR THE RECORD

4 Excuse me.

5 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

6 Q. Mr. Sachs, where are you going?

7 A. I didn't realize he was on.

8 Q. Mr. Sachs, please don't leave the courtroom during 9 trial without (indiscernible), if your phone is ringing, please 10 shut it off.

11 A. Yes, I'm terribly sorry, Judge.

12 Q. Thank you.

13 A. I apologize, Judge.

14 JUDGE TO INTERPRETER

15 Q. Do you still have her answer, Mr. Bot?

16 A. I believe so, I filled several modeling jobs in 17 Moscow.

18 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

19 Q. Go ahead.

20 MS. TAYLOR TO MS. SHIPILINA

21 Q. Did you get paid for those jobs?

22 A. Yes.

23 Q. So that was your profession in Moscow, you were a 24 model?

25 A. I was there for a very short period of time. Most

1 of my modeling job I did in Krasnodar.

2 Q. And how did your ex-husband come to be at this
3 part for models in Moscow?

4 A. He lived in that building and the party was on the 5 bottom, in the basement of the building, in the building.

6 Q. What was his job, if you know?

7 A. Clothes associate.

8 Q. Clothes?

9 A. Kroll K-R-O-L-L.

10 Q. What does that mean?

11 A. It's an investigation company.

12 Q. Okay, when did you first meet him?

13 A. My husband?

14 Q. Yes.

15 A. At the party.

16 Q. When?

17 A. It was in the summer, approximately July 1990.

18 Q. After that, did he propose marriage?

19 A. Approximately, half a year.

20 Q. Six months?

21 A. Approximately.

22 Q. In June until six months, how often did you see 23 him?

24 A. I used to come to Moscow and we lived together in 25 his apartment and then approximately half a month, and sometimes

1 he used to come to visit me, and New Years we spent together.

2 Q. And what's the length of time between the marriage
3 proposal and the actual marriage ceremony?

4 A. I don't remember exactly, but approximately two 5 months.

6 Q. How many times have you been to the United States?

7 A. First time in January 2000, when I met relatives
8 and friends of his, and second time was in July when we got 9 married.

10 Q. July of what year?

11 A. 2000.

12 Q. How old were you when you got married?

13 A. Twenty-five.

14 Q. How old was your ex-husband?

15 A. I don't know because in different documents, he 16 had different age listed.

17 Q. How old did you believe him to be when you got 18 married?

19 A. Approximately, 50-years-old.

20 Q. Did you meet any of his relatives or family 21 members?

22 A. I met his close friends, but his mother and father
23 who were deceased, I never met them.

24 Q. What about any siblings or brother and sisters he 25 may have?

1 A. He has a brother, he is married, he's got two 2 children.

3 Q. Have you met him?

4 A. We met very, very briefly.

5 Q. Who came to your wedding?

6 A. Nobody came because we decided that we kind of get 7 married in secret, a surprise, then to make everybody happy, to 8 spring the surprise on everybody.

9 Q. Has he ever met your parents?

10 A. Of course.

11 Q. And any other family members?

12 A. They live in different parts of Russia.

13 Q. When you met your ex-husband, were you dating or 14 see anyone else at that time?

15 A. You have your mind on we, when we met?

16 Q. Yes.

17 A. My relationship was practically over with my 18 boyfriend at that time.

19 Q. Were you dating anyone else at the same time while 20 you were dating your ex-husband?

21 A. No.

22 Q. How long did you actually physically live with 23 your ex-husband in the United States?

24 A. From July when we came here together until 25 December.

amp

1 Q. So from July 2000 until December 2000?

2 A. Yes.

3 Q. Now you said that he made you work at a strip club
4 called Flash Dance for two years, is that correct?

5 A. He didn't force me to work two years, he forced me
6 to work when we came here and when I lived with him.

7 Q. Okay, how long did you work at Flash Dance?

8 A. I don't remember exactly, but I think about two 9 years.

10 Q. Okay, when did you start working there? You can 11 just give me the month and the year.

12 A. Approximately, the end of July, beginning of 13 August.

14 Q. 2000?

15 A. Yes.

16 Q. Until when?

17 A. I don't remember exactly.

18 Q. Well, would you say it's about two years later?

19 INTERPRETER TO MS. TAYLOR

20 Q. I beg your pardon?

21 MS. TAYLOR TO MS. SHIPILINA

22 Q. Would you say it was two years later?

23 A. Approximately, but I don't remember.

24 Q. Okay, did you continue to work there after your 25 divorce? Yes or no?

bmp

1 A. I don't remember.

2 Q. Well, when were you divorced?

3 A. In 2001, in December.

4 Q. Right, and if you worked at Flash Dance for two 5 years starting in about July or August 2000, you were still 6 working there when you were divorced, correct?

7 A. Approximately, yes, but I don't remember exactly 8 the exact months.

9 Q. Okay, did you continue to work there after you 10 stopped living with your husband in December of 2000?

11 A. Yes.

12 Q. Why?

13 A. Because I didn't know anybody. I didn't know 14 where I can find a job.

15 Q. But at that point, he wasn't forcing you to work
16 there because you and him did not live together anymore, correct?

17 A. I worked a very few days because my main goal was 18 to work as a model, not to waste my life.

19 Q. But I still need a yes or no, ma'am.

20 A. Did I work two years?

21 Q. You continued to work there after you physically 22 separated from your husband, correct?

23 A. Yes.

24 Q. Well my question is, he wasn't forcing you to work 25 there as you and him did not live together anymore after that

mp

1 time, is that correct?

2 A. That's right, no.

3 Q. How much did you get paid as a dancer per week or 4 per month?

5 A. It depends how many days.

6 Q. Approximately?

7 A. Sometimes $100 a day, sometimes $200, sometimes 8 $300.

9 Q. So about $100 to $300 a day, correct?

10 A. Approximately.

11 Q. And how many days did you work?

12 A. It varied.

13 Q. From what to what? From how many to how many?

14 A. Sometimes four days, sometimes once a week, and 15 sometimes I didn't work at all, on vacation.

16 Q. Who initiated your divorce, you your husband?

17 A. I wanted to do it, but he beat me to it.

18 Q. So he actually filed the paperwork first?

19 A. Yes.

20 Q. Did you have a diary anywhere in the world? Yes 21 or no?

22 A. I had a book that I had about my fantasies and 23 some of them were real events.

24 Q. Well your attorney asked you if you had a diary 25 and you said yes, and it was stolen from you in 2001, is that mp

1 correct?

2 A. Yeah, that was my book.

3 Q. So, you had a diary or a book, as you call it?

4 A. Yes.

5 Q. How many?

6 A. One.

7 Q. Okay, when did you start writing in that book or 8 diary?

9 A. Approximately, from '99.

10 Q. And when did you stop writing?

11 A. When I lived with my husband.

12 Q. What year and month?

13 A. August or September in 2000.

14 Q. Now you said it contained some relevance and some 15 fantasies, is that correct?

16 A. Yes.

17 Q. Did you read, well you know that your initial 18 petition was denied by the Immigration Service, correct?

19 A. Yes.

20 Q. Did you read that denial?

21 A. Yes.

22 Q. So you know what it says?

23 A. Yes.

24 Q. And as your attorney pointed out, it has some 25 quotes from a diary that was alleged to be yours.

ap

1 A. Yes.

2 Q. I'm just going to read a quote that allegedly came 3 from your diary.

4 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

5 Q. Objection, Your Honor. We've been through this,
6 and unless they're prepared to show where the quote came from,
7 I'm going to object to it.

8 A. The quote is from the decision, the decision is in 9 the record.

10 Q. Well I thought we went over it, okay.

11 A. And you read the decision as well as the Service, 12 so I think in view of that, the objection ought to be sustained.
13 I'm sorry, the objection ought to be overruled, excuse me.

14 Q. That's fine.

15 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

16 Q. Thank you, I'll ask my question.

17 A. Go ahead.

18 MS. TAYLOR TO MS. SHIPILINA

19 Q. Part of the denial indicates a quote from your 20 alleged diary. It states that on November 29th, 1999, you 21 performed dances in Mexico for customers. Is that a fantasy or 22 is that a real event?

23 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

24 Q. Objection, Your Honor.

25 A. Basis?

1 Q. Well this is quoting from something that's never 2 been either authenticated or proven, and now she's being asked to 3 attest to the truth of the statement based on something which we 4 don't know, it's like double or triple hearsay.

5 A. Sustained, after the form of the question.

6 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

7 Q. You can rephrase the question.

8 A. Sure, Judge.

9 MS. TAYLOR TO MS. SHIPILINA

10 Q. Okay, the entry from November 29th, 1999, as 11 written in the denial of the termination of condition of revenue 12 status indicates that you performed dances with customers in 13 Mexico. Do you have any knowledge of that?

14 INTERPRETER TO MS. TAYLOR

15 Q. What was the question again?

16 A. Do you knowledge of that?

17 Q. That I danced in Mexico?

18 Q. Yes.

19 A. Yes, I did dance.

20 Q. In Mexico?

21 A. Yes.

22 Q. At what type of establishment? Was it an 23 establishment like Flash Dance in New York?

24 A. It was of a very high level.

25 Q. I don't know what that means?

1 A. It was also a club.
2 Q. Was it a strip club?
3 A. Yes.
4 Q. Now you said you had a visa to go to Mexico, what 5 visa did you have?
6 A. It was a tourist visa.
7 Q. Were you allowed to work in Mexico with that type 8 of visa?
9 A. No.
10 Q. But you worked anyway, correct?
11 A. Yes.
12 Q. How long were you in Mexico, how many months?
13 A. Few months.
14 Q. What's a few months?
15 A. Approximately, two, three months.
16 Q. Were you ever arrested in Mexico?
17 A. No.
18 Q. What countries have you been to other than Mexico
19 and the United States?
20 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE
21 Q. Objection, Your Honor, can we narrow that down, 22 from the time she was born until --
23 MS. TAYLOR TO MR. SACHS
24 Q. Okay, I'll narrow it.
25 A. Please.

1 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

2 Q. Since you were 18-years-old, what countries have 3 you been to besides the United States and Mexico?

4 A. Cyprus, Turkey, Italy and USA.

5 Q. Did you have visas to go to Cyprus, Turkey and 6 Italy?

7 A. Yes, it's very easy.

8 Q. So you had visas to enter these countries?

9 A. Of course.

10 Q. What was the purpose of these trips?

11 A. Relaxation with my mother, and perhaps to find 12 some work as modeling jobs.

13 Q. Did you ever work in any of those countries?

14 A. Yes.

15 Q. Which ones?

16 A. Cyprus.

17 Q. What about Turkey or Italy?

18 A. No.

19 Q. What was your work in Cyprus?

20 A. When?

21 Q. What was your work in Cyprus?

22 A. I was dancing.

23 Q. In a strip club also?

24 A. Yes.

25 Q. How long did you do that in Cyprus?

1           A.    Approximately, six months.

2 Q. Have you ever been a prostitute anywhere in the 3 world since you turned 18?

4 A. No, never.

5                   Q.    Have you ever sold or trafficked any illegal 6    drugs?

7 A. No.

8 Q. Now you said you worked in the United States,
9 correct?

10                   A.    Yes.

11 Q. And you worked as a model for trade shows?

12 A. And also promotions.

13 Q. Okay, what type of trade shows?

14           A.     Software, hardware, food, wine, bars, light show, 15     quarterly show.

16 Q. Okay, approximately, how much do you earn monthly 17 or weekly?

18           A.    It varies.  Sometimes I have no work and sometimes 19   a week I make as much as, you know, every two weeks.

20 Q. After you stopped working at Flash Dance, have you 21 ever worked at any other strip club?

22                      A.       No.

23 Q. Have you ever been arrested anywhere in the world?

24 A. No.

25 Q. When was the last time you ever had any contact

1 with your ex-husband?

2 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

3 Q. I didn't hear the question.

4 MS. TAYLOR TO MS. SHIPILINA

5 Q. When was the last time you had any contact with 6 your ex-husband?

7 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

8 Q. Excuse me, Your Honor, could we just clarify that 9 personal contact, telephone contact?

10 MS. TAYLOR TO MS. SHIPILINA

11 Q. Any type of contact?

12 A. It was long time ago, but as far as I remember, it 13 was when there was the divorce.

14 Q. Did your husband have any children?

15 A. No.

16 Q. Was he ever married before you?

17 A. Never.

18 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

19 Q. I don't have any more questions.

20 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

21 Q. When were you working at the club in Mexico, what 22 year?

23 A. Approximately, from August to November of 1990.

24 Q. And on that trip to Mexico, were you with your ex-25 husband?

1 A. No.
2 Q. Had you met him yet by that time?
3 A. Yes.
4 Q. Did he in any way pressure you to work at the club
5 in Mexico?

6 A. No.
7 Q. And when did you work at the strip club in Cyprus?

8 A. We have not met yet.
9 Q. Well do you know when you worked there, what year?

10 A. Approximately, from January to June, '99.

11 Q. You're claiming that you were working at a strip 12 club in New York because essentially because your husband forced 13 you to. It would appear, in fact, that you willingly worked in 14 strip clubs even before that, and worked in the strip club in New 15 York, even after you were separated from your husband. Can you 16 explain that behavior?

17 A. When I worked in Cyprus, my mother and myself were 18 refugees. In Mexico, we desperately needed money and when I came 19 here I didn't want to do this anymore, and I wanted to work as a 20 model, but my husband didn't give me any sources, any support and 21 he told me that this is the only thing I can do.

22 Q. When Ms. Taylor asked you a few minutes ago about 23 your trips to Cyprus, Turkey, Italy, she asked you the reason for 24 the trips. You answered that they were relaxation trips with 25 your mother, you didn't say anything about being a refugee in

1 Cyprus, is there any special reason why you didn't give that 2 answer?

3 A. I don't understand the question.

4 Q. Well, a few minutes ago, Ms. Taylor was asking you
5 about the countries you had visited. You responded that you had 6 visited Cyprus, Turkey, Italy. Do you remember that?

7 A. Yes.

8 Q. She asked you if you had visas to go to those 9 countries, you said that you did. Remember that?

10 A. Yes.

11 Q. She asked you the reasons for the visits to those 12 countries. You answered that they were relaxation trips with 13 your mother. Do you remember giving that answer?

14 A. Yes.

15 Q. Now you didn't say anything about being a refugee 16 in Cyprus when Ms. Taylor asked you the question about those 17 trips. Is there any special reason why you did not tell Ms.
18 Taylor when she asked you the question, that you were a refugee 19 in Cyprus?

20 A. I didn't mean that we were refugees on Cyprus, 21 what I meant is that we were refugees in Russia. We left the 22 area where there was war and we couldn't sell anything.

23 Q. Am I to understand from your answer then, that the 24 reason you were dancing at a strip club in Cyprus was because you 25 were suffering some manner of financial hardship?

1 A. Yes.

2 Q. Now, at the time that you were residing with your 3 husband in the United States, now your ex-husband, did you ever 4 have a bank account?

5 A. We didn't have a joint bank.

6 Q. Did you have a bank account?

7 A. Yes, I opened an account in bank.

8 Q. And where was that account?

9 A. Citibank.

10 Q. Is there any special reason why it was not a joint 11 account with your husband?

12 A. I wanted, but he didn't want to show me how much 13 money he has.

14 Q. I don't know if I understand your answer. Why 15 would the amount of money that he has or does not have prevent 16 you from creating a joint bank account with him?

17 A. He didn't want to, I don't know why.

18 Q. And from your testimony, it sounds like that you 19 never joined in one of his bank accounts?

20 A. No.

21 Q. You've already explained the situation about your 22 tax returns. When you lived with your husband in New York, what 23 kind of place did you live in?

24 A. The address was 545 East 14th Street, Apartment
25 10-D.

1 Q. Was that a co-op, a condo, a rental unit, do you
2 know?

3 A. He said it was an apartment, it was a stable rent,
4 as far as I remember, it was $800.

5 Q. Was that a place that he was already living in or 6 is that a place that the two of you found together?

7 A. He was already living there.

8 Q. Did you ever express an interest in being placed 9 on the lease with him as a joint tenant?

10 A. He just only asked me half for the rent.

11 Q. So you were contributing to the rent?

12 A. Yes, for the television, for the lights.

13 Q. When you made these payments, did you make them
14 directly to him or did you pay the landlord?

15 A. I paid to him personally.

16 Q. Did you ever purchase anything jointly with your 17 ex-husband?

18 A. Yes.

19 Q. What?

20 A. Well I helped him buy clothing, jackets, from as 21 far as furniture is concerned, he didn't want anything, he had 22 everything he needed.

23 Q. Okay, but my question really goes to whether the 24 two of you held any joint ownership of anything?

25 A. We had only, the only thing we had together was 1 Oxford Insurance.

2 Q. Can you describe what the nature of that was?

3 A. It was health insurance. He said that in this 4 country it's very important to have, and I listened to him and 5 together to feel healthy.

6 Q. Was that insurance through his job or through your 7 employment, or what was the source of the insurance?

8 A. He had it and we just kind of split it, I don't 9 know.

10 Q. Were the two of you named as beneficiaries on the 11 insurance?

12 A. Yes.

13 Q. I don't happen to have anything which proves the 14 existence of this insurance, is there any special reason why?

15 A. I remember I had paperwork, I had papers.

16 Q. Well I don't have the papers. Is there any 17 special reason why you have not presented them in support of your 18 case?

19 A. I don't know, maybe I lost them, but I have it.

20 Q. Do you mean by your answer that you do not know 21 where the papers are now?

22 A. Yes, I don't remember.

23 Q. Did you ever have any life insurance when you 24 lived with your ex-husband?

25 A. No.

1 Q. Any special reason why?

2 A. You know, in my culture, it's not common to have 3 something like that, I didn't think about this.

4 Q. Now, when you were living with your ex-husband in 5 the United States, did you or did the two of you commonly 6 socialize with other people?

7 A. Yes.

8 Q. Now you told us about the visits to the Flash 9 Dance Club. Was there any socializing independent of that, such 10 as going out to dinner with people or having people over to your 11 apartment?

12 A. No.

13 Q. Well what kind of socializing did you do, if any?

14 A. Well he was doing martial arts, and he has a 15 teacher.

16 Q. What were you doing when you're socializing
17 together?

18 A. And there was a girl and her boyfriend, she was 19 Czechoslovakian, that lived in the apartment, and we went with 20 them together to dinner.

21 Q. Lived in your apartment?

22 A. She lived there during the time that he was in 23 Russia working.

24 Q. Have you maintained contact with that couple at 25 all?

1 A. No, because my husband turned everybody against 2 me, nobody wanted to socialize with me.

3 Q. The reason I'm asking you these questions, I'm 4 trying to determine if there was any actual proof that the two of 5 you had a legitimate relationship as husband and wife. I have no
6 witnesses here who could attest to that. I have no documents in 7 support of the joint relationship during the marriage. You did
8 submit the un-executed business agreement, but it actually 9 appears to be a proposed business agreement, not a document
10 between a husband and wife. Did you make any efforts to contact 11 the Oxford Insurance Company to confirm the two of you did have 12 health insurance together?

13 A. I didn't call, but I can.

14 Q. Your trial is today, ma'am, is there any special 15 reason why you didn't call?

16 A. I just don't understand the system.

17 Q. Well you have an attorney to advise you, that's 18 why you have the attorney to assist you.

19 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

20 Q. Ms. Taylor, do you have any questions based on my 21 questions?

22 A. No, Judge.

23 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

24 Q. Mr. Sachs, redirect?

25 A. There's just a couple, briefly, Judge.

1 Q. Go ahead.

2 MR. SACHS TO MS. SHIPILINA

3 Q. When and where did you get married?

4 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

5 Q. I'm sorry, I didn't hear the question?

6 A. When and where did you get married?

7 Q. We, that's already in the record.

8 MS. TAYLOR TO JUDGE

9 Q. That's asked and answered.

10 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

11 Q. Okay.

12 MR. SACHS TO MS. SHIPILINA

13 Q. After you got married, you were married in Russia, 14 is that right?

15 A. Yes.

16 Q. Did you live with your husband after you got 17 married?

18 A. Yes, he lived with us at home and I used to go 19 visit him in Moscow where we used to live together in his 20 apartment.

21 Q. So that, since you were married, other than here
22 in the United States, you did live with your husband?

23 A. Yes, we lived.

24 Q. Okay, as far as your modeling work, have you ever 25 had any jobs on television?

1 A. Yes.

2 Q. Can you describe some of them?

3 A. Here in America?

4 Q. Here in America.

5 A. I worked for Spike TV, CMBC, Good Morning America,
6 in the movie, My Super Ex-Girlfriend --

7 Q. Well most of these you had as a model?

8 A. As a model, as an actress.

9 MR. SACHS TO JUDGE

10 Q. I have no further questions, Judge.

11 JUDGE TO MS. SHIPILINA

12 Q. Thank you, ma'am, your testimony is finished.

13 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

14 Q. Ms. Taylor, where do we stand with the checks in 15 this case?

16 A. They all are clear and complete, Judge.

17 Q. Thank you.

18 JUDGE RENDERS ORAL DECISION

19 JUDGE TO MR. SACHS

20 Q. Mr. Sachs, is the respondent reserving the right 21 to appeal?

22 A. Yes, Your Honor.

23 Q. The appeal must be received at the Board by April 24 21st, 2008.

25 JUDGE TO MS. TAYLOR

1 Q. Ms. Taylor, is the decision final as for the 2 Service?

3 A. Yes, Judge.

In re: ALINA SHIPILINA

IN REMOVAL PROCEEDINGS

APPEAL

ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT: Jack Sachs, Esquire

ON BEHALF OF DHS: Khalilah M. Taylor
Assistant Chief Counsel

CHARGE:

Notice: Sec. 237(a)(1)(D)(i), I&N Act [8 U.S.C. § 1227(a)(1)(D)(i)] - Conditional resident status terminated

APPLICATION: Waiver of filing joint petition to remove conditions on status

The respondent, a native and citizen of Russia, appeals the March 20, 2008, denial of her request for a waiver under section 216(c)(4) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1186a(c)(4). See also 8 C.F.R. § 216.5. The appeal will be dismissed.

The respondent was admitted to the United States as a conditional permanent resident on July 10, 2000, based on her marriage to a United States citizen on March 11, 2000 (I.J. at 1-2; Exhs. 1 and 2C). After her marriage ended in divorce on December 18, 2001, she filed an application for a waiver of the joint petition filing requirements with the Department of Homeland Security ("DHS") on June 1, 2002 (I.J. at 2; Exh. 2C). The DHS denied this application on October 1, 2004, finding that she failed to establish that she entered into her marriage in good faith (I.J. at 2; Exh. 2C). The respondent renewed her application in these proceedings and the Immigration Judge similarly held that she failed to show that she entered into a good faith marriage (I.J. at 3-8).

On July 18, 2008, we rejected the respondent's motion to accept a late-filed brief. Thus, we consider only the arguments raised in the Notice of Appeal. The respondent generally avers that her "right to due process was violated at several stages of the adjudication process." We disagree, as the transcript demonstrates that she received a full and fair hearing below. The respondent also argues that the DHS's denial of her petition to remove the conditions on her residence was unfounded and based on unauthenticated evidence. Even if this were true, the Immigration Judge did not simply consider the DHS denial in determining that the respondent did not enter into her marriage in good faith. On the contrary, he supported this finding by noting: (a) the lack of evidence that she commingled assets and property with her ex-husband; (b) her filing of a tax return as "single" for the calendar year during which she was married; (c) her lack of a joint bank account with her ex-husband; (d) her failure to submit corroborating evidence of joint health insurance with her former spouse; (e) the lack of children from the marriage; (f) the absence of witnesses with firsthand knowledge of the couple's cohabitation; and (g) the absence of other reliable documentation demonstrating a good faith marriage (I.J. at 4-7; Tr. at 63-64, 83, 85-90). See 8 C.F.R. § 216.5(e)(2). In addition, the respondent's assertion that her ex-husband forced her to work as a nude dancer in the United States is undermined by the fact that she worked in this profession before and after her divorce (I.J. at 6-7; Tr. at 60-62, 73-85). In any event, this claim does not relate to the pivotal issue of whether she entered into her marriage in good faith. For these reasons, we find no reversible error in the denial of the respondent's application for a waiver under section 216(c)(4) of the Act.

Accordingly, the following order is entered.

ORDER: The appeal is dismissed.

Executive Office for Immigration Review
U.S. Department of Justice
5107 Leesburg Pike
Falls Church, VA 20530

Dear Mr. Rosenblum:

In the second removal proceeding of Alina Shipilina, 047 202 363, a Russian alien, the Immigration Judge administratively closed the proceeding because “BIA reports it does not have the file.” (Ex. A, Immigration Court Order, June 1, 2012).

I cannot provide you with the entire file, but I can provide a copy of a key document—her diary—that, in part, resulted in the Immigration Court upholding her removal in her first removal proceeding (Ex. B, Removal Proceeding Transcript, pp. 76 – 86), and the BIA affirming that decision (Ex. C, In re Alina Shipilina, page 2, February 12, 2009).

If E.O.I.R. is interested in replacing part of its “lost” file, please let me know.

Sincerely,

/S/

Dear Mr. Hollander:

Your August 19, 2014, letter to the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR) was referred to me for response. You offer to provide a diary belonging to Alina Shipilina, which you say is relevant to an appeal that was pending in 2012 with the Board of Immigration Appeals (Board) relating to a visa petition filed on Ms. Shipilina's behalf. In appeals involving visa petitions, the file is transferred directly from the Department of Homeland Security, United States Citizenship and Immigration Services, to the Board. The Board makes its decision based on materials in the file, as well as those submitted by parties. EOIR does not accept documents, such as Ms. Shipilina's diary, from non-parties.

Sincerely,

Emmett Soper
Associate General Counsel

Inspector General
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W., Ste. 4706
Washington, D.C. 20530-0001

Dear Mr. Horowitz:

On February 12, 2009, the Board of Immigration Appeals upheld an Immigration Court's decision to remove the alien Alina Shipilina (INA 047-202-363), an associate of the Chechen Special Islamic Regiment, for marriage fraud. (Ex. A, B.I.A. Decision).

Prior to the B.I.A.'s decision, Ms. Shipilina for a second time had married and divorced an American. Upon the B.I.A.'s dismissal of her appeal, she once again filed for a VAWA waiver. USCIS denied that waiver based, in part, on the contents of her file from her application for a VAWA waiver concerning her first marriage. USCIS concluded Ms. Shipilina's second marriage was fraudulent as was the first and placed her into removal proceedings.

Ms. Shipilina appealed the USCIS's second denial to the B.I.A. On March 30, 2012, the Immigration Judge adjourned her Master Hearing to June 1, 2012, in order to obtain confirmation that Ms. Shipilina was appealing USCIS's second decision to have her removed.

On June 1, 2012, the Immigration Judge administratively closed the removal proceeding against Ms. Shipilina because B.I.A. "does not have [her] file." (Ex. B, Order of the Immigration Judge).

Apparently Ms. Shipilina's file, which contained reports from the F.B.I. and D.E.A. concerning her, has disappeared, so she remains within this country. Such occurrences are common in her homelands of Russia and Chechnya, but I thought they no longer happened here.

If there are any questions, please contact me.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

/S/

Senator Chuck Grassley
Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman
224 Dirksen Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510-6050

Dear Senator Grassley:

The immigration file on a Russian associate of the Chechen Special Islamic Regiment disappeared when the alien appealed a U.S.C.I.S. removal decision to the D.O.J. Board of Immigration Appeals. The file included reports by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Drug Enforcement Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency.

Neither the General Counsel for the D.O.J. Executive Office for Immigration Review nor the D.O.J. Inspector General is concerned over how such a file could disappear.

In response to a letter notifying General Counsel Jeff Rosenblum of the disappearance, his office ignored that the file had disappeared and ignored that the case was administratively closed as a result. (Ex. A, Response & Ex. B, Order of the Immigration Judge). Inspector General Michael E. Horowitz has not even bother to respond to an October 25, 2014, notification. (Ex. C).

The alien is a Russian raised in Grozny, Chechnya: Alina Shipilina (INA 047-202-363). U.S.C.I.S. denied her application for a V.A.W.A. waiver based on the contents of the disappeared file by concluding that Ms. Shipilina's second marriage to a U.S. citizen was fraudulent—just as was her first marriage to a U.S. citizen—and placed her in a removal proceeding.

On March 30, 2012, Immigration Judge Jesse B. Christensen adjourned her removal hearing to June 1, 2012, in order to obtain confirmation that Ms. Shipilina was appealing to the B.I.A. U.S.C.I.S.'s second decision to have her removed.

On June 1, 2012, the Immigration Judge administratively closed the removal proceeding against Ms. Shipilina because B.I.A. "reports it does not have the file." (Ex. B).

As a former manager of Kroll Associates in Moscow, I know such occurrences are common in Ms. Shipilina's homelands of Russia and Chechnya, but I had mistakenly believed they no longer happened here.

Thank you for your time.

Jefferson B. Sessions
Attorney General of the United States
U.S. Department of Justice
950 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530-0001

Dear Attorney General Sessions:

Immigration Judge Jesse B. Christensen, appointed by the Obama Administration, dismissed the second removal proceeding against a Russian national with ties to the Chechen Barayev crime organization because the Russian's immigration file had disappeared. (Exhibit A, Avetisyan Dismissal because the Board of Immigration Appeal "does not have the file.").

As a former manager of Kroll Associates in Moscow, Russia, I was aware of crucial files disappearing from government offices in both Russia and Mexico through bribery, but never realized that the practice had apparently reached America under the Obama Administration.

The Russian national is Alina Alexandrovna Shipilina (INA 047-202-363), raised in Grozny, Chechnya, and still living and working in New York City.

On October 1, 2004, the Department of Homeland Security denied her first application for a waiver under the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. § 1186a(c)(4), based on the contents of her file and placed her in a removal proceeding. Her file contained reports from the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Drug Enforcement Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency.

On March 20, 2008, Immigration Judge Paul A. DeFonzo ruled that she be deported. Ms. Shipilina appealed to the B.I.A., which denied her appeal on February 2, 2009. (Exhibit B, B.I.A. decision denying appeal).

While her appeal was still pending, Ms. Shipilina married an American for a second time and subsequently filed once again for a waiver under 8 U.S.C. § 1186a(c)(4). The Department of Homeland Security for a second time denied her application once again based on the contents of her file and placed her in a removal proceeding for a second time.

On March 30, 2012, Immigration Judge Jesse B. Christensen adjourned her removal hearing to June 1, 2012, in order to obtain confirmation that Ms. Shipilina was again appealing to the B.I.A. the Department of Homeland Security's second decision to have her removed.

On June 1, 2012, Immigration Judge Jesse B. Christensen administratively closed the removal proceeding against Ms. Shipilina because B.I.A. “reports it does not have the file.” (Ex. A).

In 2015, the above information was provided to the General Counsel for the D.O.J. Executive Office for Immigration Review and the D.O.J. Inspector General, but given the Obama Administration’s policies, neither took any action.

Perhaps now with you as Attorney General, the Department of Justice may look into this micro-aggression against the rule of law.

Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

/s/

Dear Mr. Hollander:

This letter is in response to your correspondence to the Attorney General, Jefferson B. Sessions III, of the United States Department of Justice, dated February 2017. Your letter has been referred the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR), Office of the General Counsel, for response. In your letter, you expressed concern regarding an Immigration Judge's adjudication of a removal proceeding in 2012.

EOIR's primary mission is to adjudicate immigration cases by fairly, expeditiously, and uniformly interpreting and administering the Nation's immigration laws. Under delegated authority of the Attorney General, EOIR conducts immigration court proceedings in the 58 immigration courts located throughout the Nation. In addition, EOIR includes the Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA), which is the highest administrative body for interpreting and applying immigration laws. The BIA has nationwide jurisdiction to hear appeals from certain decisions made by immigration judges and by district directors of the Department of Homeland Security (DHS). Most BIA decisions are subject to judicial review in the federal courts of appeals and, ultimately, by the United States Supreme Court. Throughout its daily operations, EOIR is committed to adjudicating immigration cases and rendering immigration decisions in a careful and timely manner, guided by the standards of due process and fair treatment for all parties involved.

Your letter will be sent to the Office of the Chief Immigration Judge, who has established a procedure that allows any person to file a complaint about the conduct of an Immigration Judge. Thank you again for your letter to the Attorney General and for your suggestions on how to improve the immigration system.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Hollander:

We received your letter dated May 1, 2017. However, we are unable to take action on your concerns at this time.

This office handles complaints about immigration judge misconduct. Your message does not specifically allege that an immigration judge has engaged in misconduct, and following a complete review of your concerns, we have determined that no judicial misconduct occurred. Accordingly, this matter is considered closed.

Responses to Frank Meo's Questions 7/24/18, re: Alina ("Angelina") Aexandrovna Shipilina

1. Any government officials pursue investigations?
  - a. Brett C. Stanley, US Immigration and Naturalization Service, American Embassy, PSC 77 – INS, APO, AE 09721, Moscow, Russia, initiated deportation proceedings against Shipilina.
  - b. NYC Board of Elections referred Shipilina's registering to vote to the Queens' DA and the U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District in .
2. Anyone in the U.S. who may know about Shipilina's activities past and present?
  - a. Shipilina's only friend in the U.S. whom I met was Tatyanna, another stripper at Flash Dancers in November 2000 and a martial arts student at what I recall was World Oyama Karate - Matsumoto Dojo during that time. It is now at 754 9th Ave, New York, NY 10019. I can not find her last name, if I ever knew it.
  - b. Anastasia Anatolyevna Vasilyeva and Nicolay ("Dima") N. Vasilyev: Dima took his wife's last name. The two ran the Tatyanna Vasilyeva House of Fashion, a call girl operation in Krasnodar, Russia. They sent Shipilina and other girls to work in Cyprus brothels and brothels in other countries. They expanded their operations to Valentina Women's Clothing Store and Custom Tailoring at 18900 W. Bluemound Rd., Brookfield, Wisc 53045, tel. 262 796 0434.

As of July 2003: Anastasia A. Vasilyeva, Social Security number 395-21-8413 Permanent resident card (green card) number 047-469-650, 2876 A SOUTH 46TH STREET, MILWAUKEE WISCONSIN 53219. Nicolay N. Vasilyev, Social security number 395-21-8414, Permanent resident card (green card) number 047-469-651, 2876 A SOUTH 46TH STREET, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN 53219, (414) 545-16-74
  - c. Barry P. Babler: FBI special agent in Milwaukee who told Cynthia D. Zahnow, an associate of the Vasilyevas, to file a harassment complaint with Brookfield Police against Den Hollander, according to what Zahnow told the Brookfield Police. Zahnow worked at Valentina Women's Clothing Store or at Custom Tailoring.
  - d. Bob Henning: New York City detective from the 114th Precinct in Astoria, Queens. Tried to arrest Den Hollander for violating an order of protection that had been dismissed. Apparently, knew Shipilina personally.
  - e. Gene Kazenko: INS agent to whom Den Hollander complained about Shipilina lying on her immigration papers. Kazenko subsequently claimed he interviewed Shipilina but could not do anything because he had no confirmation that she was connected to organized crime.

- f. Grace Del Marco Models for Print and TV, Dee Simmons-Edelstein Director: Shipilina's first New York City model agency, then located in the Empire State Building.
- g. Inessa Alexnadrovna Shipilina is Shipilina's mother whom she may have sponsored for a green card under the family exemption.
- h. Jack Sachs: Shipilina's lawyer for her first removal proceeding.
- i. John Madison or John Pierre: Threatened Den Hollander three times not to pursue activities in divorce/annulment proceedings and the indictment of Inessa Shipilina in Russia for criminal defamation. True identity known to Mario Pisano, FBI agent, 212 384 2295, and Vadim Thomas, FBI, 212 384 3698, agent, with whom Den Hollander met February 13, 2002, at 26 Federal Plaza.
- j. Lu Lieber FBI Office of Professional Responsibility: Telephone call from her around 11:40am Wednesday, Feb. 4, 2004, in which Lieber said the FBI would not tell me the results of the substance tested, the FBI would not tell me the name of the man who made the threats, but did say they knew who the man was that made the threats, and that the FBI has no obligation to provide information or the results of an on going investigation. [Pisano and Thomas never said there was an on going investigation when they refused to provide Den Hollander with any information.]

Lieber also stressed that the FBI was under no obligation to answer the professional responsibility complaint I made by telephone against Thomas and Pisano and that her telephone call was a courtesy. I responded that the courtesy was my listening to a nasty government bureaucrat tell a US citizen that the FBI was not going to help him. (John Madison in his second threatening telephone call also used the phrase this is a "courtesy call."). Lieber refused to provide the FBI's decisions in writing.

- k. Dr. Marc L. Paulsen: California doctor who produces pornography in Russia and imports it to Southern California. At one point, Custom's seized some of his pornography that he was bringing into the U.S.
  - l. Nicholas Mundy: Shipilina's first immigration lawyer and employer of Peter Petrovich. Both tried to get Den Hollander to lie on an affidavit to the INS in order for Shipilina to obtain a permanent residency.
3. Did Shipilina have any connections to Russian Intelligence?

- a. Her former boy friend in Krasnodar had a brother who worked for the FSB. She went to him for assistance such as obtaining Aeroflot tickets quickly.

A Fort Lee man with weapons charges stemming from a 2014 police raid was sentenced to five years in state prison.

Originally charged with multiple weapons and drugs charges, Onn Rapeika, a former pizza shop owner, pleaded guilty to a single charge of unlawful possession of an assault weapon.

He must serve at least 3 1/2 years, according to the Bergen County Prosecutor's Office. He was sentenced Friday.

When police entered Rapeika's apartment in 2014, they quickly spotted surveillance cameras and discovered that the doors and windows were fortified with locks and steel bars. There was also a "false wall," according to the Fort Lee Daily News.

In total, more than 30 firearms, including assault weapons, and a "large quantity of narcotics" were seized by police from Rapeika's Fort Lee home by police.

Thousands of rounds of ammunition, cocaine, marijuana, marijuana wax, molly, prescription drugs, and portable compressed gas tanks were also confiscated in the raid.

Police also found explosive devices in Rapeika's garage, according to Fort Lee Police Chief Keith M. Bendul. The bomb squad determined they were inert and not a danger.

In 2017, a Bergen County judge dismissed Rapeika's $8 million lawsuit against the Fort Lee Police Department as a result of the raid according to a complaint filed in U.S. District Court in New Jersey.

Rapeika claimed $250,000 of his property was destroyed, damaged, seized and unaccounted for during the raid.

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Plaintiff-appellant Hollander appeals from a final order to dismiss with prejudice under Rule 12(b)(6), reported at 340 F.Supp.2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2004) (Castel, J.).

Throughout this brief, the following nomenclature applies: cites to the Complaint or Supplemental Complaint (Supp. Complaint) are to numbered paragraphs; cites to the District Court's Memorandum and Order ("Order"), Order not to disqualify ("Disqualify") and excerpts from Plaintiff's Memorandum of Law in Opposition to Certain Defendants' Motions to Dismiss ("Opposition") are to a page number hyphen paragraph, which may or may not be a full paragraph. References to documents in the Appendix are designated by "A" hyphen page number.

SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION

The Southern District Court had jurisdiction pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1964(c) of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act ("RICO"), 18 U.S.C. §§1961-68. The District Court had pendent jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §1367 over state law claims. This Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §1291.

ISSUES FOR REVIEW

1. Did the District Court misapply the law for determining a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss?

2. Did the District Court contradict the U.S. Supreme Court, Second Circuit and other courts on what constitutes an injury to business or property under civil RICO 18 U.S.C. 1964(c)?

3. Did the District Court contravene holdings of the U.S. Supreme Court, the Second Circuit and other courts by wrongly stating and misapplying the proximate causation element for standing under civil RICO on a motion to dismiss?

4. Did the District Court abuse its discretion by fabricating a fact, creating a Catch-22, using a trivial excuse and relying on its key misrepresentation of the Complaint to slam the door on even one leave to amend the Complaint?

5. Did the District Court violate the plaintiff's due process rights by mixing pro se and attorney standards in deciding to dismiss with prejudice and ignoring the policy behind Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(d) for allowing supplemental complaints?

CASE STATEMENT

The Complaint and Supplemental Complaint of this civil RICO action against a relatively few members and associates of the Russian mafia were dismissed with prejudice, denying plaintiff-appellant leave to file even one amended complaint. A supplemental complaint is not an amended complaint although the same standard is used in deciding whether to grant either. Plaintiff-appellant filed post-judgment motions to disqualify and reconsider, both were denied.

FACTS

The term “Russian mafia” means the Russian International Crime Organization or the “Enterprise” as stated in the Complaint ¶¶ 1, 10-15, A-24, 25-26. It includes members and associates, such as the defendants; those identified as Russian Mafiosi by law enforcement agencies, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation’s unit on Russian organized crime; various Russian, Chechen, American, Cypriot, Mexican and gangsters of other nationalities; assorted Chechen Islamic terrorists; and the more than thirty Russian gangs now operating in the U.S., notably New York and Miami, Robert I. Friedman, Red Mafiya: How the Russian Mob Has Invaded America, p. xix-xx, Little Brown & Company (2002). The defendants in this case comprise a small portion (Complaint ¶ 15, A-26, Opposition pp 1-1, 3-1, 28-2, 135-2, A-128) of the very large Russian mafia that reaches across international borders, according to former Central Intelligence Agency Director John Deutch, Emergency Net News Service, May 3, 1996, Vol. 2-124. Former F.B.I. Director Louis Freeh said, “Evidence that organized crime activity from [Russia] is expanding and will continue to expand to the United States is well-documented.” Id. Russian criminal operations in America, such as money laundering, illegal money transactions, prostitution, narcotics trafficking, extortion and fraud are often carried out in cooperation with La Cosa Nostra.

Report on Russian Organized Crime, 1997, Task Force headed by William H. Webster, Center for Strategic and International Studies.

The Russian mob, once a hierarchical structure under the Soviet Union, diffused with the end of Communist Party power into a confederation of crime groups using modern-day management principles—something along the lines of a diversified worldwide conglomerate with all its attendant business relationships. (Complaint ¶¶ 10, 14, 874, A-25, 26, 107-08.) Freed from scheming for rubles, the smarter members of the Russian mafia chased hard currency by expanding their criminal operations to the wealthy West: full of suckers and sensitive law enforcement officials. (Complaint ¶ 13, A-26.) Bringing Russian crime to Western shores meant the continual transplanting of money-making assets into foreign markets where their successful utilization required a strategy of (a) using money from criminal activities to set up and expand Russian mob businesses, such as prostitution, pornography, strip joints, drug pushing and money laundering; (b) protecting those businesses through criminal activities, such as tampering with informants and witnesses, obstructing justice, bribery and coercion; and (c) running the operations by engaging in crimes, such as white slavery, immigration fraud, importing pornography, drug smuggling and the improper use of international facilities. The Russian mafia uses a complex, intertwined web of predicate acts to maintain and continue expanding its activities in an insatiable drive for new targets and more money, causing widespread and varied harm.

(Complaint ¶¶ 879-85, A-109, 110.)

This crime syndicate, as with all organizations, consists of and acts through people, and no one victim, or unwitting customer, comes into contact with all the decision-makers and support personnel that go into making that enterprise successful. But they are there in the shadows supporting those on the front lines, giving aid and direction in order to reach its goals.

This RICO case concerns just one specific string of events and injuries arising out of the Russian mob bringing prostitutes to New York and other states, passing drugs and large sums of money back and forth between countries, creating and trafficking in pornography, and threatening physical violence to anyone who might get in its way.

The defendants include the Baraev Chechen crime group (responsible for the 2002 Moscow Theater hostage taking) that defendants Alina and Inessa Shipilina used to threaten plaintiff-appellant Hollander and various witnesses in Krasnodar, Russia; assorted Russian Mafiosi, including a crime boss for southern Russia; corrupt Russian government officials; movers and shakers of Krasnodar; pimps; prostitutes; pornographers; pushers; strip joints and brothels, euphemistically called “exotic dancing clubs” by the District Court, Order 1-1, A-131; Internet call girl operations, euphemistically called “escort agencies” by the District Court, id.; threatening goons; a less than honest City cop; an ex-wife Russian prostitute and procurer; a Russian mother-in-law; and, of course, lawyers.

The defendants work hard and ingeniously to enrich themselves in furthering a key goal of the Russian mafia: to infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets, especially the U.S. (Complaint ¶¶ 2, 13, 27-28, 36, 320-22, 329, 331, 350, 352, 363, 366, 370-71, 375, 377-79, 381-83, 387-88, 390, 403, 410, 426, 429-30, 434-35, 874(m)-(r), A-25, 26-28, 52-63, 108.) In order to grow and supply the Russian mafia’s sex business in America, the mob uses various methods, such as suckering American men into sponsoring and financing Russian mob prostitutes and procurers for U.S. residency and citizenship involving, unbeknown to the American, a fraudulent marriage. (Complaint ¶¶ 135-38, 164, 360-61, 883, A-36, 38, 56, 109.) The fraudulent marriage for citizenship contrivance is the part that ensnared Hollander in the Russian mafia’s Scheme to expand into hard currency markets. (Complaint ¶¶ 165, 170-72, 174-80, 183, 360-66, 880, A-38, 39-40, 56-57, 109.) This contrivance falsely depicts Russian mafia prostitutes as honest, moral ladies who want to commit to a marriage since if the truth were told, American men would run the other way. (Complaint ¶ 883, A-109.) So, with lies and drugs secretly fed the marks (Complaint ¶¶ 137, 171-72, 175-79, 180, 185, 206, 216, A-36, 39-40, 42-43), American men are convinced they've found the one, but it's really a costly pig in a poke.

Because the trail of harm involves fraudulent marriages, residencies and naturalizations rather than fraudulent business transactions, the injuries to property interests are no less serious. A scheme to defraud is measured against a standard of "moral uprightness, of fundamental honesty, fair play and right dealing in the general and business life of members of society." Gregory v. US, 253 F.2d 104, 109 (5th Cir.1958). When criminal instrumentalities exploit human emotions of the heart rather than the pocketbook, a man does not lose his rights under U.S. law, or, at least, that's the way it used to work in this country.

The success of the Russian mafia's Scheme for one of its cash generating assets, such as defendant Shipilina, first requires transferring the human capital to the New World and slotting her into one or more mob businesses—prostitution, stripping, pornography or procuring. That step involves the predicate acts of white slavery, 18 U.S.C. 2421 & 2422, importing an alien for immoral purposes, 8 U.S.C. 1328, fraud and the misuse of visas, 18 U.S.C. 1546, failure to file statement about an alien, 18 U.S.C. 2424, and eventually procurement of nationality unlawfully, 18 U.S.C. 1425. To keep the customers coming back for more from the new asset often means drugs, 21 U.S.C. 841 and 952. A Russian prostitute and lap-dancer in America easily generates $150,000 tax-free a year.

The income stream can be threatened if the husband or boy-friend finds out the truth and complains to the authorities, or, at least, that's the way it worked in the old movies. Protecting the mob's human capital from deportation, arrest or imprisonment, which would ruin the purpose of its Scheme for any particular asset, often requires mail and wire fraud, 18 U.S.C. 1341 & 1343, use of interstate or international facilities in aid of a racketeering enterprise, 18 U.S.C. 1952, bribery 18 U.S.C. 201, attempting to obstruct a criminal investigation 18 U.S.C. 1510, tampering with a witness and informant, 18 U.S.C. 1512, and even conspiracy to commit murder-for-hire 18 U.S.C. 1958, as in this case. To assure that the mob's profits from its asset escape the taxman, money laundering, 18 U.S.C. 1956, and failing to file reports on exporting amounts of over $10,000, 31 U.S.C. 5316, are used. The Russian mafia's expansion into the West has created a vertically integrated business of supply, service, protection, profit maximization and reinvestment with a huge appetite for new assets.

Certain defendants, playing her or his part in the success of the mob's expansion, committed various predicate acts to get defendant Shipilina into the U.S., keep her here and profit from the ongoing value she creates.

ARGUMENT SUMMARY

“While not all district courts are hostile to RICO, ... [they] often use various devices to restrict it.” Rakoff & Goldstein, RICO Civil and Criminal, § 2.03[1], at 2-41 (2005 ed.) The District Court did just that by rewriting the allegations in the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint, then mistakenly stating and misapplying the law to its newly invented averments to bounce this case out of the lower court for failure to allege a compensable injury and proximate cause.

The District Court claims: Hollander discovered the RICO Scheme involving defendant Shipilina in August 2000—false; the Complaint alleges harm from RICO violations after August 2000 as mostly resulting from Hollander’s discovery of the Scheme—false; allegations of other injuries after August 2000 were general and conclusory—contradicts Supreme Court rulings; the Complaint didn’t allege RICO injuries prior to August 2000—false; employee termination and shareholder RICO actions apply for determining proximate cause—wrong, Hollander was not an employee of the Russian mob and not terminated by it (at least not yet) and didn’t own its stock; injuries were not to business or property—wrong; the Scheme involving defendant Shipilina only aimed at entry into the U.S.—false; the Complaint did not allege Hollander was an intended victim or target—false, the Court wrongly applied this questionable test; and Hollander did not request leave to amend the Complaint—false.

ARGUMENT

I. Rule 12(b)(6) Errors

Did the District Court misapply the law on deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss?

After reciting the law for determining a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal, Order 6-3, 7-2, A-136, 137, the District Court proceeded to misapply it. The Court failed to accept all of the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint's allegations as true, California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S.Ct. 609 (citation omitted)(1972), failed to draw all inferences in favor of the plaintiff, Levy v. Southbrook International Investments, Ltd., 263 F.3d 10, 14 (2d Cir. 2001), and failed to apply the rule that "[d]ismissal of a civil RICO complaint for failure to state a claim is appropriate only when 'it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with [plaintiff's] allegations,'" Commercial Cleaning Services LLC v. Colin Serv. Sys. Inc., 271 F.3d 374, 380 (2d Cir. 2001) (quoting H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 US 229, 249-50, 106 L.Ed.2d 195, 109 S.Ct. 2893 (1989)).

Although the District Court stated, "I have ... accepted the well-pleaded allegations as true," Order 3-1, A-133, such treatment is nowhere evident. From page one, the Court manifested its disbelief by asserting the Complaint "spins a tale of a dark netherworld of international intrigue and deception." Order 1-1, A-

131. The Court misrepresented, misconstrued and ignored many pertinent allegations in the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint in order to gerrymander both into fitting its conclusions—reminiscent of the newspaper reporting motto, “Don’t let the facts get in the way of a good story,” only here, it’s don’t let the allegations get in the way of dismissal.

The District Court failed to accept as true the allegations in the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint concerning:

- The Enterprise, a.k.a. the Russian mafia,
- Discovery of the Russian mafia’s Scheme that entangled Hollander,
- Violations of 18 U.S.C. 1962 (“RICO violations”) before August 2000 and after,
- Injury to Hollander’s law and consulting business and property before August 2000 and after,
- The full extent of the Russian mafia’s Scheme as applied against Hollander, and
- Causation of injuries.

A. Enterprise

The District Court misconstrued the Complaint by asserting the defendants comprised the entire criminal Enterprise. Order 1-1, A-131. The Enterprise is the Russian mafia and the defendants participate in that criminal syndicate (Complaint

¶¶ 1, 15, A-1, 26; Opposition pp 1-1, 3-1, 28-2, 135-2, A-128) by working to achieve its ends and reap its benefits (Complaint ¶¶ 12, 13, A-26), as would any member or associate of a large non-hierarchical organization. The defendants do not comprise the entire Russian mafia; they are just part of it and many were active in carrying out the Scheme applied against Hollander.

A person who is loan-sharked by the Bonanno crime family will not likely run into those who issue fake construction bonds. No individual will ever be the victim of all of a gang's illegal acts, nor have contact with all of the gang's culprits, but the entire gang is still the Enterprise, and all its players joint and severally liable, See, e.g., Scales v. U.S., 367 U.S. 203, 226-27, 6 L.Ed.2d 782, 81 S.Ct. 1469, 1485 (1961); Fleischhauer v. Feltner, 879 F.2d 1290, 1301 (6th Cir. 1989). The U.S. Senate report on RICO states, "What is needed here ... are new approaches that will deal not only with individuals, but also with the economic base through which those individuals constitute such a serious threat to the economic well-being of the Nation." Russello v. U.S., 464 U.S. 16, 27, 78 L.Ed.2d 17, 104 S.Ct. 296 (1983)(quoting S.Rep. No. 91-617, p. 79 (1969)). In this case, that economic base is the Russian mafia of which the defendants comprise some of its members and associates.

B. District Court's Maginot Line of August 2000

The District Court states Hollander discovered the Russian mafia's Scheme as it applied to him in August 2000. Order 4-1 & 2, 12-1, A-134, 142. Not so, Hollander didn't discover the defendants were engaged in a Russian mob RICO scheme until the end of July 2002 when a consulting attorney first raised the issue. (Opposition pp 28-2, 37-1, 135-2, A-129.) Any uncertainty on when Hollander discovered the Scheme could easily be cleared up by an affidavit from that attorney in an amended complaint.

The District Court failed to draw all inferences in favor of the plaintiff, Levy, 263 F.3d at 14 and failed to apply the rule that "[d]ismissal of a civil RICO complaint for failure to state a claim is appropriate only when 'it is clear that no relief could be granted under any set of facts that could be proved consistent with [plaintiff's] allegations,'" Commercial Cleaning Services, 271 F.3d at 379. An amended complaint and affidavit would show such a "set of facts" despite the Court's claims that any amended complaint "would be futile," Order 16-2, A-146, and unable "to truthfully allege more," Disqualify 5-2, A-154. It would have disabused the Court of its key misunderstanding of the Complaint on which it relied for attributing the proximate causation of injuries after August 2000 to Hollander's discovery and subsequent investigation of the Scheme rather than defendants' RICO violations to protect and further the Scheme.

C. Western front of the District Court’s Maginot Line—August 2000 and later—where it conjured a new cause for injuries.

The District Court cherry-picked and misrepresented the Complaint’s allegations in order to wrongly claim that injury to Hollander’s business and property arose from his discovery of the Scheme in August 2000, which led to an “investigation of the Enterprise.” Order 2-1, 4-1 & 2, 9-1, 11-2, 12-1, A-132, 134, 139, 141-42. As stated above, Hollander did not discover a RICO Scheme until July 2002, which means the District Court misrepresented the allegations when it stated “as plaintiff himself asserts, any such injury... arose from his discovery of the Scheme in August 2000 and his investigation....” of such, Order 12-1, A-142.

The Complaint states that in August 2000, Hollander became suspicious of and investigated “... Shipilina’s involvement in prostitution when she began secretly contacting Flash Dancer customers....” (Complaint ¶ 214, A-43.) The investigation was to determine whether his wife was a prostitute, not to ferret out Russian organized crime. The District Court, however, ignored the plain meaning of the Complaint by distorting it to say Hollander became suspicious of defendant Shipilina working for the Russian mafia and its Scheme involving her. Order 4-1 & 2, A-134.

Once Hollander learned defendant Shipilina engaged in prostitution, he sought a legal separation and divorce. (Complaint ¶¶ 220-21, A-44.) That decision did not result from any suspicion of the Russian mafia’s Scheme because Hollander was still unaware of the Scheme at the time (Complaint ¶ 220, A-44). Yet, the District Court dissemblingly claims the desire for a divorce as a intervening event: “[p]laintiff alleges, in considerable detail...” that Hollander’s “desire to divorce Ms. Shipilina” resulted in the defendants engaging in criminal acts. Order 4-2, A-134. Baloney, the Complaint doesn’t say that. The Complaint does not allege Hollander’s “desire to divorce” led to RICO violations. It alleges that certain defendants’ desire to carry out and protect the Scheme until it succeeded in gaining defendant Shipilina permanent residency and U.S. citizenship is what resulted in additional RICO violations that harmed Hollander. (See Complaint ¶¶ 210-12, A-43.) The Complaint actually includes an entire subsection titled “VII(E) Enterprise’s Illegal Activities to Protect its Scheme.” (Complaint ¶¶ 228-319, A 44-52.)

In order to assure success of the Scheme as originally formulated in 1999 to win defendant Shipilina permanent residency and naturalization (Complaint ¶ 164, A-38), Shipilina’s lawyers, defendants Mundy and Petrovich, requested in October 2000 that Hollander to commit perjury before the Immigration and Naturalization Service (“INS”) so as to avoid any immigration problems for Shipilina (Complaint ¶¶ 222-25, A-44). In November 2000, Hollander refused (Complaint ¶ 226, A-44), and defendants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and others resorted to RICO violations for protecting the Scheme and keeping part of the Russian mob’s operations hidden by: trying to make Hollander lie to the INS (Complaint ¶¶ 228-30, 232-34, 239-41, A 44-45,), using coercion to avoid an annulment-divorce trial (Complaint ¶¶ 243-45, 273, A-46, 48), interfering with pre-discovery and silencing witnesses (Complaint ¶¶ 256-60, 265-72, A 47-48), threatening Hollander out of making a motion for a trial (Complaint ¶¶ 280-84, A-49), attempting to intimidate Hollander into silence before the INS, which was conducting an investigation of defendant Shipilina, and the Krasnodar prosecutor, who had indicted defendant Inessa Shipilina, (Complaint ¶¶ 285-90, 316-18, A 49-50, 52), intimidating witnesses into recanting their testimony before the Krasnodar prosecutor (Complaint ¶¶ 293-97, A-50), bribing Krasnodar officials to close the case against Inessa Shipilina (Complaint ¶¶ 298-304, A 50-51), attempting to arrest Hollander on a bogus charge (Complaint ¶¶ 306-15, A 51-52), conspiring to commit murder-for-hire (Complaint ¶ 319, A-52), intimidating Hollander to stay out of Krasnodar and not prosecute this RICO action (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 2, 9-10, 12, 13, A 114-115), threatening Hollander again with arrest on a false charge (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 34-38, 43, A 117-118), starting disciplinary proceedings against Hollander to prevent him from proceeding with this RICO case (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 50, 52, 53, A 119-120) and obstructing justice by lying to the District Court (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 59, 61-63, 70, A 120-21).

The Complaint alleges the desire of certain defendants not to give up on the Scheme but to fight for its success in making Shipilina a permanent fixture for the Russian mafia in America and to keep their activities on its behalf secret (Complaint ¶¶ 238, 243-44, 265, A 45-47) caused them to commit RICO violations after August 2000 (Complaint ¶¶ 479-484, 494, 500-01, 506, 512-13, 514-16, 526-27, 529-31, 542-43, 556-559, 573, 586-87, 592-93, 594, 596-97, 622, 625-26, A 68-73, 75-76, 78-79, 82), and injure Hollander (Complaint ¶¶ 239, 242, 256, 270, 313, 900-907, A 45-48, 52, 111-112). Alternatively, after Hollander refused to commit perjury before the INS, defendants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and others embarked on a new scheme of RICO violations to crush any obstacles to defendant Shipilina becoming a long-term dollar-maker for the Russian mob—so far a successful effort: over $750,000 tax free in five years.

The District Court’s devious trek to dismissal partly relies on an incomplete quotation that distorts the cause of harm from criminality by the violators to legal recourse by the victim. According to the Court, Order 9-1, A-139, the injuries “all arose out of ‘plaintiff’s ongoing investigation of the Enterprise’s Scheme’ (Complaint ¶ 907(a), (d), A-112).” The Court, convenient for its argument in this section of the Order, left out the last part of that sentence from the Complaint, “in order to prevent and rectify injury to the plaintiff;” (Complaint ¶ 907(a), A-112). Even had the Court gotten the full quote right, it still got wrong its claim that all alleged injuries arose from investigations. The Complaint alleges defendants caused injury by using funds from racketeering activities (Complaint ¶¶ 900-903, A 111-112), engaging in racketeering activities to acquire or preserve influence in the Russian mafia (Complaint ¶ 904, A-112) (the Court misconstrued this averment as a 1962(a) violation, Order 12 n.6, A-142), committing predicate acts to further the Scheme (Complaint ¶ 905, A-112), conspiring (Complaint ¶ 906, A-112), impugning Hollander’s business reputation (Complaint ¶ 907(e), A-112), obstructing this RICO action (Supp. Complaint ¶ 76) and engaging in RICO violations before the initial investigation into Shipilina’s prostitution, see below I(E) Eastern front Maginot Line—before August 2000.

The Court again rewrote the Complaint by asserting, “That plaintiff’s claimed damages in this case were caused by alleged retaliation for his discovery [August 2000] and subsequent investigation of the Scheme is highlighted ...” in the damages section of the Complaint. Order 13-2, A-143. The Court includes a couple of edited quotes and attributes them as coming from five subsections of the Complaint ¶ 907(a)-(e), A-112, when they actually come from only two: (a) and (d)—a neat trick for applying its argument against the other subsections. In addition, no derivation of the word retaliate appears in either the Complaint or Supplemental Complaint.

The District Court also inaccurately claims, “The Supplemental Complaint consists of allegations of additional [RICO violations]... as a result of [Hollander’s August 2000] investigation of the Enterprise and its Scheme.” Order 5-3, A-135. The Supplemental Complaint actually alleges RICO violations that arose out of certain defendants’ efforts to obstruct this RICO action after it was filed in April 2003. Those violations include a June 4, 2003 telephone call threatening Hollander to stay out of Krasnodar (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 2, 9, 12, A 114-115); an August 25, 2003 threat of arrest based on a fraudulent complaint in order to halt RICO pre-discovery activities in Wisconsin (id. ¶¶ 22-24, 34-38, 43, A 116-118); use of the mails to initiate a state disciplinary proceeding against Hollander that threatened his livelihood and therefore his ability to pursue this RICO action—a not-so-subtle attempt to intimidate him into withdrawing the Complaint (id. ¶¶ 49, 50, 52, 53, A-119); and defendant Shipilina’s obstruction of justice “by filing false and misleading documents in this case,” Order 5-3, A-135, after the Court ordered her to provide addresses for certain defendants, Disqualify 2-1, A-151. The District Court’s distorting of the Supplemental Complaint and drawing of inferences in favor of defendants rather than plaintiff, contra Levy, 263 F.3d 10, 14, actually results in the Court holding that criminals can use RICO acts to deter a civil RICO suit against them.

The District Court misconstrued the pleadings about when Hollander discovered the Scheme so as to avoid holding that certain expenses—those from investigations and litigations for preventing and rectifying injuries to business and property—were not compensable, which would contradict Alexander Grant and Co. v. Tiffany Industries, Inc., 770 F.2d 717, 719 (8th Cir. 1985), cert. denied 474 U.S. 1058 (1986); Stochastic Decisions, Inc. v. DiDomenico, 995 F.2d 1158, 1167 (2d Cir.), cert. denied 510 U.S. 945 (1993). In addition, by claiming those expenses resulted from Hollander determining whether RICO violations occurred, the Court could twist the pleadings into failing to allege causation from the defendants' RICO acts after August 2000 by interposing its invented intervening event. (See below II(B) Proximate Causation.)

In response to defendants' predicate and other criminal acts after August 2000, Hollander tried to mitigate harm to his business and property through various investigations and court actions and did not learn until July 2002 that he was up against the Russian mafia. The District Court ignored this common sense meaning of the Complaint to reach the Orwellian conclusion that when a citizen of the U.S. fights for his rights and redress of grievances, he's the culprit causing himself harm and not those violating the law to connive something they don't deserve by quashing him. The Court apparently believes men should relinquish their rights in such situations.

*****

The Complaint and Supplemental Complaint allege that the RICO violations after August 2000 were not caused by Hollander's acts but the defendants' efforts to further and protect the Scheme that began against Hollander in 1999. Had there been no Scheme, there wouldn't have been those RICO violations. What good is a scheme if it doesn't succeed? And what idiot would initiate a scheme without the intent to do what was necessary to reach its goal? That goal, as stated over and over in the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint, was to achieve defendant Shipilina, a cash-generating asset of the Russian mafia, permanent residency and naturalization. In order to reach that goal, differing defendants engaged in RICO violations from the beginning right through to the prosecution of this action.

Under the District Court's inventive rewriting of the pleadings to shift causation, criminals can effect whatever harm they wish by violating RICO so long as they do it after a plaintiff learns about a scheme against him. Perhaps sending him a postcard is sufficient. And if the victim does not know about the scheme but takes legal steps to put an end to the slings and arrows accosting his business or property, the evildoers can still continue to violate RICO with impunity because they're only doing it in retaliation to a plaintiff's efforts to mitigate harm. So much for the maxim deeply rooted in 1950s American jurisprudence "that no man may take advantage of his own wrong,” Glus v. Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, 359 U.S. 231, 232, 3 L.Ed.2d 770, 79 S.Ct. 760 (1959).

D. As for the other allegations of injury after August 2000 that the District Court did not attribute causation to Hollander’s conduct, the Court wrongly dismissed them by invoking the talismans of “general” and “conclusory.”

Unable to assign the causation of other injuries after August 2000 to the District Court’s invented culprit—the discovery of the Scheme—the Court punted those allegations out of the case by labeling them as “general” and “conclusory” of legal status. Order 12 n.6, 13-2, A 142-43; see Order 5-3, 6-1, A 135-36.

The District Court’s failure to accept “general allegations” contravened NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994) (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 119 L.Ed.2d 351, 112 S.Ct. 2130 (1992), “[a]t the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant’s conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim.”

Under the pre-1938 system of code pleading, legal conclusions were prohibited. But with the modern Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the absurdity of objecting to a complaint for making legal conclusions was illustrated by Professor James, “If one sought to describe a situation having legal significance entirely in words which were devoid of all legal evaluation, the result would be a series of prolix circumlocutions which would serve neither elegance of style nor ease of understanding.” The Objective and Function of the Complaint: Common Law—Codes—Federal Rules, 1961, 14 Vand.L.Rev. 899, 912-918.

The District Courts’ reliance on the old codes to reject allegations of injury and causation as conclusions of law is contrary to holdings by the Supreme Court and other courts. “Whether these charges [in the complaint] be called ‘allegations of fact’ or ‘mere conclusions of the pleader,’ we hold that they must be taken into account in deciding whether the [plaintiff] is entitled to have its case tried,” U.S. v. Employing Plasterer’s Ass’n, 347 U.S. 186, 188, 98 L.Ed. 618, 74 S.Ct. 452, 454 (1954), for “the ancient distinction between “facts” and “conclusions” is no longer significant.” Oil, Chem. & Atomic Workers Int’l Union v. Delta Ref. Co., 277 F.2d 694, 697 (6th Cir. 1960)(citing U.S. v. Employing Plasterer’s Ass’n, 347 U.S. 186, 188). A complaint can allege conclusions if they provide defendants with a minimal notice of the claims, Kyle v. Morton High School, 144 F.3d 448, 455 (7th Cir. 1998); see Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Intel. & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 122 L.Ed.2d 517, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 1163 (1993), which the “some 90 pages and over 900 paragraphs in length,” Order 1-1, A-131, of the Complaint does. Further, “[a] complaint that complies with the Federal rules of civil procedure cannot be dismissed on the ground that it is conclusory or fails to allege facts. The Federal rules require (with irrelevant exceptions) only that the complaint state a claim not that it plead the facts if true would establish ... that the claim was valid.” Higgs v. Carver, 286 F.3d 437, 439 (7th Cir. 2002)(Posner, J.) (citation omitted). Even the Official Forms of the modern Rules plead legal conclusions without specification of the facts, Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ. 3d 1218. In addition, conclusory allegations on the legal effect of events are acceptable if they reasonably follow from the plaintiff’s description of what happened. See Kadar Corp. v. Milbury, 549 F.2d 230, 233 (1st Cir. 1977)(citation omitted). The Complaint’s 91 pages and the Supplemental Complaint’s eight pages of what occurred imply the legal impact of defendants’ acts as recounted in the allegations of injury.

The District Court’s concern over conclusory allegations could have been resolved by allowing Hollander one, just one, leave to amend, which would have conformed with the Rules “powerful presumption against rejecting pleadings for failure to state a claim,” Robbins v. Wilkie, 300 F.3d 1208, 1210 (10th Cir. 2002). Or, the Court could have instructed the defendants to move for a more definite statement under Rule 12(e) if the pleadings failed to specify the allegations in a manner that provided sufficient notice, Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 514, 152 L.Ed.2d 1, 122 S.Ct. 992 (2002). But the Court didn’t.

E. The Eastern front of the Court's Maginot Line—before August 2000

As for injuries from RICO violations before August 2000, the District Court simply ignored them. “The factual allegations detailing these [RICO] activities largely predate plaintiff’s ‘discovery’ of the Scheme in August 2000, and are not alleged to have caused plaintiff injury.” Order 11-2, 12-1, A 141-42.

Contrary to the Court’s claims, the Complaint specifically alleges that to further the Scheme defendant Shipilina applied for and fraudulently obtained a U.S. visa (Complaint ¶¶ 135, 136, 514, A-36, 71), which resulted in an initial interruption of two and a half months in Hollander’s law and consulting business from March through May 2000 (Complaint ¶¶ 186, 187, 188, A-40). The business interruption ended up lasting as a result of subsequent RICO violations until August 2002. Damages from the business interruption before August 2000 are included in the loss of profits, interruption expenses and loss of business opportunities alleged in the Complaint ¶ 907(a)-(c), A-112. Furtherance of the Scheme also entailed mail and wire fraud by defendant Shipilina in June and July 2000 so as to trick Hollander into returning to Russia for her at the cost of a round trip ticket for himself and accommodations in Moscow (Complaint ¶¶ 198-204, 515, 516, A-42, 71.) Other costs to Hollander’s property interests before August 2000 include telephone calls, legal fees, defendant Shipilina’s visa medical, Embassy filing fees and paying for Shipilina’s flight to the U.S. in July 2000 (Complaint ¶ 205, A-42). Such damages may have appeared small to the District Court, but they weren't to Hollander.

F. District Court improperly narrowed the Scheme.

The District Court edited down the extent of the Russian mafia's Scheme pertaining to defendant Shipilina to just gaining her entry into America as a conditional permanent resident. See Order 11-2, 12-1, 13-2, 14-1, A 141-44. The Court's abbreviated version of the Scheme gave it the out to claim the injuries alleged in the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint did not result from "any conspiracy directed" at Hollander," Order 11-2, A-141; that he "was not a target of the Scheme," Order 13-2, A-143; and success "depended on a lack of harm" to him, Order 14-1, A-144 (Court's emphasis). The Court couldn't accept the description of the Scheme in the Complaint as true because then its sophistry supporting dismissal would fail. The pleadings actually allege the Scheme involving Shipilina was to win this Russian mafia asset entry, permanent residency, citizenship and continued financial support from a deceived husband. (Complaint ¶¶ 164, 179, 190, 192, 207, 209-12, 222, 227, 360-61, 397, 879, 880, 882, A 38-44, 56, 59, 109; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 74, 76, A-122.)

Under the Complaint's definition and not the District Court's revisionism, the Scheme concerning Shipilina wouldn't be completed until she received citizenship because then the chance of her deportation back to ruble-currency

Russia was negligible. (Complaint ¶ 211, A-43.) A number of steps were required before defendant Shipilina was ensconced in America as a long-term generator of dollars for the mob: fraudulently obtaining an immigrant visa, conditional permanent residency on entry, permanent residency two years later and naturalization seven years after entry. Landing in America wasn't enough, so to assure maximum return, defendants, in addition to illegal acts prior to entry (Complaint ¶¶ 135-37, 190-93, 201-04, 514-16, 519, A-36, 41-42, 71), took actions to assure a valuable asset stayed in America. They furthered and protected the Scheme by conspiring (Complaint ¶¶ 228, 232, 234, 243, 254, 265, 280, 287, 293, 298, 306, 316, A 44-47, 49-52; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 12, 37, 38, A-115, 118), lulling (Complaint ¶¶ 218-19, 227, 516, A 43-44, 71), targeting (Complaint ¶¶ 227-29, 234, 239-41, 243, 245, 273, 281-83, 288-90, 307-09, 317-19, 494, 506, 518, 530, A 44-46, 48-52, 69-72; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 2, 13, 35, 50, 53, A 114-115, 117, 119), and grinding or attempting to grind Hollander and his witnesses into submission and silence (Complaint ¶¶ 216, 239, 245, 257, 266-68, 273, 282, 289, 297, 308-09, 313, 318, 479, 482, 487, 492, 494, 504, 506, 527, 530-31, 556, A-43, 45-52, 68-70, 72, 75; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 2, 13, 34, 37-38, 52, A 114-115, 117-118).

Improperly narrowing the Scheme's purpose allowed the District Court to claim the defendants RICO violations after August 2000 were not part of the Scheme because their "aim," Order 14-1, A-144, which means "clearly directed intent or purpose,” Webster’s 9th New Collegiate Dictionary, p. 66, “was not to cause injury to plaintiff’s business or property, but rather, to prevent him from interfering with defendant Shipilina’s efforts to obtain legal residency and, therefore, extend the Enterprise’s Scheme into the U.S....” This bizarre reasoning by the Court that human beings who intended the RICO violations post August 2000 against Hollander did not intend or reasonable foresee harm to Hollander’s business or property by carrying out such acts ignores how people achieve their ends in the real world. The path to gaining defendant Shipilina full citizenship required “prevent[ing] [Hollander] from interfering,” Order at 14-1, A-144. So how do hoodlums and lawyers prevent interference with their plans from a professional businessman trying to rectify and prevent injury? Engage in acts that cost him out-of-pocket expenses, legal fees, time, distraction from his business and loss of reputation and goodwill so that he finally gives up because the price to his livelihood is too great. The Court ignores that intending an end is meaningless unless the means are also intended. “Where a racketeering enterprise intends no specific harms to any particular individual, but causes harm by the creation of substantial risk of harm, the victim injured by that enterprise’s harm may have standing....” Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d 366, 376 (2d Cir. 2003). RICO violations aimed at the plaintiff are alleged to have harmed his business and property, which included legal fees and the costs of their attendant investigations.

(Complaint ¶¶ 239-40, 242, 256, 270, 274, 313, 900-907, A 45-48, 52, 111-112; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 49, 77, A-119, 122.)

Alternatively, the Court ignored the natural outgrowth of any criminal scheme—the cover-up, which in itself is a scheme. Numerous RICO violations were committed in order to pressure Hollander and witnesses and bribe Krasnodar officials and a New York City detective so as to hinder, delay or prevent information reaching federal law enforcement officials about certain defendants’ violations of federal law in conducting the Russian mafia’s Scheme involving Shipilina. (Complaint ¶¶ 244, 265, 276, 293-97, 298-304, 306-07, 319, A 46-48, 50-52.) Whether that information was to come by way of testimony in an INS removal proceeding, state court trial or Russian criminal case, it was on its way to federal law enforcement officers until the defendants’ threats and bribes effectively prevented any testimony. Covering up the Scheme as to Shipilina also protected the Scheme involving other Russian mob prostitutes and members. (Complaint ¶¶ 882-84, A-109.)

Alternatively, the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint fairly alleges a series of schemes:

1. Trick Hollander into getting defendant Shipilina into America via a fraudulent marriage and immigration fraud.

2. Lull, reward or coerce Hollander into perjury before the INS to avoid Shipilina immigration problems.
3. Coerce, kidnap and threaten Hollander into foregoing a trial on annulment or divorce, intimidate his witnesses and cover-up evidence.
4. Coerce and threaten Hollander and others not to cooperate with the INS investigation of Shipilina and cover-up evidence.
5. Coerce and threaten Hollander and witnesses not to cooperate with the Krasnodar prosecutor.
6. Obstruct the prosecution of this civil RICO action.

Whichever alternative is chosen, certain defendants didn't stop pursuing their goal involving Shipilina with just her entry into America.

G. More failures to draw inferences in favor of plaintiff.

The District Court failed to draw all inferences from the Supplemental Complaint in favor of the plaintiff. The Court stated the Supplemental Complaint "purports to" update the Complaint. Order 5-3, A-135. "Purport" means "to profess or claim, especially falsely." Black's Law Dictionary, p. 1271, 8th ed. Since judges are experts in the use of language, the implication is the District Court drew inferences in the wrong direction.

Moreover, the Court also took the time in its decision not just to repeat a defense counsel's objection to the filing of the Supplemental Complaint but to ratchet it up and through a backhanded slap make the objection even more unfavorable to the plaintiff. Defendant Shipilina's attorney argued, "[I]t appears that few, if any, of the events cited in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened...." (Sach's August 30, 2004 letter to the Court, emphasis in the original, A-123.) The District Court deleted Sachs' qualifier "it appears" and wrote "few, if any, of the events set forth in the Supplemental Complaint ever really happened ...," Order 6-2, A-136. Then the Court took another swipe at communicating the Supplemental Complaint was bogus by stating "it is not the Court's role at this stage of the litigation to assess the truth or validity of plaintiff's allegations, no matter how fanciful they appear or how difficult they may be to prove," Order 6-2, A-136 (emphasis added). It's also not the Court's role to draw inferences in favor of defendants by tainting the credibility of a pleading with such statements as those, which the Court repeated verbatim in Disqualify 4-2, A-153.

By characterizing the Supplemental Complaint allegations as "[too] difficult to prove," Order 6-2, A-136, the Court contravened Ideal Steel Supply v. Anza, et al., 373 F.3d 251, 264 (2d Cir. 2004)(citations omitted), which held that evidentiary difficulty is not a proper basis for a dismissal pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.

II. Standing

Civil RICO standing applies to “[a]ny person injured in his business or property by reason of a violation of [18 U.S.C. 1962].” 18 U.S.C. 1964(c). To bring suit, a plaintiff must allege: (1) defendants’ violation of 1962, (2) injury to the plaintiff’s business and property and (3) causation of injury by defendants’ violation. Commercial Cleaning Services, 271 F.3d 374, 380. The “by reason of” clause in 18 U.S.C. 1964(c) limits standing to plaintiffs who allege the RICO violation was both the factual and proximate causes of the averred injuries. Commercial Cleaning Services, 271 F.3d at 380.

The District Court restricted its examination to the injury and causation requirements. Order at 7-1, A-137.

A. Injury Errors

Did the District Court contradict rulings by the U.S. Supreme Court, Second Circuit and other courts on what constitutes an injury to business or property under civil RICO?

The District Court incorrectly ruled that injuries to Hollander's business reputation and goodwill are not compensable under civil RICO, Order 8-2, 9-1, A 138-39; cast doubt on whether loss of profits, business interruption expenses, loss of business opportunities and expenses for investigating fraud are recoverable, id.; and ignored injury from out-of-pocket expenses, legal fees, delays and inconvenience in prosecuting a lawsuit, defending against a fraudulent restraining order and costs from reliance on false representations. Civil RICO's remedial purposes are not limited to only compensation for competitive injuries but allow recovery for harm to business or property. Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 497 n. 15, 87 L.Ed.2d 346, 105 S.Ct. 3275 (1985)(emphasis the Court's). Since Congress used the disjunctive “business or property,” it must have meant for the terms to cover different although overlapping concepts. Oscar v. University Students Co-Op. Ass’n, 939 F.2d 808, 810-11 (9th Cir. 1991), rev’d en banc on other grounds, 965 F.2d 783 (9th Cir. 1992); see Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 338-39, 60 L.Ed.2d 931, 99 S.Ct. 2326 (1979).

The Supreme Court and other courts have held that the nature of a property interest is an individual entitlement determined by state law, Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. 422, 430, 71 L.Ed.2d 265, 102 S.Ct. 1148 (1982)(citations omitted); e.g. Isaak v. Trumbull Sav. & Loan Co., 169 F.3d 390, 397 (6th Cir. 1999); Doe v. Roe, 958 F.2d 763, 768 (7th Cir. 1992), and, according to the Supreme Court, the types of interests protected as property are varied, often intangible and relate to the whole area of social and economic fact, Logan 455 U.S. at 430 (citations omitted); contra Oscar v. University Students Co-Op. Ass’n, 965 F.2d 783, 785 (9th Cir. 1992)(en banc)(injury to intangible property not compensable). Under New York law, property includes anything that may be subject to ownership and includes obligations, rights and other intangibles. New York Jur.2d, Prop 1.

Hollander owns and operates his own law practice and business-consulting firm headquartered in New York. The Complaint alleges injuries to his business and property interests, including out-of-pocket expenses beginning well before August 2000. (See Complaint ¶¶ 169, 182-83, 197, 204, 220, 239, 242, 246-47, 256, 270, 274, 313, 900-907; Supp. Complaint ¶ 77). The injuries to Hollander and his business flowed from certain defendants engaging in RICO violations in order to bring the Scheme benefiting defendant Shipilina and the Russian mafia to fruition. Certain defendants tricked Hollander into sponsoring and paying for defendant Shipilina's fraudulently obtained immigrant visa (Complaint ¶¶ 135-36, 164, 170, 186, 190-93, 197, A-36, 38-42), lulled him into paying for her flight to America (Complaint ¶¶ 198-205, A-42), attempted to coerce Hollander into lying to the INS that included bringing a fraudulent restraining order against him (Complaint ¶¶ 228, 234, 239-41, A 44-45), sought to prevent an annulment-divorce trial that would expose the Scheme and certain defendants involvement with the Russian mafia (Complaint ¶¶ 243-45, 273, 280-82, A-46, 48-49), intimidated annulment-divorce witnesses from providing pre-discovery information, testifying in discovery or at trial or providing information to the INS (Complaint ¶¶ 265-68, A 47-48), attempted to prevent Hollander from cooperating with an INS investigation into the Scheme involving defendant Shipilina (Complaint ¶¶ 286-90, 316-18, A 49-50, 52), threatened Hollander with two false arrests (Complaint ¶¶ 306-13, A 51-52; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 24-36) and attempted to obstruct this RICO action (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 2, 9, 12, 34-38, 43, 49, 52-53, 59-64, A 114-115, 117-120).

Concerning the injury to business category, the District Court stealthily confused harm to business reputation and goodwill with a personal injury, Order at 7-3, 8-1 & 2, 9-1, A 137-39, so as to hold that Hollander's injuries to his business reputation and goodwill "are simply not the type of injuries ...actionable under RICO," Order at 8-2, 9-1, A 138-39. Bolstering this mistake, the District Court wrongly cited "[s]ee Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 265-68, 117 L.Ed.2d 532, 112 S.Ct. 1311, (1992); Manson v. Stacescu, 11 F.3d 1127, 1132-33 (2d Cir. 1993)," Order at 9-1, A-139, where the Supreme Court and Second Circuit didn't even deal with the definition of business or property injuries at those pages. Putting the ruse aside, other courts have held an injury to business reputation and goodwill is recoverable under civil RICO. Khurana v. Innovative Health Care Sys. Inc. 130 F.3d 143 150-51 (5th Cir. 1997) dismissed as moot Teel v. Khurana, 525 U.S. 979 (1998) (violations caused injury to professional reputation); Alexander Grant, 770 F.2d 717, 719 (business damaged in its reputation)<sup>1</sup>

Loss of profits from Hollander's law and consulting business due to interference from the initial success of the Scheme in defrauding Hollander into assisting defendant Shipilina to enter the U.S. prior to August 2000 and, subsequently, from the defendants' RICO violations to further and protect the Scheme are recoverable. "When a commercial enterprise suffers a loss of money, it suffers an injury to both its business and property." Reiter v. Sonotone Corp., 442 U.S. 330, 339. The lost of profits are a compensable injury to business. Terminate Control Corp. v. Horowitz, 28 F.3d 1335, 1343 (2d Cir. 1994); Philatelic Foundation v. Kaplan, 1986 WL 5629 at * 11 (S.D.N.Y. May 9, 1986), dismissed in part 647 F.Supp. 1344. The "vast majority of cases" that have addressed the issue of lost profits or expectancy damages have found them recoverable under RICO, Frankford Trust Co. v. Advest, Inc., 943 F.Supp. 531, 533-34 (E.D. Pa. 1996)(citations omitted), while the Supreme Court found future injuries from an antitrust conspiracy recoverable, Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 401 U.S. 321, 339, 28 L.Ed.2d 77, 91 S.Ct. 795 (1971).

Business interruption and expenses resulting from RICO violations to carry out and protect the Russian mafia's Scheme from its inception (Complaint ¶

907(b), A-112) are recoverable and sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss.

R.A.G. S. Couture, Inc. v. Hyatt, 774 F.2d 1350, 1354 (5th Cir. 1985), Continental Assur. Co. v. Lombardo, 1987 WL 8198 at *2 (E.D. Pa. Mar. 19, 1987).

The value of business opportunities lost due to RICO violations to carry out and protect the Scheme from its inception, (Complaint at ¶ 907(c), A-112) are compensable. See Terminate Control Corp., 28 F.3d 1335, 1343; Khurana, 130 F.3d 143, 151-52 (loss of legitimate business opportunity).

Executing the Scheme resulted in Hollander unwittingly assisting defendant Shipilina's fraudulent immigration (Complaint ¶¶ 182, 187, 201, 204-05, A-40, 42), defending against a restraining order obtained by perjury (Complaint ¶ 239, 242, A-45, 46), preventing a false arrest from abuse of New York City police authority (Complaint ¶¶ 312-14, A-52), rectifying the defamation of Hollander to witnesses in the annulment-divorce case (Complaint ¶ 271-72, A-48), trying to overcome witness intimidation by Chechen gangsters (Complaint ¶¶ 267, 270, A-48), dealing with interference in gathering information for state and federal court proceedings (Complaint ¶¶ 269-70, A-48; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 12, 38, 52, 62, A-115, 118-120), mitigating threats against Hollander with remedial actions through the Government and courts (Complaint ¶¶ 854-870, A 106-107), and more. All of which cost Hollander's business profits, time and opportunities; caused interruption; and damaged his professional reputation and goodwill. (Complaint ¶ 907(a)-(c) & (e), A-112.)

In the injury to property category, the annulment-divorce and RICO cause of actions are property interests under RICO. Malley-Duff & Associates, Inc. v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 792 F.2d 341, 353-54 (3d Cir. 1986), aff'd sub nom., Agency Holding Corp. v. Malley-Duff, 479 U.S. 983, 93 L.Ed.2d 573, 107 S.Ct. 569 (1987); Deck v. Engineering Laminates, 349 F.3d 1253, 1259 (10th Cir. 2003) (citing Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. at 428). The criminal interference with their prosecution caused expenses, delays and inconvenience, which are an injury to property, Malley-Duff, 792 F.2d at 355.

A property injury under 18 U.S.C. 1964(c) can be satisfied by allegations of monetary loss, such as out-of-pocket expenses. Maio v. Aetna, Inc., 221 F.3d 472, 483 (3rd Cir. 2000)(citations omitted). Out-of-pocket expenses from Hollander's investigation into and efforts to stop the intimidation of witnesses in the annulment-divorce action (Complaint ¶ 907(d), A-112) are compensable injuries. Malley-Duff, 792 F.2d at 355; Miller v. Glen & Helen Aircraft, Inc., 777 F.2d 496, 498-99 (9th Cir. 1985). Legal fees to defend against the fraudulent restraining order and the New York City threat of arrest, to prosecute the annulment-divorce action and halt the defendants' obstruction of pre-discovery activities are compensable injuries to property. Handeen v. Lemaire, 112 F.3d 1339, 1354 (9th Cir. 1997);

Stochastic Decisions, 995 F.2d 1158, 1167. Further, allegations of expenses for investigations and efforts to put a stop to and rectify harm (Complaint ¶ 907(d)), which include private investigators and legal expenses, are sufficient to withstand a motion to dismiss. Philatelic Foundation v. Kaplan, 1986 WL 5629 *9 & *11 (S.D.N.Y, May 9, 1986), dismissed in part 647 F.Supp. 1344; Continental Assur. Co., 1987 WL 8198 at *2; see Alexander Grant, 770 F.2d 717, 719.

Hollander's reliance on false representations made by defendant Shipilina over the telephone and by mail to lull him into returning to Russia to bring her to the U.S. so that the Scheme could move forward resulted in out-of-pocket expenses for Hollander's round trip flight, accommodations in Moscow and defendant Shipilina's flight to America. (Complaint ¶¶ 198-204, A-42.) Where defendants fraudulently induce a plaintiff to take actions and make expenditures, the financial injury is compensable under civil RICO. Standardbred Owners Ass'n v. Roosevelt Raceway, 985 F.2d 102, 104-05 (2nd Cir. 1993).

Damages from the above injuries to business or property can be nominal, Potomac Elec. Power v. Electric Motor & Supply, 262 F.3d 260, 266 (4th Cir. 2001), so an injury to Hollander's business or property in an amount of one U.S. dollar is sufficient for standing provided the damage was caused by a RICO violation.

B. Proximate Causation Errors

Did the District Court contravene holdings of the U.S. Supreme Court, the Second Circuit and other courts by wrongly stating and misapplying the proximate causation element for standing under civil RICO on a motion to dismiss?

In NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994), the plaintiff alleged that the RICO conspiracy "had injured the [plaintiffs'] business and/or property interests ..." and that a defendant had threatened reprisals. The Supreme Court concluded that "nothing more is needed to confer standing on [plaintiff] at the pleading stage." Id. The Complaint at ¶¶ 282, 289-90, 309, 313, 318, 900-07, A 49-52, 111-112, and Supplemental Complaint at ¶¶ 2, 34-35, 50, 77, A-114, 117, 119, 122, do that and more, but it is not good enough for the District Court. In addition, the Complaint provides allegations of RICO violations, such as Complaint at ¶¶ 479-84, 492-94, 500-01, 504-06, 512-13, 514-16, 518, 527, 530, 541-43, 556-59, 573, 586-87, 592-93, 594, 596-97, 600, 606-07, 622, 625-26, A 68-73, 75-76, 78-80, 82, that furthered the Scheme involving Shipilina, injured Hollander and benefited certain defendants from its initiation while the Supplemental Complaint at ¶¶ 16-21, 45-48, 55, 57-58, 69-71, A 115-116, 119-21 refers to more efforts to assure the Scheme's success that also injured Hollander.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Threatening an attorney admitted to practice in the federal courts is not an 18 U.S.C. 1503 violation, sorry about that.

The District Court didn't find a passed-on, or derivative, injury problem in which harm flowed to Hollander through a third party as in Holmes, 503 U.S. 258, 268-69. It instead relied on the proximate cause test of an insubstantial causal link due to an intervening event. The Court held that intervening event to be Hollander's August 2000 discovery of the Scheme, which subsequently led to an investigation. Order 2-1, 11-2, 12-1, 13-2, A-132, 141-43. Hollander, however, did not discover the Scheme until July 2002, (Opposition pp 28-2, 37-1, 135-2, A-129; Complaint ¶ 220, A-44.) Disputed claims of causation cannot be decided on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion. Knevelbaard Dairies v. Kraft Foods, Inc., 232 F.3d 979, 989 (9th Cir. 2000). Besides, taken at face value, the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint do not allege intervening events of a wholly independent nature from the alleged predicate acts.

Even had Hollander discovered the Scheme in August 2000, federal appellate courts characterize the issue of intervening causation as an evidentiary rather than pleading matter, which is determined by whether defendants' violations were a substantial factor in plaintiff's injury. Smith & Reed, Civil RICO, ¶6.04, p. 6-126.1, 2005 ed. "[A] RICO case with a derivative-injury problem is better suited to dismissal on the pleadings than a RICO case with a traditional proximate-cause problem (e.g., a weak or insubstantial causal link...." Trollinger v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 370 F.3d 602, 615 (6th Cir. 2004). A summary judgment motion under Rule

56 is more appropriate than a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6) for handling causal weaknesses that are not the passed-on injury type. Id., (citing NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256). Whether injuries are attributable to defendants' conduct, or to other causes, is normally up to the trier of fact to decide. Schwartz v. Sun Co., 276 F.3d 900, 904 (6th Cir. 2002)(antitrust case). But if a court must decide on whether an intervening cause exists for a Rule 12(b)(6) motion in a non-derivative RICO case, it should focus on "the foreseeability that intervening events would cause injury to the plaintiff," Mid Atl. Telecom v. Long Distance Servs., 18 F.3d 260, 263 (4th Cir. 1994)(citation omitted), because foreseeability of harm from defendants' misconduct is sufficient to overcome invented assertions that other factors constituted intervening events that proximately caused the injuries. Once again, assuming Hollander had discovered the Scheme in August 2000, only modern-day political correctionalist claptrap couldn't anticipate discovery, investigation and efforts to protect property by a man tricked and drugged into a fraudulent marriage for financially supporting and winning a Russian mob asset U.S. citizenship. (Emphasis added.)

Regardless of when the Scheme was discovered, the predicate acts committed before August 2000, to gain defendant Shipilina entry into America, required Hollander to initially investigate and incur expenses beginning in that month. This sufficiently connects the RICO Scheme, even as narrowed by the Court, with those injuries. Continental Assur. Co., 1987 WL 8198 at *2.

*****

The District Court improperly shoehorned the allegations of this case into employee termination suits based on employees refusing to aid and abet RICO violations, exposing illegal acts, being retaliated against or whistle blowing, such as Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 23-24 (2d Cir. 1990) (citing other firing cases), and shareholder derivative action suits, such as In Re American Exp. Co. Shareholder Litigation, 39 F.3d 395, 396 (2d Cir. 1994). Order 10-1 & 2, 11-1, 12-2 & 3, 13-1 & 2, A 140-43. Neither the Complaint nor the Supplemental Complaint allege that Hollander was a Russian mafia shareholder or mob employee fired for his refusal to assist in violations or retaliated against for whistle blowing.

The employee firing cases relied on by the District Court: Hecht, 897 F.2d at 24; Burdick v. American Express Co., 865 F.2d 527, 529 (2d Cir. 1989); and Nodine v. Textron, Inc., 819 F.2d 347, 349 (1st 1987), found that the injuries to those plaintiffs resulted from employers' decisions to fire them, not the RICO violations they exposed or wouldn't help. In this case, there is no firing as an intervening cause because Hollander never worked for the mob. There are also no whistleblowers despite the Court's misrepresentation that Hollander "portrays himself in his pleadings as a whistleblower.” Order 12-2, A-142. A person can’t be a whistleblower unless he was an employee, Mruz v. Caring, Inc., 991 F.Supp. 701, 708-09 (D.N.J. 1998)(referring to “Whistleblower Act” 31 U.S.C. §3730(h)), and he can’t blow the whistle on something before he knows it exists, such as the mob’s Scheme, which Hollander didn’t learn about until July 2002. The whistleblower cases, as with other employee termination cases, hold the firing decisions caused the injury of an employee’s loss of job, not the employer’s RICO violations. See, e.g., Hecht, 897 F.2d at 24; Cullom v. Hibernia Nat. Bank, 859 F.2d 1211, 1215 (5th Cir. 1988); Pujol v. Shearson/Am. Express, Inc., 829 F.2d 1201, 1205 (1st Cir. 1987); Nodine v. Textron, Inc., 819 F.2d 347, 349 (1st 1987); Morast v. Lance, 807 F.2d 926, 933 (11th Cir. 1987). The Complaint and Supplemental Complaint do not allege injury after August 2000 from Hollander’s loss of a job with the Russian mob that he never had.

Regardless of Hollander’s non-employee status, proximate cause exists for injuries from overt predicate acts in furtherance of defendants’ RICO conspiracies. Cf. Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 506 n. 10, 146 L.Ed.2d 561, 120 S.Ct. 1608 (2000). The post August 2000 illegal acts by defendants that caused injury by trying to suborn perjury, intimidate and prevent Hollander and others’ testifying in court or at administrative proceedings and interfered with this RICO action included predicate acts (Complaint ¶¶ 479, 482, 492, 494, 504, 506, 530, 531, 541, 556-57, A 68-70, 72-73, 75; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 16, 19, 45, 55, 57, 69, 70, A 115-116, 119-121) taken in furtherance of the RICO conspiracies (Complaint ¶¶ 481, 484, 501, 513, 543, 559, A-68, 70-71, 73, 75; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 18, 21, 47, A-116, 119) to prevent their unraveling from disclosure of the Scheme.

The District Court's reliance on shareholder derivative action suits required it to twist, bend, fold and mutilate the Complaint's allegations into a false pattern that seemingly fitted the fact allegations in American Express so as to reach the same result—dismissal. American Express, 39 F.3d at 400, held that RICO violations by company officers and employees were not meant to harm the company but benefit it and, in turn, the shareholder-plaintiffs. The Russian mafia in this case also engaged in RICO violations to benefit itself but there the analogy ends. Hollander is not a shareholder of the Russian mob, so the defendants' acts weren't done to benefit him.

American Express, 39 F.3d at 400, and Abrahams v. Young & Rubicam, Inc., 79 F.3d 234, 238-39 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 816 (1996), also found the RICO violations did not injure plaintiffs but the revealing of those acts did. Here, the RICO violations and injuries in the Complaint all occurred before the revelation of the Scheme in July 2002 and its public exposure in April 2003 with the filing of this suit.<sup>3</sup> The harm to Hollander from RICO acts between August

2000 and July 2002 did not flow from an exposure as in American Express or Abrahams but from certain defendants' efforts to protect and finish the Scheme by preventing its exposure. Predicate acts committed to conceal an ongoing fraud, including money laundering and travel in aid of racketeering, support a finding of proximate causation. Maiz v. Virani, 253 F.3d 641, 674 (11th Cir. 2001). The District Court, however, reaches the absurd result that any harm caused by a RICO violation that a criminal group does to protect or conceal a scheme, rather than carrying it out, assuming these two activities can be distinguished in reality, is not the proximate cause of resulting injuries. Alternatively, the Court required defendants' RICO violations before August 2000 to be the sole factor in causing injury after that date. A proximate cause, however, is not the same thing as a sole cause. Cox v. Admin. U.S. Steel & Carnegie, 17 F.3d 1386, 1399 (11th Cir. 1994).

Accepting the District Court's premise about exposure in August 2000 as an intervening event would mean that RICO defendants, following the exposure of their first set of RICO violations, could engage in a second set of RICO violations to prevent or deter a plaintiff's access to law enforcement authorities or the courts for redressing grievances from the first set of illegal acts. Under the Court's reasoning, Order 10-1 & 2, 11-1 & 2, A 140-41, defendants would not be liable under RICO for injuries from the second group of violations because that harm was caused by an intervening event: the exposure of the first set. I don't think so. The second set of RICO violations still could have proximately caused injury. In American Express and Abrahams, there was no second set of RICO violations as here. An easy way, however, to deal with the Court's immunity for defendants' second set of violations is to consider them as carrying out an addendum scheme or new scheme.

American Express, 39 F.3d at 400, also holds the shareholders were not the intended targets and, according to Lerner v. Fleet Bank, N.A., 318 F.3d 113, 124 (2d Cir. 2003), American Express also held the injuries were not the "preconceived purpose" or "specifically intended consequences" of the RICO acts, therefore, no proximate causation. The Second Circuit subsequently appeared to reject requiring "specifically intended harm" and "intended victim or target" in Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d 366, 375-76, by favoring the standard: intent to create a risk of harm and substantial risk of injury to the victim. But in Ideal, 373 F.2d 251, 260, it resurrected the specifically intended victim, or target, element by noting that complaints are dismissed for lacking proximate cause when plaintiff is not an intended victim or target. With these decisions, the Second Circuit has in effect added the mail and wire fraud requirements of a specifically intended victim or target and, perhaps, specifically intended injury to its proximate cause determination even though mail and wire fraud are specific intent crimes, U.S. v. Chandler, 98 F.3d 711, 715 (2d Cir. 1996), and RICO a statutory tort remedy, Mid Atl. Telecom, 18 F.3d 260, 263 (citation omitted); Bieter Co. v. Blomquist, 987 F.2d 1319, 1329 (8th Cir. 1993). Allegations of a plaintiff as the specific target and injuries specifically intended are unnecessary for a statutory tort action, see Restatement of Torts 2d, § 548A, and contrary to the Supreme Court's admonition that strict proximate cause requirements not be erected as obstacles to private RICO litigants, see Sedima, 473 U.S. 479, 497-98.

The District Court's conclusion that a plaintiff must be the intended target of the RICO scheme, Order 9-2, 10-2, 11-2, 13-2, A 139-41, 143, and the alleged injury a preconceived purpose or specifically intended consequence of RICO violations, id. at 10-2, 11-2, 12-1, 13-2, 14-1, A 140-44, is "simply wrong." BCCI Holdings (Lux.), S.A. v. Khalil, 214 F.3d 168, 173 (D.C.Cir.), cert. denied 531 U.S. 958 (2000). Standing to pursue a RICO action exists even without allegations that plaintiff was the intended target. Khurana, 130 F.3d 143, 151-52 (5th Cir. 1997) (physician not intended target); Terre Du Lac Ass'n, Inc. v. Terre Du Lac, Inc., 772 F.2d 467, 472 (8th Cir. 1985)(citation omitted), cert. denied 475 U.S. 1082 (1986). "[T]he RICO plaintiff need not be the target of the RICO conspiracy or the intended victim of the RICO predicate acts, as long as plaintiff's business or property was ... injured as a proximate result of the violation." Rakoff and Goldstein, RICO Civil and Criminal, §4.02[7]. In Holmes, the Supreme Court "never suggests ... that the only or best way to prove proximate cause is for a plaintiff to prove he was the ‘intended target’ and that the injury was the ‘preconceived purpose’ of the RICO activity.” BCCI, 214 F.3d at 174. Regardless of what the Second Circuit requires, the District Court demands both a specifically intended harm and victim, which conflicts with the D.C., 5th, and 8th Circuits.

In Holmes, 503 U.S. at 267-68, the Supreme Court found the principles for determining proximate cause in Federal RICO and antitrust cases to be the same because of the identical statutory language. The Second Circuit’s Ideal requirement that a plaintiff must be an intended target of defendants’ RICO violations is contrary to present day antitrust proximate causation principles. Federal courts previously used a target standing test for antitrust causation, Repp v. F.E.L. Publications, Ltd., 688 F.2d 441, 444-45 (7th Cir. 1982), but it has fallen on disfavor. The Supreme Court expressed dissatisfaction with the antitrust target test in Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal. v. Cal. St. Council, 459 U.S. 519, 536 n. 33 & 37, 74 L.Ed.2d 723, 103 S.Ct. 897 (1983), and stated the availability of a remedy “is not a question of specific intent of the conspirators.” Id. 459 U.S. at 537 (quoting Blue Shield Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 479, 73 L.Ed.2d 149, 102 S.Ct. 2540 (1982)). Several federal courts subsequently declined to apply the target standing test in antitrust cases. See, e.g. R.C. Dick Geothermal Corp. v. Thermogenics, Inc., 890 F.2d 139, 146 (9th Cir. 1989); Southwest Suburban Bd. Realtors, Inc. v. Beverly Area Planning Ass’n, 830 F.2d 1374, 1377 n.1 (7th Cir.

1987). Since the Supreme Court has ruled that proximate causation principles for antitrust are the same for RICO, the Second Circuit and District Court's use of target standing for RICO contradicts the Supreme Court and other Circuits. But if it doesn't, the Complaint (¶¶ 135-36, 164, 170, 179, 185, 201-04, 227-30, 234, 239-41, 243, 245, 281-83, 288-90, 307-09, 317-19, 494, 506, 518, 527, 530, A-36, 38-40, 42, 44-46, 49-52, 69-72) and Supplemental Complaint (¶¶ 2, 13, 35, 50, 53, A 114-115, 117, 119) allege Hollander was a target of the RICO violations right from the beginning.

The District Court even admits Hollander was a target during the first step of the Scheme. “[T]he success of the Scheme [the first part] depended on a lack of harm to plaintiff, for it was through plaintiff and with plaintiff's (perhaps unknowing) cooperation that the [Russian mob] hoped to succeed in infiltrating the United States [with defendant Shipilina].” Order 14-1, A-144 (Court's emphasis.) The Court's “lack of harm” apparently refers to personal, physical harm since Hollander had already been injured to the tune of out-of-pocket expenses and lost business by the time defendant Shipilina entered America on a fraudulent immigrant visa. (See above I(E) Eastern front Maginot Line.)

The first step in the Scheme was intended to give the Russian mafia the financial advantage of transposing one more asset to the lucrative American market at the expense of Hollander. Next when faced with Hollander's refusal to yield to certain defendants’ lulling and coercive practices (Complaint ¶¶ 226-233, A 44-45), the mob imposed further sanctions on Hollander with additional coercion (Complaint ¶¶ 239-43, 245, 257, 259, 273, 281-84, 287-90, 306-09, 316-18, 319, A 45-52), which the District Court also admits targeted Hollander: “plaintiff’s resistance to and investigation of the Scheme is what the predicate acts ... were designed to prevent,” Order 14-1, A-144. Such coercive efforts sufficiently plead proximate cause. See McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 483 (antitrust standing). The District Court, however, in relying on Manson v. Stacescu, 11 F.3d 1127, 1132-33 (2d Cir. 1993), guilefully holds that threats to stop a person from investigating a scheme cannot proximately harm a person’s business or property. Order 14-1, A-144. Manson did not reach that conclusion; instead, it held the harm to Manson was derivative of the injury to the company of which he was president, which under Holmes meant no proximate cause. The Complaint here does not allege threats injured Russian Mafia, Inc. and that injury passed through to Hollander. There is no third person or entity between the threats and Hollander.

Concerning foreseeability, the Court makes the conclusory statement based on its core misrepresentation of the Complaint, the Maginot Line, “That plaintiff would put his legal and consulting business on hold [in August 2000] to investigate the Enterprise simply is not a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the predicate acts...” Order 14-1, A-144. Hollander first put his business on hold from March to May 2000 (Complaint ¶¶ 187-88) to assist defendant Shipilina in obtaining her immigrant visa from the Moscow Embassy. And no, Hollander didn't know Shipilina was perpetrating a fraud at that time. After putting his business on hold once as a result of predicate acts to permanently transplant a mob asset to America, a reasonable criminal could easily foresee it happening again in order to determine whether his wife was a prostitute and deal with threats, intimidation and fraudulently instigated court and police actions. Besides, Hollander falls into the foreseeable class of immediate victims because he was a customer, albeit an unwitting one, of a Russian mafia prostitute trying to continue her work for the Russian mob in the U.S. American Express, 39 F.3d at 399)(no proximate cause since plaintiff not a target, competitor nor customer of the racketeer, citing Sperber v. Boesky, 849 F.2d 60, 64-65 (2d Cir. 1988)); (Complaint ¶¶ 136-40, 360-61, A-36, 56.)

*****

The District Court failed to address proximate causation of injuries that occurred before August 2000 from RICO violations by falsely claiming the Complaint did not allege any injuries from such activities. "The factual allegations detailing these activities largely predate plaintiff's 'discovery' of the Scheme in August 2000, and are not alleged to have caused plaintiff injury." Order 11-2, 12-1, A 141-42. The Complaint, however, avers certain defendants tricked Hollander into sponsoring and paying for defendant Shipilina's fraudulently obtained immigrant visa (Complaint ¶¶ 135-36, 182-83, 186, 190-93, 197, A-36, 40-42), defendant Shipilina made false representations by telephone and mail between the U.S. and Russia in order to lull Hollander into returning to Russia so as to bring her to America, which included the cost for Shipilina's flight, Hollander's round-trip flight and accommodations in Moscow (Complaint ¶¶ 198-205, A-42), and the Scheme caused Hollander to put his law and consulting business on hold (Complaint ¶¶ 187-88, A-40), which resulted in loss of profits, loss of business opportunities and business interruption expenses for which the amounts are included in the figures at Complaint ¶ 907(a)-(c), A-112.

The District Court also avoided the proximate cause issue for the injuries after August 2000 that it didn't claim resulted from Hollander's "discovery of the Scheme." The Court disregarded these allegations as "general" and "conclusory," see section I(D) above. The Complaint, however, sufficiently alleged injury from use of racketeering funds to finance the Scheme, from use of racketeering activities to acquire or preserve influence over Russian mob activities, from overt predicate acts to further conspiracies (Complaint ¶¶ 900, 904-06, A 111-112) and damage to professional reputation and good will from false allegations, such as those in a restraining order, report to police and threat of arrest (Complaint ¶¶ 229-32, 234, 239, 271, 309-14, 907(e), A 44-45, 48, 51-52, 112). The Supplemental Complaint sufficiently alleged causation of injuries from defendants' efforts to obstruct this RICO action (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 2, 12, 34-36, 38, 43, 49, 52, 59-63, 77, A 114-115, 117-120, 122).

III. Leave to Amend Errors

Did the District Court abuse its discretion by fabricating a fact, creating a Catch-22, using a trivial excuse and relying on its key misrepresentation of the Complaint to slam the door on even one leave to amend the Complaint?

The District Court lied when it stated, "Plaintiff made no request to file an amended Complaint in the event the motions to dismiss were granted," Order 16-2, A-146. Plaintiff's Memorandum in Opposition p. 41-2, A-129, states, "If this Court dismisses the Complaint or part of it under Rule 12(b)(6), then the plaintiff requests leave to amend." Plaintiff also made similar requests with respect to specific issues throughout his Memorandum in Opposition pp. 49-1, 70-2, 76-2, 119-3, A-130.

*****

The Court created a legal Catch-22 for plaintiffs who dare file a supplemental complaint after receiving defendants' motions to dismiss but before a court decides those 12(b)(6) motions. The Catch-22 works by assuming the purpose of an amended and supplemental complaint are the same, defendants' motion to dismiss arguments are accurate and plaintiff can divine which of those arguments a court will use for its decision before it occurs: “[H]aving been fully apprised of the bases for the motions to dismiss,” Order 16-2, A-146, [plaintiff] “was fully aware of the asserted [that means alleged] pleading deficiencies raised in the motion to dismiss and, with those assertions [allegations] in hand, he sought to supplement his complaint,” Disqualify at 5-2, A-154.

Supplemental complaints are for “setting forth transactions or occurrences or events which have happened since the date of the pleading sought to be supplemented.” Rule 15(d). Amended pleadings incorporate events that occurred prior to the filing of the original pleading, but were either overlooked or not known at the time, Slavenberg Corp. v. Boston Ins. Co., 30 F.R.D. 123, 126 (S.D.N.Y. 1962), and are used to cure deficiencies in an original complaint.

The Court erred in holding the Supplemental Complaint an amended complaint. It stated, “Plaintiff is correct that there is nothing inappropriate with seeking to cure a pleading deficiency called to one’s attention by an opposing party.” Disqualify 5-2, A-154. The plaintiff never said that, the Supplemental Complaint never said that. Both stated, “The events included in this supplemental complaint happened after the original Complaint was filed on April 18, 2003.” (Supp. Complaint ¶ 1, A-114.) The Supplemental Complaint was not filed in response to alleged “pleading deficiencies raised in the [defendants] motion to dismiss,” Disqualify 5-2, A-154, it was filed because of predicate acts engaged in by the defendants after the Complaint had been filed. But the Court ignored this so as to conclude, “the supplemental pleading added nothing of material significance to cure the deficiencies in [plaintiff’s] allegations,” id. Deficiencies that wouldn’t be known until the Court rendered its decision.

By simply updating the Court on recent harm caused by defendants, the Court jumped to the Orwellian conclusion that plaintiff was trying to correct deficiencies in his Complaint that he wouldn’t learn about until some time in the future when the Court made its decision. Under such reasoning, all plaintiffs must use a Doctor Who telephone booth to determine the Court’s criticism, so they can cure it before the Court makes its decision. Or, just as bizarre, plaintiffs should adopt defendants’ interpretation of the law and objections as true, which means the courts might as well throw out all complaints since that’s where defendants’ objections lead on a motion to dismiss—that’s why it’s called a motion to dismiss. So much for the courts as a means to resolve disputes.

The implication of the District Court’s reasoning is that when a plaintiff files a supplemental complaint under Rule 15(d) after being served with defendants’ motions to dismiss but before the Court rules on those motions, it legally follows that plaintiff will be unable to amend his original complaint under Rule 15(a) so as to cure a subsequent dismissal because the plaintiff cannot “truthfully allege more,” Order 5-2, A-154, since he already filed a supplemental complaint.

Therefore, when a supplemental complaint is filed, an amended complaint must also be filed that addresses the Court's objections, which plaintiff will not learn about until some point in the future; otherwise, plaintiff forfeits any opportunity to amend the original complaint under Rule 15(a). A nice Alice in Wonderland tactic that turns on its head the policy: "Where plaintiff seeks an opportunity to amend his complaint in order to meet the objections stated by the trial court, we feel that he should be accorded such an opportunity." Austin v. House of Vision, Inc., 385 F.2d 171, 172 (7th Cir. 1967), appeal after remand, 404 F.2d 401 (7th Cir. 1968).

*****

The District Court improperly considered the "sheer length and detail" of the Complaint as constituting a legal reason for denying leave to amend. Order 16-2, A-146, see id. at 1-1, 3-1, A-131, 133. "The fact that a brief of such length was filed by plaintiff had bearing on whether plaintiff had a full and fair opportunity to advance his arguments and also on the issue of whether the Court, on its own motion, should grant plaintiff leave to further replead." Disqualify 3-2, A-152. Just because a RICO complaint is long by the standards of other causes of action is no reason to deny leave to amend. The length and detail of a complaint depends on the subject matter, the type of claims presented and the number of the parties involved. See Dublin Distribs. Inc. v. Edward & John Burke, Ltd., 109 F.Supp. 125, 126 n.1 (S.D.N.Y. 1952)(antitrust pleading). The more complex the litigation becomes, the greater the amount of detail that will appear in the pleadings. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ. 3d 1281, p. 707. A complaint charging RICO violations by a crime syndicate will recite numerous acts and circumstances and not be a short statement of a claim as the word “short” is used in pleading on a contract or in negligence. Cf. Rivioli Operating Corp. v. Loew’s Inc., 7 F.R.D. 219, 223 (W.D.N.Y. 1947)(antitrust complaint). The Complaint’s length was necessary to plead the complex and intertwined workings of a segment of the Russian mafia to put the injuries to Hollander into context. The Russian mob is the archetypal, intimidating, mobster organization RICO seeks to eradicate. See Russello v. U.S., 464 U.S. 16, 26-27, 78 L.Ed.2d 17, 104 S.Ct. 296 (1983). Further, Federal Rule 8(a)(2) requires a short and plain statement for each claim, not a short complaint, so length should not be relied on, even in part, to deny leave to amend.

Citing “see Manson, 11 F.3d at 1133,” the District Court contends, “Even the most liberal reading of the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint fails to indicate that, however restated, any valid claim would survive,” so any amendment, even one, would be futile. Order 16-2, 17-1, A 146-47. Manson was a derivative, or passed-on, injury case; therefore, denying leave to amend was appropriate since amended pleadings couldn’t change the situation of plaintiff’s injury flowing through a third party, which meant no proximate cause. Trollinger, 370 F.3d 602, 615. The harm to Hollander does not derive from injury to a third party. Further, one amendment would disabuse the Court of its mistaken but core finding that Hollander “alleged injury ... arising out of his discovery of [the] Scheme,” which led to an investigation of the Enterprise beginning in August 2000. Order 2-1, 4-2, 9-1, 11-2, 12-1, A-132, 134, 139, 141-42. The Court used its alleged August 2000 discovery as an intervening event to justify ruling that any sufficiently averred injuries suffered after that date were not proximately caused by defendants’ Scheme or RICO violations. An amended complaint, in addition to other truthful allegations, would make clear to even the District Court that Hollander did not discover the Scheme until two years later in July 2002.

*****

The District Court abused its discretion under Milanese v. Rust-Oleum Corp. 244 F.3d 104, 110 (2d Cir. 2001), by denying leave to amend the Complaint through (1) clearly erroneous findings of fact that Hollander failed to request leave to amend and discovered the Scheme in August 2000, (2) mistaken applications of the law that a supplemental complaint is an amended one and the “sheer length and detail” of a complaint is a legal basis for denying leave to amend and (3) inventing a Catch-22 rule that filing a supplemental complaint before a court’s decision on dismissal motions also requires an amended complainant to correct the faults that a court may find in its future decision.

IV. Due Process Violations

Did the District Court violate the plaintiff's due process rights by mixing pro se and attorney standards in deciding to dismiss with prejudice and ignoring the policy behind Fed. R. Civ. P. 15(d) for allowing supplemental complaints?

A. Pro se v. Attorney

The District Court violated Hollander's due process rights by using the pro se standard for construing the Complaint, Order 7-2, A-137, while applying the attorney standard as a reason not to grant leave to amend, Order 16-2, A-146; Disqualify 5-2, A-154. The impact of mixing the standards is that it allowed the Court to create the false impression of liberally analyzing the pleadings in favor of a pro se plaintiff, Order 7-2, A-137, while doing its best to make sure it never saw this case again, Order 16-2, A-146; Disqualify 5-2, A-154, by applying a higher standard to deciding against even one leave to amend.

B. Policy Behind Supplemental Complaints

The District Court violated Hollander's due process rights by punishing him for acting in accord with one of the basic policies of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure “that a party should be given every opportunity to join all of his grievances against other parties regardless of when they arose,” Wright & Miller, Federal Prac. and Proc.: Civ.2d § 1506. The Court wrongly treated the Supplemental Complaint as an amended complaint and used that faulty conclusion to punish Hollander for filing the Supplemental Complaint by denying him leave to amend the Complaint once following the Court's decision. Disqualify 5-2, A-154.

CONCLUSION

The District Court considers pleading civil RICO actions a game of skill in which any misstep, real or imaginary, will be decisive for dismissal. Contra Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 48, 2 L.Ed.2d 80, 78 S.Ct. 99 (1957).

Plaintiff-Appellant requests the dismissal be vacated.

I. PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Plaintiff-appellant, Roy Den Hollander, (“plaintiff”), an attorney at law, submits this brief in reply<sup>1</sup> to defendants-appellees Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich’s brief in opposition (“Mundy Brief”); Flash Dancers Topless Club’s brief (“FlashDancers Brief”); Cybertech Internet Solutions’ brief (“Cybertech Brief”); Marc Paulsen’s brief (“Paulsen Brief”); Alina Shipilina’s brief (“Shipilina Brief”); and the Municipal or Detective Robert Henning’s brief (“Henning Brief”). Defendant-appellee Bank of Cyprus did not submit a brief.

The following nomenclature applies: cites to defendants-appellees’ briefs, District Court’s Order (“Order”), and plaintiff-appellant’s initial brief (“Hollander Brief”) are to the document’s page number hyphen paragraph on that page, which may or may not be a full paragraph. Cites to the Complaint or Supplemental Complaint are to paragraphs. “A” with numbers refers to pages in the Joint Appendix. “Mundy” refers to the law firm, Mundy and Petrovich<sup>2</sup>.

Plaintiff filed a motion requesting this Court to reject the Mundy Brief and Henning Brief for violating the formatting rules of the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure (“F.R.A.P.”) §32 and Local Rule §32. In the alternative, the motion requested designated sections of the Mundy Brief be removed for (1) numerous citations outside the Appendix in violation of F.R.A.P. §30 and Local Rule §11(e), (2) many ad hominem attacks in furtherance of defendants' strategy of litigation by personal destruction, violating F.R.A.P. §§28(b) and Local Rule §28, (3) interjecting defendants own irrelevant factual allegations that violate Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), F.R.A.P. §28(b) and Local Rule §28, and (4) breaching the Blue Book's citation system. The motion also requested deleting parts of Henning and FlashDancers' briefs for citing documents outside the Appendix, removal of irrelevant allegations in FlashDancers Brief and ad hominem in the Shipilina Brief. Reversal of the District Court's order for the Bank of Cyprus was requested for failure to file a brief. Plaintiff moved for monetary sanctions against the attorneys responsible.

II. DEFENSE LAWYERS RE-WRITE THE COMPLAINT WHILE INTERJECTING THEIR OWN IRRELEVANT ALLEGATIONS.

This is an appeal of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal—not an appeal from summary judgment or trial verdict.

The Mundy Brief includes numerous factual allegations that are not part of the plaintiff-appellant's pleadings. Mundy's attorneys invent their own averments, claimed as facts, while selectively editing, juxtaposing and misstating plaintiff's allegations in order to create a shadow pleading that fits their legal arguments and character assassination strategy. They try to muster support for their fabricated allegations, more appropriate for an answer they never submitted, by citing to over 380 pages of documents they filed below. These documents<sup>3</sup> and assertions should not be relied upon in deciding a Rule 12(b)(6) motion because it's the plaintiff's pleadings that are considered true, California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S.Ct. 609 (citation omitted)(1972), not the defendants' opinions nor their inaccurate protestations or misplaced assertions, In re Warfarin Sodium, 214 F.3d 395, 398 (3rd Cir. 2000)(consideration of facts gleaned from counsel's argument are factors not contemplated by the dictates of Rule 12(b)(6)). "[T]he defendants seek to argue the merits ... in the context of a 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss, which is not the purpose of the motion." T.S. Haulers, Inc. v. Town of Riverhead, 190 F.Supp.2d 455, 464 (E.D.N.Y. 2002)(citing see Villager Pond Inc. v. Town of Darien, 56 F.3d 375, 378 (2d Cir.1995).

Examples of the many misrepresentations, prevarications, irrelevancies and efforts to substitute defendants' allegations (mostly Mundy Brief pp 2-25) for the plaintiff's pleadings are included for reference in footnote 5 at this reply's end. Space limitations make it impossible to expose all their dissembling.

The following allegory basically summarizes what happened to plaintiff as alleged in his pleadings: While sailing the waters of the former Soviet Union in his Sun Fish, working for Kroll Associates, along comes this juggernaut of pimps, prostitutes, pornographers, pushers and assorted criminals of Russian, Chechen, American and other nationalities, including a few lunatics from the Chechen Special Islamic Regiment. The juggernaut, ever scanning for the easy prey of softhearted American businessmen, spots plaintiff, and sends out one of its prostitutes as bait: a tall, blue-eyed, bleached blonde. Using duplicity and drugs, the plaintiff's Sun Fish is torpedoed, heads to the bottom. He's sunk—married to a Russian prostitute who is a member of Russian organized crime although he doesn't know it at the time. Plaintiff brings his wife of a few months to America, and the Russian mafia gets another one of its assets into the premier hard-currency market in the world. While this was happening to plaintiff, it was and continues to happen to others. When plaintiff finally came up for air: he struggled, tried to get free, fought back to protect his business and rights by using the law and not stepping outside it—but to no avail. Finally, with the assistance of a consulting attorney, he discovers in July 2002 the Russian mafia's role in the nightmare inflicted on him and his property. He brings this RICO suit. So far, the Russian mafia juggernaut has been more powerful, more effective than the law because it lies, dissembles, prevaricates, smears, threatens, intimidates and bribes.

III. ARGUMENT

A. Injury

Defendants try to mislead this Court by claiming the plaintiff does not allege injuries to business and property but to the person. Mundy Brief, p.32-3, p.43-3, achieves this misrepresentation by stating the Complaint seeks compensation for predicate acts that imperiled the plaintiff's "safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear" than mixes in the actual allegations of injury to business and property as though they were personal. The Hollander Brief, p.36 n.1, makes clear, the plaintiff does not claim RICO damages for defendants imperiling his safety, life, liberty and right not to live in fear or any injuries to the person.

The "legal entitlement to business relations unhampered by schemes prohibited by RICO" is a property interest sufficient to provide standing. Diaz v. Gates, 420 F.3d 897, 899 (9th Cir. 2005)(citation omitted); Williams v. Mohawk, 411 F.3d 1252, 1260 (11th Cir. 2005). Plaintiff's pleadings contend that the numerous predicate acts by defendants harmed plaintiff's business and property. (Complaint ¶¶900-07, A 111-12; Supp. Complaint ¶77, A-122.)

For example, RICO violations harmed plaintiff's business reputation and goodwill. (Complaint ¶¶902-03, 907(e), A 111-12; Supp. Complaint ¶77, A-122.) Defendants wrongly claim that injuries to "business or professional reputation and goodwill" are not business or property harms. For support, Mundy Brief, p.32-4, p.34-1, cites to 10 cases—eight without specific page cites, and again at id., p.44-1, cites to eight cases also without specific page cites. Are they hiding something? Yes, the cases they cite mostly do not support their proposition, and to the extent they do, create a conflict with other circuits. In Kimm v. Lee, 2005 WL 89386*4-6 (S.D.N.Y.), the court dismissed the complaint for failing to allege the predicate acts—not failing to allege injury. This Court in Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 741 F.2d 511, 515-16 (2d Cir. 1984) found an injury but no predicate act. Tsipouras v. W&M Properties, Inc., 9 F.Supp.2d 365, 368 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), conflicts with the following cases, including a S.D.N.Y. case, that all hold injuries to business reputation or goodwill are compensable under RICO: Philatelic Foundation v. Kaplan, 1986 WL 5629 at * 11 (S.D.N.Y. May 9, 1986), dismissed in part 647 F.Supp. 1344 (business reputation injury); Clark v. Stipe Law Firm, LLP, 320 F.Supp.2d 1207, 1213-14 (W.D.Okla. 2004)(professional reputation injury); Guerrero v. Gates, 110 F.Supp.2d 1287, 1293 (C.D. Cal. 2000)(damage to professional reputation); Ford Motor Co. v. B & H Supply, Inc., 646 F.Supp. 975, 999 (D. Minn. 1986)(injury to Ford’s reputation and goodwill); Gamboa v. City of Chicago, 2003 U.S. Dist. Lexis 13706 *9 (N.D. Ill.)(loss of business reputation is injury—dicta).

Hollander Brief, pp 32-39, presents the arguments for other cognizable injuries to business and property, such as legal fees incurred in defending against proceedings initiated or threatened, Gamboa, 2003 U.S. Dist. Lexis 13706 *9, by defendants in order to further the RICO Scheme (Complaint ¶¶ 229, 234, 239, 240, 307-14, A 44-45, 51-52).

Defendants claim the District Court “indicated that indefinite, speculative and unprovable damages are not recoverable,” Mundy Brief p.34-2, but don’t cite the Order and don’t apply their proposition to any damage allegations. All the “speculative” cases cited by defendants concern damages that might occur in the future, not damages that already happened. E.g. Hecht v. Commerce Clearing House, Inc., 897 F.2d 21, 24 (2d Cir. 1990). The lost debt cases: Stochastic v. DiDomenico, 995 F.2d 1158, 1165-66 (2d Cir.), cert.denied, 510 U.S. 945 (1993); First Nationwide Bank v. Gelt Funding, 27 F.3d 763, 768 and Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhodes, 859 F.2d 1096, 1106 (2d Cir. 1988), cert. denied, 490 U.S. 1007 (1993) all held the damages at the time of the RICO litigation were speculative because it was still unknown how much would be recovered through other concurrent proceedings or collection efforts that had not yet concluded. Since courts don’t have crystal balls, such future damages are considered speculative, indefinite and unprovable. The damages alleged in this case have already occurred.

B. Proximate Cause

The defendants wrongly claim the rule for determining RICO standing in this Court does not “depend on whether there is proximate causation as that term is defined in common law.” Mundy Brief p.35-3.

Standing under RICO requires pleading (1) defendant’s violation of 18 U.S.C. 1962, (2) injury to plaintiff’s business or property, and (3) causation of the injury by defendant’s violation. Lerner v. Fleet Bank, 318 F.3d 113, 120 (2d Cir.2003). Element (3)—causation—requires “but for” and proximate cause. Proximate causation is determined by common law principles. Desiano v. Warner Lambert Co., 326 F.3d 339, 346 (2d Cir. 2003)(citing Laborers Local 17 v. Phillip Morris, Inc., 191 F.3d 229, 234 (2d Cir. 1999)). The Supreme Court, Holmes v. Securities Investor Protection Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 267-69, 117 L.Ed.2d 532, 112 S.Ct. 1311 (1992), and other circuits also call for using common law proximate causation, e.g. Brandenburg v. Seidel, 859 F.2d 1179, 1189 (4th Cir. 1988); Kaufman v. BDO Seidman, 984 F.2d 182, 185 (6th Cir. 1993); Israel Travel Advis. Serv. v. Israel Iden. Tours, 61 F.3d 1250, 1257 (7th Cir. 1995).

Proximate causation requires (1) direct injury as opposed to a passed-on or derivative harm and (2) foreseeability. Desiano at 346. Stated another way: “Central to the notion of proximate cause is the idea that a person is not liable to all those who may have been injured by his conduct, but only to those with respect to whom his acts were [1] ‘a substantial factor in the sequence of responsible causation,’ and [2] whose injury was ‘reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural consequence.’” Lerner, 318 F.3d 113, 123 (2d Cir. 2003)(citing First Nationwide Bank, 27 F.3d 763, 769 (2d Cir, 1994)).

Extrapolating the standing requirement for suing under certain statutes—plaintiff must (1) belong to the class the statute sought to protect and (2) suffer the type of harm meant to be prevented—to reach the tenuous conclusion that foreseeability in civil RICO requires criminals (1) to specifically intend harm to a particular person and (2) to do so by inflicting a specifically intended injury, Abrahams v. Young & Rubicam, Inc., 79 F.3d 234, 237-39 (2d Cir. 1996); In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig., 39 F.3d 395, 400 (2d Cir. 1994), conflicts with the Supreme Court and other circuits. Although, it’s an effective way of limiting the number of RICO suits.

To the extent this Court limits the element of foreseeability, as contended in Mundy Brief, p.35-37, to the targets, competitors, intended victims and customers of the racketeering enterprise, Ideal Steel Supply Corp. v. Anza, 373 F.3d 251, 260 (2d Cir. 2004)(citing Lerner, 318 F.3d at 124 and Sperber v. Boesky, 849 F.2d 60, 65 (2d Cir. 1988)), it is in conflict with the proximate cause requirements of the Supreme Court, Holmes, 503 U.S. at 267-69, other circuits, BCCI Holdings (Lux.), S.A. v. Khalil, 214 F.3d 168, 173-74 (D.C.Cir.), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 958 (2000); Khurana, 130 F.3d 143, 151-52 (5th Cir. 1997); Terre Du Lac Ass'n, Inc. v. Terre Du Lac, Inc., 772 F.2d 467, 472 (8th Cir. 1985)(citation omitted), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1082 (1986) and commentators, Rakoff and Goldstein, RICO Civil and Criminal, §4.02[7] (“[T]he RICO plaintiff need not be the target of the RICO conspiracy or the intended victim of the RICO predicate acts, as long as plaintiff’s business or property was ... injured as a proximate result of the violation.”).

To the extent this Court requires injuries from a “preconceived purpose of the RICO activities,” Mundy Brief, p.35-3, it is in conflict with Holmes, 503 U.S. at 267-69, and Diaz, 420 F.3d at 901-02 (9th Cir,) (“There is ... no room in the statutory language for an additional, amorphous requirement that, for an injury to be to business or property, the ... interest [must] have been the direct target of the predicate act. The statute is broad, but that is the statute we have. Were the standard as [Mundy] claims, we would have the anomalous result that one could be liable under RICO for destroying a business if one aimed a bomb at it, but not if one aimed at the business owner, missed and hit the business by accident, or if one aimed at the business owner who happened to be in the business at the time.”)

The pleadings, however, allege plaintiff as a target of defendants' RICO violations and a customer, albeit an unwitting one, of the racketeers. Hollander Brief p.50-1 to p.51-1. To be sure, the Russian mafia Scheme targets others, but no precedent suggests that a racketeering enterprise may have only one target. Baisch v. Gallina, 346 F.3d 366, 375 (2d Cir. 2003). Many harms caused plaintiff were obviously preconceived by the defendants, such as tricking plaintiff into sponsoring and paying for defendant Shipilina's fraudulently obtained immigrant visa, lulling him into paying for her flight to America, attempting to coerce plaintiff into lying to the INS that included bringing a fraudulent restraining order that cost him to defend against, increasing litigation costs by stonewalling an annulment-divorce trial that would have exposed the Scheme, adding to litigation expenses by intimidating annulment-divorce witnesses into not providing pre-discovery information, costing plaintiff $3500 to defend against a false arrest and increasing the expenses of this RICO action by attempting to obstruct it. Hollander Brief p.34-2 to p.35-1. All intended to make justice too costly to pursue and thereby protect the mob's Scheme.

The Mundy Brief, pp.39-2 to 43-1, cites a number of cases to support the District Court's finding that plaintiff's pleadings failed to allege proximate causation. The holdings in those cases found the proximate cause element (1) "direct injury" lacking; that is, the injuries were "passed-on" or "derivative" or “indirect.” “[T]he critical question posed by the direct injury test is whether the damages a plaintiff sustains are derivative of an injury to a third party. If so, then the injury is indirect; if not, it is direct.” Desiano, 326 F.3d at 346 (quoting Laborers Local 17, 191 F.3d at 238-39. “[A] plaintiff who complained of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant’s acts was generally said to stand at too remote a distance to recover.” Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268-69. Plaintiff in this case does not allege damages derivative of injuries to third parties<sup>4</sup> and the District Court didn’t find any. Hollander Brief p.41-1.

C. Mundy Misrepresents District Court’s Order

Mundy’ attorneys make a few important misrepresentations in the Mundy Brief Point (I)(C), pp 44-48, about what the District Court held and plaintiff alleges.

Editing District Court’s Order

The “relaxed analysis” the Mundy Brief, p.45-1, claims the District Court used refers to the Rule 12(b)(6) pro se standard, Order p.7-2, A-137, not the determination of proximate cause for which the District Court used the “targets, competitor, intended victims and harm” test. Id. p.9-2, A-139.

Mundy tries to obfuscate the District Court's error in holding "[p]laintiff, in essence, portrays himself ... as a whistleblower...", Order p.12-2 A-142; contra Hollander Brief pp 43 to 47, by claiming the Court really stated "to the extent Hollander portrays himself as a Whistleblower," Mundy Brief p.46-2.

The District Court erroneously drew a bold Maginot Line at August 2000 for its fabricated intervening event of plaintiff's discovery of the Scheme.

Hollander Brief, p.13-1. Mundy's attorneys try to erase the Court's error by illogically claiming injuries before August 2000 resulted from plaintiff's actions on or after August 2000, Mundy Brief, p.45-3, p. 46-3; Contra Hollander Brief p.25, p.52-2, p.53-1. As an alternative to this Doctor Who view of time, the Mundy Brief, p.46 n.17, asserts the District Court's Maginot Line is irrelevant. Not to the District Court, which based its opinion of that manufactured intervening event. Order p.2-1, p.11-2, p.12-1, p.13-2, A-132, 141-43.

Apparently defendants don't like parts of the District Court's opinion, so they simply change them to fit their arguments.

Editing Plaintiff's Allegations

Mundy's attorneys also put words in plaintiff's mouth, Mundy Brief, p.46 n.17, by saying plaintiff "suggested that he was aware of the alleged scheme, to some degree, in August 2000 or shortly thereafter after he commenced his investigation." That's false. (Complaint ¶¶ 170, 173, 185, 189, 198, 203, 210-212, 214-15, 220, 227 A 39-40, 42-44; Hollander Brief p.13-1.) This RICO Complaint, as with all complaints, was not written at the time that the events occurred but afterward, when hindsight, investigation and a defendant's diary revealed what had been taking place behind the scenes.

Mundy Brief, p.48-2, misrepresents plaintiff as claiming the defendants constitute an enterprise specifically set up to target his business and property. Once again, the Enterprise is the Russian mafia, a big association with many illegal and legal operations, the defendants are some of its members or associates and plaintiff just one of many victims who has fallen prey to the mob's Scheme. Hollander Brief pp 3-8.

Mundy Brief, p.44-2, continues misleading in relating plaintiff's injury allegations. The Complaint alleges loss profits as a result of the "initial success of the Enterprise's Scheme" pertaining to plaintiff and the time away from his business for various investigations to halt the harm being done to his interests. (Complaint ¶907(a).) The investigations also incurred costs, Complaint 907(d), but at the time of their being conducted, it was unknown they were caused by RICO activities.

D. Pattern Continuity

Closed-ended

Mundy Brief, p.51-4, p.52-1, falsely claims De Falco v. Bernas, 244 F.3d 286, 321 (2d Cir. 2001), holds: “In determining the duration of a pattern of racketeering activity, Courts focus solely on the predicate acts of racketeering each defendant is alleged to have committed.” The De Falco Court did not look at each individual defendant’s acts in isolation, but at all the defendants’ acts together in determining duration: “[t]he duration of a pattern of racketeering is measured by the RICO predicate acts the defendants [plural] commit.” De Falco at 321. The focus for determining continuity duration is on the acts all the defendants committed on behalf of the criminal entity, not on each defendant’s conduct viewed in isolation from other members of the enterprise. The whole purpose of enacting RICO was to reach criminal organizations. Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 496, 146 L.Ed.2d 561, 120 S.Ct. 1608 (2000).

Mundy Brief, p.52-2, focuses only on Mundy’s predicate acts without addressing that these acts, along with those of other defendants, (Complaint ¶¶878-885, A 109-110) are part of “a series of related predicates” over a substantial period of time, H.J. Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., 492 U.S. 229, 242, 106 L.Ed.2d 195, 109 S.Ct. 2893 (1989), which for this Court is apparently two years, De Falco at 321. The series of predicate acts aimed at plaintiff by members of the Russian mafia began in 1999 when defendants Shipilina and Perlin targeted plaintiff as part of the Russian mafia’s ongoing Scheme to infiltrate and expand its operations in the U.S., Complaint ¶¶135-36, A-36, with the latest known predicate act taking place on July 21, 2004 when defendant Shipilina obstructed this RICO proceeding by falsely concealing facts, Supp. Complaint ¶70, A-121.

The most recent known predicate acts concerning Mundy are mail fraud in filing a disciplinary complaint to further the Scheme on April 23, 2003, Supp. Complaint ¶55, A-120, and the predicate acts stemming from the threatening telephone call of June 2003, id. ¶¶2-18, A 114-16. All of Mundy's acts against plaintiff are part of keeping the Russian mafia's business Scheme on track.

Hollander Brief, p.6-2, p.7-1. Even accepting Mundy's skewed view of the law, the time period measured from their admitted beginning date of October 2000, Mundy Brief, p.52-2, to June 2003 is over two years.

Open-ended

“Where the enterprise is engaged primarily in racketeering activity, and the predicate acts are inherently unlawful, there is a threat of continued criminal activity, and thus open-ended continuity.” Cofacredit, S.A. v. Windsor Plumbing Supply Co., 187 F.3d 229, 242-43 (2d Cir. 1999)(citing see H.J. Inc., 492 U.S. 229, 242-43). The Enterprise is not Mundy, they are just members of it. The Enterprise is the Russian mafia. Hollander Brief, p.3-2, p.5-1. This Court can take judicial notice that the Russian mafia primarily engages in inherently unlawful racketeering activities or refer to the Complaint at ¶¶1, 10-15, 880-83, A 24-26, 109.

Open-ended continuity also exists where there was a threat of continuing criminal activity. Cofacredit, 187 F.3d at 242. Mundy claims that plaintiff's allegations describe only past criminal acts of a discrete and short-lived scheme, Mundy Brief, p.54-2, but the analysis of the threat of continuity cannot be made from hindsight, U.S. v. Busaca, 936 F.2d 232, 238 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 985 (1991). Rather courts determine whether the predicate acts posed a threat at the time of occurrence. E.g., A. Terzi Prods. V. Theatrical Protective Union, 2 F.Supp.2d 485, 508 (S.D.N.Y. 1998). Just five weeks after defendants were mailed on April 20, 2003 the Complaint and waiver of summons request, the plaintiff received another threatening telephone call—this time from a thuggish-sounding man speaking in Russian. The threat was plain, if the plaintiff returned to Krasnodar to continue gathering evidence against the mob defendants in this federal action, then it was going to be bad for him. (Supp. Complaint ¶2, A-114.) This made clear at the time that the Enterprise was not through with the plaintiff. Further, the Mundy Brief, p.6-1, admits the ongoing Scheme in the continuing efforts to obtain a Russian mafia asset permanent residency and citizenship despite Shipilina's violation of immigration laws, Complaint ¶¶191-93, A-41, and felonies by claiming U.S. citizenship in registering to vote, Complaint ¶¶459, 743-44, A-65, 94.

E. Russian Mafia Enterprise

Defendants try to confuse a Rule 12(b)(6) appeal with one from a summary judgment or a trial by citing cases requiring proof. Mundy Brief p.55-3, p.56-2. Defendants quote from U.S. v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 583, 69 L.Ed.2d 246, 101 S.Ct. 2524 (1981), that an enterprise is “proved by evidence” but omit that Turkette was an appeal of a conviction after trial—not of a motion to dismiss where “[t]he pleading of additional evidence is not only unnecessary, but in contravention of proper pleading procedure.” Geisler v. Petrocelli, 616 F.2d 636, 640 (2d Cir. 1980).

This Court has expressly disavowed the Mundy Brief, p.55-3, p.57-2, argument that an enterprise must have a “hierarchy,” “structural continuity” or “distinctness” extending beyond the performance of the pattern of racketeering activity. Moss v. Morgan Stanley, Inc., 719 F.2d 5, 22 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Bargaric, 706 F.2d 42, 55 (2d Cir. 1983); United States v. Mazzei, 700 F.2d 85, 88 (2d Cir. 1983). Defendants base their position on Goldfine v. Sichenzia, 118 F.Supp.2d 392, 400 (S.D.N.Y. 2000); Black Radio Network, Inc. v. NYNEX Corp., 44 F.Supp.2d 565, 580 (S.D.N.Y. 1999); and Schmidt v. Fleet Bank, 16 F.Supp.2d 340, 349-50 (S.D.N.Y. 1998), which derive their holdings from the Eighth Circuit. This Court disagreed with Schmidt on precisely the points for which the defendants cite Goldfine and Black Radio. “Our Circuit has rejected the Eighth Circuit’s restrictive approach to the enterprise element.... The enterprise need not necessarily have a continuity extending beyond the performance of the pattern of racketeering acts alleged, or a structural hierarchy, so long as it is in fact an enterprise defined in the statute. We have repeatedly found a sufficient enterprise where the complaint alleges a group without centralized hierarchy formed for the sole purpose of carrying out a pattern of racketeering acts.” See Pavlov v. Bank of New York Co., Inc., 2002 WL 63576*71 (2d Cir. Jan. 14, 2002)(unpublished decision).

In Hansel’n Gretel Brand, Inc. v. Savitsky, 1997 WL 543088, *2 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 3, 1997) the court rejected that a complaint must allege a common link among defendants other than the racketeering activities or allege that defendants played roles in the enterprise distinct from the racketeering activities. The Second Circuit in United States v. Mazzei, 700 F.2d 85, 89 (2d Cir. 1983), found that Turkette didn’t require a “distinction” element as claimed by defendants: “[T]here is no language in the legislative history to indicate that the alleged enterprise must engage in activities separate and distinct from illicit” conduct. Further, in Colony Holbrook, Inc. v. Strata, G.C., Inc., 928 F.Supp. 1224, 1235-36 (E.D.N.Y. 1996), the court rejected the view that an enterprise encompasses only an association with an ascertainable structure having an existence apart from the commission of the predicate acts.

But if this Court decides otherwise, the Russian mafia engages in racketeering activities harming others. (Complaint ¶¶879-85, A 109-10.) Deleting the alleged predicate acts that harmed plaintiff still leaves a distinct association with members, including defendants, engaging in criminal activities. E.g. Complaint ¶¶27, 466, 469, 470, 485, 490, 502, 520-21, 544, A-27, 66-73.

Further, the Complaint, ¶11, A-26, alleges participation in the Scheme by law firms and corporations whose existence as legal entities is sufficient, of themselves, to give the Enterprise a structure separate from racketeering activities. Webster v. Omnitrition Intern., Inc., 79 F.3d 776, 786 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 519 U.S. 865 (1996).

Mundy Brief, p.57-3, p.58-1, again claims the Enterprise consists of only the defendants—no, it consists of the Russian mafia. The defendants are merely members operating in different sections of the Enterprise furthering its goals. Complaint ¶15, A-26; Opposition Memorandum p.1-1, 3-1, 28-2, A-128; Hollander Brief p.11-3. Plaintiff does not allege defendants as a tight-knit, special group within the mob—just fellow travelers seeking fortune and, for some, glory by way of the Russian mafia.

F. “General” and “Conclusory”

Mundy Brief, p.49-1, misleads by failing to say the injuries that the District Court found as “general” and “conclusory” occurred only after August 2000—the date the Court mistakenly used for plaintiff’s discovery of the Scheme. Order p.12-1 n.6; p.13-2, A 142-43. Before August 2000, the Court held—wrongly—that plaintiff didn’t allege any injuries. Order p.11-2, p.12-1, A 141-42, contra Hollander Brief, p.25. Mundy’s prevarication tries to cover-up this error by the Court.

Mundy’s attorneys cite no cases for supporting the District Court’s finding of certain allegations as “conclusory” and “general,” but criticize plaintiff for using cases and a law review article in opposition that give some historical perspective of the law’s development. Mundy Brief, p.49-2. Apparently, these attorneys believe the truism that “He who ignores history is doomed to repeat it.”

FlashDancers Brief goes further than Mundy and the District Court by arguing all the allegations against FlashDancers defendants are “general,” “conclusory” or insufficient. Contra NOW, Inc v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 127 L.Ed.2d 99, 114 S.Ct. 798 (1994); U.S. v. Employing Plasterer’s Ass’n, 347 U.S. 186, 188, 98 L.Ed. 618, 74 S.Ct. 452, 454 (1954).

FlashDancers’ attorneys use a few ruses in their argument: (1) FlashDancers Brief, p.7-2, tries to apply Rule(9)(b) to allegations of predicate acts other than fraud in contradiction of the Supreme Court declining to extend beyond fraud or mistake the Rule 9(b) requirement of greater particularity in pleadings. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. 506, 513, 152 L.Ed.2d 1, 122 S.Ct. 992 (2002). (2) They quote from cases without specifying the allegations in those cases held insufficient so as to prevent a comparison to plaintiff's allegations listed at FlashDancers Brief, pp 9-13. (3) They use the Mundy scheme of not citing to specific pages in seven cases Old Time Enters p.7-2, Lubin p.8-1, Glenn p.14-3, Correa-Martinez p.14-5, The Dartmouth Review, p.15-3, West 79th Street Corp. p.15-4, In re MasterCard Int'l Inc. p.19-1. Ironically, Glenn v. First Nat'l Bank, 868 F.2d 368, 371 (10th Cir. 1989), states the court was not going to do the parties work for them. (4) They quote two cases, FlashDancers Brief, p.14-1, p.16-1, one without the page cite, that RICO complaints are more strictly scrutinized because they have "an almost inevitable stigmatizing effect" on defendants. This, however, contradicts the Supreme Court, "[a]s for stigma, a civil RICO proceeding leaves no greater stain than do a number of other proceedings." Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 492, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3280 (1985).

G. FlashDancers Harem of Misinformation

FlashDancers Brief, pp 16-19, misrepresents plaintiff's allegations and ignores the law.

FlashDancers defendants are alleged members of the Russian mafia who committed predicate acts on behalf of other defendants. (Complaint ¶¶ 17-23, 683, A 26-27, 88.) Liability for injuries from RICO violations is joint and several among the members of the criminal enterprise. Fleischhauer v. Feltner, 879 F.2d 1290, 1301 (6th Cir. 1989); see also Beneficial Standard Life Ins. Co. v. Madariaga, 851 F.2d 271, 272 (9th Cir. 1988). The allegation of conspiracy to violate 18 U.S.C. 1962(d) includes the allegation of defendants being joint and severally liable, since they are co-conspirators. Oki Semiconductor Co. v. Wells Fargo Bank, 298 F.2d 768, 775 (9th Cir. 2002)(citations omitted). Moreover, persons who actively and knowingly work for an organization that engages in criminal activity should be liable for the criminal acts of other members. Scales v. U.S., 367 U.S. 203, 226-27, 6 L.Ed.2d 782, 81 S.Ct. 1469, 1485 (1960).

Included in the FlashDancers predicate acts, Complaint ¶¶466-484, A 66-68, are three threatening telephone calls constituting tampering with a witness and informant, id. ¶¶479, 482, A-68. FlashDancers Brief, p.17, admits members of FlashDancers “assisting” in the calls. Persons violate predicate acts under 18 U.S.C. 1961(1) when they willfully commit the offense, aid, abet, counsel, command, induce, or procure or cause its commission. 18 U.S.C. 2.

FlashDancers Brief, pp 18-19, cites cases concerning fraudulent predicate acts for a “lumping” prohibition, but tampering with a witness or informant is not a fraudulent act. Further, whether Barry, Manager 3, 4 or 5 participated in trying to silence plaintiff is peculiarly within defendants' knowledge and even under Rule 9(b), pleadings on information and belief of data peculiarly within defendants' knowledge should be read permissively. Luce v. Edelstein, 802 F.2d 49, 54 n.1 (2d Cir. 1986); Berk v. Tradewell, 2003 Lexis 12078 * 39 (S.D.N.Y.).

Contrary to FlashDancers Brief, p.18-1, scienter for FlashDancers predicate acts are alleged at Complaint ¶¶682, A-88, and the Enterprise, not the predicate acts, must be engaged in or effect interstate or foreign commerce, U.S. v. Murphy, 768 F.2d 1518, 1531 (7th Cir. 1985), which the Complaint alleges at ¶¶874, A 107-08

H. Henning Brief

Although Henning is an employee of the City, the alleged illegal actions of receiving bribes or rewards to commit intentional torts are not within the scope of his employment. Henning—not the City—is the real party in interest. See Longin v. Kelly, 875 F.Supp. 196, 201-03 (SDNY 1995).

I. Leave to Amend Once

In a RICO action where injuries are derivative, i.e. passed-on, an amendment of the complaint would be futile. Westenberg v. CNF Transportation, Inc., 2002 U.S. App. Lexis 15803*4. But the case here does not claim injury passing through a third party; therefore, when the Complaint was dismissed and plaintiff had requested to file an amended complaint, that request should ordinarily have been granted, especially when there had been no prior amendment. Riccuti v. NYC Transit Auth., 941 F.2d 119, 123 (2d Cir. 1991).

Mundy's attorneys know this, so they resort to name-calling and argue that when a plaintiff approaches executive agencies or courts on causes of action distinct from RICO, the liberal standard granting leave to amend—even once—transmutes into slamming the courthouse doors in a plaintiff's face. Mundy Brief, pp 59-61.

In this RICO action, there has been only a complaint and supplemental complaint alleging criminal violations by various members of the Russian mafia and attendant motions necessitated by defendants filing motions to dismiss. There have been no other RICO or similar causes of actions filed by plaintiff, although the F.B.I. has started an investigation into some allegations. The Mundy Brief, p.60-3, injunction cases deal with multiple suits for the same cause of action—in one 32 suits.

IV. CONCLUSION

The modus operandi of the defense attorneys is clear: misrepresent the law and the allegations, add a good measure of demeaning, denigrating, defaming, demonizing and dissing the plaintiff, and presto, their opponent has no rights left that the government will recognize.<sup>5</sup> It's worked so far.

1. Mundy Brief, p.3-2, p.4-1, p.12 n.6, 7, p.59-2; FlashDancers Brief, p.2-2, ridicule plaintiff's use of the legal system and falsify the results: "all rebuff[ed]" or found "meritless." The INS began removal proceedings against Shipilina, the New York City Board of Elections referred Shipilina's voter registration felonies to the U.S. Attorney and Queens District Attorney, the Krasnodar prosecutor indicted one defendant, the F.B.I. opened an investigation and tracked down the man who made three of the four threatening calls, and Queens County Court issued a summons. (Complaint ¶¶247-52, 272, 286, 459, 743, 862-67, A-46, 48-49, 65, 94, 106-07; Supp. Complaint ¶8, A-115.) The only reason for an intentional infliction of emotional distress in state court, Mundy Brief p.13-2, 59-3, FlashDancers Brief p.2-2, was to toll the statute of limitations until the RICO suit, containing an identical supplemental state claim, was filed.
2. Defense attorneys paint plaintiff as the culpable rather than duped party to invoke the "in pari delicto" defense the Supreme Court rejected for statutes providing private enforcement. See Bateman Eichler, Hill Richards, Inc. v. Berner, 472 U.S. 299, 306-08, 86 L.Ed.2d 215, 105 S.Ct. 2622 (1985)(antitrust). They falsely claim plaintiff married Shipilina—a necessary part of the RICO Scheme—after learning about her slipping him drugs. Mundy Brief p.7-2, 3. Complaint, ¶¶175-77, A-39, says "surreptitious," which in English means plaintiff didn't know about it. They falsify plaintiff was secretly fed narcotics for two years straight. Mundy Brief p.21-3. The Complaint, ¶¶137, 166, 168, 171, 172, 175-185, A-36, 38-40, states on "various occasions." Plaintiff doesn't allege Shipilina fed him narcotics to avoid an annulment/divorce, Mundy Brief p.7-4, but "to divert him from learning about her activities as part of" the Russian mob, Complaint at ¶216, A-43.
3. Mundy Brief, p.21-3, falsely claims plaintiff was aware of Shipilina's profession before the fraudulently induced marriage in March 2000, but the Complaint states plaintiff didn't realize her prostitution or marriage to him for immigration purposes until October 2000, Complaint ¶220, A-44.
4. Mundy Brief, p.8-1, lies that plaintiff's investigations resulted from a "fascination." The initial investigation was to determine whether a wife was a prostitute. (Complaint ¶¶214-15, A-43.) But when plaintiff in November 2000 refused to lie to the INS, Complaint ¶¶224-26, A-44, certain defendants engaged in predicate acts to intimidate him into lying in order to protect the mob's Scheme. (Complaint ¶¶ 228-319, A 44-52; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 1-21, 49-72, A 114-16, 119-121.)

5. Mundy Brief, p.8-1, 59-3, misleads that plaintiff “commenced a defamation action in Russia”—the Krasnodar prosecutor brought a criminal defamation indictment. (Complaint ¶¶270-72, A-48.) The Krasnodar Department of Internal Affairs closed the case for a bribe of $10,000 arranged by Mundy. (Complaint ¶¶298-303, A 50-51.)
  6. Mundy Brief, p.8-2, p.22-2, lies that plaintiff “acknowledges that Mundy were merely representing Shipilina” in a domestic relations matter and that was Mundy’s only involvement with the mob. Mundy are key figures in obtaining visas, residency and naturalization for Russian mafia prostitutes; using coercion against informants and witnesses before federal agencies; participants in money laundering and use of international facilities to aid a racketeering enterprise; among other predicate acts. (Complaint ¶¶ 27-34, 485-513, A 27-28, 68-71.)
  7. Mundy Brief, p.8-3, prevaricates the report of alleged extortion filed against plaintiff. No charges were pressed, and the real purpose of it was to intimidate plaintiff into lying before the INS to assure permanent residency for a lucrative Russian mafia asset. (Complaint ¶¶228-32, A 44-45.)
  8. Mundy Brief, p.8-3, p.21-4, omits the protection order against plaintiff was temporary, subsequently dismissed and based on perjury suborned by Mundy to intimidate plaintiff into lying to the INS. (Complaint ¶¶234, 239-41, 311, A-45, 52.)
  9. Mundy Brief, p.9 n.4, faults plaintiff for leaving out criminal allegations against Mundy in the February 2001 annulment/divorce pleading. Plaintiff wasn’t divorcing Mundy, the allegations were determined by plaintiff’s counsel and at the time, their significance as predicate acts were unknown.
  10. Mundy Brief, p.9-3, p.13-1, lies that plaintiff’s “desire to terminate the marriage” led to RICO accusations against various defendants. The divorce occurred in November 2001, the motion to reform the divorce—May 2002, discovery of the RICO Scheme—July 2002 and the RICO accusations filed in April 2003. (Complaint ¶284, A-49; Hollander Brief, p.13-1.)
  11. Queens District Attorney determined the website criticized by Mundy Brief, p.10-1, 2, was legal, there is no record of a police report, just the threat of a false arrest to keep plaintiff from cooperating with the INS in Moscow. (Complaint ¶¶306-315, A51-52.)
  12. Mundy Brief, pp. 12-2, 13-1, shows the attorneys stunning lack of decency (the kind Shakespeare referred to in Henry VI) by using a medical issue to stigmatize plaintiff.
  13. Mundy Brief, p.13-3, 4, misleads that Mundy filed a disciplinary complaint against plaintiff before learning about this RICO suit. After Mundy received the RICO Complaint as part of a request for waiver of summons, he then filed his disciplinary action that even refers to the RICO suit. The action was quickly dismissed.

14. Mundy Brief, p.15-3, refers to an unspecified document in order to put words in the plaintiff's mouth concerning connections among certain defendants.
  15. Mundy Brief, p.20-1(F), misstates the Complaint, ¶907(a), which alleges loss of profits "from cessation of normal work as a result of the initial success of the Enterprise's Scheme in defrauding the plaintiff into arranging for Member Shipilina to enter the U.S...." (Emphasis added.) Id., p.20-1(H)-(I), also truncates the actual allegations of expenses to fit the District Court's misunderstanding.
  16. Mundy Brief, p.23-1, asserts the "proper authorities" should deal with plaintiff's allegations because the "RICO statute was not designed to allow private citizens to redress the wrongs Hollander claims...." Congress disagrees, one purpose of civil RICO was "encouraging civil litigation to supplement Government efforts to deter and penalize the respectively prohibited practices," Rotella v. Wood, 528 U.S. 549, 557, 145 L.Ed.2d 1047, 120 S.Ct. 1075 (2000).
  17. Mundy Brief, p.24 n.12(1), falsely states authorities "ignore[d]" the June 2003 threatening call. Authorities investigated but could not track down a number from which the threat was made. (Supp. Complaint ¶¶3-8, A 114-15.)
  18. Mundy Brief, p.24 n.12(2), ignores the F.B.I.'s Acting Chief of its Investigative Law Unit found that a Milwaukee agent did counsel certain defendants to file a false harassment charge against plaintiff. (Supp. Complaint ¶¶22-43, A 117-18.)
  19. Mundy Brief, p.25-3, 4, n.14, reproaches plaintiff for correcting an error by the District Court that unfairly impacted only plaintiff. Judge Castel admonished plaintiff for violating his page limits but said nothing about Mundy violating the page limits twice. Nobody violated the limits because when both sides' filed memoranda, Chief Judge Mukasey had the case. Disqualify p.3-2, A-152. Rather than waste space in an appeal brief correcting the error, plaintiff sent a letter requesting leave to file motions; such a letter is required under Castel's rules. Mundy prevaricates about why the letter was sent, lies by saying it was "offensive" and resorts of false opprobrium.
  20. Mundy Brief, p.60-2, pompously claims "abusive" plaintiff's website for identifying plaintiffs for a class action against the Russian mafia. Such maligning of plaintiff has as much to do with this appeal as the felony conviction for tax evasion in 1989 of the boss of Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Ronald J. Kuba.
  21. Mundy Brief, p.58-2, and FlashDancer Brief, p.3-2, skirt the reason why defendants have some connection with the Russian mob asset, Shipilina. She's the thread that weaves through a few different parts of the mob. Certain defendants committed predicate acts to bring this asset to America, others to keep her here, others to protect the mob's overall scheme and all to help expand the mob's activities to their benefit.

In the Watergate scandal, reporters Woodward and Bernstein followed the money;
here the pleadings followed Shipilina.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

-----X
Roy Den Hollander

Appellant-Plaintiff,

Docket No. 04-6700-cv

v.

ATTORNEY AFFIRMATION OF FACT FOR MOTION TO STRIKE AND SANCTIONS

Flash Dancers Topless Club, et al.,

Appellees-Defendants.

-----X

I, Roy Den Hollander, am the attorney, pro se plaintiff-appellant and declare the following to be true under penalty of perjury:

1. Defendants-appellees, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich (collectively “Mundy”); Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Flash Dancers Topless Club, Lynn Lepofsky, Barry Night Manager and Flash Dancers Manager 1 to 5 (collectively “Flash Dancers”); Alina A. Shipilina; and Detective Robert Henning filed their briefs in opposition to plaintiff’s brief on October 12, 2005 and served them by U.S. mail. Defendant-appellee Bank of Cyprus did not file or serve a brief.
2. Plaintiff received defendants-appellees briefs via the post after October 12, 2005.
3. Plaintiff’s reply brief has been scheduled for filing on November 9, 2005.

4. I am requesting the Mundy brief be rejected or certain sections of it be redacted, as set forth in the enclosed Memorandum of Law, for violation of the Appellate and Local Rules and monetary sanctions be levied against Mundy's attorneys.
5. I am requesting the Municipal or Robert Henning brief be rejected or certain sections of it be redacted, as set forth in the enclosed Memorandum of Law, for violation of the Appellate and Local Rules and monetary sanctions be levied against Henning's attorneys.
6. As for the Flash Dancers and Shipilina briefs, I am requesting certain sections be redacted, as set forth in the Memorandum of Law, and monetary sanctions be levied against their respective attorneys for violating Appellate and Local Rules.
7. I am also requesting the District Court's dismissal of my Complaint and Supplemental Complaint be reversed as it applies to the Bank of Cyprus because the Bank failed to file a brief in opposition and appropriate monetary sanctions.
8. The designation of issues and proposed Joint Appendix was first served on counsel for above defendants-appellees on June 13, 2005.
9. Attorneys for Mundy and Flash Dancers objected to certain proposed inclusions in the Joint Appendix.

10. Those objections were resolved at the Pre-argument conference on June 21, 2005 pending submission of certain short excerpts of independent relevance from plaintiff's Memorandum of Law in the District Court and a final designation of the Joint Appendix.
11. On July 16, 2005, plaintiff served on counsel for the above defendants-appellees a final designation of issues and Joint Appendix contents.
12. On July 21, 2005, counsel for Mundy made two additions to the Joint Appendix.
13. There were no further changes or additions to the Joint Appendix requested by counsel for the above defendants-appellees.

MEMORANDUM OF LAW TO REJECT CERTAIN BRIEFS OR STRIKE DESIGNATED PARTS OF DEFENDANT-APPELLEES BRIEFS AND FOR SANCTIONS

The defendants-appellees' briefs cited below violate the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure and the Local Rules of this Court by including numerous cites to documents outside the Joint Appendix to which they agreed, gratuitous ad hominem against the plaintiff-appellant Hollander, matter irrelevant and immaterial to the issues on appeal and failing to abide by the legal citation system of the Blue Book. The plaintiff-appellant requests striking such material specified below from various defendants' briefs and sanctions against the defendants' attorneys for wasting both this Court and the plaintiff's time on such matter.

Cites to the inappropriate matter in defendants-appellees' briefs include the brief's name, such as Mundy Brief, followed by a number, which is the page number, then a hyphen and a second number that refers to the paragraph on that page, which may or may not be a full paragraph. For example, Mundy Brief p.13-1 refers to the top three lines on page 13 while Mundy Brief p.13-2 refers to the next paragraph, which is a full paragraph._

Mundy Brief

The brief for defendants-appellees, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich (collectively "Mundy") violates the Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure ("F.R.A.P.") §30 by citing for support to documents not in the Joint Appendix. Mundy Brief p.4-2, 3; p.8-2, 3; p.9, n.4; p.10-1, 2, 3; p.11-1,3; p.12-2, n.6, 8; p.13-1, 2, 3; p.15-3; p.23-2, n.11; p.24, n.12(2)(Ex. A); p.25-3.

Local Rule §11(e) states the parties have an “obligation under F.R.A.P. §30 to reproduce in an appendix to their briefs ... exhibits ... to which they ‘wish to direct the particular attention of the court.’”

This Court’s on-line document: “How To Appeal Your Civil Case” states at p. 5, “The appendix should contain those matters from the record on appeal which are cited in the briefs or required by the Court to be included, such as the relevant docket entries in the proceedings below; any relevant portions of the pleadings, charge, findings, or opinion; the judgment, order, or decision appealed from; and any other parts of the record to which the parties wish to direct the particular attention of the Court.”

If Mundy’s attorneys had wanted to direct the Court’s attention to documents not in the Joint Appendix, then they should have designated them under F.R.A.P. §30(a)(1)(D) & (b)(1), but they did not, instead they agreed to the Joint Appendix as it now stands. Even had they designated the numerous additional documents cited to in the Mundy Brief, the Court would have ignored them because this Court under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure restricts its inquiry to “facts stated on the face of the complaint, in documents appended to the complaint or incorporated in the complaint by reference, and to matters of which judicial notice may be taken.” Allen v. WestPoint-Pepperell, Inc., 945 F.2d 40, 44 (2d Cir. 1991); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c). Despite the clarity of the law on what’s allowable in considering an appeal of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) ruling, Mundy’s attorneys are trying to slip in extraneous and untrustworthy documents not incorporated in the plaintiff’s pleadings with the ruse that since the documents are listed in the docket entries “produced by Hollander,” they are really in the Joint Appendix. Mundy Brief p.8, n.3.

Mundy’s attorneys even cite to their memoranda of law in the District Court that F.R.A.P. §30(a)(2) specifically excludes unless independent relevance is shown. They had ample opportunity to request any inclusions in the Joint Appendix at the Pre-argument conference on June 21, 2005 before Staff Counsel Stanley Bass or afterwards—but they did not.

Mundy’s attorneys citing to 35 documents comprising over 380 pages not in the Joint Appendix and citing these documents 25 times, usually without specific page cites, violate the purpose of F.R.A.P. §30 that “each appellate judge who hears the appeal will be able to follow the brief and relate the argument to the record by reference to the appendix. The appendix is thus an essential part of the paper on appeal and failure to comply with Appellate Rule §30 may result in drastic action.” 20A Moore’s Federal Practice, §330.11 (Matthew Bender 3d ed.) This is not a situation in which Appellate Rules permit citing directly to the record as when the Appendix is file after the briefs, F.R.A.P. §30(c), or the Court has ruled to dispense with the appendix, F.R.A.P. §30 (f). Even if it were, most of the cites outside the Appendix violate F.R.A.P. §28(e) by not referring to “the page of the original document.”

Mundy’s attorneys have gone outside the Joint Appendix that they agreed to so as to bring before this Court misleading, untrustworthy and defamatory information as part of their twin strategies of character assassination and disinformation—throw enough mud and maybe some will stick, make enough misrepresentations and maybe some will be believed. They try to swamp this Court, as they did the District Court, with documents irrelevant to the issues at hand because they know the courts do not have the time to check all the document citations for accuracy and that by just putting their allegations out, even on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) appeal, may sway a court.

The Mundy Brief’s “Statement of the Case” at pp 2-5 violates the purpose of F.R.A.P. §28(a)(6) by using that section to personally vilify the plaintiff-appellant with many misleading and false allegations in a continuation of what can only be called “litigation by personal destruction.” Under Appellate Rules, the “statement of the case” is supposed to be a description of the procedural history indicating the case’s nature, course of proceedings and the disposition below. F.R.A.P. §28(a)(6). Mundy’s lawyers, however, use that section and the rest of their brief section to replay their strategy of character assassination, which they successfully used in the District Court, in order to shut down the argument and marginalize the plaintiff so as to avoid a decision on the merits. The merits at this stage are whether the District Court properly dismissed the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint for not adequately alleging injury and causation under RICO. Discovery—not an appeal—is the more appropriate forum for exploring motivations and attacking witness or party credibility. The Mundy lawyers’ ad hominem attacks have no place in this Court under Local Rule 28: “Briefs must be ... free from ... scandalous matter.” The ad hominem statements appear in the Mundy Brief at p.3-2; p.8-3; p.9, n.4; p.10-1,2; p.11-1; p.12-1,2, n.8; p.13-1,3, p.21-3 (last sentence); p.25-3; p.59-2; p.60-2.

The Mundy Brief’s “Statement of Facts” at pp 5-25 violates F.R.A.P. §28(a) (7) and Local Rule §28 by presenting numerous factual allegations irrelevant and immaterial to the issues on appeal. Appellate Rule §28 requires identifying the facts that are “relevant to the issues submitted for review....” 20A Moore’s Federal Practice, §338.20[7]. Relevant means “[l]ogically connected and tending to prove or disapprove a matter in issue....” Black’s Law Dictionary, p. 1316 (8th ed.). Much of the Mundy Brief’s “Statement of Facts,” as well as other sections of their brief, are irrelevant because many of their factual allegations aren’t probative of the issues of compensable injury and proximate causation that the District Court restricted its decision to or other RICO issues raised in the defendants' brief at pp 50-59 that the District Court did not consider. The irrelevant sections are in the Mundy Brief at p.3-2; p.4-1; p.8-3; p.9, n.4; p.10-1,2,3; p.11-1, 3; p.12-1,2, n. 8; p.13-1,2,3,4; p.21-4 to p.22-1; p.23-2, n.11; p.25-3; p.59-3; p.60-2.

Further, at this stage of the proceeding, it's the plaintiff's pleadings that are considered true, California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S.Ct. 609 (citation omitted)(1972), not the defendants' opinions of Hollander nor their self-serving and inaccurate protestations or misplaced allegations. The Mundy Brief presents allegations of fact that belong in answers and allege findings of facts that belong in summary judgment motions at the District Court level—not the Appeals Court. In so doing, Mundy's attorneys aim to obtain affirmation of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal by having this Court consider extraneous material as part of the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint even though the plaintiff did not rely on such. In Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc., 282 F.3d 147, 153 (2d Cir. 2002), this Court stated, "[W]e reiterate here that a plaintiff's reliance on the terms and effect of a document in drafting the complaint is a necessary prerequisite to the court's consideration of the document on a dismissal motion; mere notice or possession is not enough."(emphasis is the Court's). This ploy of Mundy's attorneys effectively prevents the plaintiff from refuting their assertions and claims through motions for a judgment on the pleadings or summary judgment because the case is now in the Circuit Court. An ingenious Star Chamber procedure that eviscerates the plaintiff's due process rights by assuring against any chance of the plaintiff replying to these, in effect, counterclaims, or moving to reply to these stealth answers, or having a reasonable opportunity to make the record straight since affirmation of the lower court's dismissal will end this judicial procedure except for an appellate rehearing and Certiorari to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Local Rule 28 also requires that briefs must be free from burdensome matter. Thumbing through hundreds of pages in memoranda and exhibits not in the Joint Appendix sounds rather burdensome. Whether scandalous, irrelevant, immaterial or burdensome, such material may be disregarded and stricken by the Court.

Mundy's attorneys also violated F.R.A.P. §32(a)(4) and Local Rule §32(a) by submitting a brief with the right and top margins less than an inch.

Finally, Mundy's attorneys included a number of incomplete cites to cases by leaving out the specific page on which the support for various propositions are suppose to appear. The Mundy Brief at p.44-1 cites to a string of eight cases concerning compensable injury but fails to include the specific page referred to in any of the eight cases. This same tactic is used at p.39-2 (Ideal Steel) and p.34-3 (Lerner) for other propositions. The purpose of legal citation is to allow the reader to locate a cited source accurately and efficiently, The Blue Book §1.2 (17th ed.), which requires a specific page cite, id. §10.1. By omitting the specific page cites, Mundy's attorneys are effectively transferring that burden to the Court and the plaintiff.

The plaintiff requests this Court to reject the Mundy Brief for failing to follow the margin requirements. If the Court decides not to, the plaintiff-appellant requests all the narrative cited above in the Mundy Brief that relies on documents not in the Joint Appendix, that are ad hominem, irrelevant or fail to cite to the specific pages of case authorities be deleted from the Mundy Brief and not considered by this Court in making its decision. In addition, Mundy's attorneys submit a new brief with this material redacted. Further the plaintiff requests the Court impose monetary sanctions on Mundy's attorneys for wasting this Court's time and his by making this motion necessary. See Gilroy v. Erie Lackawanna R.R. Co., 421 F.2d 1321, 1323 (2d Cir. 1970).

Flash Dancer Brief

Attorneys for defendant-appellees Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lynn Lepofsky, Barry Night Manager and Flash Dancers Manager 1 to 5 (collectively "Flash Dancers") bare the same artifice as Mundy's attorneys in violating F.R.A.P. §30 by citing to documents not in the Joint Appendix, Flash Dancers Brief p.2-1,2, n. 1-3, p.3-1, n. 4-5, p.8-4 to p. 9-1, p.13, n.9. They, as with all the other attorneys in this appeal, had agreed to the Joint Appendix, but clearly had their fingers crossed behind their backs at the time. If they had raised the issue of including these documents at the Pre-argument conference, the Court's Staff Counsel would have prevented it. I was always troubled by their peculiar lack of talking at the conference. Anyway, by pretending to go along with the Joint Appendix, they, and the other attorneys, hoped to circumvent the rules and bring their own allegations into this appeal of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal. In doing so, Flash Dancers' attorneys also cavalierly tossed off F.R.A.P. §30(a)(2) that specifically excludes memoranda of law unless independently relevant. Using a quote from Mundy's Memorandum of Law in the District Court that characterizes the Complaint as "read[ing] more like a Tom Clancy novel," Flash Dancers Brief at p.2-1 may have relevance for a New York Times literature review but not an appeal to the second most prestigious court in the land. Besides, any school child knows truth is stranger than fiction.

Flash Dancers attorneys also try to replace justice's blindfold with their own tainted veil of allegations for propositions irrelevant to the issues on appeal. Id. p.2-1,2; p.3-1, n. 4-5. For example, they refer to a few efforts that occurred before plaintiff's discovery of the RICO Scheme. Id. p.2-2; p.3-1. They also fault the plaintiff for filing an action in New York State Court to toll the statute of limitations for one of the RICO pendent state claims and even lie about the Federal Bureau of Investigation not taking any action when it actually opened an investigation into some of the Complaint's allegations. They even call stripping "performing," id. p.4-1, and claim Flash Dancers, that highly profitable bazaar of naked bodies, to be a squeaky-clean operation, id. p.8-4. Such allegations by defendants are irrelevant and violative of Local Rule §28, but help, apparently in their opinion, to castigate the plaintiff for daring to fight for his rights.

The plaintiff requests the above cited violations of F.R.A.P. §30 and Local Rule §28 by Flash Dancers attorneys not be considered by the Court in its determination, that Flash Dancers attorneys submit a redacted brief and monetary sanctions be levied against them.

Municipal or Henning Brief

The Henning Brief failed to use the proper caption on its cover page in violation of F.R.A.P. §32(a)(2)(C), so the plaintiff requests the brief be rejected.

In the alternative, the attorneys representing Police Detective Robert Henning use the same trick as Mundy and Flash Dancers to inappropriately expand the Joint Appendix by citing to documents not in it. Henning Brief p.4-2 & 3, n.2. They, as did Mundy's attorneys, agreed to the Joint Appendix but now choose to violate F.R.A.P. §30 because of their own failure to include certain documents in the Appendix.

The plaintiff requests that the text on which the non-Appendix cites rely be redacted and not considered in making the Court's decision. Hollander also requests monetary sanctions be levied against Henning's attorneys.

Shipilina Brief

Defendant Alina Shipilina's attorney engages in irrelevant name-calling at Shipilina Brief p.2-1 in violation of Local Rule §28. Hollander requests the phrase "including ... throughout." not be considered by the Court in making its decision and monetary sanctions be assessed against Shipilina's attorney.

Bank of Cyprus

The Bank of Cyprus ("Bank") appeared in the proceeding in the District Court and was served with a Notice of Appeal and Pre-argument Statement. The Bank, however, has not filed a brief. Plaintiff-appellant, therefore, moves that this Court reverse the Fed. R. Civ. P. dismissal as pertaining to the Bank of Cyprus, cf. Nielsen v. U.S., 976 F.2d 951, 957 (5th Cir. 1992), and levy monetary sanctions against the Bank of Cyprus' attorneys.

The plaintiff-appellant requests striking such material specified below from various defendants' briefs and sanctions against the defendants' attorneys for wasting both this Court and the plaintiff's time on such matter.

Cites to the inappropriate matter in defendants-appellees' briefs include the brief's name, such as Mundy Brief, followed by a number, which is the page number, then a hyphen and a second number that refers to the paragraph on that page, which may or may not be a full paragraph. For example, Mundy Brief p.13-1 refers to the top three lines on page 13 while Mundy Brief p.13-2 refers to the next paragraph, which is a full paragraph._

Mundy Brief

The brief for defendants-appellees, Kuba, Mundy & Associates, Nicholas J. Mundy and Peter Petrovich (collectively "Mundy") violates the Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure (“F.R.A.P.”) §30 by citing for support to documents not in the Joint Appendix. Mundy Brief p.4-2, 3; p.8-2, 3; p.9, n.4; p.10-1, 2, 3; p.11-1,3; p.12-2, n.6, 8; p.13-1, 2, 3; p.15-3; p.23-2, n.11; p.24, n.12(2)(Ex. A); p.25-3. Local Rule §11(e) states the parties have an “obligation under F.R.A.P. §30 to reproduce in an appendix to their briefs ... exhibits ... to which they ‘wish to direct the particular attention of the court.’”

This Court’s on-line document: “How To Appeal Your Civil Case” states at p. 5, “The appendix should contain those matters from the record on appeal which are cited in the briefs or required by the Court to be included, such as the relevant docket entries in the proceedings below; any relevant portions of the pleadings, charge, findings, or opinion; the judgment, order, or decision appealed from; and any other parts of the record to which the parties wish to direct the particular attention of the Court.”

If Mundy’s attorneys had wanted to direct the Court’s attention to documents not in the Joint Appendix, then they should have designated them under F.R.A.P. §30(a)(1)(D) & (b)(1), but they did not, instead they agreed to the Joint Appendix as it now stands. Even had they designated the numerous additional documents cited to in the Mundy Brief, the Court would have ignored them because this Court under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure restricts its inquiry to “facts stated on the face of the complaint, in documents appended to the complaint or incorporated in the complaint by reference, and to matters of which judicial notice may be taken.” Allen v. WestPoint-Pepperell, Inc., 945 F.2d 40, 44 (2d Cir. 1991); see also Fed. R. Civ. P. 10(c). Despite the clarity of the law on what’s allowable in considering an appeal of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b) (6) ruling, Mundy’s attorneys are trying to slip in extraneous and untrustworthy documents not incorporated in the plaintiff’s pleadings with the ruse that since the documents are listed in the docket entries “produced by Hollander,” they are really in the Joint Appendix. Mundy Brief p.8, n.3.

Mundy’s attorneys even cite to their memoranda of law in the District Court that F.R.A.P. §30(a)(2) specifically excludes unless independent relevance is shown. They had ample opportunity to request any inclusions in the Joint Appendix at the Pre-argument conference on June 21, 2005 before Staff Counsel Stanley Bass or afterwards—but they did not.

Mundy’s attorneys citing to 35 documents comprising over 380 pages not in the Joint Appendix and citing these documents 25 times, usually without specific page cites, violate the purpose of F.R.A.P. §30 that “each appellate judge who hears the appeal will be able to follow the brief and relate the argument to the record by reference to the appendix. The appendix is thus an essential part of the paper on appeal and failure to comply with Appellate Rule §30 may result in drastic action.” 20A Moore’s Federal Practice, §330.11

(Matthew Bender 3d ed.) This is not a situation in which Appellate Rules permit citing directly to the record as when the Appendix is file after the briefs, F.R.A.P. §30(c), or the Court has ruled to dispense with the appendix, F.R.A.P. §30 (f). Even if it were, most of the cites outside the Appendix violate F.R.A.P. §28(e) by not referring to “the page of the original document.”

Mundy’s attorneys have gone outside the Joint Appendix that they agreed to so as to bring before this Court misleading, untrustworthy and defamatory information as part of their twin strategies of character assassination and disinformation—throw enough mud and maybe some will stick, make enough misrepresentations and maybe some will be believed. They try to swamp this Court, as they did the District Court, with documents irrelevant to the issues at hand because they know the courts do not have the time to check all the document citations for accuracy and that by just putting their allegations out, even on a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) appeal, may sway a court.

The Mundy Brief’s “Statement of the Case” at pp 2-5 violates the purpose of F.R.A.P. §28(a)(6) by using that section to personally vilify the plaintiff-appellant with many misleading and false allegations in a continuation of what can only be called “litigation by personal destruction.” Under Appellate Rules, the “statement of the case” is supposed to be a description of the procedural history indicating the case’s nature, course of proceedings and the disposition below. F.R.A.P. §28(a)(6). Mundy’s lawyers, however, use that section and the rest of their brief section to replay their strategy of character assassination, which they successfully used in the District Court, in order to shut down the argument and marginalize the plaintiff so as to avoid a decision on the merits. The merits at this stage are whether the District Court properly dismissed the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint for not adequately alleging injury and causation under RICO. Discovery—not an appeal—is the more appropriate forum for exploring motivations and attacking witness or party credibility. The Mundy lawyers’ ad hominem attacks have no place in this Court under Local Rule 28: “Briefs must be ... free from ... scandalous matter.” The ad hominem statements appear in the Mundy Brief at p.3-2; p.8-3; p.9, n.4; p.10-1,2; p.11-1; p.12-1,2, n.8; p.13-1,3, p.21-3 (last sentence); p.25-3; p.59-2; p.60-2.

The Mundy Brief’s “Statement of Facts” at pp 5-25 violates F.R.A.P. §28(a)(7) and Local Rule §28 by presenting numerous factual allegations irrelevant and immaterial to the issues on appeal. Appellate Rule §28 requires identifying the facts that are “relevant to the issues submitted for review....” 20A Moore’s Federal Practice, §338.20[7]. Relevant means “[l]ogically connected and tending to prove or disapprove a matter in issue....” Black’s Law Dictionary, p. 1316 (8th ed.). Much of the Mundy Brief’s “Statement of Facts,” as well as other sections of their brief, are irrelevant because many of their factual allegations aren't probative of the issues of compensable injury and proximate causation that the District Court restricted its decision to or other RICO issues raised in the defendants' brief at pp 50-59 that the District Court did not consider. The irrelevant sections are in the Mundy Brief at p.3-2; p.4-1; p.8-3; p.9, n.4; p.10-1,2,3; p.11-1, 3; p.12-1,2, n. 8; p.13-1,2,3,4; p.21-4 to p.22-1; p.23-2, n.11; p.25-3; p.59-3; p.60-2.

Further, at this stage of the proceeding, it's the plaintiff's pleadings that are considered true, California Motor Transport Co. v. Trucking Unlimited, 404 U.S. 508, 515, 30 L. Ed. 2d 642, 92 S.Ct. 609 (citation omitted)(1972), not the defendants' opinions of Hollander nor their self-serving and inaccurate protestations or misplaced allegations. The Mundy Brief presents allegations of fact that belong in answers and allege findings of facts that belong in summary judgment motions at the District Court level—not the Appeals Court. In so doing, Mundy's attorneys aim to obtain affirmation of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal by having this Court consider extraneous material as part of the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint even though the plaintiff did not rely on such. In Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc., 282 F.3d 147, 153 (2d Cir. 2002), this Court stated, "[W]e reiterate here that a plaintiff's reliance on the terms and effect of a document in drafting the complaint is a necessary prerequisite to the court's consideration of the document on a dismissal motion; mere notice or possession is not enough.”(emphasis is the Court’s). This ploy of Mundy’s attorneys effectively prevents the plaintiff from refuting their assertions and claims through motions for a judgment on the pleadings or summary judgment because the case is now in the Circuit Court. An ingenious Star Chamber procedure that eviscerates the plaintiff’s due process rights by assuring against any chance of the plaintiff replying to these, in effect, counterclaims, or moving to reply to these stealth answers, or having a reasonable opportunity to make the record straight since affirmation of the lower court’s dismissal will end this judicial procedure except for an appellate rehearing and Certiorari to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Local Rule 28 also requires that briefs must be free from burdensome matter. Thumbing through hundreds of pages in memoranda and exhibits not in the Joint Appendix sounds rather burdensome. Whether scandalous, irrelevant, immaterial or burdensome, such material may be disregarded and stricken by the Court.

Mundy’s attorneys also violated F.R.A.P. §32(a)(4) and Local Rule §32(a) by submitting a brief with the right and top margins less than an inch.

Finally, Mundy’s attorneys included a number of incomplete cites to cases by leaving out the specific page on which the support for various propositions are suppose to appear. The Mundy Brief at p.44-1 cites to a string of eight cases concerning compensable injury but fails to include the specific page referred to in any of the eight cases. This same tactic is used at p.39-2 (Ideal Steel) and p.34-3 (Lerner) for other propositions. The purpose of legal citation is to allow the reader to locate a cited source accurately and efficiently, The Blue Book §1.2 (17th ed.), which requires a specific page cite, id. §10.1. By omitting the specific page cites, Mundy's attorneys are effectively transferring that burden to the Court and the plaintiff.

The plaintiff requests this Court to reject the Mundy Brief for failing to follow the margin requirements. If the Court decides not to, the plaintiff-appellant requests all the narrative cited above in the Mundy Brief that relies on documents not in the Joint Appendix, that are ad hominem, irrelevant or fail to cite to the specific pages of case authorities be deleted from the Mundy Brief and not considered by this Court in making its decision. In addition, Mundy's attorneys submit a new brief with this material redacted. Further the plaintiff requests the Court impose monetary sanctions on Mundy's attorneys for wasting this Court's time and his by making this motion necessary. See Gilroy v. Erie Lackawanna R.R. Co., 421 F.2d 1321, 1323 (2d Cir. 1970).

Flash Dancer Brief

Attorneys for defendant-appellees Flash Dancers Topless Club, Jay-Jay Cabaret, Inc., Lynn Lepofsky, Barry Night Manager and Flash Dancers Manager

1 to 5 (collectively “Flash Dancers”) bare the same artifice as Mundy’s attorneys in violating F.R.A.P. §30 by citing to documents not in the Joint Appendix, Flash Dancers Brief p.2-1,2, n. 1-3, p.3-1, n. 4-5, p.8-4 to p. 9-1, p.13, n.9. They, as with all the other attorneys in this appeal, had agreed to the Joint Appendix, but clearly had their fingers crossed behind their backs at the time. If they had raised the issue of including these documents at the Pre-argument conference, the Court’s Staff Counsel would have prevented it. I was always troubled by their peculiar lack of talking at the conference. Anyway, by pretending to go along with the Joint Appendix, they, and the other attorneys, hoped to circumvent the rules and bring their own allegations into this appeal of a Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) dismissal. In doing so, Flash Dancers’ attorneys also cavalierly tossed off F.R.A.P. §30(a)(2) that specifically excludes memoranda of law unless independently relevant. Using a quote from Mundy’s Memorandum of Law in the District Court that characterizes the Complaint as “read[ing] more like a Tom Clancy novel,” Flash Dancers Brief at p.2-1 may have relevance for a New York Times literature review but not an appeal to the second most prestigious court in the land. Besides, any school child knows truth is stranger than fiction.

Flash Dancers attorneys also try to replace justice’s blindfold with their own tainted veil of allegations for propositions irrelevant to the issues on appeal.

Id. p.2-1,2; p.3-1, n. 4-5. For example, they refer to a few efforts that occurred before plaintiff's discovery of the RICO Scheme. Id. p.2-2; p.3-1. They also fault the plaintiff for filing an action in New York State Court to toll the statute of limitations for one of the RICO pendent state claims and even lie about the Federal Bureau of Investigation not taking any action when it actually opened an investigation into some of the Complaint's allegations. They even call stripping "performing," id. p.4-1, and claim Flash Dancers, that highly profitable bazaar of naked bodies, to be a squeaky-clean operation, id. p.8-4. Such allegations by defendants are irrelevant and violative of Local Rule §28, but help, apparently in their opinion, to castigate the plaintiff for daring to fight for his rights.

The plaintiff requests the above cited violations of F.R.A.P. §30 and Local Rule §28 by Flash Dancers attorneys not be considered by the Court in its determination, that Flash Dancers attorneys submit a redacted brief and monetary sanctions be levied against them.

Municipal or Henning Brief

The Henning Brief failed to use the proper caption on its cover page in violation of F.R.A.P. §32(a)(2)(C), so the plaintiff requests the brief be rejected.

In the alternative, the attorneys representing Police Detective Robert Henning use the same trick as Mundy and Flash Dancers to inappropriately expand the Joint Appendix by citing to documents not in it. Henning Brief p.4-2 & 3, n.2. They, as did Mundy's attorneys, agreed to the Joint Appendix but now choose to violate F.R.A.P. §30 because of their own failure to include certain documents in the Appendix.

The plaintiff requests that the text on which the non-Appendix cites rely be redacted and not considered in making the Court's decision. Hollander also requests monetary sanctions be levied against Henning's attorneys.

Shipilina Brief

Defendant Alina Shipilina's attorney engages in irrelevant name-calling at Shipilina Brief p.2-1 in violation of Local Rule §28. Hollander requests the phrase "including ... throughout." not be considered by the Court in making its decision and monetary sanctions be assessed against Shipilina's attorney.

Bank of Cyprus

The Bank of Cyprus ("Bank") appeared in the proceeding in the District Court and was served with a Notice of Appeal and Pre-argument Statement. The Bank, however, has not filed a brief. Plaintiff-appellant, therefore, moves that this Court reverse the Fed. R. Civ. P. dismissal as pertaining to the Bank of Cyprus, cf. Nielsen v. U.S., 976 F.2d 951, 957 (5th Cir. 1992), and levy monetary sanctions against the Bank of Cyprus' attorneys.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

This petition requests review of a Second Circuit Court of Appeals’ decision that affirmed a dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6) by the Southern District Court of New York of a civil RICO suit against certain members and associates of the Russian mafia.

The Second Circuit’s decision answered yes to all the following questions presented:

1. Can the archetypal, intimidating mobsters of organized crime—the Russian mafia—use racketeering activities to prevent the exposure or discovery of prior racketeering deeds without fear of liability under civil RICO? (Pet. p. 11).

2. Does the Supreme Court's proximate causation analysis in Holmes for pass-along, or derivative, injuries flowing from the misfortunes visited on a third person apply in situations where the reasons for the policies behind the analysis do not exist and where there are no third-parties through whom injuries can pass? (Pet. p. 15).

3. Does proximate causation for civil RICO require that the injuries resulting from racketeering activities be the “specifically-intended consequence” or “preconceived purpose” of the conspirators’ scheme? (Pet. p. 20).

4. Are injuries to a person’s legal causes of action from racketeering activities excluded from compensable damages under civil RICO? (Pet. p. 24).

5. Are expenses incurred in the investigation of a fraud unrecoverable even though such expenses are incurred in almost every civil RICO case? (Pet. p. 27).

6. Did the Second Circuit contravene the Supreme Court by failing to presume that general factual allegations of injury from racketeering activities embrace those specific facts that are necessary to avoid a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal? (Pet. p. 28).

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI
TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

OPINIONS BELOW

The citation for the Second Circuit Court of Appeals' Summary Order is 2006 U.S. App. Lexis 2781 or 2006 WL 267148 and for the Southern District Court of New York's Memorandum and Order, it is 340 F.Supp.2d 453 (S.D.N.Y. 2004)(Castel, J.). Both Orders are included in the Petition Appendix at A-1 and A-7 respectively.

JURISDICTION

The Summary Order of the Second Circuit was entered on February 3, 2006.

The U.S. Supreme Court has jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §1254(1) by which summary orders of the courts of appeals are reviewed by writ of certiorari.

STATUTES INVOLVED

The Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-68, of which a copy is included in the Petition Appendix at A-34.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Nomenclature

The following nomenclature applies throughout this petition:

Petitioner-plaintiff and attorney Roy Den Hollander (“Hollander”),

Summary Order of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals (“Cir. Order”), Memorandum and Order of the Southern District Court of New York (“Dist. Order”).

Citations to court decisions are to page number; paragraph (§) on that page, which may or may not be a full paragraph, and the Appendix page noted by (“A-page number”).

Citations to the Complaint and Supplemental Complaint are only to paragraph numbers (§) and the corresponding Appendix page.

The terms “RICO violations,” “pattern of racketeering activity” or individual “predicate acts” are subsumed in the terms “racketeering activities” or “racketeering acts.”

Facts

The defendants in this case comprise a relatively few members or associates operating in different sections of the Russian mafia, which, according to former Central Intelligence Agency Director John Deutsch, reaches across international borders. Emergency Net News Service, May 3, 1996, Vol. 2-124. Echoing the C.I.A.’s assessment, former F.B.I. Director Louis Freeh said, “Evidence that organized crime activity from [Russia] is expanding and will continue to expand to the United States is well-documented.” Id. Russian criminal operations in America, such as money laundering, illegal money transactions, prostitution, narcotics trafficking, extortion and fraud are often carried out in cooperation with La Cosa Nostra. Report on Russian Organized Crime, 1997, Task Force headed by William H. Webster, Center for Strategic and International Studies.

The Russian mafia, once a hierarchical structure under the Soviet Union, diffused with the end of Communist Party power into a confederation of crime groups using modern-day management principles and including Chechen, American, Cypriot, Mexican and other nationalities. It now resembles a diversified worldwide conglomerate, or enterprise, with all the attendant business relationships. (Complaint ¶¶ 10, 11, 14, 874, A-54, 79). The smarter members of the Russian mafia, no longer confined to scheming for rubles, are chasing hard currency by expanding their criminal operations to the wealthy West. (Complaint ¶¶ 2, 13, A-54).

Bringing Russian crime to Western shores requires an ongoing transfer of money-making assets to foreign markets where the successful utilization of assets employs a strategy of (a) using money from criminal activities to set up and expand Russian mafia businesses, such as prostitution, pornography, strip clubs, drug smuggling and money laundering; (b) protecting those businesses through criminal activities, such as tampering with informants and witnesses, obstructing justice, bribery and intimidation; and (c) running the businesses by using crimes such as white slavery, immigration fraud, importing pornography and drug trafficking. The Russian mafia uses a complex, intertwined web of racketeering acts to maintain and continue expanding its activities in a drive for new targets and more money that causes widespread and varied harm. (Complaint ¶¶ 879-85, A-81, 82).

The Russian mafia's expansion into the West has created a vertically integrated business of supply, service, protection, profit maximization and reinvestment with a huge appetite for human capital. Each Russian mafia prostitution asset in the U.S. makes a relatively small amount of $100,000 to $150,000 tax-free a year, but considering the large number of them in the U.S., the syndicate is making substantial sums.

At the tactical level, the success of the Russian mafia's objective for one of its human-capital assets involves the following:

Step One: Transplanting a willing member or associate from Russia to the U.S. where she starts working in one or more syndicate businesses—prostitution, stripping, pornography or procuring. This involves the predicate acts of white slavery, 18 U.S.C. §§ 2421 & 2422, importing an alien for immoral purposes, 8 U.S.C. § 1328, fraud and the misuse of visas, 18 U.S.C. § 1546, and eventually procurement of nationality unlawfully, 18 U.S.C. § 1425. To keep the customers coming back for more from the new asset often also means drugs, 21 U.S.C. §§ 841 & 952.

Step Two: Protecting the mafia's human capital from deportation, arrest or imprisonment, which would ruin their money-making potential, often requires tampering with a witness, victim or informant, 18 U.S.C. 1512; threats made by mail or wire, 18 U.S.C. 1341 & 1343; use of interstate and foreign facilities in aid of the racketeering operation, 18 U.S.C. 1952; bribery, 18 U.S.C. 201; and even conspiracy to commit murder-for-hire 18 U.S.C. 1958, as in this case.

Step Three: Assuring that the mob's profits from its asset escape the taxman involves money laundering, 18 U.S.C. 1956, and failing to file reports on exporting amounts over $10,000, as required by 31 U.S.C. 5316.

This RICO case concerns just one asset, one string of events and injuries arising out of the Russian mafia's operations of transplanting prostitutes to New York and other states, passing drugs and large sums of money back and forth between countries, and threatening as well as executing reprisals against any person or business that might get in the syndicate's way.

Petitioner-plaintiff and attorney Roy Den Hollander owns and operates a one-man, unincorporated business that provides legal services and business consulting. The defendant Russian mafia members and associates include Flash Dancers Topless Club and Cybertech Internet Solutions that together sell call-girls and pornography over the internet at www.flashdancersnyc.com, www.stripclubnetwork.com, and www.exoticavip.com; the Baraev Chechen Special Islamic Regiment (responsible for the 2002 Moscow Theater hostage taking) used by certain defendants to threaten reprisals against Hollander and various of his informants and witnesses living in Krasnodar, Russia; assorted Russian Mafiosi, including the crime boss for southern European Russia; corrupt Russian government officials; gangsters in America; a corrupt New York City policeman; Alina Shipilina, a Russian mafia prostitute, money launderer and drug smuggler; the prostitute's Russian mother who is affiliated, as is her daughter, with the Baraev crime group and Russian criminals; Leonid Perlin the president of Phodes Studio in Moscow, www.phodes.net, a syndicate call-girl operation fronting as a model agency for which Alina Shipilina worked; lawyers Nicholas Mundy and Peter Petrovich<sup>1</sup> who manage and facilitate immigration matters in New York for the Russian syndicate; Marc Paulsen who produces and imports Russian pornography into southern California; and the Vasilyeva crime family that runs the premier model agency in Krasnodar which doubles as a call-girl operation sending prostitutes overseas to places such as Cyprus and Wisconsin, where two of the family members now reside.

These and other defendants work hard and ingeniously to enrich themselves in furthering a key objective of the Russian mafia: to infiltrate and expand its illegal and ancillary legal activities into hard currency markets, especially the U.S. Each defendant plays a role in importing assets or keeping the assets here and makes lots of money doing so. Some use narcotics and prostitutes to create fraudulent marriages; some engage in immigration fraud, white slavery, bribery and importing pornography; some traffic in drugs; some use coercion, intimidation, murder-for-hire, perjury and official misconduct to protect the mafia's assets; and others maximize profits with tax evasion and money laundering while others engage in various combinations of such criminal acts. But they are all fellow travelers seeking fortune and for some glory by furthering the Russian syndicate's expansion to the West.

One method of supplying the syndicate's sex business in America is tricking American men into sponsoring and financing Russian mafia prostitutes and procurers for U.S. residency and citizenship through, unbeknownst to the American, a fraudulent marriage. Because the trail of harm originates with a sham marriage rather than a fraudulent business transaction, the injury to property interests is no less serious.<sup>2</sup> A scheme to defraud is measured against a standard of "moral uprightness, of fundamental honesty, fair play and right dealing in the general and business life of members of society." Gregory v. U.S., 253 F.2d 104, 109 (5th Cir.1958). When criminal instrumentalities exploit human emotions of the heart rather than the pocketbook, a man does not lose his rights under U.S. law.

The fraudulent marriage for citizenship contrivance coupled with surreptitiously feeding petitioner Hollander narcotics is what ensnared him. Defendants Shipilina and Leonid Perlin decided in July 1999 to target Hollander as part of the Russian mafia's ongoing operations to infiltrate and expand its operations in the U.S. (Complaint ¶¶135-40, 153-54, 164, A-61, 62, 63). At the time, Hollander was working in Russia as a consultant-manager for Kroll Associates. After Hollander completed his contract with Kroll, the conspiracy to transplant defendant Shipilina to America succeeded in marrying her to Hollander in March 2000 in Krasnodar by, in part, secretly feeding him narcotics just before the wedding to assure he would go through with it. (Complaint ¶¶ 173-183, A-64, 65).

The first predicate act that injured Hollander was defendant Shipilina's subsequent perjury on her visa petition form filed in March 2000 with the Immigration and Naturalization Service ("INS") at the Moscow Embassy. (Complaint ¶¶ 190-91, A-65). Had Shipilina told the truth about her past prostitution, money laundering and narcotics trafficking activities, Hollander would not have paid the filing fees, nor put his business on hold, nor supported his wife nor incurred expenses living in Moscow while the forms were processed. (Complaint ¶¶ 187, 188, A-65). He would have returned immediately to New York City to resume his business there.

The second predicate act in Russia that caused Hollander to pay more filing fees, keep his business on hold and continue living in Moscow and supporting his wife was Shipilina's perjury on her visa application to the State Department at the Moscow Embassy in May 2000, which repeated her earlier perjury of not working as a prostitute, money launderer or narcotics trafficker. (Complaint ¶¶ 192, 193, A-65, 66). Had defendant Shipilina told the truth, Hollander would have left Moscow then and not have incurred those expenses.

Damages from the business interruption due to Shipilina's predicate acts in fraudulently obtaining a visa are included in the loss of profits, interruption expenses and loss of business opportunities alleged in the Complaint at ¶ 907(a)-(c), A-82, 83.

From the beginning, the Russian mafia's agent or front was defendant Shipilina. Initially, defendant Perlin and other organized crime members in Russia stood immediately behind her. But once she entered America on her fraudulently obtained visa, other comrades in crime came out from standing in the shadows to help directly and indirectly with the syndicate's plan of keeping her in America making money. On entering the U.S. in July 2000, defendant Shipilina became a conditional permanent resident, but she was not as secure from deportation as a permanent resident or naturalized citizen. (Complaint ¶¶ 205-212, A-67, 68).

After a few months in New York City, Hollander realized that Shipilina was working as a prostitute and had married him just for a green card, but he was still unaware of the Russian mafia's involvement. (Complaint ¶ 220, A-68). Hollander demanded a divorce which would threaten Shipilina's chances of obtaining permanent residency, so Russian mafia members Mundy and Petrovich intervened. Defendants Mundy and Petrovich are attorneys who operate an immigration mill for fraudulently obtaining Russian mafia assets visas, green cards and naturalizations, in addition to managing numerous immigration matters for the Russian syndicate in New York. (Complaint ¶¶ 27-34, 221, 222, A-55, 56, 68).

In October 2000, defendants Mundy, Petrovich and Shipilina tried to connive Hollander into participating in a fraud on the INS so as to assure that defendant Shipilina became a permanent resident and eventually a naturalized citizen—Hollander refused. (Complaint ¶¶ 223-226, A-68, 69). Defendants Mundy, Petrovich, Shipilina and others then resorted to further racketeering activities to prevent the discovery and exposure of the Russian syndicate's plan as it pertained to Shipilina in order to assure its success and keep hidden the Russian mafia's operations for transplanting human capital to America.

The defendants: (1) attempted to intimidate Hollander into committing perjury before the INS. That amounted to tampering with an informant, witness or victim and mail fraud, which harmed Hollander's business reputation and incurred costs and time to defend against a fraudulently obtained order of protection and a false charge of extortion (Complaint ¶¶ 228-30, 234-41, 901, 906, 907 (e), A-69, 70, 82, 83); (2) used coercion communicated by interstate wire to avoid an annulment/divorce trial with the result of increasing Hollander's legal costs and injuring his business reputation (Complaint ¶¶ 243-45, 273, 901, 906, 907(e), A-70, 73, 82,83); (3) interfered with pre-discovery investigations and silenced witnesses in Krasnodar to prevent Hollander from obtaining information for the annulment/divorce proceeding and the INS. Defendants engaged in tampering with witnesses, wire fraud, aiding a racketeering enterprise and money laundering that increased the cost and time of Hollander's investigation and necessitated a second investigatory trip to Krasnodar. (Complaint ¶¶ 256-60, 265-72, 903, 906, 907(d), A-71, 72, 73, 82, 83); (4) threatened Hollander over interstate wire into not making a motion for a trial, which harmed Hollander's cause of action and amounted to tampering because the state court trial evidence would have been provided to the INS, which had initiated deportation proceedings against defendant Shipilina. (Complaint ¶¶ 280-84, 901, 906, A-73, 74, 82); (5) attempted to intimidate Hollander into silence before the INS, which was conducting an investigation of defendant Shipilina, and the Krasnodar prosecutor, who had indicted another defendant, all of which amounted to tampering and wire fraud that cost Hollander time away from his business and money to investigate and protect against the threats. (Complaint ¶¶ 285-90, 316-18, 906, 907(c) & (d), A-74, 76, 77, 82, 83); (6) intimidated witnesses into recanting their testimony before the Krasnodar prosecutor by engaging in wire fraud, aiding a racketeering enterprise and money laundering that resulted in harming Hollander's business reputation and costing him money to reopen the Krasnodar case so as to clear his name. (Complaint ¶¶ 293-97, 903, 906, 907(e), A-74, 75, 82, 83). (7) bribed Krasnodar officials to close the case against one defendant, which required money laundering and aiding a racketeering enterprise that resulted in harming Hollander's business reputation and costing him money to reopen the case so as to clear his name. (Complaint ¶¶ 298-304, 902, 906, 907(e), A-75, 82, 83); (8) attempted to have Hollander arrested twice on bogus charges that amounted to tampering and involved wire fraud with a cost to Hollander of over $3,500 in attorney fees, time away from his business to defend himself and injury to his business reputation. (Complaint ¶¶ 306-15, 901, 906, 907(c) & (e), A-75, 76, 82, 83; Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 22-24, 34-38, 43, A-85, 86); (9) attempted to intimidate Hollander into staying out of Krasnodar and not prosecuting this RICO action, which consisted of tampering, aiding a racketeering enterprise and wire fraud that cost Hollander time and money in responding to the threat and injured his RICO cause of action (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 2, 9-10, 12, 13, A-84, 85; Complaint ¶¶ 906, 907(c), A-82, 83); (10) started disciplinary proceedings against Hollander to prevent him from proceeding with this RICO case, which involved tampering and mail fraud that harmed Hollander's business reputation and cost him time and money to defend against. (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 49, 50, 52, 53, 55, A-86, 87; Complaint ¶¶ 901, 907(e), A-82, 83); (11) obstructed justice by filing false and misleading documents in this case with the District Court that injured Hollander's RICO cause of action. (Supp. Complaint ¶¶ 59, 61-63, 70, A-87; Complaint ¶¶ 901, A-82). All of these racketeering activities by the defendants were intended to make justice too costly to pursue and thereby protect the syndicate's operations.

Whether discovery and exposure of the Russian mafia's operations was to come by way of testimony in the INS's removal proceedings against defendant Shipilina, a state court trial or Russian criminal case, it was on its way to federal law enforcement officials until the defendants' racketeering activities effectively shut down the legal process. By covering up the Russian syndicate's operations as pertaining to defendant Shipilina, the defendants also protected the activities of other Russian mafia members and associates (Complaint ¶ 882, A-81), which was why it was so important to "prevent Hollander from investigating [the conspirators]," Cir. Order p. 3 ¶ 4 (court's emphasis), A-3. In the end, the policy of promoting social stability and justice by encouraging resort to the courts rather than to force or threats of force proved to be no more than nice sounding words.

Basis for jurisdiction in the United States District Court, Southern District of New York

The District Court's basis for subject matter jurisdiction was a federal question under the civil enforcement provisions of the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. 1964, A-44. As to the foreign defendants, the district court had jurisdiction based on their conduct abroad causing foreseeable and substantial effects within the U.S.

Personal jurisdiction resulted from each defendant having minimum contacts with New York, a defendant operating through an agent or a defendant's conspiratorial contacts with other defendants in New York.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

1. Can the archetypal, intimidating mobsters of organized crime—the Russian mafia—use racketeering activities to prevent the exposure or discovery of prior racketeering deeds without fear of liability under civil RICO?

The Second Circuit's decision in this case creates a loophole in the RICO statute by which members or associates of a criminal enterprise can use racketeering activities to prevent the exposure or discovery of prior RICO violations. The Court of Appeals held that racketeering activities in which “the conspirators allegedly tr[y] to prevent<sup>3</sup> [a victim] from investigating them...,” Cir. Order p. 3 ¶ 4, A-3, (emphasis the court’s), or “thwart” petitioner’s RICO litigation efforts, or hinder his attempts to repair prior RICO damages, Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 2, A-4, are not reachable under civil RICO because such cover-up predicate acts are in response to an investigation or litigation that may discover or expose prior criminal conduct, and it is that investigation or litigation, not the cover-up crimes, that proximately causes any injury.

The Second Circuit and Southern District courts have inadvertently created a legal amnesty in the Second Circuit for any RICO acts committed after the first set of crimes so long as the later crimes are committed to prevent, thwart or hinder the victim’s investigation or litigation that may lead to discovery or exposure of the initial racketeering activities engaged in to carry out a conspiracy. This judicially created amnesty contradicts other Courts of Appeals’ interpretations of civil RICO which hold that predicate acts committed to conceal a conspiracy, including money laundering and travel in aid of racketeering, support a finding of proximate causation, Maiz v. Virani, 253 F.3d 641, 673-74 (11th Cir. 2001). The defendants in Maiz took elaborate steps to conceal their land fraud scheme, id. at 652, while in Living Designs, Inc. v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours, 431 F.3d 353, 358 (9th Cir. 2005), DuPont used the racketeering acts of mail and wire fraud to conceal its conspiracy in falsifying test results for one of its products. In this petition for certiorari, the Russian mafia defendants also used travel in aid of racketeering and mail and wire fraud plus tampering with a victim or informants and obstruction of justice to “prevent Hollander from investigating them...,” Cir.

Order p. 3 ¶ 4, A-3, so they could conceal their participation in the ongoing conspiracy to illegally transplant moneymaking assets to the U.S. That conspiracy included gaining defendant Shipilina entry, permanent residency and eventually naturalization in America. Hollander refused to yield to the Russian mafia's coercive activities and, therefore, suffered the sanctions that coercion imposed. Such coercive efforts sufficiently plead proximate cause, see Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. 465, 483-85, 102 S.Ct. 2540, 2550-51, 73 L.Ed.2d 149, (1982) (Section 4 of the Clayton Act standing). Here, as in Chisolm v. TranSouth Financial Corp., 95 F.3d 331, 338 (4th Cir. 1996), the concealment of the nature of the conspiracy was the very linchpin of its success that harmed Hollander.

The Second Circuit's loophole not only contradicts other circuits' holdings concerning recovery for injuries from cover-up activities but also frustrates Congress' policy behind civil RICO. "The object of civil RICO is ... not merely to compensate victims but to turn them into prosecutors, private attorneys general, dedicated to eliminating racketeering activity," Rotella v. Wood, 528 U.S. 549, 557, 120 S.Ct. 1075, 1082, 145 L.Ed.2d 1047 (2000), so as to fill in prosecutorial gaps, Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 493, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 3283, 87 L.Ed.2d 346 (1985).<sup>4</sup> But according to the Second Circuit, when racketeering activities are used to shut down or hinder any private attorney general's investigation, the injuries from those activities will not be proximately caused by the racketeering acts but by the investigation into them.

Further, the Second Circuit's ruling inappropriately narrows liability under the RICO conspiracy provision 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d). When defendants engage in overt acts to cover-up <sup>4</sup> "RICO has served as a powerful tool against enterprise criminality. Most of the success, however, has been achieved through criminal prosecutions. The private attorney general concept ... has not achieved comparable results. Judging from the number of RICO suits filed, this failure does not reflect a lack of effort. Rather, the record demonstrates that negative judicial activism has kept RICO from achieving its potential." Michael Goldsmith, Judicial Immunity-The Ironic Demise of Civil RICO, 30 Harv. J. on Legis. 1, 40-41 (1993).

a conspiracy, they are furthering that conspiracy by preventing the best disinfectant of publicity from exposing their scheme. If the overt acts are racketeering or otherwise unlawful under RICO, they violate the conspiracy provision § 1962(d). Beck v. Prupis, 529 U.S. 494, 506-07, 120 S.Ct. 1608, 1616-17, 146 L.Ed.2d 561 (2000); Rehkop v. Berwick Healthcare Corp., 95 F.3d 285, 290 (3rd Cir. 1996). And when those acts proximately cause harm, the perpetrators are liable.

In this case, the Russian mafia defendants entered into agreements to carry out racketeering activities so as to further the crime syndicate's expansion by concealing it. The District Court's decision, affirmed by the Second Circuit, conceded that the cover-up acts were alleged to have caused harm: "[P]laintiff's claimed damages in this case were caused by alleged retaliation for his discovery and subsequent investigation of the Scheme...." Dist. Order p. 13 ¶ 2, A-19. "To be sure, plaintiff alleges that defendants took actions directed at him ... that he deems 'predicate acts,' and that the [Russian mafia] has harmed 'his business reputation and goodwill' (see Complaint ¶¶ 902, 903, [A-82])...." Dist. Order p. 12 ¶ 1, A-18. The Second Circuit's decision also conceded allegations of injury from cover-up racketeering acts, "[o]ther allegations involve efforts to 'thwart' Hollander's efforts, via his investigation and this litigation ...." Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 2, A-4. The Complaint, therefore, by the lower courts own words, alleges harm proximately caused by overt racketeering acts to further a conspiracy in violation of § 1962(d), A-37.

The Second Circuit's judicially imposed loophole extinguishes civil RICO as a means of opposing the intentions of organized crime when the criminals use racketeering activities to cover-up past RICO violations.

2. Does the Supreme Court's proximate causation analysis in Holmes for pass-along, or derivative, injuries flowing from the misfortunes visited on a third person apply in situations where the reasons for the policies behind the analysis do not exist and where there are no third-parties through whom injuries can pass?

The Second Circuit inappropriately expanded the pass-along injury analysis for determining proximate causation to situations where the policies driving the analysis do not apply, thereby contradicting Holmes v. Sec. Investor Prot. Corp., 503 U.S. 258, 112 S.Ct. 1311, 117 L.Ed.2d 532 (1992), and decisions in other Courts of Appeals<sup>5</sup>.

The Supreme Court in Holmes used the concept that “a plaintiff who complained of harm flowing merely from the misfortunes visited upon a third person by the defendant’s acts was generally ... at too remote a distance to recover.” Holmes, 503 U.S. at 268, 112 S.Ct. at 1318. Such injuries were not “direct” because an intervening event interfered with the sequence of responsible causation. See id., 503 U.S. at 271, 272 n. 20, 112 S.Ct. at 1319, 1320 n. 20 (broker-dealers’ insolvency was the intervening event that prevented a “direct,” or proximate causation of customers’ losses).

Disallowing recovery for pass-along, or derivative, injuries serves three policies:

1. Avoids the difficulty in ascertaining the amount of damages to plaintiffs beyond the first step that result from a violation as opposed to independent intervening factors;
  2. Obviates the need for complicated rules apportioning damages among plaintiffs removed at different levels of injury from a violation in order to prevent multiple recoveries;
- and

<sup>5</sup> The policies behind the pass-along, or derivative, injury analysis are used by other circuit courts: e.g., Bieter Co. v. Blomquist, 987 F.2d 1319, 1325-27 (8th Cir. 1993); Mendoza v. Zirkle Fruit Co., 301 F.3d 1163, 1168-72 (9th Cir. 2002); BCCI Holdings (Luxembourg), S.A. v. Khalil, 214 F.3d 168, 174 (D.C. Cir. 2000).

3. Serves the general interest in deterring injurious conduct because directly injured victims can usually be counted on to seek recovery under the law. Holmes, 503 U.S. at 269-70, 112 S.Ct. at 1318.

The Second Circuit's misapplication of the Holmes analysis to where there are no third-parties for harm to flow through, no independent intervening events and the policy reasons do not apply, has written into the statute a method for dismissing civil RICO suits in which the harm complained of actually occurs at the first step. "The general tendency of the law, in regard to damages at least, is not to go beyond the first step." Southern Pacific Co. v. Darnell-Taenzer Lumber Co., 245 U.S. 531, 533, 38 S.Ct. 186, 186, 62 L.Ed. 451 (Holmes, J.) (1918). The Second Circuit has created a new proximate causation rule for civil RICO in which it does not even go to the first step.

The Court of Appeals relied on two decisions in order to dismiss this case on the grounds that "the alleged injuries were proximately caused not by the alleged racketeering violations, but by the public exposure of those activities or their discovery by the victim and the consequences of that exposure or discovery," Cir. Order p. 3 ¶ 3, A-3, Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 2, A-4. In re American Express Co. Shareholder Litig., 39 F.3d 395, 399-401 (2d Cir. 1994), cites to the Holmes analysis and applies its three policies while Burdick v. American Express Co., 865 F.2d 527, 529 (2d Cir. 1989), although prior to Holmes, used a similar analysis. In these two cases, and nearly all the other RICO exposure or discovery cases—sometimes called "employee termination," "whistleblower" or "shareholder and creditor derivative" decisions,<sup>6</sup> racketeering activities were not used to prevent the exposure or discovery of earlier RICO violations, as in this case, but rather to harm a third party who was not a plaintiff. Those cases denied standing because the injuries were derivative of third persons.

Cases where racketeering activities were specifically directed at an individual shareholder or creditor have found standing. Maiz v. Virani, 253 F.3d 641, 655-56 (11th Cir. 2001); Bankers Trust Co. v. Rhoades, 859 F.2d 1096, 1099-1101 (2d Cir. 1988)(creditor had standing, because fraud, bribery, perjury and frivolous lawsuits were directed against it). Both the Second Circuit and District Court in this case noted the Complaint had alleged that the activities of the conspirators were directed at the petitioner. Cir. Order p. 3 ¶ 4, p. 4 ¶ 2, A-3, 4; Dist. Order p. 14 ¶ 1, A-20 (“[petitioner’s] resistance to and investigation of the Scheme is what the predicate acts, as alleged, were designed to prevent.”). The direct relationship in this case (plaintiff Hollander—Russian mafia tortfeasor defendants) distinguishes it from Holmes (plaintiff SIPC—customers—brokers—Holmes tortfeasor defendant); American Express (plaintiff shareholders—Edmond Safra—American Express tortfeasor defendant officers); and Burdick (plaintiff broker—customers—Shearson Lehman Brothers tortfeasor defendant); therefore, the Second Circuit’s Holmes analysis was not applicable because Hollander is not a secondary victim.

In American Express, the defendant officers of that company used racketeering acts to prevent Edmond Safra from opening a competing bank. American Express, 39 F.3d at 396-97. As a result of the predicate acts directed against Safra, he conducted his own investigation and brought criminal libel suits that disclosed the extent of American Express’ RICO activities. Batista, Civil Rico Prac. Manual, § 4.17, 2d ed.; see American Express, 39 F.3d at 398. Because of Safra’s discoveries and their publicity, American Express stock lost value, and its shareholders sued the officers. The shareholders could not recover because under the Holmes analysis their financial injuries were derivative of the harm to Safra and the resulting publicity. Had Safra sued under RICO, there is little doubt that he would have withstood a motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6). Batista, Civil Rico Prac. Manual, § 4.17, 2d ed.; see American Express, 39 F.3d at 401.

In the present case, the Second Circuit's improper application of the Supreme Court's construction of the RICO statute resulted from the Second Circuit analogizing Hollander with the shareholders of American Express when the correct comparison is to Safra. Hollander was the one against whom the predicate acts were aimed in order "to prevent [him] from investigating [defendants]...", Cir. Order p. 3 ¶ 4, A-3, and "to thwart... his investigation and this litigation...", Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 2, A-4. The Complaint here does not allege that threatened reprisals injured some third person and that injury passed through to Hollander because there is no third person or entity between the Russian mafia defendants and Hollander for harm to pass through. There is, however, an organization, the Russian mafia, whose members used racketeering acts against Hollander, just as American Express did against Safra, in order to protect profits.

In Burdick, a vice president of Shearson Lehman Brothers was fired for complaining of that company's racketeering activities used to obtain illegal profits from the firm's customers. Burdick, 865 F.2d at 528. The vice president argued that he was injured as a result of the harm to Shearson's customers from the company's predicate acts. Id. at 529. Consistent with the Holmes analysis, the court found this harm too remote. In the present case, however, the Second Circuit wrongly analogized Hollander to the vice president when the comparison should have been to Shearson's customers. Hollander was never employed by the Russian mafia but was, albeit unwittingly, a customer or victim of that crime syndicate's conspiracy to set-up one of its money making assets in America.

The Holmes direct injury analysis is a means of determining whether an independent intervening event has occurred in the chain of causation. The Second Circuit wrongly concluded Hollander's investigation was such an event. "Hollander's complaint deals primarily with damages stemming from the investigation he initiated.... These are the costs of Hollander's acts, not the defendants' RICO violations." Cir. Order p. 3 ¶ 4, A-3. Accepting the Second Circuit's holding that a plaintiff's investigation of criminal activities is an intervening event would mean that RICO defendants could escape liability for injuries from racketeering acts used to stop an investigation because the resulting harm would be caused by an intervening event: the plaintiff's investigation to marshal information on RICO violations. It's an interesting Catch-22: if a plaintiff does what every lawyer initially does concerning a potential case—starts an investigation, that investigation can be hampered or shutdown by racketeering acts without such acts being reached by civil RICO. But if a plaintiff doesn't start an investigation, how is he to discover what is going on so as to prevent further harm or rectify past injury via law enforcement agencies or judicial proceedings? He can't, at least in the Second Circuit, because with its decision in this case that court has shifted causation to the victim who takes legal steps to put an end to the harm affecting his business or property<sup>7</sup>.

Perhaps more importantly, the Second Circuit ignored the policy reasons in Holmes when it applied the Holmes analysis to this case (a technique that will most probably be used to dismiss future direct-injury RICO cases). Had the Second Circuit applied the three policy reasons, it could not have dismissed this case on proximate causation grounds because by allowing Hollander to proceed with his case: (1) the district court would not have to ascertain the amount of damages to plaintiffs beyond the first step because Hollander is the first step and the only possible plaintiff, other than law enforcement agencies; (2) the court would not have to engage in the complicated apportionment of damages among others removed at different levels from the RICO violations because there are no others; and (3) unlike in Holmes, where the directly injured broker-dealers could and did sue, here, if Hollander doesn't right the law's violation, no one will—including law enforcement agencies.

The plaintiff-petitioner in this case is not seeking to vindicate the claims of some phantom third person; rather he is doing what the Supreme Court assumed the immediate victim would do—suing. He has not been successful, so far, because under the Second Circuit's own brand of reforming civil RICO, immediate victims can be prevented from acting as private attorneys general by criminals targeting racketeering activities against those victims with the result of leaving significant RICO violations undetected or unremedied.<sup>8</sup>

3. Does proximate causation for civil RICO require that the injuries resulting from racketeering activities be the “specifically-intended consequence” or “preconceived purpose” of the conspirators' scheme?

The Second Circuit requires that for a victim to recover under civil RICO, the injury must have been the “specifically-intended consequence” or “preconceived purpose” of the RICO defendants' scheme. American Express, 39 F.3d at 400. If the resulting harm is not planned in the defendants' minds, then there is no recovery in the Second Circuit even though the criminal conduct creates a substantial risk of such damages occurring. The Second Circuit used its specifically-intended injury rule in this case to hold proximate causation lacking by ruling that “[e]ven if it was the criminal syndicate’s intent to trick Hollander into ‘arranging for Member Alina Shipilina to enter the U.S.,’ it was not the object<sup>9</sup> of the conspiracy to cause him to cease work and thereby lose profits in order to make those arrangements.” Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 1, A-4. This holding affirmed the District Court’s finding of no proximate causation because “the damages [Hollander] seeks [do not] arise from ... the original purpose of the Scheme itself....” Dist. Order p. 12 ¶ 1, A-18.

The Second Circuit has artificially narrowed the RICO statute by including in the proximate cause determination the predicate act requirement from mail and wire fraud of a specifically-intended injury even though mail and wire fraud are specific intent crimes<sup>10</sup>, see e.g., U.S. v. Chandler, 98 F.3d 711, 715 (2d Cir. 1996)(citations omitted), and RICO is a statutory tort remedy, Mid Atl. Telecom v. Long Distance Servs., 18 F.3d 260, 263 (4th Cir. 1994); Reynolds v. East Dyer Dev. Co., 882 F.2d 1249, 1253 (7th Cir. 1989); Bieter Co. v. Blomquist, 987 F.2d 1319, 1329 (8th Cir. 1993). Allegations of injuries specifically intended are unnecessary for a statutory tort action, see Restatement of Torts 2d, § 548A, and civil RICO, see Brandenburg v. Seidel, 859 F.2d 1179, 1189 (4th Cir. 1988). “When a statute provides that under certain circumstances particular acts shall or shall not be done, it may be interpreted [unless otherwise required] as fixing a standard for all members of the community from which it is negligence to deviate.” Prosser and Keaton, Torts, § 36, p. 220, 5th ed. (1984). The violation of such a statute constitutes conclusive evidence of negligence, or negligence per se. Id. § 36 n. 2. The focus under negligence is on unreasonably risky conduct not on whether the tortfeasor had in mind a purpose or certainty that the resulting harm would occur. Dobbs, Law of Torts, § 116 (2001). The Second Circuit's grafting of a "preconceived purpose" or "specifically-intended consequence" onto civil RICO changes the statute into an intentional tort, which, of course, is more difficult to show because of the added state of mind element. Such judicial revisionism is contrary to the Supreme Court's admonition that strict proximate cause requirements not be erected as obstacles to private RICO litigants, see Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. at 497-98, 105 S.Ct. at 3285-86.

The proximate causation requirement of a "specifically-intended consequence" or "preconceived purpose" by the Second Circuit also conflicts with other Courts of Appeals. The D.C. Circuit called the test "simply wrong," BCCI Holdings (Lux.), S.A. v. Khalil, 214 F.3d 168, 173 (D.C.Cir.), cert. denied 531 U.S. 958 (2000), and stated that in Holmes, the Supreme Court "never suggests ... that the only or best way to prove proximate cause is for a plaintiff to prove ... that the injury was the 'preconceived purpose' of the RICO activity." BCCI, 214 F.3d at 174. The Ninth Circuit held "the Supreme Court has already told us that 'by reason of' incorporates a proximate cause standard, see Holmes, 503 U.S. at 265-68, 112 S.Ct. at 1316-18, which is generous enough to include the unintended, though foreseeable consequences of RICO predicate acts, see Palsgraf v. L.I. R.R. Co., 248 N.Y. 339, 162 N.E. 99, 100-01 (1928)." Diaz v. Gates, 420 F.3d 897, 901 (9th Cir. 2005), cert. denied Parks v. Diaz, 126 S.Ct. 1069 (2006). In Diaz, the Ninth Circuit also ruled "There is ... no room in the statutory language for an additional, amorphous requirement that, for an injury to be to business or property, the ... interest [must] have been the direct target of the predicate act. The statute is broad, but that is the statute we have. Were the standard as [the Second Circuit] claims, we would have the anomalous result that one could be liable under RICO for destroying a business if one aimed a bomb at it, but not if one aimed at the business owner, missed and hit the business by accident, or if one aimed at the business owner who happened to be in the business at the time.” Id. at 901-02.

Moreover, by restricting proximate causation to a “specifically-intended consequence” or “preconceived purpose,” the Second Circuit’s premising of a RICO remedy on the specific intent of the conspirators conflicts with the analogy to antitrust causation used by the Holmes Court. The Supreme Court has “rejected the contention that, because there [is] no specific intent to harm the plaintiff, her injury [is] thereby rendered remote.” Assoc. Gen. Contractors of Cal. v. Cal. St. Council, 459 U.S. 519, 537 n.37, 103 S.Ct. 897, 908 n.37, 74 L.Ed.2d 723 (1983)(citing Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready, 457 U.S. at 479, 102 S.Ct. at 2548) (antitrust standing).

The specifically-intended injury requirement also ignores how criminals work to achieve their ends in the real world. Members of the Russian mafia aren’t blind; they understand that when they initiate a scheme for making money illegally that contingencies will likely arise making it necessary to use additional predicate acts to lull a victim, prevent a victim from discovering and exposing their artifice, to cover up their operations or more. The harm caused by such criminals dealing with contingencies may not have been specifically intended in the beginning, but in order to reach their goal, they willingly create a substantial risk of such harm occurring to the victim. That harm is foreseeable because it is inextricably intertwined with the success of the conspirator’s plan, and whether an injury is reasonably foreseeable or anticipated as a natural—not specifically intended—consequence of racketeering acts is the requirement, along with directness<sup>11</sup>, needed for proximate causation under civil RICO. See Holmes, 503 U.S. at 267-70, 112 S.Ct. 1317-18; Kaufman v. BDO Seidman, 984 F.2d 182, 185 (6th Cir. 1993).

Take, for example, a Ponzi scheme. The racketeer targets investors through fraud, but he does not consciously intend for those investors to lose their money; he simply wants to perpetuate the Ponzi scheme for as long as possible in order to maximize his illegal profits. So too, the RICO defendants in this case may not have specifically intended Hollander “to cease work and thereby lose profits...,” Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 1, A-4, but they created a substantial risk of that occurring by using a fraudulent scheme to make sure defendant Shipilina entered America and stayed here generating money for as long as possible.<sup>12</sup>

The Second Circuit’s “specifically-intended consequence” or “preconceived purpose” rule has the anomalous result of allowing gangsters to use racketeering acts on an ad hoc basis to protect criminal operations as they move toward their goals because the harms from such acts were not part of their mens rea when they embarked on their moneymaking quest.

4. Are injuries to a person’s legal causes of action from racketeering activities excluded from compensable damages under civil RICO?

The Second Circuit ruled that allegations of injury to the “administration of law” are not compensable under civil RICO. Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 2, A-4. “Law” is “the body of rules, standards, and principles that the courts of a particular jurisdiction apply in deciding controversies brought before them....” Black’s Law Dictionary, p. 900, 8th ed. The process <sup>12</sup> Realistically, defendants couldn’t help but anticipate that Hollander, a lawyer and manager of a private detective agency in Russia, would become suspicious and start an investigation that might uncover their scheme, necessitating further racketeering acts to cost him out-of-pocket expenses, legal fees, time, distraction from his business and loss of reputation and goodwill in order to pressure him into giving up by making the price to his livelihood too great.

by which the judiciary exercises its power to construe and apply the law when controversies arise is the administration of justice. See Black's Law Dictionary, p. 864 (“judicial power” and “judiciary”) 8th ed. It follows that the “administration of law” is synonymous with or at least includes the “administration of justice.”

Further evidence that the Second Circuit’s use of “administration of law” subsumes the process of administering justice comes from one of the two allegations it was referring to when it used that phrase and a companion allegation the court omitted. The allegation used by the court refers to the use of illegal funds in building “a litigation war chest to fund fraudulent proceedings against the plaintiff and fraudulently defend against legitimate proceedings in order to whipsaw the plaintiff into submission and deplete his financial resources.” (Complaint ¶ 901, A-82)(the ending prepositional phrase was deleted by the Court)); Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 2, A-4. The allegation omitted by the Court claims the defendants used money from racketeering activities to purchase “the intimidation of witnesses ...,” (Complaint ¶ 903, A-82). These two allegations clearly concern litigation, which is how courts construe and apply the law, that is, administer justice. Since litigation is the process of carrying on a lawsuit, it is the means for seeking a remedy for a cause of action. Black's Law Dictionary, p. 952 (“litigation”), p. 235 (“cause of action”), 8th ed.

The other allegation quoted by the Second Circuit in connection with its use of “administration of law” concerns the bribing of “public employees into subverting the proper administration of the law in America and Russia...” (Complaint ¶ 902, A-82); Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 2, A-4. This allegation concerns both court litigation and the executive’s branch power of enforcing the laws; therefore, the Second Circuit may have meant “administration of law” to include executive action as well as litigating a cause of action before the judiciary.

To the extent the “administration of law” concerns litigating a cause of action in court, the Second Circuit is in conflict with the Supreme Court and other circuits by ruling that injury to a person’s lawsuit, or cause of action, is not a compensable injury under civil RICO.

Civil RICO requires an injury to “business or property.” 18 U.S.C. § 1964(c), A-44. The Supreme Court and other circuits have held that the nature of a property interest is an individual entitlement determined by state law. Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. 422, 430, 102 S.Ct. 1148, 1155, 71 L.Ed.2d 265 (1982)(citations omitted); e.g., Isaak v. Trumbull Sav. & Loan Co., 169 F.3d 390, 397 (6th Cir. 1999); Doe v. Roe, 958 F.2d 763, 768 (7th Cir. 1992); Living Designs, Inc. v. E.I. DuPont De Nemors, 431 F.3d 353, 364 (9th Cir. 2005) (citations omitted). Under New York law, a cause of action is property, Loucks v. Standard Oil Co. of N.Y., 224 N.Y. 99, 110, 120 N.E. 198, 201 (1918); Hein v. Davidson, 96 N.Y. 175, 177, 1884 N.Y. Lexis 481 (1884); therefore, harm to such from racketeering acts is a compensable injury under civil RICO.

There is the argument, however, that since RICO is a federal statute, federal law should determine what constitutes property in order to assure consistency throughout the circuits. DeMauro v. DeMauro, 115 F.3d 94, 96 (1st Cir. 1997). As for a cause of action, the Supreme Court has already determined it is a “species of property.” Logan v. Zimmerman Brush Co., 455 U.S. at 428, 102 S.Ct. at 1154 (citing Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 311-13, 70 S.Ct. 652, 655-56, 94 L.Ed. 865 (1950)). Other circuits have applied the Supreme Court’s definition of property under due process to the civil RICO context by finding that a cause of action is property and, therefore, compensable under RICO for harm flowing from racketeering acts. E.g., Malley-Duff & Associates, Inc. v. Crown Life Ins. Co., 792 F.2d 341, 355 (3d Cir. 1986)(expenses, delays and inconvenience caused by defendants in the prosecution of a lawsuit is injury to property); Handeen v. Lemaire, 112 F.3d 1339, 1354 (8th Cir. 1997)(attorney's fees incurred in objecting to defendants' fraudulent claims qualify as an injury to property); Deck v. Engineered Laminates, 349 F.3d 1253, 1259 (10th Cir. 2003) (plaintiff has property interest in a cause of action that was prejudiced by fraud).

Whether under New York law or the due process clause, the use of money from illegal activities to fund fraudulent proceedings and fraudulent defenses in court actions and to purchase the intimidation of witnesses constitute injury to Hollander's property by harming his RICO and annulment/divorce causes of action and his defenses against a fraudulent restraining order and two threatened false arrests.

5. Are expenses incurred in the investigation of a fraud unrecoverable even though such expenses are incurred in almost every civil RICO case?

When a lawyer refuses to cooperate with racketeers, they often threaten and take reprisals to make him do what they want in order to protect their moneymaking operations. Here the intimidation consisted of predicate acts committed in fraudulently obtaining a restraining order, making false accusations of extortion and battery, tampering with informants and witnesses, silencing of witnesses, attempting two false arrests, obstructing this RICO litigation and money laundering to help pay for it all. When faced with such intentional acts of harm, the reasonable lawyer will investigate to find out what is going on in contemplation of bringing appropriate legal action to prevent further injury and rectify the damage that has already occurred. Hollander did just that, but the Second Circuit ruled “damages stemming from the investigation he initiated ... are the costs of Hollander’s acts, not the defendants’ RICO violations.” Cir. Order p. 3 ¶ 4, A-3.

The Second Circuit’s rule preventing recovery of expenses incurred in the investigation of predicate acts aimed at a plaintiff has not been decided in other circuits, so the petitioner requests the Supreme Court to take this opportunity to set a uniform interpretation of the RICO statute on this issue.

6. Did the Second Circuit contravene the Supreme Court by failing to presume that general factual allegations of injury from racketeering activities embrace those specific facts that are necessary to avoid a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal?

The Second Circuit upheld the District Court’s ruling that certain allegations of injury failed to include specific factual allegations of injury from racketeering activities and, therefore, were “general” and “conclusory”.

The District Court had ruled that “[a]lthough plaintiff does include general allegations ... [Complaint ¶¶ 900, 904-906, A-82], this Court need not accept such conclusory allegations for purposes of this motion,” Dist. Order p. 12 n.6, A-18 (emphasis added), and quoted from American Express, 39 F.3d at 400 n.3 for support of that proposition: “[W]hile the complaint does cursorily assert that American Express was a victim of the RICO defendants’ acts and that these acts were the proximate cause of American Express’s alleged injuries, these conclusory allegations of the legal status of the defendants’ acts need not be accepted as true for the purposes of ruling on a motion to dismiss.”

The Second Circuit used the exact same quote to support its holding that “the complaint also contains conclusory allegations that claim damages to financial interests, but do not specify how racketeering activities caused those damages.” Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 3, A-4 (emphasis added)(referring to the Complaint at ¶¶ 900 & 905, A-82). “These paragraphs allege that damages to financial interests have been caused, but make no factual allegation from which an inference of proximate cause could reasonably be drawn.” Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 3, A-4 (omitting other allegations of harm to “financial interests” in the Complaint at ¶¶ 904, 906 & 907, A-82, 83). The Second Circuit also ruled that the Supplemental Complaint “fails to indicate how the alleged activities, principally threats against [Hollander] and abuses of the justice system in response to his lawsuit, damaged his business in any direct way.” Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 4, A-4.

The Second Circuit and District Court’s requirement of specific factual allegations of injury flowing from racketeering acts contravenes not only other Courts of Appeals<sup>13</sup> but also the Supreme Court. In NOW v. Scheidler this Court held that “[a]t the pleading stage, general factual allegations of injury resulting from the defendant’s conduct may suffice, for on a motion to dismiss we presume that general allegations embrace those specific facts that are necessary to support the claim.” NOW v. Scheidler, 510 U.S. 249, 256, 114 S.Ct. 798, 803, 127 L.Ed.2d 99 (1994)(quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561, 112 S.Ct. 2130, 2137, 119 L.Ed.2d 351 (1992)(citations omitted). In Glus v. Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal, 359 U.S. 231, 235, 79 S.Ct. 760, 763, 3 L.Ed.2d 770 (1959), this Court stated: “It may well be that petitioner’s complaint as now drawn is too vague, but that is no ground for dismissing his action.... His allegations are sufficient for the present. Whether petitioner can in fact make out a case ... must await trial.” All that the federal rules require in a pleading is that a party should set forth the averments, which can be made with great generality. & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 3d § 1215. Discovery, not the pleadings, bears the burden of filling in the details. Id. The petitioners in NOW, as the petitioner here, alleged that the RICO conspiracy had injured their business and property interests and that a defendant had threatened reprisals. NOW, 510 U.S. at 256, 114 S.Ct. at 803. The Supreme Court concluded that “[n]othing more is needed to confer standing on [petitioners] at the pleading stage.” Id.

The Second Circuit and District Court failed to consider that the liberal notice pleading of Rule 8(a) is the starting point of a simplified pleading system to focus litigation on the merits of a claim. Swierkiewicz v. Sorema N.A., 534 U.S. 506, 513-14, 122 S.Ct. 992, 998-99, 152 L.Ed.2d 1 (2002) (citing Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 48, 78 S.Ct. 99, 103, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957)). In Conley v. Gibson this Court stated:

“[T]he Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not require a claimant to set out in detail the facts upon which he bases his claim. To the contrary, all the Rules require is ‘a short and plain statement of the claim’ that will give the defendant fair notice of what the plaintiff’s claim is and the grounds upon which it rests.... Such simplified ‘notice pleading’ is made possible by the liberal opportunity for discovery and the other pretrial procedures established by the Rules to disclose more precisely the basis of both claim and defense and to define more narrowly the disputed facts and issues.... The Federal Rules reject the approach that pleading is a game of skill in which one misstep by counsel may be decisive to the outcome and accept the principle that the purpose of pleading is to facilitate a proper decision on the merits.” Conley v. Gibson, 355 U.S. 41, 47-48, 78 S.Ct. 99, 102-03, 2 L.Ed.2d 80 (1957).

A complaint, therefore, need not state with precision all the elements that give rise to a legal basis for recovery as long as fair notice of the nature of the action is provided. See Leatherman v. Tarrant County Narcotics Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168, 113 S.Ct. 1160, 1163, 122 L.Ed.2d 517 (1993); Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 3d § 1216. A complaint can allege conclusions if they provide defendants with a minimal notice of the claims, Kyle v. Morton High School, 144 F.3d 448, 455 (7th Cir. 1998)(citations omitted). The RICO complaint in this action easily gave the defendants fair notice of the basis of the claims against them.

The Second Circuit and District Court essentially took a page from yesteryear. Prior to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, “the pretrial functions of notice-giving, issue formulation and fact revelation were performed primarily, and inadequately, by the pleadings.” Hickman v. Taylor, 329 U.S. 495, 500, 67 S.Ct. 385, 388, 91 L.Ed. 451 (1947). Back then, the complaint was required to state only basic facts, not conclusions or ultimate facts; a distinction of degree only that placed the pleader at a disadvantage: “A pleader who complied with the spirit and command of the code pleading system was obliged to walk defenseless while a hidden enemy sniped at him; he committed himself unreservedly to a course of action and a factual statement from which he could not deviate because of [the] rules ....” Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civil 3d § 1202 (citation omitted). Today, however, the ultimate facts are to be pled—not the evidence that leads to the inference of an ultimate fact. Id. § 1218

The Second Circuit and District Court’s quote from American Express that “conclusory allegations of the legal status [proximate causation] of the defendants’ acts need not be accepted as true for the purpose of ruling on a motion to dismiss.”<sup>14</sup>, Cir. Order p. 4 ¶ 3, A-4, Dist. Order p. 12 n.6, A-18), made sense under the pre-1938 system of code pleading when legal conclusions were prohibited. But with the modern rules, the impracticality of dismissing a complaint for making legal conclusions has been criticized, “If one sought to describe a situation having legal significance entirely in words which were devoid of all legal evaluation, the result would be a series of prolix circumlocutions which would serve neither elegance of style nor ease of understanding.” Yale Law School Prof. Fleming James, The Objective and Function of the Complaint: Common Law—Codes—Federal Rules, 1961, 14 Vand.L.Rev. 899, 913. Even the Official Forms of the modern Rules plead legal conclusions without specification of the facts. Wright & Miller, Fed. Prac. & Proc.: Civ. 3d § 1218. Further, the conclusory allegations on the legal effect of events are acceptable if they reasonably follow from the plaintiff’s description of what happened. Kadar Corp. v. Milbury, 549 F.2d 230, 233 (1st Cir. 1977).

Under the “conclusory” opprobrium, the Second Circuit and District Court contradicted modern-day pleading rules. “Whether these charges be called ‘allegations of fact’ or ‘mere conclusions of the pleader,’ we hold that they must be taken into account in deciding whether the plaintiff is entitled to have its case tried,” U.S. v. Employing Plasterer’s Ass’n, 347 U.S. 186, 188, 74 S.Ct. 452, 454, 98 L.Ed. 618, (1954), for “the ancient distinction between ‘facts’ and ‘conclusions’ is no longer significant.” Oil, Chem. & Atomic Workers Int’l Union v. Delta Ref. Co., 277 F.2d 694, 697 (6th Cir. 1960). “A complaint that complies with the Federal rules of civil procedure cannot be dismissed on the ground that it is conclusory or fails to allege facts. The Federal rules require (with irrelevant exceptions) only that the complaint state a claim not that it plead the facts if true would establish ... that the claim was valid.” Higgs v. Carver, 286 F.3d 437, 439 (7th Cir. 2002)(Posner, J.)(citation omitted).

The Second Circuit and District Court’s requirement to plead specific factual allegations of injury resulting from a defendant’s conduct means that RICO plaintiffs in the Second Circuit must allege all damages with Rule 9(b) particularity. The law, however, in other Courts of Appeals and the Supreme Court is that damages under RICO not flowing from fraudulent predicate acts, such as mail and wire fraud, need not be pled with particularity.

Robbins v. Wilkie, 433 F.3d 755, 760 (10th Cir. 2006); see Swierkiewicz v. Sorema NA, 534 U.S. at 513; Abels v. Farmers Commodities Corp., 259 F.3d 910, 919 (8th Cir. 2001).

The Second Circuit and District Court's specificity requirement, while inconsistent with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, is consistent with a trend to reform civil RICO through judicial revisionism by improperly heightening pleading requirements. Michael Goldsmith, Judicial Immunity for White-Collar Crime: The Ironic Demise of Civil RICO, 30 Harv. J. on Legis. 1, 18-19 (1993).

CONCLUSION

"Since civil RICO first captured judicial attention, the lower courts have systematically sought to dismantle the civil remedy. Despite a series of Supreme Court decisions rejecting various judicially imposed limitations, the lower courts have continued to create numerous obstacles to civil RICO litigation." Id. at 41. No longer does the statute say what it says but now says what lower federal courts want it to say.<sup>15</sup>

In this case, the Second Circuit continued to ignore Supreme Court guidelines by unduly narrowing the statute. But unlike the Second Circuit's other cases that have created a virtual immunity for white-collar crime, see id. at 4, this case extends that immunity to Russian organized crime. Perhaps, it is understandable that lower federal courts would engage in judicial revisionism to avoid commercial fraud cases brought against some of society's most respected businesses. But rejecting the claims of a directly injured victim for lack of standing and specificity in a suit against the "FBI's most formidable criminal adversary”<sup>16</sup> eviscerates RICO where Congress most obviously intended the law to apply—against the archetypal, intimidating mobsters of organized crime.

If the Supreme Court permits the lower courts to rewrite civil RICO, then any federal statute is vulnerable to judicial revisionism that undermines the legislative process. “It is easy by very ingenious and astute construction, to evade the force of almost any statute, where a court is so disposed .... Such a construction annuls ... the law, and renders it superfluous and useless.” Pillow v. Roberts, 54 U.S. 472, 476, 14 L.Ed. 228 (1851), 1851 Lexis 872, 1851 WL 6699.

A Fair Market is Not a Free Market

by Roy Den Hollander

The way the rich make money today in Russia parallels in some respects the way the rich made money in America in the late nineteenth century. Both use enterprises to maximize their profits through unfair commercial practices. Monopoly enterprises, for example, dominate the major industries in Russia today. In America by 1890 the American Sugar Refining Company controlled 98% of its market, Standard Oil - 80% of its market, American Tobacco - 93%, Aluminum Company of America - 90%. Similar monopolies existed in other major industries.

Russian monopolies, like the former American monopolies, raise their prices to the sky because no other enterprises exist to compete with them and because the Russian government, like the former American government, fails to break up the monopolies into competing enterprises. American monopolies accumulated vast fortunes by selling their products at inflated prices, paying their workers (which included children as young as nine years old) low wages, producing poor quality and often dangerous products and even using violence against their workers and potential competitors. Americans call this period in history the "robber baron" or "free market" era.

Many of the problems that existed during America's free market era now exist in Russia: high prices, low wages, shoddy goods and a few people growing very rich while most of the population grows poorer. The solution is not a free market but a fair market. And a fair market will not happen by allowing businessmen to do whatever they wish or relying solely on abstract theoretical models of market forces.

A fair market requires a set of business regulations. The regulations cannot be so restrictive that they stifle innovation, hard work and the opportunity to acquire material wellbeing, but they should not be so lenient as to allow an unbridled pursuit of profits that results in vast concentrations of wealth in the hands of the few, destruction of the environment, mass poverty and a life of hopelessness for much of the population. Business regulation can be described as a circle that permits businessmen to freely pursue their interests in any way they deem fit within the circle, but prohibits them from crossing the circle into unfair commercial activities that harm other businessmen, consumers and workers.

Under the Soviet Union's former command economy, the circle of business regulation limited business activity too much. In America's wild west, free market economy of the nineteenth century, the circle of business regulation did not limit business activity enough. The insufficiency of regulation permitted a relatively few families in America to amass great wealth through the enterprises they controlled. Such wealth enabled a relatively small class to exercise great economic, political and social power over America. Since the nineteenth century, there has been an intermittent tug-of-war between the wealthy class and the masses over the enactment of business regulations. The wealthy class desired little or no regulation in order to maximize their enterprises' profits; the masses wanted additional regulations to distribute the wealth more fairly and protect their material wellbeing.

The result of the struggle over the past one hundred years has been the enactment of some effective regulations, many of which are not adequately enforced.

America, today, is no longer a free market, but it is also not a fair market.

One percent of American families own approximately 34 percent of all the wealth in the United States, the middle class, which comprises about 40 percent of America's families, owns a little over 10 percent of the wealth and the poorest 40 percent owns virtually nothing; in 1989 the average income for the top one percent of households was U.S.$560,000, for the bottom 20%, it was U.S.$8,400; since 1979, the number of people earning wages below the poverty level grew from 12 percent to 18 percent of the work force; over 400 people die each day from occupational related causes; and America now ranks 56th among all the world's nations in immunizations and ranks behind Cuba in infant mortality.

The historical flaw in America differs only in degree with the flaw in Russia before the August coup and the potential danger for Russia since the coup - so many have too little because so few have too much. Today Russia moves through a transition with many of its former rulers and managers trying to maintain their positions of influence and privilege by acquiring great wealth. They seek to create through a free market a small group of wealthy families that will rule Russia as a shadow government, just as a relatively small number of wealthy families now run America.

Russian wealthy businessmen will eventually, if they have not already, ally themselves with American businesses to export vast amounts of Russian raw materials at bargain basement prices. In return America will export manufactured goods and agriculture products that will be purchased with the hard currency gained from the raw materials and loans from the International Monetary Fund or World Bank. As a result, Russia may find itself in a position similar to Latin America, which function as a cheap source of raw materials for America, a key export market for American goods and a continent over which western banks and governments wield tremendous economic power through the credits they have extended. Russia's wealthy businessmen will eventually acquire enough economic power to control the government, and by then it will be too late to establish business regulations that ensure a fair rather than free market.

Regulations, such as an upper limit on the net worth of any family and a windfall profits tax, would aid the establishment of a fair market. A net worth limit of one million or two million U.S. dollars per family should provide more than enough incentive for persons, now owning virtually nothing, to take risks, use their ingenuity and work long hours for the material rewards of success. A windfall profits tax on American enterprises in Russia that applies to profits above perhaps the 12 percent level should give American corporations enough incentive to invest, since the average profit margin in the United States is around 7%.

Many other regulations can be enacted that will assure Russia sustained economic growth, return reasonable profits to foreign investors and assure that all Russians have a fair chance to share in the wealth of the new society that is being created. The trick, however, is to enact the regulations now before Russians nouveau businessmen become so rich and powerful they can prevent the government from acting on the people's behalf. ■

DOING BUSINESS WITH AMERICANS

American businessmen have invested only about $400 million in the Commonwealth of Independent States, a minuscule amount when compared to America's wealth. America's gross national product exceeds $5 trillion and the country's total value surpasses $13 trillion. With so much wealth, America should arguably be willing to invest a fraction of it to help Russia survive these perilous times. After all, altruism is a virtue. Besides, America did intentionally help bankrupt the Soviet Union by isolating its economies and fostering a costly arms race. In addition, America's failure to aid Russia's economy may result in civil wars, secessions and dictators. Finally, American businessmen can make money by investing in Russia.

All solid reasons for American businessmen to invest in Russia; however, the only reason they will act on is the opportunity to make money, because money is the measure of success in America. In general, American businessmen have no time for altruism unless it contributes to the bottom line. A Chevron corporation spokesman recently said Chevron makes charitable contributions to support its strategic business plans and provide a return on investment, which means profit. American businessmen will not be motivated to invest in Russia out of remorse for their government's actions. America intended to destroy any nationalist system in Russia (as it tried in Vietnam) so American business would be free to profit by exploiting Russia's land and people. American business now sits on the threshold of having what it wanted". Finally, civil wars, secessions and dictators will allow American businessmen to make huge profits. So long as any nuclear threat to America is minimized, America's still powerful military-industrial complex would benefit greatly from the disintegration of Russia into small warring fiefdoms, which could easily result from strict adherence to the International Monetary Fund's economic plan. The sales of weapons to the different sides alone would pull the industry out of its current recession. Furthermore, a vast land mass with its people ruled by a number of little and relatively weak dictators will provide American businessmen with an advantageous situation similar to Latin America two decades ago. American businesses, such as International Telephone & Telegraph in Chile in the 1970's, have extensive experience at bargaining with dictators and maximizing their profits under totalitarian regimes.

Know Your Partner

American businessmen are collectively the most powerful force in America. Seven thousand of the largest corporations in America account for one-half of all America's economic activity. The one hundred largest banks in America control 54% of America's bank assets, or $2.3 trillion. Since so relatively few businessmen control such large amounts of wealth, they exert great influence on the government. In fact, many government leaders are businessmen or former businessmen. George Bush made much of his fortune building the Zapata Oil Company in Texas, and his sons are currently active in the oil industry. The American government generally does what American business leaders want it to.

The standards by which American businessmen operate are different than the standards of conduct subscribed to by many, but not all, Russians. American businessmen generally are not concerned whether an individual consumer lives or dies, so long as there is another consumer to fill the void and consume the businessman's products. Most American businessmen -- at heart — are only interested in themselves and their enterprise. The more money they and their enterprise makes, the more power they have and the more social status they command. Before pursuing a deal, American businessmen ask: how will I benefit from this action and how can I maximize my profits. They tend to believe the community can be sacrificed for their individual greed, and they often fail to see the need for fairness: a balance between their interests and the community's. If it means profits, most American businessmen will impoverish those on fixed pensions or those who work hard and long for small rewards.

Unfortunately, American businessmen control a lot of dollars that can help Russia out of its current predicament. The task then is not just to attract American business investments but to regulate these investments so that American businessmen are not free to engage in any profit maximizing activity they wish regardless of the cost to Russia's people, environment and future prosperity. American businessmen will compromise and act in a socially responsible manner, providing they can make a reasonable profit. The key is to assure fairness to American businesses and to Russia.

Attracting American Business

An American businessman's decision to buy an asset, make an investment, enter into a joint venture or import a product depends on the relationship between two factors: the potential profit and the risk that profit will not be achieved. The greater the risk, the greater the profit potential must be before an American businessman will invest.

To determine risk, an American businessman examines two types: systematic and unsystematic. Systematic risk includes the state of the entire market, infrastructure, currency, banking, legal system and political system; that is, the environment in which a business transaction takes place. Unsystematic risk involves the specific characteristics of a transaction, such as the marketability of an asset, the credit-worthiness of a business invested in, the business ability of a partner in a joint venture and the competitiveness of a product.

American businessmen see high systematic risk in Russia because of the absence of comprehensive laws on commerce, contracts, banking and finance, securities, company accounts, taxation, intellectual property, private property and financial accounting and the lack of mechanisms to enforce what laws do exist. Without a legal infrastructure, businessmen cannot be certain of being able to enforce an agreement, protect their property, transfer funds, obtain reliable information and protect their interests from the graft, corruption and Mafia-like protection services that now surround many business efforts in Russia.

A Russian pipeline company recently breached its contract to transport oil for an American joint venture in Siberia. The Russian company unilaterally decided to raise the prices it had previously agreed to, blatantly violating the contract. The American company cannot go to court to enforce the contract because of the paucity of contract law and legal mechanisms for enforcing a judgement.

There are no rules defining the extent of liability an American company assumes when it invests in a Russian company that has environmental problems. Is the American company responsible for cleaning up the pollution caused by the Russian company before the American company became involved?

Vendors require a system by which they can maintain a legal interest in an asset sold to another company on credit. Such a system would enable the vendor to take back the asset if the buyer did not repay its debt. Russia lacks such a system.

Other systematic risks include disputes and overlapping jurisdiction among different levels of government; currency inconvertibility; lack of commercial, legal and market information; and visa restrictions.

Russia can lessen the systematic risks by enacting clear laws that are similar to those in other capitalist economies on the full range of business transactions, publish the laws in an organized manner, guarantee contracts, establish an arbitration body based on international standards, adopt suggestions of the Soviet American Banking Law group, establish an investment ombudsman to eliminate jurisdictional obstacles to business projects and eliminate visas.

The other risk, unsystematic, presents the danger that the specific asset bought, the business invested in, the partner in the joint venture or the imported product is not what it has been represented to be. Some Russian businessmen in their rush to make money tell

Americans what they think the Americans want to hear. Some American businessmen refer to these exaggerations as being offered the sun, the moon, the stars and everything that dreams are made of. While this may attract the American's interest, it will not cause him to invest. Before an American businessman invests, he requires lots of information about the business, its managers, the product and the market. Some of the typical information a businessman would want includes:

Management: The education and past business experience of principals in a company. American businessmen are not concerned with past political affiliations. They just want to be sure the manager and directors can run a business and deliver a product.

Product: The features and benefits of the product and why it is better than the competition.

Product's Market: A general profile of the company's customers, the current status of competition, the impact of competition on the business.

Distribution: How does the product get from the producer to the consumer.

Funding: Amount of money needed and how it will be used.

Status of Business: Background and history of the company.

Future Prospects: Likelihood of other or new products.

Financials: What the balance sheet and income statements indicate. They must be put together in accordance with generally accepted accounting principals.

MORE NOMENKLATURA PRIVATIZATION

by Roy Den Hollander

When the Communist Party ruled Russia, the nomenklatura did not need pockets full of rubles or dollars to enjoy a privileged life style. Now they do and thanks to Yegor T. Gaidar's policies they now have bank accounts full of rubles and dollars. Prior to August 1991, the nomenklatura ruled the party that ran the state that owned Russia's enterprises. In effect the nomenklatura owned Russia. When Gaidar's current privatization program ends, the nomenklatura will once again own Russia.

Gaidar's policies, at best naïve, have caused one of the largest and quickest transfers of wealth in history from the many to the few. The few, of course, are the nomenklatura, and with their new stolen wealth will soon buy more than Mercedes Benz and BMWs - they will buy controlling interests in Russia's enterprises.

Gaidar's initial adherence to the International Monetary Fund's tight credit policies in Russia's monopoly economy drove up prices dramatically on goods and services during the first three quarters of 1992. Russian citizens were forced to deplete their savings in order to purchase the necessities of life at inflated prices.

At the same time, the lack of regulatory controls and lax enforcement allowed government bureaucrats and enterprise bosses (together the nomenklatura) to steal state assets or acquire assets at low state subsidized prices and sell them to Russia's citizens at inflated prices.

Nomenklatura, or as we in America would call them - mafiosos, directed overseas importers of state products to deposit payment in overseas bank accounts controlled by the nomenklatura. Enterprise managers and institute directors sold state products at subsidized prices to associate mafiosos who in turn resold the products at a higher price and divided the profits with the directors and managers. Because the monopoly nature of Russia's economy strictly limited the number of competing manufacturers, a few mafiosos in any one industry could divert enough products to brokers that supplies to state stores dwindled, leaving citizens no choice but to spend their savings buying from mafioso brokers. Enterprise managers also embezzled revenues from the sales of state products and services. One department store manager withheld sales revenues and used the money to purchase the store from the government; restocked the store mainly with imported goods and raised prices. Other enterprise bosses simply sold their company's product at inflated prices and pocketed the proceeds.

Bureaucrats, also considered a type of mafioso in America, used funds from ministry budgets to set up private commercial banks.

Naturally they or their fellow travelers in larceny controlled the banks. These banks provided credits at reduced interest rates to a bureaucrats personal account or some type of trading activity. For example: importing Western and Asian consumer goods, drug trafficking, money exchange, purchasing Russian products at subsidized prices from nomenklatura managers at state enterprises and re-selling at inflated prices. In most cases the bureaucrat and the bank never intended the credits to be repaid, providing the bureaucrat a gift of state funds. In America such criminal activities are called "sweetheart" loans.

Failure to prosecute bribery allowed bureaucrats to fleece honest citizens and legitimate businessmen of their savings. Because without government approval, people were prevented from doing nearly everything from driving a car, to selling a few items for food money, to obtaining a license for a productive business venture.

In the end Gaidar's policies and lax regulation and enforcement allowed to apostles of greed to transfer the savings of Russian citizens into their pockets. Russia now has a class of ruble and dollar rich mafiosos and a huge class of impoverished citizens. Long lasting and influential wealth, however, requires more than bank accounts stuffed with rubles and dollars; it requires ownership of the means of production. That is where Gaidar's other policy, privatization, comes into play. Through privatization the old Communist nomenklatura, now the nouveau rich bourgeoisie, will buy up Russia's enterprises and enshrine themselves as Russia's robber barons.

Many of the poor, which now includes most Russian citizens, will sell their vouchers because they have no choice; they need the money now that their savings are depleted. The wealthy mafiosos will buy the vouchers and with their illgotten gains buy up most of Russia; thereby creating a relatively small class of capitalists who own much of Russia because they were allowed and encouraged to expropriate the life savings of most of Russia's citizens. Some argue that Russia needs a small wealthy capitalist class to exert proper control over managers and workers. Once again old authoritarian communist thinking is at work. In a competitive market managers and workers will do their job or they will be out of a job, because the enterprise will have gone bankrupt.

The small class of the rich can be deterred in their theft of Russia by making the privatization vouchers non-transferrable and eliminating the restriction that vouchers can be used to purchase only a minority interest in an enterprise. This would assure every man, woman and child a stake in the means of production that will create Russia's future and mitigate the control of Russia's future by its past nomenklatura. ■

A FAIRER FORM OF PRIVATIZATION

The present privatization scheme gives Russia's former bolshaya shyshka, who are the <sup>e</sup>now <sup>stly</sup>nouveau riche, undue advantage over workers and ordinary citizens. Under Perestroika and recent Government policies, the bolshaya shyshka amassed large sums of money. Since the privatization scheme provides for the transfer of large ownership percentages of state enterprises for cash and vouchers, these persons with large amounts of cash and purchased vouchers will buy large ownership percentages in Russia's enterprises. That means the nouveau riche will control much of Russia's means of production. Such control, of course, translates into vast economic, political and social power, similar to the power exercised by former bolshaya shyshka.

Replacing the present privatization scheme with worker-manager leveraged buy-outs would transfer the means of production into the hands of those who work in state enterprises while preventing the bolshaya shyshka from enshrining themselves as the new capitalist barons of Russia.

A leveraged buy-out would work as follows:

The workers and managers of an enterprise set up a limited partnership with the workers owning well over 50% of the partnership, perhaps 90% or more, and controlling a similar percentage of votes. The managers will own a small minority interest in the partnership and control a small minority of votes.

As a juridical person, the partnership purchases over 60% of the state enterprise from the Russian Government. The partnership agrees to pay the Government the purchase price over ten or more years with interest annually and secures its agreement to pay by issuing a purchase money mortgage or security interest on its portion of the enterprise to the Government. The mortgage or security interest acts as collateral for the Government. When the Government eventually receives full payment, the mortgage or security interest transfers back to the partnership.

In the event the partnership buys 100% of the enterprise or some other amount over 60%, it can sell shares in that amount to outside investors to raise capital for upgrading, streamlining and improving the enterprise's efficiency.

Furthermore, the partnership, which means the workers and managers, can legitimately avoid paying the Government by transferring its debt to the enterprise.

Since the partnership acquired a majority ownership interest in the enterprise and such an interest carries with it the power to make decisions for the enterprise, the partnership decides that the enterprise will assume the partnership's debt to the Government. This way the partnership no longer owes the Government the price for the portion of the enterprise it acquired. The partnership's liability becomes the enterprise's liability. But the partnership will still receive back the mortgage or security interest it granted the Government when the enterprise pays off the debt to the Government.

The enterprise will then have ten or more years to pay back the Government. The enterprise pays interest and a portion of the principal annually with the possibility of a grace period during the first few years to allow the enterprise to start making a profit. When payments start, the money will come out of the enterprise's profits. When the enterprise does not make enough profit to pay the Government, the Government and the enterprise can reschedule the debt payments or the Government can force the enterprise into bankruptcy, seize a portion of the assets and sell them off in the market. When the enterprise makes no profit, it will quickly go out of business because it cannot pay its suppliers, workers or upgrade its operations. Its customers will turn to other competing businesses. Here also the Government can seize a portion of the assets and sell them for what it can get.

The enterprises that do make a profit will pay cash over the term of their debt to the Government. The Government may use these funds to finance Government programs that retain workers who lost their jobs because their enterprise went out of business. The Government may also use some of the funds to partially pay for infrastructure modernization projects that hire laid off workers. In addition, the Government may pay for some workers in enterprises that provide materials and services for modernizing the infrastructure.

Worker-manager leveraged buy outs will prevent the former bolshaya shyshka from maintaining control of Russia while assuring workers the power they have always been promised.

The Need for a Constitutional Convention

by Roy den Hollander

The Congressional Deputies accuse the President of trampling the Constitution, while the President charges the Congress with thwarting the will of the people and trampling the Constitution. Neither side dares to speak the truth that their actions are driven by a lust for power. Behind the half-truths, rewritten history and insincere advocacy for democracy and market reform, each side maneuvers to acquire authoritarian power to exclusively control Russia's vast wealth.

In recent months the Deputies have tried to portray the present Constitution as a sacred democratic document of unquestionable authority - when in reality it has neither sanctity nor authority. A constitution enacted by a dictatorial and discredited political party, amended hundreds of times and filled with material contradictions has no legitimacy in a democracy. No amount of emotional appeal or glib verbiage can transform an authoritarian document into the cornerstone for a democracy.

The power of a Constitution derives from the will of the people. The theory of democracy postulates all human beings have certain inalienable rights and the exclusive power and authority to protect those rights. For reasons of individual security and prosperity, the people of a nation join together in a contract, called a constitution, that transfers a limited portion of their individual power to a government of their own choosing. The government is obligated to use its delegated power to protect the peoples' rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

In a democracy, only the will of the people can create a constitution because only they have the power and authority that can be granted to a government, thereby legitimizing that government. The Communist Party, nomenklatura and bolshaya shyska cannot create a constitution because they do not have the power or right to grant a government authority over the people. Authoritarian organizations can, of course, usurp power from the people through deception, intimidation and violence and then draft any document they want and call it a constitution, but it would be a constitution in name only because it did not express the will of the people - only the will of the rulers.

The Executive branch also resorts to fallacious arguments of democratic legitimacy when it says that a nationwide election brought the President to power therefore he embodies the will of the people. The Deputies also gained office by an election held throughout the country. Although no deputy received votes from the entire countryside, voters did elect Deputies from all over Russia. Another disingenuous argument of the Executive states that since the Deputies' elections occurred under Communist rule, the Deputies lack legitimacy, but that argument also applies to the President who also was elected when the Communists ruled Russia. Further, the media in Russia and America often condemn the Deputies for their past Communist affiliations (this is called redbaiting in America), but the same media conveniently forgets to mention that the members of the Executive branch also belonged to the Communist Party and in some cases at a higher level of authority than many Deputies. Consequently, neither side has any more credibility than the other in their claims to legitimately represent the will of the Russian people.

Recent events have clearly shown that greed drives the warring political factions and not their professed desire for political freedom and prosperity for the Russian people. The Executive and Congress both consist of former nomenklatura and bolshaya shyska who still believe they - not the people - own Russia and that they - not the people - have the sole right to profit from Russia's riches. Each side wants the entire mountain of gold, which is enormous even in the present depressed economy. Over one billion dollars leaves Russia every month for overseas bank accounts. Last year alone, an estimated $17 billion of Russia's wealth disappeared overseas. With so much wealth at stake, no wonder both factions are willing to risk chaos and destruction for the chance to obtain a piece of the mountain of gold. The only democratic solution to the present political crisis and wholesale looting of Russia is to let the Russian people - not the Executive or the Congress or the Constitutional Court - decide the form of government, the separation of powers and the type of electoral system. All the uncertainty and danger caused by the greed of pretenders to the throne and their false arguments of legitimacy can be swept aside with a constitutional convention. The will of the Russian people, uninhibited by an oppressive Communist party, can be freely expressed by electing delegates on a district basis to attend a constitutional convention. Candidates running for election to a delegate's position will have to compete for votes. The candidates whose positions on the major tenets of a new constitution most closely matches the majority of the voters will win the election. Each delegate, therefore, will carry to the convention the positions approved by the majority of voters in his district.

At the convention, the delegates will draft a constitution consistent with positions held by a majority of delegates. All the voters of Russia will then vote on whether to accept the draft constitution or have the convention draft another one. In the end, the will of the Russian people will have created a Constitution that provides them with a government of the people, by the people and for the people. ■

The Problems with Foreign Assistance

President Yeltsin's Administration and many enterprise directors hope American financial aid and private investment will to help modernize and rebuild Russia. Current estimates of the amount needed to upgrade Russia's productive capacity runs into the hundreds of billions of dollars. So far this year, America has committed $1.6 billion, promised another $1.8 billion and has joined with the other members of the group of seven wealthy nations to promise an additional aid package of approximately $28 billion. Last year, the West promised $24 billion but provided only $12 billion. Even if Western leaders, like Bill Clinton, do what they promise, the amount of aid would not be enough to turn Russia into a modern, competitive nation. But then again, Western governments, especially America's, do not want a prosperous, independent Russia whose enterprises successfully compete with Western corporations in the international markets or in Russia's market because competition reduces corporate profits. For example, just look at America's reluctance to permit high technology satellites to be transported to Russia for inexpensive launchings aboard Proton Rockets; the U.S. pressuring Malaysia to buy F-16 and F-18 fighter jets instead of MIG-29s; America's continuing ban on most farm imports from poorer nations while America dumps its own subsidized farm surpluses in Russia and other nations; the wealthy nations increase in tariffs and restrictions on importing manufactured goods from poorer nations; GATT's 284 agreements to prevent the populations of GATT's member states from buying inexpensive products from poorer nations; and the 20 out of 24 industrial countries that have more protectionist barriers to trade now than they did a decade ago. Besides the fear of Russian competition, Western businesses do not want to lose their supply of cheap raw materials from Russia. The demand for raw materials by upgraded Russian enterprises would reduce the supply and therefore increase the cost of oil, natural gas and other raw materials needed by Western corporations. As long as the output of Russia's industry continues to decline, the reserves of Russian raw materials available to Western corporations will increase and the price will fall.

The United States Government will not endanger the profitability or interfere with the opportunities of large American businesses because the officers and major owners of such businesses funnel a lot of money into the election campaigns of U.S. politicians, like Bill Clinton. In America, the more money spent on an election campaign, the more likely a politician will win. (Bill Clinton spent millions of dollars more than President Bush in 1992.) In order to keep the money flowing into election-campaign-chests, American politicians will act in ways that help -- not harm -- U.S. businessmen. Accordingly, the U.S. Government will provide only the type of aid and amount of aid that will increase, not lessen, the profitability of American corporations.

Western government financial aid usually takes two forms: grants and loans. Grants do not have to be repaid, but loans do. The money from both grants and loans, however, is used mainly to buy Western -- not Russian -- goods and services. Western companies, therefore, profit immediately from grants and loans provided Russia; whereas, the goods and services purchased from Western companies are often overpriced and may or may not help Russia become a modernized manufacturing nation.

Grants to Russia have generally provided goods, such as food and medicine, in amounts calculated to satisfy the minimum needs of the people in order to defuse any potential social upheavals against the Russian Government. It would benefit Russia more if such grants were used to modernize the production and distribution of food and medicine in Russia, so in the future Russia would be not only self-sufficient but could earn hard currency from its export of both food and medicine. Of course such a situation would hinder American businesses from profiting through the exchange of their goods and services for U.S. grant money, and the Russian agriculture and pharmaceutical industries would soon compete with American enterprises in the world and Russian markets. Some grants, however, do partially aid the development of industries in Russia, but these grants are never large enough to significantly benefit Russia's production facilities. For example, Bill Clinton's $1.6 billion aid package provides $50 million to encourage joint ventures and $60 million to help privatization of state enterprises. Western grants to Russia, therefore, will never provide what Russia needs -- enough money to upgrade Russia's production facilities to world standards so Russian enterprises can effectively compete in overseas markets as well as in Russia.

The largest portion of Western aid to Russia consists of loans. The West distributed around nine billion dollars in loans last year and promises nearly $20 billion this year. Most of the money from last year's loans, most of the money from this year's loans and most of the money from any loans in the future will go directly to Western companies, which in turn ship goods or services to Russia, such as food, industrial equipment, consulting services, etc. The Russian taxpayers and Russian enterprises must repay these loans and the interest charges in hard currency over long periods of time, interest charges can actually exceed the amount borrowed. A large portion of these loans can be used to acquire capital goods and services to update Russian production facilities, but the amounts are still not large enough to meet Russia's current needs. The most insidious aspect of loans, however, becomes clear when Russia tries to meet its yearly debt service. The burden of repaying past, present and future loans will eventually drive Russia into bankruptcy as happened to many indebted Latin American countries in the 1980s.

Russia's total debt to the West, including the amounts owed to governments, international agencies and private commercial banks, stands at around $80 billion. Each new loan and each missed payment on prior loans increases Russia's repayment burden. Russia's debt payments owed to the West in 1992 totaled $20 billion and for 1993 will amount to $30 billion. Since Russia does not have the hard currency, most of the payments due in 1992 and 1993 have been postponed -- but not forgiven. For the amounts not postponed, Russia must still raise enough hard currency each year to meet these payments. Since Russia lacks an up-to-date manufacturing sector that produces large quantities of goods saleable in the world's markets, Russia's main source of hard currency comes from the export of its natural resources and partially processed commodities. At present, much of that currency goes to pay Russia's debt rather than to upgrade Russia's production facilities. For instance, in 1992, seventy-six percent of Russia's exports consisted of natural resources, and Russia's export surplus was a little over four billion dollars. Two of that four billion dollars went to pay Russia's reduced debt service for 1992. With each new debt then, the noose tightens around Russia's future as a manufacturing nation because greater amounts of hard currency must pay an ever increasing debt service rather than being invested in Russia's industries. Consequently, as long as Russia relies on Western loans, it will never have sufficient capital to modernize its industries to the point where they can compete with Western industries.

When the West finally decides to demand full debt service payments -- and it will -- Russia will then be officially bankrupt. The West, however, will then offer an apparent solution to the debt crisis by which private commercial banks will trade some of the debt owed them for ownership in key Russian industries, such as telecommunications, transportation, oil and gas reserves and strategic metals reserves. Western commercial banks will also offer other means of restructuring Russia's debt, such as commodity-linked financing, bond collateralization, debt buy-backs and interest rate reduction bonds, all of which will make the banks a nice profit and increase their ownership of Russian assets. Governmental and international agency creditors will also offer solutions including debt forgiveness, but in return Russia will have to adhere to an International Monetary Fund and World Bank program that ultimately benefits Western businesses over Russian enterprises and the Russian people. For example, drastic reduction in the government's spending for pensioners, unemployed workers and worker retraining programs will make more money available for repaying Western loans. An overly-tight credit policy will make investment in enterprises prohibitively expensive; thereby, reducing Russia's manufacturing capacity and its ability to compete even further. In the end, Russia's reliance on Western loans will result in the sale of valuable enterprises for below market prices, reduce investment in Russian industries, continue the decline in Russian production and competitiveness, deplete natural resources to the West's benefit, and increase unemployment and destitution of Russian workers.

Decades of lending for development by wealthy Western nations to poorer countries has resulted in the transfer of $21 billion a year from the poorer to the richer nations. The same will happen to Russia.

The Russian Government and some enterprise directors, hoping to avoid relying on more Western loans and grants, seek financing in the form of private equity investment. Such investments would make Western businesses partners with Russian enterprises; thereby, giving Westerners a reason for wanting Russian enterprises to succeed: Westerners would share in the profits. In order to attract sufficient amounts of foreign investment, the risks of investing in Russia must be perceived as reasonable when the potential rewards are taken into account. Right now, Western investors perceive the risks as too great because of the uncertainty that Russia's civil courts can adequately and timely resolve contract disputes, the uncertainty whether courts have the power to enforce a judicial or arbitration judgment, the lack of laws on private property that grant investors specific, enforceable rights in their investments, the unstable political situation, the inability of many directors and chief engineers of Russian enterprises to act reliably and competently, and the absence of the likelihood of a reasonable return in hard currency on investments. As a result, the risk of any equity investment far outweighs the potential rewards, so most investors will wait until the risk is commensurate with the reward.

For Russia to survive as a modern industrial power, it will have to create its own capital and not rely on the largesse of Western governments or, for now, the investments from private Western businesses. A first step could entail legal actions to return the $8-17 billion in Russian export revenues deposited yearly in overseas accounts. Amounts this large could greatly assist the modernization of Russia's industry instead of building fortunes for some nomenklatura and bolshaya shyshka.

Most of the Russian export revenues that have remained in America have been placed in bank accounts or bank safe-deposit boxes, or with financial service companies, such as brokerage firms. Whenever a non-resident alien places money with banks or financial service companies, he must produce two forms of acceptable identification, such as a passport and another identity card, before an American company will accept the foreigner's money. The American company then notifies the United States Internal Revenue Service that the non-resident alien opened an account or safe deposit box. Some Russian exporters use a more elaborate way to hide dollars overseas by setting up American corporations, usually in Delaware, to act as their agent and receive payment for exported goods, which the corporation deposits with a bank or financial service company. Such corporations are considered American juridical persons and not alien persons, which makes it more difficult for the U.S. Internal Revenue Service to track Russian export revenues paid to these corporations but not impossible.

The Internal Revenue Service keeps information on non-resident alien financial accounts and American corporation accounts confidential, but the U.S. Government would probably provide this information to the Russian Government if requested since the repatriation of this capital would make President Clinton appear as an effective supporter of democracy and market reforms in Russia at no cost to the American taxpayer. The question of course is whether the Russian Government wants this information or would take appropriate action to force Russian bisocrats to repatriate their export revenues. Many members of both the executive and the legislative branches have accounts overseas, and they would not want their secreted funds returned for the benefit of their fellow countrymen. The hard currency in overseas accounts will not turn Russia into a modern industrial state overnight, but as long as the Russian Government pursues the individuals who horde Russia's wealth overseas, every year billions of dollars will become available for investment in Russia.

Additional capital, both hard currency and rubles, could initially be obtained from a 100 percent tax on the net worth above a certain amount of wealthy Russians. The tax would set an upper limit on the net worth for all households and would prevent high concentrations of wealth and ultimately distribute Russia's riches more equitably. Taxing at 100 percent the net worth above, for example, 100 million rubles would bring in large sums of hard currency and rubles from all the bureaucrats, politicians and mafioses who have grown rich by robbing Russia's assets. The 100 million ruble amount could be indexed for inflation, so as the ruble declines in value the amount above which the tax applies would increase. A net worth limit of 100 million rubles or higher should provide more than enough incentive for Russians to take risks, use their ingenuity and work long hours for the rewards of material success. Once a successful businessman, professional or any other worker reaches the net worth limit, he may retire with his wealth or continue working without material reward but still earning all the psychological benefits that come from exercising his talents and knowledge. The 100 percent net worth tax would make it possible for many more persons to participate in and contribute to the creation of capital in Russia, avoid the growth of a moneyed ruling class and still offer material incentives to inventors, innovators and hard workers.

Russia could use some of the repatriated export revenue and net worth tax to stimulate exports. The Russian Agency for International Cooperation and Development could help Russian exporters secure credit for foreign buyers to purchase Russian goods. Often a foreign buyer cannot obtain financing because private Russian and foreign lenders perceive the risk of foreign buyers not repaying or only partially repaying a loan as too high. The Agency could encourage private lenders, both Russian and foreign, to extend credit to foreign buyers by providing private lenders with guarantees that in the event foreign buyers do not repay the private lenders, the Agency would. While foreign buyers would repay their loans over a period of time, the money loaned by private lenders would be paid directly to Russian exporters immediately and not to the foreign buyer. The foreign buyer would only receive the Russian exporters' goods or services. The exporters, therefore, are assured of obtaining payment for the goods or services exported to foreign buyers. Only the Agency has to worry whether foreign buyers repay their loans. Under another program, the Agency could just provide direct loans for the purchase of Russian goods by a foreign buyer and eliminate the need for any private lenders. The Agency would transfer the funds directly to Russian exporters and the foreign buyers would have to repay the Agency, with interest, over a period of time. An additional program would have the Agency making short-term, low-interest loans directly to Russian exporters to enable them to finance their exporting operations until they received payment from their foreign buyers.

Other services the Agency could provide Russian exporters in order to expand their markets overseas include: market research to define the countries or regions where opportunity exists; information on local or foreign government regulations; location of overseas distributors for Russian exports; promotional activities such as press releases, advertising, direct mail campaigns, telex campaigns and tradeshow production; product managers who contact foreign buyers directly and arrange for the sale of products; and entrepreneur funds to provide financing for middle, small and micro-enterprises. Micro-enterprises include every Russian who informally sells goods or services. Micro-enterprises have a special need for a government operated entrepreneur fund because of the unwillingness of commercial banks to lend to small one- or two-man operations due to the high costs of transacting small loans, higher perceived risks and the lack of collateral.

Repatriated export revenues and a net worth tax can provide Russia with capital to stimulate exports, which will bring in more hard currency that can be used to upgrade Russia's production capacity without having to indenture itself to the West, pauperize its people or sell its most valuable assets at bargain basement prices.

Образ Америки, навязанный всему миру, не является реальным. Многие полагают, что американский бизнес принес почти каждому богатство, создал справедливое распределение собственности и для всех равные условия, чтобы зарабатывать миллион, но все это ложь.

Америка — не такая страна, какой ее считает большинство русских, и вряд ли нужно, чтобы Россия стала похожей на нее. Россия может добиться куда большего, чем Америка.

Кто правит бал

В Америке плохо то, что это чрезвычайно несправедливая страна. Девизом Америки должно быть: "От каждого — по его слабости, каждому — по его жадности". Эту несправедливость проиллюстрируют следующие факты:

1% семей в США владеют 35% всего состояния страны (более 5 триллионов долларов) и почти 45% всего финансового состояния; семья, входящая в 5%-ный состав самых богатых семей, имеет примерно в 20 раз больше, чем семья, входящая в 20% малообеспеченных семей;

средняя "чистая стоимость" семьи, входящей в верхние 5%, — 9 миллионов долларов, а средняя "чистая стоимость" семьи из нижних 40% — по существу, ноль;

с 1977 по 1989 год доходы американцев возросли примерно на 600 миллиардов долларов. Из этой суммы на долю 1% самых богатых семей пришлось 77%, или 462 миллиарда долларов;

в 1989 году средний доход в семье, входящей в 1% самых богатых, составил 560 тысяч долларов, а для семьи из нижних 20% — 8 тыс. 400 долларов — отношение 66:1;

с 1980 года налоги на средний требляет 30% мировых природных ресурсов, добываемых ежегодно. Америка также получила прибыль от экспорта промышленной и сельскохозяйственной продукции, за которую Россия расплачивалась валютой, полученной от продажи сырья. Через различные организации Америка обеспечила валютный кредит для покупки большого количества американских товаров и услуг, на которые у России не хватает валютных средств. Конечно, Российское правительство и граждане России выступают основным гарантом и, таким образом, несут обязательства по кредитам. Продолжающийся экспорт сырья не принесет достаточных валютных средств для американских кредитов и покупки новых американских товаров. Отсутствие современной промышленной базы для создания благосостояния (чему препятствует, согласно плану Международного валютного фонда, сдерживание денежного запаса) приведет к тому, что Россия будет должником, "освобожденным" от своих природных богатств. Россия уже должна Западу около 80 миллиардов долларов. Результат будет сходным с латиноамериканским, когда страна служит дешевым источником сырья и рабочей силы для Америки, ключевым рынком сбыта американских товаров и услуг.

В результате в России образуется небольшая группа семей, своим богатством обязанных сделкам с американским бизнесом и правительством. Эти состоятельные семьи будут контролировать правительство, и к тому времени будет слишком поздно вводить законы, обеспечивающие справедливый рынок.

входящей в 1% самых богатых составил 560 тысяч долларов, а для семьи из нижних 20% — 8 тыс. 400 долларов — отношение 66:1;

с 1980 года налоги на средний класс увеличились вдвое;

учитывая инфляцию, средняя еженедельная зарплата для не занятых в сельском хозяйстве сейчас ниже, чем в начале 60-х годов;

с 1979 года количество зарабатывающих меньше уровня бедности выросло с 12% до 18% от числа работающих;

25 миллионов американцев (один из десяти) получают талоны на питание и более 30 миллионов человек живут в нищете;

США на 56-м месте в мире по иммунизации и стоит за Кубой по уровню детской смертности; каждый рабочий день 40 человек погибают на производстве;

в США около 45 тысяч мест с радиационным загрязнением, и только 20 тысяч контролируются федеральным правительством; около 11%, что составляет 13 млн. человек, в США не имеют работы.

Эти факты показывают, что "американская мечта" сбывается далеко не для всех... В Америке имеет место то же самое, что было и, увы, есть в России: очень многие имеют так мало, потому что кто-то имеет слишком много.

Америкой правит группа семей, которая благодаря своему богатству оказывает несоразмерно большое влияние на политическую, экономическую и социальную жизнь страны, чем американский народ в целом; в СССР была Коммунистическая партия, осуществлявшая то же самое своей политической властью. Но сейчас в России переходный момент: "экономические реформаторы" и бюрократы стремятся к обладанию привилегиями и вли-

КАЖДОМУ ПО ЕГО ЖАДНОСТИ

нием бывшей номенклатуры путем собственного обогащения. Другими словами, некоторые люди в России через так называемую рыночную экономику хотят создать небольшую группу богатых семей, которые будут управлять Россией как теневое правительство, так же как относительно небольшое количество богатых семей управляет Америкой.

Скользкая прибыль

Экономическое господство гигантских корпораций в США приводит к монополизации рынка, к тому, что они получают возможность вступать в тайный сговор друг с другом, держать высокие цены, разрушать союзы, загрязнять окружающую среду без уплаты должной компенсации и чрезмерно влиять на жизнь большинства американцев. История Америки показывает, что корпорации, обладающие большой экономической властью, добровольно не выполняют даже тех минимальных правил, которые устанавливает Служба контроля загрязнения окружающей среды, отказываются платить зарплату, необходимую для нормальной жизни, как и налоги на нужды общины в том месте, где расположены их предприятия.

Собственные интересы (пусть они в ущерб другим) — основная забота американских богатей из корпоративной элиты. А собственные интересы в США лучше всего защищены деньгами, кредо богатых и контролируемых ими корпораций — прибыль. Как следствие этого корпоративная элита Америки сводит на нет большинство мер, которые могут снизить прибыль, невзирая на их пользу для народа. Корпоративная оппозиция правилам ведения бизнеса существует с конца XIX века и привела к социальному укладу, который больше похож на экономический дарвинизм, чем на частный рынок.

Время от времени эффективные правила становятся законом, но, поскольку все правила ведения бизнеса в США вводятся в действие в среде, где небольшое число семей контролирует огромные средства, этим семьям удастся на десятки лет отсрочить использование правил, которые препятствуют "корпоративной активности".

Колпак для правительства

Российские ультрареформаторы (то есть новая номенклатура) тоже отказались от эффективного делового регулирования и накопили состояние, вступив в союз с американским бизнесом (к примеру, экспортируя сырье по ценам ниже мировых рыночных).

Экспорт сильно обогатил часть новой номенклатуры, за что она благодарна американскому бизнесу. В свою очередь, Америка по дешевой цене приобрела необходимые ресурсы, в которых она нуждается, поскольку при населении 6% от населения всего мира Америка по-

На пенсию — миллионером

Важно создать рыночную экономику, поскольку, как показывает история, это самый эффективный способ создания богатства, но успех экономической системы не зависит от горстки семей, обладающих большей частью состояния. Но как гарантировать и экономический успех, и справедливость?..

Верхний предел в виде налога, налагаемого на "чистую стоимость" всех семей, поможет избежать большой концентрации состояния и распределить богатство России более справедливо, при этом не будет разрушен стимул, как в экономической системе, гарантирующей одинаковую плату за разный труд. Предел "чистой стоимости" в, может быть, 1 миллион американских долларов (или меньше) на семью обеспечит предостаточный стимул тем, кто сейчас владеет очень многим, рисковать, проявлять изобретательность, напряженно работать для материального воплощения успеха. Как только преуспевающий бизнесмен, любой работающий достигнет верхнего порога, на любое его превышение будет наложен 100%-ный налог. Тогда человек может прекратить работу и жить на приобретенное состояние либо продолжать работу без материальной отдачи, но получая всю психологическую пользу от реализации своих талантов и знаний. Предел "на чистую стоимость" позволит гораздо большему количеству людей участвовать в создании благосостояния России, поможет избежать роста правящего класса и сохранит материальные стимулы для изобретателей, новаторов и тружеников.

ПЕТЛЯ НА ГОРЛЕ РОССИЯН

тва идут тем не менее на покупку западных, а не российских товаров и услуг. Поэтому западные компании получают немедленную прибыль от ссуд и дотаций, предоставляемых России, а она сама продолжает играть роль нищей просительницы.

Дотации для России обычно расходуются на продукты питания, медикаменты, чтобы погасить потенциальное социальное недовольство населения существующим российским правительством. А России было бы гораздо выгоднее, если такого рода дотации использовались бы для модернизации производства. Тогда уже в недалеком будущем Россия могла бы сама зарабатывать валюту экспортом продуктов питания и медикаментов. Конечно, такая ситуация помешала бы американским предприятиям получать прибыль за счет обмена продуктов и услуг на деньги правительства. А такого положения они, конечно, не допустят.

Большая часть западной помощи России состоит из ссуд. В 1992 году Запад выделил ссуду, равную примерно 9 миллиардам долларов, а в 1993 году эта сумма приблизилась к 20 миллиардам. Заметим сразу же, что основная часть средств из этих ссуд в будущем вернется в западные фирмы.

Российские налогоплательщики и предприятия обязаны возвращать различные займы, проценты с которых за длительные промежутки времени превысили размер самой ссуды. Большая часть ссуд могла бы быть использована для модернизации российского производственного оборудования, однако их никогда не хватит для доведения средств производства России до уровня мировых стандартов. Самая же коварная способность ссуд проявляется, когда Россия делает попытки оплатить ежегодные проценты по государственному долгу. Бремя выплат прошлых, настоящих и будущих ссуд в твердой валюте, несомненно, приведет Россию к банкротству, как это случилось уже в 1980-х годах со многими уровня, на котором она могла бы конкурировать с западной.

Ловушки для золушки

Когда Запад решит наконец потребовать полную оплату долга — а он это сделает, — Россия будет объявлена официальным банкротом, некредитоспособной страной. Запад, однако, предложит очевидный выход из создавшейся ситуации: частные коммерческие банки продадут некоторые долги России за право владения ключевыми отраслями российской промышленности и природными ресурсами — такими, как телекоммуникации, транспорт, запасы нефти и газа, а также стратегический запас металлов.

Западные коммерческие банки могут предложить скорее изменения структуры российского долга, чем просто изменения сроков расчетов, причем это изменение структуры может быть реализовано путем финансирования производства товаров, выдачи кредитов под долговое обязательство, выкупа долгов, снижения процентной ставки по кредитам.

Все эти действия принесут банкам хорошую прибыль и увеличат их долю в российском имуществе. Кредиторы из западных правительств и международных агентств могут предложить также решение, предусматривающее прощение части долга, но в ответ на это Россия должна будет выполнять решения Международного валютного фонда и Мирового банка, которые неизменно оказывают помощь западному бизнесу в ущерб российскому.

Слишком строгая кредитная политика сделает вложения в предприятия недопустимо дорогостоящими, снижая таким образом российские промышленные возможности и ее конкурентоспособность еще больше. В итоге надежды, возлагаемые Россией на западные займы, спровоцируют продажу дорогостоящих предприятий по низким ценам, снижение инвестиций в промышленность, усугубление упадка рос-американскими подданными, а не иностранцами, что делает более затруднительным для финансового управления проследивание выплат доходов от экспорта этим корпорациям.

Затруднительным, но не невозможным! Финансовое управление сохраняет информацию о счетах иностранцев и американских корпораций строго конфиденциальной. Однако правительство США при необходимости передаст соответствующую информацию российскому руководству, ибо возвращение российского капитала представит президента Клинтона человеком, активно поддерживающим демократические и рыночные реформы в России. Американским же налогоплательщикам это не будет стоить ни цента. Весь вопрос сейчас состоит в том, захотят ли нынешние российские реформаторы получить подобную информацию и предпринять соответствующие действия для возвращения в страну ее реальных доходов за экспорт.

Многие бюрократы, без сомнения, имеют счета в банках за рубежом, и они не захотят возвращения своих секретных фондов на пользу согражданам. Естественно, валюта, находящаяся за границей в банках, не превратит Россию мгновенно в современную индустриальную державу, но с тех пор, когда российское правительство начнет преследовать людей, тайно накапливающих российские богатства за рубежом, ежегодно миллиарды долларов России будут вкладываться в Россию, а не в западные страны.

Россия может использовать часть возвращенного дохода от экспорта для расширения своего экспорта. Российское агентство международного сотрудничества и развития или Государственная инвестиционная корпорация (ГИК) могли бы помочь российским экспортерам в получении кредитов для иностранных покупателей российских товаров и услуг. Обычно иностранный покупатель не может получить кредит, так как частные российские или зарубежные заимодавцы рискуют не получить деньги обратно или получить, но лишь частично.

Данное агентство или ГИК могут предлагать частным кредиторам, как русским, так и иностранным, расши-

Многие в правительстве и Государственной Думе России надеются, что американская финансовая помощь и частные инвестиции помогут модернизации страны. Предварительная оценка необходимых средств для поднятия уровня производства в России оценивается в десятки и сотни миллиардов долларов.

В 1922 году Запад пообещал 24 миллиарда долларов, а предоставил только 12. Даже если бы такие западные лидеры, как Билл Клинтон, выполняли бы свои обещания, помощь была бы все равно недостаточной для того, чтобы превратить Россию в современную конкурентоспособную державу. Западные правительства, и особенно американское, вовсе не хотят видеть Россию процветающей, независимой. Им не нужны сильные российские предприятия, которые успешно могли бы конкурировать с западными корпорациями и на международном рынке, и на российском, так как конкуренция

Россию предоставляющей, независимой. Им не нужны сильные российские предприятия, которые успешно могли бы конкурировать с западными корпорациями и на международном рынке, и на российском, так как конкуренция снижает корпоративные прибыли.

Рука руку моет

Западные предприниматели не хотят потерять источник поставки дешевого сырья из России.

Спрос же на сырье своих российских развитых предприятий естественно сократит поставки сырья на Запад и, следовательно, увеличит стоимость нефти, природного газа и другой продукции, необходимой западным корпорациям. До тех пор, пока объем промышленного производства в России будет продолжать снижаться, запасы российского сырья, доступные для западных корпораций, будут увеличиваться и стоимость на сырье будет падать. Сейчас Россия продает на Запад нефть, алюминий и другую продукцию по ценам ниже мировых.

Надо ясно себе представить, что американское правительство не будет подвергать опасности прибыльность американских корпораций, так как их владельцы и руководители представляют крупные суммы денег на поддержку выборной компании таких политических деятелей, как Билл Клинтон. Чем больше денег в Америке тратится на предвыборную кампанию, тем больше вероятность победы того или иного политика. Для того чтобы деньги стекались в предвыборные фонды, политики будут поступать так, чтобы помочь, а не навредить американскому предпринимательству. Рука руку моет. Соответственно, американское правительство предоставит другой стране только такой тип помощи и в таком размере, что она будет увеличивать, а не уменьшать прибыльность американских предприятий.

Хрен редьки не слаще

Финансовая помощь Запада обычно имеет две формы: дотации и ссуды. Дотация, в отличие от ссуды, не подлежит возврату. Но те и другие сред-ежегодные проценты по государственному долгу. Время выплат прошлых, настоящих и будущих ссуд в твердой валюте, несомненно, приведет Россию к банкротству, как это случилось уже в 1980-х годах со многими задолжавшими странами Латинской Америки.

Общий долг России Западу, включая долги правительствам, международным агентствам и частным коммерческим банкам, составляет приблизительно 80 миллиардов долларов. Каждый новый заем или каждый пропуск выплаты предыдущего увеличивает размер выплачиваемой суммы. В 1992 году Россия должна была вернуть Западу 20 миллиардов долларов, а в 1993 году — 30 миллиардов. Поскольку Россия не имела валюты, большинство платежей за 1992 и 1993 годы были отсрочены. Платежи, но не проценты!

Что же касается выплат, не получивших отсрочки, Россия должна все еще собирать достаточное количество валюты каждый год, чтобы быть в состоянии оплатить эти долги. В 1993 году они составили около 3 миллиардов долларов. По причине нехватки в России современного промышленного сектора, способного производить большое количество товара, пользующегося спросом на мировом рынке, главным источником валюты для России является экспорт природных ресурсов.

В настоящее время большая часть этой валюты уходит как раз на оплату долга, а не на модернизацию производственного оборудования. В 1993 году, например, у России появился излишек от экспорта в 7 миллиардов долларов. Но при этом ей пришлось выплачивать около 3 миллиардов долларов в счет долга за этот год. С каждым долговым увеличением петля вокруг будущего России как промышленной державы затягивается, так как все большие суммы в твердой валюте уходят на оплату возрастающих процентов по государственному долгу, вместо того чтобы быть инвестированными в российское производство. Следовательно, до тех пор, пока Россия надеется на ссуды Запада, у нее не появится достаточно средств для модернизации своей промышленности до требованиям западных стран. Это на дежды, возлагаемые Россией на западные займы, спровоцируют продажу дорогостоящих предприятий по низким ценам, снижение инвестиций в промышленность, усугубление упадка российского производства и конкурентоспособности, истощение природных ресурсов, повышение уровня безработицы и нищеты трудящихся и послужат причиной утечки богатств из России в Америку.

Вернуть свои богатства

Единственным способом выжить в качестве современной промышленной державы для России станет создание собственного капитала, не возлагая надежд на щедроты западных правительств или инвестиции частных западных компаний. Первый шаг в этом направлении должен означать реальные действия по возвращению 25—50 миллиардов долларов, помещенных на зарубежные счета, но на деле представляющих собой доход от российского экспорта.

Основной доход от российского экспорта, оставшийся в США, был помещен в банковские счета и сейфы либо передан обслуживающим финансовым компаниям, брокерским и страховым конторам.

Когда иностранец решает поместить деньги в банк или передать финансовой компании, он обязан предъявить два удостоверения личности, например паспорт и какой-либо другой документ, прежде чем американская компания примет его деньги. Затем компания уведомляет финансовое управление США, что такой-то иностранец открыл счет или положил деньги в сейф. Так что выявить ловкачей вполне возможно.

Некоторые российские экспортеры используют более продуманный способ укрытия долларов за границей: они организуют американские корпорации, обычно в штате Делавер, играют роль их агентов и за экспортируемые товары получают деньги, которые американская корпорация кладет в банк или передает обслуживающим финансовым компаниям. Компании такого рода считаются юридически американскими или зарубежными займовладельцами, рискуют не получить деньги обратно или получить, но лишь частично.

Данное агентство или ГИК могут предлагать частным кредиторам, как русским, так и иностранным, расписать выдачу ссуд покупателям российских товаров, гарантируя, что в случае невыплаты займа покупателем это сделает агентство.

В то время как покупателю дается для своих займов определенный период времени, деньги, ссуженные частными кредиторами, будут немедленно заплачены непосредственно российским экспортерам, минуя покупателя, который просто получит товары или услуги. Таким образом, и продавцы будут уверены в получении денег за экспортируемый товар.

Чтобы помочь российским экспортерам расширить их рынок сбыта за рубежом, агентство имеет возможность предоставить также широкий выбор услуг, а именно: изучение рынка для выявления стран и регионов, благоприятных для сбыта; информация о правилах и постановлениях в этой сфере местных органов или иностранных правительств; поиск дистрибьютеров для российских продавцов; деятельность по продвижению товаров; выпуск информационных листков; реклама (в том числе по почте и телексу), торговые выставки; предоставление менеджеров, которые входят в прямой контакт с покупателем и организуют продажу продукции.

Агентство также в состоянии организовать предпринимательские фонды для обеспечения финансирования средних, малых и микропредприятий. Под микропредприятиями подразумевается любой россиянин, неофициально продающий товары и услуги. Микропредприятия особо нуждаются в руководимом государством предпринимательском фонде, из-за нежелания коммерческих банков давать им кредиты по причине высокой стоимости раздачи малых ссуд, высокого процента риска и нехватки дополнительного обеспечения.

КУПИ СЕБЕ НЕМНОЖКО ЗАВОДОВ

В России, во времена правления коммунистической партии, работники номенклатуры, находясь на полном государственном обеспечении, не нуждались в больших суммах денег, чтобы наслаждаться жизнью привилегированных людей. Теперь эта необходимость явно возникла, и благодаря нынешней политике государства у них на счетах скапливаются большие суммы рублевых и валютных вкладов. Крупные работники номенклатуры, включительно по август 1991 года, правила партий, которая в свою очередь управляла государством, владевшим всеми российскими предприятиями и природными ресурсами. С помощью государственной программы приватизации чиновники вновь получили возможность управлять Россией.

Политика государства, в лучшем случае наивная, вызвала один из наиболее масштабных и быстрых скачков в истории роста благополучия среди небольшой части населения. Ими, естественно, являются крупные номенклатурные работники и "большие шишки", иначе называемые нуворишами. Новое благосостояние дало им возможность купить нечто более ценное, нежели "мерседес-бенц" или "БМВ", — оно помогает им контролировать интересы российских предприятий и богатые природные ресурсы.

Желание государства угодить Международному валютному фонду (МВФ) в надежде получения хоть каких-то валютных сумм привело к тому, что в 1992 году была урезана заработная плата, а также сокращены кредиты, что привело к новому росту цен в российской монополевой экономике. В дополнение к этому отсутствие регулярного контроля и несвоевременное проведение законов в жизнь дало возможность государственным бюрократам и владельцам предприятий красть государственное имущество либо закупать его по минимально низким ценам, а продавать уже по более вздутым. В результате этого российским гражданам пришлось изъять свои сбережения, чтобы покрыть жизненные расходы. После чего государство стало использовать вклады МВФ с целью закупки рублей работников номенклатуры и нуворишей, которым удалось зированные предприятия, нувориши стремятся использовать свои нажитые нечестным трудом доходы — продать контроль над обанкротившимися фирмами за гроши, оставшиеся от их остаточной цены, и затем реорганизовать их таким образом, чтобы те приносили прибыль в определенных областях. Реорганизация подразумевает увольнение многих рабочих и дальнейшую скупку акций и ценных бумаг.

КАЖДОМУ СЕЛУ — ПО БАНКУ

Бюрократы, представляющие собой разновидность нуворишей, использовали фонды Министерства финансов и Центрального банка с целью создания сети частных коммерческих банков. Банки предлагали кредиты по явно грабительскому курсу частным лицам или торговым предприятиям. Предприятия, занимавшиеся торговлей, обменивали рубли на валюту и завозили импортные товары, которые конкурировали с российскими. Из-за манипуляций Центрального банка, связанных с изменением курса рубля на Московской межотраслевой бирже, импортируемые западные товары стоят столько же, сколько и российские, а иногда и меньше. Периодически бюрократы переплачивали Центральному банку, но из-за грабительского курса, который банк заимствовал у Центрального банка, бюрократы платили гораздо меньше, чем получили позднее, что принесло им неожиданно большую прибыль.

В конце концов политика государства и Центрального банка, а также несвоевременное введение законов дали возможность нуворишам грабастать принадлежавшее российским гражданам.

руководство и рабочие предприятия создают товарищество с ограниченной ответственностью, в котором доля рабочих составляет более 50% (например, 90% или больше), что подразумевает контроль примерно такого же процента голосов. Руководство имеет небольшую долю в товариществе и, соответственно, столько же процентов голосов.

На правах юридического лица товарищество покупает более 50% компании у российского государства, поэтому товарищество получает право контролировать решения предприятия. Согласно договору товарищество обязуется платить государству закупочную цену в течение десяти или более лет, что включает издержки, а также гарантирует, что будет соблюдать это соглашение, ежегодно выплачивая кредит. Интерес кредитора является второстепенным для государства. Когда государство получает полную стоимость, доля кредитора вновь переходит товариществу.

В случае, если товарищество покупает 100% акций предприятия или часть, составляющую более 50%, оно может начать продавать акции частным инвесторам для повышения эффективности предприятия, но при условии, что предприятие оставляет за собой право контролировать принимаемые решения. Определенное количество акций, не проданных товариществом, могут быть проданы самим государством частным инвесторам за наличные или ваучеры.

Товарищество, подразумевающее сотрудничество рабочих и руководства, может законно избежать периодических выплат государству, вернув долг предприятию спустя определенный период времени. Так как у предприятия имеется определенная власть в сфере принятия решений, само товарищество решает, кася возможность подыскать работу уволенным рабочим. Можно добавить, что государство вправе доплачивать тем рабочим, которые выступают с идеями о модернизации данной инфраструктуры.

Способ закупки акций, описанный выше, помог бы предотвратить захват власти и зон влияния крупными номенклатурными чиновниками и в то же время наделил бы рабочих той властью, которую им всегда обещали.

ИНОСТРАННЫЕ КУБЫШКИ

Государственная программа приватизации предусматривает перевод государственных монополий, управляемых нуворишами, в частные монополии, управляемые теми же самыми нуворишами. Большой разницы в этом нет. Однако некоторыми государственными монополиями управляют директора и их заместители, способные работать как настоящие бизнесмены, а не "бизкраты" (то есть бюрократы, являющиеся бизнесменами только на словах). Многие из них, как правило, лишены инициативности, способности принимать решения, воодушевлять рабочих, планировать заранее и решать возникающие проблемы. Они заинтересованы прежде всего в том, чтобы обогатиться самим, растратив фонды предприятия и его имущество, которое они могли бы использовать для своих частных компаний.

Нувориши используют государственные фонды для закупки и импортирования западных товаров широкого потребления и продажи их на территории России, в то время как большая часть фондов уже находится за границей и вложена в иностранные банки.

Продолжение этого процесса, даже при содействии так называемой "рыночной экономики", приведет к тому, что в конечном итоге многие из предприятий обанкротятся, что вызовет еще большую безработицу, но вместе с этим и обогащение руководителей предприятий.

Полная некомпетентность боссов, управляющих фирмами, и их страсть к наживе привели к тому, что российская экономика оказалась в застойном положении при высоком уровне инфляции.

ЧТО ЭТО БЫЛО?

предприятия красть государственное имущество либо закупать его по минимально низким ценам, а продавать уже по более вздутым. В результате этого российским гражданам пришлось изъять свои сбережения, чтобы покрыть жизненные расходы. После чего государство стало использовать вклады МВФ с целью закупки рублей работников номенклатуры и нуворишей, которым удалось выжать их из российских граждан. Все это привело к тому, что российский налогоплательщик потерял практически все свои сбережения и влез в еще большие долги Западу, в то время как те самые нувориши разъезжают по городу в шикарных автомобилях с платиновыми блондинками, купленными на валюту, которую они получили за рубли. Естественно, большая часть валюты, которой владеют нувориши, вложена на Западе, что приносит огромную пользу Западу, а отнюдь не российской экономике. Остальная же часть награбленного уже скуплена, и в дальнейшем будут скупаться также средства производства и природные ресурсы.

Сначала руководители предприятий продали государственное имущество своим партнерам по субсидированным ценам, которые, в свою очередь, продавали продукцию по еще более высоким ценам, а затем разделили прибыль между теми же руководителями предприятий. Итак, круг замкнулся, принес им огромные барыши.

Эти же нувориши получили немалую прибыль, имея дело с заокеанскими западными импортерами, которые занимаются сбытом природных ресурсов из России, а затем деньги вкладываются в иностранные банки. Из-за монопольного характера российской экономики число курирующих предприятий сократилось, а небольшая часть нуворишей, тесно связанных друг с другом в самых различных отраслях, поставяет товары своим партнерам, чьи поставки через государственные каналы резко сократились; таким образом, у российских граждан не осталось выбора, кроме как покупать товары у нуворишей.

Кроме того, руководители предприятий и директора фирм присваивали себе часть доходов от продажи товаров, что вызвало платежный кризис на территории России. В случае, если предприятие не в состоянии заплатить долги, руководство лишено возможности расплатиться со своими рабочими, что вызывает эффект домино, и компании одна за другой становятся банкротами.

Таким образом, ограбив как государственные, так и ваучеро-привати-банку, но из-за грабительского курса, который банк заимствовал у Центрального банка, бюрократы платили гораздо меньше, чем получили позднее, что принесло им неожиданно большую прибыль.

В конце концов политика государства и Центрального банка, а также несвоевременное введение законов дали возможность нуворишам загребать принадлежавшее российским гражданам. Теперь в России четко выделяются два класса: класс разбогатевших нуворишей и класс обедневших граждан.

Влияние и власть помогают нуворишам не только контролировать рублевые и валютные вклады, но и завладеть средствами производства. Итак, на второй стадии приватизации нувориши контролируют то, что еще осталось от российских средств производства, и скоро природные ресурсы окончательно иссякнут, так как только нувориши, влиятельные бюрократы, владельцы предприятий и энергичные молодые дельцы с хорошими связями имеют достаточно денег для того, чтобы купить то, что еще осталось от России.

ДЕНЬГИ К ДЕНЬГАМ

С помощью программы приватизации крупные номенклатурные чиновники и большие шишки — эта новоиспеченная буржуазия — обокрали многие из российских предприятий, тем самым обогатив самих себя. Эти капиталисты скоро смогут контролировать практически все средства производства и природные ресурсы. Такой контроль, естественно, перерастет в неограниченное экономическое, политическое и социальное влияние, которое сродни власти, созданной номенклатурой и другими работниками аппарата до августовского путча.

Более действенной формой приватизации могла бы стать закупка находящихся в обращении акций корпорации ее руководством и рабочими. Это дало бы возможность передать средства производства в руки тех, кто работал на государственных предприятиях, предоставляя возможность простым гражданам купить акции и облигации на производстве по их желанию, увеличивая необходимый капитал новоприватизированных предприятий, и — что, наверное, важнее всего, — тем самым исключалась бы возможность для работников номенклатуры властвовать на предприятиях и впоследствии превращаться в российских капиталистов.

Способ закупки акций ее руководством и рабочими заключается в следующем:

самим государством частным инвесторам за наличные или ваучеры.

Товарищество, подразумевающее сотрудничество рабочих и руководства, может законно избежать периодических выплат государству, вернув долг предприятию спустя определенный период времени. Так как у предприятия имеется определенная власть в сфере принятия решений, само товарищество решает, каким образом будет выплачиваться долг государству. Товарищество обязано известить инвесторов о принятом решении, так как это, вероятно, повлияет на цену акций, купленных ими. Таким образом, возвращая долг государству, товарищество более не имеет долгов по отношению к нему. Обязательства товарищества становятся обязательствами предприятия. Кроме того, товарищество получает обратно долю кредитора, как только выплатит долг, т.е. члены товарищества смогут владеть акциями предприятия.

КАК УСТОЯТЬ НА НОГАХ

Предприятие платит государству на протяжении определенного периода времени, а в течение первых нескольких лет ему дается возможность доказать свою кредитоспособность. Выплаты государству складываются в основном из доходов, которые получает данное предприятие. Если же доходы предприятия недостаточны для того, чтобы государство получило свою долю, то либо государство и предприятие могут либо переоформить его долговые выплаты, либо государство может объявить данное предприятие банкротом, ликвидировать его имущество и продать на рынке. Если предприятие не получает никакой прибыли, оно автоматически выходит из бизнеса, так как не в состоянии расплатиться с рабочими. Его партнеры могут обратиться к конкурирующим фирмам, чтобы поддержать бизнес на плаву. В этом случае государство может получить часть имущества этого предприятия и продать его за определенную цену.

Предприятие, имеющее постоянный доход, будет платить наличными государству. Государство, в свою очередь, может использовать эти фонды на финансирование государственных программ по переподготовке рабочих, потерявших работу вследствие того, что предприятия, на которых они работали, потерпели крах. Государство также может использовать часть этих фондов на оплату инфраструктурных модернизированных проектов, с помощью которых появитэкономику", приведет к тому, что в конечном итоге многие из предприятий обанкротятся, что вызовет еще большую безработицу, но вместе с этим и обогащение руководителей предприятий.

Полная некомпетентность боссов, управляющих фирмами, и их страсть к наживе привели к тому, что российская экономика оказалась в застойном положении при высоком уровне инфляции. Ни у государства, ни у предприятий уже не осталось достаточно денег, чтобы расплатиться с рабочими. Начиная с лета 1993 года производство упало до 25%, спрос резко уменьшился. Кредиты и новые напечатанные рубли не способствуют снижению инфляции. Сами же монополии способствуют росту инфляции тем, что повышают цены, стараясь выманить последние рубли российских граждан.

Нынешнее состояние застойной экономики при таком уровне инфляции делает практически невозможным удовлетворение потребностей населения страны.

ТРОПА ЛАТИНСКОЙ АМЕРИКИ

Единственным альтернативным путем, на мой взгляд, является дальнейшее сотрудничество с западными странами, использование займов с целью закупки необходимых импортных товаров и затем продажи природных ресурсов для погашения долга. Сложившаяся в России ситуация вполне удовлетворяет западных партнеров, поскольку они получили еще одну возможность закупки дешевых сырьевых ресурсов в обмен на производимые их предприятиями товары. Россия идет по тому же пути, что и Латинская Америка, Африка и некоторые страны Азии.

Россия может предпринять попытку и выйти из создавшегося положения, разделив монополию на несколько частей таким образом, чтобы каждая из них функционировала самостоятельно и концентрировалась на выпуске определенного вида товаров.

Российская государственная или приватизированная монополия состоит из различных отраслей, то есть происходит управление продвижением товара от стадии производства до стадии его реализации непосредственному потребителю. Второстепенные товары и услуги подразумевают: строительство и оборудование обершпион Аллен Даллес, снискавший себе известность в начале "холодной войны", был выдвинутцем Эдварда Хауза — "крестного отца" СИДа. ЦРУ использует членов СИДа для прикрытия своих тайных операций и делится с ними самой "чувствительной" информацией.

Именно в плотно закрытых от постороннего глаза комнатах дома Гарольда Пратта зародилась идея о том, что можно одержать победу в ядерной войне. В 1957 году издательство СИДа опубликовало книгу почти никому не известного тогда Генри Киссинджера "Ядерное оружие и иностранная политика". "Ограниченная ядерная война может принести нам определенную выгоду, — писал молодой выходец из Германии, считающийся и по сию пору американскими "крайне правыми" агентом КГБ. — Наш лучший промышленный потенциал, наша развитая технология и гибкость наших социальных институтов — их способность влиять на общественное мнение дают нам преимущество над противником".

Стоит заметить, что "немецкий профессор" еще в университетские годы попал под крылышко Нельсона Рокфеллера, оказывавшего ему финансовую поддержку. Будучи советником по национальной безопасности в правительстве Никсона, Киссинджер передавал Рокфеллеру важные документы, "стащенные им из Белого дома" (Д. В а н к и н. Заговоры, тайны и преступления. Парагон-пресс, 1992).

Никсон и Рокфеллер были всегда непримиримыми врагами. Как же "хитрый Дик" допустил проникновение Киссинджера в свое интимное окружение? Кто оказал на него давление и протолкал наверх явного "агента Рокфеллера"? Почему Никсон прислушивался к советам Киссинджера и проводил политику в духе СИДа и Трехсторонней комиссии, направленной на создание единого мирового сообщества? Почему он, победивший на выборах благодаря поддержке тех, кого принято называть американскими патриотами, предал их, отказавшись прислушиваться к их мнению? Ответы на эти вопросы еще предстоит найти.

"Семья Рокфеллеров — самая могущественная в Соединенных Штатах, — пишет американский социолог Х. Скляр, наблюдавший за Трехсторонней комиссией. — Власть Рокфеллеров заключается в том, что в их руках находятся самые важные корпорации, финансовые учреждения, фонды, и они контролируют деятельность тех, кто занимает ключевые посты".

В 70-е годы, когда Нельсон Рокфеллер стал вице-президентом, собственность его семьи включала такие гигантские компании, как Эксон, Мобил, "Стандарт ойл", авиакомпания "Истерн эйрлайнс", банк "Чейз Манхэттен" и страховая — "Метрополитен лайф иншурано". Помимо того, ему принадлежали несколько крупнейших благотворительных фондов, используемых ЦРУ для поддержки "демократических начинаний в странах тоталитарного режима". Публикации "советских диссидентов" и "работа с новоприбывшими" также финансировались фондом Рокфеллера.

Неимоверно большая власть, сосредоточенная в одних руках, не может не внушать опасений у всех, кто стремится к подлинной демократии и социальной справедливости. Выступая перед сенатским комитетом, Рокфеллер пытался развеять тревогу трезво мыслящих американцев. "У нас имеются инвестиции, но у нас нет контроля... Я надеюсь, что миф о контроле моей семьи над экономикой этой страны будет тщательно расследован и исчезнет навсегда..."

Однако "миф" о Рокфеллерах живуч и, пожалуй, становится более устойчивым. Когда Нельсона Рокфеллера назначили вице-президентом, то даже самые скептически настроенные американцы подумали о том, что в разговорах о конспирации, связанной с этим семейством, есть определенная доля истины.

Тайные оккультные общества всегда оказывали колоссальное влияние на политику, стремились подчинить ее своим целям. Не является ли Трехсторонняя комиссия — рокфеллеровская "группа озабоченных граждан" — наследницей тех обществ, основанных сотни, тысячи лет назад? Не создана ли она по их образу и подобию? Американец Питер Макальпайн, автор "Оккультной технологии власти", пишет: "Наши предки в их борьбе против старого порядка королей и князей должны были финансировать тайные общества — иллюминатов, масонов, Германский союз и т. п. из своего собственного кармана... Насколько это легче для нас, унаследовавших развитую систему государственного капитализма! Призывая к заботе о нуждах "национальной безопасности", мы получаем возможность финансировать и создавать тайные общества в самом широком масштабе".

По мнению американских конспирологов Ванкина и Альпайна, ЦРУ и Трехсторонняя комиссия по своему архетипу — тайные общества. Такого рода объединения существовали с древнейших времен, существуют они и поныне. В разные эпохи подобные группы так или иначе влияли на жизнь общества. В определенные периоды это влияние сказывалось более заметно, в другие — становилось почти неуловимым. Не нужно удивляться тому, что слова "оккультизм" и "власть" поставлены в один ряд. С самого зарождения цивилизации те, кто стремился подчинить своему контролю людей и природу, обращались за помощью к незримым, таинственным силам. Подлинная власть неотделима от тайны. По мнению Ханна Арендт, она даже начинается с тайны. Так было неизменно прежде, и нет никаких оснований полагать, что в этом плане намечались какие-либо изменения. Поэтому можно с уверенностью сказать, что, когда в следующий раз вы обнаружите в газете сообщение (неприметное и краткое!) об очередной встрече "бильдербергеров" или Трехсторонней комиссии, в ней непременно будет отмечено: "Заседания проходили при закрытых дверях и в обстановке строжайшей секретности".

PREVENTING AMERICA FROM TRANSFORMING RUSSIA INTO A THIRD WORLD NATION

The image America presents to the world is not the reality. Many people believe American business has made nearly everyone in America rich, has created a distribution of property that most Americans regard as fair, and has provided equal opportunity to all to make a million dollars -- all of these perceptions are false.

America is not the country many Russians think it is, and I doubt it is the type of country many Russians would want their country to become.

With the talent, education and sense of justice of most Russian people and their land's resources, Russia can do much better than America. It certainly can avoid becoming just another third world, underdeveloped, banana republic.

The Impact of American Business Practices

What is wrong with America is that it is grossly unfair. America's motto should be, "From each according to his fragilities, to each according to his greed." A few facts about America will illustrate its inequities:

- 1% of America's families own about 35% of all the wealth in America (over $5 trillion) and nearly 45% of all the financial wealth;
- A family in the top 5% makes around 20 times more than a family in the bottom 20%;
- The average net worth of a family in the top .5% is $9 million, while the average net worth of a family in the bottom 40% is essentially zero;
- Between 1977 and 1989, incomes for Americans increased by approximately $600 billion. Of that increase, the top 1% of families received 77%, or $462 billion;
- In 1989, the average income for the top 1% of families was $560,000, and for the bottom 20%, it was $8,400 -- a 66 to 1 discrepancy;

- Taxes for a middle class family have doubled since 1980;
- When inflation is taken into account, average weekly wages for non-agricultural workers are now less than they were in the early 1960's;
- Since 1979, the group of people earning below poverty wages grew from 12% to 18% of the work force;
- 25 million Americans, 1 in 10, are now on food stamps and over 30 million live in poverty;
- America ranks 56th among all the world's nations in immunizations and ranks behind Cuba in infant mortality;
- 40 people every working day die from occupational injuries;
- There are an estimated 45,000 sites in America that are polluted with radioactivity, 20,000 are controlled by the Federal Government; and
- About 11%, or 13 million, workers are unemployed in America.

These facts show that much of America's wealth goes to a few rich families and much of the misery to the rest of American families.

The historical flaw in America differs only in degree with the flaw in Russia before August 1991 and the potential danger for Russia since -- so many have too little because so few have too much. America has its group of families who through their wealth exercise a disproportionate amount of influence over the political, economic and social life of the republic; the Soviet Union had the Communist Party which did the same through political power. Now, however, for Russia, there is a transition: economic reformers and bureaucrats strive for the influence and privilege of the former nomenclatura by becoming rich. In other words, some people in Russia seek to create through a so-called free market a small group of wealthy families that will rule Russia as a shadow government, just as a relatively small number of wealthy families run America.

To a large extent in America, the wealthy families control through stock ownership and corporate offices a relatively small number of corporations that account for nearly one half of America's economic activity.

Economic dominance by giant corporations in America results in the power to monopolize markets, to collude with one another, to keep prices high, to break unions, to pollute the environment without paying adequate compensation, and unduly influence much of the life of most Americans. America's history has shown that corporations possessing vast economic power do not voluntarily agree to meet even the minimal standards of pollution control, worker safety, product safety, liveable wages, or taxes for the betterment of the community where they are located.

Self-interest ranks as the primary concern of America's wealthy corporate elite, and self-interest in America is best protected with money -- profit is the creed of the rich and the corporations they control. As a result, America's corporate elite opposes or dilutes most regulation that may lessen profits regardless of the benefit to the general public. Corporate opposition to business regulations has existed since the late 19th century, has been largely successful, and has resulted in a social order closer to economic Darwinism than to a fair market.

Every so often effective regulations do become law, but since all business regulations in America have been enacted in an environment in which a small number of families controlled vast amounts of wealth, these families have been able to delay for decades regulations preventing corporate activities which harm the general public. Furthermore, when it becomes expedient for propaganda purposes to enact a regulation, usually because of public outrage over some abhorrent business conduct, the regulation is either too weak to deter the harmful conduct or it is not vigorously enforced.

Russia's ultra-reformers (now the new nomenclatura) have already deterred effective business regulation and amassed fortunes by allying themselves with American businesses, in part, to export vast amounts of raw materials at prices below the world market. Exporting has made some of the new nomenklatura very wealthy and grateful to American businesses. In return, America has acquired necessary resources cheaply (which it needs since America with 6% of the world's population consumes 30% of the world's natural resources extracted each year). America has also acquired profits from the manufactured goods and agriculture products that were purchased by Russia with the hard currency gained from its raw material exports. America, through various agencies, even provided hard currency credit for the purchase of additional American goods and services for which Russia lacks the hard currency. Of course, the Russian government, which means Russian citizens, are the ultimate guarantor and therefore liable for the credits.

The continued export of raw materials will not raise enough hard currency to repay American credits and purchase more American goods and the lack of a modern industrial basis for creating wealth (which is prevented from modernizing due to the tightening of the money supply under the International Monetary Fund's plan) will leave Russia deeply in debt and stripped of its natural wealth. Russia already owes nearly $80 billion to the West. The end result will be very similar to Latin America, which functions as a cheap source of raw materials and labor for America, a key export market for American goods and services, and a continent whose economies are predominantly influenced by American banks because of the large indebtedness of the countries. (The 125 largest banks in America control worldwide 2.3 trillion dollars in assets.)

In the end, Russia will have a small band of families who owe their wealth to their dealings with American businesses and government. These wealthy families will control the government, and by then it will be too late to establish laws that ensure a fair, rather than free, market.

The time to act then is now before even greater amounts of wealth, and therefore, power, become concentrated in the hands of a relatively few families. Russia does not yet have an organized, cohesive class of wealthy families wielding extraordinary economic and political power that can block regulations that ensure a more equitable distribution of wealth and protect the public from unchecked avarice. At the same time, such regulations need not destroy incentive, innovation, the ambition to achieve material well-being or deter productive foreign investment.

Regulations for Ensuring a Fair Market

The importance of establishing a market economy is that history has shown it to be the most effective means of creating wealth, but a successful economic system does not depend on a handful of families owning much of the wealth the system creates. Regulations, such as the following, can assure both economic success and fairness.

An upper limit in the form of a tax imposed on the net worth of all families would avoid high concentrations of wealth and distribute Russia's wealth more equitably; however, it would not destroy incentive as does an economic system which guarantees equal pay for unequal work. A net worth limit of perhaps one million U.S. dollars or less per family should provide more than enough incentive for persons (now owning very little) to take risks, use their ingenuity and work long hours for the material rewards of success. Once a successful businessman, professional or other worker reaches the net worth limit, a 100% tax would be imposed on any increases in net worth. The individual may retire with his wealth or continue working without material reward but still earning all the psychological benefits that come from exercising his talents and knowledge. The limit on net worth would make it possible for many more persons to participate in and contribute to the creation of wealth in Russia, avoid the growth of a monied ruling class, and still offer material incentives to inventors, innovators and hard workers.

Another tax, which would prevent over-exploitation by America, is a windfall profits tax on American corporations that do business in Russia. If an American corporation is in a joint venture with a Russian business, then a windfall profits tax can apply only to the American corporation's share of the joint venture profits. A windfall profits tax would tax profits over a certain amount at a much higher rate than the normal tax on profits. For example, if the normal tax on profits is around 34%, a windfall tax might be 70% or more on profits over a certain amount. A windfall profits tax help prevent the excessive greed that drives a corporation to maximize profits at the expense of the consumer, laborer, or the environment. For example, monopolies and oligarchies using their market power to charge high prices not reasonably related to their expenses.

A corporation may also reap windfall profits when its expenses to produce a product does not reflect the true cost of the product. The cost of cleaning up pollution or compensating workers injured in the production of a product should be born by the corporation. If such costs are not part of a company's expenses, then it is reaping windfall profits. Besides fairness, a key reason for the price of a product to reflect its true cost is to allocate resources efficiently. A consumer's decision to purchase a product or service depends on whether the consumer believes the money he pays is worth what he receives in return. If the consumer is unaware of the total amount of money he will have to pay for the product or service, then he cannot decide whether his purchase is wise or foolish. The consumer's ignorance would result in an inefficient allocation of resources because resources would be allocated to products and services that the consumer bought only because he was unaware of their true cost.

For example, assume a motorist has a choice between one liter of gasoline and one liter of methanol (assuming both are equal in performance), the gasoline costs 100 rubles and the methanol 200 rubles. The motorist will buy the gasoline. If the motorist knew, however, that he would later receive a bill for 150 rubles in the form of higher taxes to pay for cleaning up the pollution caused by producing one liter of gasoline, then the motorist would have purchased the methanol, and resources would be directed towards methanol production and not gasoline production; that is, resources would be allocated efficiently.

American businessmen and their allies in the American government will bluff and bluster against a windfall profits tax and net worth limit tax. They will call the measures undemocratic and socialistic but windfall profits taxes are not unknown in America; they applied to oil companies during the 1970's Arab oil embargo, and not too long ago, America had a progressive tax system that taxed the richest American's incomes at 90%, which clearly limited the growth of their net worth.

American businessmen will also threaten not to invest if a windfall profits taxes exist, but they will be lying. An American corporation generally makes a profit before income taxes of 8% to 10% in a good year. If windfall taxes were enacted in Russia that started at 15%, American corporations could still make an additional 5% to 7% over their normal profits before income taxes before the windfall tax applied. The 5% to 7% extra profits before income taxes will be enough to attract American investments providing it compensates for the additional risk of investing in Russia.

For Russian companies and Russian partners in joint ventures, a windfall profit reinvestment rule rather than a tax may be more useful. The rule would require a Russian company to reinvest into its business profits over a certain amount rather than paying those profits out to the owners. By limiting the rule to large companies, small to medium sized family businesses, which usually provide the sole source of income for their owners, would not be interfered with.

Inflation can be attacked with effective and enforceable anti-trust laws that break up monopolies and oligarchies which, because of a lack of competition, charge inflated prices. By breaking up monopolies and oligarchies, competition will increase because there will be more corporations producing a product or providing a service. Efficiency and lower prices will also occur because one or more corporations will try to increase business by cutting their prices, and in order to cut prices, they will have to increase efficiency.

One of the chief reasons why the IMF and ultra-reformers' tightening of the money supply caused price inflation was because Russia's industries were and still are mainly monopolistic. The IMF and reformers knew the tightening of credit in a monopoly capital system would simply cause monopolies to raise prices and produce fewer products or services. In a competitive system, corporations try to reduce costs and prices through efficiency so they can continue to sell their products or services, make a profit and use those profits, instead of credits at high interest rates, to finance their businesses. Competing corporations cannot raise their prices because their more efficient competitors lower prices will attract their customers.

Before Russia can create wealth from its industrial base and provide its people with needed goods and services, the monopolies that now exist will have to be broken up into competing enterprises. Otherwise, production and services will continue to decline and prices to rise because monopolies will continue to try to make a profit by providing fewer goods and services at higher prices. At some point, the prices will be too high for the people to pay, no matter how desperately in need they are, production will drop even more drastically (Russia's manufacturing output declined by 15% in 1993 alone), stagnation will set in, and Russia will be financially dependent on America and willing to sell the remainder of its natural resources and what is left of its industrial base to American investors at rock bottom prices.

By using anti-trust laws to break up large monopolies into competing private enterprises, some enterprises to survive will have to cut costs by laying off employees and some enterprises will go bankrupt no matter how many employees they lay off. The result will be high unemployment and social unrest because privatized competitors will no longer be receiving subsidies from the central government or negative interest rate credits from other enterprises to keep people working at unproductive jobs. Factor in that many towns are dominated by one large enterprise which uses part of the subsidies to fund the town's social services and the elimination of these subsidies could lead to violent uprisings.

A possible solution, however, does exist. Use the subsidies now paid to unproductive monopolies for a public works program. People laid off by a privatized enterprises can be employed in a government program that puts them to work in jobs building Russia's infrastructure: railroads, ports, airports, industrial parks, communication systems, etc. All of the modern facilities that an industrialized country needs. The program can also provide retraining so that laid off workers can find employment in the new economic market. President Franklin Roosevelt set up such a program in 1933, which helped lift America out of its worst depression.

THE DANGER POSED BY THE AMERICAN MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX

The end of the cold war caused a precipitous decline in U.S. Government defense spending. Since 1990 the U.S. military budget has fallen by more than five percent a year. The procurement section of the budget (orders placed with factories) has dropped by nearly 60 percent since 1985. Enterprises that once sold billions of dollars in military goods and services to the U.S. Government are now suffering a dramatic reduction in business. General Dynamics, Raytheon, Hughes Aircraft and General Electric are shrinking their operations in anticipation of permanently lower sales to the U.S. Government. Between 1991 and 2001, two and a half million defense-related jobs will probably disappear unless buyers other than the U.S. military can be found. The decline in defense spending bodes ill for the American economy. The military-industrial complex makes up an important pillar of the economy, which continues struggling to recover from a recent recession. An official of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston stated, "We are growing so slowly that defense spending can make the difference between a rising unemployment rate and a falling one." Unless a new market for the U.S. military-industrial complex arises, many enterprises will have to make a costly and risky conversion to civilian products that inevitably will result in many bankruptcies.

Conversion causes many difficulties for American defense firms. They lack expertise in marketing to customers other than the government. Their workers are more used to making expensive, customized products as opposed to goods produced by cost-efficient mass-production. And the defense industry emphasizes technology over utility -- there is no demand for a stealth refrigerator.

To avoid the dangers of conversion, leading military contractors now concentrate on expanding exports to new buyers overseas. There exists, however, a lot of competition in the world, especially from Russia. Last year an American firm failed to sell armored personnel carriers to the United Arab Emirates because the Emirates decided to buy from Russia instead. Malaysia plans to buy from Russia Mig 29's, helicopters, submarines and offshore patrol boats. Sales that would have gone to American firms had there been no Russian competition.

Current Russian Government policy, however, may rescue America's military industry at least from Russian competition. Following the suggestions of the International Monetary Fund, of which America is the most influential member, Russian ultra-reformers slashed orders to defense firms by 68 percent in 1992 and drastically reduced orders in 1993. Without financing, Russia's defense industry can hardly produce technologically advanced military goods to compete with American defense products. As a result, America now leads all other countries in arms exports with sales of nearly $12 billion. Previously, Russia led in arms export sales.

Russian adherence to IMF and ultra-reformist economic policies may also create a new market for American arms in Russia. As the economic policy called "shock therapy" turns Russia into a calamity by decreasing industrial production (off by 30% since 1991), raising prices (up nearly 2500% in 2 years), forcing citizens into poverty (now reaching over 50% of the population) and encouraging rampant corruption, Russian citizens will turn out of desperation to regional autocrats who promise relief from the endless decline in living standards. As regional strongmen gain greater support from impoverished citizens, these strongmen will eventually claim sovereignty for their region, causing Russia to fragment. A divided Russia with regions ruled by autocrats will provide ample markets for U.S. military goods and services. By that time, Russia's military production probably will have collapsed from lack of investment and conversion attempts. Each autonomous region, just like the current Republics, will want to own arms to protect itself from potential aggressions by its neighbors.

The funding for arms to sovereign regions will come from the natural resources controlled by a regional strongman or U.S. Government funds paid directly to American defense enterprises with the region's government liable to the U.S. Government for repayment. (This type of financing is similar to the American aid package presently provided to Russia). A fragmented Russia will also enable the U.S. military bureaucracy to argue for an increased budget in order to protect against the spread of potential conflict to areas of American economic interest, which the U.S. State Department perceives as the entire world.

Of course, neither the U.S. Government nor military-industrial enterprises desire any armed conflicts or even the potential of such in Russia while it still controls strategic nuclear weapons. Assuming the threat to the West from strategic nuclear weapons diminishes, either through diplomacy or lack of resources to maintain the weapons, the threat or existence of armed conflict in a fragmented Russia will help pull American military-industrial enterprises out of their recession, eliminate the need for complex and costly conversion to civilian uses, increase the Pentagon's budget, eliminate the need to discharge hundreds of thousands of soldiers into an economy already experiencing significant unemployment, increase economic growth for America and facilitate American industries exploitation of Russia.

A Ruble Backed by Gold Instead of the IMF

Russia needs a fully convertible currency to facilitate exports and imports, but so far it has relied only on the International Monetary Fund's promises to provide a hard currency fund for backing the ruble. Such a fund would permit any person or enterprise holding rubles to exchange those rubles for hard currency. The provision of the fund, however, depends on Russia's acceptance of the IMF's economic plan, which would cause widespread unemployment and further decline in Russia's production output.

A less traumatic way of making the ruble convertible would be to use gold and other precious materials as collateral for a hard currency fund to back the ruble. Add a requirement that individuals and enterprises inside the ruble zone could not own gold or the other kinds of precious materials in the fund and the danger of depleting the fund through a massive conversion of rubles from within the ruble zone into dollars would be averted. (America had a similar ban on owning gold from the depression of the 1930's until 1975.)

Since the ruble's value against the dollar continues to depreciate, I doubt many enterprises or individuals outside the ruble zone hold significant amounts of rubles, so there would be no fear of these enterprises or individuals depleting the fund by immediately exchanging large amounts of rubles for gold or other precious materials. The fund would remain intact to back future foreign trade. Such a fund would put some of Russia's resources to better use than what occurs now. It makes little economic sense for Russian reformers to sell 95 percent of its cut diamonds to the monopoly DeBeers, which like all monopolies buys low and sells high. Equally illogical are the efforts to sell gold mines and other precious resources for below market value when the market value can be used as collateral to borrow hard currency to invest in interest bearing, credit worthy debentures.

With the ruble ultimately backed by gold and precious materials, trade and investment will increase dramatically. At first, foreign traders and investors will exchange the rubles they earn for hard currency in the fund but their ability to make this exchange will go a long way towards convincing the business world of the ruble's soundness. At some point before depletion of the fund, foreign traders will forego exchanging rubles for the fund's hard currency because the fact will have been proven that the ruble is fully exchangeable. At this point, the ruble will be a harder currency than the American dollar because its backing consists of gold and precious materials.

стабильность, позволяющую им продолжать безрадостное существование. Называемые сегодня проститутками, еще вчера они сияли таинственной радостью женственности и оптимизмом мечты о прекрасном принце, о любви, о детях и о счастье. Теперь они действуют с холодным расчетливым умением бизнесменов в рыночной системе - никому не доверяя и требуя предоплаты. Кто может их в этом винить? Цинизм - их единственная защита от обмана в экономической системе, где мошенник выигрывает, а доверчивый остается в проигрыше.

Как ни грустен факт существования таких разрушенных жизней, есть и другие девушки, быть может, более заслуживающие сочувствия, поскольку они все еще доверчивы, все еще верят, что судьба, с небольшой помощью с их стороны, превратит их девичьи мечты в реальность. В их сердцах жива надежда до тех пор, пока хищный американский бизнесмен не изнасилует их юное тело, растопчет душу, сломает веру и бросит их - сгорающих со стыда, использованных, циничных. Таких девушек мы в Америке называем "невеста по каталогу". Обладая лишь силой своих тел, души и надежд, они публикуют объявления о поиске американского мужа, поскольку они в отчаянии. Никто из них не хочет стать "бизнесменкой", так же как ни одна не согласна иметь мужа-пьяницу, который издевается над ней. Каждая хочет встретить мужчину, который будет хорошо к ней относиться, обращаться с ней как с женщиной, а она взамен подарит ему свою самую главную драгоценность - свое сердце. Эти девушки не требуют больше, чем заслуживает любая русская женщина, но часто они несправедливо получают совершенно иное.

Русские девушки, которые ищут американского мужа, помещают объявления в специальных каталогах. В капиталисти-ным американским бизнесменам. К тем, кто настолько не чувствует уверенности в себе, что в каждом деле им нужно доказывать самим себе свое превосходство над другими, менее удачливыми. Такой американец обманом легко склоняет девушку к плотским утехам, врет ей про свое намерение жениться, чем убеждает русскую девушку в том, что ее мечты могут стать реальностью, если она сейчас ему отдастся.

Именно так один мой бывший знакомый использует русских девушек, а когда наскучат - выбрасывает прочь.

Назовем его "Гадким Американцем" - Гамом для краткости. Гам развивает двустороннюю атаку в своих попытках склонить к постели многих русских девушек с наименьшими затратами для себя. Гам работает в Москве в крупной американской фирме, что обеспечивает ему хорошую зарплату и шикарную квартиру. Несмотря на это Гам жаждет, поэтому он держится подальше от проституток, которых, как ему известно, сложно обмануть. Вместо этого он прибегает к стратегии сбережения денег, заключающейся, во-первых, в том, что он знакомится с девушками из числа невест по каталогу. Он говорит им, что приехал в Россию, чтобы найти русскую жену, что, естественно, неправда. Он также сообщает им, что он получает хорошие деньги в американской фирме, что у него в Москве прекрасная квартира и что он хочет познакомиться с ними поближе, то есть - познакомиться поближе с их телами. Он предлагает девушке при-мой и переключается на следующую.

Второй способ атаковать русских девушек, используемый Гамом, - посещение дешевых московских баров, куда русские девушки приходят в надежде встретить будущего американского мужа. Снова Гам обманом заставляет девушку поверить, что у нее есть все шансы стать его женой. Для Гама это проще, чем подстрелить утку, сидящую в клетке. Проще, поскольку таким отчаявшимся девушкам не остается ничего другого, как верить таким, как Гам. И опять же это гораздо дешевле, чем проститутка.

Гам наслаждается жизнью, он считает Москву прекрасным местом, и большую часть времени Гам смеется. Но смеются ли обманутые им русские девушки? Что они чувствуют, когда понимают, что он просто обманом склонил их к сексу? Что в конце концов происходит с их девичьими грезами и какой же горечью наполняются их сердца? То, что делает Гам, - преступление. Он похищает, насилует, рвет дух невинности и надежды. И не он один. Из-за невообразимо сложной экономической ситуации многие порядочные русские девушки вовлекаются в скрытую форму проституции, за которую им даже не платят. Процветающая экономика Америки спасает многих американских девушек от подобного положения, поэтому-то Гам и приехал сюда. Когда-то в прошлом в России империалиста наподобие Гама наказали бы, возможно заставив провести остаток жизни певцом в хоре кастратов. Но сегодня он, смеясь, идет по жизни и по жизням русских девушек.

Nomenklatura Looters

So what caused Russia's economic collapse—theft, in one form or another. Russian government officials and their business partners used foreign and domestic wealth not for investment to grow the economy, but to grow their overseas bank accounts.

Unlike capitalist systems, the Russian government continues to own large portions of major businesses, sometimes as high as 51%, years after the much ballyhooed privatization process run by Anthony Chubias. Privatization simply allowed a number of well connected individuals to obtain significant ownership interests alongside the usually larger government share. Together, the two groups exercise dictatorial control over the assets, finances and management of key companies, which are usually huge monopolies.

Most of the monopolies receive subsidies from the federal, regional and local governments in the form of credits and tax breaks. The tax breaks are of a curious type: the government just does not enforce collection. Besides government subsidies, a monopoly's capital comes from sales revenues and often a lot of bartered goods. Around 70% of Russia's gross domestic product is barter.

In order to funnel off a monopoly's wealth, its owners set up a number of closed corporations to act as middlemen for obtaining the company's inputs and selling its outputs, including the barter goods. When a monopoly purchases inputs, it pays an exorbitant price to the middleman. When the monopoly sells its products or goods obtained through barter, the middleman pays the monopoly's cost or creates an account payable that is often never paid, then sells the goods at the higher market price. It is no accident that the rewards from such a business scheme accrue to the middlemen. For those companies are owned by the monopoly's executives, the government bureaucrats that oversee a particular industry, and the businessmen, or oligarchs, that acquired an ownership interest in the monopoly through the privatization process. Since the oligarchs paid fire sale prices for their shares, they can make much more looting a monopoly than turning it around.

The people handling the day-to-day operations of the various middlemen corporations are all those 20 and 30 year old guys who are always bragging about being successful multimillionaire and billionaire businessmen. These cellular phone Russians are not entrepreneurs but the beneficiaries of simple nepotism. They are the relatives and family friends of the old nomenklatura. That good old boy and girl communist network that ran the Soviet Union into the ground and remained in tact after it collapsed. Today's Russian yuppies continue to pretend to be the new power in the country, but, in fact, they are only fronts for the old line bureaucrats and former communists who still run the show.

Russia's businessmen and bureaucrats (perhaps the terms should be collapsed into bizcrats) invest their looted gains overseas at the rate of $12 to $15 billion a year. When a significant amount of the capital that flows into or that exists within an economy leaves without being invested in the creation of wealth, that economy is never going anywhere.

And when foreign and domestic momentum investors realized new capital was not continuing to flow into Russia to buoy the stock and government bond markets, they cashed in their investments and went overseas causing the inevitable and repetitive financial collapses that occur in economies with endemic corruption.

Follow the Money

In 1973 when two American reporters investigating Richard Nixon could not figure out the intricacies of Nixon's shady dealings, their confidential source told them to "follow the money". That was good advice then as now to understand the recent devaluation, so let's follow the money from the International Monetary Fund to see what it reveals.

So far the IMF has lent the Russian Government $4.8 billion of a $22.6 billion financing package in which the IMF is the main lender. Now, if you had billions of dollars, would you lend it to your government? If you had thousands of dollars, would you lend it to the government? Probably not. The men at the IMF are just as smart as you. They know, as you all do, the problems with the government and this economy. So why did they lend the money? One reason is that it is not their money. The money comes from other governments, mainly the United States, which in turn acquires the money from its citizens and corporations. In the US, unlike here, virtually every working person and corporation pays income taxes. In fact, most of the US Government's revenues come from income taxes. In effect, the US government reaches into the pockets of its workers and businesses and sends billions of dollars to the IMF.

The IMF then sends these billions of dollars to the Central Bank of a country like Russia when it appears that Central Bank may run out of hard currency. The IMF refills the Central Bank's coffers in order to prevent wealthy, foreign financial institutions, such as investment banks, from losing money on their investments caused by a devaluation of the local currency. For example, when American investment banks bought securities in Russia, say debt issued by the government, they had to change dollars into rubles. Think of them as having paid, for instance, $1 to get 6 rubles. Investors then bought securities with their rubles because debt instruments, stocks and other securities in Russia are sold for rubles, not dollars.

When investors believe, for various reasons, that the price of stocks, bonds and other securities will go up in Russia, they change lots of dollars into lots of rubles and buy lots of securities. When they believe that prices will go down, for various reasons, they sell their securities, which causes prices to go down, and take the rubles from the sales to a bank to get dollars. The bank may pay the dollars from its own pockets or sell the rubles for dollars provided by the Central Bank. The Russian banks pay dollars for rubles because months earlier they entered into contracts agreeing to make such payments. The American investor then sends his dollars home for investment after having made a nice profit.

In 1996 and 1997, wealthy American and other foreign financial institutions paid billions in hard currency for rubles in order to buy Russian securities, which helped the markets go up. But then some of these investors became worried, for various reasons, or simply decided to sell at the high prices for a gain. As they sold, the market prices began to drop because there were more sellers than buyers. When these wealthy investors started taking their rubles to the banks to get dollars, the banks' dollar accounts began to shrink, so the banks exchanged rubles for dollars from the Central Bank. Naturally, the Central Bank's amount of dollars started falling.

Other investors then began to fear that when they sold their Russian securities or when their Russian Government bonds matured there might be so few dollars left with the banks and the Central Bank that, despite bank agreements, the banks would pay fewer dollars for rubles. That is, when investors took their rubles to the banks to buy dollars, the banks would not give them $1 for 6 rubles, but $0.66 or $0.33 or some other rate for 6 rubles. So an investor who put in $1 million and made a $200 thousand profit would only receive back $800 thousand or $400 thousand—a big, big lose.

All of this has happened over a period of time because it takes time for many large investors to leave a market. Most large investors reduced their ruble investments and transferred into dollars or dollar investments before the devaluation. The ruble was devalued because these investors could then make money from the devaluation instead of losing money, which would have happened if the ruble was devalued earlier.

Foreign financial institutions were not the only ones who played this game. The large Russian commercial banks, such as those controlled by the famous oligarchs, also benefit from the IMF loans. They too invested in the markets, needed time to pull out and change their rubles into dollars provided, in part, by the IMF.

The oligarchs' banks also received another benefit from the IMF loans. As previously mentioned, when foreign investors initially paid dollars for rubles, Russian banks agreed to buy those rubles back at a future date with a certain amount of dollars, probably around $1 for 6 rubles. Without the IMF loans, Russia's Central Bank would not have had enough dollars to keep the ruble from falling in value before the rubles were bought back and the banks had time to change those rubles into dollars. To maintain the ruble's value, the Central Bank used its dollars to buy rubles in the market. This kept a balance between the amount of rubles bought and the amount sold, so the value did not decline before the banks wanted it to.

An earlier fall in the value of the ruble would have hurt the banks because were the banks to live up to their contracts and sell, for example, $1 for 6 rubles, those six rubles would only be able to buy perhaps $0.66 or even $0.33—a big, big lose and possibly bankruptcy for the oligarchs. On the other hand, the banks could have defaulted on their contracts. However, many Russian banks received dollar loans from Western institutions and these institutions would have demanded payment that the banks could not have made because they did not have the dollars. Either way, the banks would have gone under financially. To prevent the oligarchs and other large banks from violating their agreements with foreign investors and from going bankrupt, the IMF quickly agreed to a loan package for Russia's Government.

So, the money lent to your government by the IMF came from Western taxpayers and flowed into the pockets of wealthy foreign and Russian financial institutions. Who then is going to pay it back—YOU ARE, whether in new taxes, increased tax collection, unemployment or a devalued ruble. You are going to pay, just as Western taxpayers paid.

KEY REGULATIONS FOR A FAIR ECONOMY

Dear Sir:

I have enclosed an overview of some key American laws that regulate business activities in the United States. The laws are grouped in five categories: Environmental Protection, Trade Regulation, Securities Regulation, Consumer Protection and Employment. In each category, I have summarized the laws, the present deficiencies or loopholes in each law and why they were enacted.

The reason for loopholes in American business regulation is to secure the wealth and power of a relatively small number of families by permitting profits to be maximized as much as is socially acceptable. Since all business regulations in America have been enacted in an environment in which a small number of families control vast amounts of wealth, these families have been able to dilute the effectiveness of all regulations, even in the face of public outrage over some abhorrent event caused by industry's pursuit of the maximization of profits.

The vast concentration of wealth achieved in America's previous free market of the nineteenth century and its subsequent ineffectively regulated market of the twentieth century has resulted in 1% of American households owning approximately 34% of all the wealth in the United States while at the same time owning approximately 45% of all the financial wealth (securities, bonds, etc.). In comparison, the middle class, which comprises about 40% of America's families, owns a little over 10% of the wealth, and the poorest 40% owns virtually nothing.

The flaw in America over the years and today differs only in degree with the flaw in your country before the August coup and the potential danger for your country since the coup -- so many have too little because so few have too much. America has its group of families, who through their wealth, exercise a disproportionate influence over the political, economic and social life of the public; the Soviet Union had the Communist Party which did the same in your country. Now, however, for your country there is a transition: the former rulers and managers are trying to regain their position of influence and privilege by becoming wealthy. In other words, it appears that some persons in your country seek to create through a free market a small group of wealthy families that will rule Russia as a shadow government, just as a relatively small number of wealthy families run America.

The vast concentration of wealth, and therefore power, in relatively few hands can be mitigated with certain laws which at the same time do not destroy incentive, innovation or the ambition to achieve material well being. For example, an upper limit on the net worth for all households would avoid high concentrations of wealth and distribute your nation's wealth more equitably; however, it would not destroy incentive as does an economic system which guarantees certain minimum payments regardless of productivity. A net worth limit of one million or two million U.S. dollars per household should provide more than enough incentive for persons (now owning virtually nothing) to take risks, use their ingenuity and work long hours for the material rewards of success. Once a successful businessman, professional or any other worker reaches the net worth limit, he may retire with his wealth or continue working without material rewards but still earning all the psychological benefits that come from exercising his talents and knowledge. The limit on net worth would make it possible for many more persons to participate in and contribute to the creation of wealth in your country, avoid the growth of a monied ruling class and still offer material incentives to inventors, innovators and hard workers.

Other regulations, besides a net worth limit, can also contribute to an equitable distribution of wealth, material well-being and a safe environment for your people providing the loopholes are avoided. The following are some of the key laws enacted in America with the publicized purpose of ensuring an equitable economy that creates material well-being for most its citizens within a safe environment. The reality of course is much different — the laws provide effective propaganda but ineffective regulation because of loopholes and lax enforcement. America's market, while no longer free, is still unfair.

1. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

Before 1970 Federal environmental protection efforts were scattered among numerous agencies. The two key programs were air and water pollution control, both of which were dismal failures. The air pollution program, for example, had failed to divide the country into air quality regions, had dealt with only two pollutants and failed to approve any state air quality plan — regardless of effectiveness.

In 1970 all pollution control efforts were consolidated under a new agency, titled the Environmental Protection Agency (the "E.P.A."). Also in 1970, amendments to the Clean Air Act required a 90 percent reduction in automobile emissions by 1975 (in subsequent legislation the automobile industry was able to weaken and delay these emission standards), ordered the E.P.A. to establish national ambient air quality standards, required states to produce air pollution control plans by 1975 that met Federal air pollution standards and allowed citizens to sue the E.P.A. for failure to enforce the law.

Amendments to the Federal Water Pollution Control Act in 1972 required industry to use the best practical technology for water pollution control by 1977 and the best available technology by 1983 and established as goals of the E.P.A. for the 1980's: fishable and swimmable waters and zero discharges of insufficiently treated wastes into America's waterways.

The major deficiency with these and other environmental regulations is lenient enforcement. Violations of pollution standards are rarely detected. An American firm might be visited once a year by a pollution inspector. Furthermore, pollution standards are often violated, and the violators are not adequately punished. In 1983, 82 percent of discharges violated the regulations. Since the E.P.A. maintains a low level of enforcement and rarely takes polluters to court, polluters find it more profitable to pollute than to adhere to environmental standards.

The reasons the clean air and clean water amendments were enacted were a series of events that outraged the American public. In the late 1960's an oil well off the coast of Santa Barbara, California, burst, and 20,000 gallons of crude oil washed up on the beach. Also the Cuyahoga River in Ohio was so polluted that it caught fire.

2. TRADE REGULATION

The law of trade regulation attempts to assure fair competition among businesses because it is in the public interest that quality, price and service in an open and competitive market for goods and services be the determining factors in the business rivalry for the customer's dollar. There are two main areas of trade regulation laws: antitrust and unfair competition.

The purpose of antitrust laws are to preserve or establish a competitive market, so no single buyer or seller, or groups of buyers or sellers, can control the price of goods or services solely by their actions. In a market where companies are allowed to collude, prices can be fixed, markets divided and boycotts executed in order to exploit more money from consumers. In a monopoly market, where there is only one seller of an item, that seller can limit production and, thus, raise the price a consumer pays. On the other hand, in a competitive market, price is set by supply and demand.

Section I of the Sherman Antitrust Act prohibits agreements between companies that restrain trade. There are three key restraints on trade that are prohibited under Section 1.

The first is price fixing, which is an agreement to affect or inhibit price competition. The prohibition covers agreements between sellers to establish maximum or minimum prices at which certain commodities or services are offered for sale, agreements between sellers to change prices of goods or services simultaneously or to fix the price at which its purchasers must resell its product.

The second prohibition is market allocation or division whereby competitors agree not to compete with each other in specific markets, which may be defined by geographic area, type of customer or class of product.

The third prohibition is a boycott, which is an agreement among competitors not to deal with a supplier or customer. An example would be where General Electric, Whirlpool and Frigidaire (competing manufacturers) agree not to deal with any wholesaler of their products who does not follow their pricing policy.

The problems or loopholes in Section I of Sherman Act include inadequate penalties for violating the law. The fines for engaging in any of the prescribed acts are trivial compared with the profits made from the violations. For example, the average price fixing fine in the 1960's was 0.21 percent of the sales involved. In addition, prison sentences average only a few months. A businessman would logically conclude that the gains from violating the law far exceed the penalties, even if, he was unlucky enough to be caught.

Another loophole in Section I is that intent to fix prices, divide markets or boycott has to be proven in court along with the fact that two or more businesses agreed to engage in such activities. Intent and agreements entered into in secret are very difficult to prove. This problem could be corrected by only requiring the result of business actions to be proved. If prices appeared fixed, markets appeared divided or boycotts to exist, then that would be sufficient for a conviction.

Another <sup>e</sup> deficiency in Section I is that consumers are not allowed to sue companies violating the law. This is ironic since the purpose of the law is to protect consumers.

Section 2 of the Sherman Act prohibits the unfair attainment of monopoly power or the abusive use of that power once attained. It does not prohibit all monopolies, even though, the economic reason for the law was to prevent a monopolist from using its power to produce fewer goods at a higher price. Two loopholes are that violation of Section 2 requires proving in court a company intended to monopolize, which is very difficult, and the penalties for firms convicted under Section 2 have been inadequate. The appropriate remedy for monopolization is divestiture; however, from 1890 to 1974 the U.S. government has obtained substantial divestiture in only 23% of all the cases it won. One possible solution to the law's inadequacy is to make all monopolies illegal and require divestiture when the government wins a case.

The Sherman Antitrust Act, enacted in 1890, grew out of an era of free markets in the late 1800's that made possible the growth of large corporations (trusts) which exercised unprecedented power over many markets. The American Sugar Refining Company controlled 98% of its market, Standard Oil controlled 80% of its market, American Tobacco - 93%, U.S. Steel - 66%, Aluminum Company of America - 90%, and there were other large corporations controlling their respective markets, such as International Harvester and Nabisco. There were also trusts in the markets of leather, rope, buttons, glue, wallpaper, starch and salt. Consumers, small businessmen and farmers were forced to pay exorbitant prices for necessary goods because of the lack of competition in these markets. Initially, the states passed laws against trusts, and then the federal government passed the Sherman Act. Senator John Sherman said, "If we will not endure a King as a political power, we should not endure a King over production and transportation and the sale of the necessities of life."

UNFAIR COMPETITION

The purpose of the law of unfair competition is to prevent businesses from taking unfair advantage of their competitors. The law prohibits the unauthorized use of trade secrets, trade symbols, copyrights and patents. A business would be unlikely to invest resources in research and development unless its inventions, discoveries and processes were protected by patents and trade secrets. Additionally, a business would not devote time and money to marketing its goods or services if its trade symbols were not protected. Furthermore, without copyright protection, the publishing, entertainment and computer software industries would be vulnerable to having their efforts pirated by competitors.

A trade secret is information that is commercially valuable, guarded from disclosure and not common knowledge. Trade secrets may include a list of customers and contracts with suppliers. The law is violated when another person discovers a trade secret by a means other than independent research or inspection of the finished product.

Trade symbols are protected under the Federal Lanham Act, which prohibits one business from passing off its goods or services as the goods or services of another business by using the other business' trade symbol. In America, a business can register its trade symbol with the Federal Government, which is the easiest way to prove ownership and the exclusive right to use that symbol.

Federal law provides protection to authors of original works under the Copyright Act. Protected works include literary, musical, dramatic, pantomimes, choreographic, pictorial, graphic, sculptural, motion picture, audio visual and sound recordings. The law is violated when someone uses another's copyrighted work without the owner's permission.

A patent is a grant by the Federal government of monopoly right to an inventor to exclusively make, use or sell his invention for a period of 17 years. A process, machine, manufactured object or composition of matter may be patentable if it is novel, useful and not obvious. The law is violated whenever someone makes, uses or sells a patented invention without permission of the patent holder.

The laws of unfair competition do not have significant loopholes because their main purpose is to protect businesses and, therefore, profits.

3. SECURITIES REGULATION

The primary purpose of Federal securities regulation is to prevent fraudulent practices in the sale and purchase of securities and thereby foster public confidence in the securities markets. There are two main statutes: the Securities Act of 1933, which focuses on the issuing of securities, and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, which regulates the trading (buying and selling) of already issued securities. The 1933 Act has two main objectives: (1) to provide investors with necessary information concerning securities newly offered for sale to the public, and (2) to prohibit misrepresentation, deceit and other fraudulent acts and practices in the sale of newly issued securities. The 1934 Act's provisions (1) require most publicly held companies to register with the government and submit periodic reports, (2) prohibits the use of fraud in selling or buying securities, (3) prohibits the directors, officers, employees and others from using information not available to the general public in buying or selling securities (insider trading) and (4) regulates proxy solicitations and tender offers.

The 1933 and 1934 Acts fail to regulate a number of securities sold to the public and the fines are small compared to the millions to be made in violating the acts. In addition, the maximum five year prison term provided for under the Acts is rarely imposed.

Both the 1933 and 1934 Acts were passed in response to the American stock market crash in 1929 and the ensuing depression. During the late 1920s, there was a frenzy of activity on Wall Street. Stock prices continued to rise, and nearly everyone was borrowing money to buy stocks advertised as being investments in credit worthy companies. In reality many of the stocks were worthless. Their prices kept rising because of market manipulation by brokers, traders and the companies themselves, officers and directors of such companies knew of their firm's tenuous finances, so they sold their shares to unsuspecting members of the public. As the stock market reached unprecedented highs, many corporate executives, even of stable companies, acted on information they possessed but the public did not and sold their shares. With the stock market crash and resulting depression, many of the fraudulent schemes used to lure an unsuspecting public into buying stock were exposed. The resulting scandals shocked America's confidence in a free and orderly stock market. To restore the public's confidence that the stock market would no longer be a predatory but a fair market, the 1933 and 1934 Acts were passed.

As stated above the trivial sanctions of the acts have not created a completely fair market. Listed below is a chronology of some insider trading for 1986-87. These are clear examples that the two acts and subsequent law have not been effective in deterring fraud on Wall Street.

May 12, 1986 SEC charges Dennis Levine of Drexel Burnham Lambert with making $12.6 million since mid-1980 from insider trading. SEC also names as defendant Bernhard Meier, Mr. Levine's broker at Bank Leu International in Nassau.

May 13, 1986 Mr. Levine is arrested and charged with obstructing justice for attempting to destroy records. He is released on a $5 million bond.

June 5, 1986 Mr. Levine pleads guilty to four felony charges and agrees to cooperate with the government in its investigation. Settling civil insider-trading charges, he agrees to pay $11.6 million.

July 1, 1986 SEC charges Robert Wilkis and Ira Sokolow, former investment bankers at Lazard Freres and Shearson Lehman Brothers, with exchanging confidential information with Mr. Levine. They settle with SEC. Mr. Wilkis allegedly made about $3 million from insider trading. Mr. Sokolow agreed to give up $120,000 in profits.

July 3, 1986 David Brown, investment banker at Goldman Sachs, resigns amid SEC investigation.

July 14, 1986 Ilan Reich, takeover lawyer at Wachtell, Lipton, Rosen & Katz, resigns amid government investigation.

August 19, 1986 Litton Industries Inc. sues Shearson Lehman and Mr. Levine, charging that Mr. Levine's insider trading made Litton pay more than necessary to take over Itek Corp. Suit seeks $30 million in damages.

Sept. 4, 1986 Mr. Sokolow and Mr. Brown plead guilty to criminal charges of passing stolen information to Mr. Levine.

Oct. 3, 1986 Mr. Reich is indicted by federal grand jury in the Levine case.

Oct. 9, 1986 Mr. Reich pleads guilty to two criminal counts for his role in the Levine case. Mr. Brown agrees to pay $145,790 to the SEC.

Nov. 6, 1986 Mr. Sokolow is sentenced to a year and a day in prison for his role in the Levine case.

Nov. 14, 1986 Ivan Boesky agrees to pay $100 million penalty for trading on insider information supplied by Mr. Levine from Feb. 1985 to Feb. 1986; agrees to plead guilty to unspecified criminal charges. (Boesky made over $1 billion from his activities.)

Nov. 18-19, 1986 Drexel is identified as being under investigation for possible securities law violations in connection with the Boesky probe.

Dec. 18, 1986 FMC Corp., in a lawsuit similar to Litton Industries', accuses Mr. Boesky and others with inflating the cost of the company's recapitalization plan.

Dec. 23, 1986 Mr. Wilkins pleads guilty to four felony counts for his key role in the Levine case; Randall D. Cecola, formerly a junior financial analyst at Lazard, pleads guilty to two count of filing false tax returns and settles SEC charges of participating in the Levine scheme.

Jan. 12, 1987 Mr. Brown sentenced to 30 days in prison on weekends and fined $10,000.

Jan. 23, 1987 Mr. Reich sentenced to a year in prison.

Jan. 28, 1987 Michael Davidoff, former head trader for Mr. Boesky, pleads guilty to one count of securities fraud for violating capital requirements at Mr. Boesky's firm. Mr. Davidoff, who had close contacts with many Wall Street traders, agrees to cooperate with the goverment.

Feb. 9, 1987 Mr. Wilkins sentenced to a year and a day in prison.

Feb. 10, 1987 Mr. Cecola sentenced to six years' probation.

Feb. 11-12, 1987 Three top Wall Street figures--Robert M. Freeman, a Goldman Sachs partner; Timothy L. Tabor, a former official at Kidder Peabody and Merrill Lynch; and Richard Wigton, a Kidder vice presidentarrested and charged with an information-swapping conspiracy that allegedly made Kidder millions of dollars in illegal profits. Mr. Freeman was also charged with trading for his own account on the information.

4. CONSUMER PROTECTION

In 1914 Congress enacted the Federal Trade Commision Act that created the Federal Trade Commission (the "F.T.C."). Among some of the commission's purposes were to protect the consumer from false and misleading advertising, false and misleading descriptive names of products and false or inadequate labeling of products. Much of the F.T.C.'s history, however, has been one of favoring business over the consumer, whom the F.T.C. was suppose to protect. One period of exception occurred in the 1970's when the F.T.C. pursued aggressive consumer protection policies. With the election of Ronald Reagan, however, the F.T.C. dropped 25% of its pending cases against businesses and discontinued studies into over-the-counter drug advertising and automobile insurance. Under the Reagan administration, the F.T.C. became pro-business at the expense of the consumer. A graphic example was the "survival suit" case. Hundreds of survival suits had been sold to the Federal government and private buyers to save persons involved in ocean accidents. The suits leaked and people drowned instead of being saved. To repair the suits would have cost no more than a few cents per suit. The F.T.C. decided not to order a recall of the suits for repair. Its reasoning was that the free market would handle the problem because relatives of drowning victims would sue the manufacturer for damages, and the manufacturer would then recall the suits for repairs.

Historically, the enactment of consumer protection laws in the U.S.A. have often been delayed. The Industrial Revolution in America in the late 1800's resulted in a rapid growth in consumer products. False advertising of products was common, the addition of harmful substances to foods was common and medicines were mislabeled. It took from the early 1880's until 1906 to enact a Food and Drug law. The reason the law was enacted was because Upton Sinclair published "The Jungle", a book detailing unsafe, unsanitary and unhealthy food produced by the meat packing industry. The book caused such an uproar among the public that President Teddy Roosevelt was forced to have legislation passed. The problem with the law was that it only listed certain substances that could not be added to foods. The food industry quickly switched to adding other unsafe substances that were not on the list. The law did require the labeling of dangerous drugs in medicines but such drugs, such as opium, were still allowed to be sold. And the law still did not regulate advertising, that did not happen until 1938.

Despite the passage of the Food and Drug Act in 1906, drugs could still be marketed without testing or government approval. In 1938 the Massengil Corporation marketed without testing a sulfa drug elixir that killed 100 people. The federal government quickly enacted a law requiring government approval of new drugs. Despite the 1938 legislation, drug advertisements were still misleading and numerous drugs were on the market that were of questionable safety and efficacy. In the early 1960's a bill was passed requiring that drugs be proved safe and effective before being marketed. The reason the bill was enacted into law was once again public outrage over birth defects in new born children caused by the drug thalidomide. The pharmaceutical industry still found ways to circumvent the law. Just recently it was learned that some American drug companies had bribed employees of the government to quickly approve some of their drugs as safe and effective.

In the 1970's the government created the Consumer Product Safety Commission to protect consumers from unreasonable risk of injury from hazardous products. Millions persons were injured each year using consumer products, 110,000 permanently disabled and 30,000 killed. During the 1980's the Commission has been ineffective because of staff and budget cuts.

5. EMPLOYMENT LAW

In 1932 the Norris-LaGuardia Act prevented Federal courts from issuing injunctions against unions involved in non-violent labor disputes. Before the law's enactment, company owners could prevent a union from picketing or engaging in otherwise peaceful conduct by simply going to court to get an order (injunction) prohibiting the activity. If the union persisted in its activity, then the participants and union leaders could be jailed indefinitely and fined large amounts.

In 1935 the Wagner Act provided workers the right to self-organization, to form, join and assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing and to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection. The act also prohibited employers from interfering with employees' rights to unionize and bargain collectively, dominating a union, discriminating against union members, discriminating against an employee because he has filed charges against an employer and refusing to bargain in good faith with the duly established representatives of the employees.

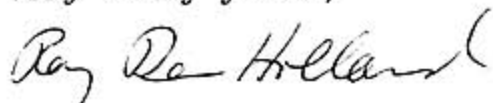

After World War II an irrational fear of communism and the Soviet Union swept America. Business interests used the "red scare" to rescind many of labor's rights guaranteed under prior laws by accusing unions of being pro-communist. In 1947 the Taft-Hartley Act passed Congress. Among other provisions, the act prohibited closed shops, which required an employer to hire only union members; disallowed a union to boycott, strike or picket an employer with whom a union had no labor dispute in order to persuade that employer to cease doing business with the company that was the target of the labor dispute. In addition, the act reinstated Federal Courts with the power to issue injunctions prohibiting non-violent union activities. The Taft-Hartley act has had a major negative impact on organized labor. Although not the sole reason, it is a major reason for the decline of the number of unionized workers from 25% of the work force in 1950 to 13% today.

The preceding is just a cursory overview of some business regulations in America, but the general theme holds true for other regulations as well. Regulations are enacted after long delays and usually only when some event or series of events create a public outrage. The regulations then enacted usually have loopholes or deficiencies or are ineffectively enforced because approximately 1% of America's families have the wealth and thereby the power necessary to control legislation for the long term benefit of their profits. If similiar regulations were enacted in Russia without the loopholes your country would be far along the path to a fair market.

I hope this has been helpful. If I can be of any further assistance, please do not hesitate to contact me.

SUCCESSFUL PRIVATIZATION REQUIRES DIVESTITURE

The current Government privatization program transforms state-owned monopolies operated by the bolshaya shyshka (old line directors and chief engineers) into privately or publicly-owned monopolies operated by the same bolshaya shyshka. A distinction without a difference.

Some state-owned monopolies have directors and chief engineers that can function as businessmen rather than "biscrats" (bureaucrats who are businessmen in name only). Many, however, lack initiative and lack the ability to make decisions, to motivate workers, to plan ahead and solve problems.

The continuation of an enterprise under the leadership of many of today's directors and chief engineers, even in a quasi market economy, will end in wide spread bankruptcies. Witness 1992, when enterprise directors exercised their political power to increase Central Bank credits and exploited their "good ol' boy" (former Communist comrade) network to obtain no interest loans from fellow enterprise bosses just to continue producing ever decreasing amounts of goods.

Enterprise directors and chief engineers, like American corporate executives, will probably not relinquish the power, status and wealth of their positions without a push and compensation (often called a "golden parachute"). The golden parachute can consist of an attractive retirement pension funded by the government and the privatized enterprise and ownership shares in the enterprise.

The push may come from the realization, already apparent, that the monopolies they lead need government subsidies in order to survive. But the Government does not have enough money, even in depreciated rubles, to provide what monopolies need to pay workers, suppliers and maintain production, let alone increase it. Workers and suppliers with less money buy less and demand decreases. Not even phantom credits (credits not backed by value) and an overactive printing press can replace the value lost when production slumps. Approaching failure may convince incompetent directors and chief engineers or provide them with no choice but to turn over leadership to the younger (generally in their 30s and 40s) middle level managers who still have the drive and receptivity to learn a new way of doing business.

Waiting for the failure of incompetent directors and chief engineers will result in higher inflation and lower production. A situation called "stagflation" (a stagnant economy with high inflation). Unable to meet its peoples' needs, Russia's only alternative, other than a new dictatorship, will be to borrow even more heavily from Western nations. Use the funds to buy needed imports and sell its natural resources in order to earn hard currency with which to service its debt. A situation fully agreeable to Western businesses, since they will then have another source of cheap raw materials and another market for their manufactured products. Russia will serve the same economic purpose as Latin America, Africa and parts of Asia.

Russia can take a step towards avoiding stagflation if many of the old comrades running state enterprises accept a golden parachute to retire comfortably to their dachas or agree to compromise and run a spin-off of a privatized monopoly. Large American conglomerates, corporations running many different businesses, have often found it more profitable to sell, that is, spin-off some of their businesses and allow their middle level managers to become the directors of a newly spun-off independent business. This allows the new enterprise to concentrate on making one business profitable.

A Russian state-owned or privatized monopoly consists of many different businesses because of horizontal and vertical integration and the provision of ancillary (social, municipal, retail, etc.) goods and services to its workers and town's people. Horizontal integration means few, if any, other enterprises sell the same goods and services within a region. Vertical integration means the monopoly runs all or many of the operations from extracting raw materials to marketing the finished product to consumers. Ancillary goods and services often include construction and management of apartments and rest homes for workers, manufacturing of furniture and other consumer goods, selling consumer goods, construction of roadways and transportation systems, provision of utilities, etc.

Divesting Russia's monopolies into their constituent businesses will provide old line directors and chief engineers with a business to operate and will provide the younger, middle level managers with businesses to operate that they are most familiar with and therefore most likely to operate successfully.

Divesting or spinning-off a monopoly's constituent businesses will also stimulate competition. Since many of Russia's monopolies engage in ancillary production and servicing, the spinning-off of these businesses by all the monopolies will create a marketplace with different independent organizations providing the same types of goods and services. Divesting the vertically integrated businesses will have the same effect by creating many independent extractors of raw materials, processors of raw materials, distributors and suppliers of raw materials and processed raw materials, distributors of finished goods and retailers of finished goods. The divestiture of monopolies, however, will still leave horizontally integrated enterprises producing a finished product such as cars. But after its divestiture of vertically integrated and ancillary businesses, the horizontally integrated enterprise producing the finished product will have significantly less market power to prevent entrepreneurs from successfully starting their own competing production of a particular finished good.

Besides accommodating old line directors and middle level managers with enterprises they can run, divestiture serves a more important function: the efficient allocation of resources through competition. Efficient allocation means resources, all of which are limited, are used to satisfy the wants of people at the least possible cost. Monopolies do not allocate resources efficiently. In a competitive market, competition will force the price of a good or service down to the point where it equals the cost of production plus a reasonable return. In a monopolized market, the price will stabilize at a point higher than this; there will be a monopoly profit. So a competitive market will provide goods and services desired by consumers at a lower cost than a monopolistic market; that is, a competitive market will allocate resources efficiently -- a monopoly market will not.

In a competitive market, every buyer who is willing to pay the competitive price of a product or service in order to obtain it will be able to do so because the product or service sells at their cost. In the monopolized market, the only buyers who obtain the same product or service are those ready to pay in excess of the competitive price. Those who would pay amounts equal to or higher than the competitive price, though not the full monopoly price, must substitute other products. Today, the wants of most Russians either go unsatisfied or partially satisfied because most Russians cannot afford to pay the monopoly price for many products and services.

Other reasons for a marketplace with many competing enterprises include:

- decentralization of economic power (economic democracy), reduction of the range within which private discretion may be exercised in matters that effect the welfare of others and increase opportunity for more people to exercise entrepreneurial talents.

A couple of examples of quasi-divestiture in Russia include the Kalinin factory in Yekaterinburg and the Leninets plant in St. Petersburg. Kalinin, a former producer of launchers and fuel systems for SS missiles, split up into units producing timber-felling equipment, tractors, food-processing and industrial-refrigeration plants. The Leninets plant, which produces avionics for Migs, divided into 117 business units. The problem with these two examples is they still maintain a central control over all the separated units. True divestiture necessary for competition to efficiently allocate resources requires independent enterprises free from the anti-competitive dictates of any central control.

A method for divesting Russia's large state-controlled monopolies easily flows from a privatizing scheme that uses worker-manager leveraged buyouts. Under this privatization procedure, workers and managers form a limited partnership that purchases a majority or more of the shares in a state-owned monopoly. The partnership pays for the shares with a debt instrument issued to the Government and collateralized with a mortgage or security interest granted the Government. Citizens and other investors purchase the shares of the enterprise not bought by the limited partnership or the shares above 51% that the partnership decides to sell. To assure divestiture, the Government can refuse to accept a mortgage or security interest or any other method of financing the privatization unless the enterprise agrees to divest once privatized.

Divesting or spinning-off one of the new privatized monopoly's units or businesses would entail issuing shares in the spun-off unit to all the shareholders of the privatized monopoly on a pro rata basis. That is, each shareholder of the privatized monopoly before the spin-off would receive a number of shares in the spun-off unit determined by the number of shares owned in the entire monopoly. This way none of the shareholders would lose any value through divestiture because they would now own a proportional share of the new, spun-off enterprise. The spun-off enterprise would agree to assume its proportional share of the debt issued to the Government and collateralize that debt with a mortgage or security interest in its own assets as a condition for becoming an independent enterprise.

Divesting privatized monopolies will provide old line enterprise bosses with a doable challenge of transforming a discrete part of their former enterprise from a profitless business to a profitable one. It will allow younger middle level managers the opportunity to use their knowledge of a unit of a monopoly to turn it into a profitable, independent enterprise. In addition, Russia's economy will have a betting chance to avoid stagflation and reap the benefits of competition, which means the growth in production of manufactured and agricultural products and services needed for a modern industrial economy.

A STRATEGY TO GENERATE HARD CURRENCY FROM RUSSIA'S FOREIGN DEBT AND INCREASE EXPORTS

I. The Need for Hard Currency to Stimulate the Production of Goods and Provision of Services for Export.

When the United States economy slumped into a recession in 1990 and 1991, American buyers' of goods and services, already heavily in debt and fearing a rise in unemployment as well as a decline in business, drastically reduced their purchases, which left many businesses looking for new customers. In response, the U.S. Administration expanded Government export programs to assist businesses in selling overseas to make up for the decline in sales in America. Today in Russia buyers, which includes consumers, businesses, farms and the government, have also dramatically reduced their purchases. As a result, inventories have increased, production and services continuously decline and people survive on less. If Russia instituted or expanded programs similar to those in the U.S. for stimulating export trade, then the production of goods and provision of services and the flow of hard currency into Russia would increase.

In America, the U.S. Export-Import Bank ("Eximbank") conducts the key programs for facilitating the export of U.S. goods and services. Eximbank helps U.S. exporters secure credit for their foreign buyers. Often private lenders (banks, trading companies, etc.) will not provide financing to a foreign buyer because the perceived risk of non-payment or only partial payment is too high. Eximbank encourages private lenders to extend credit to a foreign buyer by providing a private lender with a guarantee that in the event the foreign buyer does not repay the private lender, Eximbank will. While the foreign buyer repays the loan over a period of time, the actual dollars provided by the private lender are paid directly to the exporter and not the foreign buyer. This way the exporter is assured of obtaining payment for the goods or services it provides a foreign buyer. Only Eximbank has to worry whether the foreign buyer repays the loan. Under another program, Eximbank provides direct loans for the purchase of American goods by a foreign buyer. Under the direct loan program, Eximbank transfers dollars directly to the U.S. exporter, not the foreign buyer, and then the exporter sends the goods to the foreign buyer. The foreign buyer has to repay Eximbank over a period of time the amount Eximbank paid directly to the exporter plus interest.

Both programs assure the U.S. exporter will obtain value for the goods or services sold overseas. Eximbank ultimately assumes the risk that the foreign buyer will not pay. (In such a case, Eximbank can sue the foreign buyer and alert companies worldwide not to deal with that buyer.) Perhaps a couple of diagrams will help:

Guarantee Program

Direct Loan Program

Eximbank also provides American exporters with insurance against loss should a foreign buyer default on its obligation to pay the exporter for political or commercial reasons. Many foreign buyers are unwilling to assume a loan obligation under Eximbank's Guarantee or Direct Loan programs because commitment fees and interest payments increase the cost of the goods or services bought or the time to consummate the transaction is so short that a loan or guarantee does not make sense. Under the Insurance program an exporter can ship the goods or provide the services immediately and receive payment later. If the buyer does not pay, then the insurance will

Another crucial Eximbank program for stimulating foreign trade is the Working Capital Program. The program expands U.S. exports by encouraging private lenders to make working capital loans to U.S. businesses for export-related production and marketing activities. Small and medium-sized enterprises are often unable to obtain loans from private lenders needed to produce or market goods or services overseas. (This is especially true in Russia today where small struggling private firms cannot obtain financing because, among other reasons, they do not have the same extensive contacts with commercial bank executives as do large enterprises.) Eximbank will guarantee repayment of a loan provided by a private lender to an exporter when the loan is used to purchase finished goods, materials, services and labor to produce goods or services for current or future export sales, to market export products or services, to participate in trade fairs or conduct other promotional activities aimed at developing new overseas business. All loans, however, must be secured by the exporter's collateral which can be inventory and other goods purchased with the loan or accounts receivable that result from transactions generated by the loan. Under the Working Capital program, the exporter and not the foreign buyer is liable for repayment of the loan.

Eximbank's programs clearly stimulate exports, but since one major aim of Russian exports is to acquire hard currency, a Russian Eximbank that provided similar programs would need hard currency for a Guarantee, Direct Loan, Insurance or Working Capital program. (Section II of this paper will provide a suggestion for obtaining hard currency for a Russian Eximbank's operations.) A Russian enterprise trying to earn hard currency from its exports is unlikely to accept rubles from a Russian Eximbank as payment for its exports but may accept rubles to finance its working capital. Since a Russian Eximbank will have to deal largely in hard currency, Russian exporters must have the right to hold hard currency accounts without having to convert their profits into rubles; otherwise, the safety of using Russian Eximbank financing may not be sufficient to overcome the risk of present exporting methods that result in exporters keeping hard currency overseas. In addition, the tax system would have to be reformed to eliminate the bias against hard currency income.

In addition to increasing exports, a Russian Eximbank, adequately financed with hard currency, might reduce a further increase in the billions of dollars already placed in offshore accounts by Russian exporters. Some Russian exporters will choose the certainty of payment and financing from a Russian Eximbank rather than the risk of non-payment from a foreign buyer. Since the Russian Eximbank and the private lenders it guarantees pay the Russian exporter directly and then collect from the foreign buyer, these hard currency payments made by the Russian Eximbank will not be secreted in offshore accounts unless the exporter, after receiving the funds in his bank account, requests the bank to transfer the funds overseas. Appropriate banking legislation can keep track of where the money goes, which will probably be an account the exporter has already illegally made deposits into from export revenues.

Furthermore, the export transactions that involve a Russian Eximbank's programs will provide valuable information. Included in this information will be the identity of the importers the Russian exporter deals with. For a Russian exporter to hide funds overseas usually requires the assistance of the importer to set up an account with a financial service company in which the funds are deposited. In America, a financial service company will not set up any account unless provided with an employer identification number ("EIN") that is issued by the U.S. Internal Revenue Service. In addition, a deposit of over $10,000 in any account will be reported to the U.S. Treasury Department, indicating the depositor and the account name. With the names of importers sold to by Russian exporters who use the Russian Eximbank's program, the U.S. Treasury Department through its agency, the Internal Revenue Service, could discover any accounts set up by the importer where the importer used its EIN or deposited more than $10,000 into an account that has a different EIN, which might occur where the importer or Russian exporter set up an American corporation in whose name it acquired an EIN in order to set up an account without using the importer's EIN. In the situation where the U.S. importer has agreed to transfer its payment to a bank located outside the U.S. but in a jurisdiction with bank secrecy laws, any transfer of over $10,000 must still be reported to the U.S. Treasury Department. Of course the U.S. Government would have to agree to provide assistance in tracking down these overseas accounts, but I am sure this could be worked out, providing the Russian Government was serious about repatriating flight capital.

II. Generation of Hard Currency for a Russian Eximbank's Operations.

Russia's recently stated willingness to assume the foreign debt of the former Soviet Union means it will owe official creditors about $68 billion and private creditors, mainly commercial banks, over $18 billion (some estimates place the private debt at over $25 billion) for a total of $86 billion.

Private creditors include: commercial banks, which are private banks and other private financial institutions; foreign manufacturers, exporters, and other foreign suppliers of goods; and export agencies that provide payment guarantees, loans and insurance. Russia's debt to official creditors includes: multilateral loans that came from international organizations such as the World Bank, regional development banks and the International Monetary Fund ("IMF") and bilateral loans that came from governments, their agencies, autonomous bodies and governmental export credit agencies. For 1992, Russia owed $20 billion in total debt service but paid only $2 billion. In 1993, it will owe $30 billion but estimates it can only pay $3 billion. Through September 1992, Russian exports totaled $37.2 billion and imports $35.5 billion, a surplus of $1.7 billion: not even enough to offset Russia's payments on its foreign debt for last year. At this rate, Russia will soon deplete itself of hard currency reserves that will leave it without a reliable medium for exchanging value.

Foreign governments and businesses will not accept rubles as payment for necessary goods such as agricultural products (flour, bread and pasta production did not decline in 1992 because of Russia's grain imports) or services such as technical assistance. Without sufficient hard currency, Russian banks and enterprises will no longer be able to store or exchange value through dollars, which will leave a rapidly depreciating ruble as the only medium of exchange, other than barter, for business transactions. A similar situation occurred in Latin America where some countries' savings and investing fell drastically because it made more economic sense to spend currency immediately for tangible goods before the currency's value depreciated further. Without savings or investments, businesses lack capital to finance production and services.

There is a lesson that can be learned from Latin America's debt problem of the 1980's -- simply refuse to pay anymore interest or principal on foreign debt. Such a default by Russia would free up hard currency for the operations of a Russian Eximbank and can even provide Russia with the opportunity to make money buying and selling its own debt owed to foreign banks.

III. Economic Opportunities Arising Out of Russia's Default on it Foreign Debt

Once Russia declares it will no longer pay interest or principal on its foreign debt, its economic relations with the West and the rest of the world will not end. Mexico began the Latin American defaults in 1982 when it said it would not be repaying its international bankers for a while. The key phrase is "for a while." Mexico and other Latin American countries did not renounce the debt, they admitted they owed the money but the debt services repayments would be needed to aid their economies and peoples. Mexico, Venezuela, Chile and other countries continued their on-again and off-again talks with private and official creditors in an effort to resolve the debt issue. Then in 1988, the Latin American countries and private creditors (mostly commercial banks) began resolving the default issue through buy backs.

Russia could follow the Latin American pattern by defaulting and then exhibiting a good faith effort to resolve the debt issue but resolve it differently than was done with Latin America in order to assure that any resolution benefits Russia and not just Western governments or commercial banks. Such a policy would ultimately lead to buy backs and other transactions to resolve the debt owed to private creditors. Buy backs and other transactions can be accomplished in the smart way, as presented below, or the foolish way as Latin America did -- foolish for Latin America that is. I want to emphasize that the following solutions apply only to the approximately $18 or $25 billion dollars Russia owes commercial banks.

Buy Backs: Open Market and Negotiated

There are two major types of buy backs: open market, where purchases are made in the secondary market at whatever price the market has placed on the debt, and negotiated, where a defaulting country or its representatives would negotiate to purchase some of Russia's debt from commercial banks. In negotiated buy backs, lenders (the commercial banks) agree to concessions so that a country can effectively repurchase its debt at below face value. The old debt is usually repurchased with new debt issued by commercial banks, essentially a restructuring of the old debt.

The secondary market, where open market purchases are made, consists of trading debt securities (new issues, Brady bonds and distressed bank debt) in over the counter markets, primarily in New York and London. Fourteen (14) commercial and investment banks account for most of the trading. J.P. Morgan, Citicorp, Chase Manhattan, Bankers Trust, First Boston and Chemical Bank are among the biggest traders of such debt in the secondary market. Some securities houses are also involved. The substantial majority of transactions are still accounted for by commercial banks wishing to dispose of claims. Trading houses indicate, however, that non-bank institutional investors seeking high-yielding assets and capital gains are increasingly active in the market as are wealthy Americans, foreigners and professional traders. (Institutions include corporate treasuries, pension funds, and other financial institutions -- including 20 to 30 insurance companies.) In 1990, the trading volume was $100 billion. Wall Street firms are now trying to structure deals in the secondary market to offer something for the risk preferences of all investors. One type of security is to repackage bank debt and Brady bonds into a multi-part security in which some parts have investment-grade status and others do not but have a higher yield. Citicorp recently issued a three-tiered Eurobond based on Mexican Brady bonds. So the secondary market in private creditor country debt continues to expand with numerous securities houses able to purchase Russian debt in the secondary market.

The problem with open market and negotiated buy backs is that unless the market price is sufficiently low, the debtor country would be better off using its money to increase consumption and investment rather than buying back its debt. For example, a country that already owes three times as much as it is likely to repay in full is unlikely to benefit from buying back its debt in the open market when the debt is selling above 33% of face value. There is a complicated formula that can determine a range of prices that will benefit the debtor country whether it buy backs debt in the open market or negotiates its buy backs. Furthermore, contrary to popular belief, it is unclear that buy backs (open market or negotiated) stimulate investment; therefore, any premium paid in any buy back may not be offset by additional investments or the economic benefits flowing from the reduction in a country's debt. The price for open market buy backs depends on the secondary market. If the market, which is largely the commercial banks, believes that a country only intends to pay back a small portion of its debt or perhaps none at all and was not going to engage in any open market or negotiated buy backs, then the price of that country's private creditor debt would drop. This is not the case with negotiated buy backs because the moment a country starts negotiating, the price of its debt goes up.

Negotiated buy backs may or may not use the Brady initiative. U.S. Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady introduced the initiative in 1989. Commercial banks may accept a large reduction in principal owed them by a debtor country. In return, the debtor country would exchange some of its remaining old overdue debt for new debt at a longer term and reduced interest or banks could accept a new debt at the same amount but also with a longer maturity and a greatly reduced interest rate. The new debt (called "Brady" bonds) would be collateralized by U.S. Treasury Zero Coupon bonds and possibly guarantees from the U.S. Export-Import Bank with the interest backed by the World Bank for a period. For example, the Argentina accord calls for banks to exchange old loans for a new 30-year bond equal to 35% of the loan amount, with principal payments backed by Treasury securities and an interest rate equal to the London interbank rate plus thirteen-sixteenths of a percentage point. Alternatively, the banks may take a new bond equal to the face amount of the old loan, also collateralized by Treasury securities, but with a lower interest rate that would rise from 4 to 6% during the first six years of a 30-bond and remained at 6% for the remaining life of the bond.

The Brady bonds trade in the secondary market at a higher price than the old debt traded because they are collateralized. This is a problem for the debtor countries because any attempt to buy back more of their debt after a Brady transaction either in the open market or negotiated deal will cost them more per unit of debt, although there may be less debt to purchase.

Another problem for a debtor country, whether before or after a Brady transaction, is that the moment the commercial banks hear of a plan to restructure a developing country's debt, they raise the prices at which the debt trades in the open market and the price at which they will negotiate a buy back.

Were Russia to stop payment on its debt altogether and refuse to make good faith efforts to resolve the problem, its debt instruments would drop in price significantly because many banks would be selling the debt. The more the market believed Russia would not engage in steps to resolve its debt problem, such as a Brady buy back, the further the price for its debt would fall. (Traders who had sold Russia's debt "short" would make large profits in such a situation.) Speculators, generally the commercial banks, would only begin buying Russia's debt again if they believed Russia would engage in buy backs or sell its assets to pay down its debt. Once the speculators, however, realized Russia was not going to further increase the burden on its people by exchanging its assets or money for debt at overvalued prices, the speculators would sell their debt holdings causing the price to drop again or simply mark down the value of the debt if no buyers were available at the lower prices. This cycle of the price of Russia's debt rising and falling would depend solely on whether the market believed Russia would engage in buy backs or sell its assets to pay down its debt.

Once prices have dropped, one possible strategy for Russia would be to purchase some of its debt (then trading at reasonable and not overvalued prices) by quietly providing environmental groups with the funds for debt for nature swaps. The groups would buy the debt in the open market and exchange the debt for Russian bonds. In addition, brokers or bankers in various jurisdictions could be used to discreetly purchase Russia's debt for Russia's account. Russia could also engage in commodity-linked financing and debt for equity swaps since Russia probably would still be acquiring more in face value of debt for its assets then when everyone was expecting it to repay its debt or engage in a Brady or other type of buy back. Russia could retire the debt it acquired when prices were low or hold on to it and, when economically appropriate, initiate a Brady restructuring, which would cause an increase in value of its debt in the open market. Russia then could sell the portion of debt it is holding in the market for a gain to be used to service some of its existing debt. Professional speculators in the sovereign debt market expect to realize 50% returns when a country does a Brady restructuring.

A corollary effect of Brady debt restructuring is that equity markets in the debtor country generally go up. Prior to restructuring its debt, the government of Russia could invest in some of its viable businesses after privatization. Assuming the market rises following the restructuring, the government could sell its holdings and use the gain to service its debt.

It makes no sense, however, for Russia to engage in a Brady or non-Brady negotiated buy back, debt equity swaps, commodity linked financing, debt for nature swaps or interest rate reduction bonds until Russia's debt price hits bottom. Otherwise, Russia would be paying out more to retire the same amount of debt because it would be overvalued having been driven up by speculators betting on a debt restructuring.

IV. Additional Methods for Relieving Russia's Foreign Debt

The following details the methods that Russia can take to ease its private creditor and in some instances official creditor debt.

1. Direct Foreign Investment

Encouragement of direct foreign investment into Russia will increase economic growth and attract foreign currency which in turn can be used to buy back or service some of Russia's external debt whether owed to private or official creditors. In addition, Russia's access to foreign technology in management expertise and markets will increase with direct foreign investment. The key to encouraging direct foreign investment is to remove obstacles to potential foreign investors, such as restrictive regulatory regimes. Mexico, for instance, overhauled its regulatory framework for foreign investment in the mid-1980's. In 1991 foreign investment, including repatriated flight capital, roughly doubled in Mexico over the previous two years.

Thailand in 1987 simply changed the implementation procedures of its legal framework for foreign investment. It streamlined the numerous administrative rules, guidelines and standards into a more systematic framework that is now administered by a single government bureau that is directly under the authority of the prime minister. Foreign investors save much time and effort because they can now complete the application procedures in one department. Rules on the provision of incentives and the imposition of restrictions for foreign investors were also clarified.

The creation of a country mutual fund through an investment banker or brokerage house in a Western country allows investors in the world's major equity markets to conveniently invest in a country such as Russia. The country fund would receive money from investors and its manager would decide what businesses to invest in or bonds to buy in Russia. For a country fund to be successfully launched, the country to be invested in should have a well functioning domestic capital market (stock and bond exchanges) and standards on information disclosure and accounting. The International Finance Corporation, part of the World Bank Group, assists in the structuring and offering of country mutual funds.

Another form of direct foreign investment in developing countries is the ADR, which is a security issued against a deposit of non-U.S. company shares in a trust account.

ADRs are traded on stock exchanges in Western countries. Recent ADR offerings include the Chilean Telephone Company and Mexico's Telmex privatization. Telmex hired an investment banker to arrange for the sale of its ADRs in several major country stock markets, including the United States, Japan and England. Over $2.3 billion was raised in 1991 by privatizing Telmex. The Chilean Compañía de Telefonos used the same method of privatization and raised $98 million. The danger in selling privatized companies overseas, however, is that foreign investment pools will buy enough stock to effectively control a privatized enterprise. A solution is to limit the number of shares sold to foreign interests.

A third form of portfolio investment is outright foreign purchase of particular domestic equity shares. Typically investors are concerned about adequate settlement procedures as well as information disclosure and accounting standards. Domestic financial market reform has, therefore, the potential to increase considerably this type of flow, since developing country stock markets often offer high returns and considerable diversification potential.

2. Bond Collateralization

New capital can be raised by Russia at reasonable rates by collateralizing bonds and then selling them in the bond markets. The funds raised by these bonds can go for debt service payments on both private and official creditor debt. The security backing for these bonds can include receivables, bank accounts, real estate and any other assets of a public or private Russian entity. The Mexican private copper company, Mexicana de Cobre, raised $165 million in 1991 through a five-year loan secured by copper export receivables and hedged by copper swaps. Mexico and Venezuela issued more than $2.4 billion in 1990 international bonds, denominated in U.S. dollars and deutsche marks, sold in the Euromarkets and collateralized with telephone or credit card receivables.

3. Debt-Equity Swaps

In debt swaps (which are a form of buy back), the creditor commercial banks exchange a portion of a country's debt in return for an amount of the country's currency which is then used to invest in the country's businesses. Another method is where a country privatizes a national industry and exchanges a part ownership in that industry for part of its debt held by the banks. Debt-equity swaps offer foreign finance, an inflow of foreign technology and access to foreign markets.

Argentina has achieved substantial progress in reducing its external commercial bank debt through debt-equity swaps connected to the privatization of its state telecommunications enterprise (ENTel) and national airline (Aerolineas Argentinas). Argentina obtained waivers from its creditors so as to permit commercial debt to be bought on the secondary market by foreign investors and exchanged for equity stakes in the enterprises. The total amount of commercial debt exchanged (and thus extinguished) in the ENTel's offering and for Aerolineas Argentinas was equal to about 15 percent of Argentina's commercial debt.

The United States Bank Security Pacific has gone into the business of switching debt for equity. At first it changed part of its own debt portfolio into an equity venture capital portfolio through debt-equity swaps. Through its New York office, Security Pacific now buys country debt for entrepreneurial investors and speculators, trades the debt through several countries at different exchange rates thereby adding value or finds investment opportunities in a country and converts the debt to equity. Security Pacific makes a profit by charging its investors management fees for the entire process. Russia might want to explore a potential agreement with Security Pacific, whereby Security Pacific would purchase part of Russia's debt and Russia would agree to debt-equity swaps.

Of course, whether any debt-equity swap benefits Russia would depend on the price at which Russia's debt is swapped -- the lower the better as explained earlier.

4. Commodity Linked Financing

Commodity linked financing can aid in reducing a country's external commercial bank debt, obtaining additional financing and protecting against the fluctuation in commodity prices. The United States Bank, First Interstate and London's Midland Bank have exchanged millions of dollars of Peruvian commercial bank debt for Peruvian products shipped to the United States. The banks are also trying to find new markets for Peru's products in order to exchange additional debt for Peru's goods, which are sold in the United States and Europe. Here too, it is beneficial for Russia's debt to be trading at a steep discount because the amount of Russia's products exchanged for one dollar of debt would be less than were the debt trading at a higher price.

In order to obtain additional financing, even after default, a country can collateralize further borrowing with commodities. This will increase a country's access to foreign loans at better rates than were the loans unsecured. In addition, commodity linked financing (which is used by advanced industrial countries but little used by other countries because of a lack of familiarity with innovative financing techniques) can protect against steep declines in commodity prices.

For example, in late 1990 and during the first half of 1991, Mexico used financial risk management tools to protect its crude oil export earnings (which average about 1.3 million barrels a day) against a price drop. The strategy covered a significant part of its export earnings during this period. Mexico bought put options at different exercise prices, engaged in selling of oil futures, and used short-dated (up to one-year maturity) oil swaps to hedge its oil price risk. Buying put options guaranteed a minimum price, and oil futures contracts and swaps guaranteed the seller and the buyer a specified price at some future date. By using these contracts, Mexico effectively insured some minimum price of its main export over the near future. In addition, Mexico established a special contingency fund to protect against a decline in oil prices. Mexico's overall strategy was to ensure that it received at least $17 a barrel, the price used as the basis for its 1991 budget. As explained by the finance ministry, participation in the futures markets reassured investors that, regardless of oil price movements, the economic program and the budget would be sustained. The strategy was quite successful for Mexico since oil prices fell significantly in early 1991. Not only did Mexico achieve more certainty ex ante about its oil earnings, but also it profited ex post as the gains from having ensured a minimum price exceeded the initial costs of buying the put options. There are numerous experts in risk management who could put together a hedging plan tailored for Russia's exports.

5. Debt for Nature Swaps

Under debt for nature swaps, Russia can encourage environmental organizations throughout the world to purchase some of its debt at a deep discount from commercial bank prices by simply agreeing to convert a portion of the face amount of the purchased debt into long term local currency bonds held by Russia's environmental groups. The interest on the bonds, paid in rubles, would be used by Russia's environmental groups to finance a variety of conservation projects. When the bonds mature, the principal can become an endowment fund for Russia's environmental groups. By issuing bonds rather than cash, Russia reduces the threat of inflationary impacts.

The specific steps of a debt for nature swap follow:

The first step is to obtain approval in principle from the debtor country -- specifically, from the government, the central bank, and a private conservation organization that will receive the funds and manage the conversation program. The host country must decide what exchange rate to apply in converting debt into local currency, what condition of payment to use in exchange for the debt, and whom to designate or accept as a local agent to control the funds and dispense the proceeds. The conservation program agreed on is based on local priorities; it may include site-specific projects or a list of general conservation activities (e.g., training of park managers) to be undertaken when the local agent deems them appropriate.

Next step, the debt to be acquired must be identified. Potential swappers must shop for debt notes that are of the right denomination, are acceptable to the debtor country government and have an acceptable maturation schedule. If the debt is not donated, it must be purchased at an acceptable discount. Once obtained, the debt must be converted into a local currency instrument by the host government's central bank, in the manner specified in the agreement. Finally, the conservation program may begin.

A twist on these type of swaps is that Russia might provide an environmental group the funds with which to purchase its debt from commercial banks. This would prevent a run up in the market price or negotiated price for Russia's debt because the banks would be unaware that Russia was providing the funding as a means to buy back its debt. Furthermore, commercial banks in the creditor countries benefit not just from the sale of debt that may never be paid but the positive public relations of preserving the environment and changing the trend of countries sacrificing their natural resource base just to meet short-sighted economic needs. The importance of such public relations to the banks is illustrated by Bank of America's recent announcement it would donate $6 million to fund debt for nature swaps in Latin America.

6. Interest Rate Reduction Bonds

Interest arrears could be refinanced by Russia paying a percentage, say 25%, in cash and exchanging the remaining percentage for bonds. The bonds could be dollar denominated with a 10-year maturity and a 3-year grace period. They would carry a below market interest rate (rates in the U.S. are already at a 20-year low) for the first three years and a market rate afterward or a variable market rate with a cap and floor (that predetermines the upper and lower rate bounds). Any variation of the percentages, rates and maturity would depend on what can be negotiated given the markets perception of the likelihood of repayment or debt restructuring and whether it is beneficial to Russia.

V. Further Implications of a Russian Default on its Foreign Debt

Many American bankers, the ones indebted to Russia, and foreign governments indebted to Russia will argue that a more serious Russian default on its foreign debt will diminish confidence in Russia's economy and politics, which will cause foreign aid and foreign investment to decrease. Considering the impact and amount of foreign aid and foreign investment to Russia during 1992 and 1993, a further reduction would probably not be harmful and the amount of debt service saved could be used to obtain the benefits offered by a Russian Eximbank.

The West has offered Russia billions in foreign aid providing Russia met certain conditions such as reducing inflation by tightening credit available to enterprises and reducing the Government's deficit spending. The less credit available to enterprises and the lower the Government's deficit, the more money would be available to pay Russia's foreign debt. A major function of the International Monetary Fund has always been to act as a collection agent for Western governments and commercial banks in the disguise of promoting economic growth in debtor nations. The tightening of credit in a monopoly economy naturally increased prices dramatically and reduced production leading to a stagnating economy on the verge of hyper-inflation. Without competition, a monopolist will cut costs by reducing production but try to maintain its profit margin by increasing prices.

The aid promised Russia has consisted of loans that profited Western enterprises at Russia's expense. In 1992, the West apparently provided $18 billion in loans. $13.9 billion came from various governments as credits to finance Russian imports. This money was paid directly to Western exporters, which profited Western exporters handsomely, but of course, Russia now owes an additional $13.9 billion. By the time the amount is repaid, Russia will have paid much more than $13.9 billion when interest payments are included. Other foreign aid has included mere postponement of interest payments or funds that have never been made available. Balancing the benefits of the products purchased with Western credits and the stagflation impact on Russia's economy of the conditions required by the IMF plus the burden of diverting hard currency from productive uses to servicing Western debt, Russia would be better off to forego such economic enslavement. Furthermore, the present conditions of Western economies and demands for domestic aid will dramatically hamper future loans to Russia. West Germany faces an $85 billion investment in 1993 alone to continue the rebuilding of Eastern Germany.

A more serious Russian default on its foreign debt would probably not deter private foreign investment anymore than it is already. Unclear and conflicting laws, overlapping and obstructionist bureaucracies, corruption and political uncertainty have been the main deterrents of private investments. In 1992, private U.S. investment in Russia amounted to only $400 million and much of that has gone to service industries, not to the manufacturing base Russia needs to develop. Estimates state that Russia will need $40 to $50 billion a year in private investment. Such huge sums neither the West nor East will provide given the present risks, but Russia could provide significant percentages of needed investment itself by encouraging exports, trading in its foreign debt and repatriating or reducing the amount of flight capital.
